The addition of Sco takes this on to a new level. In some respects, it's very similar to Bill Frisell's Americana projects, but the language is both tougher and less obviously authentic, as far as folk roots are concerned. Linka continues to stimulate and surprise.

Adam Linson

DOUBLE BASS, PROCESSING, SAMPLING

Originally from Los Angeles, Linson studied with Bertram Turetzky and George Lewis and has worked and recorded with Evan Parker and Philipp Wachsmann. Currently based in Berlin.

(*) Cut And Continuum Psi 06.04 Linson (b, elec solo). 3/06.

A student of philosophy who wears his learning lightly, Linson seems influenced by a notion of split time – present and past – that comes from Gilles Deleuze on cinema but is almost definitive of improvised music as well. The most explicit reference is the title of the third and longest of these improvisations, the nearly half-hour 'Slivers Of Crystal-Images', which represents the second half of 'Cut And Continuum' and is sampled in the first part, 'Peaks Of Present And Sheets Of Past'. There is plenty of recognizable, if not idiomatic, bass-playing on these cuts, and particularly on the middle 'History Growls At The Door', but it's the real-time integration of familiar and unfamiliar attacks with subtle processing (samples only on the first and third cut) that makes the record so distinctive and involving. Linson's ensemble playing has already attracted attention. Here he suggests that he may yet become a formidable solo performer and leader. A highly auspicious debut.

Melba Liston (192?–99)

TROMBONE

Better known as an arranger, but a fine horn-player in her day.

 And Her 'Bones Fresh Sound FSRCD 408 Liston; Jimmy Cleveland, Bennie Green, Al Grey, Benny Powell, Frank Rehak (tb); Slide Hampton (tb, tba); Marty Flax (bs); Ray Bryant, Walter Davis Jr (p); Kenny Burrell (g); Nelson Boyd, George Joyner (b); Frank Dunlop, Charlie Persip (d). 6/56, 12/58.

She doesn't have much of a showing on record, though everyone will have heard her fine sophisticated arrangements. Most of these cuts are from two trombone-and-rhythm dates made in Christmas week 1958. She loved the sound of the horn so much she didn't use either trumpets or woodwinds. It's not clear why the two dates have been interwoven on this compilation. If a change of texture were called for it would have made more sense to intersperse the 1956 cuts, with Liston paired with baritone and rhythm. The material is mostly by Liston, Hampton, Rehak and Leonard Feather. Melba's 'You Don't Say' and 'Insomnia' (the latter by the smaller 1956 group) are the best of the cuts, but there's much to enjoy and it's a feast for trombone lovers.

Booker Little (1938–61)

TRUMPET

Born in Memphis, he went to Chicago in 1957 and subsequently joined Max Roach, then Eric Dolphy. His life was cut short by uraemia.

 Booker Little 4 And Max Roach Blue Note 84457 Little; Louis Smith (t); Frank Strozier (as); George Coleman (ts); Tommy Flanagan, Phineas Newborn (p); Calvin Newborn (g); Art Davis, George Joyner (Jamil Nasser) (b); Charles Crosby, Max Roach (d). 58.

 Sounds Of The Inner City Collectables 6131 Little; Booker Ervin (ts); Teddy Charles (vib); Mal Waldron (p); Addison Farmer (b); Ed Shaughnessy (d). 60.

 New York Sessions Lone Hill Jazz LHJR10110 As for both records above, except add Don Ellis (t); Curtis Fuller (tb); Philly Joe Jones (d); Willie Rodriguez (perc). 58–60.

(*) Booker Little Time BCD 1041 Little; Tommy Flanagan, Wynton Kelly (p); Scott LaFaro (b); Roy Haynes (d). 4/60.

 Stardust Delta 20504 As for Sounds and Booker Little. 60.

(*) Out Front Candid 9027 Little; Julian Priester (tb); Eric Dolphy (as, bcl, f); Don Friedman (p); Ron Carter, Art Davis (b); Max Roach (d, timp, vib). 3–4/61.

 Booker Little And Friend / (*) Complete Recordings Featuring George Coleman Bethlehem/Avenue Jazz 79855 / Lone Hill Jazz LHJR10134 Little; Julian Priester (tb); George Coleman (ts); Don Friedman (p); Reggie Workman (b); Pete LaRoca (d). 8/61; 61.

When a creative life is as short as this, almost every survival is of value. The shapeless and technically flawed jams on 'Blue'N'Boogie' and 'Things Ain't What They Used To Be' on the Blue Note session would probably not be considered worth releasing if there were more material around. As it is, out-takes are required to fill out the picture to an undesirable degree, some of them falling short of the standard even the youthful trumpeter would have expected. Little was a Brownie disciple who carved out his own sound, and his development was rapid but foreshortened. The Blue Note pairs him with fellow Memphisite Coleman in a state-of-the-art '50s front line that, on tracks like 'Dungeon Waltz' and 'Jewel's Tempo' (both Little compositions), suggests something close to what Ornette, Don Cherry and Bobby Bradford were doing on the West Coast. The whole set is marred by showers of static and Flanagan's under-recorded piano.

Sounds Of The Inner City is a hugely welcome revival, pairing the two Bookers on a set of great originality. The saxophonist's opening 'Scroochie' is a strong idea that gets everyone's juices going. They do 'Stardust' almost as a dirge before settling into Little's remarkable 'The Confined Few', which you'd love to have heard him do with Dolphy. The closing 'Witch Fire' is also his, a tune of sinister complexion that has him valving tightly. The Lone Hill issue repeats the material but adds a fascinating track with Ellis, Fuller, Philly Joe and Rodriguez.

Out Front is one of the best albums of the period, and not just because of the Dolphy association. The opening 'We Speak' is a straightforward blowing theme, but the balance of tonalities and the use of abrasive dissonance evokes Ornette's Free Jazz, recorded a bare four months before. Little and Roach are once again the axis of the music. The drummer adds timps and vibes to his armoury, and this makes up somewhat for the shortcomings in Friedman's playing, but it blurs the bass-lines. The shifting signature of 'Moods In Free Time' stretches Little's phrasing and 'Hazy Hues' explores his interest in tone-colour. The closing 'A New Day', with its hints of freedom and its fanfare-like acclamations, is an ironic title in the circumstances.

The wonderful And Friend contains some of Booker's best and loveliest playing. He's not thought of as a standards player, but his reading of 'If I Should Lose You' is a modern classic, superbly organized, unfailingly lyrical. 'Victory And Sorrow' is another classic (the title borrowed for the Lone Hill retread) and the new format has two takes of the very fine 'Matilde'. The band is superb, with Priester and Coleman in top form and Friedman earning his reputation as one of the most challenging accompanists on the scene. Booker died that October, soon to be joined by Dolphy among the ranks of the unfulfilled. It's a slim legacy, but a powerful one.

The Little Ramblers

GROUP

A New York studio group which grew out of the California Ramblers, organized by Ed Kirkeby.

 The Little Ramblers 1924–1927 Timeless CBC 1-037 Bill Moore, Red Nichols, Roy Johnston, Chelsea Quealey (t); Tommy Dorsey, Herb Winfield, Abe Lincoln (tb); Jimmy Dorsey (cl, as); Bobby Davis (cl, ss, as); Adrian Rollini (bsx, gfs); Irving Brodsky (p); Tommy Felline, Ray Kitchingman (bj); Stan King (d, kz, v); Herb Weil (d); Billy Jones, Arthur Fields, Ed Kirkeby (v). 9/24–7/27.

The 'small' edition of the California Ramblers set out to play dance tunes of the day as warmly as possible, and because it was a leaner outfit their records were often hotter than those of the main group. Their Columbia sessions are capably collected and truthfully remastered here. Titles such as 'In Your Green Hat' and 'Those Panama Mamas' are now recalled only by era connoisseurs, but these are all game and politely swinging performances liberally sprinkled with pertly inventive solos. Nichols and the Dorseys are the obvious names, but the true Ramblers stalwarts were Quealey, Davis and Rollini, and they all turn in typically bright work. The first six tracks are acoustic, but the big sound of the electrical sessions is a nice reminder of how good the Columbia engineers were.

Martin Litton (born 1957)

PIANO

Litton has worked in and around the established circle of British trad-to-mainstream for 20 years, with stints in the touring groups of Kenny Ball and Humphrey Lyttelton.

(*) Jazz Piano Solo Art SACD-114 Litton; Terry Randall (tr); Peter Morgan, Harvey Weston (b); Allan Ganley, Eddie Taylor (d); Maxine Daniels (v). 9/87–6/91.

 Falling Castle Asman Jazz 001 Litton (p solo). n.d.

Litton is a clever and accomplished practitioner of early jazz piano methods. The Solo Art set brings together the fruits of a group of dates made over a four-year period and is a sweetly pitched almanac of old-fashioned graces. 'Cherokee' has no bop in it but is in its way just as virtuosic. There are three features for Maxine Daniels (especially fine is 'Black And Blue'), a group of trio tracks and six solos, with a particular emphasis on Fats Waller material. A great deal to enjoy here.

Falling Castle is from rather later, and leaves Litton to his own devices. His stride playing is rather light and graceful, seldom resorting to the hammer-fisted approach, and in the original 'Litton On The Keys' he even suggests a link between the Harlem stride masters and the 'novelty' pianists of the same period. 'Limehouse Blues' is busy in a scurrying way. 'Alice Blue Gown' is amusingly knocked about. 'For Rebekah' is a fetching piece of impressionism which ends the record on a note that Litton might well explore at greater length. The record is sometimes a victim of its own unemphatic nature and slips into the background, but it's a pleasing recital.

Fredrik Ljungkvist

TENOR, ALTO, BARITONE AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, CLARINET

Contemporary Swedish post-bop saxophonist.

 Fallin' Papers Dragon DCD 267 Ljungkvist; Torbjörn Gulz (p); Filip Augustson (b); Bo Söderberg (d). 8/94.

A thoughtful set of originals, mostly by the leader and Gulz, although Augustson sneaks in what might be the best tune in 'You Always Remember How'. Much of it is in the style of sombre lyricism which often characterizes music from this quarter, yet the spry 'Vilse I Fororten' is a smart change of pace. The title-track is an overwrought requiem, and Ljungkvist plays nothing that is strikingly individual, but there's much to enjoy in its cool way.

() Walk, Stop, Look And Walk / () Fungus Crazy Wisdom 013112 / Moserobie MMP CD014 Ljungkvist; Johan Berthling (b); Raymond Strid (d). 6–9/00; 6/03.

The two records by the trio LSB mark a startling progression. All the Nordic musings have been displaced by a bristling, argumentative jazz which at times moves beyond song form into a blasted kind of free playing. The huge title-track of Walk, Stop, Look And Walk is 22 minutes of flailing tenor/bass/drums, and they follow that with the even more impassioned 'Kurt', where Ljungkvist picks up the baritone, the horn which he uses for his slowest, loudest commentaries. Strid is a clattery drummer whose energies are thunderously dispersed across every part of his kit. Ljungkvist picks up the clarinet, too, and gets a sonorous sound.

This disc was recorded live at the Glenn Miller Café and the Empty Bottle, but the Moserobie set was done in a studio. It's the same again, only more pointed. 'Fredriks Hörna' is a supremely ugly baritone blow, yet the clarinet treatment of Ornette's 'Mothers Of The Veil' has an almost pastoral feel to it.

() Yun Kan 1 2 3 4 5 / () Badaling Caprice CAP 21690 / 21769 Ljungkvist; Klas Nevrin (p, zither); Per-Åke Holmlander (tba); Mattias Welin (b); Jon Fält (d). 12/03; 5/06.

The pastoral side seems to be getting an upper hand at times, and there's less blast, more temperance from the new Yun Kan 5. Which doesn't stop Ljungkvist delivering another engrossing set. Holmlander's tuba makes some surprising appearances, though he's not on every track. Welin and Fält create skittering pulses underfoot. The record feels rather bitty, as if Ljungkvist were trying on too many hats and horns, but track by track it's spirited and entertaining. The follow-up consolidates the group, but doesn't quite cross the line to something grander. 'Oslo' and the brooding 'Folkhemmet' are both exceptional, the latter curiously reminiscent of Ljungkvist's early Dragon record. 'Ray Battle' pays tribute to Strid in a more open-formed idiom that suits the group well.

Charles Lloyd (born 1938)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, FLUTE, TIBETAN OBOE, TAROGATO

Before his apotheosis in the Summer of Love, the Memphian had served an apprenticeship with Gerald Wilson, Chico Hamilton and others. After doldrums in the later '70s he returned with a dark new sound and a Coltrane-influenced spirituality.

 Dream Weaver /  In Europe Collectables 6361 / Atlantic 80788 Lloyd; Keith Jarrett (p); Cecil McBee (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 3/66; 10/66.

(*) Journey Within / In Europe Collectables COL CD 6236 As above, except add Ron McClure (b). 66, 67.

(*) The Flowering Of The Original Charles Lloyd Quartet Collectables COL CD 6285. As above, except omit McClure. 7 & 10/66.

 Forest Flower / Soundtrack /  Soundtrack /  Soundtrack / In The Soviet Union Atlantic/Rhino 8122 71746 / Atlantic Masters 8122733352 / Collectables COL CD 6237 As above, except add Ron McClure (b). 8/66, 11/68; 11/68; 11/68, 5/67.

Lloyd is proof that there are second acts in American lives. Something of a jazz champion in the rock era, he had an appeal for young white audiences who found even electric Miles too remote. Even without benefit of hindsight, the Lloyd quartet was pretty exceptional. In 1967 Jarrett and DeJohnette were bursting with promise. The first album anticipates the group's legendary status as a live act. It's marked by some bold writing – 'Dream Weaver', 'Sombrero Sam' – and fantastic group interplay. Jarrett's 'Love No. 3' feature on the live Journey Within is full of rich promise. 'Lonesome Child' is a complex, multi-layered composition that requires concentration and flair from all four performers. 'Memphis Green' is a hometown idea, almost nostalgic.

In Europe was also live, taped in Oslo in front of a young crowd. 'Tagore' and 'Karma' are strong indicators of Lloyd's pre-retirement interest in John Coltrane, but these are looser and less assured performances than some. His long-form composition – 'Autumn Sequence' on Dream Weaver, much of Forest Flower/Soundtrack – is rooted in improvisation rather than cinematic writing.

Neither Jarrett nor DeJohnette quite lives up to potential on Forest Flower, which is a rare example of the group sounding like sax-and-rhythm, but there is enough on show to suggest important things to come. Jarrett's composer-credit on 'Sorcery' is an early foretaste, and McBee also gets his name under the line. The two-part title-piece remained a favourite, almost a signature-tune, until the band broke up. It's much more robust and much less impressionistic than one remembers. Never thought of as much of a standards player, Lloyd does have a crack at 'East Of The Sun' and shows off something of the blues colouration that crept into his more idiomatic work.

There is conflicting information about the provenance of Soundtrack, with some sources suggesting it was recorded at Town Hall, others (including the Masters reissue) placing it at Monterey. It's also available paired with In The Soviet Union, which was recorded in Tallinn and is probably the poorest of the bunch; only significant jazz ambassadors got visas in those days.

The Flowering is one of Collectables' strange pairings: Lloyd shares the space with a Warne Marsh record. Again, most of the material is recorded in Norway, but there is a single track from the 1966 Antibes Jazz Festival, which segues 'Goin' To Memphis' with 'Island Blues', the latter tune's second appearance on the disc, for it also appears with 'Love-In'.

 Fish Out Of Water ECM 841088-2 Lloyd; Bobo Stenson (p); Palle Danielsson, Jon Christensen (d). 7/89.

Lloyd gradually turned his back on jazz after the end of the '60s. By the end of the following decade, the sabbatical was assumed to be permanent. His return to performance has been much discussed. Whether his return was instigated by Michel Petrucciani is now a matter of question. The fact is that he came back, first at a Blue Note event and then as an unexpected ECM signing, though Jarrett surely had a hand in that. The comeback found him in much the same voice as before, more pastel and less rhythmically propulsive, but unmistakably himself. On Fish Out Of Water he takes six new but similar compositions at an easy pace, unhurried by the ECM house rhythm section. Though there are flashes of increased intensity here and there, and an underlying urgency which impinges only rather gradually, it's mostly a rather enervated affair. Lloyd's tone, digitalized, has lost none of its soft burnish, but it is closer to the Coltrane of the 'sheets of sound' period and the great Atlantics than most people will remember. In the '60s, he was something of a flute specialist, and that has not deserted him; the sound on 'Haghia Sophia' is deep and tremulous.

(*) Notes From Big Sur ECM 511999-2. Lloyd; Bobo Stenson (p); Anders Jormin (b); Ralph Peterson (d). 11/91.

This was still dominated by the melancholy spirit of Coltrane but built on a bedrock of invention. The 'Monk In Paris' might have made a better opening cut than 'Requiem', but Lloyd likes to build from a quiet start. 'Sister' is very similar in theme; and it's only really with Jormin's plangent introduction to 'Persevere', from 'Pilgrimage To The Mountain', that interesting things start to happen. 'Sam Song' is a medium-tempo swinger underpinned by Peterson's firm drumming and Stenson's impeccable accompaniment. After Christensen, it's a little hard to hear another drummer in this role, though Billy Hart was to come along later and make the gig his own.

The bassist introduces 'Takur' with horn-like harmonics down near the bridge, but the piece doesn't travel beyond its own opening bars. 'When Miss Jessye Sings', a tribute to opera singer Jessye Norman, begins disconcertingly close to Coltrane's most famous intro and, in the light of 'Pilgrimage To The Mountain: Persevere/Surrender', one almost wonders if Lloyd intends this album to be his A Love Supreme.

 The Call /  All My Relations / (*) Canto ECM 517719-2 / 527344-2 / 537345-2 Lloyd; Bobo Stenson (p); Anders Jormin (b); Billy Hart (d). 7/93, 7/94, 12/96.

This is a group to match the line-up of the '60s, a perfectly balanced combination of power and delicacy. The Call can sound like a backward step, but it's a record which grows in stature with every hearing.

Hart is the key element, an endlessly inventive player with an inexhaustible supply of rhythmic ideas. His work on All My Relations is superb. The 'Cape To Cairo Suite' is a tribute to Nelson Mandela, overlong and fuzzy in conception but episodically very good. The shorter cuts – 'Thelonious Theonlyus', 'Little Peace' and 'Hymne To The Mother' – are very much group efforts, played with snap.

Canto takes its time, but 'Tales Of Rumi' repays the effort, and the tracks that follow (particularly 'Desolation Sound') have an uneventful majesty that recalls label-mate Jan Garbarek, who could easily have sat in.

 Voice In The Night ECM 559445-2 Lloyd; John Abercrombie (g); Dave Holland (b); Billy Higgins (d). 99.

As he passed his 60th birthday, Lloyd seemed to pause and take stock. Here, having seemed for many years to have turned his back on much of his past work, Lloyd revisits 'Voice In The Night' and the glorious 'Forest Flower', as well as covering Strayhorn's 'A Flower Is A Lovesome Thing' and Elvis Costello's and Burt Bacharach's 'God Give Me Strength'. Also, much as he once did with 'Memphis Green' and similar downhome numbers, he gives himself the space to blow righteously on 'Island Blues Suite'.

This was also Lloyd's first comeback recording with an all-American group (expat Holland notwithstanding) for almost three decades. And what a band it is! Higgins does very much the kind of job that DeJohnette did, a driving, innately musical beat, while Abercrombie and Holland bring their own insights, compounded of rock, free music and the latter-day atmospherics associated with the label's core roster. 'Forest Flower' is a delightful re-creation, unfolding the song's rich colours in a series of time-lapse shifts. The Costello–Bacharach tune is the wild card, but Lloyd keeps in touch with the original.

() The Water Is Wide / () Hyperion With Higgins ECM 549043-2 / 014000-2 Lloyd; Brad Mehldau (p); John Abercrombie (g); Larry Grenadier, Darek Oles (b); Billy Higgins (d). 12/99.

These sessions are overshadowed by the death at 65 of master drummer Higgins, just a year after the first record was released. It was originally to have been dedicated to the drummer's mother. The most affecting moments are tributes to Billy himself, even when he doesn't actually play. 'Prayer' had been written for him by Lloyd during a previous bout of illness, but it's played here just on saxophone, guitar and the barely credited Darek Oles. Billy himself is the star of a bittersweet duet version of 'There Is A Balm In Gilead', playing stark patterns behind Lloyd's Trane-like tenor.

Again, the backward glance; Lloyd includes 'Song Of Her', a Cecil McBee composition from the 1966 Forest Flower, and with it two relatively unknown Ellington tunes, 'Black Butterfly' and 'Heaven', as well as Billy Strayhorn's 'Lotus Blossom'. Lloyd phrases almost like Hodges here and on the original ballad, 'Lady Day', and Mehldau proves to be an able and responsive accompanist.

The second album from the sessions is no filler and shows what a rich association this group has been for Lloyd. Tragically, its real heart no longer beats; Higgins's contribution to 'Secret Life Of The Hidden City' and the 'Darkness On The Delta Suite' is quite extraordinary, rhythmic but also profoundly melodic and with a gentleness of touch that demands the most exacting hand at the desk.

 Jumping The Creek ECM 982 4130 Lloyd; Geri Allen (p); Robert Hurst (b); Eric Harland (d). 1/04.

Stanley Crouch makes the interesting observation that Lloyd's greatest gift is his ability to spot talent and assemble unique-sounding groups. This is Geri Allen's best recorded performance since her own early trios with Haden and Motian. Like all Lloyd 'sidemen', she's given ample freedom to express herself and what emerges, even on the opening 'Ne Me Quitte Pas', is a music which relies on group chemistry more than individual skills. Lloyd himself is in gentler, more straightforward voice than on many of the later records and the Coltrane influence is less pronounced. In Harland, he has found the nearest available equivalent to the young DeJohnette.

* Sangam ECM 987 5183 Lloyd; Eric Harland (d, perc, p); Zakir Hussain (tabla, perc, v). 5/04.

Sangam means a meeting-place or confluence of waters, and that is exactly what you hear: three musicians bringing their own experience and considerable shared understanding to an unrehearsed and unscripted event. The disc documents a Santa Barbara concert in celebration of the late Billy Higgins. It followed a screening of Dorothy Darr's film Home. There's a free-floating atmosphere to the opening 'Dancing On One Foot', but in 'Tales Of Rumi' Hussain seems to quote from both Lloyd himself ('Sombrero Sam') and Sonny Rollins ('St Thomas') in his tabla solo, testament to how subtly tuned his instrument is and how little the absence of a conventional harmony instrument is felt. Both Lloyd and Harland turn to the piano for interludes, but the main action is from reeds and percussion, with Harland and Hussain weaving a richly complex carpet on which the music simply flies. More than ever, Lloyd sounds touched by the spirit of John Coltrane, and there are phrases on that same opening track which might come from one of Trane's encounters with Rashied Ali. It's Higgins who looks down, though, on a meeting of minds that must have made him smile.

* Rabe De Nube ECM 001063 Lloyd; Jason Moran (p); Reuben Rogers (b); Eric Harland (d). 4/07.

Lloyd turned 70 in 2008 but was still at the peak of his powers on this live date from Basel. Key to his strength as ever is the recruitment of fine young bands. Harland was a keystone of Sangam and he delivers a tremendous performance here too, stretching out the time on even the most ostensibly clipped of metres. The opening 'Prometheus' features one of the most exciting lines Lloyd has ever delivered, but the track then dissolves into a meet-the-band round of solos. Apart from Lloyd's cadenzas and some of Moran's features, this is a group that works most effectively when playing as a unit. 'Migration Of The Spirit' is a lovely thing, with an enchanting coda. 'Booker's Garden' starts off on alto flute then hands over to Moran, who explores some quite unexpected intervals in an edgy solo. Then, like most of these pieces, it changes tack entirely and comes on like a hard-bop swinger with an element of shuffle in the rhythm.

'Ramanujan' sees the tarogato come out, over more of Harland's enigmatic percussion. It's fairly orthodox snake-charming stuff, apart from the drummer's role. Moran takes on 'La Colline De Monk' for half its length before Lloyd sweeps back in to play it out as a thoughtful duo, punctuated with quotes. 'Sweet Georgia Bright' is sinuous, elegant, almost sly in its use of altered changes, and not so very far from the source material. Rogers does a fantastic job on a fast line. The only non-original is the Silvio Rodriguez title-track, which sounds to these ears superfluous to a set that has already made its formidable mark. A fine CD and shorn of a couple of cuts (and some excessive audience noise) a potentially great one.

Also, in brief:

 Moonman BGO 393. 11/70.

A drab and bloodless set, though with some hints of the mystical jazz of the comeback years.

 Which Way Is East ECM 981 1796 2CD. 1/01.

An intensely personal encounter with Billy Higgins (d, perc, g, v), almost too personal to eavesdrop and more effective in Dorothy Darr's film.

 Lift Every Voice ECM 1832/3 2CD. 1–2/02.

Lloyd's response to 9/11: an emotional mix of spirituals, Marvin Gaye's funky agitprop 'What's Going On', 'Amazing Grace', 'Lift Every Voice And Sing' and his own closing 'Prayer' – the saxophonist as shaman and healer.

Jon Lloyd (born 1958)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

British improviser who's addressed a kind of formalized free playing.

 Syzygy / (*) Head Leo CDLR 173 / 186 Lloyd; John Law (p); Paul Rogers (b); Mark Sanders (d). 1 & 5/90; 1/93.

Lloyd stands somewhat apart from musical fashions. His is an unmistakably British sound, with an inevitable hint of pastoral, but it also touches on darker sources, reaching into the deep blue centre which defines this music. It flows over and round some notably strong compositional ideas which manage to hint at antecedents without ever making them explicit. The earlier records are more obviously angular, though Law tempers that to a degree. Syzygy (splendid word) is cross-grained, even perverse. By the time of Head, which was recorded live during a major Arts Council tour, Lloyd had not so much mellowed as allowed himself the time and space to let ideas breathe.

 Four And Five hatOLOGY 537 Lloyd; Stanley Adler (clo); Marcio Mattos (b); Paul Clarvis (d, perc). 12/98.

If Praxis (see below, 'in brief') had been his most substantial recorded performance to date, Four And Five took Lloyd off on a new evolutionary direction, one in which even an implied pulse was very much central and the music behaved according to its own internal dictates rather than metrical road-signs. The title-tune works by a process of repetition and variation, as does the clever, classically inspired 'Zilch, Zero, Zed', which shuffles a parallel sequence of atonal ideas. 'Blues For' has no dedicatee and no underlying blues sequence either, while a version of Ellington's 'Take The Coltrane' underlines the technique involved even more accurately.

The new line-up maintains the sound and logic of earlier groups. Mattos understands the cello's capacities and requirements and, though he doesn't play cello himself on this, he slots into Adler's mood with precision. Clarvis is a less pungent player than Mark Sanders, more of an impressionist but quite at ease where groove is at a discount. Lloyd himself sounds calm and thoughtful, feeding off the two string-players, spinning out intriguingly mathematical lines and commanding the sound with an air of patient authority.

Also, in brief:

(*) Praxis FMR CD 47 V0198. N.D.

A significant change of direction, to a more harmonically grounded music; Praxis is through-composed, with plenty of space for solo, duo and trio improvisation.

Rob Lockart

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Busy figure on the LA scene.

 Parallel Lives Origin 82485 Lockart; Bob Sheppard (ts); Bill Cunliffe (p); Larry Koonse (g); Jeff DiAngelo (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 3 & 10/06.

Lockart's been in no apparent hurry to record and this is a fairly laid-back debut. He starts with a standard, 'All Or Nothing At All', which seems a slightly diffident gesture, for his approach isn't exactly revisionist. The originals are better, with 'First Steps' and 'Waiting For The Truth' (the latter a soprano feature) both interestingly varied lines. But despite some great piano from Cunliffe, who produces, and some tasteful but non-dull guitar from Koonse, it really doesn't heat up until a more thoughtful 'Everything Happens To Me' (the only other standard) and decent blow-out with Sheppard on the closing 'It's Not Over Yet'.

Joe Locke (born 1959)

VIBRAPHONE

Born in California, but raised in the East. An evergreen guest artist, whose own work remains overlooked.

 Present Tense Steeplechase SCCD 31257 Locke; Larry Schneider (ts); Kenny Werner (p); Ron McClure (b); Ronnie Burrage (d). 7/89.

(*) Longing Steeplechase SCCD 31281 Locke; Mark Ledford (t, v); Johannes Enders (ss, ts); George Cables (p); Jeff Andrews (b); Ronnie Burrage (d). 10/90.

 But Beautiful Steeplechase SCCD 31295 Locke; Kenny Barron (p). 8/91.

 Wire Walker Steeplechase SCCD 31332 Locke; Danny Walsh (as, ts); David Kikoski (p); Ed Howard (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 11/92.

While Joe Locke can easily assert the kind of virtuosity associated with Gary Burton, it's Bobby Hutcherson's asymmetrical lines and dark, eruptive solos to which he sounds most in debt. He gets an idiosyncratic sound from the notoriously faceless instrument – he keeps the sparkle of the vibes but loses their glassiness. As an improviser, he weaves very long lines out of open harmonic situations, maintaining a momentum over short or long distances – he can send up resonant clouds of notes or pare a trail back to its sparsest origins. He can also make the most of slow tempos: the duo album with Barron strikes a meditative pose that is remarkably well sustained for 70-plus minutes.

Present Tense is dominated by the interplay of Locke and the rhythm section (Schneider is a cursory presence), and Werner's probing accompaniments are particularly acute, although the inconclusive air suggests more preparation might have yielded a better result. Longing exchanges Werner for Cables, who's equally involved (again, the horns are lightly used): 'The Double Up' and a profoundly felt 'A Child Is Born' offer very effective music. But Beautiful, as noted, is impeccably done, with Barron's felicities as telling as Locke's: this version of 'My Foolish Heart' is on a par with Hutcherson's classic set-piece. Wire Walker continues a memorable run: Smith stokes the fires on the burning title-track, Kikoski has seldom played with more point, and the leader's solos on 'A New Blue', 'A Time For Love' and the mesmerizingly complex introduction to 'Young And Foolish' figure among his best work.

 Very Early Steeplechase SCCD 31364 Locke; Ron McClure (b); Adam Nussbaum (d). 10/94.

(*) Moment To Moment Milestone MCD 9243-2 Locke; Billy Childs (p); Eddie Gomez (b); Gene Jackson (d). 11/94.

The trio date is another perfectly paced session, with the swinging tempo for 'You Don't Know What Love Is' giving way to a rapt 'I Loves You, Porgy', a dramatic 'Nature Boy' and on through eight tunes. McClure's bass-lines are the ideal melodic/rhythmic counterweight, indecently rich but always on the right part of the chord, and Nussbaum is at his most subtle. Moment To Moment is really only a shade behind, starting with a terrific workout on 'Slow Hot Wind' and making the best of an ingenious choice of standards and connoisseur's pop. After McClure, Gomez can sound unnecessarily busy, and sometimes one wants to stop and revel in Locke's sound more.

(*) Inner Space Steeplechase SCCD 31380 Locke; Mark Soskin (p); Harvie Swartz (b); Tim Horner (d). 4/95.

(*) Slander (And Other Love Songs) Milestone 9284-2 Locke; Billy Childs (ky); Vic Juris (g); Rufus Reid (b); Gene Jackson (d). 3/97.

Inner Space is no more or less than another report from a top-flight working band, even if it actually existed as such for no more than a year or so. Reunited in the studio, the group tackles chestnuts such as 'Django' and 'Skylark' alongside Andrew Hill's 'Tripping', Chick Corea's title-tune and Frank Kimbrough's 'Sanibel Island'. If Soskin seems less of an individual force than some of his predecessors, it doesn't stop Locke from delivering a typically eloquent and forceful performance on all the tunes.

With pop tunes in the programme and Childs switching on his synth here and there, fears that Locke may have sold out to smooth jazz on Slander need to be allayed. Mostly, this is as tough and uncompromised as any record in his discography. The original tunes are the usual blend of lyrical and challenging, and he plays both Lalo Schifrin's 'Mission Impossible' and Joni Mitchell's 'Blue' without making them seem either kitsch or cute.

 4 Walls Of Freedom Sirocco SJL 1021 Locke; Gerard Presencer (flhn); Bob Berg (ts); James Genus (b); Gary Novak (d). 9/02.
 Dear Life Sirocco SJL 1025 Locke; Tommy Smith (ts); Ed Howard (b); Gary Novak (d). 9/03.
Here Locke's march towards some sort of pop fusion is arrested, although on its own terms the earlier date is perhaps nothing that special. Berg (on one of his final appearances on record) is, as ever, prone to overdoing it, and the more temperate Presencer is a better voice in the ensemble, which tackles the six-part title-suite with some aplomb. There is, though, some awkwardness in the match between the horns and the more introspective slant of Locke's writing, which seems to be chasing after autobiographical ambitions. Dear Life has a new line-up and the music has a very sweet disposition: even the usually prodigious Smith sounds restrained. Locke was very good at side-stepping prettiness on his earlier records, but his Sirocco albums do seem to have one spoonful of sugar too many in them.

(*) Rev-elation Sharp Nine 1033 Locke; Mike LeDonne (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Mickey Roker (d). 4/05.
This is the Milt Jackson Tribute Band, live at Ronnie Scott's. They'd done a one-off residency in New York and liked what they were hearing. The group is Milt's own former section and the material is drawn largely from outside Bags' own bag. Locke has a more modern approach than the master, as can be heard on 'Opus De Funk', though LeDonne's Fender accompaniment sounds like period costume. Ray Brown's 'Used To Be Jackson' lets them dig into some vintage hard bop right at the end, picking up from where Locke's own 'Big Town' threw down the challenge. A cracking date.

(*) Live In Seattle Origin 82464 Locke; Geoff Keezer (p); Mike Pope (b); Terreon Gully (d). 11/05.
Co-led with Keezer, the group jumps straight into 'Van Gogh By Numbers', a tune that manages to sum up both directions of Locke's writing career. Keezer's touch on electric is impressively personalized. Composing honours are evenly shared thereafter, though Locke's lines on 'Miramar' and the closing 'The King (For T.M.)' are the most memorable. They throw in one unexpected idea with James Taylor's 'Native Son', which gets a faintly mournful treatment. It's 'The King', though, that'll send you straight back to the start.

(*) Sticks And Strings Jazz Eyes 003 Locke; Jonathan Kreisberg (g); Jay Anderson (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 07.
An intriguing group. Kreisberg's guitar makes for an unusual combination in a Locke group, but it works fine. Anderson's time-shifting 'Time Like The Present' gives them all a workout before the group moves into a fine sequence of Locke originals, including the almost eccentric 'The Rosario Material' and 'Terzani', which has a south-of-the-border tinge. A couple of standards slightly muddy the album's progress, but Joe's group pulls out another rabbit with the closing 'Sixth Sense', a tough LaBarbera line that gives them all a hard final round. Another terrific record.

Also, in brief:

 Sound Tracks Milestone 9271-2. 3/96.
Nine Hollywood themes, from Gone with the Wind to The English Patient.

 Beauty Burning Sirocco SJL 1008. 12/99.
Locke looks for a way out of the straight-ahead straitjacket, but this isn't quite it.

(*) Storytelling /  State Of Soul Sirocco SJL 1012 / 1019. 8/00; 11/01.
The pop material's mostly dull and Mark Ledford's singing doesn't cut it. Dull records.

Mark Lockheart (born 1961)

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, BASS CLARINET, PIANO

Came to prominence with Loose Tubes, and subsequently with Perfect Houseplants and Polar Bear.

(*) Moving Air Basho SRCD 14-2 Lockheart; John Parricelli (g); Dudley Phillips (b); Martin France (d, drum machine). 4–5/05.
Whether by chance or design, Lockheart has had a miserly career as a leader on record. This songful, clever set makes a convincing showcase. The nine originals are thoughtfully orchestrated to encompass overdubbed horns, solos and counterpoint, giving almost every moment a richness that hardly makes it seem like the work of four musicians: 'Man In The Moon' is as detailed as a big-band score. Lockheart's big tenor sound is his signature, but he's just as effective on soprano and mournful bass clarinet. Some of it has a familiar English pastoral feel – 'When The Fire Burns Low' could be by Surman – but with France often playing what amounts to a skinned-back hip-hop beat and deft, sparing use of electronics the music is full of unexpected flourishes.

Giuseppi Logan (1935–9?)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, FLUTE, PAKISTANI OBOE

An enigmatic presence on the free-jazz scene, he recorded briefly and then disappeared.

 The Giuseppi Logan Quartet ESP/Calibre 1007 Logan; Don Pullen (p); Eddie Gomez (b); Milford Graves (d). 5/64.
 More ESP/Calibre 1013 As above, except add Reggie Johnson (b). 5/65.
It's never been entirely clear whether Logan was a radical genius, some kind of idiot savant or simply a fraud. At first glance, his playing seems artless and crude, but he manages to structure relatively complex solos on both of these records, and his multi-instrumentalism on 'Tabla Suite' and the long 'Bleecker Partita', both on the earlier ESP, suggest a certain sophistication of musical thought, even if the execution lacks polish. Pullen and Gomez are radicals of a more stylish stamp and seem anxious to swing the music round to a more conventional principle of organization; Logan and Graves are out-and-out freedom exponents, though, and while such axes may have worked for the John Coltrane Quartet, they establish an unresolvable tension here. The other long track, 'Taneous', has some effective moments that overcome the feeling of strain, but this is very much an acquired taste.

The second album is pretty dud, or at least Logan's contribution is. One gets the feeling that his sidemen (Johnson is a later draftee) have simply had enough and are getting on with their own thing. Logan tries to get his own back by playing piano on 'Curve Eleven' but to no avail. Interestingly again, the most effective work is on the longest track, here 'Wretched Saturday', as if Giuseppi has to work himself up to a certain pitch before he delivers. Logan remains one of the enigmas of the new jazz.

London Improvisers Orchestra

ENSEMBLE

Convened for a British 'conduction' by visiting American Butch Morris, the LIO aims to extend small-group improvisation into larger-scale ensembles.

(*) Proceedings Emanem 4201 2CD Large ensemble. 7/99.
(*) The Hearing Continues ... Emanem 4203 2CD Large ensemble. 9/00, 2/01.
 Responses, Reproduction & Reality Emanem 4110 Large ensemble. 5/04.

Benefiting from the discipline of a monthly session at the Red Rose in London, and from the flexibility and diversity of its membership, the LIO delivers at many different levels. Several of these pieces are composed or directed by the composer/conductor, but the emphasis is on freedom, and on the careful integration of individual expression within a collective. Steve Beresford's magnificent 'Concerto For Alan Tomlinson' actually has no pre-composed elements at all and Simon H. Fell's 'Ellington 100 (Strayhorn 85)', also on Proceedings, is an excellent example of freedom within structure, a key Ellingtonian principle.

Many of the names involved will be familiar to habitués of the British free scene, but these long and richly varied discs also offer an opportunity to hear work by relative newcomers and hitherto undocumented improvisers. Caroline Kraabel's 'Virus' and 'Notes For Terry Day' are good examples, and the latter also provides a welcome return for percussionist Day, who had been sidelined by ill-health.

The first two records feature interpolated free improvisations, and the second disc very much picks up where its predecessor left off a year earlier. Kraabel is again prominent. Veryan Weston presents the astonishing 'Concerto For Soft-Loud Key Box' (Anglo-Saxon for piano), and Philipp Wachsmann directs 'Fire In The Air'. 'Dingos Creep' is an intriguing sextet improvisation for saxophones only and the range of instrumental effects seems richer second time around. The other big plus is that vibist Orphy Robinson, not normally associated with free playing, and an unfortunate absentee on Proceedings, is featured on Evan Parker's thoughtful 'Orphy:Us'.

The third record, recorded at Conway Hall, consists of pieces prepared by Dave Tucker, Kraabel, Dave Leahy, Fell and Wachsmann, again with space for free improvisation.

(*) Separately & Together Emanem 4219 2CD London Improvisers Orchestra; Glasgow Improvisers Orchestra. 5/07.

An extraordinary evening in which, for the Together part, no fewer than 43 improvising musicians crammed into the Red Rose's performing space to conduct a latter-day battle of the bands. Disc one belongs largely to the London outfit, with improvisations linking pieces devised and conducted by Philipp Wachsmann, Ashley Wales, Alison Blunt and Terry Day. Concluding the disc are pieces conceived by GIO's George Burt (a masterly convocation made in honour of Barry Guy) and Emma Roche. The London ensemble then returns for an improvisation, then both orchestras are heard on three pieces conducted by David Leahy, Una MacGlone and Raymond MacDonald, and Dave Tucker respectively. Detailed analysis of the music is no more possible here than qualitative comparison would be desirable. Nor is it easy to generalize as to what, other than experience, distinguishes these powerful groupings. Tucker's concern to avoid cacophony and incoherence in the final piece is shrewdly managed, and one of the characteristics of the recording is the clarity of instrumental detail. If pushed, we'd suggest sampling Blunt's 'Hive Life' and Burt's 'Seven Sisters', but the whole set is a wildly exhilarating, admittedly exhausting but hugely satisfying experience. Two great cities, celebrating freedom.

London Jazz Composers' Orchestra

ENSEMBLE

Founded by Barry Guy in 1970, a seminal ensemble of British free-music and modern-jazz figures, giving themselves a chance of working from a large-scale compositional base. Barry Guy, the original founder, remains the central figure behind the LJCO.

[illegible]

Ode
Intakt CD 041 Barry Guy (b, leader); Harry Beckett, Dave Holdsworth (t); Marc Charig (c); Mike Gibbs, Paul Nieman, Paul Rutherford (tb); Dick Hart (tba); Trevor Watts (as, ss); Mike Osborne, Bernard Living (as); Alan Wakeman, Evan Parker (ts, ss); Bob Downes (ts, b); Karl Jenkins (bs, ob); Howard Riley (p); Derek Bailey (g); Jeff Clyne, Chris Laurence (b); Tony Oxley (perc); Buxton Orr (cond). 72.

The London Jazz Composers' Orchestra was directly inspired by the example of the American trumpeter and composer Michael Mantler's Jazz Composers' Orchestra. It rested squarely on the vision of a leader who, in an age of hyper-specialization and stylistic antagonism, has managed to draw strength and inspiration from across a vast musical spectrum: improvisation, atonal composition, Baroque music, jazz. Ode was Guy's attempt to integrate improvisation within the textures and dimensions of orchestral – indeed symphonic – music. It is a grand success and remains a key text in contemporary improvisation on a large scale. Ode was been repeatedly referred to as a manifesto, and as a beginning to a long process of exploration. With a quarter-century's hindsight – it has recently been reissued – there is nothing tentative, polemical or ideological about it. Guy's conviction that the individual capacities of improvised music had been developed disproportionately better than those of ensemble playing is best reinforced here by his triumphant solution to the problem. Arguably better, arguably more ambitious and more finished works were to follow, but Ode has a historical significance that means it belongs in every modern collection.

 Study II / Stringer Intakt CD 095 Barry Guy (b, leader); Harry Beckett, Jon Corbett, Marc Charig, Henry Lowther, Dave Spence (t, flhn); Conrad Bauer, Paul Rutherford, Paul Nieman, Radu Malfatti, Alan Tomlinson (tb); Melvyn Poore, Steve Wick (tba); Peter Brötzmann , Larry Stabbins, Trevor Watts, Evan Parker, Paul Dunmall, Simon Picard (reeds); Pete McPhail (sax, f); Howard Riley, Irène Schweizer (p); Philipp Wachsmann (vn); Peter Kowald, Barre Phillips (b); Paul Lytton, Tony Oxley, John Stevens (perc). 3/80, 2/91.

Documentation of the LCJO has never been better. The earlier date, Stringer, was formerly available as an FMP LP. It finds the orchestra still confident in its language and making good on Guy's original intentions, but already branching out into new examinations of the relationship between collective improvisation and individual solidarity with the guiding concept. A further decade on, Study II sees Guy and LCJO experimenting in an ever more sophisticated way with concepts of improvised form. The piece has an almost organic logic, rising out of and falling back into silence without ever quite revealing its guiding principles. These are welcome returns.

(*) Zurich Concerts Intakt CD 005/1995 2CD Barry Guy (b, leader); Anthony Braxton (leader); Jon Corbett, Henry Lowther (t); Marc Charig (c); Radu Malfatti, Paul Rutherford, Alan Tomlinson (tb); Steve Wick (tba); Paul Dunmall, Peter McPhail, Evan Parker, Simon Picard, Trevor Watts (reeds); Philipp Wachsmann (vn); Howard Riley (p); Barre Phillips (b); Paul Lytton (d). 11/87–3/88.

* Harmos / (*) Double Trouble Intakt 013 / 019 Barry Guy (b, leader); Jon Corbett, Henry Lowther (t); Marc Charig (c); Radu Malfatti, Paul Rutherford, Alan Tomlinson (tb); Steve Wick (tba); Paul Dunmall, Peter McPhail, Evan Parker, Simon Picard, Trevor Watts (reeds); Philipp Wachsmann (vn); Howard Riley (p); Barre Phillips (b); Paul Lytton (d). 4/89.

In the years that followed Ode, the LJCO changed somewhat in ethos, opening up its repertoire to compositions other than those by Guy. These included graphic scores by drummer Tony Oxley, looser structures from trombonist Paul Rutherford and, from outside the band, challenging works from 'straight' composers with an interest in improvisation, such as Krzysztof Penderecki. Anthony Braxton was a thoroughly like-minded collaborator, and this is one of the few occasions when his contact with British and European improvisers has seemed to yield a genuinely communicative music. Whereas Guy likes to work with existing subgroups of the orchestra, Braxton layers compositions – in this case 'No. 135 (+41, 63, 96)', 'No. 136 (+96)', 'No. 108B (+86, 96)' and 'No. 134 (+96)' – in dense palimpsests.

Harmos and Polyhymnia (recorded at the earlier of the Swiss concerts) represent what Guy considers to be a third stage in the band's progress. The title alone aroused some anxiety before the fact that Guy was clambering on the bandwagon of neo-tonality. In fact, he interprets the Greek word in its original meaning of 'coming together'. It opens sharply enough with a broken fanfare from the trombones, jagged authority mixed with a tender joy. It's followed by a stately chorale which will inevitably bring to mind Guy's other musical enthusiasms, the Baroque filtered through a modern, radical consciousness. If the piece has a real centre, it is the long, winding saxophone melody played by Watts, which shapes the composition and proposes some sort of rapprochement with harmony. No other player strays as far in this direction. Other individual contributions are, by comparison, harder-edged and more confrontational, but the piece does confirm what was to become a regular feature of Guy's LJCO work, a mutuality of effort between a single solo voice and the ensemble.

Double Trouble is a slightly tougher nut, originally conceived as a two-piano project for Howard Riley and Alex von Schlippenbach. In the event, the recorded version is anchored on Riley alone, with a sequence of carefully marshalled instrumental groupings (notably two trios: Guy, Parker and Lytton, and Riley, Charig and Phillips) orbiting the centre. As a whole, the piece has a tremendous centrifugal coherence that balances the apparently anarchic but tightly organized behaviour of soloists and section-players.

* Theoria Intakt CD 024 As above, except omit Riley, Rutherford; add Conrad Bauer (tb); Irène Schweizer (p). 2/91.

Theoria is effectively a piano concerto for Irène Schweizer. The difficulty presented was that of balancing individual and ensemble elements in a work of this scale and complexity; neither Guy nor Schweizer would have welcomed anything as fixed and definitive as a classical or Romantic concerto, yet clearly it would be undesirable to have a soloist improvise freely for nearly an hour against a fixed orchestral score. The solution is to demarcate very precisely the starting- and finishing-points for individual soloists and for internal subdivisions of the orchestra, allowing the players a paradoxical degree of freedom within the basic structure. Guy attempts not to juxtapose blandly different styles of playing, but to overlap them creatively, creating diffraction patterns and points of maximum energy. In an orchestra of soloists, Schweizer stands out clearly but does not dominate; what happens is that her improvisations become the constituent elements of other musicians' activity, a process parallel to but obviously very different from jazz musicians' reliance on chord sequences or standard tunes.

Also, in brief:

(*) Portraits Intakt CD 035. 3/93.

Another compelling chapter in Guy's odyssey with LCJO, monumental in scale and in emotional charge.

* Double Trouble II Intakt CD 048. 12/95.

A realization of the earlier work, with Marilyn Crispell and Irène Schweizer fulfilling the intended dual role.

(*) Three Pieces For Orchestra Intakt CD 045. 6/96.

Here the formal and 'free' components are united in a way analogous to tensile structure, using instrumental interrelationships as a structural device.

Ramon Lopez

PERCUSSION

Spanish, but a member of the French Orchestre National Du Jazz.

 Eleven Drums Songs Leo CD LR 044 Lopez (perc solo). 12/97.
* Songs Of The Spanish Civil War Leo CD LR 299 Lopez: Thierry Madiot (tb); Daunik Lazro (as); Paul Rogers (b); Beñat Achiary (v). 7/00.
(*) Duets 2: Rahsaan Roland Kirk Leo CD LR 356 Lopez; Harry Beckett (t); Thierry Madiot (tb); Andrea Neumann (p); Emmanuel Bex (org); Noël Akchoté (g); Joëlle Léandre (b, v); Chim Nwobueze (saw); Majid Bekkos (perc); Beñat Achiary (v). 7/00–2/02.
 Flowers Of Peace Leo CD LR 438 Lopez; Sophia Domancich (p); Joëlle Léandre (b). 05.

 Swing Doors: Drums Solo II Leo CD LR 491 Lopez (perc solo). 5/07.

Few players can sustain interest over a whole CD of solo percussion, but Lopez does on the first and last of these, subtly layered performances that merit repeated listening. His masterpiece, though, is the Civil War project, in which a number of French-based improvisers have a hand, including the charismatic Achiary. 'El Quinto Regimiento' might be remembered from Charlie Haden's Liberation Music Orchestra record, but most of these themes are little known outside Spain; this might prove an obstacle, since the impact of these versions depends on knowing the original song. Lazro's lemony sound is perfect for this material.

Running it a close second is the Kirk set, a series of imaginative duets mostly based on Kirk themes. The highlights are Harry Beckett's magnificent approach to 'Rip, Rig And Panic', a reminder of what a formidable improviser he can be, and the wonderful Joëlle Léandre on 'The Inflated Tear'. That said, there isn't a dull or makeweight track on the album, and even the closing original with Majid Bekkos works well in the context.

Léandre is back in fine form on Flowers Of Peace, which also provides a further chance to sample the under-recorded Domancich. This is a less innovative and imaginative record than its predecessors and sounds more of a routine gig. However, if superb musicianship means anything, it scores on that alone.

Russ Lossing

PIANO

Classically educated, he blends freedom and structure with rare confidence.

 Dreamer / (*) As It Grows Double Time DTRCD174 / hatOLOGY 605 Lossing; Ed Schuller (b); Paul Motian (d). 4/00; 3/02.

 Phrase 6 Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 205 Lossing; John Hebert (b); Jeff Williams (d). 2/04.

 All Things Arise hatOLOGY 629 Lossing (p solo). 05.

(*) Metal Rat Clean Feed CF064 Lossing; Mat Maneri (vla); Mark Dresser (b). N.D.

Lossing isn't the kind of piano trio leader who believes the form entails a lulling lyricism; nor is he the kind of classically trained pianist who considers lots of notes a guarantee of authority. The presence of tunes by Monk and Andrew Hill on the debut offers some, but only partial, clues to his pungent, unhackneyed approach. He's not an obvious follower of either and his own compositions, which seem somewhat off a production line on the first record, have an attractively unsettling cast. 'Yaqui Poem' has a tinge of funk, but it's otherwise as uncategorizable as the rest.

The same trio's back on As It Grows and whatever the title means (other than introducing the 'Suite Of Time' sequence) it points to an organically developing group. Schuller gets lots of space and Motian is all bright movement. The approach is freer, but not as free as on the largely improvised date with Maneri and Dresser. Lossing likes to experiment, and there are parts of Metal Rat which have to go down as noble failures, though the title-piece is a nice example of his 'open piano' technique, with the sustain pedal wedged down and the whole thing ringing uncontrollably.

He tries similar things on the solo record, which includes a now familiar mixture of bop, abstract ideas, folkish themes and original compositions: he covers 'Alabama Song', Ornette's 'Kathelin Grey', Duke's 'Azure' and Rollins's 'Pent-Up House' with that now familiar chiming delivery that seems to leave space round every phrase and note while filling the whole sound-frame with action.

The FS trio is perhaps the best yet. Hebert's huge sound and Williams's busy percussion lend themselves to a tremendous set list: the original 'Koan', the group-improvised 'ZeroUno', Charlie Parker's 'Dexterity', Peadar Kearney's 'Down By The Glenside'. Exciting even to read; on disc, it's terrific – a genuinely significant contemporary figure.

Eddy Louiss (born 1941)

ORGAN, PIANO

A Parisian, he played in his father's band in the '50s and studied at the conservatoire. Sang with Double Six, 1961–3, then backed horn-players on piano and moved to organ in the late '60s. He later worked with a big band.

 Trio Dreyfus FDM 36501-9 Louiss; René Thomas (g); Kenny Clarke (d). 68.

 Bohemia After Dark Emarcy 013140-2 Louiss; Jimmy Gourley (g); Guy Pedersen (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 72.

Louiss's records have been in and out of circulation, but Dreyfus have restored some. The 1968 session by his trio is a tremendous rediscovery. The six themes mix bop staples like 'Hot House' and 'No Smoking' with Thomas's haunting 'Blue Tempo' and a line by Clarke, and the playing has enormous power and energy. Louiss swarms all over the organ, charming out sweet melodies as well as thrashing together blues-drenched solos; Thomas plays with what is for him a rare intensity; and Clarke, recorded in hot close-up, is magnificent. This takes most similar Jimmy Smith and Jack McDuff records to the cleaners. In comparison, Bohemia After Dark is a bit disappointing. Jimmy Gourley is always worth hearing, but the record seems cool to the point of perfunctory at times.

(*) Sentimental Feeling Dreyfus FDM 36600-2 Louiss; Fanfare Band. 11–12/98.

A big leap to the '90s and a jump in scale, too. Sentimental Feeling has three tracks with trio, but the others feature the enormous Fanfare band, 41-strong and not afraid to sound it. Louiss wrote all the music, and he tends to use the orchestra in great blocks or washes of sound. On 'Le Destin', in dedication to Michel Petrucciani, there's an effect where the big band seems to be stalking the organist, and the result is unforgettable. Sometimes the band seems too unwieldy to make sense: when the trio sets up the slinky pace of 'La Scorpionne', it's hard to see how it will accommodate the orchestra, and sure enough the mass of players tend to lumber alongside the action. But it's a courageous and unpredictable record.

 Récit Proche Dreyfus FDM 36609-2 Louiss; Daniel Huck (as); Xavier Cobo (ts); Jean-Marie Ecay (g); Julio Rakotonanahary (b); Paco Sery (d). 4/00.

A new groove for a new century. It's bright, optimistic music. Louiss is still settling for situations that flirt with instrumental pop, but just when you're ready to give up on it a lick or a solo keeps things close to honest, and it's good to hear the odd turn from Cobo and Huck. 'Pour Toujours' at least has more blues in it than any slice of American smooth.

Also, in brief:

() Sang Mêlé Dreyfus FDM 36516-2. 87, 92.
Combines the record of this name, which has an '80s tinkertoy feel, and 1992's Wébé, which is grittier and more organic.

(*) Conférence De Presse Volumes 1 & 2 Dreyfus FDM 36568-2 / 36573-2. 6/94.
Two sets of duets with the mercurial Petrucciani.

Julien Lourau (born 1970)

SOPRANO, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

The Parisian has developed from a Brecker acolyte into a player of the broadest tastes, embracing funk, Latin and other idioms.

 The Rise Label Bleu LBLC 6640 Lourau; Malik Mezzadri (f); Bojan Zulfikarpasic, Gerardo Di Giusto (p); Krassen Lutzkanov (kaval); Fred Chiffoleau, Carlos Bushini (b); Ari Hoenig, Minino Garay, Maxime Zampieri (d); Gustavo Ovalles (perc); Elvita Delgado (v). 6–9/01.

 Fire /  Forget Label Bleu LBLC 6670 / 668081 CD + DVD Lourau; Bojan Z (p); Eric Löhrer (g); Vincent Artaud (b); Daniel Garcia Bruno (d, perc); Mina Agossi, Allonymous, John Greaves, Magic Malik (v). 04.

 Vs Rumbabierta Label Bleu LBLC 6690 Lourau; Eric Löhrer, Maika Munan (g); Felipe Cabrera (b); Javier Campos Martinez, Abraham Manfa Mansfaroll, Miguel Puntilla Rios (perc, v); Sebastian Quezada, Onilde Gomez Valon (v, perc). N.D.

Lourau made head-turning appearances as a sideman, but his Warners debut Gambit (now gone) was all over the place, with the saxophonist selling his sound to a gang of samplers, programmers and the like. When he gets space, Lourau is capable of playing fresh things. The Rise sees him seemingly recanting on the previous effort, based around acoustic quartet music, with piano duties split between Di Giusto and the admirable Zulfikarpasic. Lourau's sound hasn't suffered from his electric-band associations, and in this clearer air he gets a full, powerful tone, scuffed at the edges in a way which can suggest either aggression or poignancy. Much of the record carries reminiscences of his late father, and there's a sometimes drooping feel, but catchiness too. 'Bulkamer' lopes along over a songful chord sequence, and 'Contigo Distancia', with a charming vocal from Delgado, is as sweet as vintage Getz–Gilberto. A bit too long and dependent on the listener's empathy with the musing tone, but it's a keeper.

Fire and Forget are connected projects. The former is still full of rock, pop, trip-hop and funk elements, while the second opens up the same basic language to a more improvisational approach. There is a bonus DVD with Forget, which neither adds nor illuminates but whiles away a pleasant parcel of time.

The Afro-Cuban collaboration with Rumbabierta finds him improvising with two guitarists over a rich and constantly varied background of percussion and voices. It's undeniably exciting but is a curiously unsatisfying record on subsequent hearings. Lourau is praised for his venturesome spirit, but he also lacks focus and direction.

Joe Lovano (born 1952)

TENOR, ALTO, C-MELODY AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, ALTO AND BASS CLARINETS, PERCUSSION

Worked with Woody Herman in the late '70s, and in trio with Bill Frisell and Paul Motian the following decade, but made his mark with an impressive run of Blue Note recordings.

 Landmarks Blue Note 796108 Lovano; John Abercrombie (g); Kenny Werner (p); Marc Johnson (b); Bill Stewart (d). 8/90.

Joe Lovano stands at the heart of contemporary jazz, a figure who, solo by solo, album by album, demonstrates the continuing fertility of the genre This is the breakthrough record, a wholly satisfying set that shouts for the repeat button before the last raucous notes of 'Dig This' have died away. Stylistically it's poised midway between Monk and Coltrane, but with a pungent sauce of latter-day urban funk poured over the top, as on the mid-point 'Here And Now', with Abercrombie's uncharacteristically vocalized guitar well to the fore. The (impeccable) production is by John Scofield, who might have been a more obvious choice for the guitarist's role, but Abercrombie seems to take in Scofield's virtues as well as his own, absolutely howling through 'Dig This'. Lovano's ballad playing, as on the tribute to Elvin Jones, is increasingly impressive, with a virile focus that belies the slightly tremulous delivery.

♛  From The Soul Blue Note 798363 Lovano; Michel Petrucciani (p); Dave Holland (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 12/91.

Lovano's 'Body And Soul' wins him lifetime membership of the tenor club. Interestingly, though, he takes John Coltrane's rarely covered 'Central Park West' on alto, as if doing it on the bigger horn were unpardonable arrogance. What's wonderful about the record is how beautifully modulated the tracks are. There's not a cliché in sight. Lovano's own writing – 'Evolution', 'Lines & Spaces', 'Modern Man', 'Fort Worth', and the closing waltz, 'His Dreams' – has a clean muscular edge, and from the opening fanfare of 'Evolution' onwards it's clear that the album is going to be something special.

Petrucciani established such a presence as a recording artist in his own right that it's easy to forget how superb an accompanist he could be. The Frenchman's responses on 'Left Behind', unfamiliar territory for him, are startling. He sits out 'Fort Worth', leaving Holland and Blackwell to steer a markedly abrasive theme. Though ailing and by no means as dynamic as in former years, the drummer still sounds completely masterful. His delicate mallet figures on 'Portrait Of Jenny' are one of the instrumental high-points of a thoroughly compelling record.

(*) Tenor Legacy Blue Note 827014 Lovano; Joshua Redman (ts); Mulgrew Miller (p); Christian McBride (b); Lewis Nash (d); Don Alias (perc). 6/93.

Even given the impossibility of topping From The Soul, this is a slightly muted set, with a tentative quality that hasn't been evident in Lovano's work before. Redman had been garnering a huge amount of press before this was recorded, and it may be that both men felt that reputations were at stake. Certainly Lovano sounds edgy and over-assertive, making a decidedly strange fist of 'Love Is A Many-Splendored Thing'.

The two-tenor front line gives the music a rather old-fashioned aspect that is accentuated by probably the straightest rhythm section Lovano's worked with in years. The centrepiece is a version of Monk's 'Introspection', delivered with few frills and patient development by all the soloists. Nothing else quite comes up to that standard, though, and the long ballad 'To Her Ladyship' has a cloyingly soft centre.

* Rush Hour Blue Note 829269 Lovano; Jack Walrath (t); James Pugh (tb); David Taylor (btb, tba); John Clark, Julie Landsman (frhn); Richard Oatts (f, ts); Charles Russo (cl, bcl, as, ts); Dennis Smillie (cbcl); Robert Botti (eng hn); Michael Rabinowitz (bsn, bcl); Gloria Agostini (hp); James Chirillo (g); Fred Sherry (clo); Mark Helias, Ed Schuller (b); George Schuller (d); Mark Belair (perc, vib); Judi Silvano (v); Gunther Schuller (cond). 4–6/94.

If Quartets represented anxiety on Blue Note's part about what to do with Lovano long term, there has been no sign of anything since but a continued commitment to experiment and diversification. In a sense, Rush Hour emerges directly out of the stylistic shifting of the previous record. Certainly, the long 'Headin' Out, Movin' In' is very largely concerned with moving in and out of conventional harmony and grooves, a superb orchestration by the piece's composer, Gunther Schuller, who also contributes the atmospheric 'Rush Hour On 23rd Street'.

There could hardly have been a more sympathetic or understanding collaboration. Whether there has been any direct influence or not, Lovano's liking for overlaid voices, parallel melody lines floated over low-toned brass and woodwind, and for extremes of sonority, is remarkably close to Schuller's conception. It works triumphantly not just on the original piece but also on 'Peggy's Blue Skylight', 'Prelude To A Kiss', and 'Crepuscule With Nellie', one of the most significant performances in Lovano's growing attachment to Monk. It works, too, in scaled-down form, on a version of Ornette's 'Katheline Gray', which features a small string-and-woodwind ensemble built on the Schuller rhythm section, Ed and George, and coasting Lovano's acerbic soprano; it might almost be some forgotten nugget from the Third Stream.

Lovano's multi-instrumentalism is well aired too. 'Wildcat' is an overdubbed duet for tenor and drums; 'Juniper's Garden' is for soprano saxophone and Judi Silvano's voice; 'Chelsea Bridge' is a magnificent a cappella performance. A major restatement and consolidation rather than a substantial step forward, this is Lovano's best work since From The Soul.

(*) Celebrating Sinatra Blue Note 837718 Lovano; John Clark (frhn); Billy Drewes (ss, bcl); Dick Oatts (ts, f); Ted Nash (ts, cl); Tom Christensen (ts, ob, eng hn); Michael Rabinowitz (bsn); Kenny Werner (p); Emily Mitchell (hp); Mark Feldman, Sara Perkins (vn); Lois Martin (vla); Erik Friedlander (clo); George Mraz (b); Al Foster (d); Judi Silvano (v). 6/96.

Interest in the great singer's pedigree as a jazz artist grew during the last few years of his life. This is one of the very best of the tributes, distinguished by fine arrangements from the veteran Manny Albam and by some extraordinary playing from Lovano. The formula is now pretty familiar: saxophone and soprano voice over a conventional rhythm section and imaginatively deployed horns and strings.

The selection of material is unexpected and persuasive. At the heart of the set, a seductive reading of Sinatra's own composition, 'This Love Of Mine', a favourite of Sonny Rollins. Wedged between 'I've Got You Under My Skin' and 'Someone To Watch Over Me', it's the best small-group performance for some time. On other tracks, though, the emphasis is on an ensemble feel, and Albam's great skill is to make these familiar tunes sound fresh-minted. Opening with 'I'll Never Smile Again' was a clever choice, giving the least familiar of the songs the most conventional setting of the set, before striking out into more obviously revisionist territory with 'Chicago' and 'I'm A Fool To Want You'.

For a change, Lovano plays tenor throughout, and it's good to hear him concentrate on the big horn. He sounds as if he's steeped himself in mid-period Rollins, the same loping pace, unpredictable changes of direction and constant fidelity to the melodic line. No, he doesn't do 'My Way'.

(*) Flying Colours Blue Note 856092 Lovano; Gonzalo Rubalcaba (p). 97.

Speaking in interviews, Lovano was as enthusiastic about this encounter as about anything in his career to date. It sounds like a dream ticket for Blue Note, their most enterprising horn-player of recent times and the irrepressible Cuban. It could have been a rather flat and uninspiring encounter, and what really lifts it is the selection of material. Monk's 'Ugly Beauty' and Ornette's 'Bird Food' were inspired, left-field choices. There's a somewhat more conventional attack on 'How Deep Is The Ocean', an opportunity for both men to show off a more lyrical side, but the real payoff comes on a magnificent interpretation of 'Gloria's Step', on which Rubalcaba quotes Scott LaFaro's original bass-line in the left hand, at which Lovano immediately counters with the response figure.

* Trio Fascination (Edition One) Blue Note 833114 Lovano; Dave Holland (b); Elvin Jones (d). 9/97.

Lovano's early days in saxophone/organ trios and later dabbling in starker bass-and-drum settings are generously synthesized on this fine session. Lovano's ninth Blue Note session revived a happy association with Jones, who used the big man as a dep for Pat LaBarbera and Sonny Fortune on an eye-opening European tour.

'Cymbalism' is a tribute to Paul Motian – but also to a raft of other percussionists from whom Lovano has learnt the supremacy of the drums in jazz. 'Impressionistic' is more obviously saxophone-orientated, a clever, wry history lesson that looks forward and back with relaxed self-confidence. The mood on 'Days Of Yore' is more sombre, a reminder that, beyond his recent multi-instrumentalism, Lovano is a formidable tenor stylist, able to conjure everyone from Chu to Trane. 'Villa Paradiso' and '4 On The Floor' are uncompromisingly straight-ahead, broad blowing themes with generous detail right through the trio. 'Studio Rivbea' recalls the loft scene of New York City and the brave days of the late '60s. The only standard, 'Ghost Of A Chance', sounds like an emotional moment for Jones, who plays like a dream.

 Friendly Fire Blue Note 499125 Lovano; Greg Osby (as, ss); Jason Moran (p); Cameron Brown (b); Idris Muhammad (d). 12/98.

The idea came from label boss Bruce Lundvall: separate invitations to Lovano and Osby to put down something special for Blue Note's 60th anniversary. Each, it seemed, mentioned the other, and the result is a warm, uncompetitive jam that harks back to the kind of loosely congregated session the label issued by the shelfload in the '50s and '60s. Much as Lovano has lengthened his operational radius over the years, Osby has shown a growing interest in mainstream harmonic jazz. Friendly Fire is a genuine meeting of minds.

 Flights Of Fancy: Trio Fascination Edition Two Blue Note 27618-2 Lovano; Dave Douglas (t); Billy Drewes (ss, af, perc); Toots Thielemans (hca); Kenny Werner (p); Cameron Brown, Mark Dresser (b); Idris Muhammad, Joey Baron (d). 6/00.

There are four trios (Lovano with Brown–Muhammad, Drewes–Baron, Thielemans–Werner and Douglas–Dresser) and for three of the pieces a performance by each of two threesomes was spliced together. So, for example, Lovano, Thielemans and Werner start off a sweetly gliding 'Giant Steps' before Lovano, Brown and Muhammad confer a more grooving finish on the tune. Some of the pieces seem like either sketch-work or unfinished abstracts. Those with Thielemans and Werner are so melodious and resolved – like the gorgeous 'Infant Eyes' – that you wish they'd done the whole record. Oddly, though he's the one constant, Lovano sounds distracted some of the time, as if he was thinking more about his concept than his playing.

(*) On This Day ... At The Vanguard Blue Note 43277 Lovano; Barry Ries (t); Larry Farrell (tb); Steve Slagle (as); George Garzone, Ralph Lalama (ts); Scott Robinson (bs); John Hicks (p); Dennis Irwin (b); Lewis Nash (d). 7/03.

It's been some time since the Lovano Nonet was heard from and it's been worth the wait. From the opening sequences of the Basie-inspired 'At The Vanguard', the band is in sympathetic motion. Hicks can be a dull soloist, but his feature on this, following Joe, Slagle and Ries, is a model, particularly as it recasts the original theme substantially, ending the number in a different place from where it began. Nothing else on the set quite comes up to that level of excitement, though there is plenty to ponder on Dameron's 'Focus' and 'Good Bait', Coltrane's 'After The Rain', 'Laura', 'On This Day', another long original written for the occasion, and finally 'My Little Brown Book', from which Joe extracts every imaginable vestige of pathos and wistful longing.

() I'm All For You / () Joyous Encounter Blue Note 91950 / 63405 Lovano; Hank Jones (p); George Mraz (b); Paul Motian (d). 6/03; 9/04.

As the personnel might suggest, the first of these is basically a ballads album with the emphasis on lyricism rather than harmonic adventure. That is not to say that Lovano simply coasts; nor does Hank Jones rest on his laurels. Their exchanges on 'Stella By Starlight' bespeak both great experience and an ongoing sense of musical adventure. It's possibly a mite soft-centred to be counted among Joe's very best records, but it's elegant and accomplished from start to finish.

The group toured the first album and then immediately went back into the studios and recorded Joyous Encounter. It's definitely the stronger of the pair, partly because the material is more challenging. Versions of 'A Child Is Born' by brother Thad and of Coltrane's 'Crescent' push both the lyricism and the harmonic demands in the right direction. 'Pannonica' and Lovano's own 'Bird's Eye View' help to keep the palette varied. As a pair, these records are pretty much irresistible.

(*) Streams Of Expression Blue Note 41092 Lovano; Tim Hagans, Barry Ries (t); Larry Farrell (tb); Steve Slagle (ss, as, f); George Garzone (ts); Ralph Lalama (ts, cl); Gary Smulyan (bs); Michael Parloff (f); John Hicks, James Weidman (p); Dennis Irwin (b); Lewis Nash (d). 12/05.

A fascinating project in which Lovano unveils his own title-suite, but also an arrangement by Gunter Schuller of material from Birth Of The Cool, which returns to the idiom explored on Rush Hour. Lovano makes no attempt to moderate his sound, but the Schuller arrangements make him sound less heated, more cerebral and in places slightly detached. The different ensembles used have subtly different characters, but they deliver Schuller's typically thoughtful charts and Lovano's new composition with great authority. Lovano's writing doesn't immediately strike powerful chords, but there's plenty of substance for the soloists.

 Kids: Live At Dizzy's Club Coca Cola Blue Note 70281 Lovano; Hank Jones (p). 06.

This was Grammy-nominated, and Jones won a solo instrumental citation for his 'Lullaby'. Easy to be cynical about mainstream appreciation: saxophone and piano duos tend to the more comfortable end of the spectrum and there's nothing here designed to scare the horses. Lovano plays with genuine lyricism; Jones is urbane and polished – but it's resolutely unchallenging music.

Also, in brief:

 Tones, Shapes And Colors /  Village Rhythm Soul Note 121132 / 121182. 11/85; 6/88.

Two relatively early dates, though the mature sound is already evident. Even so, they seem like period pieces, now.

* Sounds Of Joy Enja CD 7013 2. 1/91.

Working without a harmony instrument puts him under pressure but also confirms iron chops. With Anthony Cox (b) and Ed Blackwell (d).

 Universal Language Blue Note 799830. 6/92.

Eclectic, tinged by world music, and marked by the beautiful 'Lost Nations', dedicated to the late Jim Pepper.

(*) Quartets Blue Note 829125 2CD. 95.

A pointless attempt to confirm bona fides in both avant/ progressive and mainstream jazz with two quartets from the Village Vanguard. Who doubted?

 Viva Caruso Blue Note 35986-2. 01.

Lots of gurgling Neapolitan melodies, from 'O sole mio' to 'Vesti la giubba' and 'Pecche?' – Caruso's greatest hits, in fact, given a Lovano treatment.

Paul Lovens (born 1949)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION, SAW

A mainstay of European free music. Ran his own PoTorch label.

(*) PaPaJo Emanem 4076 Lovens; Paul Hubweber (tb); John Edwards (b). 3/02.

Lovens rarely gets a chance to headline, and while PaPaJo is self-evidently a collaborative group his seniority is stamped strongly on the music. The nearly half-hour 'Primitivo Di Mantre' is a key performance, a whole LP's worth in the old days, and one of his best-ever showings on record. The rest is hardly makeweight.

Frank Lowe (1943–2003)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Like fellow Tennessean George Coleman, he had no truck with the scorched-earth radicalism of his generation, constantly asserting an unfashionable interest in classic swing players like Chu Berry and proto-boppers like Don Byas.

* The Flam Black Saint 120052 Lowe; Wadada Leo Smith (t, flhn, wood f); Joe Bowie (tb); Alex Blake (b); Charles Bobo Shaw (d). 10/75.

Unlike the generation that took Trane as its model, Lowe has never seemed to regard the length of a solo as any measure of its importance, and here he is admirably concise and to the point, driving home ideas one after the other. 'Sun Voyage', 'Be Bobo Be' and 'Third Street Stomp' are all wonderful ideas, executed with such flair and confidence that one has to assume they were well worked out in advance. Smith and Bowie are both in good heart and voice, and the drummer reminds us yet again what an inventive player he can be in the right context.

(*) Tricks Of The Trade Marge 02 Lowe; Butch Morris (c); Didier Levallet (b); George Brown (d). 12/76.

Recorded in Rouen a couple of weeks before the fine but long-gone Palm LP The Other Side, this isn't quite such a compelling performance from the quartet. The original release consisted mainly of short tracks, but this reissue has restored four long cuts, including the superb 'Awake', plus the tiny 'Flash Back'. Morris was an interesting player at this vintage, his tight but fat cornet sound a strong feature on most tracks, though much like Don Cherry on Ornette's early records he's often not clear enough in the mix. Levallet and Brown are workmanlike rather than exciting, and it's Lowe's hard-edged tenor, again working in an interesting blend of New Thing and swing idioms, that carries the day.

(*) Decision In Paradise Soul Note 121108 Lowe; Don Cherry (t); Grachan Moncur III (tb); Geri Allen (p); Charnett Moffett (b); Charles Moffett (d). 9/84.

There isn't much bebop residue in Lowe's thinking, and it's unusual to hear him turn to post-bop like 'Cherryco'. It doesn't suit his chops altogether well, though he slows it down and smooths it out a touch. A heavyweight rhythm section, led off by Allen's rich chording, keeps the energy level high. Cherry's in good spirits, bright, warmly antagonistic and full of melody. Moncur plays as well as ever, varying his slide positions and embouchure to stay just this side of multiphonics. Perhaps not the best introduction to Lowe, who has to make room for three very strong soloists, but a powerful group record that sits wide of most else that was going on in 1984.

* Bodies & Souls CIMP 104 Lowe; Tim Flood (b); Charles Moffett (d). 11/95.
(*) Vision Blue CIMP 138 Lowe; Steve Neil (b, Guinea hp); Anders Griffen (d). 2/97.
 Lowe-down And Blue CIMP 275 Lowe; Bern Nix (g); Dominic Duval (b); Michael Carvin (d). 00.

As spare and stern as the great Ornette Coleman Trio of the '60s, which Moffett also graced, the first of these is the Frank Lowe disc of choice. CIMP is dedicated to raw and unvarnished slice-of-life veritism, and there are no frills to any of these performances. A long set, with the usual intensity, Bodies & Souls mixes four originals with material by Pharoah Sanders, Don Cherry (the dedicatee of two joyous, complex Lowe compositions), Ornette ('Happy House') and, on the stirring 'Impressions' which opens the set, Coltrane himself. It stands first, one feels, because Lowe wants to demonstrate both his respect for and distance from Coltrane's and later Coleman's language. By placing 'Body And Soul' last, he demonstrates more clearly than ever before how much he sees himself standing on the shoulders of earlier giants. It's a delicate performance, unaccompanied, lighter-toned and more intimate than Lowe often is. Flood and Moffett combine well, and they represent the real difference between the first CIMP and Vision Blue. Again, there's a mix of original and repertory material. Rollins's theme from 'Alfie' is an unexpected choice, and Percy Mayfield's 'Please Send Me Someone To Love' doesn't often figure in this sort of setting. 'Softly As In A Morning Sunrise' contains a couple of references to Coltrane, and the Coleman numbers ('Law Years' and 'The Blessing') have the usual mixture of respect and self-reliance. The final two numbers seem a bit throwaway, a duo performance of 'Dream State' with the drummer, and the only other acoustic variation, Neil's Guinea harp on the last track, his own 'Bobbo's Face', a bit wasted in that position. Outstanding track? For us, a blistering run-through of Jackie McLean's 'Little Melonae' is one of the best things Lowe has recorded.

Ill-health interfered with work in the '90s. However, when he did record, he sounded as good as ever. Duval and Nix are in great form, despite not having worked with Lowe together previously, while Carvin – an old buddy – is his solid, inventive best. The material is well-chosen; alongside originals there are things like 'Cherryco', Dewey Redman's 'Dewey's Tune' and former associate Grachan Moncur III's rarely covered 'Riff-Raff'. The now familiar unvarnished sound works well on a set like this and the graininess and physicality of Lowe's playing come across in every track.

 Soul Folks No More Records 10 Lowe; Jack Walrath (t); Bertha Hope (p); Steve Neil (b); Ralph Peterson (d). 98.

A fine live date from the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. This was the closest Lowe came to running a conventional hard-bop quintet. He does it his own idiosyncratic way, of course. Hope is a revelation and Walrath always manages to surprise with his pungent melodic ideas and rasping tone.

 One For Jazz No More 11 Lowe; Billy Bang (vn); Ed Schuller (b); Abbey Rader (d). 01.

Bang takes a fair share of solo space as co-leader, but Schuller and Rader (who replaced Denis Charles) are very much in the thick of things and the bassist gets in a fine solo on 'I Promise You The Moon'. Lowe's own big moment comes on 'Times Squared', a heated solo that goes off into altissimo range.

 Short Tales Bleu Regard 1959 Lowe; Bernard Santacruz (b). 01.

Santacruz has become a close associate of Lowe's; there is also a trio album under the bassist's name on AA. These would-be narrative pieces have a gently enigmatic quality, like fragments from a worm-eaten story-book. Lowe's increasingly old-fashioned delivery is as beguiling as ever, and he has rarely sounded more like his lost mentor Chu Berry than on some of these delicately nuanced numbers. Santacruz more than keeps up and bears listening to on his own account. Worth searching for.

Also, in brief:

(*) Black Beings ESP 3013. 73.

Lowe's second recording for ESP hasn't worn too well and nowadays sounds like shapelessly generic free jazz.

 Don't Punk Out Emanem 4043. 10/77, 79, 00.

Modelled on Derek Bailey's duo recordings with Anthony Braxton, this was sparked by Eugene Chadbourne (g) and recorded – lo-fi – in a NY apartment, with some later material added.

* Exotic Heartbreak Soul Note 121103. 10/81.

Working with Butch Morris (c) and Amina Claudine Myers (p), Lowe conveys a kind of raw finesse. Powerful.

Mundell Lowe (born 1922)

GUITAR

He worked in '40s bands, crossed over to bop, and then concentrated on studio and TV work, though he began touring again in the '80s.

 The Mundell Lowe Quartet Original Jazz Classics OJC 1773 Lowe; Dick Hyman (p, org, cel); Trigger Alpert (b); Ed Shaughnessy (d). 8–10/55.
 A Grand Night For Swinging Original Jazz Classics OJC 1940 Lowe; Gene Quill (as); Billy Taylor (p); Les Grinage (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 3–4/57.
Lowe's albums under his own leadership are modest in number. The OJC entries make entertaining if lightweight fare. Quartet has some smart playing, and the opening 'Will You Still Be Mine?' spells out how ably Lowe was able to bridge the worlds of swing and bop; he makes subtle harmonic touches and rhythmic inflections, while setting down his roots in swing beats. But Hyman plays organ a lot of the way, bringing a rinky-dink sensibility to the occasion, and several tracks opt either for mood-music or for a quick, early finish. A Grand Night For Swinging is more pointed. Quill adds some sharp alto to three tracks, and there's plenty of swinging. Just two Riverside quickies of their day.

 California Guitar Progressive 7116 Lowe; Roger Kellaway, Jimmy Rowles (p); Irving Ashby (g); Monty Budwig (b); Donald Bailey (d). 4/72, 4/74.
Lowe hadn't made a record for some time when he cut some material for Famous Door in spring 1972. The three tracks with Rowles appear here with alternative takes, together with four more multiple cuts from a later date with Kellaway. It's all well-behaved, even perhaps a little flat in profile, but the playing is clean edged and accurate and guitar fans will appreciate the various versions on offer.

* When Lights Are Lowe Acoustic Music 3191190 Lowe; Hendrik Meurkens (vib); Chris Berger (b); Mark Taylor (d). 99.
(*) Mundell's Moods Nagel Heyer 065 Lowe; Hendrik Meurkens (hca, vib); Larry Porter (p); Pat O'Leary (b); Chuck Redd (d). 1/00.
These days Mundell plays for fun. Meurkens has become a regular partner and the first of these is a warm, engaging to-and-fro. Mundell's Moods was cut in Hamburg on a day off from a tour. The guitarist defers to Meurkens much of the way, which doesn't hurt, and dividing his time between harmonica and vibes Meurkens plays some excellent things. And when Lowe steps out – wistful on 'Darn That Dream', fast and nippy on 'Seven Steps To Heaven' – he's lost little of his old facility. With five originals from within the band as well as the expected string of standards, the date's not just a quota filler, and Redd in particular keeps the pots on.

Also, in brief:

(*) Complete TV Action Jazz! Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10197. 2/59–6/60.
Helmed for a budget RCA label: themes from Peter Gunn, Hawaiian Eye, Naked City and other relics.

 Blues For A Stripper/Satan In High Heels Fresh Sound FSRCD 1626. 11 & 12/61.
Slickly professional TV soundtrack jazz; fearfully exciting cover art.

Henry Lowther (born 1941)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, VIOLIN

A consistent presence on the British scene for 40 years, in big-band music, jazz, improvisation and rock, but under-recorded on his own account.

 Child Song Vocalion CDSML 8043 Lowther; Jimmy Jewell (ts); Tony Roberts (ts, bcl, perc); Mike McNaught (p); Daryl Runswick (b); Mike Travis (d); Neil Slavin (perc). 70.
 Fungii Mama GWB 444 Lowther; Simon Picard (ts); Jim Mullen (g); Dave Green (b); Stu Butterfield (d). 4/02.
Lowther's bright, evocative tone is always a joy. Child Song will replace the battered LP in a few lucky collections. It's very much of its time, an effect underlined by McNaught's electric keyboard, but full of fine playing from the three horns. The later live set, recorded at a London pub, is co-led with Mullen. The material is not as challenging as some of the work Henry has been associated with over the years, but it's an elegantly programmed set centred on 'I Fall In Love Too Easily', 'On Green Dolphin Street' and 'Nutty'. The leader's solos are well-shaped, finely crafted and always have real substance. There are good-natured exchanges, notably on the closing title-piece, but Picard seems a little out of place. The sound is good enough but one wishes for a smoother and more professional context.

Jimmie Lunceford (1902–47)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, BANDLEADER

He studied music in Denver and at Fisk University and then taught in Manassas. His band scuffled for four years before playing at the Cotton Club and making a big name for a showy, almost vaudeville act, which toured relentlessly. Disillusion set in and the leader, who'd also taken up flying, died of a heart attack in questionable circumstances.

* Jimmie Lunceford 1930–1934 Classics 501 Lunceford; Sy Oliver, Eddie Tompkins, Tommy Stevenson, William 'Sleepy' Tomlin (t); Henry Wells (tb, v); Russell Bowles (tb); Willie Smith, Earl Carruthers (cl, as, bs); LaForet Dent (as); Joe Thomas (cl, ts); Edwin Wilcox (p, cel); Al Norris (g); Moses Allen (bb, b); Jimmy Crawford (d, vib). 6/30–11/34.
(*) Jimmie Lunceford 1934–1935 Classics 505 As above, except omit Tomlin; add Paul Webster (t); Elmer Crumbley, Eddie Durham (tb, g); Dan Grissom (cl, as, v). 11/34–9/35.
 Jimmie Lunceford 1935–1937 Classics 510 As above, except omit Stevenson, Wells; add Ed Brown (as). 9/35–6/37.
(*) Jimmie Lunceford 1937–1939 Classics 520 As above, except add Trummy Young (tb, v); Ted Buckner (as). 6/37–1/39.
(*) Jimmie Lunceford 1939 Classics 532 As above, except omit Durham; add Gerald Wilson (t). 1–9/39.
 Jimmie Lunceford 1939–1940 Classics 565 As above, except omit Tompkins; add Snooky Young (t); Dandridge Sisters (v). 12/39–6/40.
(*) Jimmie Lunceford 1940–1941 Classics 622 As above, except omit Dandridge Sisters. 7/40–12/41.
(*) Jimmy Lunceford 1941–1945 Classics 862 Lunceford; Snooky Young, Gerald Wilson, Paul Webster, Freddy Webster, Bob Mitchell, Pee Wee Jackson, Melvin Moore, William 'Chiefie' Scott, Russell Green, Ralph Griffin, Chuck Stewart (t); Elmer Crumbley, Russell Bowles, Trummy Young, Fernando Arbello, Earl Hardy, John Ewing, James Williams (tb); Willie Smith, Earl Carruthers,

Dan Grissom, Joe Thomas, Benny Waters, Ted Buckner, Dan Grissom, Omer Simeon, Ernest Purce, Chauncey Jarrett, Kirkland Bradford (reeds); Edwin Wilcox (p, cel); Al Norris, John Mitchell (g); Truck Parham, George Duvivier, Moses Allen (b); Jimmy Crawford, Joe Marshall (d); Delta Rhythm Boys, Claude Trenier, Bill Darnell (v). 41–45.

 Jimmie Lunceford 1945–1947 Classics 1082 Lunceford; Melvin Moore, Ralph Griffin, William 'Chiefie' Scott, Russell Green, Chuck Stewart, Bob Mitchell, Reunald Jones, Joe Wilder (t); Trummy Young (tb, v); Fernando Arbello, Earl Hardy, John Ewing, James Williams, Russell Bowles, Willie Tompkins, Alfonso King, Al Grey, Al Cobbs (tb); Omer Simeon (cl, as); Kirkland Bradford (as); Joe Thomas (ts, v); Ernest Purce, William Horner, Lee Howard (ts); Earl Carruthers (bs, cl); Edwin Wilcox (p); John Mitchell, Al Norris (g); Truck Parham, George Duvivier (b); Joe Marshall (d); Nick Brooks (v). 12/44–5/47.

 Jimmie Lunceford 1948–1949 Classics 1151 Lunceford; Willie Cook, Bob Mitchell, Paul Webster, Rostelle Reese, Tommy Sims (t); Elmer Crumbley, Russell Bowles, Al Cobbs, Arnette Sparrow (tb); Omer Simeon (cl, as); Otis Hicks, Curby Alexander (as); Joe Thomas (ts, v); Lee Howard, Todd Rhodes, Slim Henderson (ts); Earl Carruthers (bs); Edwin Wilcox (p); Al Norris (g); Ed Sneed (b); Joe Marshall, Danny Farrar (d); Freddy Bryant, Savannah Churchill (v). 48–49.

Lunceford's orchestra is the great also-ran band of its day. There were no special idiosyncrasies which lifted the Lunceford orchestra away from the consistent excellence to which it aspired. Its principal arrangers – Sy Oliver in particular, but also Edwin Wilcox (in the earlier days) and Willie Smith – created superbly polished, interlocking sections which gave their records a professional élan. Soloists stepped naturally out of and back into this precision machine, and there was never much danger of a Rex Stewart or a Lester Young breaking any rule. Lunceford's virtues were entirely different from those of the rough-and-ready (early) Basie band, or from Ellington's unique cast of characters.

The first Classics volume shows the band coming together; there is a single 1930 session, followed by a jump to 1934. The important hit coupling of 'Jazznocracy' and 'White Heat' is here, as well as the remarkably nonconformist versions of 'Mood Indigo' and 'Sophisticated Lady'; once under way in earnest, Lunceford turned out some fine records. The first two CDs feature some of the best of Oliver and Wilcox – and the 1934–1935 disc includes the rare instance of two Ellington compositions, 'Rhapsody Junior' and 'Bird Of Paradise', which were never recorded by Duke. The 1935–1937 session includes one of Oliver's masterpieces, 'Organ Grinder's Swing'. But a certain staleness sets in to the band from about 1936 onwards, with the Lunceford precision taking on a formulaic feel that fast tempos and good soloists – Smith was a rival to Hodges and Carter as one of the great alto stylists of the day, and Joe Thomas and Eddie Tompkins were excellent half-chorus players – never quite overcame.

The band continued to develop in minor ways. New players such as Trummy Young and Snooky Young were given tasks that raise the overall game on several of the tracks. Trummy's extraordinary playing (and singing) on 'Annie Laurie' and 'Margie' (Classics 520) is enough to make one wonder whether this is the same man who was such a dullard with Louis Armstrong's All-Stars. Nevertheless the band's records started to sound as if they were being churned out by the end of 1939, although considered track by track there is still much eloquent and occasionally surprising music here. The departure of Oliver and then Smith was a blow that Lunceford's orchestra never recovered from, though to its last records it still sounds like a skilful band, a tribute to Lunceford's meticulous preparations and his admiration for Paul Whiteman. There is some dreary material on the next two discs, particularly the 1940–1941 set, but even here there are a couple of interesting arrangements by new arrival Gerald Wilson ('Hi Spook' and 'Yard Dog Mazurka'), and the closing two-part 'Blues In The Night', though laden with kitsch, is effective in its way. The 1941–1945 set has little going for it. The band lost several of its key members during this period, notably Willie Smith and Snooky Young, and even with arrangements by Tadd Dameron and Horace Henderson (a tame 'Jeep Rhythm') there is little to set the orchestra apart from its rivals. Nothing embarrassing here, at least, but the music is very reserved. The set of 1945–1947 performances are in some ways rather better and may surprise those who feel that Lunceford's decline was irreversible. Though he had lost so many of his key personalities, this was still a strong and professional outfit. A V-Disc date from October 1945 offers four straight-ahead swing titles, and a final look at 'One O'Clock Jump' (with Joe Wilder and Al Grey as young recruits) closes the disc.

The last disc is an early example of a 'ghost' band at work. Joe Thomas and Eddie Wilcox took over after Lunceford's death and managed 18 more sides before calling it a day. While there's nothing startling here, the old Lunceford virtues of precision and rehearsal are present, and the band sounds as if it could compete with most swing-era survivors.

Jesper Lundgaard (born 1954)

DOUBLE BASS

Studied at the University of Aarhus before a distinguished sideman career.

 This Bass Was Made For Walking Music Mecca 10432 Lundgaard; Bob Rockwell (ts); Jacob Fischer (g); Alex Riel (d). 94.

 Two Basses Touché Music TMcCD 020 Lundgaard; Mads Vinding (b). 6/02.

The Repertory Quartet was founded to play the music of Thad Jones. Later groups were devoted to compositions by Ellington, Bill Evans, Mingus and classic performers like Armstrong and Waller. Those sets are now unavailable but This Bass is a thoroughly enjoyable album of swinging modern jazz. Thad's 'A Child Is Born' also features on the duo album with the redoubtable Vinding. Even when one bassist plays arco underneath another's picked figures, such dates can be a difficult listen. This one, though, is so elegantly constructed and so thoroughly lyrical and expressive that one scarcely notices the absence of a more conventional line-up.

Jan Lundgren (born 1966)

PIANO

Danish pianist who has worked extensively in California as well as at home in the '80s and '90s.

 Cooking! At The Jazz Bakery Fresh Sound FSR 5019 2CD Lundgren; Chuck Berghofer (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 9/96.

(*) Something To Live For Sittel 9258 Lundgren; Matthias Hjorth (b); Rasmus Kihlberg (d); orchestra. 10/98.

 For Listeners Only Sittel 9271 Lundgren; Mattias Svensson (b); Rasmus Kihlberg (d). 12/00.

 Plays The Music Of Victor Young Sittel 9269 As above, except add Johnny Griffin (ts), Stacey Kent, Deborah Brown (v). 8/00–1/01.

(*) Will You Still Be Mine? Fresh Sound FSR 5040 Lundgren; Tom Warrington (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). N.D.

 Plays The Music Of Jule Styne Sittel 9288 Lundgren; Eric Alexander (ts); Mattias Svensson (b); Morten Lund (d); Mark Murphy, Caecilie Norby (v). 2–9/02.

Lundgren is a capable player in a conventional bop-orientated style. Spreading the live sets from LA's Jazz Bakery over two CDs makes the set an expensive introduction, but all 20 tracks are prime cut of bebop, bar a farewell solo on 'Värmlandsvisan'. The vigour of the playing is emphatically sustained across both discs, and Berghofer and LaBarbera seem to show the leader considerable respect.

Abetted by unobtrustive orchestral arrangements by Bo Sylvén, which are thereabouts without becoming too intrusive, Something works better than many an Ellington/Strayhorn tribute record, thanks to the impish energy the trio inveigle into the setting. It's irreverent enough to find something fresh in 'Caravan', but not so disrespectful that the source material sounds debased. There's also a 15-minute 'Reminiscences Of A Duke' by Magnus Linden, which cleverly works in any number of Ducal quotes.

For Listeners Only is an attractive set of originals. Lundgren's writing doesn't cut very deep, but he likes perky, upbeat vehicles, and he ties each of them up smartly. The Victor Young collection is varied by the guests: Kent and Brown take three songs apiece, but the best shot comes when Griffin swaggers in to do 'A Weaver Of Dreams' – good enough to make you wish he'd stuck around for the whole set (though he sounds a bit bleary on 'When I Fall In Love').

Lundgren continued to turn out composer-homages. Will You Still Be Mine? is all Matt Dennis tunes, and is probably the weakest of all his records – a few good interpretations sit in amongst average mood-music. The Jule Styne record is much better, if only for the guest star turns: Caecilie Norby is at her most intense on 'Make Someone Happy' and Murphy at his zaniest on 'What Makes The Sunset'. Lundgren can still sound flippant, but it's a nice listen. He has a few more discs on M&I, but they haven't come our way.

Carmen Lundy (born 1954)

VOICE

She sings in a style that blends the classic jazz vocal with soul influences.

 Good Morning Kiss Justin Time 8495 Lundy; Jon Faddis, Earl Gardner (t); Steve Turre (tb); Rene McLean, Bobby Watson (as); Jim Hartog (bs); Harry Whitaker (p, ky); Curtis Lundy (b); Victor Lewis (d); Mayra Casales (perc). 1 & 8/85.

 Moment To Moment Arabesque 102 Lundy; Cecil Bridgewater, Chico Freeman (ts); Onaje Allan Gumbs (ky); Kevin Eubanks (g); Ben Brown, Kenny Davis (b); Buddy Williams (d); Mayra Casales (perc). 4/91.

 Self Portrait JVC 2047 Lundy; Ernie Watts (ts); Gary Herbig (ss, f, af, bf, cl); Cedar Walton (p); John Clayton Jr, Nathan East (b); Ralph Penland (d); strings; woodwinds. 11/94.

 Old Devil Moon JVC 9016 Lundy; Randy Brecker (t, flhn); Frank Foster, Bob Mintzer (ts); Billy Childs (p); Harry Whitaker (syn); Victor Bailey, Santi Debriano (b); Winston Clifford, Omar Hakim (d); Mayra Casales, Ralph Irizarry (perc); Tawatha Agee, Dennis Collins, Lani Groves, Gwen Guthrie (v). 97.

A strong, instrumental singer rather than a great interpreter, Lundy is clearly influenced by saxophone-players and often doesn't seem to be unduly concerned about the programme or the theme of a song. If this makes her sound detached, she isn't, but technique tended at first to come before expression.

The debut album was a good illustration; impeccable harmonic understanding wins out over the words (true even on 'Love For Sale') and Carmen's ability to come off big resonant bottom notes and build elaborate, curving scales on the foundations of a song is most impressive. Bobby Watson's arrangements sit beautifully for her own rich alto.

It took five years to deliver a follow-up. Moment To Moment is bold enough to combine original material with some relatively unexplored standards like 'Invitation'. Self Portrait opens on a very strong reading of 'Spring Can Really Hang You Up The Most', continues with an excellent original, 'Better Days', and peaks with a truly special performance of 'My Ship'. Walton dominates the small group, but understands the dynamics of song better than anyone. The orchestrations are on the lush side but she gets a less fussy background on 'I Don't Want To Love Without You', with Watts on tenor. The later record is very good, too, but a few Billie-isms are hampering her approach. She opens with 'Star Eyes' this time, and gives it a big send-off. 'In A Sentimental Mood' is the killer-diller, pushed along by a tense, almost threatening rhythm section.

 This Is Carmen Lundy Justin Time 174 Lundy; Kevin Louis (t, flhn); Bobby Watson (as); Mark Shim (ts); Onaje Allan Gumbs, Anthony Wonsey (ky); Curtis Lundy (b); Ralph Peterson, Victor Lewis (d); Mayra Casales (perc). 6/01.

It's a great band, and sometimes they take the ears off Carmen, which is unfair: she's in fine voice throughout. But the material comprises nine of her own originals, and she tends to overpersonalize them. The result is more like a manifesto than a vocal album, as well-meant and involved as such pieces as 'One More River To Cross' may be. It's in the softer moments ('Is It Love') that she makes the most lasting impression.

 Something To Believe In Justin Time 198 Lundy; Mark Shim (ts); Anthony Wonsey (p); Regina Carter (vn); Curtis Lundy (b); Victor Lewis (d); Mayra Casales (perc). 7/03.

It's a familiar rhythm section and that's what contributes most to this nicely judged set. Curtis and Victor lay down a solid but tuneful beat, nothing too pacey or abrasive. 'Windmills Of Your Mind' finally sounds like the song it can be and there is a beautifully felt treatment of 'I Loves You, Porgy' which is neither operatic nor deconstructed, but just right. Carter judges her contributions to perfection.

* Jazz And The New Songbook: Live At The Madrid Afrasia Productions 61374 2CD Lundy; David Roitstein (ky); Phil Upchurch (g); Curtis Lundy (b); Victor Lewis (d); LA String Quartet. 2/05.

She reworks 'Better Days' from the first album, and what a change in the voice and approach! It's alluring, wise and musically impactful. With Curtis on hand to anchor it and Victor Lewis providing a respectful but insistent beat, it could hardly be better. With 18 songs (the last three from a bootleg, since a power cut wiped out the official recording), it's an exceptional vocal recital and an impressive roster of songs old and new. The other highlights: 'In Love Again' and 'I Dream In Living Color'.

(*) Come Home Afrasia Productions 208 Lundy; Steve Turre (tb, shell); Geri Allen, Anthony Wonsey (p); Lage Lund (g); Lori

Andrews (hp); Curtis Lundy (b); Jason Evan Brown (d); Mayra Casales (perc, v); children's choir. 9 & 10/07.
To her credit, Lundy only seems to record when she has something worthwhile to share, which is why the CDs come in batches. This is another fine performance, without the depth and richness of the live Madrid Theatre date, but packed with good things, including a new studio version of 'Afrasia!' and a very interesting arrangement of 'Nature Boy'. Another winner.

Curtis Lundy

DOUBLE BASS

Brother of Carmen and a highly experienced section-man, whose credits include dates with Betty Carter, John Hicks and Bobby Watson.

 Just Be Yourself Evidence ECD 22169 Lundy; Bobby Watson (as); Hank Jones (p); Steve Nelson (vib); Kenny Washington (d); Carmen Lundy (v). 85.
(*) Against All Odds Justin Time 129 Lundy; Peven Everett, Roy Hargrove (t); Bobby Watson (as); Shelley Carroll (ts); John Hicks, Anthony Wonsey (p); Winard Harper (d); Carmen Lundy (v). 4/99.
(*) Purpose Justin Time 175 Lundy; Mark Shim (ts); John Hicks, Anthony Wonsey (p); Steve Nelson (vib); Billy Hart (d). 10/01.
Originally on New Note, the first of these repeats the success of various sessions involving Watson and Nelson and all one misses is the softer, more lyrical touch of Victor Lewis at the drums. On the strength of his two originals – 'Jacopo's Revenge' and 'Never Gonna Let You Go' – Curtis is a decent, ambitious composer, but he shows most quality on Watson's 'Ballando'.

The move to Justin Time put him on the same imprint as sister Carmen, who guested on the first record. She's on 'Blue Woman' and two other tracks on Against All Odds. The horns take it in turn throughout the record, which gives the whole thing a slightly uneven quality. More confidence in the writing this time, though the highlight is the closing version of Onaje Allan Gumbs's rarely played 'All Things Being Equal Are Not'.

The final record – no follow-up as yet – is probably the best. The ballad 'Oveida' deserves minor modern-classic status and Curtis's fine, full-toned playing is at its best. Shim has also worked for Carmen and emerges every time as a tough-tender talent deserving wider recognition.

Lunge

GROUP

London-based improvising quartet.

 Braced & Framed / (*) Strong Language ACTA 13 / Emanem 4079 Gail Brand (tb); Pat Thomas (ky, elec); Phil Durrant (vn, elec); Mark Sanders (d). 2–7/99; 12/00–6/02.
Lunge's music can be dark and thickly layered, but they have an agreeably humorous side too. Brand's trombone-lines aren't especially powerful in themselves, but she ends up playing the 'voice' of the group and her restraint assists in establishing the group's democratic nature. At first hearing they're an unlikely alliance and there's a palpable sense of the group feeling its way. Strong Language is served by much more vivid recording (four live pieces from Amsterdam and two from a studio session) and is a brawnier, more aggressive set all round – which some may not count as an improvement, as some of the gaiety may have left the group. It's hard to figure out which sounds Durrant is making, since his violin rarely sounds like one and his electronics seem more of a subliminal rumble in comparison with Thomas's tweet and chatter. Sustained across 16 minutes, 'Planarchy', which goes through the quartet's dynamic range with seamless and intense activity, is an exemplary showing of what they can do.

Claude Luter (1923–2006)

CLARINET, SOPRANO SAXOPHONE

A Parisian, he led the French revivalist movement in the late '40s and recorded first with Bechet, then with Mezzrow, Bigard, Nicholas and others.

 Claude Luter In England MacJazz 011 Luter; Humphrey Lyttelton (t); Johnny Parker (p); Jim Bray (b); Stan Greig (d). 85.
 Red Hot Reeds GHB BCD-219 Luter; Jacques Gauthé (cl, ss); Steve Pistorius, David Boeddinghaus (p); Neil Unterseher (g, bj); Amy Sharpe (bj); Tom Saunders (tba, b); Rick Elmore (tba); Ernie Elly, Dicky Taylor (d). 4/86.
Not much survives of Luter's discography at present, but he was one of the leading forces in French traditional jazz for decades. The 1985 date captures a rare visit to England and possibly his own British recording. It's also a nostalgic encounter for Humph, since this was his rhythm section of 30 years previously. The later date, co-led with Gauthé, is more like a postscript. The horns echo Luter's records with Bechet in the '50s, and the set-list covers Morton, Handy, Bechet and Jimmy Blythe. Recorded on consecutive days in New Orleans, with different accompanists each day, and performed with much brio and enjoyment by the two veterans.

Chick Lyall

PIANO

Scottish co-founder of Green Room.

 Tilting Ground Caber CAarch 001 Lyall; Tore Brunborg (ss, ts). 90.
 Solitary Dance Caber 004 Lyall (p solo). 1/98.
(*) Broken Poems Caber 031 Lyall; Joakim Milder (ss, ts); Mike Dunning (b); Tom Bancroft (d). 12/02.
Lyall has the ability to switch from playing changes to quasi-classical contexts to free. Solitary Dance was his belated solo debut. The title-tune is a dedication to Sir Michael Tippett, a slow, understated essay in spatial relationships. Other titles have a more tentative quality. There are three pianistic 'Epigrams' and two 'Objects Of Contemplation', beautifully executed and flawlessly tasteful academic studies. Elsewhere, as in the pairing of 'Flow River Flow' and 'Blow Wind Blow', the language is more obviously jazz-based, and Lyall's exceptional metrical sense becomes evident.

The duets with Brunborg include some interesting moments in a kind of impressionistic style – Lyall uses a sampler for percussive sounds and some vocal tones too – but this feels like notes towards a record rather than a finished piece of work, though Brunborg's keening tone makes its mark.

Whatever the perceived meeting points between Scotland and Scandinavia may be, the Swedish sax master fits in with Lyall's group on Broken Poems without a murmur of dissent. There's a meandering sense to much of the music, especially in the likes of 'White Horse In Distance' and the three-part 'Iliac Suite' which is spread through the record, but that setting is meat and drink to Milder and he makes the most of every timbral nuance and inflection. It somewhat overshadows the leader's own playing, anyway.

Brian Lynch (born 1955)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

He has worked with Art Blakey and Prince and has a well-deserved reputation for free-blowing swing in a whole range of genres and styles.

(*) Peer Pressure Criss Cross Criss 1029 Lynch; Ralph Moore (ts); Jim Snidero (as); Kirk Lightsey (p); Jay Anderson (b); Victor Lewis (d). 12/86.
(*) Back Room Blues Criss Cross Criss 1042 Lynch; Javon Jackson (ts); David Hazeltine (p); Peter Washington (b); Lewis Nash (d). 12/89.
 At The Main Event Criss Cross Criss 1070 Lynch; Ralph Moore (ts); Mel Rhyne (org); Peter Bernstein (g); Kenny Washington (d); Jose Alexis Diaz (perc). 12/91.
There's nothing amiss about the leader's playing on Back Room Blues. His bright, brassy sound – particularly vivid on the often smudgy flugelhorn – is well up to scratch. But the band seems entirely devoid of ideas and the sound might just as well be live.

The line-up on Peer Pressure makes weight-for-weight comparison of the two albums as uneven as a Don King boxing bill. Where Jackson is sophomoric, the British-born, Berklee-graduated Ralph Moore is right on the case, responding to Lynch's unpretentious hard bop with a mixture of fire and intelligence. Jim Snidero has less to say but says it with unapologetic verve. Tommy Turrentine's roistering 'Thomasville' gets everybody in and warmed up for the subtler cadence of Benny Golson's 'Park Avenue Petite'. Horace Silver's 'The Outlaw' gets a slightly camp reading, but, apart from a low-key 'I Concentrate On You', the rest of the material is by the trumpeter and nicely done.

The last of the Criss Crosses is a good-hearted, expansive, blowin'-in-from-Milwaukee date, which celebrates local club The Main Event. There's plenty of playing to enjoy, even if Lynch acts as not much more than the genial host, and the round-robin of solos on the seven tracks elicits nothing knockout from any of the musicians.

 Keep Your Circle Small Sharp Nine CD 1001-2 Lynch; David Hazeltine (p); Peter Washington (b); Louis Hayes (d). 95.
(*) Spheres Of Influence Sharp Nine 1007-2 Lynch; Tony Lujan, Pete Rodriguez (t); Luis Bonilla, Conrad Herwig (tb); Chris Washburne (tba); Donald Harrison (as); Kavid Kikoski (p); Essiet Okon Essiet (b); John Benitez, Adam Cruz, Jeff 'Tain' Watts, Milton Cardona (perc). 6/97.
A change of label. The earlier of the pair is relatively modest in scope and the quartet aren't unduly stretched by the charts, but on Spheres Of Influence Lynch moves up a gear, debuting some of his larger-group compositions and arrangements. The opening track uses soulful jazz measures, set to a relaxed reggae beat. Lynch's solo is punctuated with glorious blares and smears. 'Green Is Mean' reworks elements of 'On Green Dolphin Street', using Coltrane changes. The Wayne Shorter-composed 'Oriental Folk Song' is an unexpected delight, tucked away at the end but deserving of more priority. The most ambitious performances of the set are the two with extra horns. 'Palmieri's Mood' is a delightful Latin swinger; but, for an insight into Lynch's skill as an arranger, a standard, 'I've Grown Accustomed To Her Face', is the point of reference. Subtly modulated and richly voiced, it makes no compromises, working through a sequence of subtle changes before triggering Lynch's typically elaborate solo. In support, Donald Harrison plays more freshly and with more bite than he has since the days with Terence Blanchard. Some tracks seem to dispense with bass altogether; on the others, Essiet and Watts mesh as surely as ever.

(*) Tribute To The Trumpet Masters Sharp Nine 1017-2 Lynch; Mulgrew Miller (p); Essiet Okon Essiet (b); Carl Allen (d). 4/00.
The concept looks tired already, and a perilous one: nine trumpeters paid homage, either via an original – 'Tribute To Blue', 'Charles Tolliver' (!) – or a suitable cover. But it actually works out very well. Lynch didn't do himself many favours by picking tunes as tough as 'Search For The New Land' (Lee Morgan) or Booker Little's almost frightening 'Opening Statement', but he pulls them off with serene confidence, and throughout he manages to pay respects without actually sounding like anyone in particular – except, possibly, himself.

* Fuchsia / Red Cellar Live CL020201 Lynch; Brad Turner (p); Andre Lachance (b); Bernie Arai (d). 2/03.
What other contemporary horn-player can so confidently pick up Booker Little and Charles Tolliver licks, take new bearings on Lee Morgan's 'Search For The New Land' and cap a fine solo on the Björk tune ('Aurora') with a quote from 'It Don't Mean A Thing, If It Ain't Got That Swing'?

This is the trumpeter's 'electro-mechanical' mode with Turner on Fender Rhodes, which he never tries to play as if it were a Bechstein but lets the shimmer work for him. Arai complements him with a lot of cymbal work on the title-track and Lynch falls in line with a long reverb. There are moments as tough and tender as Prewett playing taps in From Here To Eternity and passages of almost free abstraction, before the beats kick in and bassist Lachance finally gets to show his Ron Carterish mettle.

'Red' and 'Mysteries Of Travel' find Turner squarely in a Chick-and-Keith idiom, with some nice displacement of the trumpet sound which makes it sound as if Brian might actually be out walking round the tables; good live sound from the Cellar.

(*) Simpatico Artist Share 0057 CD/MP3 Lynch; Joe Fiedler, Conrad Herwig (tb); Donald Harrison, Phil Woods (as); Gregory Tardy (ts, cl); Yosvany Terry (ts); Mario Rivera (bs); Eddie Palmieri (p); Edsel Gomez (p, org); Adam Rogers (g); Boris Kozlov, Reuben Rodriguez (b); Robert Ameen, Dafnis Prieto (d); Giovanni Hidalgo, Pedro Rodriguez (perc); Lila Downs (v). 11/05.
Available as a download from Lynch's own website and as a limited edition, this teams him with his musical mentor Eddie Palmieri in a richly textured Latin set that features strong guest spots from Phil Woods (in cracking form) and Lila Downs. She and Lynch wrote a song specially for the album, 'Que Seria La Vida', which, unexpectedly, is one of its highlights. The best moments, though, come when the trumpeter and veteran piano-player are exchanging ideas, challengingly but affectionately. Some of the arrangements are reminiscent of Chico O'Farrill, but the three closing tracks, all collaborative compositions, have an individuality and personality that makes any such comparison seem beside the point. Beautifully recorded and mastered, every voice comes through with emphasis and clarity.

Also, in brief:

 24/7 Nagel Heyer 2055. 12/02.
With an unfamiliar, European band Lynch sounds more abstract than usual, but still in crackling form.

(*) Brian Lynch Meets Bill Charlap Sharp Nine 1027. 5/03.
A good vintage for Lynch, this, so he's entitled to a relatively relaxed outing with the pianist and rhythm.

 ConClave Criss Cross 1271. 10/04.
This is Lynch's Latin Jazz Sextet, another new initiative and a strikingly successful one, highlighting Brian's taut, singing tone and flawless rhythmic sense.

Jimmy Lyons (1932–86)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, FLUTE

Emerged in the early '60s as a free-thinker who became a key member of Cecil Taylor's trio.

() Something In Return / () Burnt Offering Black Saint 120125 / 120130 Lyons; Andrew Cyrille (perc). 2/81; 82.
 Wee Sneezawee Black Saint 120067 Lyons; Raphe Malik (t); Karen Borca (bsn); William Parker (b); Paul Murphy (d). 9/83.
(*) Give It Up Black Saint 120087 Lyons; Enrico Rava (t, flhn); Karen Borca (bsn); Jay Oliver (b); Paul Murphy (d). 3/85.

If Charlie Parker had a true heir – in the sense of someone interested in doing more than spending inheritance capital – it was Jimmy Lyons. Compared to his light-fingered onrush, most of the bop epigoni sound deeply conservative. He didn't have the greatest tone in the world: 'reedy' is the only word, ironically. Lyons's delivery was always light and remarkably without ego. Years of playing beside Cecil Taylor, in addition to accelerating his hand-speed, probably encouraged a certain self-effacement as well.

On Give It Up, Lyons seems quite content to remain within the confines of the group. Significantly pianoless and with only a secondary role for the bassist and drummer, it resolves into a series of high, intermeshed lines from the saxophone and horn, with the bassoon tracing a sombre counterpoint. Borca's role might have been clearer were she not so close in timbre to the bass, but it's worth concentrating for a moment on what she is doing; the effect is broadly similar to what Dewey Redman used to do behind Ornette and Don Cherry. She also appears to great effect on Wee Sneezawee, perhaps the most conventional of these discs in freebop terms but a similarly invigorating session. Only on the brief, uncharacteristic 'Ballada', with which the album ends, does Lyons occupy the foreground. It's immediately clear that his fey, slightly detached tone doesn't entail an absence of feeling; the closing track is a sad monument to a fading career.

Among the most fruitful encounters were the duos with Cyrille, a fellow alumnus of Cecil Taylor Academy. Cyrille is a one-man orchestra, conjuring layered energies that make a sax-and-drums 'Take The "A" Train' seem anything but absurd. 'Exotique', on the later session, is a wonderfully structured and emotionally committed performance. Both this and the concert recording, Burnt Offering, are superb examples of two masters in full flight.

(*) The Box Set Ayler 036 5CD Lyons; Karen Borca (bsn); Hayes Burnett, William Parker (b); Andrew Cyrille, Henry Letcher, Paul Murphy, Syd Smart (d, perc). 72–85.

Not the sumptuous repackaging of studio material that the title might imply but an oddly moving compilation of live material from the early '70s, when Jimmy was a regular fixture on the New York loft scene (there are sets from Studio Rivbea), to the year before his death, a slightly shaky recording of him working with Parker, Murphy and the loyal Borca.

The sheer bulk of material is less impressive than the doggedness of Lyons's search for a sound that led the alto saxophone on from Parker, McLean and Stitt and towards a new freedom of expression. A solo recording from 1981 in New York, documented on disc three, is almost painfully poignant in places. And yet it was precisely Lyons's sympathetic merging of personalities with others and especially with the strong leadership of Cecil Taylor that made him such a quietly compelling figure.

Johnny Lytle (1932–96)

VIBES

Played drums with Ray Charles in 1950 but switched to vibes as a leader.

 Nice And Easy Original Jazz Classics OJC 1013 Lytle; Johnny Griffin (ts); Bobby Timmons (p); Sam Jones (b); Louis Hayes (d). 1/62.
 Got That Feeling / Moon Child Milestone MCD 47093-2 Lytle; Milt Harris (org); Milt Hinton (b); Steve Cooper (d); William Peppy Hinnant (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 62–63.
 The Village Caller Original Jazz Classics OJC 110 Lytle; Milt Harris (org); Bob Cranshaw (b); Peppy Hinant (d); Willie Rodriguez (perc). 64–65.
() The Loop / New & Groovy BGP CDBGPD 961 Lytle; unknown p, b and d. 65.

If there is a classic record by this Ohio-born vibesman, it's surely The Village Caller, where he lives out all the clichés of organ/vibes rhythm combos and delivers a perfectly cooked slice of soul-jazz in the title-tune. The rest bumbles past inoffensively enough. Nice And Easy has merits, too; Griff is in a good mood, tucking into the standards and blues with his customary speed and aplomb, and the leader plays some fine solos on 'But Not For Me' and '322–Wow!'. In the end, it's no more than a hard-bop workout, rather messily recorded.

The Milestone set couples two of Lytle's four Jazzland albums. It might be an obvious call to describe a vibes-player as percussive, but Lytle's drumming background seems to have directed his vibes-playing, and both sessions are crisp and rhythmically tight. His companions have little of their own to offer, although Barretto's work on the Moon Child tracks adds to the sense that this band is all about rhythm.

The BGP CD couples two rare albums from the same period, originally issued on Tuba with no personnel details (the pianist sounds like Wynton Kelly), and the music is slight; the titles include 'The Snapper' and 'Screamin' Loud'. The formula wears thin after a number of tracks but, taken a few at a time, they stir the feet.

Humphrey Lyttelton (1921–2008)

TRUMPET, CORNET, CLARINET, VOICE

The doyen of post-war British jazz, he was active for 60 years as a performer, broadcaster, writer, wit and general man-about-jazz, a tireless force whose early links with trad jazz soon blossomed into a shrewd pan-stylistic outlook.

 Delving Back With Humph 1948–1949 Lake LACD 72 Lyttelton; Harry Brown, Ian Christie, Bobby Mickleburgh (tb); Wally Fawkes (cl); Ernie Mansfield (ts); George Webb, Dill Jones (p); Nevil Skrimshire, Bill Bramwell (g); Buddy Vallis (bj); Les Rawlings, John Wright, Bert Howard (b); Dave Carey (d, wbd); Bernard Saward, Carlo Krahmer (d). 1/48–11/49.
This is almost prehistoric for Lyttelton. These early sessions are the prelude to the full-blown British trad movement of the early '50s: six tracks with a Carlo Krahmer group of 1948, followed by 15 from the following year, each led from the front by Lyttelton's tight, crisp trumpet and Fawkes's serpentine clarinet, at this stage almost entirely in Sidney Bechet's debt. The rhythm sections range from awkward to competent, and the material is mostly Oliver, ODJB and the like; but the peculiarly British fierceness of the music hasn't gone stale, and even in less than ideal sound the enthusiasm of the band cuts through.

CORE COLLECTION

* The Parlophones Volumes One–Four
Calligraph CLG CD 035-1/2/3/4 Lyttelton; Keith Christie, John Picard (tb); Wally Fawkes, Ian Christie (cl); Bruce Turner (ss, as, cl); Tony Coe (as, cl); Ade Monsborough (as); Jimmy Skidmore, Kathy Stobart (ts); Joe Temperley (bs); George Webb, Johnny Parker, Ian Armit (p); Freddy Legon (g, bj); Buddy Vallis (bj); Mickey Ashman, Brian Brocklehurst, Jim Bray (b); Bernard Saward, Stan Greig, Eddie Taylor, George Hopkinson (d); Iris Grimes, Neva Raphaello (v). 11/49–8/59.
One hundred titles are neatly spread across the four discs (available only separately), and although in absolutist terms it isn't complete – there are no alternative takes, and titles by the collaborative bands with Graeme Bell and Freddy Grant are being saved for a possible follow-up – what remains is a comprehensive picture of ten years of work by arguably the most influential jazzman Britain has ever produced. Even the earliest tracks show how Lyttelton wasn't content to regard jazz as any kind of routine, and although the 1949–50 sessions are relatively formulaic, the playing is consistently creative and supple, with the rhythm sections never resorting to the trudge of regulation trad. Lyttelton's own playing is wasteless and controlled, without losing the terminal vibrato which was a feature of the '20s stylists he admired. Fawkes and Christie were important elements in this band, and so was Bruce Turner, a notorious recruit when he arrived in 1953 but a crucial aide in Lyttelton's move from trad to mainstream. The progress through the '50s is marked by milestones such as 'The Onions' and the great hit, 'Bad Penny Blues', before concluding with the 1957–9 sessions, which suggest how far Lyttelton had progressed, from the sparky trad of 'Memphis Blues' to the sophisticated mainstream inflexions of the likes of 'Hand Me Down Love'. There are also glimpses of young tykes such as Tony Coe, Kathy Stobart, Jimmy Skidmore and Joe Temperley.Throughout the four discs there are surprises, such as the extraordinary, haunting 'Jail Break' or Lyttelton's blues playing behind Neva Raphaello on 'Young Woman Blues'. As a record of a crucial chapter in British jazz, it's peerless stuff.

(*) The Conway And Royal Festival Hall Concerts Calligraph CLG CD 038 Lyttelton; John Picard (tb); Wally Fawkes (cl); Bruce Turner (ss, as); Johnny Parker (p); Freddy Legon (g, bj); Mickey Ashman (b); George Hopkinson (d). 8–11/54.
A valuable glimpse of Humph in a vintage year, 1954, this reissues the 12-inch LP Humph At The Conway with the 10-inch Jazz At The Royal Festival Hall as a bonus. John Picard comes in for the second date. A strong element of blues material on the first session is balanced by a more populist choice of tunes on the second, but for both gigs the band were in good spirits and fine form. Sound is decent rather than outstanding, with some eccentricities of balance on the first date.

(*) I Play As I Please Lake LACD 189 Lyttelton; Bert Courtley (t); Maurice Pratt, Rick Kennedy, Alec McGuinness (tb); Ronnie Ross, Tony Coe (as); Jimmy Skidmore, Don Rendell, Kathy Stobart (ts); Alex Leslie (bs); Stan Farnsworth, Larry Saunders (f); Phil Goody (bf); Ron Davey (vib); John Blanchard (mar); Ian Armit (p); Denny Wright (g); Brian Brocklehurst, Jack Fallon (b); Eddie Taylor (d); Jack McHardie, Sidney Rich (perc). 8–12/57.
Tracks by the regular Lyttelton bunch mixed with some biggish-band sides and a pair by the revived Lyttelton Paseo Band. It ruffled a few traditional feathers at the time, but it's all vintage Humph. Jimmy Skidmore gets a tremendous blow into 'Skid Row'.

* Triple Exposure Calligraph CLG CD 041 2CD Lyttelton; Bruce Turner, Tony Coe (as); Kathy Stobart, Jimmy Skidmore (ts); Joe Temperley (bs); John Picard, Eddie Harvey (tb); Johnny Parker, Ian Armit (p); Freddy Legon (g); Jim Bray, Brian Brocklehurst (b); Stan Greig, Eddie Taylor (d). 8/56–8/59.
A set which fills in a lot of the picture of Humph's late-'50s music, since it includes the four albums Humph Swings Out (1956 – mostly trad, short tracks), Kath Meets Humph (1957 – Stobart arrives for the then ailing Jimmy Skidmore, and plays some lovely solos), Humph In Perspective (1958 – Joe Temperley is the new man, and the session has an almost rowdily energetic feel to it) and Triple Exposure itself (1959 – one of the most varied of all Lyttelton's records, with Afro-Latin tunes, swing, blues and his by now inimitable mainstream take). A beautifully assembled set which gives consistent pleasure and will delight Lyttelton collectors with its availability.

(*) BBC Jazz Club, Autumn 1958 Upbeat URCD 174 Lyttelton; Bobby Pratt, Duncan Campbell, Eddie Blair, Bert Courtley (t); Keith Christie, John Picard, Eddie Harvey (tb); Tony Coe, Ronnie Ross (as); Jimmy Skidmore, Kathy Stobart (ts); Joe Temperley (bs); Ian Armit (p); Brian Brocklehurst (b); Eddie Taylor (d); Jimmy Rushing (v). 58.
Cut at the end of a tour in which Jimmy Rushing guested with the eight-piece Lyttelton band, this broadcast session (where the audience was banned from applauding to save studio time!) is a memorable survival. Although it starts with the standard line-up, they're soon augmented by members of the Ted Heath orchestra, and under Eddie Harvey's direction the music swings as mightily as the vocalist, who is in prime form. Even if some of the material is a bit too familiar, nobody seems to be either coasting or less than lively. One of the best of Upbeat's archaeological series.

(*) Beano Boogie Calligraph CLG 021 Lyttelton; Pete Strange (tb); John Barnes (cl, ss, ts, bs); Alan Barnes (cl, ss, as); Stan Greig (p); Paul Bridge (b); Adrian Macintosh (d). 3/89.
 Rock Me Gently Calligraph CLG 026 As above, except omit John Barnes; add Kathy Stobart (cl, ss, ts, bs); Dave Cliff (g). 7/91.
The formation of Calligraph, his own label, has produced a steady stream of new records from Humph, and they maintain a standard which many jazz musicians should envy. Beano Boogie is notable for the arrival of Alan Barnes, whose alto turns add fresh fizz to a well-established front line. Though the record gets off to a slow start, when it reaches 'Apple Honey', a nearly explosive reading of the Woody Herman tune, it lifts off. The elder Barnes departed with Rock Me Gently, but Kathy Stobart's return to the fold (35 years after they recorded 'Kath Meets Humph') means there is no drop in authority, and she delivers a grippingly unsentimental version of 'My Funny Valentine' on what's a generously filled CD.

(*) At Sundown Calligraph CLG 027 Lyttelton; Acker Bilk (cl, v); Dave Cliff (g); Dave Green (b); Bobby Worth (d). 1/92.
It seems little short of amazing that these two veterans had never recorded together before, but apparently not! The result is a warmly amiable meeting which holds up throughout CD length. Humph's own interest in the clarinet – there's at least one clarinet feature for him on most of the Calligraphs listed above – makes him a fine match for Bilk here on 'Just A Little While To Stay Here', but it's the easy give-and-take between trumpet and clarinet, over an almost lissom rhythm section, which gives the record its class; even Acker's vocals sound sunny enough, and his clarinet has become as idiosyncratic and engaging as Pee Wee Russell's.

 Rent Party Stomp Off CD1238 Lyttelton; Keith Nichols (tb, tba); John Beecham (tb); Wally Fawkes (cl); Stan Greig (p); Paul Sealey (bj, g); Jack Fallon, Annie Hawkins (b); Colin Bowden (d). 8/91–1/92.
(*) Hear Me Talkin' To Ya Calligraph CLG CD 029 Lyttelton; Pete Strange (tb); Jimmy Hastings (cl, as, f); Kathy Stobart (cl, ts, bs); Stan Greig (p); Paul Bridge (b); Adrian Macintosh (d). 5/93.
These bulletins from Humph make a neatly contrasting illustration of the breadth of his interests. Rent Party is straight out of the traditional pocket, with ancient material such as 'Texas Moaner' and 'Viper Mad' given a lusty workout. Fawkes, who goes, as they say, way back with Lyttelton, gets as close to Bechet-like authority as he ever has, and the banjo-driven rhythm sections find the necessary feel without resorting to caricature. Hear Me Talkin' To Ya is a pleasing jazz history lesson, with obscure Ellington (one of Humph's specialities), Carla Bley and Buck Clayton in the set-list as well as carefully revised treatments of 'Beale Street Blues' and 'St James Infirmary'. Jimmy Hastings comes on board for the first time and makes a keen addition to what is now a very commanding front line. The joints may creak a bit here and there, but this is still excellent jazz.

 Between Friends Calligraph CLG CD 037 As above, except omit Barnes, Temperley; add Jim Tomlinson (ts); Stacey Kent (v). 3/00.
 Sad, Sweet Songs & Crazy Rhythms Calligraph CLG 042 Lyttelton; Ray Wordsworth (tb); Jimmy Hastings (cl, ss, as, f, bcl); Karen Sharp (ts, bs); Ted Beament (p); John Rees-Jones (b); Adrian Macintosh (d); Verona Chard (v). 10/04.
 Cornucopia: Volumes 1 & 2 Calligraph CLG 044 / 045 As above, except omit Wordsworth; add Annie Whitehead (tb). 11/06.
Between Friends is a characteristic mix of ingredients: some Humph originals, plenty of Ellington (including 'Unbooted Character') and a few obvious standards made new by some piquant twists. Tomlinson and Kent find a little space for themselves and the singer appears on five tracks. Humph says he found it one of his most enjoyable dates to make, and we wouldn't wish to take issue. Typically, though, a fresh line-up for the latest set has put new life into the band. Karen Sharp adds youthful fizz to the front line and the tunes are all reworkings of nuggets from an illustrious history, even including a new version of the eerie 'Jail Break' from 1953. Cornucopia isn't quite overflowing enough for two volumes, but there's some terrific stuff from Karen and Annie and Humph does his thing with matchless authority.

Also, in brief:

(*) The Best Of Humphrey Lyttelton EMI Gold 583280-2 3CD. 11/49–6/57.
Covers a lot of the same ground as the Calligraph set, but adds numerous other tracks that collectors will want.

 Scatterbrains Lake LACD 180. 12/82.
Improbable but fun homage to Billy Banks, live in Swindon.

(*) ... It Seems Like Yesterday! Upbeat URCD 168. 9/83–11/84.
A reunion with Wally Fawkes, plus live tracks from the Bulls Head. All hands in top form.

 Three In The Morning Calligraph CLG 30. 9/93–4/94.
Humph meets Acker again, and it's a good-natured exchange.

 ... Lay 'Em Straight! Calligraph CLG 33. 2–10/96.
A fair show by the 1996 band, though there are frailties in the playing.

Paul Lytton (born 1947)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION, LIVE ELECTRONICS

British improviser, who's made pioneering use of an electronically altered kit.

(*) The Balance Of Trade CIMP 114 Lytton; Herb Robertson (c, t, vtb, tba, horn, flageolet etc.); Philipp Wachsmann (vn, vla, elec); Dominic Duval (b, elec). 5/96.
Lytton's first disc as nominal leader for many years is, as usual in this area of music-making, both visionary in scope and piecemeal in its actuality. The individual items range from a couple of minutes to over 19 in length, but each seems to last as long as it ought to, or has to. Lytton, whose history stretches back to all the British and European free musics of the '60s and '70s, continues to be one of the drummer-percussionists least hidebound by the idea of time, rhythm or determined pulse. His enormous kit (which apparently took several hours to set up) is something he uses as sparsely as possible: it seems that a lot of it might be there for the purpose of perhaps one tiny gesture somewhere in the music. Nobody has ever used electronics in the way he does; in fact, it's hard to hear how his electronics even affect the music. Wachsmann is someone fully attuned to this situation, but Duval and Robertson are Americans who are remote from what is a very European style of free music – yet they both handle themselves extraordinarily well, idiomatic to a 't'. About as difficult as it gets.

Harold Mabern (born 1936)

PIANO

The big man from Memphis worked with Art Farmer and Benny Golson and with Lionel Hampton, and spent many years as an accompanist.

 A Few Miles From Memphis Prestige PRCD 7568 Mabern; Blue Mitchell (t); George Coleman, Buddy Terry (ts); Bill Lee (b); Hugh Walker (d). 3/68.
 Wailin' Prestige PRCD 24134 Mabern; Virgil Jones (t, flhn); Lee Morgan (t); George Coleman (ts); Hubert Laws (ts, f); Boogaloo Joe Jones (g); Buster Williams (b); Idris Muhammad (d). 6/69, 1/70.

 Philadelphia Bound Sackville SKCD 23051 Mabern; Kieran Overs (b). 4/91, 2/92.

 For Phineas Sackville 2041 Mabern; Geoff Keezer (p). 1/95.

There is something about Harold Mabern that just breathes Memphis. Few jazz pianists have come so close to the essence of the blues, yet there is nothing crude or revivalist about his playing, which also indicates a heavy debt to the spacious approach of Ahmad Jamal and Phineas Newborn. The duo with Keezer is an offshoot of the Contemporary Piano Ensemble. Geoff and Harold play a couple of Phineas's tunes – 'Jate' and 'While My Lady Sleeps' – but mostly concentrate on material that reflects their shared influence's curiously evanescent spirit. The pianos don't always chime comfortably, unless it's a recording artefact. Otherwise delightful.

A Few Miles has been reissued with the contemporary Rakin' And Scrapin', pretty downhome fare on both, but with Coleman's subtle harmonic awareness informing his solos. Wailin' brings together two further Prestige sessions from the late '60s. The electric piano dates it a little on 'Blues For Phineas'; however, like Kenny Barron, Mabern invests the instrument with a bit of character. Wailin' also traces his development as a composer of original themes, still largely blues-based but forward-looking and surprisingly memorable (surprising only in that they seem to be covered so rarely); 'Greasy Kid Stuff' and 'Waltzing Westward' sit up and ask to be played. Morgan is an essential component of the 1970 group and Mabern was to return the compliment in the trumpeter's last group before his untimely death.

Even when Philadelphia bound, as on the duos with Overs, he sounds like a man happily locked into his own corner of the world. There is much that can be learnt about Mabern from this record, not least his awesome flexibility and awareness within his chosen stylistic field. They were actually in Toronto, but the mood-setting number was Ray Bryant's 'Philadelphia Bound'; he touches on Coltrane ('Dear Lord' and 'Lazybird') and plays a solo version of 'The Cry Of My People', written by Trane's friend Cal Massey. There are also two Benny Golson numbers ('Are You Real' and 'Whisper Not') which take him back to the kind of material he was doing a couple of decades earlier.

Like a lot of contemporary piano-players, Mabern has a string of records out on Japanese Venus; he's also represented on DIW, and these are all worth tracking down.

Laura Macdonald

SOPRANO AND ALTO SAXOPHONES

Scottish saxophonist in the modern idiom.

 Laura Spartacus STS002 Macdonald; David Budway (p); James Genus (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 9/00.

* Awakenings Spartacus STS 009 Macdonald; Claus Stoetter (t, flhn); Donny McCaslin (ts, f); Steve Hamilton (p); Gildas Bocle (b); Antonio Sanchez (d). 6/03.

Macdonald has a notably personal alto tone which manages to make its way past even Tain Watts in full flow. The eponymous debut is a smart set of originals, a couple of standards, and Mingus and Metheny tunes, made with a New York rhythm section. As with most debuts there's a hit-and-miss quality to some of the pieces, but on pieces which suit her best – Metheny's 'Always And Forever', where Watts gives us all some relief by sitting it out, and her own 'Last Confession' – she puts down her most individual playing.

Album two is a giant step forward, in terms of writing, soloing and leadership. There are bits of what might be termed 'Scottish music' here, yet they're fully absorbed into a jazz idiom. 'Angles' and 'Fantasy And Function' are the two long pieces, the written parts sharp and combustible, allowing the solos to boil up out of a fertile simmer. 'Meaning' and 'Whispers' use a toned-down lyricism to get the best out of the group's lyrical side (and offer Laura her own best solo on the latter). Stoetter and McCaslin are mightily impressive but it's Hamilton who makes it all happen.

Raymond MacDonald (born 1968)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Prolific Scottish improviser who works a regular group with guitarist George Burt and convenes the Glasgow Improvisers Orchestra.

* Delphinius & Lyra Clean Feed CF086 MacDonald; Günter 'Baby' Sommer (d, perc). 9/05.

MacDonald has an astonishing track record in luring senior improvisers – Parker, Guy, Beckett, Nicols, Coxhill, Tippett – to Glasgow, either to work in one of his small-group situations or with GIO. These glowing performances with Sommer are the by-product of one such encounter. The percussionist is a living encyclopaedia of free music and his open, strangely courteous playing inspires MacDonald to some of his most fervid and emotional playing yet. 'Socialistic Hip Shit' and 'Peter's Red Shoes' are highlights. The tiny misprint in the astronomical title is readily forgiven; a tremendous record.

Teo Macero (born 1925)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Famous for his pioneering production work on Miles Davis's records, he remains little known as a saxophonist.

 Explorations Fresh Sound FSRCD 409 Macero; Art Farmer (t); Eddie Bert (tb); Don Butterfield (tba); John LaPorta (as, cl); George Barrow (bs); Wally Cirillo, Mal Waldron (p); Orlando DiGirolamo (p, acc); Charles Mingus (b); Kenny Clarke, Ed Shaughnessy (d). 12/53, 9/55.

(*) With The Prestige Jazz Quartet Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1715 Macero; Teddy Charles (vib); Mal Waldron (p); Addison Farmer (b); Jerry Segal (d). 4/57.

Though possessed of a tremendous technique, Macero is not particularly individual as a soloist. His main strength lies in shaping a sophisticated group sound and in writing unusual lines for jazz combos. He's reminiscent in tone and phrasing of Bobby Jaspar, perhaps through a common Lester Young influence. The material on Explorations is shared with Cirillo, who contributes four of the themes, though Macero is the main writer and the session really ought to be co-credited to DiGirolamo – the intriguing 'Lanny DiJay', for whom Macero wrote the lament 'Shifting Sands' after his death in 1998 – who arranged a lot of the material. It all sounds rather furrowed and longhair and was dismissed at the time. But it has its fascination now.

Minus the interest of his more challenging compositional side, the Prestige set is flat and conventional. Gently paced and consisting mainly of new ballads – 'Star Eyes' is the only standard – it moves at an even, thoughtful pace which allows Macero to unspool his solos without urgency.

Vanessa Mackness

VOICE

British vocal improviser, working in and around the London free-music community.

(*) Respiritus Incus CD014 Mackness; John Butcher (ss, ts). 4–12/94.

A long-awaited debut from the British improvising vocalist, here with frequent partner Butcher, recorded at two concerts in 1994. This is funny, serious music, and the two musicians strike up a brilliant empathy at many moments. An operatic bark might come from Mackness in response to some entirely different gesture by Butcher, and yet the juxtaposition can sound exactly right. The singer's range is wide, if not quite as awesome as, say, Diamanda Galas's, and it's her acute grasp of dynamics which makes these ten duets sound vital and vivid. Mouth, glottal and dialect effects are used sparingly and effectively. Butcher, in many ways as vocal a performer himself, is sensitive but never submissive in the dialogues. A splendid encounter session, and a shame we have no follow-up.

Katrine Madsen (born 1971)

VOICE

Danish singer working with the American songbook and some more contemporary material.

 Dream Dancing Music Mecca 2044 Madsen; Thomas Fryland (t, flhn); Lars Jansson (p); Jesper Bodilsen (b); Morten Lund (d); Steen Raahauge (perc). 9/97.
 You Are So Beautiful Music Mecca 2088 Madsen; Carsten Dahl (p), Jesper Bodilsen (b); Ed Thigpen (d); Svante Thuresson (v). 12/98.
 My Secret Music Mecca 3020 Madsen; Lars Møller (ts); Jan Lundgren (p); Bjarne Hansen (ky); Jesper Bodilsen (b); Morten Lund (d). 1/00.
(*) Close To You Stunt STUCD 04132 Madsen; Mårten Lundgren (t); Hans Ulrik (ts, af, hca); Stefano Bollani (p); Jesper Bodilsen (b); Morten Lund (d). 12/03–4/04.
(*) Supernatural Love Stunt STUCD 06194 Madsen; Peter Asplund (t); Henrik Gunde Pedersen (p); Ole Kibsgaard, Ulf Wakenius (g); Jesper Bodilsen (b); Jonas Johansen (d). 12/05.

It's a surprise when Madsen's voice – a heavy, low contralto that almost slouches through the lyrics – enters on the slow, tropical beat of Meredith D'Ambrosio's 'August Moon'. The lilting rhythms and Fryland's perky trumpet lighten the mood and make a peppery contrast. The playing is vital and expressive throughout, so much so that attention is often taken away from the singer. Much may depend on whether Madsen's diction – slightly wayward and slurred – appeals. She does best on the slow to mid-tempo pieces, and the three D'Ambrosio lyrics all suit her well.

The second disc is a shade more inhabited by the singer. She's lucky with her pianists. After the excellent Jansson comes the admirable Dahl, whose solo on the opening 'Early In The Autumn' establishes a clear presence. Thuresson comes in to sing a couple of duets but Madsen is not overshadowed. 'Speak Low' manages to sound both fatigued and sexy: post-coital, you might say.

The third disc is all originals by Madsen, bar 'I Hear A Rhapsody', and she doesn't attempt to go pop with them. With Møller turning on the heat, it's as uncompromised a jazz setting as she could look for. Her singing remains inimitable, sometimes graceless but always apposite and piquant.

A move to Stunt hasn't compromised her approach. Back with standards and pop, she fronts another excellent group and puts her stamp on the funereal tempo of 'In A Sentimental Mood' and the exhausted blues of 'Save Your Love For Me'. Ulrik blows beautiful harmonica on 'The Look Of Love'. Programming Beatles songs is hardly radical now, but while 'And I Love Her' works fine on Close To You, a similar version of 'I'll Keep You Satisfied' right at the start of Supernatural Love, and a drowsy 'Can't Buy Me Love' later on, both fall flat. Not even Wakenius can rescue the former. The rest is business as usual, though, with a lovely dramatic flourish on 'Come A Little Closer'/'I Got Lost In His Arms'.

Joe Magnarelli

TRUMPET

A briskly competent technician.

 Why Not? Criss Cross 1104 Magnarelli; Eric Alexander (ts); Renee Rosnes (p); Peter Washington (b); Kenny Washington (d). 12/94.
 Always There Criss Cross 1141 Magnarelli; Jim Snidero (as); Gary Smulyan (bs); Larry Goldings (org); Denis Irwin (b); Kenny Washington (d); Daniel G. Sadownick (perc). 10/97.
 Mr. Mags Criss Cross 1200 Magnarelli; Jim Snidero (as); David Hazeltine (p); John Webber (b); Tony Reedus (d). 6/00.
 New York–Philly Junction Criss Cross 1246 Magnarelli; John Swana (t); Eric Alexander (ts); Joel Weiskopf (p); Peter Washington (b); Kenny Washington (d). 11/03.
(*) Hoop Dreams Criss Cross 1280 Magnarelli; Gary Versace (p, org); Peter Bernstein (g); Paul Gill (b); Tony Reedus (d). 6/05.

An almost collegiate group of collaborators; a mix of originals and standards; a heavy emphasis on soloing; and in the case of New York–Philly Junction an old-style cutting contest; all done with a shrewd technician at the studio desk and high quality control: Criss Cross as the Blue Note of the '90s and '00s.

There is a certain sameness to Magnarelli's records. That is their strength. That said, Joe likes to mix his line-ups somewhat (as long as Kenny Washington's diary is clear) and to experiment with different conformations of horns. Our only quibble lies with Mr. Mags, which has a less sturdy rhythm section and seems to rely more on a retro-Southern concept. On the other hand, it's probably Magnarelli's strongest record as a composer. The other highights tend to be specific solos, like the magnificent 'How Deep Is The Ocean' on the first record, proof that Joe can sustain and extend an idea without strain and without losing expression. If we had to plump, it would be the recent Hoop Dreams, but just because it's the freshest.

Roberto Magris (born 1959)

PIANO

Elegant Italian leader and composer.

(*) Current Views Soul Note 121425 Magris; Julius Baros, Ondrej Jurasi (t); Lojze Krajncan, Ferenc Schreck (tb); Roberto Ottaviano (ss, as); Marco Castelli (ss, ts); Kristof Bacso, Marko Lackner, Rado Tariska (as); Christian Münchinger (ts); Bill Molenhof (vib); Philip Catherine (g); Vitold Rek, František Uhlíř (b); Gabriele Centis (d). 11/01, 7 & 9/03.

 Il Bello Del Jazz Soul Note 121395 Magris; Herb Geller (as); Darko Jurković (g); Rudi Engel (b); Gabriele Centis (d). 8/03.

(*) Check-In Soul Note 121325 Magris; Tony Lakatos, Michael Erian (ss, ts); Robert Balzar (b); Gabriele Centis (d); Fulvio Zafret (perc). 05.

The worst thing anyone would possibly say about Magris is that he composes in a style that wouldn't have frightened the horses 25 years ago. That he does so with exquisite ease and grace should be sufficient recommendation. The (slightly) earlier date with Geller is fairly orthodox neo-bop, with a smoothly lyrical approach. There was better music in the wings. Magris is based in Trieste, that mysterious confluence of regions and cultures, seemingly out of time. The live Current Views was largely recorded there and it shares some of the city's liminal magic, romantic but with a strong hint of the Balkan and Levantine musics. 'The Story Teller' is taken from a folk heritage; 'Dukish Interlude' recalls an obvious influence; 'Steady Mood' confirms that Magris and his group are already beyond mere influence and creating a vital idiom of their own.

His Europlane ensemble has evolved steadily. Check-In does, indeed, sound like the start of a journey, with Lakatos and Erian soaring away in opposite channels and Magris providing clean, spacious lift with a markedly uncluttered accompaniment.

Alex Maguire

PIANO

Brilliant British improviser, yet to receive his due.

(*) Mt Olympus Ramboy 13 Maguire; Michael Moore (as, cl). 9/99.

Maguire's enormous musical resource is well matched here. Moore's quiet melody lines are a perfect foil for the pianist's patient explorations. One hears it most clearly on the opening two numbers, 'Mt Olympus' itself, on which Moore plays a composed clarinet-line against a freely moving background of chords, and Ellington's 'Azure', which seems to assemble itself as it goes along. Other delights are 'My Man's Gone Now', the quirky 'Twinkling Beaks' and 'Tufty', and the closing 'Viola', which at nearly ten minutes gives the album a solid send-off. Maguire always sounds powerful, even when he is playing pianissimo.

Carl Maguire

PIANO

Intricate performer whose debut record is very much group-centred.

 Floriculture Between the Lines/Challenge btl/CHR 71209 Maguire; Chris Mannigan (as); Trevor Dunn (b); Carl Weiss (d). 8/02.

It's clear from the opening 'Egocentric' that these men know each other and work together well; Floriculture is also the group name. Maguire's two-fisted exchanges with bassist Dunn are breathtaking. Weiss has some puzzle metres to deal with, but always manages to make them sound musical and not like equations. An exciting debut release, but the key's always a strong follow-up. So ...?

Rudi Mahall

BASS CLARINET

Noted for work with Der Rote Bereich 3 and with Alexander von Schlippenbach, but also a formidable solo performer.

(*) Solo Psi 06.01 Mahall (bcl solo). 9/05.

Eric Dolphy virtually invented solo bass clarinet performance and so it's no surprise that one of Mahall's most prominent projects to date was the Enja album Duet For Eric Dolphy, recorded with pianist Aki Takase, who is also Frau von Schlippenbach. Interestingly, Mahall here almost entirely avoids the extremes of sonority and dynamic that were a key part of Dolphy's iconic 'God Bless The Child'. Instead of the huge intervallic leaps associated more generally with Dolphy, Mahall concentrates on patient interrogation of relatively modest ideas. Locating himself mostly in a middle register, he probes, rephrases, repeats and inverts motifs with a philosophical calm. Only on the long concluding 'VII' does he show signs of running out of stamina or productive enquiry, but everything up to that point is highly effective and very faithfully recorded.

Rudresh Mahanthappa

ALTO SAXOPHONE

An Indian-American based in NY since 1997 and addressing questions of identity and culture within his own jazz idiom.

(*) Mother Tongue Pi 114 Mahanthappa; Vijay Iyer (p); François Moutin (b); Elliot Humberto Kavee (d). 6/04.

 Codebook Pi 21 As above, except omit Kavee; add Dan Weiss (d). 4/06.

Tired of being asked, 'Do you speak Indian?', Mahanthappa came up with a suite of compositions that are 'directly based on melodic transcriptions of Indian-Americans responding to such questions in their native Indian tongues'. The project as recorded here is incomplete since only seven such languages are included among these titles. But never mind the concept, feel the impact: often sounding like a lyrical variation on some of Greg Osby's small-group music, bittersweet episodes such as 'Kannada' and the contrapuntal inclines of 'Circus' have genuine individuality of character. Mahanthappa can be rather terse and inward in his delivery, but he has a fine, wounding sound on the alto and on Codebook he seems to have got past all vestiges of polemic and into an idiom that is as rich and inclusive as Iyer's own. 'The Decider' and 'Refresh' make for a fine opening, but the set ends on 'My Sweetest', which is as plainly beautiful a performance as he's committed to record yet. Delicious.

Mahavishnu Orchestra

GROUP

Influential fusion pioneers who oscillated between gentle arpeggiation and all-out attack.

 The Inner Mounting Flame / (*) Birds Of Fire Columbia CK 31067 / CK 66081 John McLaughlin; Jan Hammer (p, syn); Jerry Goodman (vn); Rick Laird (b); Billy Cobham (d). 71–72; 72.

 Lost Trident Sessions /  Between Nothingness & Eternity Columbia CK 65959 / 468225 As above. 6/73; 8/73.

* Apocalypse Columbia CK 46111 John McLaughlin; Jean-Luc Ponty (vn); Gayle Moran (ky, v); Carol Shive (vn, v); Marsha

Westbrook (vla); Philip Hirschi (clo, v); Ralphe Armstrong (b, v); Narada Michael Walden (d); Michael Gibbs (arr); London Symphony Orchestra, Michael Tilson Thomas (cond). 3/74.

 Visions Of The Emerald Beyond Columbia CK 46867 John McLaughlin; other personnel unidentified. 75.

* Original Album Classics Sony BMG 8869 717253 5CD As for records above. 71–75.

The Mahavishnu Orchestra combined sophisticated time-signatures and chord structures with drum and guitar riffs of surpassing heaviness. Wielding double-necked 6- and 12-string guitars, McLaughlin produced chains of blistering high notes over Cobham's whirlwind drumming and Hammer's remarkably distinctive Moog lines. Laird and Goodman (the latter came from prog-rock Flock) were more pedestrian in approach; the bass-lines are rock-solid and algebraic, but the violin has no trouble playing in 13/8.

The first Mahavishnu album was one of the essential fusion records. Ironically, just as he was pushing the iconic guitar solo to new heights of amplification and creative abandon, McLaughlin was also working against the dominance of electricity and setting a new standard for acoustic performance. 'Thousand Island Park' and 'Open Country Joy' on Birds Of Fire recall the beautiful acoustic 'A Lotus On Irish Streams' from the first album.

Personal and artistic differences blocked progress on a third studio album. There was conflict regarding composition credits on what was supposed to be a co-operative band. In the event, Columbia released the live Central Park recording Between Nothingness And Eternity. Word of bootleg copies of the studio session circulated for some time, but then studio producer Bob Belden discovered a pair of quarter-inch tapes containing the material. The 'lost' session includes Hammer's 'Sister Andrea' – also on the live record – but also two short tunes by Rick Laird ('Steppings Tones') and Jerry Goodman ('I Wonder'), though it seems that Billy Cobham held back material for his own projects.

Unfortunately Columbia have not drawn the Great Veil Of Kindly Oblivion over the expanded Orchestra's subsequent recordings, Apocalypse and Visions Of The Emerald Beyond, which, apart from flashes of quality from replacement violinist Jean-Luc Ponty, are singularly dull.

The Mahavishnu Project

GROUP

Rare (or maybe not) instance of a jazz wannabe band.

() Live Bootleg / () Phase 2 Aggregate AGCD002 / 003 Pete McCann (g); Steve Hunt (ky); Todd Reynolds (vn on Live only): Rob Thomas (vn on Phase 2 only); Stephan Crump (b); Gregg Bendian (d). 01; 03.

This is a fan's band, convened by Bendian, but like a very few pastiche outfits often better than the original. Bendian is a fascinating drummer, who takes Cobham's polyrhythmic approach out into new territory. Reynolds is also more interesting than Goodman, and some of his countryish work on 'Celestial Terrestrial Commuters' is top drawer. You might just pass these off on the unwary as further 'lost' Mahavishnu tapes. The alert, though, will hear that something much more interesting is going on.

(*) Return To The Emerald Beyond Cuneiform 242/243 Glenn Alexander (g); Adam Holzman (ky); Rob Thomas (vn); David Johnson (b); Gregg Bendian (d); Maria Neckham (v); strings. 06.

Who would have expected this tribute to have such durable legs? The simple answer is: anyone who took the trouble to listen carefully to the first two records. Visions Of The Emerald Beyond has never been our favourite Mahavishnu record. Ambitious it certainly was, but there is something lumbering and pretentious about the issued recording. Significantly, the music was rarely – in some cases, never – played live. Equally significantly, it is the fact of live performance that makes Bendian's reworking of the original themes so powerful. This is an eclectic (in the correct sense) compilation, bringing together the most successful tracks from a series of concert dates in 2006. Thomas plays the Ponty part with fire and control, and Alexander's handling of John McLaughlin's complex, sometimes almost unplayable lines is exemplary. Inevitably the Project is now running low on material, with just Apocalypse to go. It will be interesting to see where they might go after that. In the meantime, this is strongly recommended.

Jack Maheu (born 1930)

CLARINET

One-time veteran of The Dukes Of Dixieland and the Salt City Six, Maheu is a battle-hardened Dixieland pro who retired to New Orleans in 1990 – and decided to carry on.

 In New Orleans Jazzology JCD-278 Maheu; Kevin Clark, Duke Heitger (t); Charles Fardella (c); Al Barthlow (tb); Tom Fischer (ts); Tom Saunders (bsx); Tom McDermott, John Royen (p); Steve Blailock (g); Matt Perrine (b, sou); Richard Taylor (d); Big Al Carson (v). 6/96.

Maheu is a dedicated traditionalist who has moved from his New York patch to New Orleans for this smart, entertaining set of updates on the classic repertoire. He assembled a local ensemble for the 13 tunes, and they perform with fine chops and good gusto, getting a sound somewhere between commercial Dixieland and the more respectful feel of the heartland style. An original like 'Bourbon Moon' fits snugly beside an uproarious 'Cakewalkin' Babies From Home' (with a terrific vocal by Carson) and a treatment of 'Just A Closer Walk With Thee' that chugs along to a dead-slow R&B shuffle. Plenty of good solos, and Maheu himself is in fine fettle, but docked a notch for a couple of fillers and a daft ending with a variation on 'Chopsticks'!

Kevin Mahogany (born 1958)

VOICE

Raised in KC, and a throwback to an earlier age of jazz singing.

(*) Pride And Joy Telarc 63542 CD/SACD Mahogany; Jon Faddis (t); Gregory Clark, Todd Johnson (ts); Gerald Trottman (bs); James Weidman (p); Dave Stryker (g); Peter Eldridge, Melissa Slocum (b); Charles Haynes (d); Don Alias (perc). 10/01.

The actual voice is closer to ripe cherry wood, with a nice grain. Mahogany's Telarc debut (there are earlier discs in the deleted bin) is a very personal tribute to the Motown classics. Marvin Gaye's title-song is arranged as a boppish burner, while 'Tears Of A Clown' is slowed down so much that the melody almost evaporates. 'Just My Imagination (Running Away With Me)' is for just voice and piano and there's a fine duo version of 'My World Is Empty Without You' with Melissa Slocum that manages to sound genuinely bereft and alone. Not many of these songs have received successful jazz treatment. Other singers and musicians should sit up and take notice.

* Big Band Mahogany Jazz 54675 Mahogany; Frank Mantooth Orchestra; Kansas City Boulevard Big Band; Big City Swing Band. 1/05.

We've so far resisted the familiar comparison with Billy Eckstine, but here it is unavoidable. Mahogany communicates enormous power on these recordings, and while the arrangements and production values (Mantooth, T. S. Monk and Allen Farnham all take a turn at the controls) suit him to varying degrees, there is no mistaking the authority of the voice. At a time when the paradigms of male jazz singing are largely defined by Mark Murphy and Kurt Elling, it's instructive to hear Mahogany tackle this pre-bop idiom with such class and authority. The repertoire is resolutely mainstream, the delivery unique, but for occasional flourishes that recall Hibbler, Joe Williams and Mr E.; it's a delight from start – 'Moonlight In Vermont' – to finish – 'Don't Get Around Much Any More'.

Adam Makowicz (born 1940)

PIANO

Originally Matyszkowicz. Born in Czechoslovakia and studied in Cracow. Most familiar as a soloist and trio player.

 A Handful Of Stars Chiaroscuro Makowicz; George Mraz (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 9/81.

It has become a cliché to characterize Makowicz's style as a hybrid of Tatum and Chopin. Technically, it's pretty near the mark, and there is a persistent romantic (even tragic) tinge to even his most exuberant playing that makes the parallel with his (adoptive) compatriot a reasonable one. The catalogue has been drastically reduced as a result of Concord's rationalization of its jazz list, but this survivor, not released until the end of the '90s, is a welcome reminder of Adam's gifts. 'Bye Bye Blues' is the most obviously Tatumesque item, but don't be so dazzled by the pianist's right-hand improvisations that you don't listen to DeJohnette and Mraz, who are the secret weapons on this date: technically astute and utterly musical in every gesture. The pianist's originals, 'Satin Wood' and 'Opalescence', are typical of his gracious, Chopin-tinged approach. There's also a useful Jazzspeak interview.

Tony Malaby (born 1964)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Born in Tucson, Arizona, but established on the NY scene since 1990.

(*) Cosas Nine Winds NWCD0171 Malaby; Joey Sellers (tb); Michael Formanek (b); Billy Mintz (d). 10/93.
 Sabino Arabesque ARCD 153 Malaby; Marc Ducret (g); Michael Formanek (b); Tom Rainey (d). 2/00.
(*) Apparitions Songlines 1545 CD/SACD Malaby; Drew Gress (b); Tom Rainey, Michael Sarin (d). 10/02.
* Tamarindo Clean Feed CF099 Malaby; William Parker (b); Nasheet Waits (d). 06.

Malaby is a remarkable fellow, not least in his modest refusal to conform to the notion of the improvising saxophonist as an inspired and ecstatic voice. His music is thoughtful, not stripped of emotion but not given over to it either, and, as the cliché runs, Tony plays very much for the band. Cosas finds him in the front line of a collaborative quartet, with composing credits shared with Sellers. The saxophonist's long 'Hamza' is probably overreached but it's one of a sequence of strong ideas. Sellers's tunes are grouped together in the middle of the album, which gives them an unintended continuity. The trombone has its best moment on 'Mesopotamian Love God', which seems to be derived in part from 'Girl Talk', unlikely as that sounds. Malaby saves the best for last on his own 'He Lacked The Imagination To Suffer'.

The Arabesque record is inconclusive, perhaps because Ducret doesn't have a clear role, neither accompanying nor wearing his front-line harness with comfort. Malaby's big round tone is well-deployed at least and there's lots of detail in his writing (almost all of it's his) and playing.

If there were signs that Malaby didn't quite know what he wanted in the 'harmony instrument' department, he didn't seem to have any doubts about what he wanted from bassists and drummers. Then along came Apparitions with its twinned percussionists and it was clear that he was still looking for something different in that department. He cleverly gets one or other of them to drop out from time to time, which makes having them both doubly successful; 'Mambo Chueco' and 'Apparitions' are the only really long tracks, the remainder mostly quite brief and well-shaped. The sound is magnificent; so good, in fact, one wonders whether the two-channel percussion was a device to show it off.

Tamarindo is an essential contemporary record, all the more persuasive for its refusal of rhetoric. On 'Buried Head', 'Mariposa' and 'Mother's Love' (the last of these notably unsentimental) Malaby weaves lines that have the clarity and directness of prose. Parker's tendency to the sententious is reined in and Waits plays free time with great discipline. It's an almost impossible record to fault.

Bob Malach

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Able sideman; more than a Michael Brecker clone.

 Mood Swing Go Jazz 6003 Malach; Tom Harrell (t, flhn); Russ Ferrante, Bob Mintzer (ky); Robben Ford (g); Eddie Gomez, Will Lee (b); Vinnie Colaiuta, Steve Gadd (d); Don Alias (perc); Dr John (v). 90.
 The Searcher Go Jazz 6015 Malach; Robben Ford (g); Roger Kellaway (p); Bill Boublitz, Russ Ferrante (ky); Roscoe Beck (b); Tom Brechtlein (d); Alex Acuña, Don Alias (perc). 10/96.
(*) After Hours Go Jazz 6031 Malach; Billy Peterson (b); Kenny Horst (d). 98.

There's a hefty gap between the first, slightly poppy album and the second, which uses much of Ford's Blue Line personnel. They're OK records, but without much in the way of real excitement. The trio is much better, not least because the material (Silver's 'The Jody Grind', Lee Morgan's 'Stop Start', themes by Golson, Thad Jones and Shorter) stands up more strongly. Malach's best work, The Searcher notwithstanding, can still be found on other leaders' records.

Llanfranco Malaguti

GUITAR

Contemporary Italian guitarist, performing in a conservative but creative idiom.

 Inside Meaning Splasc(h) 403-2 Malaguti; Stefano D'Anna (ss, ts); Enzo Pietropaoli (b, perc). 2/93.

(*) Percorsi Splasc(h) 419-2 Malaguti; Umberto Petrin (p). 5/93.

(*) New Land Splasc(h) 443-2 Malaguti; Dario Volpi (g, g-syn). 1/95.

 Aforismi Splasc(h) 606-2 Malaguti (g solo). 11/96.

Malaguti shies away from effects and noise. He plays with a clean, slightly pinched open tone and prefers spareness to lots of notes. Some earlier vinyl for Splasc(h) suggested a conventional stylist, but these are wide-open records with plenty of space and air around the music. Inside Meaning seems to take off from a group of standard harmonic bases and into a series of triologues where the normally tempestuous D'Anna is unusually restrained. These are sometimes rather piecemeal, but there are some bewitching moments and the entirety is oddly satisfying in a modest way. Percorsi is a duo concert from Slovenia with the splendid Petrin. They feel their way through a group of standards – the way the opening improvisation turns into 'Solar' is quite magical, and there's a similar transformation of 'Just Friends' – before each man takes a few solos and they climax with 'Autumn Leaves'. Petrin's abstruse but acute methods are an ideal partner for the guitarist's own delivery and, though the location sound isn't ideal, it's pretty good.

New Land is comparatively tame, almost finicky in parts, with Volpi very much a second fiddle. Malaguti's tunes have their virtues, but this one is too becalmed to sustain the attention. Aforismi is a solo record in which the improviser uses echo effects with a memory expander to create real-time multi-tracking. With only two pieces breasting the five-minute barrier, the guitarist again impresses with his reserve, eliminating flab from the music, even if some of it lacks a distinctive flavour. Guitarists may enjoy this more than the uncommitted, but Malaguti has an interesting agenda.

 Parole, Parole ... Splasc(h) 706-2 Malaguti; Stefano D'Anna (ts); Enzo Pietropaoli (b); Roberto Gatto (d). 1/92.

A recent release, despite the date. Malaguti takes on the Italian song heritage (anticipating a favourite tactic among many players of his generation of late) and the quartet tackle the likes of 'Estate' and 'Quando Quando' here. D'Anna sits out four of the 12 tracks and is subdued (or at least respectful of the material), while the leader patiently explores the melodies. Not bad, but unless you love these tunes it's hardly a priority listen.

Raphe Malik (1948–2006)

TRUMPET

Often working around Boston or with saxophonist Glenn Spearman, Malik was a free-form trumpeter and group leader who combines abstraction with a solid grounding in blues harmony and bop.

(*) Last Set Live The 1369 Jazz Club Boxholder BXH 042 Malik; Frank Wright (as); William Parker (b); Syd Smart (d). 84.

Malik was a sometime Cecil Taylor sideman who has managed to derive something from the pianist's style without being swamped by it. This appeared shortly before Malik's untimely death, a look back to a storming quartet date in Cambridge, Mass., which benefits immeasurably from the presence of both Wright and Parker. 'Companions #2' is a sprawling half-hour of intense music-making. It has a definite late-night, let's-go-for-it feel, as befits the last set listing, and while the sound is ragged in places, it's an exciting reminder of what died with Malik in early 2006.

(*) 21st Century Texts FMP CD 43 Malik; Brian King Nelson (Cmel); Glenn Spearman (ts); Larry Roland (b); Dennis Warren (d). 6/91.

(*) Sirens Sweet And Slow Outsounds 01972 As above, except add Jamyll Jones (b). 94.

 The Short Form Eremite MTE05 As above, except omit Nelson, Jones, Roland; add George Langford (b). 7/96.

 Consequences Eremite MTE013 Malik; Sabir Mateen (as); William Parker (b); Dennis Charles (d). 7/97.

On 21st Century Texts he marshals a tight little posse of like-minded improvisers in the sort of session ESP Disk used to have a corner in. Nelson's C-melody sax has a strikingly unfamiliar tonality but, with no piano or guitar as a reference point, it's able to find its own territory, often coming in under Malik in a series of call-and-response passages that are both alien and highly traditional. Sirens Sweet And Slow breaks up the unit a little, with two long duets, trumpet with bass, and trumpet with drums. Malik manages to play big and loud without losing focus: he rarely goes for the buzzy, spluttery effects that avant-garde brassmen often rely on, and his note choices are boldly decisive. 'Companions' is an impressive group piece and there's a sort of stop-start blowout on 'Tenor', to which Spearman makes his usual full-blooded contribution. The unvarnished sound suits the band.

Energy-music followers will love The Short Form, a concert recording that pares the band back to a quartet and lets them explode. It's exhilarating enough, but the more specific restraint which Malik uses so effectively on the studio discs is missed. Similar state of affairs on the following year's Consequences, rather dustily recorded, and although this is a chance to hear Denis Charles in one of his final recordings, and Malik and Mateen play some vociferous solos, a strong live performance transfers rather uneasily to CD.

(*) Storyline Boxholder BXH 5 Malik; Cecil McBee (b); Cody Moffett (d). 98.

Malik demonstrates his deep familiarity with blues and jazz traditions on 'Minimal Blue', which uses a basic 12-bar to generate a complex group improvisation. Other tunes, like 'First Valve Blues' and 'The Hard Way', follow a similar procedure with equal effect, but there is a law of diminishing returns on this fine record and it is probably best sampled a track or two at a time.

McBee is at his magisterial best, weaving in and out of Malik's tightly valved phrasing, but he is occasionally drowned by Moffett. A certain democracy of sound is a good thing, but this time it is perhaps taken too far and Cody needs reining in on occasion.

 Looking East: A Suite In Three Parts Boxholder 019/020 2CD Malik; Sabir Mateen (reeds); Larry Roland (b); Cody Moffett (d). 99.

Again, the problem here is an excess of musical information, with insufficient variation in performance to distinguish one piece or 'part' from the others. There is no real evidence that this is a continuous suite at all, and it is certainly not danceable. The main drama is contained in two long pieces, 'The Old Your Majesty' and 'The New Majesty', enough for a decent LP, but bracketed by an awful lot of generic play. Malik is in top form, but Mateen tends to go off at half-cock, and very abrasive half-cock at that, which just encourages Moffett to go mad. Roland is an able player, but surely this isn't his natural territory?

 Companions Eremite MTE 034 Malik; Glenn Spearman (ts); William Parker (b); Paul Murphy (d). 5/98.

Good to hear Malik back in company with the redoubtable Parker. The other reason to treasure this disc is a further last glimpse of a lost master of modern free. Glenn Spearman was close to death when these tracks were recorded during a Jimmy Lyons tribute at the Orensanz Arts Centre in New York City. He looks desperately ill on the cover but is still in fierily good voice, burning through an impassioned if slightly shapeless solo on the opening 'Lyons's Jump'.

Malik's fate on this outing was to be upstaged by his colleagues. After Spearman's statement, Parker weighs in with a solo that conjures up recollections of every bull fiddler from Jimmy Blanton to Mingus. The trumpeter is rather quietly recorded and displaced in the stereo mix. There are echoes of Ornette's Crisis-period group with Dewey Redman, but also of Leo Smith especially in the slow processional which opens 'Emblematic'. The remaining tracks are shorter and probably surplus.

 Speak Easy Le Systeme 004 Malik (t solo). 01.

A rare and welcome chance to hear the trumpeter unaccompanied. Malik avoids mere technical display. There are blues-based compositions, boppish heads and the occasional completely free-form idea. 'Odds Out' and 'Cruise Control' are the stand-out tracks. Malik recorded the disc in Toronto in early 2001. It's not clear whether a rehearsal tape has been over-recorded or whether print-through has occurred in storage. Whatever the reason, a 'ghost' trumpeter can be heard throughout.

* Sympathy Boxholder BXH 045 Malik; Joe McPhee (t, ts); Donald Robinson (d, perc). 10/02.

A wildly exciting improv set that needs a pause between tracks, just to absorb the amount of musical information these guys put out. There's no track called 'Sympathy', so that must refer to the feeling of intuitive communication between the players. Robinson is certainly not there to make up numbers or keep time. He's consistently inventive throughout, though inevitably much of the attention falls on McPhee, particularly when he picks up his trumpet to join Malik in some stirringly resonant brass exchanges. Highly recommended.

Pete Malinverni (born 1958)

PIANO

Solidly brilliant player who benefits hugely from a stable trio.

 The Spirit Saranac 1001 Malinverni; Ralph Lalama (ts); Pat O'Leary (b); Mel Lewis (d). 8/89.

It's a mystery why Malinverni isn't more widely praised. An interest in gospel and spiritual issues informs some of his work, but he is a forceful, hugely inventive player, whatever the programme. This early disc finds him in strong company. Much of the attention falls on the ailing Mel Lewis, who takes a curtain-call solo on 'Why Was I Born?' Lalama doesn't add much, in the event, a muted showing from him.

 This Time / * A Very Good Year Reservoir RSR 147 / 158 Malinverni; Denis Irwin (b); Leroy Williams (d). 6/96; 10/98.

Malinverni grew up by Niagara Falls, which might explain the onrush of bright, ever-changing notes. His choices are always interesting, even when they sound quite legitimate. Again, there's a soulful, even churchy side to his playing and not just on 'Psalm 100'. 'Blue In Green' on A Very Good Year emerges in a fresh and unrecognizable new tonality, while Duke's 'Purple Gazelle' (here called 'Angelica') gets a lick of paint as well. 'Steal Away' keeps the sacred flame alight.

(*) Of One Mind /  Autumn In New York /  The Tempest Reservoir RSR 164 / 171 / 177 As above. 6/00; 6/02; 12/03.

The first album of the new decade begins with a delightful 'Sometimes I Feel Like A Motherless Child', but the masterstroke is a notably wry and sardonic 'Blame It On My Youth', which has Malinverni reaching for an ever more resonant voice. Irwin has been a solid presence from the start and here he sounds authoritative and full of ideas. Williams is never still, but never wastes a gesture. Autumn takes on a darker hue from what happened in New York the previous autumn. 'Elegy' was written for two friends killed in the WTC attacks, while 'David' from a biblical suite on the David and Goliath story has a nice defiance.

By The Tempest, Malinverni records have a predictable unpredictability: some boppish stuff, a religious tune, a ballad or two, and some unexpected discords just to underline that there is dark in this world as well as light. The trio has such a well-oiled and empathetic feel that one scarcely notices how daring parts of 'Twelve', say, or even 'Alone Together' actually are.

 Theme & Variations Reservoir RSR 184 Malinverni (p solo). 7/05.

A first solo record and Pete handles it with great originality, establishing a tiny theme at the beginning and then reworking it throughout the album, mostly as interludes between standards material of a markedly bittersweet and indigo cast. It's a very effective strategy, but it does yield an album of 25 very short tracks, which sounds a bit schematic.

* Joyful! ArtistShare 0047 Malinverni; Joe Magnarelli (t, flhn); Todd Coolman (b); Dwayne Broadnax (d); Jody Sandhaus (v); gospel choir. 10/05.

The Psalms of David, given a wonderfully imaginative and, yes, joyful spin by Pete and his group. Some will be allergic to the sound of gospel choirs, but just try 'Let The Earth Shake', 'Let The Sea Roar' and 'To The Rock' and see if you aren't converted, to Malinverni if not quite born again. Great stuff, and unmawkishly uplifting.

(*) Invisible Cities Reservoir RSRCD 192 Malinverni; Tim Hagans (p); Rich Perry (ss, ts); Ugonna Okegwo (b); Tom Melito (d). 07.

This arrived right on press time, but even on the briefest acquaintance it's a top-flight album by probably the toughest band he's yet put together. An exemplary modern hard-bop date with Pete's usual unexpected elements. More next time.

Russell Malone (born 1963)

GUITAR, VOICE

A thoughtful conservative, he matches deep knowledge of his instrument's history with a strong investment in old values.

(*) Playground Maxjazz MXJ601 Malone; Gary Bartz (as); Joe Locke (vib); Martin Bejerano (p); Tassili Bond (b); E. J. Strickland (d). 11/03.

(*) Live At Jazz Standard: Volumes 1 & 2 Max Jazz MXJ 602 / 604 Malone; Martin Bejerano (p); Tassili Bond (b); Jonathan Blake (d). 9/05.

Malone has had little luck in the way of his major-label ventures. Albums for Columbia, Impulse! and Verve are all in the Dead Letter Office. He made a fresh start at Maxjazz, and Russell sounds like he's had all the cares lifted. This is an unpretentious set which bounces between the supercharged bop lickery of 'Sugar Buzz' and pop covers where even bland melodies come up shining in the guitarist's gorgeous tone (not bad for The Carpenters and James Taylor). Bartz gets to blow on only a single track, but the band is otherwise in good shape. Malone doesn't quite avoid sentimentality here and there, but it's a very enjoyable record.

The Jazz Standard records are fascinating. Who else around is calling for Frank Rosolino's 'Blue Daniel'? And turning it from a mellow, three-quarter time ballad into a steamer? And who has covered Milt Jackson's 'Heartstrings' with such authority? These significantly come in the second half of the first volume, which starts rather inauspiciously. You know what's coming, because we say it over and over: was there really enough top-notch material for two hour-long CDs? To be fair, the tracks have been nicely balanced between the two, but it's still more of a commitment than casual listeners might want to make. The Isley Brothers' 'For Love Of You' and the original 'Sugar Buzz' are the picks from Volume 2.

Stefano Maltese (born 1955)

SOPRANO, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, BASS CLARINET, FLUTE, PAN PIPES, VIOLIN

The Sicilian is a versatile multi-instrumentalist, but his own-name albums are exercises more concerned with composing and arranging, especially for big ensembles.

 Sombra Del Sur Splasc(h) 406-2 Maltese; Roy Paci (t, pkt-t, flhn); Sebastiano Dell'Arte (t, flhn); Paolo Reale, Rino Caraco (tb); Claudio Giglio (f, bamboo f); Giuseppe Bonanno (f, picc); Paola Ammatuna, Jasmin Avitabile Leva, Andrea Cianci, Barbara Forzisi, Paola Milazzo (f); Salvatore Carnemolla (cl); Angelo Ragaglia (bsn); Ciccio Tiné (acc); Michele Conti (vn, mand); Salvo Amore (g); Michele Salerno (clo); Pino Guarrella (b); Antonio Moncada (d); Walter Di Mauro (perc); Gioconda Cilio (v). 7/92.

 Book Of Yesterday Splasc(h) 438-2 Maltese; Ray Paci (t, pkt-t); Rosario Patania (tb); Alfio Sgalambro (cl); Giovanni Di Mauro (ob); Michele Conti (vn); Salvo Amore (g); Nello Toscano (clo); Giuseppe Guarella (b); Antonio Moncada (d); Gioconda Cilio (v, perc). 2/95.

 Seven Tracks For Tomorrow DDQ 128025-2 Similar to above, except omit Sgalambro, Di Mauro, Amore, Toscano. 3/97.

 Living Alive Leo CD LR 265 Maltese; Arkady Shilkloper (flhn, bugle, frhn); Sophia Domancich (p); Paul Rogers (b); Antonio Moncada (d); Gioconda Cilio (v, perc). 9/98.

A sprawling, sometimes malevolent-sounding work, the big-scale suite which is Sombra Del Sur is about the slowness and heat-saturated quiet of the Italian 'South'. Slowness seems apt, since Maltese started it in 1986, and much of it is in turn based on an earlier piece dating back to 1978. His reluctance to use keyboards and his interest in woodwinds and strings introduces a variety of tone which is unusual: the massed flutes which are brought in for two tracks, the curious effect of free percussion and tenor over the fixed handclap of 'Hombre Lobo', the unearthly chorales of 'Estrellas'. It's an odd construction, sometimes very arresting, but often plain turgid. Book Of Yesterday is a retrospective of Maltese's writing over 25 years, going back to the lumbering 1974 'Trois Petits Chevaux Pour Erik Satie' and ending on a new (1994) piece. You can't say Maltese doesn't try hard: he creates an orchestra of 16 bass clarinets through overdubbing on 'Dans Les Nuits', and assembles such groups as a soprano/clarinet/oboe trio and various chamberish quintets. The sleeve-notes call him 'a poetic of estranged visionariness'. Much of this carefully arranged and cockeyed music seems deliberately eccentric, but there are shafts of humour to go with the many po-faced passages.

One of his key collaborators is Cilio, who takes a significant role as wordless vocalist on Seven Tracks For Tomorrow, a set which pursues Maltese's composing interests without reaching any clear indication of progress: he seems to flit from episode to episode, never quite settling into a style and passing the initiative round his players so restlessly that it's hard to focus on what each is doing. That issue is sidestepped by the more ad hoc Leo record, which was an opportunistic date following the players' appearance at the 1998 Labirinti Sonori Festival. Maltese is reluctant to present himself as a full-on free improviser and he leaves much of the main space to both Shilkloper and Cilio, with piano, bass and drums taking their own independent parts. Untypical, though arguably this has the greatest share of satisfying music of the four discs. Maltese will be an acquired taste, but more adventurous spirits may find him not a little intriguing.

(*) Double Mirror Splasc(h) 469.2 Maltese; Evan Parker (ss, ts); Keith Tippett (p); Antonio Moncada (d). 8/95.

A mismatched quartet which nevertheless makes some striking music along the way. The very long 'Enter Alloy: Exit Rust' takes up most of the record and will take up a lot of listeners' patience too. The first half of the track develops in a chamberish way before Tippett starts making a tremendous racket and matters tend to fall apart. This doesn't feel like Maltese's forte.

Junior Mance (born 1928)

PIANO, HARPSICHORD

Junior Mance has been playing professionally for almost 60 years. His first lessons with Julian Mance Sr and his grounding in blues, stride and boogie woogie have stood him in good stead ever since.

 Live At The Village Vanguard Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 204 Mance; Larry Gales (b); Ben Riley (d). 61.

* Junior's Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1000 Mance; Bob Cranshaw (b); Mickey Roker (d). 2/62.

(*) Happy Time Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1029 Mance; Ron Carter (b); Mickey Roker (d). 7/62.

Unmistakable from a random sample of half-a-dozen bars as a Chicago man, Mance can be a maddeningly predictable player on record, resorting to exactly the figure one expects him to play rather too often to leave any interest for his often adventurous variations and resolutions. That's certainly evident on the live OJC. It's a notably self-confident performance, and it will be clear to anyone who has hitherto heard only the recent stuff that Mance's expert chops and obvious awareness of the earlier literature did not appear magically on his 50th birthday. It's a fairly representative programme, with the favoured 'Smokey Blues' prominent, and a slot for Basie's '9.20 Special'.

Recorded on Valentine's Day 1962, Junior's Blues is a love letter to jazz itself, as direct and uncomplicated a declaration as you'll find in the whole history of the music. Junior covers themes by Monk (with a few embellishments of his own), Ellington ('Creole Love Call') and the Jay McShann/Charlie Parker swinger 'The Jumpin' Blues'. He kicks off with his own 'Down The Line', which is as orthodox and full-hearted a 12-bar as you'll ever hear.

The switch around of bassists for the July session doesn't make a huge difference, but Carter is a more melodic player than Cranshaw and so the music is busier, somewhat to its detriment, but not fatally. The title-track should be played to anyone suffering nervous prostration or depression. 'For Dancers Only' and 'Azure-Te' are the best of the rest, until you get to the final tune, Clark Terry's 'The Simple Waltz', which is worth the rest of the disc put together. Simply lovely.

 Junior Mance Special Sackville SKCD 3043 Mance (p solo). 9/86, 11/88.

(*) Smokey Blues / * For Dancers Only JSP CD 219 / Sackville 3031 Mance; Marty Rivera (b); Walter Bolden (d; on Smokey Blues only). 6/80; 7/83.

There's an immediate lift to the five live tracks on Special, recorded at Toronto's intimate and much-documented Café des Copains, which suggests that studio performance really isn't Mance's strong suit. Certainly the opening 'Yancey Special', done on a better-tempered studio piano, is remarkably flat and unvaried; the long interpretations of 'Careless Love', Billy Taylor's 'I Wish I Knew How It Would Feel To Be Free' (familiar to British fans as the theme to a well-known TV programme) and Ivory Joe Hunter's 'Since I Lost My Baby I Almost Lost My Mind' are characteristically bluesy but also rather tentative. It's only among the live tracks – which include 'Blue Monk', Golson's 'Whisper Not' and two Ellington numbers – that Mance really seems to let go, working towards those knotted climaxes for which he is rightly admired.

Rivera is a bassist who fits snugly into the pianist's conception of how the blues should be played: strongly, but with considerable harmonic subtlety. The trio album is perhaps the best of the recent recordings, despite a rather uncertain sound-mix. Mance's ability to suffuse relatively banal ballad material with genuine blues feeling (a characteristic noted by the late Charles Fox in a typically perceptive liner-note) is nowhere more obvious than on 'Georgia On My Mind', a melody that can sound footling and drab but which acquires something close to grandeur here. Bolden's 'Deep' is basically a feature for the rhythm players and doesn't add very much to the total impact, but the closing 'Ease On Down The Road' and 'Smokey Blues' are authentic Mance performances.

The duos with Rivera are lovely and the opening 'Harlem Lullaby' (a Mance tune), 'Prelude To A Kiss' and the long closing 'Summertime' (almost 12 minutes of it) are among the best things in the whole Mance catalogue.

 Here 'Tis – Play The Music Of Dizzy Gillespie Sackville SRCD 3050 Mance; Bill McBirnie (f); Reg Schwager (g); Kieran Overs (b); Norman Marshall Villeneuve (d). 92.

Junior is an admirer of Gillespie the composer and has previously tackled 'Salt Peanuts' and 'Tin Tin Deo'. Here he takes a more measured view of things like the latter, 'Blue'N'Boogie', 'Ow', 'Night In Tunisia', 'Con Alma' and 'Woody'N'You', often adding his own curlicues and embellishments to the familiar melodies. The band is nothing to write home about, and Villeneuve's drumming is very tame.

(*) Blue Mance Chiaroscuro 331 Mance; Keter Betts (b); Jackie Williams (d). 5/95.

In the spring of 1995, Junior began what was to be a fruitful association with the Floating Jazz cruises – Caribbean weather, good food and drink and music thrown in (while some people have to work) – and the trio reconvened for a studio session shortly afterwards. 'Blue Mance' follows 'Blue Monk' in short order, perhaps as a sign that Thelonious's 'radicalism' isn't so very different from Junior's unaffected simplicity of approach. He starts the city with an easy, gracious 'Falling In Love With Love' and then throws in Betts's 'Head Start', a basic blowing theme that is more effective than its slim materials might suggest. After the Monk/Mance exchange, a surprise. Junior isn't known particularly as an Ellington interpreter (though he did devote a later Floating Jazz programme entirely to the great man), but how many of Duke's most loyal men include 'Shepherd Of The Night Flock' in their programmes? It's a beautiful thing, at once moving and impressively structured. At the end of the set there's a 'Jazzspeak' interview with Mance; no blinding revelations, but confirmation that he's a thoughtful exponent of the art, and a thoroughly good bloke.

(*) Jubilation Sackville 2046 Mance (p solo). 9/96.

There haven't been too many solo records from Mance and for this one he sticks (the title-track apart) to well-seasoned standards and jazz tunes, including wonderful versions of 'St Louis Blues', 'Old Folks', 'Autumn Leaves', one well-loved Ellington, 'Single Petal Of A Rose' and one Ducal obscurity, 'Just Squeeze Me (Don't Tease Me)' which is co-credited to Will Gaines. The piano sounds a good one, warm and case-hardened and Junior is in great form throughout. Cause for jubilation among his fans.

 Floating Jazz Festival Trio Chiaruscuro 340 Mance; Benny Golson (ts); Keter Betts (b); Jackie Williams (d). 95.

(*) Live At The 1996 Floating Jazz Festival: The Music Of Duke Ellington Chiaroscuro 352 As above, except omit Golson; add Joe Temperley (bs). 96.

 The Floating Jazz Festival Trio Chiaroscuro 359 As above, except omit Temperley; add Red Holloway (ts), Henry Johnson (g). 98.

 Mance Chiaroscuro 0363 As above, except add Arturo Sandoval (t); Lou Donaldson (as); Etta Jones (v). 11/98.

Very much in the 'nice work if you can get it' mould, these annual appearances on a Caribbean jazz cruise have been central to Junior's gig diary for a while now and they always yield up joyous, entertaining jazz. Inevitably, it's the guest performers who provide much of the leaven. Golson's presence on his own 'Blues Alley' is a major plus on the first set, but it's Joe Temperley's reincarnation as Harry Carney that makes the 1996 cruise such a delight. Here the tunes stretch out generously, allowing Junior to do his familiar overhaul of the entire composition and giving plenty of solo space to the rest of the group. Temperamentally, the third volume is probably the most representative of Junior's style and the kind of company he likes. Johnson and Holloway are less celebrated names, but the tenorman has the blue-toned wail that suits Mance's playing to a 't', and the terser, more melodic tunes will suit those who don't go the whole bundle on the pianist's usual full-on approach.

In the early winter of 1998 (and what better way to escape northern fogs?) Mance and the trio were joined by Arturo Sandoval and the veteran soul-jazz master Lou Donaldson for what turns out to be a lively and unexpectedly boppish date. The horns are prominently featured on Bird's 'Now's The Time' and 'Confirmation', while the late Etta Jones brings her pure/impure tones to 'I Got A New Daddy' (which leaves no doubt as to what kind of daddy) and 'Falling In Love With Love'. Another great set from the SS Norway.

(*) Plays Monk Chiaroscuro 370 Mance; Joe Temperley (ss, bs, bcl); Keter Betts, Peter Washington (b); Mickey Roker, Jackie Williams (d). 96, 11/00.

The Floating Jazz cruises have subsequently moved to the Queen Elizabeth II and in 2000 Mance and Joe Temperley presented an all-Monk programme to passengers and fans. It's a strong set, probably the most challenging of the series. Temperley is a revelation on bass clarinet (the opening 'Blue Monk') and on soprano saxophone ('Straight, No Chaser') and the identity of the soloist would fox most blindfold listeners in both cases, though there are some distinctive low-toned phrases on the former tune that might give it away. The baritone is still the main horn and Joe is as fluid and graceful as ever with it. He drops out to allow Junior and the new rhythm section to take 'Ask Me Now' on their own, and there's a nice reminder of the old band with an out-take from the 1996 cruise: 'Hackensack' taken at respectable speed and with some distinctively Monkian flourishes from the pianist.

 Blues, Ballads And 'A' Train /  On The Road Trio Records 101 / 102 Mance; Andrew Cleyndert (b); Steve Brown (d). 11/00; 2/02.

Junior Mance brings civilization to the north of England, and some much-needed funk to the douce burghers of the south-west. On The Road was recorded in Wakefield, Sheffield and Cheltenham. The sidemen aren't of the standard the pianist normally expects, but he breezes through some occasionally sticky rhythms and turns in two thoroughly enjoyable piano sets which cover exactly the ground implied in the first title. Not in the front rank of Mance records, but most enjoyable.

Also, in brief:

 Sweet And Lovely Prestige PRCD. 10/60, 8/61.

Brings together The Soulful Piano and Big Chief. Interesting pairing.

 That Lovin' Feeling Milestone 47097. 61/62, 9/73.

The trios again toy with pop repertoire, but this time Junior seems much more interested in their jazz potential. Some orchestra tracks, conducted by Melba Liston.

 Harlem Lullaby / I Believe To My Soul Collectables 6606. 9–11/66.

The harpsichord tracks on HL are among the weakest in his entire output. Some nice gospelly arrangements on the other.

 With A Lotta Help From My Friends Collectables 6166. 3/70.

Junior kicks off with Sly Stone's 'Thank You (Falettinme Be Mice Elf Agin)' and takes in Curtis Mayfield and David Clayton-Thomas. Billy Cobham stars.

 Milestones Sackville SACD2-3065. N.D.

A typically rhythmic and well-paced trio set of standard and repertory tunes.

Augusto Mancinelli

GUITAR

Italian guitarist who takes a highly individual line between different improvising disciplines.

(*) Extreme Splasc(h) H 303-2 Mancinelli; Roberto Rossi (tb, shells); Valerio Signetto (cl); Pietro Tonolo (ts); Mario Arcari (ob); Giulio Visibelli (f); Piero Leveratto (b); Tony Oxley (d). 10/88–3/90.

A fascinating set which will appeal to anyone interested in improvisation. Mancinelli includes three very precise and hair-fine compositions, 'Poiesis' consisting of 23 sounds and a dodecaphonic series, written for oboe, flute and clarinet and designed to go with a display of electronic art. The other 29 tracks are all free improvisations, some lasting less than a minute, none more than five. Some are guitar solos – Mancinelli uses everything from wide, Frisell-like sweeps to hectic fingerpicking and strangled-tone twangs – while others involve Oxley, Leveratto, Rossi and Arcari (but not Tonolo or Signetto) in various combinations. As fragmented as it all is, the even dynamic of the music binds the various pieces together, and several of the improvisations sound so whole and finished that they might as well be compositions in any case.

(*) Jazz Work Splasc(h) 494-2 Mancinelli; Paolo Ghetti (b); Massimo Manzi (d). 12/95–6/96.

On the face of it this is a more prosaic set and, with bebop set-pieces like 'Cherokee' and 'All The Things You Are' in the programme, one could be forgiven for thinking Mancinelli has soft-pedalled this one. Yet he gets more inventive and original improvising out of a classic open-tone electric than most players do with a battery of effects, and the title – Jazz Work – suggests that this is his dissertation on modern history and how it works for him. The four standards (plus Monk's 'Evidence') are all handsomely delivered, but it's his originals that hang in the mind: 'Sassi Neri', 'When Love Is Over' and 'Aria' seem like rare blends of jazz exercise and Italian song-form. There are six solo 'Interludio' pieces interspersed throughout, and the guitarist saves some of his most startling work for these miniatures. Ghetti and Manzi are relatively workmanlike in support, and it would be fascinating to hear what Mancinelli can do with a 'heavyweight' rhythm section.

Joe Maneri (born 1927)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, PIANO

Maneri was 'discovered' only rather late in his career. He was born in New York City and he played clarinet with an eclectic procession of bands. After the war, he began studying twelve-tone music and to experiment with microtones. He was appointed to the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music and published Preliminary Studies In The Virtual Pitch Continuum.

 Paniots Nine Avant AVAN 067 Maneri; Don Burns (p); John Beal (b); Pete Dolger (d). 63.

These early demos, roughly recorded and unvarnished as they are, confirm to what extent Maneri is the natural ancestor of offbeat syncretists like John Zorn and klezmer fiend Don Byron. The album mixes free-jazz material with Levantine grooves. 'Shift Your Tail' is influenced by the syrto, a Greek dance Maneri must have played hundreds of times in wedding bands; 'Jewish Fantasy – At The Wedding' comes out of the same experience, an inauthentic but convincing blend of klezmer rhythms. 'After Myself' by the kalamentiano is in 7/8, which is broadly typical of the rhythms he favours. The title-piece is a Dolger composition, this time in 9/8 and already featuring the microtonal language that was to be a trademark in later years. Maneri's clarinet-playing blows just about everything else out of the water. He has a huge tone, at the opposite end of the instrumental galaxy from fellow-Bostonian Jimmy Giuffre. It's fierce, angular, often shawm-like in its drift between pitches. None of the other players registers with anything like the same intensity, but the playing is generally very good, with Dolger an important presence.

* Get Ready To Receive Yourself / (*) Let The Horse Go Leo Lab CD 010 / 232 Maneri; Mat Maneri (vn); John Lockwood (b); Randy Peterson (d). 93; 6/95.

Maneri's coming-out as a bona fide star was at the 1992 Montreal Jazz Festival, where he appeared alongside Paul Bley, an old associate from New York days. The buzz was immediate, and Ornette Coleman's name was dropped more than once by way of comparison. Ornette's eldritch, 'off-pitch' sound is certainly the closest parallel, but Maneri works very much further from the blues. In combination with son Mat Maneri's squalling fiddle and bassist John Lockwood, it generates a sound that is utterly unique and distinctive, and dismayingly hard to categorize. 'Let The Horse Go' on the second of the two Leo Lab releases opens up more questions about jazz harmony in its near quarter of an hour span than anyone has since the early days of Cecil Taylor. The language is not so much atonal as polytonal. Almost anything might resolve; almost nothing does. It's hard, even at this distance, to recapture the sheer alienating wallop of the earlier record. 'Anton' is presumably a nod in the direction of Herr von Webern, but it's items like 'Skippin' Thru The Turnips', 'Evolve' and the title-track that signal something radically new, teeing up a truly outrageous cover of 'Body And Soul' which blows every saxophone solo cliché off the face of the earth. Inevitably the second album isn't quite so shocking. It's a consolidation rather than a radical departure.

 Tenderly hatOLOGY 501 / 525 Maneri; Mat Maneri (vn); Ed Schuller (b); Randy Peterson (d). 10/93; 99.

Tenderly is patchy, dotted with 'Vignettes' and 'Short Pieces' which seem rather inconsequential on subsequent hearings. The title-track, by contrast, is fantastic, but tucked away right at the end, by which time we suspect some listeners might have struck camp and moved on.

* Three Men Walking ECM 531023-2 Maneri; Joe Morris (g); Mat Maneri (vn). 10-11/95.

As with Hal Russell, Maneri's belated apotheosis was signalled by a call from ECM. It was apparently Paul Bley, that tireless and selfless talent scout, who put the label in touch. The cathedral acoustic is all wrong, but Maneri sounds wonderful in this context. Excellent as Randy Peterson and John Lockwood were in the quartet setting, this is an exceptional line-up. The album title comes from a Giacometti sculpture of three attenuated figures, insecurely attached to the ground and heading off in different directions, yet for the moment bound to the same patch of earth. It's a lovely visual echo of music that is both airy and earthy, solid and insubstantial, jazz and something else. As with other ECM sessions of this vintage, the group breaks down into its constituents. Joe opens on unaccompanied clarinet, a sound harder and darker than Giuffre's, though superficially similar. The group improvisations, 'Bird's [sic] In The Belfry', 'Three Men Walking' and 'Arc And Point', are exceptional, but the features for Mat and Joe are equally impressive, underlining the different idioms and responses at work in this material. While Mat seems resolutely committed to his father's idiom, often using the lower end of his six-string electric violin as the bass and percussion voice, Morris often sounds detached and even remote – but companionably so, the most errant of those three bronze men. The one standard in the book at this point, 'What's New', was a revelation in performance and is again here, richly rethought and brightly played. 'For Josef Schmid' is a little bouquet to the man who taught Joe the 'Schoenberg method'.

(*) In Full Cry ECM 537048-2 Maneri; Mat Maneri (vn); John Lockwood (b); Randy Peterson (d). 6/96.

Good to hear the Maneri Quartet together again, but now that the first shock has passed, does this music still sound as startling as it once did? Does Ornette's? Does Cecil Taylor's? The answer ought to be 'yes' in all three cases. It's a function of music as wholeheartedly cross-grained as this that it will never enter a comfortable mainstream. The opening string sounds and the first entrance of Joe's tenor on 'Coarser And Finer' are enough to convince anyone that the old fellow is still the wildest player on the block, for all his professorial hats. As before, Joe's included some standard material: a long, haunted reading of 'Tenderly', 'Prelude To a Kiss' to close the set and two spirituals, 'Nobody Knows' and 'Motherless Child', which bring out the folkier side of his playing. He's never stuck closer to melody than on this album, but the estranging microtones are still in evidence from start to finish.

 Blessed ECM 557365-2 Maneri; Mat Maneri (vn, baritone vn, vla). 10/97.

The immanence of blessing doesn't always keep at bay the imminence of boredom – or, perhaps fairer, a sense of exclusion. This is an intensely private dialogue between father and son, and only occasionally does the listener find much real purchase. Joe's piano work on the traditional 'Never Said A Mumblin' Word' and on the beautiful closing title-track are the high points, reinforcing the suspicion that this was really a set to showcase Mat, with the old man acting as accompanist and household god. Mat's string-playing on a deconstructed 'Body And Soul' is tremendous and this is perhaps the first time on record that he has put his full range of fiddles to such coherent and sheerly musical use. No sign that he is merely switching axes for the sake of change. The long 'Is Nothing Near?' is a key Maneris' performance, tense, but throbbing with some promised revelation, though again very private in idiom. Not a record for a newcomer.

 Tales of Rohnlief /  Angles Of Repose ECM 559858-2 / 000262002 Maneri; Mat Maneri (vn); Barre Phillips (b). 98; 5/02.

Punctuated with odd vocal performances and with Monkish outbreaks on the piano, notably on 'When The Ship Went Down', the first is essentially a Maneri-and-strings session. Mat and Barre spend a good deal of time adding complex, squiggly accompaniments to Joe's increasingly elegant – or are we just getting used to them? – dances between the piano tones. The long title-track is an unvarnished delight. The follow-up album is more varied, with a solo spot and sax/bass duet, but it's hard to get involved.

* The Trio Concerts Leo 307/308 2CD Maneri; Mat Maneri (vn, baritone vn, vla, g); Randy Peterson (d). 10/97–11/98.

This is astonishingly good contemporary improvisation, delivered with freshness, a good deal of thought and considerable elegance. The Maneris' playing has got prettier over time and, though the sound-world here is still pretty rugged – especially on things like 'Balance & Pulse', the long opening track – the overall effect is a good deal less alienating than one might expect. Peterson is instinctively responsive to the demands of this music. His metre is wonderfully elastic and he is able to change the dynamic of his kit within a phrase or two. Mat has the most varied palette, given his range of instruments, but his father switches over to piano on the second CD, sounding a little like some of Anthony Braxton's keyboard forays. For anyone who hasn't experienced the Maneris' music, this is a very good place to start.

* Going To Church Aum Fidelity 24 Maneri; Roy Campbell (t); Mat Maneri (vla); Matthew Shipp (p); Barre Phillips (b); Randy Peterson (d). 02.

A new line-up for the Maneri ensemble. Phillips is an even more distinguished performer than Ed Schuller and his authority is immediately evident on these three long improvisations (the middle 'Before The Sermon' is less than a third of the length of the powerful opening 'Blood And Body', which is one of the most intense things the Maneris have recorded to date). Campbell is another key recruitment, sounding like a cross between Leo Smith and the late Lester Bowie. The exact religious resonance of these pieces isn't immediately obvious, but this could be Joe's A Love Supreme, except that his faith isn't just a matter of acknowledgement, resolution and pursuance, but of conflict and doubt as well. An album that should be a priority for everyone interested in the direction of modern jazz.

Mat Maneri (born 1969)

VIOLIN, VIOLA

The son of Joe Maneri, he is a distinctive and adventurous player on his own account with a sound that synthesizes the untutored genius of Ornette Coleman with the relentless swing of Stuff Smith.

 In Time Leo Lab CD 002 Maneri; Pandelis Karayorgis (p). 4/93.

(*) Fever Bed Leo Lab CD 022 Maneri; Ed Schuller (b); Randy Peterson (d). 12/94, 1/96.

Mat began working in his father's quartet at the age of 14 and has remained refreshingly loyal to the old man's concept ever since. Unlike Denardo Coleman, who also helps negotiate sometimes difficult transactions between paternal genius and an uncomprehending outside world, Mat has a very distinctive approach of his own. The knowledge that he has taken lessons with both Miroslav Vitous and Dave Holland will help point listeners to the number of times he is cast as a bass-line player in the Joe Maneri Quartet. On these two albums he is freer to shape his own abstractly romantic lines.

The group with Peterson and Schuller has a remote, slightly eerie quality. Lacking a horn or piano, the music is very difficult to pin down. 'Fever Bed' itself is restlessly dissonant, tossing and turning, finding no place of rest either harmonically or rhythmically. Peterson provides what little chordal information is made explicit and, though throughout the whole 11 minutes he seems constantly on the brink of breaking out into a climactic, convulsive statement, it is kept at bay, remaining tantalizingly unarticulated. After such an arresting opening, the remainder is less compelling. The long 'Iris' is more personal and expressive, and internal evidence suggests that 'Almost Pretty' is an oblique reference to Monk's 'Ugly Beauty', which features on the duo album with Karayorgis. Interesting that while the old man name-checks Webern on one of his albums, Mat's final word is for Gustav Mahler.

Apparently proposed by Paul Bley, who has a significant role in the Maneris' story, In Time is delicately beautiful and thoughtful, almost like a classical duo in timbre and dynamics, but dealing with a language that is far from classical. There are actually two versions of 'Ugly Beauty', framing a set of originals by both men. Karayorgis's 'Speaking' and 'Part III Of A Name', and Mat's 'Blue Seven' are exceptional.

(*) Fifty One Sorrows Leo CD LR 278 Maneri; Ed Schuller (b); Randy Peterson (d). 97.

The title-track is a set of meditations and variations on a poem by the violinist's wife Christine Coppola Maneri. It sets a certain agenda for the album, which can be summed up as a search for the moment of joy that exists in the heart of sadness, which in this context is taken to be the blues, but blues in the manner of Ornette Coleman. Mat plays his baritone violin throughout, and in his usual restrained microtonal style, which means it often sounds as if it were fitted with sympathetic drone strings, like a hardfele. It's a rich and beautiful noise and Schuller's string bass is the perfect accompaniment. This is a trio bound together by mutual liking and a great deal of common spirit, but there's also a striving character to the music that comes out best on Ornette's 'Tone Dialling', given here in two intriguingly different versions.

* So What? hatOLOGY 529 Maneri; Mathew Shipp (p); Randy Peterson (d). 8/98.

As the title suggests, this is something of a homage to Miles Davis. There are four Miles compositions and five by Mat, sequenced in such a way as to suggest he has attempted to stretch the trumpeter's modal ideas into the 21st century. It's quite possible, listening to 'Solar' and 'No Blues', to imagine Maneri slipping into place in a never actually convened Miles group. Interestingly, the intuitive understanding between Shipp and Peterson is such that Maneri has to tread carefully to avoid breaking the spell. The result is a beautifully balanced trio performance, with no dominant personality.

(*) Blue Decco Thirsty Ear THCD 57092 Maneri; Craig Taborn (p); William Parker (b); Gerald Cleaver(d). 6/00.

This is a wonderful modern-jazz group. Any line-up that features the talented Parker is bound to offer something special, and this group is no exception. Four of the compositions are by Maneri himself, and he calls on his full range of sonorities on six-string electric violin, five-string viola and baritone violin. The sound is more carefully modulated here than on other sets, more responsive to the dynamics of the group; but it is an undoubtedly powerful voice and Maneri utilizes it to the maximum. Another fine and impressive recording.

* Sustain Thirsty Ear THCD 57122 Maneri; Joe McPhee (ss); Craig Taborn (p, ky); William Parker (b); Gerald Cleaver (d). 7/01.

If you wanted to pick just one record to give a complete tyro some insight into where jazz was heading at the start of a new century and/or millennium, this would be a strong contender. The group is a near-perfect match for Maneri's distinctive approach and McPhee, who restricts himself to soprano saxophone on this occasion, rather than his usual multi-instrumentalism, is in towering form. Five of the nine tracks are headed 'Alone', with 'Origin', 'Construct', 'Unravel', 'Cleanse' and 'Mourn' as subtitles. Interspersed are generally longer and more obviously composed pieces, of which 'Nerve' and the title track are the most substantial. Taborn's huge palette of sounds and McPhee's seemingly endless harmonic resource are woven into Maneri's now familiar viola-playing. The result is beguiling, fiercely intelligent and possibly the most coherent and impressive statement from the string man to date.

* For Consequence Leo LRCD 360 Maneri; Ed Schuller (b); Randy Peterson (d). 5/01.

The best of the three trio albums on Leo and one of the best records of its year. The label describes the sequence as a 'trilogy', which implies more of a connection than we can discern. Each is robustly free-standing and For Consequence is a culminating success in Maneri's output, a richly textured and constantly evolving record that bears many, many listens. Maneri's parallel blues have never seemed more plangent and never more in search of some point of transcendence. His solos on 'Goodbye' and 'Abundance' are full of soul, and conspicuously in the line of John Coltrane's spiritual explorations via harmony. Using double-stops and other effects, he creates a bleakly evocative world that always seems poised just before the dawn. Essential.

* Pentagon Thirsty Ear THCD 577163 Maneri; Ben Gerstein (tb); Joe Maneri (p, as, v); Craig Taborn (p, laptop); Jamie Saft (mellotron); John Herbert (b); John McLellan, Rom Rainey (d); T. K. Ramakrishnan (mridangam); Sonia Maneri (v). 04.

It does sound as if this furious record – with its closing section entitled 'Pentagon', 'The War Room' and 'America' – is some kind of response to the conflict in Iraq, or perhaps more generally to the tightening hold of the military-industrial complex. It's certainly unsettling music, reminiscent of some of Miles's more extreme statements, and though there are moments of uplift, even laughter, as when Joe yuks at the end of his bizarre scat on the title-piece, its mood is chastened. The unusual instrumentation, with Saft making use of a now unfashionable bit of kit, is perfect for this music. 'Witches Woo' is a throwback to earlier Maneri records while 'Ava', which opens the set, is delightfully romantic. Maneri goes from strength to strength.

Also, in brief:

(*) Trinity ECM 543444. 7/99.

An astonishing solo performance, richly textured and deftly executed, and full of the funky simplicity of early jazz.

 Light Trigger No More 9. 00.

Mat and Randy Peterson (d) have considerable mileage together. This loosely confederated suite is very different from the closely detailed, microtonal language of his father's groups.

Albert Mangelsdorff (1928–2005)

TROMBONE

Acquired an enthusiasm for jazz from his saxophonist brother Emil and on the wartime underground scene in Frankfurt. Post-war, he became a pioneer of modern German jazz. His distinctive style merges old-fashioned blowing with multiphonics and other extended techniques.

* Triplicity Skip SKP 9052 Mangelsdorff; Arild Andersen (b); Pierre Favre (d). 4/79.

(*) Live At Montreux Challenge 71009 Mangelsdorff; Reto Weber Percussion Orchestra. 7/94.

(*) Shake, Shuttle And Blow Enja ENJ 9374 Mangelsdorff; Bruno Spoerri (ss, as, elec); Christy Doran (g); Reto Weber (d, perc). 1/99.

There is shamefully little of Mangelsdorff's work available. Fine sets like Tromboneliness and Purity are currently out of catalogue. The earliest of these appeared only posthumously. It's in a mixture of styles, from the free-jazz blow-out of 'Warbling Warbler' to the funky swing of 'Green Shading Into Blue'. 'Subconscious Skylark' brings up the temperature again and 'Brief Impressions Of Brighton' offers a glimpse of Albert's multiphonic approach. Andersen is a solidly inventive collaborator and Favre plays with brio.

The Montreux date is interesting in that trombone is the only non-percussion instrument, which gives a unique cast to the sound. It isn't always clear what direction the music is taking, but the results are ultimately most satisfying.

The most recent ensemble, Movin' On, began as far back as 1990, originally with cellist Ernst Reijseger in the line-up. He was replaced by the resourceful Doran. Himself is a one-man orchestra but he just about meets his match in Bruno Spoerri. The saxophonist is a crafty user of electronics, working in the same multiphonic territory Mangelsdorff has made his own. This is the old master's most joyous and unfettered record for many years. 'Do You Like Pastrami?' and 'Bolghatty Dreams' get the disc off to a cracking start and, if the rest doesn't quite match up to the beginning, 'Saxobonia' is a hysterical, hilarious subversion of bop orthodoxy, a piece of satire that is more musical than the forms it tries to knock down. The sheer ease and delight of Mangelsdorff's playing are wonderful.

Chuck Mangione (born 1940)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Co-led The Jazz Brothers with brother Gap, then joined the Jazz Messengers in 1965. Began playing a kind of easy-listening jazz in the '70s and scored several big-hit albums and singles. Much less active in the '80s and '90s.

(*) The Jazz Brothers Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 997 Mangione; Larry Combs (as); Sal Nistico (ts); Gap Mangione (p); Bill Saunders (b); Roy McCurdy (d). 8/60.

 Hey Baby! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 668 Mangione; Sal Nistico (ts); Gap Mangione (p); Steve Davis (b); Roy McCurdy (d). 3/61.

 Spring Fever Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 767 As above, except Frank Pullara (b), Vinnie Ruggieri (d) replace Davis and McCurdy. 11/61.

(*) Recuerdo Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 495 Mangione; Joe Romano (ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Sam Jones (b); Louis Hayes (d). 7/62.

Mangione worked his way out of small-time hard bop to big-band section-playing before settling for easy-listening jazz with a series of hugely successful albums in the '70s (Feels So Good sold in the millions). None of this later music is worth listing here, although it's no more offensive than a typical lite-fusion date of today; life's too short, though, to bother with even the compilation, Finest Hour (Verve 490670-2). Back at the beginning are some serviceable (and sometimes excitable) sessions for Riverside, now in the racks as OJC reissues. The three albums with brother Gap offer a genial reworking of some of the boppish trends of the day, but in each case the album is stolen from under the brothers' noses by Sal Nistico, whose tenor tear-ups are just the kind of thing he would do with Woody Herman on some of the best of Herman's '60s dates. The debut, The Jazz Brothers, sounds very green, and Larry Combs is no bonus. A similar situation occurs on the pick-up date, Recuerdo, where Joe Romano's irascible solos undercut Mangione's efforts at fronting the action. The leader has a rather thin tone on trumpet, which hints at why he later switched to flugelhorn as his sole instrument; but his best solos are bright enough. A 1998 comeback, The Feeling's Back (Chesky JD 184), was a feeble disgrace.

Herbie Mann (1930–2003)

FLUTE, ALTO FLUTE, PICCOLO SAXOPHONE, BASS CLARINET

Non-stop touring honed his style and opened him to a huge range of influences, from bop and bossa nova to rock and Japanese classical music. His light skipping attack is matched by an unfailing rhythmic sureness.

 Flute Flight /  Flute Soufflé /  Yardbird Suite Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1084 / 760 / Savoy 193 Mann; Phil Woods (as on Yardbird Suite only); Bobby Jaspar (f); Tommy Flanagan (p on Flight and Soufflé only); Joe Puma (g); Eddie Costa (vib on Flight only); Wendell Marshall (b), Doug Watkins (b on Flight only); Bobby Donaldson (d). 3/57; 3/57; 5/57.

 Great Ideas Of Western Mann Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1065 Mann; Jack Sheldon (t, flhn); Jimmy Rowles (p); Buddy Clark (b); Mel Lewis (d). 7/57.

(*) Just Wailin' Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 900 Mann; Charlie Rouse (ts); Kenny Burrell (g); Mal Waldron (p); George Joyner (b); Art Taylor (d). 2/58.

Mann's concentration slowly evolved a powerful and adaptable technique which gave him access to virtually every mood, breathy and ethereal, smooth and semi-vocalized (and reminiscent of his first instrument, clarinet), to a tough, metallic ring ideal for funk.

The first of these is actually shared with Jaspar, and the two play together only twice at the beginning of a short record, but 'Tuttie Flutie' is a substantial statement and the Belgian's tracks are excellent. Puma and Watkins contribute to the writing and, brief though it is, the set makes a substantial contribution to the evolution of jazz flute. Flute Soufflé dispenses with vibes, which is a pity: it works fine with the flute. Flanagan does a similar job on the early disc, moving out into pentatonic scales on 'Tel Aviv', pattering through 'Let's March' and controlling the tempo on 'Chasing The Bird', obliging his colleagues to bring the beat back a notch in the last chorus.

Two months later, the vibes were reinstalled in place of piano to deliver a smooth bop date of real class, though the overall sound lacks clout. The Parker tune and Puma's 'One For Tubby' are both excellent.

Great Ideas claims a small place in jazz history as the first record with bass clarinet as lead horn throughout. Herbie leaves his flute aside for this one, which unusually for Riverside was recorded in California. The big horn has a rich, nimble sound in Mann's hands and there's no sign that the pace has slackened. As so often, Lewis is a revelation. Miles's 'The Theme' and Dameron's 'Lady Bird' are the familiar melodies, both done absolutely à la mode, despite the unusual sonority.

Just Wailin' is Mann at his best. The rhythm section and the choice of front-line partners gave him exactly the balance between rhythmic toughness and melodic delicacy that he needed, enough instrumental chiaroscuro and a bag of blowing tunes ('Minor Groove', 'Jumpin' With Symphony Sid', 'Gospel Truth' among them) to stave off any risk of pale whimsy. Arthur Taylor is the key man on this session, throwing out ringing accents and dark bass-figures, pattering away at the melody and conjuring up a whole chain of islands on the lovely 'Trinidad'.

(*) Sultry Serenade Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 927 Mann; Urbie Green (tb); Jack Nimitz (bs, bcl); Joe Puma (g); Oscar Pettiford (b); Charlie Smith (d). 4/57.

 Flute Fraternity VSOP 38 Mann; Buddy Collette (as, ts, cl, f, afl); Jimmy Rowles (p, cel); Buddy Clark (b); Mel Lewis (d). 7/57.

Sultry Serenade is a delicately modulated and totally jazz-centred set which makes use of attractive and unfamiliar sonorities and sees Mann switch to bass clarinet on 'Lazy Bones', one of two Hoagy Carmichael tunes in the programme. Nimitz and Puma are both in revelatory form: the guitarist terse and sharp, while the saxophonist reveals a depth of expression out of all proportion to his slight reputation.

Flute Fraternity pitched Mann up against the veteran multi-instrumentalist Collette. Endlessly varied in tonality and timbre, it's also a low-key and undramatic set which will appeal mainly to those who like their jazz cool and abstract. There are a couple of good things by Rowles on the set, but too much of it is devoted to showing off the number of possible instrumental permutations.

 The Common Ground Collectables COL 6527 Mann; Doc Cheatham, Leo Ball, Jerry Schatz, Ziggy Hale (t); Johnny Rae (vib, mar); Knobby Totah (b, perc); Rudy Collins (d); Ray Barreto, Ray Mantilla (perc). 8/60.

For all his commercial ambitions, Mann never ceased to experiment. This Atlantic set added four trumpets to his Afro-Cuban sextet. The results are predictably variable, but one can hear him working different permutations and apparently changing instrumental positions within the studio, one of the characteristics which then and later made him such a formidable producer for others.

 Monday Night At The Village Gate Wounded Bird 1462 Mann; John Hitchcock, Mark Weinstein (tb); Chick Corea(p); Earl May (b); Dave Pike (vib); Bruno Carr (d); Carlos 'Patato' Valdes (perc). 5/61.

(*) At The Village Gate /  Returns To The Village Gate Atlantic 7567 81350 / Wounded Bird 1407 Mann; Hagood Hardy (vib); Ahmed Abdul-Malik (b); Rudy Collins (d); Chief Bey, Ray Mantilla (perc). 11/61; 4 & 11/61.

 Nirvana Koch 51400 Mann; Bill Evans (p); Chuck Israels (b); Paul Motian (d). 12/61, 5/62.

 Live At Newport Wounded Bird 1413 Mann; Don Friedman (p); Dave Pike (vib); Attila Zoller (g); Ben Tucker (b); Bobby Thomas(d); Willie Bobo (perc). 63.

 Standing Ovation At Newport Wounded Bird 1455 Mann; John Hitchcock (tb); Dave Pike (vib); Chick Corea (p); Earl May Ben Tucker (b); Bruno Carr (d); Carlos 'Patato' Valdes (perc). 65.

 Memphis Underground Atlantic 7567 81364 Mann; Roy Ayers (vib, perc); Bobby Emmons (org); Larry Coryell, Sonny Sharrock, Reggie Young (g); Bobby Wood (p, electric p); Tommy Coghill, Mike Leach, Miroslav Vitous (b); Gene Christman (d). 68.

Collectables and others have done something to restore the Atlantic catalogue. Memphis Underground, though, remains a hardy perennial. The recording quality would now scarcely pass muster, but the music survives unexpectedly well. The interplay of three guitarists, notably the Cain and Abel opposition of Sonny Sharrock and Larry Coryell, gives it a distinctive flavour; the addition of Roy Ayers's vibes and Bobby Emmons's organ gives the background a seething quality that adds depth to Mann's slightly unemotional virtuosity. The presence of one-time Vitous on a single track, the excellent 'Hold On, I'm Comin'', will also attract notice. Head and shoulders with Lloyd above most of the crossover experimenters of the time, Mann deserves to be heard, and it's a pity there isn't more around. The live performances are much more what we've come to expect of the flautist and, all prejudice aside, they're jolly good. His reading of 'Summertime' echoes some of Coltrane's trills and grace notes, and there are some telling moments on 'It Ain't Necessarily So'.

The Village Gate set overlaps with Returns to some degree, which is slightly puzzling, but the later set also includes tracks recorded several months earlier and includes some of the same sessions as released on Monday Night At The Village Gate. It's still a good, strong set, but hardly as significant as the original release. Monday is interesting for the insight it offers into the young Chick Corea's playing at the time. He fits into Oliver Nelson's arrangements with effortless ease and plays some intriguing breaks and figures that are already distinctively his own. For the most part, though, it's very much the leader's record. The set with the Bill Evans Trio – still recovering from the recent death of Scott LaFaro – documents an unexpected association, but Herbie's original material, 'Nirvana' and 'Cashmere', sits very well indeed for the pianist, who lays off some highly elegant solos. A tiny 'Gymnopédie' shows how legitimate a sound Herbie's flute could have when called upon. On the 1963 Newport set, Herbie tackles a couple of Jobim themes but plays them almost as if they were regular pop songs, which makes 'Desafinado' in particular sound very unfamiliar. Herbie also manages to anticipate the hit vocal version of 'The Girl From Ipanema' by a couple of seasons, a further sign of how ahead of the game he was in those years. The later Newport sets aren't quite as compelling or original, but they are still quality performances, especially the long curtain-piece, 'Comin' Home Baby', and an interpretation of Oliver Nelson's 'Stolen Moments', while Wayne Henderson's 'Scratch' stands out strongly on the later disc.

 Live At Whiskey A Go Go / Mississippi Gambler Collectables COL 83403 Mann; Steve Marcus (ss); David 'Fathead' Newman (ts); Roy Ayers (vib); Sonny Sharrock (g); Miroslav Vitous (b); Bruno Carr (d); Carlos Patato Valdes (perc); Memphis session players. 68, 71.

The Whiskey date was notoriously skimpy, less than half an hour of music. The line-up is fascinating, though, and it makes a reasonably decent set, when paired with the professional job the guys make of Mississippi Gambler.

 Caminho De Casa Chesky JD 40 Mann; Eduardo Simon, Mark Soskin (p); Romero LuBambo (g); Paul Socolow (b); Ricky Sebastian (d); Cafe (perc). 3/90.

Mann calls his bossa-influenced band Jasil Brazz; fortunately the synthesis is slightly more elegant than the nomenclature. Like Gato Barbieri's 'Chapters', this is pan-American music with a vigorous improvisational component, not just a collection of exotic 'stylings'. Lobambo is particularly impressive, but it's the drummer who keeps the music rooted in jazz tradition, leaving most of the colour work to percussionist Café. Mann himself is in fine voice, particularly on the beautifully toned alto flute. Only one of the nine tracks – the rather weak 'Yesterday's Kisses' – is credited to him; the rest are substantial enough. Recommended.

 Peace Pieces Lightyear 54193 Mann; Randy Brecker (flhn); Bruce Dunlap (g); Paul Socolow (b); Lewis Nash, Ricky Sebastian (d); Sammy Figueroa (perc). 3/95.

Mann had something of a purple patch in 1995, recording this entirely jazz-based record and then going to mark a significant birthday with a residency that was also a career retrospective (see below). This record, which explores the compositions of Bill Evans, is something of a backward glance as well. Mann had recorded with the pianist in 1961. Working without piano, though with additional solos from Randy Brecker and with some elements of overdubbing (very much an Evans device), Mann sounds as if he's turned back the clock and traced a path he moved off with his switch to Latin fusion in the '60s. The themes will be familiar to Evans admirers, though it's the relatively little-known 'Peri's Scope' and 'Interplay' which immediately catch the ear, rather than the more evenly trod 'Waltz For Debbie' and 'Blue In Green'. Mann's ability to play complex figures and sustain difficult harmonics will surprise those who know only his mid-period work.

(*) Celebration /  America/Brasil Lightyear 54185 / 54233 Mann; Randy Brecker, Claudio Roditi, Terell Stafford (t); Jim Pugh (tb); Paquito D'Rivera, Bobby Watson (as); David 'Fathead' Newman (ts); Dave Valentin (f); David Leonhardt, Edward Simon, Mark Soskin (p); Bruce Dunlap, Romero Lubambo, Lou Volpe (g); Sergio Brandão, Ron Carter, Eddie Gomez, Frank Gravis, Larry Grenadier, Nilson Matta (b); Adam Cruz, Duduku da Fonseca, Winard Harper, Victor Lewis, Ricky Sebastian, Buddy Williams (d); Cyro Baptista, Café, Milton Cardona, Ray Mantilla, Tito Puente (perc). 4/95.

Mann turned 65 and celebrated with a residency at the Blue Note, a week that seemed to revivify his career and sharpen up his appetite for playing. The intention clearly was to take in as much of his career as humanly possible, touching on hits like 'Memphis Underground' along the way. With that in mind, the personnel was highly adaptable, there were a number of rhythm permutations on offer, and the guest spots were judiciously placed so as to complement the leader rather than steal his thunder. Mann's origins in bebop are acknowledged in a very good version of 'Au Privave', and his even deeper roots in jump and swing in a very good interpretation of 'Jeep's Blues', in the arrangement of which Bobby Watson may very well have had a hand. 'Memphis Underground' is played with wry affection and a more tailored approach than in the old days, but the really outstanding performance is 'Give And Take'. Mann obviously had the time of his life and sings on his flute.

The second album is also drawn from the same week of concerts, but the selection doesn't have the same impact. Mann is playing every bit as well, but the accompaniments seem more routine and the material, with the exception of 'All Blues' and another Lins–Martins composition, 'America/Brasil' (they also composed 'Give And Take'), is lacklustre.

 Eastern European Roots Lightyear 84488 Mann; Mihály Borbély (ss, fujara); Gil Goldstein (acc); Bruce Dunlap (g); Alexander Fedoriouk (cimbalom); Paul Socolow, Mátyás Szandai (b); Geoff Mann (d, perc, mand). 00.

After he had spent a lifetime playing bossa nova and jazz, it might seem strange to come across a Herbie Mann album with a title like this, but, as he explains, his roots are Jewish and Eastern European and it's a heritage that has started to interest him again. Geoff Mann was responsible for much of the arranging and adds percussion and other instruments. Working with Sona Terra, Mann attempts to recover some of the more life-affirming and joyous aspects of that great tradition, steering his programme away from the Holocaust-darkened tonality of most shtetl projects. Despite the occasional exotic sound, it comes across pretty much like any other Herbie Mann record, though without the obvious Latin tinge. It's clearly a very personal project and deeply felt, but set against his finest work it seems like a belated self-discovery.

 Beyond Brooklyn Manchester Craftsmen's Guild MCG 1012 Mann; Jay Ashby (tb, atb, perc); Phil Woods (as); Gil Goldstein (acc); Marty Ashby (g); Alain Mallet (p); Dwayne Dolphin, Paul Socolow (b); Roger Humphries, Ricky Sebastian (d). 02–03.

Mann was gravely ill by the time the last of these sessions was in the can, but he sounds full of fire and pep and teamed up with his old friend Phil Woods goes back to playing a contemporary version of bebop. The rhythm sections sound slightly curious, partly because both bassists choose electric instruments, but also because their position in the mix is unusual; it may be that Mann overdubbed parts to take account of his failing health. Whatever the case, it's a very decent send-off for one of the tireless innovators whose commercial success has always been an obstacle to real critical appreciation.

Also, in brief:

 Jazz Masters 56 / (*) Flautista! Verve 529901 / 557448. 8/57–7/60.
Mann's three years at Verve pushed him away from straight jazz and in the direction of the crossover artist of the '60s. The Magic Flute, Flautista! and Cuban Band opened up a new constituency and helped him rethink his playing by adding Latin jazz elements to the rhythmic mix and foregrounding the flute as a light singing voice with a soft metallic rasp rather than the saxophone-emulating sound he had become stuck with up to that point.

 The Best Of Herbie Mann Atlantic 7567 81369. 4/61–8/68.
A valuable survey of a hyperactive period.

(*) Complete Latin Band Sessions 1961–1965 Gambit 69278. 61–65.
This very usefully pulls together At The Village Gate and Standing Ovation At Newport with Latin Mann and Roar Of The Greasepaint.

(*) Stone Flute Wounded Bird 520. 70.
With string group. Very dull indeed.

() London Underground /  Reggae Wounded Bird 1648 / 1655. 12/73; 74.
The first is mostly pop tracks with a group of London rockers, though Stéphane Grappelli guests. No more than a hint of reggae on the other.

() Brazil: Once Again / Sunbelt Collectables COL 81969. 78.
A very average trawl from the Atlantic catalogue ... plus many other Collectables pairings and repackagings.

Shelly Manne (1920–84)

DRUMS

He played with everyone from Charlie Parker and Coleman Hawkins to Ornette Coleman. A New Yorker, he became definitive of the West Coast sound. For a time, he ran his own club, the Manne Hole, and bred horses.

(*) The Three And The Two Original Jazz Classics OJC 172 Manne; Shorty Rogers (t); Jimmy Giuffre (cl, ts, bs); Russ Freeman (d). 9/54.
 The West Coast Sound Original Jazz Classics OJC 152 Manne; Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Joe Maini, Art Pepper (as); Bob Cooper (ts); Jimmy Giuffre (bs); Russ Freeman, Marty Paich (p); Curtis Counce, Joe Mondragon, Ralph Pena (b). 4 & 8/53, 9/55.
Shelly combined the classic qualities of reliability and adaptable time with an ability to play melodically, often using soft dynamics. His solos could hardly have been more different from those of important predecessors like Gene Krupa, with musical sophistication replacing showmanship.

The trios with Rogers and Giuffre find the players working in parallel, not in a horns-and-rhythm hierarchy. On 'Flip', Manne plays in counterpoint with his colleagues. On 'Autumn In New York', the horns diverge almost entirely, giving the standard the same rather abstract feel that pianist Freeman brings to a notably unsentimental duo reading of 'With A Song In My Heart'. 'Three In A Row' is an experiment in serial jazz. Cool and almost disengaged it may be, but it's also compellingly inventive. The duos with Freeman have survived less well. On 'The Sound Effects Manne', Freeman plays a sharply percussive line alongside Manne's 'theme statement'. 'Billie's Bounce' is compact, bluesy and intense.

The mid-'50s saw Manne turning his back slightly on the experimentalism still evident on The West Coast Sound in favour of a more direct idiom which nevertheless incorporated quietly subversive harmonic devices and a much-enhanced role for the drummer. The material may be interesting, but there's a faintly academic dry-and-dusty quality to Giuffre's delivery in particular. 'Grasshopper' and 'Spring Is Here' make it worthwhile.

(*) Swinging Sounds /  More Swinging Sounds Original Jazz Classics OJC 267/ 320 Manne; Stu Williamson (t, vtb); Charlie Mariano (as); Russ Freeman (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b). 1–2/56; 7–8/56.
Manne was a prolific releaser of records, and there's good coverage here of a notably light and vibrant band, fronted by the underrated Williamson and the always inventive Mariano, who contributes 'Dart Game' and 'Slan', two of the most interesting pieces on an album notably free of familiar standards. Shelly plays as softly as he ever did, and with great control on the mallets.

'More' just about covers it. The later album has the kit-built feel of a hundred contemporary West Coast discs. The playing is fine, of course, and Williamson's valve trombone mixes richly with Mariano's more acid saxophone tonality to create an attractive sweet-and-sour front line on 'Quartet'. The remaining material is less distinctive. Like Rogers, Williamson isn't so much an agile and virtuosic player as a tasteful colourman with a good sense of the broader structure. Manne shows no signs of wanting to go further in the direction of polyrhythms, but when he calls the shots, the shots are by no means routine.

() Shelly Manne And His Friends Volume 1 / () My Fair Lady / (*) My Fair Lady / West Side Story Original Jazz Classics OJC 240 / OJC 336 / Contemporary CDCOPCD 942 Manne; André Previn (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b). 2/56; 8/56; 8/56.
The first of the Contemporarys to be reissued establishes firmly what a fine trio this was. Previn's West Side Story covers are reissued as a twofer with Manne's My Fair Lady. It has taken on a life of its own. The bonus of the Previn tracks could outweigh the slightly less vivid sound on the double-set. Manne's handling of 'Get Me To The Church On Time' and the surprisingly swinging 'I Could Have Danced All Night' comes as no surprise, but he works a kind of magic on 'Ascot Gavotte', and the reading of 'I've Grown Accustomed To Her Face' is exemplary.

(*) The Gambit Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1007 Manne; Stu Williamson (t, vtb); Charlie Mariano (as); Russ Freeman (p); Monty Budwig (b). 1/57.
Dominated by Mariano's chess-inspired suite, this is one of the more unusual items in Contemporary's detailed documentation of Manne and the Men. The saxophonist is in cracking form, working several moves ahead like a good chess player, and though the main section suffers from a slight loss of spontaneity, the musical ideas are interesting enough to hold the attention. The remainder is looser but still packed with intelligent jazz. Mariano's 'Blue Gnu' is a clever reworking of a basic blues, transposed into unfamiliar keys, and Russ Freeman's 'Hugo Hurwhey' underlines his great contribution to the band and to the library of strong West Coast themes.

 Play Peter Gunn Original Jazz Classics OJC 946 Manne; Conte Candoli (t); Herb Geller (as); Victor Feldman (vib); Russ Freeman (p); Monty Budwig (b). 1/59.

 Son Of Gunn!! Contemporary 1105 As above, except omit Candoli, Geller; add Joe Gordon (t); Richie Kamuca (ts). 5/59.

Manne on Broadway, and TV. These jazz versions of show-tunes and television-via-Hollywood soundtracks were always a popular schedule-filler, and after the success of My Fair Lady there were bound to be more. Manne's men do the Peter Gunn music with a kind of cartoon tough-guy expression, but this was a great combo and Candoli and Geller didn't know how to be boring. The second volume apparently had composer Henry Mancini's blessing, not just to play the music but to treat it as freely as possible. The results are uneven, largely because the material lacks the zing of the first set. 'A Quiet Gass' is fun.

♛ * At The Black Hawk Original Jazz Classics OJC 656–660 5CD (separately available) Manne; Joe Gordon (t); Richie Kamuca (ts); Victor Feldman (p); Monty Budwig (b). 9/59.

One of the finest and swinging-est mainstream recordings ever made. The vinyl LPs had some murky spots, but with Feldman's piano sound lightened, Gordon and Kamuca trimmed of rough edges, and Budwig rescued from the gloom, it's near-perfect. From the opening 'Our Delight' to the previously unissued material on Volume Five, and taking in a definitive 'Whisper Not' along the way, this is club jazz at its very best. Apart from the band theme 'A Gem From Tiffany', which is played as if by rote, everything sounds as fresh as paint.

 Yesterdays Pablo 5318 Manne; Joe Gordon (t); Richie Kamuca (ts); Russ Freeman (p); Monty Budwig (b). 60.

These tapes lay in the vaults for more than 40 years. Their release will only be a major event for Manne specialists, but as ever the standard of musicianship is more than just professional and there are some fine things in the five live cuts taped on a JATP tour through Europe. Manne wasn't usually associated with Norman Granz's roadshow and generally preferred more-intimate settings, but whatever the context he always delivered. A 13-minute 'Bags' Groove' is the highlight, showing off Gordon's boppish trumpet and Kamuca's restless tenor. Other highlights are a medium tempo 'Straight, No Chaser' and a fine rendition of the title-piece.

* Live At The Manne Hole: Volume 1 / (*) ... Volume 2 Original Jazz Classics OJC 714 / 715 Manne; Conte Candoli (t); Richie Kamuca (ts); Russ Freeman (p); Chuck Berghofer (b). 5/61.

Nothing matches up to the Black Hawk sessions, but these come pretty close, confirming Manne's staying power in the toughest gig of all, regular club work. This was his home turf, the joint he opened a year earlier as a hedge against failing chops and capricious bookers. That may be why he sounds more relaxed, even a little lazy, breaking out of a pleasant reverie only for one or two contrived solos. Again, though, as with the similar band on Peter Gunn, it's the quality of the group as a whole that counts. Even on warhorses like 'Softly As In A Morning Sunrise' (Volume 1) and 'Green Dolphin Street' (the sequel), they have original and incisive points to make.

 Checkmate Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1083 Manne; Conte Candoli (t); Richie Kamuca (ts); Russ Freeman (p); Chuck Berghofer (b). 10/61.

Checkmate was another of Manne's successful reworkings of TV music. The composer this time is John Williams and all the themes have a chess reference: titles include 'The Isolated Pawn', 'En Passant' and 'The Black Knight'. Arranging them for quintet rather than the trio was a good idea since there isn't much action in Williams's writing.

 Steps To The Desert Contemporary 7609 Manne; Shorty Rogers (t, flhn); Teddy Edwards (ts); Victor Feldman (p, vib); Al Viola (g); Monty Budwig (b). 12/62.

Subtitled 'modern jazz versions of favourite Jewish and Israeli songs', the repertoire isn't quite the kind of thing John Zorn has championed in recent years, but as hokey and familiar as 'Hava Nagila', 'Tzena' and 'Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen'. It has been argued that this was Manne's response to John Coltrane's brand of modal jazz, and there is some justice in that. Certainly, the harmonic approach is far from conventional. Feldman knew this background and provides some of his most original comping; both horns fall into the idiom with ease. A curiosity, but another sign of Manne's desire to stay abreast.

 Daktari Atlantic SD8105 Manne; Conte Candoli (t); Frank Strozier (as); Mike Wofford (p); Victor Feldman (vib); Bill Pitman (g); Frank Carlsson (b); Larry Bunker, Emil Richards (d). 67.

Older readers will remember Clarence the Cross-Eyed Lion and an intelligent chimp called Judy. This is by no means a bottom-scraping exercise. Manne's arrangements are pin-sharp and clever and the quality of personnel attests to the vigour of the whole experiment.

(*) Alive In London Original Jazz Classics OJC 773 Manne; Gary Barone (t, flhn); John Gross (ts); Mike Wofford (p); John Morrell (g); Roland Haynes (b). 7/70.

Recorded during a fondly remembered residency at Ronnie Scott's club, this saw Manne experimenting in a slightly freer idiom, relaxing the usually watertight rhythms, exploring areas of pure sound. With the exception of Wofford (on electric), the band are not particularly well-known, but they play with vigour and application, and Manne's original production job gives them all a decent representation.

Also, in brief:

 Combinations Avid 904 2CD. 53–56.

A generous trawl of early stuff, great if you don't have My Fair Lady, And His Friends, etc.

 Li'l Abner Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1087. 2/57.

Johnny Mercer's and Gene DePaul's Li'l Abner yielded no hits, but it still merited the songbook treatment with André Previn (p) and Leroy Vinnegar (b).

 Bells Are Ringing Original Jazz Classics OJC 910. 7/58.

A thoroughly enjoyable and uncontroversial trio set with André Previn (p) and Red Mitchell (b).

 The Navy Swings! Studio West 109. 61–70.

For completists only. These 22 tracks were all taken from the radio show The Navy Swings! and feature different versions of the Manne group, with Conte Candoli (t) the only common factor.

 Boss Sounds Koch International 8539. 6/66.

A cool and eloquent quartet set with lots of expressive detail.

Wingy Manone (1900–82)

TRUMPET, CORNET, VOICE

Born in New Orleans, he based himself in Chicago around 1930 and developed a reputation for showmanship. Led his own groups in New York from 1934. He lost an arm in a streetcar accident; hence the nickname.

 Wingy Manone 1927–1934 Classics 849 Manone; Bob Price, Ed Camden (t); Orville Haynes (tb); Hal Jordy (cl, as); Wade Foster, Benny Goodman, Frank Teschemacher, George Walters (cl); Bob Sacks, Bud Freeman, George Snurpus, Joe Dunn (ts); Frank Melrose (p, acc); Johnny Miller, Jack Gardner, Art Hodes, Joe Sullivan, Maynard Spencer (p); Steve Brou, Ray Biondi (g); Miff Frink (bj, tb); Herman Foster (bj); Arnold Loyacano, Orville Haynes (b); John Ryan, Gene Krupa, Augie Schellange, Bob Conselman, Dash Burkis, George Wettling (d); Earl Warner (v). 4/27–5/34.

(*) Wingy Manone 1934–1935 Classics 798 Manone; George Brunies, Santo Pecora, Dicky Wells (tb); Matty Matlock, Sidney Arodin (cl); Eddie Miller, Bud Freeman (ts); Gil Bowers, Jelly Roll Morton, Teddy Wilson, Terry Shand (p); Nappy Lamare (g, v); Frank Victor (g); Harry Goodman, John Kirby, Benny Pottle (b); Ray Bauduc, Bob White, Kaiser Marshall (d). 5/34–5/35.

 Wingy Manone 1935–36 Classics 828 Manone; Jack Teagarden (tb, v); George Brunies, Ward Silloway (tb); Matty Matlock, Joe Marsala (cl); Bud Freeman, Tony Zimmers, Eddie Miller (ts); Horace Diaz, Gil Bowers (p); Carmen Mastren, Nappy Lamare (g); Sid Weiss, Artie Shapiro (b); Sam Weiss, Ray Bauduc (d); Johnny Mercer (v). 7/35–3/36.

Wingy was much in thrall to Louis Armstrong as both trumpeter and vocalist. The first disc is very rough-and-ready, with the small groups offering glimpses of precocious youngsters such as Freeman, Goodman and Krupa, yet stumbling on the scrappy recording quality, off-the-peg arrangements and other, second-rate sidemen. For those whose taste runs to the offbeat music of the day, this is worthwhile – it also features the famous first appearance of the 'In The Mood' riff on 'Tar Paper Stomp' – but non-specialists should start with the superior Classics 798. Manone's derivative playing has grown in stature, his singing has a hip, fast-talking swagger about it, and the bands – with Miller, Matlock, Brunies and the excellent Arodin extensively featured – set a useful standard of small-group playing in the immediate pre-swing era. By 1935 the run of material was shifting away from jazz and into novelty pop, and it's ironic that Manone's 'Isle Of Capri' vocal sent up the genre, only to secure a hit. Even so, the group often mustered a surprisingly hard-bitten treatment on a tune such as 'March Winds And April Showers'.

 Wingy Manone 1936 Classics 849 Manone; Ward Silloway (tb); Joe Marsala, Mike Viggiano (cl); Matty Matlock, James Lamare (cl, ts); Tommy Mace (as); Eddie Miller (ts); Gil Bowers, Conrad Lanoue (p); Nappy Lamare, Carmen Mastren, Jack LeMaire (g); Artie Shapiro (b); Ray Bauduc, Sam Weiss, Abby Fisher (d). 3–7/36

 Wingy Manone 1936–1937 Classics 887 As above, except omit Mace, Silloway, Bowers, Mastren, Lamare, Bauduc, Fisher; add Al Mastren, George Brunies (tb); Babe Russin (ts); George Wettling, Danny Alvin (d); Sally Sharon (v). 8/36–5/37.

 Wingy Manone 1937–1938 Classics 952 Manone; Al Mastren (tb); Brad Gowans (vtb); Joe Marsala, Al Kavich (cl, as); Doc Rando (as); Babe Russin, Chu Berry (ts); Conrad Lanoue, Wilder Chase (p); Jack LeMaire, Bobby Bennett (g); Artie Shapiro, Sid Jacobs (b); Danny Alvin (d). 5/37–5/38.

 Wingy Manone 1939–1940 Classics 1023 Manone; Buck Scott (tb, v); Buster Bailey, Gus Fetterer, Phil Olivella (cl); Chu Berry (ts); Conrad Lanoue, Ernie Hughes (p); Zeb Julian, Danny Barker (g); Jules Cassard, Sid Jacobs (b); Cozy Cole, Danny Alvin (d). 4/39–1/40.

 Wingy Manone 1940–1944 Classics 1091 Manone; Marty Marsala (t); Babe Bowman, George Brunies, Pete Beilman, Jack Flores, King Jackson, Floyd O'Brien, Abe Lincoln (tb); Bill Cobey (cl, as); Joe Marsala, Archie Rosati, Matty Matlock (cl); Stan Wrightsman, Mel Powell (p); Russell Soule, Carmen Mastren, Nappy Lamare (g); Bill Jones, Al Morgan, Jim Lynch, Artie Shapiro, Phil Stevens (b); Dick Cornell, Zutty Singleton (d); Johnny Mercer (v). 8/40–3/44.

As the '30s progressed, Manone began to seem like Fats Waller, also on Bluebird: he didn't send up his material the way Waller did but he seemed to get stuck with a lot of cornball tunes. That said, his exuberance and the contributions of the better players enliven many of the tracks. Classics 849 starts with the final Vocalion date – four very swinging tracks – before shifting into the first Bluebird sessions. Marsala and Miller are the principal interest besides the leader, and some of the other players seem a bit stiff, but when they get to either a rare instrumental ('Panama') or a superior jazz piece like 'Basin Street Blues' or 'Jazz Me Blues', the band noticeably perks up. Manone's singing is inventive in its way, and on an unlikely piece such as 'Formal Night In Harlem' he's genuinely creative.

Classics 952 offers a session with Berry (though the material is disappointing here) and paves the way for the two 1939 dates which commence Classics 1023. The 'In The Mood' riff turns up again, this time as 'Jumpy Nerves', and although Bailey and Berry are somewhat subdued they do increase the musical interest in these titles. Much better material more of a focus and playing small-group jazz make this arguably the best of these later discs. Classics 1091 has two final dates for Bluebird with a reversion to less-promising tunes: the very last title is 'Stop The War (The Cats Are Killin' Themselves)'! A single date for Decca produced the six-part(!) 'Jam And Jive', with a lot of chaff between Wingy and straightman Eddie Marr. After the record ban, he returned with a single date for Brunswick and then four Capitol titles, with a band that included three trombonists and Johnny Mercer guesting on 'The Tailgate Ramble'. An entertaining miscellany.

 Wingy Manone 1944–1946 Classics 1412 Manone; Joe Yukl, Frank Orchard, Ward Silloway, King Jackson (tb); Matty Matlock (cl, as); Joe Marsala, Hank D'Amico (cl); Andy Kelly, Herbie Haymer, Dick Clark, Nick Caiazza (ts); Stan Wrightsman, Conrad Lanoue, Dave Bowman, Marvin Ash (p); Nappy Lamare, Chuck Wayne (g); Phil Stephens, Irving Lang, Bob Haggart, Roy Hol, Artie Bernstein (b); Nick Fatool, George Wettling, Ray Bauduc, Davis Coleman (d); Kay Starr, Gloria Wood (v). 7/44–3/46.

There's lots to enjoy in this newest entry in the Classics sequence. Record dates made in Los Angeles bracket two New York sessions with the likes of Marsala and Wettling. Dumb material on some of them, but also some nice surprises: Kay Starr guests on 'If I Could Be With You', there's a straight and hot 'Tin Roof Blues', and the later West Coast dates end on a version of Slim Gaillard's 'Cement Mixer'. When Wingy's not singing, the band get warm.

Also, in brief:

 Wingy Sings, Manone Plays Jasmine JASMCD 2563
All the hits, including 'Isle Of Capri' and 'On The Good Ship Lollipop'.

Michael Mantler (born 1943)

TRUMPET, COMPOSER

Born in Vienna and educated at the Akademie there, Mantler brought a species of bleak European modernism to America, where he settled at the age of 19. He married Carla Bley and founded the Jazz Composers Orchestra Association. His works are slow, dark and intense, an acquired taste but often a rewarding one.

* No Answer / Silence Watt 2 / 5 2CD Mantler; Don Cherry (t); Carla Bley (p, org, v); Chris Spedding (g); Clare Maher (clo); Ron McClure (b); Jack Bruce (b, v); Robert Wyatt (perc, v); Kevin Coyne (v). 2/73–6/76.

 The Hapless Child Watt 4 Mantler; Terje Rypdal (g); Carla Bley (ky); Steve Swallow (b); Jack DeJohnette (d); Alfreda Benge, Albert Caulder, Nick Mason, Robert Wyatt (v). 7/75–1/76.

Mantler's music inhabits a world of dark whimsy stretched somewhere between Edward Gorey (whose writings provide the text to The Hapless Child) and Samuel Beckett. Beckett's shorn morality pops up throughout the Mantler oeuvre, almost all of which is released on a label named after the Irishman's jolliest character. There are moments when Mantler seems almost perversely bleak and unrelieved. Jack Bruce's tortured enunciation of texts from Beckett's How It Is on No Answer still makes for difficult listening after nearly 20 years, but it is undoubtedly compelling and the spare, almost static accompaniment provided by bass, keyboards and Don Cherry's tiny voiced trumpet conveys a cosmic loneliness. Silence, also reissued in the same package, is a reworking of Harold Pinter's Beckett-inspired play, with Robert Wyatt, Carla Bley and Kevin Coyne in the parts of Bates, Ellen and Rumsey respectively. As music drama it is absolutely compelling; whether it qualifies as jazz is not a question we're inclined to engage; but certainly one misses the terse, bleached sound of the composer's trumpet on both these discs. Looking forward, it's possible to see Mantler as a harbinger of the death-of-jazz scenarios of his fellow-Austrian, Franz Koglmann.

* Movies / More Movies Watt 7/10 Mantler; Gary Windo (ts); Carla Bley (p, org, syn, ts); Philip Catherine, Larry Coryell (g); Steve Swallow (b); D. Sharpe, Tony Williams (d). 3/77–3/80.

Time and distance have been kind to Mantler, and CD remastering has brightened up the sound on these two albums. They fall into the genre of imaginary soundtracks and are perhaps best heard individually rather than one after the other. As ever, there is more sheer musicality in a three-minute Mantler composition than in half a dozen jazz themes, but they require time and patience. 'Movie Four' from the first album is the place to set the cueing button, though the final pair of eight are equally compelling, hybrids of jazz harmony and the Second Viennese School.

Tony Williams is the drummer on the first set, but we aren't clear whose illustrious identity the (presumed) pseudonym of 'D. Sharpe' disguises on More Movies. The two bands are pretty much identical in configuration, except that Carla's ABC tenor saxophone part is handed to Gary Windo and the fiery Coryell is replaced by the much more lyrical Philip Catherine.

It's been some time since we listened to these albums and the reunion has been a happy one, confirming Mantler's standing as one of the most adventurous composers of recent times and a player who every now and then reaches in and tugs the heart strings.

(*) Something There Watt 13 Mantler; Carla Bley (p); Mike Stern (g); Steve Swallow (b); Nick Mason (d). 83.

 Alien Watt 15 Mantler; Don Preston (syn). 3–7/85.

Presumably scaled down from writing for full ensemble, the dark meditations that make up Alien are – hard as it is to write this without suspicion of overstating the case – the bleakest and most nihilistic pieces in Mantler's canon. Compared even to the numerically coded group and orchestra works on Something There they seem almost unbearably sunless and yet, as on the earlier album, there are glints and gleams of sardonic humour and an engaging humanity which doesn't come through often or readily in Mantler's work. To that extent, he is not the true heir of Beckett and Pinter, and still less of Gorey, but it is best to be alert to those moments, as on Alien part three, and on 'Something There' itself, where he allows a gentler and more accommodating side to emerge. As ever, Michael Gibbs's string arrangements are immaculate, sophisticatedly simple but full of depth and texture.

(*) Live Watt 18 Mantler; Don Preston (syn); Rick Fenn (g); John Greaves (b, p); Nick Mason (d); Jack Bruce (v). 2/87.

The live record is certainly the best place to sample Mantler's music if you haven't come across it before. Though not intended as a career retrospective, it does range across the work of the previous decade, touching on some of the material from The Hapless Child, to which Bruce brings his usual querulous strength and jazzy unfixity of pitch. While Bley's touch is missed, Preston has his own strengths and Fenn is very much in the line of previous guitar players.

(*) Many Have No Speech Watt 19 Mantler; Rick Fenn (g); Jack Bruce, Marianne Faithfull, Robert Wyatt (v); orchestra. 5–12/87.

 Folly Seeing All This ECM 1485 Mantler; Wolfgang Puschnig (af); Rick Fenn (g); Karen Mantler (p, v); Dave Adams (vib); Balanescu Quartet; Jack Bruce (v). 6/92.

Compared to How It Is, the more recent Beckett settings on Folly Seeing All This are positively humane and accommodating. Bruce still likes to skin a lyric until it shows the nerves and sinews beneath, but of late his voice has acquired a mellower timbre, and the strings here and on Many Have No Speech raise the temperature above the glacial. The Balanescu Quartet are able crossover performers, bringing a hint of swing to these rather dry scores. Puschnig has been appearing in all sorts of eclectic settings in recent times. He's also an asset here.

Many Have No Speech adds Philippe Soupault and Ernst Meister to the lyricists' roster and Marianne Faithfull to the singers'. Wyatt, for so many years a standby, is used disappointingly little. He has exactly the right level of sheer artlessness to make Mantler's ideas come convincingly alive. Faithfull's gravel larynx is certainly authentic; her French diction is emphatically not, and she's guilty of some nightclub histrionics which don't fit this particular bill.

* Cerco Un Paese Innocente ECM 1556 Mantler; Bjarne Roupe (g); Marianne Sørensen (vn); Gunary Lychou, Mette Winther (vla); Helle Sørensen (clo); Kim Kristensen (p); Mona Larsen (v); Danish Radio Big Band. 1/94.

A moody inscape, very much in the slow and dimensionless idiom of earlier orchestral writing. Mantler follows Luciano Berio in setting a group of poems by Giuseppe Ungaretti, and he makes a very convincing job of rendering these curious lyrics transparent. As with most of his projects in this vein, it depends wholly on the quality of the singer. Mona Larsen does a wonderful job, huskily beautiful and totally unaffected, delivering the words like a folk singer and not a diva. An unexpected classic.

 The School Of Understanding ECM 1648/49 2CD Mantler; Roger Jannotta (cl, bcl, f, ob); Bjarne Roupe (g); Mette Brandt;

Marianne Sørensen (vn); Mette Winther (vla); Helle Sørensen (clo); Tineke Noordhoek (vib, mar); Kim Kristensen (p, syn); Don Preston (syn, v); Jack Bruce, John Greaves, Susi Hyldgaard, Per Jorgensen, Mona Larsen, Karen Mantler, Robert Wyatt (v). 8–12/96.

At least he had the decency not to call it a 'chronotransduction', as his former wife called Escalator Over The Hill. 'Sort-of-an-opera' serves very well. This is a piece of ambitious music-theatre on the slippages and breaks that afflict meaning – a previous version was called 'The School of Languages' – and so almost inevitably the presiding spirit is that of Samuel Beckett, whose text, 'What Is The Word', ends the work.

Mantler is least comfortable when he is writing récit and basic dialogue. Some of the set-pieces, notably those involving Larsen as a refugee and Bruce as the far from omniscient 'Observer', are very good indeed, and the small ensemble plays with admirable delicacy and control. Like Escalator, the piece is probably best heard as a series of episodes, rather than as a continuous work. It might well gain from staging (and has been produced in Denmark), but it is hard to penetrate the rather stiff exterior off a record. One for confirmed Mantlerians only.

(*) Songs And One Symphony ECM 1721 Mantler; Kim Kristensen (p, syn); Bjarne Roupé (g); Marianne Sørensen (vn); Gunnar Lychou, Mette Winther (vla); Helle Sørensen (clo); Mona Larsen (v); Radio Symphony Orchestra Frankfurt; Peter Rundel (cond). 10/93, 11/98.

Intriguing to hear a composer so utterly in thrall to the musical languages of the 20th century square up to the 21st with a record so true to his own origins and yet so replete with new possibility. This time, for Songs, Mantler has taken his inspiration from the poems of Ernest Meister, texts that deal with the difficulties of 'relationships', not just in the bland, agony-column sense, but in a much more philosophical context. They are still uneasy and to a degree unrelieved, but there is a sanguine beauty that has not been heard overtly in Mantler's work before now. Mona Larsen's voice is very beautiful and her feel for space is in keeping with previous Mantler vocalists, except that here there is a hint of lyricism he would not have admitted previously.

We were tempted to suggest that Alien was his first symphony. This one – which is One Symphony rather than Symphony No. 1, note – is surprisingly orthodox in its modernism and played rather flatly by the Frankfurt orchestra. Jazz purists will run a mile, but they should listen up to Mantler's intuitive voicings, which still have the resonance of jazz in their root notes and a slowed-down after-echo of swing in every measure.

* Hide And Seek ECM 549612 Mantler; Vincent Nilsson (tb); Roger Janotta (cl, f, ob); Bjarne Roup (g); Susi Hyldgaard (acc, v); Robert Wyatt (v); stg. 01.

A collaboration between Mantler and American novelist Paul Auster makes sense even on paper. Auster's chill and thoughtful city stories have exactly the right trajectory for Mantler's music, and the result is a coherent and completely satisfying set of pieces.

Hyldgaard is an able accordionist and her tango-like themes provide an element of continuity between the various set-piece sections, which also feature her and Robert Wyatt's voices. Bob is in stunningly good form, tough and tender by turns, and at moments not quite human, so graceful is his delivery. The echoes of Beckett are overt and meaningful, especially when Wyatt laments the emptiness of 'words'. The narrative is as clouded and ambiguous as one might expect (occasional echoes of Escalator Over The Hill) and the orchestrations are perfectly weighted. This is, of course, a long way from jazz, even generously defined, but the music is of such a richness and strength that only the most niggardly listeners will quibble over demarcations.

Frank Mantooth (1947–2003)

KEYBOARDS, ARRANGER

Californian arranger-pianist who led a big band for these Sea Breeze recordings.

 Persevere Sea Breeze SB 2062 Mantooth; Clark Terry (t, flhn, v); Bobby Shew, Danny Barber, Art Davis, Mike Steinel (t); Scott Bentall, Tom Garling, Mark Bettcher, Mike Young, Steve Wiest (tb); Howie Smith (as, ss); Bill Sears (as, f); Ed Petersen, Pete Christlieb (ts); Jerry DiMuzio (bs, f); Steve Erquiaga (g); Curt Bley, Bob Bowman (b); Steve Houghton (d); Alejo Poveda (perc). 10/89.

 Dangerous Precedent Sea Breeze SB 2046 As above, except omit Christlieb, Bentall, Sears; add Jeff Jarvis (t); Paul McKee, Leland Gause (tb); Kim Park, Scott Robinson (reeds); Matt Harris, Ramsey Lewis (ky); Danny Embrey (g); Kelly Sill (b); Kevin Mahogany (v). 12/91.

 Sophisticated Lady Sea Breeze SB 2074 As above, except omit Terry, Jarvis, Steinel, Gause, Petersen, Robinson, Lewis, Embrey, Sill, DiMuzio, Erquiaga; add Roger Ingram, Marvin Stamm, Randy Brecker (t); Tom Matta (tb); Pat LaBarbera, Pete Christlieb, Nick Brignola (reeds); Jon McLean (g). 94.

The genial Mantooth's arrangements bristle with energy and sometimes hit a note of genuine invention. The early albums all trade in fusion-based licks to some extent, though Mantooth finds a surprisingly provocative balance between that kind of jazz-lite and a more demanding arranger's taste. On Persevere, Terry has a bumptious 'Mean To Me' mainly to himself, but four other standards are shrewdly arranged and there are good spots for Shew, Christlieb and Steinel. Terry and Shew have some more good moments on Dangerous Precedent, and Mahogany comes on like a young Joe Williams on his two appearances; but again it's the crackle of the band that overcomes any sense of muzak on 'Imagination' and the like. Sophisticated Lady is the most traditional of the discs, with Mantooth sticking to piano, the bassist staying acoustic and the charts hewing close to, say, the Jones–Lewis style of delivery. Excitements nevertheless exist in the knockout tribute to Woody Shaw, 'The Messenger', three more very able vocals by Mahogany and Brignola's authoritative solo on the title-piece.

 A Miracle Sea Breeze SB-2094 Mantooth; Danny Barber, Kirk Garrison, Rob Parton, Art Davis, Bobby Shew, Peter Olstad (t); Tom Garling, Mark Bettcher, Mike Young, Tom Matta, David Steinmeyer, Paul McKee (tb); Mike Smith, Jim Massoth, Howie Smith, Kim Park (as); Pete Christlieb, Pat LaBarbera, Steve Eisen, Mark Colby (ts); Jerry DiMuzio, Scott Robinson (bs); Larry Harris (ky); John McLean, Danny Embrey (g); Larry Kohut, Lou Fischer (b); Phil Gratteau, Ray Brinker (d); Alejo Poveda (perc); Kevin Mahogany, Diane Schuur (v); strings. 99.

Smooth but not 'smooth jazz', pop material but proper big-band delivery, Mantooth walked the line with complete assurance. What he was about was the continued well-being of a distinctive American music, the big-sounding, hard-hitting orchestra that adapts within a changing climate while preserving its old values. The ten arrangements here are all comfortably within that idiomatic reach and sit squarely inside the leader's own modest tradition. That he makes something like Jimmy Webb's 'Wichita

Lineman' plausible and effective is justification enough. As ever, a strong team of soloists, strings on one track, and no bum notes. Mantooth's early death at the end of 2003 was a bad blow.

* Ladies Sing For Lovers MCG Jazz MCGJ 1018 Mantooth; Kim Park (ts, f); Danny Embrey (g); Bob Bowman (b); Todd Strait (d); large ensemble and strings; Karrin Allyson, Kirsten Gustafson, Paula West, Sunny Wilkinson, Jay Clayton, Margaret Carlson, Oleta Adams, Rebecca Parris, Stacy Rowles, Sheila Jordan, Anne Hampton Callaway, Diane Schuur (v). 10/02–8/04.
Mantooth never got to hear this completed, but it is a remarkable memorial. Twelve singers take on a dozen standards of varying stripes, and the arrangements involve a basic small group with string and woodwind ensembles. Several of the singers are from a cabaret rather than a jazz background, but the feel is of a genuine jazz vocal record and there are some amazing feats of orchestration and integration of singer, small band and orchestra. The recording's of demonstration quality, but it is thrilling music, too, and Carrie Mantooth, who saw it through to release, should be justly proud of the results.

Guido Manusardi (born 1935)

PIANO

A nomadic spirit Italian pianist whose main base is the Italian post-bop scene.

(*) Downtown Soul Note 121131 Manusardi; Isla Eckinger (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 5–6/85.
 Outstanding! Splasc(h) 512-2 Manusardi; Piero Leveratto (b); Luigi Bonafede (d). 3/86–6/90.
Manusardi is well-known in some parts of Europe and scarcely even recognized in others: a perhaps typical fate for a journeyman who's spent periods in Sweden, where he made his first album in 1967, and Romania. His lovely music revels in the kind of unabashed lyricism that one day will be acknowledged as the premier bequest of the post-bop Italian jazzmen, but his uptempo playing has a lot of Peterson in it too, and he likes to swing hard on the blues and on favourite standards. Rather disappointing was Downtown: four originals, two good standards, a fine rhythm section and good Soul Note recording, but 'Alexandria' is a merely doleful ballad, and only the Red Garland-like manoeuvres of 'Downtown' find the pianist at his most resourceful. Outstanding! is a stronger live date.

 Together Again Soul Note 121181 Manusardi; Red Mitchell (b). 11/88.
 So That Splasc(h) H 328-2 Manusardi; Eddie Gomez (b); Gianni Cazzola (d). 10/90.
Manusardi liked working with Mitchell and their duo session is very simpatico, though the bassist is as wilful as ever, eccentrically dawdling over figures but doing so in such a charming way that the music gains an idiosyncratic lilt. 'But Not For Me' is a delightful game of cat-and-mouse. So That is more obviously open-handed, the trio barrelling through most of the tunes at a rapid-fire tempo; but Gomez crowds out Manusardi at times and it's the sly interjections of Cazzola (listen to his fours on 'There Is No Greater Love') which referee the playing. Gomez's singalong is irritatingly picked up by the microphones, but the recording is otherwise excellent.

* The Village Fair Soul Note 121331 Manusardi; Paolo Fresu (t, flhn); Roberto Rossi (tb); Gianluigi Trovesi (cl, bcl, as); Furio Di Castri (b); Roberto Gatto (d). 10/96.
(*) Doina Soul Note 121381 Manusardi; Fabrizio Bosso (t, flhn); Roberto Rossi (tb); Giulio Visibelli (as, ss); Guido Bombardini (cl, bcl, as); Lucio Terzano (b); Mauro Beggio (d). 3/00.
Not exactly a departure and not quite typical, this is a triumph for Manusardi and a magical example of European jazz at its most unaffectedly 'authentic'. Manusardi made a record based around Romanian folk music many years before. This time he's assembled the cream of Italy's front rank to deliver a brilliantly coloured suite of inspired-by pieces, with dance rhythms and folkish melodies made transcendent by the vibrant playing and his own impressionistic (though not vague) arrangements. He knows his materials and what he wants to evoke – this is hardly the travelogue of some tourist, after all – and, with Fresu, Rossi and Trovesi at their most persuasive, the results are joyously convincing.

Doina revisits the style of the previous set, with ten Romanian melodies given a bright and sweet-natured reading. Manusardi's signifying trait is that he approaches all this with jazz uppermost in his mind: there's no Third Stream posturing, nothing folky beyond the melodies, and the players work to a familiar post-bop agenda.

 The Woodpecker Splasc(h) 815-2 Manusardi; Lucio Terzano (b); Gianni Cazzola(d). 4/00.
 Live At The Jazz Spot Splasc(h) 821-2 Manusardi; Trevor Ware (b); Billy Higgins (d). 7/00.
The two trios build on an already substantial body of work in the idiom. The Woodpecker tends to run on the spot as far as creativity is concerned, but anyone coming to the pianist's music for the first time would find plenty to listen to: the penetrating bop of 'Ramble' or a songful 'The Peacocks' would be good places to start. The live session has some unintended poignancy in that it may well be Billy Higgins's final recording. It would be using hindsight to suggest that the drummer sounds underpowered here, since Manusardi isn't the sort of pianist who wants or expects overplaying from the kit; in any case, Higgins sounds fine, and the perkiness of this version of 'The Woodpecker' sets a nicely upbeat tone from the off.

Also, in brief:

 Concerto Splasc(h) 437. 6/90–9/92.
Solo concert material, sweetly performed.

 Within Soul Note 121281-2. 8/95.
Forceful post-bop with an American line-up, but nothing too special.

 Siena Concert Splasc(h) 519. 02.
Elegant trio date; even 'Over The Rainbow' sounds fresh.

Marc O'Connor's Hot Swing Trio

GROUP

Not to be confused with the saxophone-playing Mark O'Connor, this one does convincing Hot Club stylings. In the Stéphane Grappelli role.

 In Full Swing Sony 87880 Mark O'Connor (vn); Wynton Marsalis (t); Frank Vignola (g); Jon Burr (b); Jane Monheit (v). 1/03.
So many sessions of this kind turn out to be little more than nostalgia exercises, the musical equivalent of reproduction antique furniture, that it's quite a thrill to find a group that really understands the Hot Club idiom and is musically sussed enough to take it on to the next level. The very presence of Wynton Marsalis – superb in conjunction with O'Connor on 'Tiger Rag' – lends the session a valuable imprimatur and a relaxed second solo voice. Burr and Vignola (the latter in particular) bring a completely authentic sound to the date, without trying to sound like 'authentic' Hot Club stylists. And even dear Jane Monheit's vocals are in keeping on 'Misty' and 'Fascinating Rhythm'. O'Connor has one unbeatable trump: we'll never know how the dedicatees might have sounded on his 'Stéphane and Django'.

Rita Marcotulli (born 1959)

PIANO

Born in Rome, she's worked with such heavy hitters as Dewey Redman and Billy Cobham.

 Koine Le Chant Du Monde 2741166 Marcotulli; Stanley Ray Adams (tb); Andy Sheppard (ss, ts); Javier Girotto (sax); Luca Garbarelli (b); Metaxu (elec); Pietro Tonolo (brass arr); Anja Garbarek (v). 03.
 On The Edge Of A Perfect Moment Le Chant du Monde 271410 Marcotulli; Andy Sheppard (ss, ts). 07.

Though Marcotulli has an impressive jazz pedigree, her recent work has steered ever closer to musical fusion-food, taking tastes from a variety of musical cultures, mostly successfully Scandinavian on Koine, and blending them together to create a stylistic gumbo. It actually works better than that sounds, and on the duos with Sheppard she shows an instinct for something that goes beyond mere ethnic stylings.

Michael Marcus (born 1952)

SOPRANO AND SOPRANINO SAXOPHONES, MANZELLO, STRITCH, CONN-O-SAX, BASS CLARINET

Began his apprenticeship on the 'chitlin'' circuit, working with Bobby 'Blue' Bland and Albert King. Played free jazz with fundamentalist zeal.

(*) Here At! Soul Note 121243 Marcus; Ted Daniel (t); Steve Swell (tb); Fred Hopkins, William Parker (b); Dennis Charles, Sadiq Abdu Shahid (d). 9/93.
(*) Ithem Ayler 006 Marcus; William Parker (b); Denis Charles (d). 93.

Marcus didn't get the idea of manzello and stritch directly from Roland Kirk, but from George Braith, a Rahsaan follower who recorded briefly for Blue Note and Prestige in the '60s. Michael's microtonal approach is a near equal hybrid of R&B and modernist polytonality. And though he's basically an incendiarist, as was clear on his Enja debut, Under The Wire, he's happy to set firestarting aside now and again and indulge the odd weird ballad, like 'Hidden Springs' on Here At!, where he uses an even greater oddity, the conn-o-sax, a saxophonic version of the cor anglais, pitched in F. The title-piece is a highly organized workout for double trio; Marcus doubles up stritch and manzello to counterbalance Swell's portamento effects, Hopkins and Parker (a recorded first), Shahid and Charles creating a shifting moiré effect. In the absence of a harmony instrument, Swell or Hopkins touches in the chords. It's a shame that Parker doesn't feature in a trio context; 'This Happening' and 'Hurdles', perhaps the best things on the record, are both played by Hopkins and Charles, though the two bassists appear again on 'Ithem'. The final track, 'In The Center Of It All', is an eye-of-the-hurricane roarer for reeds and bass, a brief, astonishing epilogue.

Ayler specializes in live recordings, and these trios come from the Knitting Factory, though there are a couple of studio cuts from earlier in the year. They don't add substantially to the picture, especially given that some of the themes are repeated from the Soul Note disc – 'Ithem' and 'Here At!' most obviously – and merely subjected to longer and more leisurely readings. There is, though, some fine interplay between Marcus (on bass clarinet) and Parker on the latter track.

* This Happening /  Involution Justin Time JUST 98 / 104 Marcus; Jaki Byard (p). 12/96; 97

Justin Time has acquired an impressive knack of putting together intriguing duos – Paul Bley and Kenny Wheeler being a more obviously homegrown promotion for the Montreal label – and on this one it has excelled itself. Byard's weird barrelhouse-meets-free-jazz style suits Marcus perfectly. On This Happening he sticks largely to the stritch (a straightened-out alto, also in E flat) but on this occasion doubles on the saxello. On just one track he reverts to bass clarinet, a medley of 'Giant Steps' and 'Naima' in the spirit of Eric Dolphy. The only other familiar tune is 'Darn That Dream', an eccentrically romantic end to a wonderful, offbeat record. Jaki's death in 1999 robbed Marcus of his most responsive playing partner to date, a musician who instinctively understood his balance of traditionalism and experiment. The second record is less sure-footed, but together these offer a valuable glimpse of a brief association.

(*) Sunwheels Justin Time 156 Marcus; Rahn Burton (org); Nasheet Waits (d); Carlos 'Patato' Valdes (perc). 9/00.

The billing for this emphasizes the collaboration with the Cuban percussionist. He and Marcus briefly duet on 'Moonvoices', but the album really is the reedman's. He opens with what sounds like a Coltrane pastiche on 'Eternal All' and elsewhere makes deep obeisances to some of the other master saxophonists, including a trick out of Roland Kirk's book with two horns on 'Psychic Circles'. 'Pinball' is fiery free bop – outstanding. For a change, he has big rolling chords to play off, courtesy of Rahn Burton's organ, and this allows him to play more sparely. All the compositions are Michael's and, for all his deference to the tradition, he seems at last to be recognizing his own idiosyncratic authority.

* Blue Reality Soul Note 121383 2 Marcus; Tarus Mateen (b); Jay Rosen (d). 10/01.
(*) Soulifications Soul Note 121473 Marcus; Tarus Mateen (b); Nasheet Waits (d). 04–05.

This is an ideal vehicle, a tightly marshalled trio in which the individuals speak very much in their own voices, but in a common language. The key element on the first CD is Rosen, who takes up the challenge laid down by Cody Moffett and Nasheet Waits and takes it on a stage further. His feature on the opening track is a welcome acknowledgement of his importance to the concept, a solo full of whiplash accents, sudden time-shifts and a superb grasp of dynamics. He's there again in the very next track, splashing exuberantly in the wake of Marcus's wailing testimony.

Mateen is easily overlooked, but he comes into his own on the long and beautifully constructed 'Metopia' and on the curiously formal 'Flight Of The Monarch' (the migrating butterfly rather than a deposed king). Mateen is also heard to great effect at the start of the title-track, picking out a low, soft line on bass guitar and opening the way for Marcus's mournful but pragmatic blues. Rosen is again on hand with big gong splashes and tight little fills.

Waits is on the surface a showier drummer, but he also has his father's clubbing intensity. Marcus seems very much a group member rather than leader-plus-rhythm on the Soul Note, though the sheer diversity of his timbral language means that one does tend to concentrate on the horn and risk overlooking the others.

* The Magic Door Not Two Records MW777-2 Marcus; Daniel Levin (clo); Rashaan Carter, François Grillot, Eric Revis (b); Jay Rosen, Newman Taylor Baker (d). 5 & 9/06.
An intensely beautiful date. Marcus plays B♭-clarinet throughout and evokes the spirit of Pee Wee Russell more than once, even though the language is harmonically complex and often 'outside'. Interestingly, the Dolphy tinge seems less evident this time, even with Marcus playing opposite a cello-player. Levin is a fine leader and composer in his own right, but this must be one of his best recorded appearances. The music often has a mysterious cast and Marcus's interest in having sound create portals to other dimensions doesn't in any way come across as airy-fairy or New Age here. Everything is solidly grounded, though not perhaps as weighty as a collective personnel suggests; Grillot and Rosen are the two main rhythm players, with just a couple of tracks from the others, so it's a relatively tight chamber group throughout.

Also, in brief:

 Reachin' Justin Time JUST 87. 96.
Difficult to pull off this kind of gig with no harmony instrument, but Marcus keeps up a flow of musical ideas and arresting sonorities; Cindy Blackman conjures up a huge sound.

 In The Center Of It All Justin Time JUST 130 2. 4/99.
This trio set (brass added on two tracks) revisits the work of Eric Kloss, George Braith and Roland Kirk. The waifs and strays of the saxophone family have never been so gainfully employed.

 Live In NY Soul Note 121343. 00.
The ghost of Eric Dolphy and the living spirit of Ornette Coleman hang over this pungent club date with Chris Sullivan (b) and Cody Moffett (d).

 Speakin' Out Drimala 02-347-04. 1/01, 1/02.
Solo improvisation is an exacting discipline, but Marcus sticks close to a melodic line in nearly all of these, which means that there is always something to hold on to.

Steve Marcus (1939–2005)

SOPRANO, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Though strongly associated with the early days of fusion, he played with Woody Herman, Stan Kenton and Buddy Rich and was MD of the Rich 'ghost' band. Also recorded a good deal with Larry Coryell.

 Tomorrow Never Knows Water Music 120 Marcus; Mike Nock (ky); Larry Coryell (g); Chris Hills (b); Bob Moses (d). 4/68.
Is this the record that launched jazz-rock? The birth of fusion? Arguably, Coryell's Free Spirits were around earlier, with a near-identical line-up to this, but Marcus's was much more of a jazz group. Most of the material is pop tunes, with the Lennon–McCartney title-piece (a fiery solo from Coryell in his Hendrix phase) and 'Rain', Donovan's 'Mellow Yellow', the Byrds' 'Eight Miles High' and only former Marcus employer Gary Burton from the jazz canon at all. It has a somewhat dated sound but stands up surprisingly well and Marcus's saxophone-playing always had a very pure, keening quality that is instantly attractive.

 Count's Rock Band / The Lord's Prayer Collectables COL 6269 Marcus; Jack Gale (t); Dave Gale (tb); Ed Xiques, Tom Zimmerman (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Mike Nock (p, hpd); Larry Coryell (g); Dom Cortese (acc); Chris Hills (b); Bob Moses (d); Larry Clark (d, v); Chris Swansen (perc); string quartet.
These extended the concept and stuck pretty much to the same pop trajectory, though Hills contributes a couple of tunes (which turn out to be the longest blowing themes on either set) and Moses takes a freeish solo on the first of these records. 'Scarborough Fair' sits as oddly alongside the Stones' 'Backstreet Girl' (Count's Rock Band) as 'Just Like Tom Thumb's Blues' and 'Wild Thing' do alongside 'America' and 'The Lord's Prayer' on the latter date. The personnel on the second disc is folksier and seems to represent a partial move away from 'rock' branding. These are largely forgotten dates now and it's good to have them back in this form.

 Steve Marcus Project Mighty Quinn Productions 1113 Marcus; Bill Bickford (g); Rick Petrone (b); Joe Corsello (d). 3/03, 2/06.
This one was finished off by the band after Marcus's death. He's still on most of the tracks and playing pretty decently for the most part. It's a wildly varied programme that includes bebop (Rollins's 'Oleo'), classical (Copland's 'Country Road'), as well as a group of modern repertory pieces (Shorter's 'Footprints', Trane's rarely covered 'Up 'Gainst The Wall', Kirk's 'Serenade To A Cuckoo' and Corea's 'Steps') and a solitary standard ('Skylark'). Marcus brings his usual exactitude and plaintive tone to his tracks, but maybe there's a certain loss of articulation here and there. Not an essential item – the saxophonist's Red Baron dates of the early '90s are better and worth searching out – but it's a nice memorial to a man who spent much of his career working under other, and mostly very dominant, leaders.

Rick Margitza (born 1963)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

The Detroiter first made waves in the Miles Davis group of 1987–8.

* Work It Steeplechase SCCD 31358 Margitza; James Williams (p); George Mraz (b); Billy Hart (d). 4/94.
(*) Hands Of Time Challenge 70021 Margitza; Kevin Hays (p); George Mraz (b); Al Foster (d). 12/94.
(*) Game Of Chance Challenge CHR 70044 Margitza; Jeff Gardner (p); Lars Danielsson (b); John Vidacovich (d). 10/96.
Margitza takes a long, thoughtful time over his solos, resists any excess of double-time or scalar exhibitionism, and presents a sonorous yet oblique tone which puts an ambivalent edge on his improvising. The long, Rollins-ish cadenza on 'My Foolish Heart', the compelling circles cast through 'Widows Walk', the neo-blues shapes of 'Steppin' Out' and the unexpectedly jaunty revision of 'It Could Happen To You' are four highlights of the Steeplechase disc; but there really isn't a bad passage on it and, with Williams in top form and Mraz and Hart perfectly comfortable, this is leagues ahead of the typical tenor-plus-rhythm date. If the first Challenge album is a shade behind, it's still very good: more emphasis on his own writing here, with six out of the seven tunes, and an unpredictable set they make – 'Hip Bop' turns organ band clichés inside out and 'Forty Five Pound Hound' does the same for the blues. 'Embraceable You' gets one of its bleakest treatments since Coleman's famous rendition.

Less obviously centred around Margitza and often unassumingly reticent to make its mark, Game Of Chance, a compilation of tracks from two nights of live work in Amsterdam, needs a few plays to sink in. Gardner shares composing credits with the leader, and with intriguing pieces like 'Jazz Prelude #9' and 'Blades Run' he sets a high standard for Margitza. Danielsson and New Orleans drummer Vidacovich make a fascinating team and the balance of the quartet is beautifully poised, swinging but intriguingly reserved. Margitza himself is reluctant to dominate but the music has its own, slightly abstruse character.

(*) Heart Of Hearts Palmetto PM 2058 Margitza; Joey Calderazzo (p); Scott Colley (b); Ian Froman (d). 11/99.

 Memento Palmetto PM 2076 Margitza; Mulgrew Miller (p); Scott Colley (b); Brian Blade (d). 4/01.

Margitza presents his music very plainly, in a this-is-all-there-is manner which perhaps makes it hard for his records to stand out from countless other sax-and-rhythm dates. '14 Bar Blues' has a soprano solo which, for controlled rigour at a fast tempo, takes some beating. The middleweight feel he gives to his tone on tenor makes it easy to miss the subtlety of the playing on the title-track. Calderazzo is a much more voluble performer and Froman is at least as busily propulsive as his predecessors on Margitza dates. Nothing to win new admirers here, but it should please those who've been following this gracious musician.

Most of the way, Memento is well up to par – useful originals, accomplished playing, pretty much the accustomed Margitza verities. But it runs out of steam and the last couple of tracks sound like a quartet looking to fill up space.

 Bohemia Nocturne Jazz 359 Margitza; Adam Kolker (cl, bcl); Tomas Savy (bcl); Roger Rosenberg (bsx); Olivier Ker Ourio (hca); Baptiste Trotignon, Laurent de Wilde (p); Olivier Louvel (g, sitar, bouzouki, charango, etc); Tammo Heikens (sitar); Viviane Arnoux (acc); Vasile Nedea (cimbalom); Jean-Michel Pilc (whistling); Florin Nicolescu (vn); Michel Alibo, Riccardo del Fra (b); Jeff Boudreaux (d); Karim Ziad (d, perc); Xavier Desandre (perc); Amanda Homi, Marjorie Roets (v). 04.

Margitza's violinist father was Hungarian and this richly nuanced set celebrates the gypsy tradition, with its Indian roots and world-diaspora destiny. It's not always entirely successful, in the way that most eclectic projects bulge at the seams, and Margitza's own playing seems one of the album's more anonymous aspects. However, he does play for the ensemble here.

Charlie Mariano (born 1923)

ALTO, SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, FLUTE, NAGASWARAM

He grew up in Boston, worked with Shorty Sherock and Stan Kenton, and then formed a group with his then wife Toshiko Akiyoshi. He has long had an interest in Indian music.

 Boston All Stars / New Sound From Boston Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1745 Mariano; Joe Gordon, Herb Pomeroy (t); Sonny Truitt (tb); Jim Clark (ts); George Myers (bs); Roy Frazee, Richard Twardzik (p); Bernie Griggs, Jack Lawlor (b); Gene Glennon, Carl Goodwin, Jimmy Weiner (d); Ira Gitler (bells). 12/51, 1/53.

 Boston Days / (*) Charlie Mariano Plays Fresh Sound FSRCD 207 / 115 Mariano; Herb Pomeroy (t); Jaki Byard (p); John Williams (p on Plays only); Jack Carter (b); Peter Littman (d). 11/53; 7/54.

 Plays Alto And Tenor Fresh Sound FSRCD 396 Mariano; John Williams (p); Mel Lewis (d); Max Bennett (b). 7/55.

Critics were quick to place Mariano in the gaggle of post-Bird alto-players. Mariano was born only three years after Parker, but his first and greatest influence remains Johnny Hodges. His studies in Indian music, and on the wooden, oboe-like nagaswaram, have helped emphasize the exotic overtones he absorbed from Hodges and which are already evident in the early, bop-inspired sessions on OJC. The wrenching intensity of later years is not yet apparent, though Mariano invests 'Stella By Starlight' on New Sound From Boston with entirely convincing and personal feeling. Compare this performance with that on the Fresh Sound It's Standard Time (see below), made after a long break from standards repertoire. In the '50s, Mariano was still playing in a very linear way, without the three-dimensional solidity and textural variation that he developed later; he was also still more or less rooted in conventional bop harmony, an attachment that weakened as he came to understand Indian music. New Sound From Boston is excellent, if a little raw. Boston Days is good, too, though many will find it more useful for its insights into the under-recorded Pomeroy; he very nearly steals the show, and his solo on 'Sweet And Lovely' is definitive. Byard, who reappears on a later Mariano session, is in highly inventive form as well.

Like Bird, Mariano made an occasional foray on tenor. The 1955 sessions stand up very well indeed, but mainly thanks to largely forgotten Williams, who is a spare and vigorous accompanist and no mean soloist. Rudy Van Gelder supervised the session and the sound is excellent.

 A Jazz Portrait Of Charlie Mariano Fresh Sound FSRCD 176 Mariano; Bernie Glow, Jimmy Sedlar, Jimmy Nottingham, Marvin Stamm (t); Wayne Andre, Bob Brookmeyer, Joe Ciarvadone, Paul Faulise (tb); Bob Abernathy, Dick Berg, Dave Clevenger, Aubrey Facenda (frhn); Don Butterfield (tba); Phil Bodner (reeds); Roger Kellaway (p); Bob Phillips (p, cel, vib); Jim Hall (g); Art Davis, Richard Davis (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath, Mel Lewis (d); Ed Shaughnessy (perc). 7/63.

One doesn't usually think of Mariano as a big-band player, though he had worked with Pomeroy's outfit and, of course, he had the closest association with Akiyoshi. This was recorded after the couple had flitted to Japan. The saxophonist was back in America to teach at campus jazz clinics, and these sessions were put together over two days during a slack spell in the summer. 'To Taoho' shows the most obvious Oriental influence. A modal theme, it uses some unexpected intervals, and again Mariano is upstaged by Stamm on what was billed as his coming-out gig. Don Sebesky's writing for the larger group is limited to 'Portrait Of An Artist', which sits for Charlie the way Mingus's 'Portrait Of Jackie' sat for McLean. The other stuff is nicely balanced, though the three tracks with Jim Hall, strings, harp and celeste err on the side of mush. Leaving Mariano as the only woodwind against trumpets and an array of french horns was a risky strategy but it works, and the small-group material nicely modulates the session.

 It's Standard Time: Volume 1 / (*) Volume 2 Fresh Sound FSR CD 97 / 98 Mariano; Tete Montoliu (p); Horacio Fumero (b); Peer Wyboris (d). 4/89.

Mariano has not been closely associated with standards jazz in recent years. Like Miles Davis, he believes in confronting the 'music of today' rather than endlessly reworking changes. However, on the basis of a performance at the Kenton Festival in Oldham, Lancashire, where Mariano had played 'Stella By Starlight', producer Jordi Pujol persuaded him to cut a standards album in Barcelona. Mariano is in perfect voice. On Volume 1, 'Stella' is wonderful, given a harmonically 'flatter' but more resonant reading than Lee Konitz tends to. He misfires on 'Billie's Bounce' and makes a bit of a nonsense of 'Poor Butterfly', but it's a highly appealing album. Unusually, the follow-up volume, drawn from the same two nights, is even better. The songs are no more demanding, though 'I Thought About You' and a second take of 'Billie's Bounce' include some stretching harmonic notions..

(*) Mariano & Friends Intuition 2149 Mariano; Kenny Wheeler (flhn); Jasper van't Hof, John Taylor (p); Mike Herting (ky); Dino Saluzzi (acc); Rabih Abou-Khalil (oud); Nicolas Fiszman, Jean-François Jenny-Clark (b); Jerry Granelli, Aldo Romano (d); Ramesh Shotham (perc). 93.
To celebrate his 70th birthday, Charlie invited along as many pals as he could muster for a programme of musical explorations. Only two of the tunes bear his signature, and one of them is a variant on the traditional 'Deep River', but the saxophonist is the dominant solo voice.

With the exception of Aldo Romano's 'Il Piacere', everything is over the ten-minute mark, allowing for maximum interplay and some extended soloing. Mariano is magnificently poised on Kenny Wheeler's 'Everybody's Song', but it is the composer who steals the show with a delicately weighted and unusually sardonic performance on flugelhorn. Saluzzi is as open-hearted and eclectic as ever, and 'Seva La Murga' claims classic status.

(*) Savannah Samurai Jazzline JL 1153 2 Mariano; Vic Juris (g); Dieter Ilg (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 98.
A fresh and uncomplicated session with a very bright band, co-fronted by Vic Juris's guitar. The simplicity of the opening 'Children Steps' doesn't quite prepare the way for the detailed exposition on saxophone and guitar, and it isn't until 'Dark Alley', the atmospheric third tune, that one starts to penetrate the emotional thickets. There is a reprise of the Juris tune at the end of the record, interestingly comparable to the Ornette Coleman–Pat Metheny Song X. Ilg, always an interesting writer, contributes the title-tune and the delightful 'Waltz For Dani', which tips its hat in the direction of Bill Evans. Charlie's high, plaintive tone is so pure one might almost be listening to an oboe or cor, perhaps the pay-off from his own dabbling with double-reeded horns. The final four tracks constitute a 'Climate Suite' – a 'Four Seasons' to you and me – and are collectively composed. Here again, Mariano combines an elemental straightforwardness of outline with maximum expression.

 Bangalore Intuition INT 3246 2 Mariano; V. K. Raman (f); Louis Banks (ky); Amit Heri (g); T. A. S. Mani (mridangam); Dr K. Raghavendra (veena); Jacob Williams (b); R. A. Rajagopal (ghatam, konakkol); B. N. Chandramouli (kanjira, konakkol); T. N. Shashikumar (tavil); G. Omkar (morsing, konakkol); S. Sudashan (dholak); R. A. Ramamani (v). 98.
A fascinating multicultural montage, but not necessarily an album that Mariano fans will take on board wholeheartedly. The music comes accompanied by a booklet of sketches by Dorothée Mariano, and is thoroughly pictorial and impressionistic, with a heavy emphasis on instruments from the subcontinent. The other key dimension, apart from Charlie's alto, is the vocal style of R. A. Ramamani, a singer of considerable standing. She tends to predominate wherever she appears, and the fact that her vocal line is always more limber than any conventionally keyed horn gives her a signal advantage.

 Not Quite A Ballad Intuition 3373 Mariano; Bernhard Pichl (p); Rudi Engel (b); Bill Elgart (d); Würzburg Philharmonic. 7/00.
This is the kind of high-profile, high-gloss gig Mariano has earned in spades, but it sounds more like a celebration than a genuinely creative project and the orchestra, however well marshalled, swamps some interesting ideas and arrangements.

(*) Tango Para Charlie Enja 9128-2 Mariano; Quique Sinesi (g). 10/00.
Inquisitive as ever, Mariano risks exposure but turns it into near-triumph in this collaboration. Sinesi has tango rhythms under his fingers, but also superbly nimble classical fingerwork and even jazz to go with it: as an accompanist, he's both swarming all over everything and doing it with sensitivity. Mariano loves the setting, and plays some wonderful things, especially in the four-part 'Berliner Tanguismos' and his own 'The Lady'.

 When The Sun Comes Out Skip SKP90542 Mariano; Ulf Kleiner (p, ky); Bruno Müller (g); Christian von Kaphengst (b, syn); Flo Dauner (d); Roland Peil (perc); Jeff Cascaro (v). 05.
Working with members of Till Brönner's band, Mariano turns in a set that combines pop-styled things like 'What's Going On?' and 'Cry Me A River' with jazz staples 'Naima' and the final, solo 'All The Things You Are'. There are also a couple of new things, 'Plonk' and 'Three Leaves', which tread relatively familiar but still creative ground. Production, by von Kaphengst, is strange and effective.

Also, in brief:

(*) Reflections Warner 0927 40165. 3/74.
Recorded in Finland, this pitched Mariano in with some of the very fine young fusion-oriented players that country seemed to throw up in profusion.

 Jyothi ECM 811548. 2/83.
A generation after Mayer's Indo-Jazz Fusions with Joe Harriott, Mariano and the Karnataka College Of Percussion attempt something similar. It's not wearing well as the years pass.

 Somewhere Out There By 87035. 8/90, 8/92.
Nice duets with South African bass guitarist Carlo Mombelli.

 An American In Italy Timeless 443. 98.
Charlie on the road and on ancestral turf. The themes are mostly from the group and mostly fairly impressionistic, but there's also a snippet from Mahler's Fifth.

(*) Deep In A Dream Enja 9423. 11/01.
Approaching 80, Mariano showed no signs of slowing down. This is a polished and articulate quartet performance but possibly lacks a bit of fire.

Sherrie Maricle (born 1963)

DRUMS

A relatively orthodox hard-bopper with a pleasingly light touch.

 I Believe In You Arbors 19231 Maricle; Diva. 11/98.

Sherrie had some earlier records, mostly co-led with saxophonist John Mastroianni. This lively big-band set sticks to familiar material, though 'The Claw' is on the unusual side. The highlights are a sweet read of 'I Feel Pretty' and a nicely judged Ella medley.

René Marie (born 1956)

VOICE

From Roanoke, Virginia, she sang in clubs as a teenager but didn't return to any kind of career until 1996.

(*) How Can I Keep From Singing? MaxJazz MXJ 109 Marie; Sam Newsome (ss); Mulgrew Miller (p); Marvin Sewell (g); Ugonna Okegwo (b); Gerald Cleaver (d); Jeffrey Haynes (perc). 1/00.

♛ * Vertigo MaxJazz MXJ 114 Marie; Jeremy Pelt (t); Chris Potter (ts); Mulgrew Miller (p); John Hart (g); Robert Hurst (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d); Jeffrey Haynes (perc). 2/01.

(*) Live At Jazz Standard MaxJazz MXJ 116 Marie; John Toomey (p); Elias Bailey (b); T. Howard Curtis III (d). 11–12/02.

 Serene Renegade MaxJazz MX 120 Marie; Jeremy Pelt (t); Takana Miyamoto (p); Herman Burney (b); Quintin Baxter (d); Roland Guerrero (perc). 6/04.

* Experiment In Truth René Marie. no number Marie; Kevin Bales (p); Rodney Jordan (b); Quentin Baxter (d). 11/07.

It might seem unlikely for a 40-something mother of two to suddenly reignite a dormant jazz-singing career in such astonishing style. Marie's smooth, clear, powerful voice seems to do everything she bids of it, with a luscious middle range, big low notes that can startle and a thrilling high reach too. She does the expected number of standards, but she also tries out unusual material – Nina Simone's 'Four Women', a striking moment on the debut disc – and she writes originals as well. How Can I Keep From Singing? has very little wrong with it; 'Afro Blue', 'A Sleepin' Blue' and 'The Very Thought Of You' are each shaped in an individual way, 'Four Women' is a virtuoso performance quite different to Simone's ritualized anger, and 'I Like You' and 'Hurry Sundown' are strong originals. Maybe she overdoes 'Tennessee Waltz', and there are a few moments of over-singing.

Vertigo is simply sensational, the most compelling singer's record outside of Kurt Elling in recent times. Bruce Barth's production is wonderfully sympathetic and gets the best out of a crack band. There can't be better versions of 'Surrey With The Fringe On Top', 'Them There Eyes' or 'I Only Have Eyes For You'. The title-track is a risky piece, delivered with rare assurance. Combining 'Dixie' with 'Strange Fruit' was chillingly effective. 'Blackbird' is a memorable coda to the rest. As an enlightened repertory record, this walks all over Cassandra Wilson's recent music.

How to follow a masterpiece? For her third MaxJazz release, she's gone for the live performance souvenir. She's not a singer to impress you with her range, and there's a degree of showing off, as there is on every live record, but for Marie it's more down to the bull's-eye way she hits a note, extends a phrase, or improvises a new song, as she does on 'Where Or When': this is the Betty Carter method made palatable to non-believers, a whole new melody imposed on the lyric, but not in such a way that you feel she's taken a liberty too far. 'I Loves You Porgy' is a brilliant new take on a song which Nina Simone once delivered with cold bathos. Maybe we could have done with one more of her originals – or a better one than the sentimental 'Shelter In Your Arms'. The one which might divide the house, though, is her melding of Ravel's 'Bolero' with Leonard Cohen's 'Suzanne'.

Serene Renegade feels like a disappointment, even if there is much to savour still. Marie's singing is as confident and adventurous as before, but some of the material is less than beguiling and 'Hard Day's Night' wasn't a good idea.

The self-released Experiment In Truth was recorded as-live in a college theatre in Charleston. It's grainy, very real and unvarnished. There's some Bonnie Raitt and Bob Seger material, which makes a refreshing change from Radiohead and Nick Drake. 'Rim Shot' is a warning to drummers in singers' groups. It's lovely, clever and essential for vocal-jazz fans.

Michael 'Dodo' Marmarosa (1925–2002)

PIANO

Born in Pittsburgh, he played bop with Charlie Parker in California, then returned home and, despite a brief resurgence, disappeared. Mental health problems blighted later years.

 On Dial: The Complete Sessions Spotlite SPJ-128 Marmarosa; Howard McGhee, Miles Davis (t); Charlie Parker (as); Teddy Edwards, Lucky Thompson (ts); Arvin Garrison (g); Harry Babasin (clo); Bob Kesterson (b); Roy Porter, Jackie Mills (d). 46–12/47.

 Dodo's Bounce Proper INTRO CD 2055 Marmarosa; Lucky Thompson (ts); Barney Kessel (g); Harry Babasin (b, clo); Gene Englund, Ray Brown, Red Callender (b); Jackie Mills (d). 1/46–12/47.

(*) Complete Studio Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10119 2CD As above, except omit Thompson; add Thomas Mandrus, Sam Jones, Richard Evans (b); Joe Wallace, Marshall Thompson (d). 1/46–5/62.

 A Live Dodo Yesteryear 610 Marmarosa; Howard McGhee, Chuck Peterson (t); Vic Dickenson (tb); Stan Hasselgard, Woody Herman (cl); Benny Carter, Sonny Criss (as); Charlie Barnet, Wardell Gray, Herbie Steward (ts); Irving Ashby, Al Hendrickson (g); Red Callender, Charlie Drayton, Clyde Lombardi (b); Frank Bode, Jackie Mills (d). 47.

(*) Dodo Marmarosa 1945–1950 Classics 1195 As above, except add Herbie Steward (cl, ts); Johnny White (vib); Lou Fromm (d). 6/45–7/50.

A bebop enigma. Marmarosa played an important minor role in bop's hothouse days, recording with Parker in LA; but less than two years later he was back in his native Pittsburgh and heading for obscurity and silence. He had a foot in swing as well as the modern camp, and his precise articulation and sweeping lines make one think of Tatum as much as any of his immediate contemporaries: a pair of solos from 1946, 'Deep Purple' and 'Tea For Two', are strikingly akin to the older man's conception. But he had a gentle, even rhapsodic side, which colours the trio tracks on both of these discs, and while he flirts with an even more audacious conception – hinted at on the two 'Tone Paintings' solos from 1947 – one feels he never satisfactorily resolved the different strands of his playing. Much of his best playing is to be found on Parker's Dials (a solitary example, 'Bird Lore', is on the Spotlite CD), but the solo, trio and sextet (with McGhee) tracks on On Dial include much absorbing piano jazz. The Proper CD duplicates much of the Spotlite disc, but also includes tracks cut for the Atomic label prior to the Dials, plus eight quartet sides with Lucky Thompson. Neither disc solves the problem of the indifferent sound of the originals, and both feature an atrocious speed wobble on the two privately recorded 'Tone Paintings' solos.

Marmarosa returned to the studios to make only a single further LP under his own name, Dodo's Back for Argo. That 1961 date and seven further tracks made a year later are included, along with all his other trio sessions, on the Lone Hill two-disc set, which is as close to a definitive portrait as we're going to get. His imagination seems as vivid as ever, although there is something stilted and awkward in some of his phrasing, as if he were nervous about getting his ideas out. Either way, it's an intriguing listen.

Classics do their usual useful job on the main sweep of Dodo's recording career. The live material features Dodo with Charlie Barnet, Woody Herman and Benny Carter: 'C Jam Blues' and 'Perdido' are both roistering performances.

Also, in brief:

 Dodo Marmarosa, Pittsburgh 1958 Uptown UPCD 27.44. 3/56–62.
An amazing tape discovery by Danny Conn (t) who plays with Dodo on the 1962 TV performance. The rest comes from the Midway Lounge: shabby sound, but the piano comes through clearly and there's a 1995 interview with 'Mike' himself.

 Dodo Lives Pearl 1058. 10/43–46.
A clever title, referencing the famous Charlie Parker graffito but also the fact that Dodo survived more than one premature obituary. Good early survey, respectable sound.

Chuck Marohnic

PIANO, SYNTHESIZER

Inspired by Red Garland and a sometime associate of Chet Baker, he's better known as an educator.

 Copenhagen Suite Steeplechase SCCD 31408 Marohnic; Bennie Wallace (ts); Steve Gilmore (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 9/78.
 Permutations Steeplechase SCCD 31155 Marohnic (p solo). 5/81.
He has made a lot of records, though not all are easy to find. The touch is reminiscent of Hal Galper's, particularly on a tune like Corea's 'Windows' on the solo album, and there are times on Copenhagen Suite when the delivery seems a little over-ripe. Basically, though, Marohnic is a clear-sighted and swinging pianist with an excellent ear for a melody. 'Maverick' and 'Julie's Waltz' open the earlier album on a high that isn't quite sustained. The playing career wasn't either, and it was to be a decade before he went into the studios again.

(*) Many Mansions Challenge 73127 Marohnic; David Friesen (b); Joe LaBarbera, Alan Jones (d). 98.
Like Paul Bley, whom he also occasionally resembles, Marohnic dabbled in electronics for a time. There are moments here which suggest he might have taken the experiment further, but what strikes is not so much the confidence of technique as a deft touch for selecting material. Putting Hancock's 'Speak Like A Child' up against 'All The Things You Are', John Abercrombie's 'Ralph's Piano Waltz' alongside a rolling version of 'How Deep Is The Ocean?' and his own title-track beside 'Autumn Leaves' and Friesen's lovely 'Goal In Mind' suggests a jazz musician who is also a fan and a fan who understands what makes a great record. This isn't quite great, but it has an extra something nudging around it. Friesen is himself guilty of over-ripeness, but LaBarbera has a pungency that keeps the trio to the matter at hand. The occasional synth warble was forgivable, even this late in the day, if it was deployed as effectively and sensitively as here.

 Trios Sanctuary 6429 73503821 Marohnic; David Friesen, Dwight Killian, Dave Phillips (b); Joe LaBarbera, Dom Moio, Tony Moreno (d). 04.
 Jazz! Summit DCD 229 Marohnic; Greg Hopkins (t); Gary Carney, Russell Scarborough (tb); Sam Pilafian (tba); Scott Zimmer (as); Bryon Ruth (ts); Steve Von Wald (bs); Ed Friedland (b); Dom Moio (d). N.D.
On retiring from academia, Marohnic had a fresh flurry of recording. Friesen and LaBarbera look like the pedigree line-up of the three Trios, but the other two have their own characteristics and qualities. An interesting roster of tunes, too. The retread of the Birth Of The Cool nonet has some interesting moments, but most of them from co-leaders Hopkins and Pilafian, the latter an extraordinary master of his instrument. 'Boplicity' and 'Israel' are both à la mode.

Also, in brief:

(*) White Men Can't Monk Summit 291. 02.
No Monk tunes, and a disappointing trio – piano, guitar, drums – blend.

 Seeds Ravenswave 1001. 05.
A quartet date for a change, with Fred Forney's trumpet well to the fore.

Hank Marr (born 1927)

ORGAN

Neglected Hammond master.

 It's 'Bout Time Double Time 102 Marr; Gene Walker (ts); Kevin Turner (g); Jim Rupp (d). 5/95.
 Groovin' It Double Time 112 Marr; Wilbert Longmire (g); Bill Stewart (d). 5/96.
(*) Hank & Frank Double Time 134 Marr; Frank Foster (ts); Cal Collins (g); Jim Rupp (d). 4/98.
When the wheel of fashion turned again and organ samples became a mainstay of the acid jazz vogue, Hank Marr must have been looking the other way. Unlike most of the Hammond specialists of his generation – Groove Holmes, Jack McDuff, even Larry Young – Hank was rarely cited as an influence by the young Turks and only occasionally sought out by the DJs.

A pity. He's a classic B3 man, funky and greasy, with a rich danceable throb running through the best of his work. The early stuff on Charly and King is long gone, but the revival of Hammond jazz did at least allow Marr to start recording under his own name again. It's 'Bout Time might have been made at any time in the mid-'60s. It's lifted out of the ordinary by a remarkably touching version of Mal Waldron's 'Soul Eyes', though for the most part Hank sticks to basic grooves, lapsing only with a pointless assassination of 'Amazing Grace'. It was, indeed, about time he made an impression. Unfortunately, the follow-up was slightly disappointing, though Bill Stewart's funky drumming is worth getting Groovin' It for, even if you aren't enamoured of Hank's two takes of 'Misty' (ballad and swing) or his strange version of 'Battle Hymn Of The Republic'.

The naval cap propped on the piano lid on the cover of Hank & Frank gives the game away. It's a tribute to Bill Basie and the recruitment of Frank Foster (in great shape) gives a ring of authenticity to a set-list that has only rather remote connections to the Count. Which is a good thing, because there's more thoughtful playing on this disc than on any of Hank's previous outings. 'Paris In April' is a cleverly conceived variation and the originals 'Rhythmesque' and 'Basie-cally Speaking' are deceptive in structure and range. Marr will never be cited as one of the masters of organ jazz, but he's been neglected too long.

Joe Marsala (1907–78)

CLARINET, VOICE

A Chicagoan, he already had ten years in clubs and circus bands before taking a mixed-race group into New York's Hickory House in 1937. He retired in 1948 and went into publishing, though he still played occasionally.

 Joe Marsala 1936–42 Classics 763 Marsala; Pee Wee Erwin, Max Kaminsky, Marty Marsala (t); Bill Coleman (t, v); George Brunies (tb); Pete Brown, Ben Glassman (as); John Smith (ts); Dave Bowman, Joe Bushkin, Dick Cary, Frank Signorelli (p); Ray Biondi (vn); Adele Girard (hp); Eddie Condon, Carmen Mastren (g); Jack LeMaire (g, v); Jack Kelleher, Artie Shapiro, Haig Stephens, Gene Traxler (b); Danny Alvin, Stan King, Shelly Manne, Buddy Rich, Zutty Singleton (d); Dell St John (v). 1/36–7/42.

(*) Joe Marsala 1944–46 Classics 902 Marsala; Dizzy Gillespie, Bobby Hackett, Joe Thomas (t); Frank W. Orchard (tb); Gene DiNovi, Leonard Feather, Cliff Jackson, Charlie Queener, Gene Schroeder (p); Eddie Condon, Chuck Wayne (g); Adele Girard (hp); Bob Casey, Irving Lang, Clyde Lombardi, Sid Weiss (b); Buddy Christian, Rollo Laylan (d); Linda Keene (v). 3/44–11/45.

Armed with matinee idol looks and a dark, winey tone, Marsala also claims an honourable place in jazz history for his efforts to break down the race divide. It was an endeavour that won the respect of Leonard Feather, who composed all the material on the April 1940 session. Though Marsala had the projection and the sense of structure to perform effectively in big bands, he functioned best in small groups, notably the band which maintained a residency at the Hickory House on 52nd Street. A couple of early tracks were made for Decca under the name The Six Blue Chips; Pee Wee Erwin was the main attraction. In 1937 Marsala married harpist Adele Girard, who had brought an attractive balance and sense of space to a front line of clarinet, trumpet and violin. In later years, and particularly on the sessions of May and November 1945, she was given more prominence, and on the late pair made for Musicraft ('East Of The Sun' and 'Slightly Dizzy') she is pushed well forward.

The second volume is distinguished by some fine playing from trumpeter Joe Thomas and a brief glimpse of Dizzy Gillespie in 1945, doing 'My Melancholy Baby' and 'Cherokee'. Another reason for Marsala's appearance in the history books is his prescience in recruiting young players like Buddy Rich and Shelly Manne, who made their debuts as jazz players under Marsala's leadership in March 1938 and April 1941 respectively. These associations aside, there is no mistaking the quality of the jazz Marsala played. The Chicagoan's band, featuring brother Marty on trumpet and Eddie Condon on guitar, swings like fury, as does the later All Timers set-up which opens the second volume, with Bobby Hackett sounding harder-toned than usual but unmistakably himself on 'Clarinet Marmalade' and 'Tiger Rag'. Linda Keene's vocals add nothing much to the November 1944 date, and for the most part Marsala steered clear of singers; Dell St John has a bit part on the earlier set and Joe himself takes a brief turn at the mic on 'Gotta Be This Or That'. Otherwise, straight, driving small-group jazz.

Branford Marsalis (born 1960)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

The eldest Marsalis brother started on alto saxophone and joined the Jazz Messengers in 1981. After a period in brother Wynton's group, he has been his own man in various jazz, pop, TV and film situations ever since, as well as teaching and A&R work for Columbia.

 Scenes In The City Columbia 468458-2 Marsalis; John Longo (t); Robin Eubanks (tb); Mulgrew Miller (p); Ray Drummond, Ron Carter, Charnett Moffett, Phil Bowler (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith, Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 4–11/83.

(*) Royal Garden Blues Columbia 468704-2 Marsalis; Ellis Marsalis, Kenny Kirkland, Herbie Hancock, Larry Willis (p); Ron Carter, Charnett Moffett, Ira Coleman (b); Ralph Peterson, Marvin 'Smitty' Smith, Al Foster, Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 3–7/86.

 Renaissance Columbia 40711 Marsalis; Kenny Kirkland (p); Charnett Moffett (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). N.D.

(*) Random Abstract Columbia 468707-2 Marsalis; Kenny Kirkland (p); Delbert Felix (b); Lewis Nash (d). 8/87.

Articulate, hip, funny, the eldest of the Marsalis brothers was almost as ubiquitous a figure as his trumpeter sibling in the '80s and '90s. His tenor playing is stonily powerful in the Rollins tradition, and he has stuck by the bigger horn on most of his solo records, with soprano a definite second. Scenes In The City was an entertaining debut, with a wry version of the Mingus title-tune (complete with dialogue) and the storming manifesto of 'No Backstage Pass' to show what he could do; but it's a bit of a jumble. Royal Garden Blues is a step down, the playing messy and subdivided among a bewildering variety of rhythm sections. Renaissance and Random Abstract emerge as accomplished but undecided sessions. On Random Abstract Marsalis seems to explore the mannerisms of a number of preceding tenor influences: Coltrane, Shorter, Coleman, even Ben Webster, whose celebration in a bathetic reading of 'I Thought About You' seems more parody than tribute. The chief problem with all these sessions is that Marsalis promises more than he delivers, both conceptually and in the heft and weight of his playing.

 Crazy People Music Columbia 466870-2 Marsalis; Kenny Kirkland (p); Robert Hurst (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 1–3/90.

 The Beautyful Ones Are Not Yet Born Columbia 468896-2 Marsalis; Wynton Marsalis (t); Robert Hurst (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 5/91.

Hurst and Watts are musicians of resolute power and high craft, and they provide Marsalis with the bedrock he needs to contextualize his playing. Crazy People Music is a solidly realized tenor-and-rhythm date, full of elegant playing, but the music on The Beautyful Ones Are Not Yet Born is better still. The recording sounds warmer and more specifically focused, and the long, stretched-out improvisations insist that Marsalis has his perfect, singular setting in the trio with Hurst and Watts (Wynton has one brief cameo). 'Citizen Tain' has some of the wit of Sonny Rollins working against Philly Joe Jones on Newk's Time. 'Gilligan's Isle' and the steeply driven title-tune are aristocratic improvisations in which the leader finds a path away from merely discursive blowing. His soprano sounds pretty good, too.

 I Heard You Twice The First Time Columbia 472169-2 Marsalis; Wynton Marsalis, Earl Gardner (t); Delfeayo Marsalis, David Sager (tb); Wessell Anderson (as); Kenny Kirkland (p); B. B. King, John Lee Hooker (g, v); Russell Malone, Joe Louis Walker (g); Reginald Veal, Robert Hurst (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts, Herlin Riley, Bernard Purdie (d); Thomas Hollis, Roscoe Carroll, Carl Gordon, Charles Dutton, Linda Hopkins (v). N.D.

(*) Bloomington Columbia 473771-2 Marsalis; Robert Hurst (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 9/91.

Branford's blues album is somewhat lighter than Wynton's three-volume dissertation, but there's still a tendency to ramble. The crackling 'Rib Tip Johnson', with superb guitar by Russell Malone, would have been better at five minutes rather than nine, and B. B. King's feature also runs into flab. 'Sidney In Da Haus' is an impeccably arranged small-group piece, 'Mabel' hires John Lee Hooker for one of his show-stealing cameos, and the rest is good Branford, swinging hard, often connecting. Bloomington, though, is his least-adorned, maybe his best record. A snapshot of a live date from Indiana with his regular partners, the music makes a virtue of its open-ended situation; away from studio microphones, one can hear the terrific heat and tumbling spontaneity that this group can put out in a live situation. There is a treatment of 'Everything Happens To Me' that wipes out the song itself, all stark corners and cold stares; a bumping 'Friday The Thirteenth'; a vast 'Xavier's Lair'. Dead spots, too, and Delfeayo Marsalis's sound is as questionable as usual, but a fine record.

(*) The Dark Keys Columbia CK 67876 Marsalis; Kenny Garrett (as); Joe Lovano (ts); Reginald Veal (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 96.

Where Wynton's records become more precise, more finished, Branford's got looser, even wilder – or so it seems on the surface. Marsalis never quite surrenders himself to the music, even when, as in the tornado title-track, he gets as close as he ever has to Coltrane-ish outpourings. As free-flowing as this date is, the man's sense of control is ironclad. On gentler terrain ('A Thousand Autumns', 'Blutain') he plays with a kind of impassive stoicism. When challenged by Lovano or Garrett (one track apiece), he digs in and plants his feet. As usual, a record to admire, a tough one to warm to, but prolonged acquaintance has increased our admiration.

(*) Requiem Columbia 069655-2 Marsalis; Kenny Kirkland (p); Eric Revis (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 8–11/98.

Kirkland passed away while the group was planning a third session to complete the album, and the record was left 'unfinished'. Once again, this is an imperfect statement from a perfectionist musician. But its merits are powerful indeed. The sting of Kirkland's death is made more unhappy by the excellence of his playing here, from the forcefulness of 'Doctone' to the bittersweetness of 'A Thousand Autumns'; and in 'Lykief' he and Marsalis seem to be running virtuoso rings around each other. But there remains the sense that these are brilliant men playing for themselves, and these overlong tracks could use editing.

 Contemporary Jazz Columbia CK 63850 Marsalis; Joey Calderazzo (p); Eric Revis (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 12/99.

His farewell to Columbia is striking, more for its pointlessness than anything else. The music is replete with the usual muscle – Watts shows off (but what a show-off!), Calderazzo fills up space and most of the tracks are too long. 'Cheek To Cheek' has a sense of humour, sort of. Took four days in the studio. At Criss Cross, they'd have nailed it in one.

(*) The Steep Anthology Columbia 512913-2 As various albums above. 4/83–8/98.

This best-of draws on nine albums and adds one previously unreleased live track (Monk's 'Evidence') from the Village Vanguard in 1989 – which is good enough to make one hanker to hear the rest of that set. We've grumbled and generally given Branford a bit of a hard time in this entry, but when boiled down to the ten great tracks in this collection, the man's mastery of the saxophone and his love of just playing jazz do shine through. Away from conceptual agendas, he sounds in a great lineage of tenor-players – Hawkins, Rollins, Coltrane, why not? – and able to add something of his own to that distinguished roll-call.

 A Jazz Celebration Marsalis Music MARCD 3302 Marsalis; Wynton Marsalis (t); Delfeayo Marsalis, Lucien Barbarin (tb); Ellis Marsalis, Harry Connick Jr (p); Roland Guerin (b); Jason Marsalis (d). 4/01.

Not all Marsalises are created equal. As players Delfeayo and Jason might come from different stock to Wynton and Branford, neither of whom have to try too hard here. It's the trumpet and tenor interplay which counts, and it's good enough to make one wish that the old quintet of 20 years earlier could still be around and striking the kind of sparks they do on the glittering 'Cain And Abel'. Otherwise, this family show of strength, in celebration of their pop's retirement from education, is good-natured and democratically entertaining. Harry Connick sits in and has a couple of funny lines. It's fine.

(*) Romare Beardon Revealed Marsalis Music 11661-3306-2 Marsalis; Wynton Marsalis (t); Delfeayo Marsalis (tb); Ellis Marsalis, Joey Calderazzo, Harry Connick Jr (p); Doug Wamble (g); Eric Revis, Reginald Veal (b); Jason Marsalis, Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 7/03.

A bit of a strange one, in dedication/homage to the painter. The music includes pieces by Lovie Austin, James P. Johnson, Ellington and Morton, which makes it sound more like a Wynton than a Branford project. There's also 'J Mood', revived for the first time since the '80s. It's a vivid record, more likeable than many a Marsalis project, and maybe it'll have more durability too.

 Eternal Marsalis Music 1161-3309-2 Marsalis; Joey Calderazzo (p); Eric Revis (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). N.D.

A handsomely tailored ballad album, and Marsalis even gives us 'Dinner For One Please, James', an ancient tune once covered by Coleman Hawkins. The title-track and 'Gloomy Sunday' feel overlong and not so much effortful as too filled in. The quartet have never sounded more accomplished, and the music, as so often, is tough to really warm to.

(*) Braggtown Marsalis Music MARCD 1100 Marsalis; Joey Calderazzo (p); Eric Revis (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 3/06.

This comes straight out of the traps with the pugnaciously funky 'Jack Baker', then notches back after a good workout to deliver the bittersweet balladry of Calderazzo's 'Hope'. And so it goes from there: Watts stoking, and bringing in the crazy 'Blakzilla', Revis keeping it watertight, Calderazzo sounding more convincing on the slower cuts, Marsalis bossy but carrying it off with witty style and even self-parody. It's the best thing for ages.

Also, in brief:

 Trio Jeepy Columbia 465134-2 2CD. 1/88.

A rambling jam session with the amazingly durable Milt Hinton (b) on some tracks: illuminated by some brilliant moments.

() Footseps Of Our Fathers Marsalis Music MARCD 3301. 12/01.
Hubris, surely, for anyone to attempt covers of 'The Freedom Suite' and 'A Love Supreme', topped and tailed with Ornette's 'Giggin'' and John Lewis's 'Concorde' – they all come out as mere repertory.

Ellis Marsalis (born 1934)

PIANO

Played and taught for decades in his native New Orleans with no recognition beyond his playing circles until he sired the most famous jazz dynasty of the day.

 The Classic Ellis Marsalis Boplicity CDBOP 016 Marsalis; Nat Perrilliat (ts); Marshall Smith (b); James Black (d). 1–3/63.
One can hear where Wynton got his even-handed delineation of melody from and where Branford's aristocratic elegance of line is rooted. The dynastic founder isn't beyond tossing in the occasional surprise, but mostly he favours careful interpretations of standards, sparsely harmonized and delicately spelt out, with a few simple but cleverly hooked originals to lend a little extra personality. This is a rarity, a quartet dating from the early '60s in which the pianist leads a group featuring the Coltrane follower Perrilliat, and the jittery, post-Elvin Jones drums of Black, whose unsettling beats keep the group teetering on the brink of a chaos that the others carefully navigate.

(*) A Night At Snug Harbor, New Orleans Evidence ECD 22129-2 Marsalis; Nicholas Payton (t); Tony Dagradi, Rick Margitza, Donald Harrison (ts); Bill Huntington (b); Art Blakey, David Lee Jr (d). 4/89.
This is his best record: a wonderfully disciplined jam session that has amazingly few longueurs (even at over 70 minutes). Payton's only appearance is with Blakey sitting in on one track, and the trumpeter (then only 15!) does nothing special. It's the keen interplay of the three tenormen with a splendid rhythm section that makes the music happen. Dagradi is all muscle and intensity, Harrison (present on only three tracks) is the epitome of refinement, and Margitza finds himself somewhere between the two. The blend works beautifully, and Marsalis himself seems to quietly call the various changes of dynamic via his own playing. Harrison's ballad feature on 'I Can't Get Started' is gorgeous; Ellis has a notably graceful 'The Very Thought Of You' to himself; and the expected blowout on the closing 'A Night In Tunisia' actually has power in reserve all through.

 Duke In Blue /  Ruminations In New York Columbia CK 63631 / ESP 4000 Marsalis (p solo). 3/99; 5/03.
A sequence of Ellington interpretations, with a blues coda in the form of the title-track. Marsalis is at his most thoughtful and wide-ranging: stride, boogie and even Latin-styled piano forms are on show at various points. Appearing in Duke's centenary year, this was a worthy homage, but it doesn't stand out from many others. The New York disc is very tightly, almost intrusively recorded, which actually helps rescue it from eavesdropped musing. A pleasant record, but with no sense of occasion.

Jason Marsalis (born 1977)

DRUMS

The youngest Marsalis on record stays close to home.

 The Year Of The Drummer Basin Street BSR 0301-2 Marsalis; Antonio Gambrell (t); Derek Douget (ss, as); Jonathan Lefcoski (p); Jason Stewart (b). 98.
 Music In Motion Basin Street BSR 0302-1 As above, except omit Gambrell, Stewart; add John Ellis (ts); Peter Harris (b). 12/99.
Marsalis sets up his New Orleans necessities with the overdubbed drum prelude 'In The Tradition'. The city's second-line rhythm dominates both discs one way or the other, with sidebars on march, montuno and maracatu. They're drummers' discs, and the other players are often locked into whatever rhythmical essay their leader wants to deliver. 'Death March Of Our Time' is meant to use the funeral march groove of old marching bands, 'modern harmonies and Elvin Jones-influenced swing', but it sounds like an ordinary slow blues to us. Still, Marsalis is out to enjoy his music, and the records have a sense of fun. Only here and there, as on 'Discipline Strikes Again' from Music In Motion, does the family earnestness overtake matters. If there's a problem, it's that the other players aren't individual enough.

Wynton Marsalis (born 1961)

TRUMPET

Studied at Juilliard, but was already playing concertos in his teens, and funk on the side. Joined Art Blakey in 1980, but began recording as a leader in 1982. Since then he has followed a meteoric course of recording, teaching, touring, composing, acting as Artistic Director of Jazz At Lincoln Center (since 1992), speaking out, accepting awards, attracting controversy and playing the trumpet.

(*) Wynton Marsalis Columbia CK 37574 Marsalis; Branford Marsalis (ts, ss); Herbie Hancock, Kenny Kirkland (p); Ron Carter, Charles Fambrough, Clarence Seay (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts, Tony Williams (d). 81.
What a weight of expectation and responsibility fell on Wynton Marsalis's shoulders. At 20, not quite overnight, he became the nominate leader and mouthpiece of a new traditionalism in jazz. In Stanley Crouch he had his éminence noire, an able polemicist and spokesman with a voice as ringingly clear as Marsalis's trumpet.

A front-line role in the Jazz Messengers obviously doesn't constitute obscurity, but there was a dramatic turn from gifted apprentice to star-in-waiting. In 1981, he parted company from Art Blakey, with the boss's blessing, went on the road with a quartet, and immediately laid claim to the then discarded mantle of Miles Davis, who later spurned the young pretender at a bizarre showdown in Canada.

Marsalis shows total class in the company of Hancock, Carter and Williams. It's clear, though, that he is also building his own cohort of like-minded players. The opening 'Father Time', which features elder brother Branford and the lyrical Kirkland, is an astonishing major-label debut, a beautifully structured piece which uncovers a slew of improvisational ideas in a short span. Marsalis himself never sounds as if he's up on a soapbox, as happened from time to time later on. He's always got something to say and he does so with a simplicity that is as refreshing as rain.

Perhaps inevitably, perhaps rightly, much of the critical attention was directed towards the tracks with the senior players. Carter's 'RJ' and Williams's melancholic 'Sister Cheryl' bracket a furious stop-action Marsalis composition called 'Hesitation', which is actually a neo-bop variation on 'I Got Rhythm' and was presumably got up for the Messengers. A near perfectly weighted programme closes with 'Twilight', one of the loveliest things he has ever done.

 Think Of One Columbia CK 38641 Marsalis; Branford Marsalis (ts, ss); Kenny Kirkland (p); Phil Bowler (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 83.

 Hothouse Flowers Columbia CK 39530 Marsalis; Branford Marsalis (ts, ss); Kent Jordan (af); Kenny Kirkland (p); Ron Carter (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 5/84.

The younger players must indeed have felt like hothouse flowers, brought on in a rich mulch of label enthusiasm and under a glare of media attention. Marsalis's tone is hard and unflawed, producing patterns of sound like petals made of some hard but malleable metal. On 'Later', one of the better tracks on the 1983 album, he manages to find an idiom that contrives to evoke connections from Bubber Miley all the way to Butch Morris.

A year on, he sounds detached, even remote; the colours are intense, the ideas as rich and exotic as one would wish, but there is no real emotional engagement with the music, just a series of brilliantly executed ideas. 'Stardust' is a tour de force and, like 'When You Wish Upon A Star', seems confected out of next to nothing, just the melody and a gently oscillating chord-pattern. Branford sounds aristocratic and remote. Watts is the key element, bright and crisp, often echoing Kirkland's chordal patterns on his toms and cymbals.

* Black Codes (From The Underground) Columbia CK 40009 Marsalis; Branford Marsalis (ss, ts); Kenny Kirkland (p); Ron Carter, Charnett Moffett (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 1/85.

Within a year, two of Marsalis's very best showings on record, neither of which he has ever bettered. Watts is again absolutely central to the sound, particularly given the decision to dispense with a second horn. Black Codes is a highly committed record, not just in its referencing of 19th-century slave law, but also in the sheer commitment of Marsalis's playing. The title-piece is his strongest single performance since 'Father Time', sorrowful and full of unaffected wisdom. 'Phryzzinian Man' has him playing stately modes, almost classical in conception. 'Chambers Of Tain' is a Kirkland composition, a caustically intense feature for the drummer.

CORE COLLECTION

* J Mood

Columbia CK 40308 Marsalis; Marcus Roberts (p); Robert Leslie Hurst III (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 12/85.

A key recording. This is the first time he sounds completely relaxed and in possession of his own language, and though it was a record that intensified the debate about neo-traditionalism against experiment and contemporaneity, the actual music gives no sense of that. 'Much Later' seems to reference Miles Davis in some obscure way. 'Skain's Domain' and the beautiful 'Presence That Lament Brings' touch the opposite boundaries of the trumpeter's range, suggesting that his great quality is not after all virtuosic flash and fire but a deep-rooted expressiveness which maintains its integrity all the way from fiery individualism to elegiac regret.

(*) Marsalis Standard Time: Volume 1 Columbia 468713 Marsalis; Marcus Roberts (p); Robert Leslie Hurst III (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 5–9/86.

 Standard Time: Volume 2 – Intimacy Calling Columbia 468273 Marsalis; Wessell Anderson (as); Todd Williams (ts); Marcus Roberts (p); Robert Leslie Hurst III, Reginald Veal (b); Herlin Riley, Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). 9/87–8/90.

(*) Standard Time: Volume 3 – The Resolution Of Romance Columbia CK 46143 Marsalis; Ellis Marsalis (p); Reginald Veal (b); Herlin Riley (d). 90.

The first of these albums was wonderfully judged, a programme of pieces that distanced him from the modernists without ever consigning him to the ranks of the Old Believers. Marsalis Standard Time retains its burnish and class. As ever, there is a faint suspicion that the trumpeter predetermines his solos, trading in spontaneity and fire for control, but nevertheless the ideas are always vivid. Two versions of 'Cherokee', the first with mute and one of his most uncomplicatedly inventive essays, the second more orderly and discursive, but left unresolved. Roberts has an unaccompanied feature on 'Memories Of You'.

Marsalis has always shown tremendous loyalty and respect to his sidemen, qualities that significantly dent charges of arrogance and remoteness. He also sits out 'East Of The Sun' on Intimacy Calling, the less effective of the two later Standard Times. The extra horns bring nothing of any great substance, and Roberts seems to have difficulty making his presence felt. The quartet with Marsalis Sr, Veal and Riley offers a quieter sound from that of the groups with Roberts and Watts, and this is the one of the three which most consistently surprises now. Marsalis himself is in reflective mood throughout, relying on soft, almost sotto voce harmony effects and a wonderfully lachrymose wah-wah on 'The Seductress'.

 The Majesty Of The Blues Columbia CK 45091 Marsalis; Teddy Riley (t); Freddie Lonzo (tb); Michael White (cl); Wessell Anderson (as); Todd Williams (ts, ss); Marcus Roberts (p); Reginald Veal (b); Herlin Riley (d); Rev. Jeremiah Wright (v). 10/88.

It is inaccurate to call Majesty a revivalist album. As before, Wynton manages to combine a classical sound with a thoroughly modern diction, but this concept-piece, a celebration of the music and culture of New Orleans, is hog-tied by worthy ambitions. Dr Michael White, who is perhaps more convincing as a scholar than as a player, appears on 'New Orleans Function', a suite of authentic-sounding ideas which consigns Marsalis to second place behind Teddy Riley. White is a curious performer, consistently sharp in tone and not too agile, but somehow always able to make a significant contribution. Roberts's use of bebop harmonies on the title-track, also known as 'The Puheeman Strut', and 'Hickory Dickory Dock' helps draw attention to Marsalis's restorative concern for the continuity of jazz music.

The long suite is essentially a funeral procession for 'The Death Of Jazz' and is dominated by a 17-minute sermon, 'Premature Autopsies', written by Stanley Crouch and delivered by the Rev. Wright. The sonorous text – a good deal more convincing than Crouch's usual one-note spiel – draws attention away from the instrumental backing, but this deserves attention, too, an excellent example of the way Marsalis's music retains its connections with impassioned speech. Crouch's tribute to the nobility of jazz, and in particular the example of Duke Ellington, is surprisingly moving, if rather closer to William Bradford Huie than to Martin Luther King.

(*) Thick In The South Columbia CK 47977 Marsalis; Joe Henderson (ts); Marcus Roberts (p); Robert Leslie Hurst III (b); Elvin Jones, Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d). N.D.

 Uptown Ruler Columbia CK 47976 Marsalis; Todd Williams (ts); Marcus Roberts (p); Reginald Veal (b); Herlin Riley (d). N.D.

(*) Levee Low Moan Columbia CK 47975 Marsalis; Wessell Anderson (as); Todd Williams (ts); Marcus Roberts (p); Reginald Veal (b); Herlin Riley (d). N.D.

Simultaneously released under the more or less meaningless rubric 'Soul Gestures In Southern Blue': Thick In The South stands up best, though mostly for Joe Henderson's wonderfully wise and unruffled performances. Marsalis himself sounds like a man casting about for things to say; that he manages to find and utter them can't be questioned, but there is an unattractive air of contrivance. Jones is the other senior guest, but he's over-emphatic and rather dull in comparison to Watts's muscular groove. Roberts seems ill at ease this time around, perhaps increasingly hampered by sideman status.

Uptown Ruler is one of the least attractive-sounding Marsalis albums in the catalogue. The accompaniments are recessed and almost cloudy, perhaps to throw into high contrast the leader's strongly etched blues ideas. 'Down Home With Homey' seemed an interesting attempt to combine an old-fashioned idiom with the rhythmic and colouristic values of the M-Base generation. The third of the group is interesting largely for pointing the way forward to Marsalis's new mid-size band and a new, more obviously arranged sound. The saxophones are beautifully voiced and Roberts regains something of his accustomed vigour. 'Jig's Jig' is extraordinary.

(*) Blue Interlude Columbia CK 48729 Marsalis; Wycliffe Gordon (tb); Wessell Anderson (as); Todd Williams (ts, ss, cl); Marcus Roberts (p); Reginald Veal (b); Herlin Riley (d). 92.

The new septet was a breath of fresh air, a big, spacious sound, with plenty of incident, varied textures and a remarkable even-handedness which delivered huge dividends live.

Increasingly, Marsalis was being seen as the heir apparent to Duke Ellington, a composer/performer with the totalizing gift of absolute organization and a parallel ability to give his colleagues enough freedom to express themselves. Todd Williams's 'Jubilee Suite' is a good case in point, or not a good case in point since it emerges as a flabby and shapeless sequence of unrelated ideas. The trombonist's 'And The Band Played On' is infinitely more interesting, a tune that other bandleaders must surely have looked at with envy. Marsalis is playing astutely and with infinite assurance. His long monologue on 'Sugar Cane And Sweetie Pie' sets up the title-piece's opposition of motifs, moods and harmonic atmospheres, out of which develops one of the trumpeter's most flowing improvisations, a graceful, swirling thing.

* Citi Movement (Griot New York) Columbia C2K 53324 2CD As above, except omit Roberts; add Eric Reed (p). N.D.

As the '90s advanced, it was clear that Marsalis required dramatic and programmatic triggers to give the music definition. Citi Movement was written for the brilliant choreographer Garth Fagan, whose approach to the dance also balances traditional and contemporary values.

By this point, the septet is playing like a single entity. The first section, 'Cityscape', has an energy and drive reminiscent of Charles Mingus's Jazz Workshop projects, and surely Stanley Crouch's invocation of Mingus is no coincidence. It's a deeply stratified and textured piece, with an enormous inner propulsion. A further dimension of the score is Marsalis's new interest in the African components of Afro-American culture. 'Transatlantic Echoes' is searching and thoughtful and it resolutely refuses to lean on bland musicological borrowings. Instead, Marsalis has created his own holistic Africanism, one that is entirely conditioned by his personal circumstances and ideas, rather than being adopted like fancy dress. The final movement, 'Some Present Moments Of The Future', sketches out in ever more lifelike outline his vision of a viable jazz tradition.

(*) Joe Cool's Blues Columbia CK 66880 Marsalis; Chuck Findley (t); Wycliffe Gordon, Delfeayo Marsalis (tb); Wessell Anderson (as); Branford Marsalis (ts); Victor Goines (ts, cl); Tom Peterson (bs); Ellis Marsalis, Eric Reed (p); Reginald Veal, Benjamin Wolfe (b); Martin Butler, Herlin Riley (d); Germaine Bazzle (v). 4–8/94.

Marsalis has said that the only jazz heard on television when he was a boy was in Charlie Brown cartoon themes, written by Vince Guaraldi, a friend of Ellis Marsalis. Veal and Butler partner Ellis in the trio for four of the 13 numbers, with a fifth, 'Little Birdie', arranged for a larger group with vocalist. For the rest, this was a joyously nostalgic curtain-call for the septet. If Schulz seems an unlikely source for the blues, consider how finely his world balances hope and pain, disappointment, frustration, sheer delight.

'On Peanuts Playground' is a wonderful piece, delightful and brooding by turns. With perverse inevitability, Marsalis's own themes sound more like the real thing than Guaraldi's familiar signatures. 'Little Birdie' should probably have ended proceedings, with just a return of 'Joe Cool's Blues' to round things out, but the weakest of the originals, 'Why, Charlie Brown', comes in at that point to blunt the impact.

(*) Blood On The Fields Columbia C3K 57694 3CD Marsalis; Russell Gunn, Roger Ingram, Marcus Printup (t); Wayne Goodman, Ron Westray (tb); Wycliffe Gordon (tb, tba); Wessell Anderson (as); Victor Goines (ts, ss, cl, bcl); Robert Stewart (ts); Walter Blanding (ss); James Carter (bs, bcl, cl); Michael Ward (vn); Eric Reed (p); Reginald Veal (b); Herlin Riley (d, perc); Miles Griffith, Jon Hendricks, Cassandra Wilson (v). 94.

Written almost half a century after Ellington's Black, Brown And Beige, this is a huge achievement, inevitably patchy and in places overcooked, but filled with superb jazz writing. Indeed, one can imagine a magnificent instrumental or orchestral suite derived from the music in Blood On The Fields. As a meditation on Southern slavery, its human and cultural impact, it is most wholly convincing when it delivers its points plainly.

Some of the texts, though sung well by Wilson, Griffith and the veteran Hendricks, are over-earnest, but the emotion and the depth of thought behind them cannot be questioned.

It starts on a slave ship on the notorious 'middle passage', and puts together two characters, Jesse and Leona, divided by birth but united by the shared circumstance of the 'peculiar institution' of slavery. The music digs deep back into the traditions, and is marked by dancing syncopations, deep blues and African songs, powerful chants and testimonies. The dramatic thread is simple enough to sustain conviction and not to overpower the more purely musical elements of the work..

Marsalis's soloing is central to the drama, but he has wisely chosen to treat this as an ensemble piece, spreading the emphasis over a number of players, allowing them to underline the vocal line with sometimes literal, sometimes ironic motifs. Anyone who saw either the Lincoln Center premiere on All Fools' Day 1994 or subsequent European performances will understand its sheer impact. As a recorded experience, it is too long and difficult to absorb comfortably.

(*) Standard Time, Volume 4 – Marsalis Plays Monk Columbia CK 67503 Marsalis; Wycliffe Gordon (tb); Wessell Anderson (as); Walter Blanding, Victor Goines (ts); Eric Reed (p); Reginald Veal, Ben Wolfe (b); Herlin Riley (d). 9/93–10/94.

Fascinating that Wynton's stated intention for this near-inevitable but long-deferred encounter should be to recast Monk's music in the form of the ensemble jazz of Louis Armstrong's jazz orchestras of 1927 and 1928. A double homage, or an act of quiet subversion? Marsalis's own characterization sums up the unexpected sound of the fourth Standard Time project: '… [T]extural changes. Thick ensembles, then a duet, or just a few people playing. Breaks. Surprises. Long solos. Very short ones. Strange tags on the end of tunes.'

Marsalis uses himself sparingly as a soloist, placing the emphasis very much on ensemble values, and in so doing fails to stamp either individuality or authority on music that will always have the last laugh on any revisionist. The jaggy urgency of 'Evidence' and the almost skittish playfulness of 'We See' which follows point to the extremes the album skirts and hint at some of its oddity of mood, though this oddity is of a different sort from Monk's.

Perhaps predictably, Marsalis has chosen to include amid the 14 tracks some less well-known items: 'Worry Later', 'Brake's Sake' and 'Let's Cool One' may take some moments to provenance. The standard of playing is as high and as disciplined as ever. The melting unisons of 'Monk's Mood' are glorious, and Marsalis and Anderson weave some absolute magic on 'Hackensack'. One to admire, rather than like.

 Standard Time, Volume 5: The Midnight Blues Columbia CK 68921 Marsalis; Eric Reed (p); Reginald Veal (b); Lewis Nash (d); stg. 9/98.

Interestingly, this time out, Stanley Crouch's liner-note steers sharply away from rhetorical underpinning of Marsalis's traditionalism. Instead, it's a miniature film treatment about a woman called Ardella Jefferson, who divides her time between reading Derek Walcott's Nobel Lecture, 'The Antilles: Fragments Of Epic Memory', and musing on the sound of trumpet and strings.

Compare these dozen immaculately executed tracks with, say, Chet Baker's final concerts and it immediately becomes clear that Ardella's likening of the sound to 'a brass cherry' on top of orchestral cream is all too accurate. Even with busted chops and no great appetite for the struggle, Chet sounded lived in, wearily passionate, precariously alive. Marsalis plays with total authority, but the effect is still hard and oddly virginal. 'Glad To Be Unhappy' touches neither end of the spectrum convincingly, and yet as an exercise in controlled articulation it is genuinely awe-inspiring. Only Frank Sinatra was ever able to pull off a whole album of such uniform melancholy. Marsalis can't quite avoid referencing Miles's classic 'It Never Entered My Mind'; the comparison isn't flattering.

The muted solo on 'Baby, Won't You Please Come Home' is thin and weakly recorded, the only time that Steve Epstein and Todd Whitelock's open and unscreened 'live' recording at the Masonic Grande Lodge in New York City sounded underpowered. The emotional charge picks up almost at the end with a superb reading of 'My Man's Gone Now', four and a half minutes that are almost worth all the rest put together, but then Marsalis throws away the moment with the long and indulgent title-track, a mini-opera without conflict and without a convincing protagonist.

* Standard Time: Volume 6 – Mr Jelly Lord Columbia CK 69872 Marsalis; Lucien Barbarin (tb); Wycliffe Gordon (tb, tba, t); Wessell Anderson (as); Victor Goines (ss, ts, cl); Michael White (cl); Harry Connick Jr, Eric Lewis, Danilo Perez, Eric Reed (p); Donald Vappie (bj, g); Reginald Veal (b); Herlin Riley (d). 1/99 (12/93).

Sometimes even Wynton must wish Stanley Crouch would keep his mouth shut. Likening these modern – but unmodernized – versions of Jelly Roll Morton tunes to actor/director Kenneth Branagh's Shakespearean films isn't necessarily the most helpful imprimatur. As it turns out, Wynton's performance needs no Mortonesque hyperbole. There is no attempt to lend these astonishing compositions any false grandeur; they have quite enough as it is.

Wynton's playing has rarely sounded so relaxed and so raw. Even his cover-picture, looking tired, slumped astride a packing crate and resting an elbow on his instrument, suggests a measure of artisanly relaxation, like a man just coming off shift rather than a man waiting backstage at Carnegie Hall. 'The Pearls' and 'Dead Man Blues' see him reach levels of expression that will astonish even admirers.

Perez and Connick have cameo parts only, but the basic line-up is by now a familiar one. We have never been persuaded by the clarinet-playing of Dr Michael White, which sounds a quarter-note sharp, but the two trombone-players are majestically idiomatic and the saxophonists never sound as if they are on day-release from Bebop Academy. Our only faint quibble would be the drumming of Herlin Riley, which occasionally seems anachronistic.

A must for blindfold tests of the future is track 15. On 6 December 1993, Wynton and pianist Eric Reed went to the Edison National Historic Site at West Orange, New Jersey, and recorded 'Tom Cat Blues' direct to a wax cylinder. The result is still unmistakably Marsalis, but the old technology helps provide a ghostly coda to a remarkable record.

* Live At The Village Vanguard Columbia CK 69876/ACK 61408/14 7CD (US)/8CD (Europe) Marsalis; Wycliffe Gordon (tb); Wessell Anderson (as); Victor Goines, Todd Williams (ts); Marcus Roberts, Eric Reed (p); Reginald Veal, Ben Wolfe (b); Herlin Riley (d). 3/90–12/94.

Priced as a bargain deal and presented as a parade of great sets at jazz's most celebrated venue, here's Wynton and his men across a four-year span, with some eight hours of music. The discs are programmed to represent a week's work, with each having a different character, of sorts. Besides new versions of some choice pieces from his own canon, there are standards, blues, plenty of Monk, 40 minutes of 'Citi Movement', and 55 minutes of 'In The Sweet Embrace Of Life'. Wynton chaffs with the audience, welcomes celebrities – Sweets Edison, Lionel Hampton – and generally sets out to make sure that everyone has a good time. It's a fun set to play through: the music always seems lively and on its toes, the band precise but flying on the flair of the leader and his appetite for work. Besides the leader's playing, perhaps the greatest pleasure comes in the efforts of Veal, Wolfe and Riley, an engine-room of superb polish and palpable swing.

There are some inevitable historical parallels – with Rollins at the Vanguard, or, more specifically, with the comprehensiveness of the Miles Davis Plugged Nickel set. Yet this is a more calculated scripture than those on-the-hoof documents, and it suits the moment of the Marsalis doctrine. What one hears is elegance and poise; there is little in the way of risk, even less in the way of danger. But that is Wynton's way, and for the duration of this it sounds terrific.

 The Magic Hour Blue Note 91717 Marsalis; Eric Lewis (p); Carlos Henriquez (b); Ali Muhammad Jackson (d); Bobby McFerrin, Dianne Reeves (v). 8/03.

* Live At The House Of Tribes Blue Note 77132 Marsalis; Wessell Anderson (as); Eric Lewis (p); Kengo Nakamura (b); Joe Farnsworth (d); Orlando Q. Rodriguez, Robert Rucker (perc). 8/05.

Initially, the new contract with Blue Note was a disappointment. On the first record Marsalis sounded as if he'd gone back several years in developmental terms, or perhaps he's pitching his thing to what he thinks is a less sophisticated audience. Either way, it's a mistake and The Magic Hour doesn't even sit with the middle order of his Columbia albums. The title-track almost sounds like an audition performance: here's everything I can do, packed into 13 minutes. The opener is much better and 'Free To Be' and 'Big Fat Hen' are clever, accomplished tracks which mix subtlety and boisterous humour. 'Stardust' is the trumpeter's signature theme, played here with hints of melancholy and a stoical defiance.

House Of Tribes is a near-perfect live record, packed with atmosphere and marked by some powerful, wise playing from Wynton and a strong new band. The audience is much in evidence, but almost as participants rather than as a distraction, and there's a spontaneity to the whole thing, as when Robert Rucker gets up to bash a tambourine in the second-line finale.

 From The Plantation To The Penitentiary Blue Note 66369 Marsalis; Walter Blanding (ss, ts); Dan Nimmer (p); Carlos Henriquez (b); Ali Jackson (d); Jennifer Sanon (v). 6/06.

This is an angry record, full of shaming rebukes about the direction of post-9/11 America, the failure of the liberal consensus, the disaster of Hurricane Katrina, which devastated Marsalis's native city, and the absence of any real stand by the musical community on any of these issues. The only point at which all this is made specific is in the closing 'Where Y'all At?', a spoken-word coda that calls on the liberals and radicals of the '60s, now in power, to walk the walk. It's perfectly placed and timed. The whole album has built to that point, from the majestic sweep of the long title-track which opens the album, through 'Find Me', 'Do (Y)our Thing' and 'Supercapitalism', which sounds like it might be agitprop but is actually just good strong jazz. So there is nothing abrupt or unexpected about Wynton's outburst. He sounds mad as hell, which makes the contained and disciplined playing to that point all the more impressive.

This isn't a vintage group like those of the mid-'80s, but it has a coherence of purpose that is increasingly impressive. Sanon's contribution has promise, too, though she's no Dianne Reeves.

Also, in brief:

 Popular Songs: The Best Of Wynton Marsalis Columbia 502298-2. 85–99.

Wynton's farewell to Columbia is scarcely ideal. There is the defining solo from 'Black Codes', the million-dollar balladry of 'Where Or When', the signature Marsalis step of 'Down Home With Homey' ... as a collection of tracks, it's fine.

(*) Live At Blues Alley Columbia CK 40675 2CD. 12/86.

Miles Davis had just left Columbia for Warners and in these live cuts from Washington, DC, Marsalis proved that black-tie gigs, classical concertos and ingratiating media and label attention hadn't dampened his fire.

(*) Crescent City Christmas Card Columbia CK 45287. 89.

Any disposition to cynicism at 'Wynton's Christmas Album' is dispelled by even the most sceptical hearing. Authentic New Orleans jazz combined with sheer fun.

 In This House, On This Morning Columbia C2K 53220 2CD. 5/92.

An Ellingtonian Sacred Concert, that plunges back into church music and the homely liturgy of the Afro-American communion to give an expressive impulse to the highly sophisticated sound of the septet. Overlong.

 Unforgivable Blackness: The Rise And Fall Of Jack Johnson Blue Note 64194. 9/96–9/03.

Like Miles's similarly inspired masterpiece, this was conceived as soundtrack music, to Ken Burns's doumentary. Familiar personnel, familiar invidious comparisons.

(*) The Marciac Suite Columbia CK 69877. 2/99.

A love letter to the Marciac Festival, where he has taught and performed for a number of years. Lovely playing from all hands, the leader at his sunniest, and 'Sunflowers' one of his catchiest pieces.

 Big Train Sony 69860. 12/98.

Ellingtonian in scope and sweep, but this evocation of the great American railroads, made with the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra lacks impact and any real sense of journey.

 Sweet Release & Ghost Story Sony 61690. 8/99.

Two ballet suites with the LCJO. Impressive writing, but again no big show-stopping number and some unexpected longueurs in the second piece.

 All Rise Sony Classical 89817. 9/01.

A millennium piece for the NY Phil, it acquired a new resonance after 9/11. Constructed in 12 movements, like a massive 12-bar blues, All Rise is crippled by its own ambition and by Wynton's seeming desire to pack in everything he knew about music. The coda is a brilliant second-line conception, expressing delight in resurrection or just in continued existence.

Warne Marsh (1927–87)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

His death onstage at Donte's, playing 'Out Of Nowhere', was oddly fitting. Born in LA, he was, along with Lee Konitz, Lennie Tristano's most prominent disciple, though the association with the altoist was of shorter standing than is often thought. His almost papery tone is instantly recognizable.

 Jazz Of Two Cities Fresh Sound FSRCD 196 2CD Marsh; Art Pepper (as); Ted Brown (ts); Ronnie Ball (p); Ben Tucker (b); Ben Morton (d). 56, 57.

 Music For Prancing VSOP 8 Marsh; Ronnie Ball (p); Red Mitchell (b); Stan Levey (d). 9/57.

 Live At Dana Point, 1957 VSOP 112 Marsh; Joe Albany (p); Bob Whitlock (b); Red Martinson (d). 10/57.

By far the most loyal and literal of the Tristano disciples, Warne Marsh sedulously avoided the 'jazz life', cleaving to an improvisatory philosophy that was almost chilling in its purity. Anthony Braxton called him the 'greatest vertical improviser' in the music, and a typical Marsh solo was discursive and rhythmically subtle, full of coded tonalities and oblique resolutions. He cultivated a glacial tone (somewhat derived from Lester Young) that splintered awkwardly in the higher register, very different to the Hodges/Bird/Rollins/Coltrane paradigms.

The early quartets are witty and smooth-toned, though Marsh sounds much closer to Stan Getz than he was to in later years. The Fresh Sound dates are bright and impeccably delivered, but it's the consistently overlooked Brown who wins the day with his 'Free Wheeling'. On the later date, the warmth is leavened by a rhythm section led by the remarkable Mitchell, whose unusual tunings and almost offhand ability to turn out terse countermelodies are a key element of a fine record. The association with Mitchell would prove to be one of the most successful in later years as well.

The Dana Point recordings (tapes held by Marsh's widow for many years) were made just after the rehearsals for The Right Combination, which isn't listed any more, and it provides a respectable impression of what that album sounded like. The tone is still dryish, but with more energy and heat than usually supposed, and Albany turns in some crisp solos.

(*) Release Record – Send Tape Wave CD 6 Marsh; Ronnie Ball (p); Peter Ind (b); Dick Scott (d). 12/59–8/60.
 More Jazz From The East Village Wave CD 9 As above, except omit Scott; add Eddie De Haas (b); Bob Minnicucci (d). 60.
Recorded largely at Peter Ind's home studio and consisting almost entirely of improvised solos played without the original melody, Release Record – Send Tape was considered commercial suicide on first release in 1967. What shines through here is a capacious musical intelligence which turns each of these brief performances – only the improvised 'Marshlight' is longer than five minutes – into something much more substantial. The other record is less compelling but fills in more of the picture of Marsh's activities at this time. He seems unfailingly inventive and thoughtful, but it's unnerving to hear him weaving those lines and stacked-up chords in front of such abecedarian accompaniments.

 Ne Plus Ultra hatOLOGY 603 Marsh; Gary Foster (as); Dave Parlato (b); John Tirabasso (d). 9 & 10/69.
Recorded on two separate occasions at Herrick Chapel Lounge, Occidental College, LA, with just 'You Stepped Out Of A Dream' from the earlier date. Apart from Foster, who makes a convincing stand-in for Lee Konitz, the group isn't at all well-known, but Parlato and Tirabasso seem to know what they're about and when the music goes free on the long 'Touch And Go' they're right there. There's a tiny taste of Bach's 'Two-Part Invention No. 13' at the end as if to say, 'Dry and classical? Us?', but for the most part the set is devoted to Tristano themes, 'Lennie's Pennies' and '317 E. 22nd', with a nice reading of Konitz's 'Subconscious-Lee' to round it out. Marsh plays with warmth and fire.

(*) Warne Marsh/Lee Konitz: Volume 1 /  ... Volume 2 /  ... Volume 3 Storyville STCD 4094-6 Marsh; Lee Konitz (as); Ole Kock Hansen (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Svend-Erik Nørregaard (d). 12/75.
 Live At The Montmartre Club: Volumes. 1–3 Storyville STCD 8201 / 8202 / 8303 As above, except add Alex Riel (d). 12/75.
Marsh and Konitz interlock gracefully on the live sessions from Fasching in Stockholm and the parallel sets from the Montmartre in Copenhagen. Where Konitz changed down the years, Marsh remained a dogged strict-constructionist, perhaps the last major exponent of Tristano's 'Cool School'. By the time of this much-heralded tour, Lee had moved somewhat to the left in musical terms and was playing a personalized bebop, as is evident on 'Au Privave' and 'Chi Chi' (Montmartre: Vol. 3). Marsh isn't left behind on the Parker tunes but they aren't quite his meat, and he attempts to spin the short, segmented themes out into longer, much more discursive and angular forms; by no means unattractive, but slightly alien to the concept.

 Unissued 1975 Studio Recordings Storyville 8259 Marsh; Dave Cliff (g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alan Levitt (d). 12/75.
(*) Unissued Copenhagen Studio Recordings Storyville 8278 As above, except omit Cliff. 12/75.
Marsh rarely played standards as straightforwardly as this, and these discs are a revelation for anyone who has tried to trace Marsh's course on record. The earlier disc, with Cliff providing harmonic accompaniment, is the less interesting, but there is no denying its attractiveness, and on 'God Bless The Child' the saxophonist touches areas of emotion rarely associated with him. The second album, recorded during the same sessions, comprises a dozen familiar tunes, from Parker's 'Confirmation' (already a contrafact) to 'When You're Smiling' and 'Every Time We Say Goodbye'. Supported by NHØP and the inventive Alan Levitt, he turns in a series of performances that confirm his brilliance as a melodic improviser. This is the kind of music that was to influence later avant-gardists like Anthony Braxton, who instinctively responded to Marsh's flow of ideas.

 All Music Nessa 7 Marsh; Lou Levy (p); Fred Atwood (b); Jake Hanna (d). 76.
Levy's 'Lunarcy' and 'On Purpose' show how good Marsh could be when he left the tune intact rather than simply working off vestigial chords as he does elsewhere on this. His own 'Background Music' is as obscure in origin as the Enigma Variations, though elsewhere he reworks the progression of relatively familiar standards.

 Berlin 1980 Gambit 69233 Marsh; Sal Mosca (p); Eddie Gomez (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 80.
Recorded live at the Berlin Philharmonic auditorium, this is a slightly unusual but highly effective date from Marsh, with crisp playing from Mosca and some delightful features from the sometimes tiresome Gomez. Clarke gives the metre some pep, but it's a rattly acoustic and the sound distorts here and there.

(*) In Copenhagen Storyville 1018514 Marsh; Kenny Drew (p); Bo Stief (b); Aage Tanggaard (d). 4/80.
Storyville are very much the keepers of the flame now. This elegant date is a reissue of I Got A Good One For You, briefly noted in our last edition. It finds Marsh delivering 11 tersely beautiful tunes – including bop classics and standards – but only really stretching out on 'Sophisticated Lady' and 'Star Eyes'. The title-track is the only original. Drew does his usual elegant job and the rhythm players are attentive and alert.

(*) Star Highs Criss Cross 1002 Marsh; Hank Jones (p); George Mraz (b); Mel Lewis (d). 8/82.
 A Ballad Album Criss Cross 1007 Marsh; Lou Levy (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); James Martin (d). 4/83.
 Newly Warne Storyville STCD 4162 Marsh; Susan Chen (p); George Mraz (b); Akira Tana (d). 3/85.
 Back Home Criss Cross 1023 Marsh; Jimmy Halperin (ts); Barry Harris (p); David Williams (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 3/86.
The Criss Crosses are a strong sequence, with Star Highs definitely the one to plump for, Listen to the straightened-out 'Moose The Mooche', on which Marsh does his patented elongation and simplification of the melody and accompaniment. So entire is it that theme and solos almost sound through-composed. Barry Harris and Albert 'Tootie' Heath are highly responsive on Back Home, with the pianist playing in a boppish blues idiom similar to that of Hawes 30 years before. Jimmy Halperin is a superfluous presence on Back Home, taking a second tenor part on 'Two, Not One', but adding nothing of substance to Warne's edgy solo.

 Two Days In The Life Of ... Storyville STCD 4165 Marsh; Ron Eschete (g); Jim Hughart (b); Sherman Ferguson (d). 87.
Just before Christmas 1987, Marsh collapsed and died at Donte's; he was playing 'Out Of Nowhere'. Two Days was recorded late in the day and with no warning that the end was already in view.

Marsh plays superbly to a very routine accompaniment, and only flashes of invention from the drummer relieve the one-dimensional nature of the group. Marsh, as ever, needs to be listened to patiently and carefully.

Also, in brief:

(*) An Unsung Cat: The Life And Music Of Warne Marsh Storyville 8314. 44–85.
Released in parallel with an excellent book about Warne and offers a splendid soundtrack to the narrative. The real bonus to a comprehensive and well thought-out anthology lies in early material like Herman's 'Apple Honey', played with the Teenagers, and a very rare rehearsal tape of Warne playing along to 'How High The Moon' from a Jamey Aebersold disc.

 Live In Las Vegas 1962 Naked City 7. 62.
He doesn't seem a very Las Vegas kind of guy, but Marsh worked the circuit with a mendicant's doggedness of purpose and this is a good quartet date with local guys.

(*) Marshlands Storyville STCD 1018366. 75–87.
An ideal introduction to Marsh albeit drawn from one label and one fruitful period.

 Sweet Basil 1980 Fresh Sound FSRCD 187. 9/80.
A happy duo with Red Mitchell (b). This was temporarily unavailable when we went to press but should return to circulation shortly.

John Marshall

TRUMPET

Formed Bopera House group with pianist Tardo Hammer.

 Bopera House VSOP #72 Marshall; Ralph Lalama (ts); Tardo Hammer (p); John Weber (b); Tom Melito (d). 6/88.
 Keep On Keepin' On Mons 10652 Marshall; Jesse Davis (as); Tardo Hammer (p); John Goldsby (b); Leroy Williams (d). 96.
Hard bop of a curiously unreconstructed sort, recorded under the tutelage of Rudy van Gelder, who virtually wrote the book. On the first record 'Sippin' At Bells' could almost be from a lost Blue Note of the late '50s. The second disc is slightly more appealing, but no more responsive to current trends. If that appeals, this is very much the album for you, crisply recorded and nicely packaged; if you want a little more contemporary challenge in your music, Bopera House aren't your guys. The only hint of controversy seems to have come when the Met objected to the band name and called their lawyers …

Hector Martignon

PIANO

Effective post-bop player who smoothly integrates Brazilian and some fusion elements.

 Portrait In Black And White Candid CCD 79727 Martignon; Donny McCaslin (ss, ts); Romero Lubambo (g); Jairo Moreno (b); Satoshi Takeishi (d); Manolo Badrena, Ray Barretto (perc); Gabriela Anders (v). 7–11/94.
 The Foreign Affair Candid CCD 79746 Martignon; Randy Brecker (t); Luis Bonilla (tb); Donny McCaslin (ss, ts); Don Byron (cl); Rubén Blades (v); Jairo Moreno (b); Satoshi Takeishi (d). 4-6/97.
(*) Refugee Zoho 200705 Martignon; Kenny Barron (p); Mark Whitfield, Edgardo Miranda, Justin Quinn (g); John Benitez, Richard Bona, Ken Freeman, Matthew Garrison, Eddie Gomez (b); Willard Dyson, Horacio 'El Negro' Hernández, Dafnis Prieto, Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d); Samuel Torres (perc). 07.
The frustrating thing about Martignon's debut is that one senses there's a very good trio album there, now somewhat clotted with 'guest' – we'd say gatecrasher – spots. His writing is intriguing, even if something like 'Hell's Kitchen Sarabande' suggest something of his desire to blend noisy clatter with cleverness. He doesn't pastiche the Jobim title-piece but gives it an intriguing spin. Again on the second record, there's a long dateline, suggesting the care that Martignon and producer Alan Bates have put into these discs. It's another fine disc – great title-track, other strong originals, 'My One And Only Love', some Bach – that makes you feel a one-day trio taping on a decent piano would have yielded more. Moreno and Takeishi are a quality firm.

Refugee picked up a Grammy nomination for best Latin jazz record, which is no more than its due. It's the most confidently integrated record yet, though it's a pity to see the trio not involved. 'Nomad' might have been a better title, in that he hops from one grouping to another. The encounter with main inspiration Kenny Barron (playing electric the way only he can) is terrific, but almost every track suggests that more of each individual group could have been successfully sustained.

Andy Martin

TROMBONE

West Coast slide-player in the Frank Rosolino mould.

 Andy Martin Quartet With Dave Pell Woofy 113 Martin; Dave Pell (ts); Larry Koonse (g); Trey Henry (b); Ray Brinker (d). 01.
 It's Fine … It's Andy! Fresh Sound FSRCD 5037 Martin; Jan Lundgren (p); Tom Warrington (b); Paul Kreibich (d). 8/02.
(*) How About You? Fresh Sound FSRCD 5044 Martin; Jan Lundgren (p); Chuck Berghofer (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 1/06.
Martin's much admired by musicians but not yet widely known by fans. He's a clever, deceptively easy-going player, whose knowledge of the music is underlined on the Fresh Sound, a project dedicated to the memory of Frank Rosolino, where all the Broadway tunes are put in their original show context, a little bit of gentle musicology that does the set no harm at all. To be fair, it's Alan Morgan's liner-booklet that really does the job on that, but Andy knows his history too. Sonny Rollins's 'Doxy' is in unexpected company on the earlier Fresh Sound, which establishes a very happy partnership with Lundgren, but Andy's chops make light of it. The Woofy set is of the almost-horizontal school of laid-back jazz, delightful but slightly underpowered. 'Line For Lewis' (dedicated to Vic) is derived from 'Limehouse Blues', cleverly done.

Claire Martin (born 1967)

VOICE

Relaxed, technically sound and able to invest a lyric with genuine drama, the most exciting female jazz singer to emerge in the '90s.

 The Waiting Game Linn AKD 018 Martin; Jim Mullen (g); Jonathan Gee (p); Arnie Somogyi (b); Clark Tracey (d). 12/91.

(*) Devil May Care Linn AKD 021 As above, except add Rick Taylor (tb, perc); Nigel Hitchcock (as); Iain Ballamy (ts, ss). 2/93.

(*) Old Boyfriends Linn AKD 028 As for The Waiting Game, except omit Gee; add Steve Melling (p). 5/94.

Martin was an inspired signing for Linn. Her expressiveness matures considerably between The Waiting Game and Devil May Care. Martin never over-dramatizes a lyric but delivers it with commendable conviction. She brings a playful poise to Bob Dorough's 'Devil May Care', and gives Noël Coward's 'If Love Were All' just the right mixture of sentiment and stiff upper lip. The other significant factor about the second album was Martin's songwriting skill. She has absorbed enough from the masters to handle the idiom with some confidence, and 'On Thin Ice' is a superb creation. Puzzlingly, and with the exception of the boppish 'Chased Out', co-written with Arnie Somogyi, the songs on Old Boyfriends are all covers. A later reference to writer's block may explain the hiatus. They are, though, covers which are picked with taste and imagination. Harold Arlen's 'When The Sun Comes Out' is a relatively conventional warm-up, but it's followed by an emotionally eclectic range of material, including Rupert Holmes's tough 'Partners In Crime', Artie Shaw's 'Moon Ray' and Jonathan Blair's oddly affecting 'I've Got News', a moving account of the end of an affair. The Tom Waits-composed title-song was written for Coppola's One From The Heart, and Martin delivers it straight from Breast Central. Not quite a concept album, but one that has a satisfyingly melancholy coherence, capped by Jule Styne and the late, great Carolyn Leigh's 'Gentleman Friend'. Melling does a fine job of replacing Gee and paves the way for Gareth Williams later on.

* Make This City Ours Linn AKD 066 Martin; Gerard Presencer (t, flhn); Antonio Hart (as); Gareth Williams (p, v); Peter Washington (b); Gregory Hutchinson (d). 10/96.

Martin approached her 30th birthday with a solid reputation, but not yet with a statement on record that matched up to her live presence. If one album deserves to establish Martin as a singer with real star potential, then it's this one. Even the title sounds like a confident declaration of intent. Recorded in New York, with Washington, Hart and Hutchinson guesting, it has a more cosmopolitan feel than any of its predecessors. Presencer's trumpet-playing conveys innocence and weary maturity, and Hart always sounds good around singers. A new Martin composition, 'Empty Bed', bodes well. There are still occasional lapses into formula: 'Another Night' doesn't sound entirely assured, and an arrangement of Bruno Martino's 'Estate' with words by Joel Siegel doesn't quite come off.

(*) Perfect Alibi Linn AKD 122 Martin; Duncan McKay (t); Nichol Thomson (tb); Mornington Lockett (ts, cl); Charlotte Glasson (bs, f); Jo Richards (f); Jason Rebello (p); Robin Aspland (ky); Paul Stacey (ky, g); Andy Wallace (org); Anthony Kerr (vib); Arnie Somogyi (b); Andrew Newmark, Mathew Skeaping, Jeremy Stacey (d); Luis Jardim (perc); John Martyn (v). 11/99, 1–2/00.

A range of material from Hendrix and Todd Rundgren to Laura Nyro and Julia Fordham, and an astonishing duet with John Martyn on his 'Man In The Station', make this Claire's most inventively adventurous album to date. It also takes her a further step away from conventional repertoire, but so thoroughly is her style invested with jazz that the feel is consistent, improvisational and un-trendy. Phoebe Snow's 'Inspired Insanity' is the closest it gets to pure pop, balanced by Al Kooper's 'More Than You'll Ever Know' and Hendrix's 'Up From The Skies'. Nice arrangements (largely by Paul Stacey and Charlotte Glasson) and good pacing throughout.

(*) Too Darn Hot Linn AKD 198 Martin; Nigel Hitchcock (ts); Geoff Keezer, Gareth Williams (p); Richard Cottle (ky, org); Phil Robson (b); Geoff Gascoyne, Laurence Cottle (b); Clark Tracey (d). 01.

She's in great form, singing with passion and ambition. Richard Rodney Bennett's arrangement of 'Raining In My Heart' is a gem and the opener, 'Something's Coming' from West Side Story, gives the set something of the drama of a stage show. Claire still likes to dabble in pop repertoire and there's a Joni Mitchell song here again, but for the most part this is a jazz gig, delivered with sass and sophistication. Other highlights include 'The Gentleman Is A Dope' and of course the title-track. Able support from the band.

(*) Secret Love Linn AKD 246 Martin; Nigel Hitchcock, Bobby Wellins (ts); Gareth Williams (p, ky); Richard Rodney Bennett (p); Jim Mullen (g); Melvyn Duffy (pedal steel g); Julian Jackson (hca); Laurence Cottle (b); Chris Dagley, Clark Tracey (d); Ian Shaw (v). 4 & 5/02.

She just continues to get better, though for the moment she seems to be casting about for material. The Bacharach–Costello 'God Give Me Strength' somehow doesn't sit right for Martin's delivery, though almost everything else on the set comes good for her, notably the title-piece and 'The Meaning Of The Blues'. The guest spots are nicely judged and it's wonderful to hear Wellins in such good form.

 When Lights Are Low Linn AKD 260 CD/SACD Martin; Richard Rodney Bennett (p, v). 05.

Teamed up with the effortlessly urbane Bennett, Martin sounds in good company and in top form. Vocals are to an extent shared, but for the most part this is a wryly intimate song/piano session. There is some nicely unusual material, including Carl Sigman's 'My Mood Is You' and Hugh Martin's 'I Was Warned About You', while the recent emphasis on contemporary songwriting is reflected in Elvis Costello's lorn and lost 'Baby Plays Around'.

* He Never Mentioned Love Linn AKD 295 Martin; Gareth Williams (b); Laurence Cottle (b); Clark Tracey (d). 12/06.

It all comes together here, in this strong and moving tribute to Shirley Horn. No pop songs, no pointless guest appearances, just a powerful standards set by a vividly empathetic band. Williams is all grace and sureness while Tracey's sophistication is unmatched in British jazz. By the time she gets to 'The Sun Died', you'll be ready to lay down your life for more in this vein.

Also, in brief:

 Every Now And Then: The Very Best Of Claire Martin Linn AKD 177. 91–00.

A decade's worth of recording, and a pretty useful introduction to Martin's work.

 The Linn Box – Claire Martin Linn AKD 123 3CD. 91, 93, 95.

Includes The Waiting Game, Devil May Care, Offbeat. So, pretty good.

 Offbeat: Live At Ronnie Scott's Club Linn AKD 049. 8/95.

A rather pedestrian live date, not even lifted by Martin Taylor's guest spot.

 The Linn Box 2 – Claire Martin Linn AKD 265 3CD. 96–00.

Brings together Make This City Ours, Take My Heart, Perfect Alibi. Nice way to catch up.

 Take My Heart Linn AKD 093. 00.
A cameo by Oasis man Noel Gallagher and songs by Nick Drake and Elvis Costello, but still emphatically a jazz singer's album, with more than a hint of Chris Connor's cool.

Mel Martin (born 1942)

REEDS, FLUTE

Californian founder of Bebop & Beyond, he has broad experience in rock and in the studios.

 Just Friends Jazzed Media Martin; Benny Carter (as); Roger Kellaway (p); Jeff Chambers (b); Harold Jones (d). 94.
Martin has a scatter of records behind him, and this seems to be out-takes from a 1994 tribute record to Carter, released on Enja. They're mostly quite long cuts, and they find the octogenarian still in phenomenally good form. It works best when Martin doesn't trade with him but picks up his flute on 'People Time', though there are nice things on 'Secret Love' and a couple of other tracks. A nice souvenir rather than a great record.

Peter Martin

PIANO

A prodigy from New Orleans, he was playing and composing in early childhood.

(*) Something Unexpected Max Jazz MXJ 202 Martin; Nicholas Payton (t, flhn); Brice Winston (ts); Reginald Veal (b); Adonis Rose (d). 11/00.
 In The P.M. Max Jazz MXJ 211 Martin; Reuben Rogers (b); Gregory Hutchinson (d); Erin Bode (v). 3/05.
Martin's first recordings are an interesting mixture of adventure and playing safe. 'Modern Cacophony' and 'The Answer' on In The P.M. don't sit wonderfully well with the other compositions (Stevie Wonder, Jesse Davis, standards) or with Bode's three light vocals. It's all pleasing, though. There's a similar mix on the earlier record, which was recorded live at the Jazz Bistro in St Louis, but the club ambience gives the set a more abrasive quality (even if Payton isn't exactly carborundum) and the themes don't seem quite so sententiously delivered.

Stu Martin (1938–80)

DRUMS, SYNTHESIZER

The American worked in big bands before forming The Trio with John Surman and Barre Phillips. Continued with Phillips in Ambush after its demise in 1971. His life was cut short by heart disease.

 Live At Woodstock Town Hall BGO CD 290 Martin; John Surman (ss, bcl). 75.
 Sunrise EPM Musique 15219 Martin; Gérard Marais (g, syn); Claude Barthélemy (b). 11/79.
The Woodstock date is reassigned from Surman's entry, a tempestuous duo set woven on the loosest narrative thread about Henry Lovett ('Man Without A Country') and marked by Martin's crude but exciting clubbing of the kit and Surman's sinuous lines. It led the saxophonist towards his synth-backed solo recordings of later years, but it's a fascinating glimpse of a powerful drummer in not quite the right context for him. There are similar crudities on the French set, recorded the year before Martin's death in exile. It's a dated sound, technically a period piece, but no denying the power of the playing from all three.

Pat Martino (born 1944)

GUITAR

Born in Philadelphia, he began as a teenager with Jack McDuff, Groove Holmes and others. He suffered an aneurysm in 1980, and had to relearn his playing technique, largely by listening to his old records. It was 1984 before he began working again.

() El Hombre Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 195 Martino; Danny Turner (f); Trudy Pitts (org); Mitch Fine (d); Abdu Johnson, Vance Anderson (perc). 5/67.
 Strings! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 223 Martino; Joe Farrell (ts, f); Cedar Walton (p); Ben Tucker (b); Walter Perkins (d); Ray Appleton, Dave Levine (perc). 10/67.
 East! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 248 Martino; Eddie Green (p); Tyrone Brown, Ben Tucker (b); Lennie McBrowne (d). 1/68.
 Desperado Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 397 Martino; Eric Kloss (ss); Eddie Green (p); Tyrone Brown (b); Sherman Ferguson (d). 3/70.
 Giants Of Jazz: Pat Martino Savoy SVY 17632 Martino; other personnel unlisted. 72–76.
After graduating from soul-jazz organ combos and the John Handy group, Martino led his own bands on a series of records for Prestige. Both El Hombre and Strings! depend on blues-based formulas and are typical of the genre; but Martino's maturing style – heavily indebted to Grant Green and Wes Montgomery, but built for greater speed than either of those masters – is good enough to transcend the settings. Strings! is noteworthy for a long, burning treatment of Gigi Gryce's 'Minority', where Farrell's thunderous tenor solo is matched by equally flying statements by Martino and Walton. Aside from the prophetically 'mystical' title-track, East offers some of Martino's clearest and most articulate soloing against a straightforward rhythm section. Desperado is a little-known stab at fusion: Martino plays electric 12-string against rumbling electric piano and bass, and the results are akin to a tighter, less violent Lifetime. 'Express' and 'Desperado' hit a particularly compelling movement, although Green isn't a very stimulating partner (Kloss plays on only one track, 'Blackjack'). All the OJC remastering is good, although Desperado's original production betrays how engineers didn't really know how to deal with that sort of music at the time. The Savoy compilation appears to be a bunch of tracks lifted from Martino's various Muse albums of the '70s, although the bargain-basement packaging doesn't offer any clues. It remains solid, straight-ahead jazz guitar on standards and blues.

 All Sides Now Blue Note 837627-2 Martino; Charlie Hunter, Kevin Eubanks, Les Paul, Joe Satriani, Mike Stern, Tuck Andress, Lou Pollo (g); Paul Nowinski, Scott Colley (b); Ben Perowsky, Michael Hedges, Jeff Hirshfield (d); Cassandra Wilson (v). 6/96–1/97
Martino arrives at Blue Note for a typical example of the jazz concept album. An improbably eclectic team of guitarists line up for a series of duets, with the perhaps inevitable result that the album stops and starts, and ends up a bit of a mess. There are some genuinely compelling episodes: the sparring with Hunter on 'Too High', the tough virtuosity of the meeting with Eubanks on 'Progression', the purling lyricism of 'Two Of A Kind', with Tuck. On the debit side are the ponderous 'Both Sides Now' with Cassandra Wilson, two fairly meaningless chunks of interplay with Joe Satriani and the OK but effortful tracks with Stern. Martino himself can largely be exempted from criticism: he brings dedication and inventiveness to all the tracks and earns the stars on his own.

 Stone Blue Blue Note 853082-2 Martino; Eric Alexander (ts); Delmar Brown (ky); James Genus (b); Kenwood Dennard (d). 2/98.

Concentrated around the band which Martino calls Joyous Lake, this is an energetic and spirited album that has a lot of fine Martino guitar on it, as well as lusty blowing from Alexander. But its merits are compromised by the vague nods towards modishness provided by Brown's keyboards, sound-effects and so forth. Martino is a player's player, like, say, Jim Hall: whatever his roots in the soul-jazz of the '60s onwards, he doesn't really need trappings which are going to date the record more quickly than it deserves.

(*) Live At Yoshi's Blue Note 499749-2 Martino; Joey DeFrancesco (org); Billy Hart (d). 12/00.

And this one is a roots exercise again, even though the idiom is by now classic enough to transcend such considerations. The tough thing for Martino is to find a way for his qualities to reach an audience without leaning back on show-off situations. This set is arguably no different to anything he's done in the past in its frame of reference: all he can do is prove the state of his chops, and what he can achieve with material that all but says to its exponent: show me what you can do. 'Oleo' is just like that, and the clarity of line and power of invention are set up at once. It helps that the trio is nicely balanced, between DeFrancesco's natural exuberance and Hart's sage rhythm master. But the guitar's the thing.

* Remember: A Tribute To Wes Montgomery Blue Note ST-55885 Martino; David Kikoski (p); John Patitucci (b); Scott Allan Robinson (d); Daniel Sadownick (perc). 9/05.

An amazing turnaround after the flop of Think Tank (see below, 'in brief'). Instead of another tiresome, rote homage to a deceased star, Martino has put up one of his greatest records. There are few enough guitarists who can follow in Montgomery's steps, but Martino manages it without surrendering his own style, and if the music has the feel of the sort of combo which Wes was scarcely allowed to record with in his later days, it isn't a retro sound either – more sheer, timeless class. Kikoski is a perfect assist, Patitucci and Robinson set up the likes of 'Groove Yard' with superbly controlled intensity, and the leader has simply never sounded better.

Also, in brief:

 Baiyina (The Clear Evidence) Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 355. 6/68.

A whiff of incense and patchouli oil, but Martino's own playing stays tough.

 The Maker Evidence ECD 22121. 9/94.

Ten years on from the comeback, a strong set from an active period.

(*) Think Tank Blue Note 92009-2. 1/03.

A band more loaded with perceived talent – Joe Lovano (ts), Gonzalo Rubalcaba (p), Christian McBride (b), Lewis Nash (d) – than any Pat's had to work with, but it sadly doesn't work.

Barry Martyn (born 1941)

DRUMS, VOICE

Formed a band in London at 16 and visited New Orleans in 1961, where he started organizing tours and recordings for local players and visitors, also bringing them back to Europe. In LA from 1972 and resident in New Orleans from 1984.

 Vintage Barry Martyn GHB BCD-75 Martyn; Clive Blackmore, Dennis Jones, Cuff Billett (t); Mike Pointon, Pete Dyer, Freddy John (tb); John Defferary (cl, as); Sammy Rimington, Dick Douthwaite (cl); Bill Greenow (as); Ken Saunders (ts); Graham Paterson, John Marks (p); John Coles, Bill Stagg (bj); John Renshaw, Bill Cole, Terry Knight, Brian Turnock (b). 11/59–70.

 On Tour 1969 GHB BCD-255 Martyn; Clive Wilson (t); Frank Naundorf (tb); Dick Douthwaite (cl, as); Jon Marks (p); Brian Turnock (b). 69.

(*) Legends Of Jazz & Barney Bigard GHB BCD-338 Martyn; Andrew Blakeney (t, v); Louis Nelson (tb); Barney Bigard, Joe Darensbourg (cl); Alton Purnell (p, v); Ed Garland (b). 5/74.

 Barry Martyn's Down Home Boys Sackville KCD2-3056 Martyn; Wendell Eugene (tb); Chris Burke (cl); Ron Simpson (g). 10/93.

This cigar-chomping Londoner went to New Orleans in 1961 and became an unlikely champion of the city's traditional jazz. Basing his own style around that of the New Orleans masters, he not only sought out his heroes but played with them, recorded them and conducted interviews that have become integral to the archives on the music. Vintage Barry Martyn collars four different British sessions – from Southall, New Bond Street and Basingstoke! – starting with Kid Martyn's early group (including Rimington, and Clive Blackmore lying on the floor to sing the vocal on 'Robert E. Lee') and getting as far as 1970. Some of it is little more than amateur enthusiasm, but the music gets stronger as it goes on and Martyn himself is unfailingly swinging in the New Orleans style. His sleeve-note memories are a priceless record in themselves.

The 1969 set features a band of Brits whose ardour doesn't wholly make up for the lack of finesse on ancient history such as 'Dardanella'; the recording sounds rusty, too. Martyn formed his Legends Of Jazz with a crew of venerable oldtimers in 1973, and they became a festival attraction. This is quite a spirited recording, with guest Bigard sounding much stronger than he does on the Pelican Trio sessions (listed under Bigard's name). Some of the pieces shake along rather than swing, and Purnell's two vocals sound like pure sandpaper, but somehow Martyn (who was some 40 years junior to all the others) makes the whole thing work. His playing is strong enough to lift the band but never rough enough to knock the players about.

The later Sackville CD is a good-natured jazz beano and, though the interesting instrumentation is never used to any surprising ends, the way that the players seem to blend agility with amiable sloppiness is rather beguiling. Bonus marks for playing 'Blue Hawaii', 'Sail Along Silvery Moon' and 'Dolores' instead of the usual old scrolls.

Also, in brief:

(*) Reunion Band In Italy GHB BCD-413. 3/00.

He gets around: here on the Italian New Orleans scene.

(*) Let's Go England GHB BCD-443. 3/01.

At Gresham's, Cambridge. The material is scandalously non-purist – 'Buona Sera'? 'Moonlight Becomes You'? 'Help Me Make It Through The Night'??

The Mary Lou Williams Collective

GROUP

Supergroup convened to revive the great pianist's astrological masterpiece.

(*) Zodiac Suite: Revisited Mary Records M104 Geri Allen (p); Buster Williams (b); Andrew Cyrille, Billy Hart (d). 00–03.
Mary Lou Williams began sketching piano pieces that evoked the zodiacal characteristics of friends and admired musicians in the early war years. 'Taurus', her own self-portrait, as well as 'Scorpio' and 'Gemini' were written while with the Andy Kirk band. The slightly later 'Aries' – dedicated to Arians Ben Webster and Billie Holiday – was used to start the Zodiac Suite when it was first presented entire in the company of the New York Philharmonic at Town Hall at New Year 1945/1946.

Much of Williams's music at the time was still based on stride, blues and boogie-woogie, as well as hymns and spirituals, but with modern elements floating just under the surface. Other themes were developed for Mary Lou's WNEW radio show, and so have a certain slightly didactic, test-piece air about them. Having played Williams in the Robert Altman film Kansas City, Allen already had some exposure to this music, and has studied the oeuvre very thoroughly over a three-year period. 'Scorpio', dedicated to some of Williams's female friends, might almost be an Allen original, while the solo 'Libra' – dedicated to favourite pianists Tatum, Monk and Powell – is a magnificently constructed unaccompanied performance. 'Taurus' is for Duke and there are dedications to FDR and to less celebrated American liberals of the period.

Williams is an ideal accompanist, fleet, resonant, endlessly melodic, and the two drummers bring a lot of history to the recording, but it's Allen one listens to and admires. She's a player who has sometimes flattered to deceive, but there is no mistaking the depth of her absorption in the piano literature or her respect for a great predecessor and role model.

Steve Masakowski (born 1954)

GUITAR

Masakowski is a veteran of the modern New Orleans scene, having gone back there after studying at Berklee. He has flirted with wider recognition – notably via a couple of albums for Blue Note – but has remained on home turf. He usually plays a seven-string guitar.

 For Joe Compass 7 4289 2 Masakowski; Bill Huntington (b); Johnny Vidacovich (d). 1/00.
Some of Masakowski's work has been in a rockier (or at least more fusionoid) vein, but this is deep in the straightahead bag. Conceived as a tribute to Joe Pass, a stylist whom Masakowski doesn't much resemble, the set is nicely satisfying by dint of its plain speaking. There are a few tunes associated with Pass, although the guitarist contributes five originals of his own, and instead of the gentler idiom which Joe rendered so well, the music works off the kind of rocking New Orleans swing which these guys have entirely mastered: Brubeck's 'In Your Own Sweet Way', for one, is beautifully paced in this style. There's nothing flashy on show, and maybe the even-tempered delivery may strike some as a bit ordinary, but it helps that Huntington and the admirable Vidacovich swing so deeply, even in a comparatively laid-back setting for them.

Masaoka Orchestra

ENSEMBLE

Creative big band player-led by koto virtuoso Miya Masaoka.

 What Is The Difference Between Stripping And Playing The Violin? Victo 58 Masaoka; George Lewis (tb); Hafiz Modirzadeh (ss, ts, ney, other instruments); Francis Wong (ts); Lee Yen (ts, hichiriki); Jim Norton (cl, bsn); Glenn Horiuchi (shamisen); Vijay Iyer (p, vn); India Cooke, Kei Yamashita (vn); Elliott Humberto Kavee (clo, perc); Mark Izu (b, sho, other instruments); Trevor Dunn (b); Anthony Brown (perc); Robbie Kauker (elec); Jeff Song (tape). 7/98.
The title isn't a joke waiting for a punchline. Masaoka was moved to anger by public indifference at the murder of five prostitutes in her home district in San Francisco where the piece was first performed with the aid of local lap and pole dancers. So the question is sarcastically rhetorical. Apart from the first piece on the album, the violins aren't particularly prominent and the composition moves between spare classical lines and hard-edged rock and funk. Mr Bungle bassist Trevor Dunn is an important factor in this aspect of the sound. The evocation of a noisy cityscape, bustling with desires and promises, indifference and explosive anger, is very powerful indeed, if a little disjointed. Far more effective is the other composition on the set, '24,000 Years Is Forever', written to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki and referring in the title to the half-life of enriched plutonium. It's a beautifully constructed piece, more elegiac than angry but tempered with the awful sadness of lost promise as the voices of schoolchildren are interwoven with the violin lines. Masaoka doesn't play koto on this record, concentrating on her role as conductor, but it breathes with her passionately engaged musical personality. The orchestra members could scarcely be more varied, with prominent parts for the veteran Lewis and an early appearance of pianist/violinist Vijay Iyer, soon to become the most exciting new name in jazz. It all adds up to a challenging listen (and a startling cover for a jazz record).

Hugh Masekela (born 1939)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, VOICE

Though a minor figure as an instrumentalist, the South African was a popular figure on both the US and British scenes, before returning to Africa after apartheid ended.

(*) The Lasting Impressions Of Ooga Booga Verve 531630 Masekela; Larry Willis (p); Harold Dotson (b); Henry Jenkins (d). 65.

 Grrr Verve 0602 49860 3093 Masekela; other personnel unknown. 4–5/66.

 Stimela Connoisseur Collection 200 Masekela; other personnel unknown. 60s–70s.
Masekela is one of the key figures in South African music, a passionate voice whose sound has the throaty urgency of a street corner preacher and the delicacy of emotion associated with Miles Davis and Chet Baker. At 20, Masekela was a founder member, with Dollar Brand and Kippie Moeketsi, of the Jazz Epistles, South Africa's first significant jazz group. Masekela then married singer Miriam Makeba and left South Africa for the US, recording classic songs like 'Grazin' In The Grass' (which sold four million copies) and becoming a spokesman and icon of the anti-apartheid movement. The Lasting Impressions Of Ooga Booga is a compilation of two records taped live at the Village Gate. The original LP, The Americanization Of Ooga Booga, was not initially followed, and it was only after the success of Masekela's blend of mbaqanga and what he himself dubbed 'township bop' that the remaining tracks were released as The Lasting Impression Of Hugh Masekela, one track of which has been omitted on this reissue for reasons of space. Masekela's plangent, vocalized tone is unmistakable and these tunes, written by himself, Makeba, Willis and Caiphus Semenya, are among the strongest he ever recorded. Herbie Hancock's 'Canteloupe Island' is a reminder of how different he was from American jazz musicians of the same generation; the familiar changes are utterly transformed, pushed out into new harmonic and rhythmic territory.

The slightly later Grrr is more obviously packaged for an American audience: full-tilt Afro-boogie of an infectiously accessible sort. 'Zulu And The Mexican' sees Masekela trying to sound like a mariachi player, but managing only to sound like himself. The opening 'U-Dwi' and pieces like 'Sharpeville' and Miriam Makeba's 'Ntjilo Ntjilo', both very moving, are more obviously idiomatic. It's not clear who his playing partners were on this session. Jonas Gwangwa was the arranger on 'Kwa Blaney', but for the most part Masekela was in charge of proceedings and personnel can probably be inferred from that.

The Connoisseur compilation brings together some of Hugh's most celebrated work, including 'Grazing In The Grass' and 'Stimela'. A valuable introduction to his work, though still no sign of his best record, the Chisa recording Home Is Where The Music Is.

 Hope Razor & Tie 85215 Masekela; Ngenekhaya Mahlanghu (ts, f, v); Themba Mkhize (ky, v); Lawrence Matshiza (g, v); Bakithi Kumalo (b, v); Damon Duewhite (d); Remi Kabaka (perc, v). 7–8/93.

After the fall of apartheid, Masekela returned to South Africa. This concert from Washington DC finds him exploring and reattaching roots, telling his story to the country which had given him shelter and support during the years of oppression. Inevitably, 'Grazing In The Grass' has pride of place, but Hugh also goes back to songs by Miriam Makeba (opening with 'Abangoma') and by Caiphus Semenya, to 'Bring Him Back Home', which had lost some of its political and emotional impact by 1993, and also to the very first songs he remembers hearing, like the township chant 'Languta'. Gentle as it all is, there's a sting in the tail and a recognition that all is still not well in modern South Africa. The closing 'Stimela' is a mineworkers' lament with a very bitter flavour indeed, proof that Masekela can still say grrr when he needs to, even if that trumpet has lost much of its fire.

 Sixty Shanachie 5070 Masekela; Don Laka (p); Kenny Mathaba (g); Victor Ntoni (b); Dave Reynolds (d); Innocent Modiba, Stephen Molakeng, Fana Zulu, Sibongile Makgathi, Thabo Mdluli, Margaret Motsage, Nonhlanhla Radebe, Vicky Vilakazi (v). 99.

As he turned 60, Hugh looks back at marriage to Miriam Makeba, political dissidence, some measure of commercial success and, with the fall of apartheid, the restoration of his country to some measure of freedom and democracy. A shame that such a dramatic story should take such a bland form. Masekela is no longer strictly a jazz player, and it's all the more frustrating when brief glimpses of his former genius shine through.

 Revival Heads Up 3093 Masekela; various personnel. 5/05.

The first record for some time sees a return to the fiery, politicized artist of old. One senses that the 'new' South Africa is not all he might have hoped, either that or the old fury still hasn't found a complete outlet. 'District Six' is intense and committed, but it also sits alongside the Isleys' 'For The Love Of You', an odd juxtaposition but proof that Hugh can also play pretty.

Also, in brief:

(*) Live At The BBC Fuel 2000 061197. 85.

Recorded at the Glastonbury Festival and at the Nelson Mandela concert; caught at a moment when his personal protest and vision of a free South Africa had entered the mainstream.

 Black To The Future Shanachie 5056. 97.

Stronger than some of the recent records because the playing is better. Features some of the best musicians in present-day South Africa.

 Grazing In The Grass: The Best Of Hugh Masekela Columbia 85759. 01.

A useful round-up of work for the label, with such oddities as 'Vasco Da Gama, The Sailor Man' alongside the inevitable title-track, the equally unavoidable 'Bring Him Back Home' and the bitter 'Stimela'.

(*) Time Sony 508295 2. 02.

Over-produced Afro soul-jazz. It won a BBC award, though.

Keshavan Maslak (born 1947)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, BASS CLARINET, SYNTHESIZERS, OTHER INSTRUMENTS

Born in New York but claiming Ukrainian ancestry, 'Kenny Millions' is a mercurial performer in a wild variety of styles.

 Loved By Millions Leo CD LR 105 Maslak; John Lindberg (b); Sunny Murray (d). 10/80.

 Not To Be A Star Black Saint 120149 Maslak; Paul Bley (p). 10/92.

A talented but enigmatic figure, Maslak cultivates a broadly satirical tone, as in the rock-influenced fantasies of another disc called Loved By Millions; the one above is fierce free bop.

The duos with Bley on Not To Be A Star are extraordinary, if beset by gimmickry. All freely improvised – sometimes over Kenny Millions lyrics – they're a fascinating glimpse of Bley in intensely abstract mode, surprisingly so at a time when he seemed to have rediscovered the jazz heartland. Access to a 24-track studio allowed the saxophonist to multitrack himself on clarinet at a couple of points. The reissued 1980 record shows how little Maslak's basic approach has changed in the interim. Murray pushes him further than usual in the direction of abstraction, but the saxophonist tends to stick to a fairly linear programme, creating an impression throughout that he is accompanying his own rhythm section. The music remains difficult to categorize: 'everyday magic/very deep/almost impossible to understand'. Millions continues to release CD-Rs on his own Humha imprint.

Eugene Maslov

PIANO, SYNTHESIZER

Born in St Petersburg and studied classical piano before switching to jazz at the Rimsky-Korsakov Conservatory. Influenced by both Chick Corea and Herbie Hancock.

 Autumn In New England GM 3022 Maslov; Ben Street (b); George Schuller (d).

 When I Need To Smile Mack Avenue 1001 Maslov; Eddie Gomez (b); Omar Hakim (d). 6 & 7/98.

() The Face Of Love Mack Avenue 1002 Maslov; Chuck Deardorf, Eddie Gomez (b); Toots Thielemans (hca); Willie Jones, George Schuller, Terence Williams (d); Shirley Horn (v). 5 & 6/99.

 The Fuse Is Lit Mack Avenue 1006 Maslov; Pete Christlieb (ts); Hubert Laws (f); Boris Kozlov (b); Vinnie Colaiuta, Joe LaBarbera (d). 7/02.

(*) Where The Light Comes From Maslov; Alex Berenson (t); Bob Sheppard (ts); Hubert Laws (f); Matthew Von Doran (g); David Carpenter, Trey Henry, Boris Kozlov (b); Vinnie Colaiuta (d); Louis Conte (perc). 05.

It is always difficult at first blush to distinguish between a facile talent and one so gifted in every aspect of the music that even the most difficult ideas are delivered with apparent casualness and ease. Maslov falls into the latter category, a genuine piano master whose work lacks much of the expressive tension one looks for in an improvising musician. Autumn In New England is divided, both thematically and stylistically, between a jovial nostalgia for home and a bittersweet optimism. It's by no means a major statement, but Maslov's skills are already unmistakable, even when the swing is featherlight. When I Need To Smile is a blend of confident originals, like the opening 'Kolobok' and the lovely 'Here Comes Juliette', with a smattering of standards. On 'Milestones', he shows a grasp of Bill Evans harmonics and Gomez is on hand to steer him through those familiar but demanding modalities. 'The Man I Love' perhaps lacks passion, but it's beautifully played. The third disc obviously gains a dimension from the presence of the guest star. Thielemans is delightful on his own 'Bluesette', but then he has played it in similar situations for decades so there isn't any surprise to the performance. 'Days Of Wine And Roses' is a better vehicle for him. Maslov's own 'Through Russian Eyes' is terrific, though the Latin feel is curious, given the title; a similar feel to 'Chan's Song (Never Said)', a Stevie Wonder–Herbie Hancock co-credit. Gretchen Carhartt contributed two songs for Shirley Horn, who could make the phone book sound musical and does her best with these unsurprising love-lyrics. 'The Peacocks' is the other outstanding cut. Gomez is only around for eight of the tracks and his limitations as a solo player are evident, melodic but somehow predictable. Laws and Christlieb add just enough to The Fuse Is Lit to lift it out of the ordinary. 'To My Teacher/To My Friend', dedicated to Corea, is an effective opener and right at the end, after a set of emotionally freighted originals dominated by 'Guru' and 'The Witch (Baba Yaga)' (with the latter's intimations of Mussorgsky, the great vernacular spirit of Russian music), Maslov's version of 'One For My Baby (And One More For The Road)' reminds us that he can swing as well as emote.

The most recent of the bunch has the same light swing with a funk element that is too diffident to work convincingly. Again, the veteran Laws (is there a more distinctive exponent of his instrument?) adds some lovely touches, but the larger group at times overwhelms the leader, who seems oddly mixed. 'Nardis' is nicely done, though, and some of the new tunes are more instantly memorable than any previous work. Kozlov is the main bassist, appearing on all but three tracks. He's an extremely solid player but lacks Henry's propulsive quality, which on 'Winter Morning' impresses even at very modest tempos.

Phil Mason (born 1940)

CORNET

A Londoner; he freelanced for years and formed his New Orleans All Stars in 1992.

 Live At The Isle Of Bute Jazz Festival Raymer RSCD 612 Mason; Martin Bennett (tb, v); Jonny Boston, James Evans (cl, ts); Jim McIntosh (bj); Trefor Williams (b); Colin Bowden (d); Marilyn Middleton Pollock (v). 92.

() You Do Something To Me! Lake LACD 33 Mason; Martin Bennett (tb, v); James Evans (cl, ts); Jim McIntosh (bj); Trefor Williams (b); Colin Bowden, Pete Cotterill (d); Christine Tyrrell (v). 8/93.

() West Indies Blues Lake LACD 93 Mason; Martin Bennett (tb, v); Paul Harrison (cl); Alan Bradley (p); Jim McIntosh (bj); Trefor Williams (b); Ron McKay, Pete Cotterill (d); Christine Tyrell, Pauline Pearce (v). 7/97.

 Hush Hush Lake LACD 111 As above, except omit Harrison, Bradley, Cotterill, Pearce; add Jonny Boston (cl, ts); Ronald Anderson (g); Spats Langham (bj). 5/98.

Methodical trad from a group given to no frills and not much licence. Mason's leads are generally decent enough but it's Bennett's less predictable trombone parts which stand out. The foot-dragging tempos sometimes tire. The Bute material is nicely recorded, and there are a long quartet 'Davenport Blues' on West Indies Blues and a surprise version of 'Lester Leaps In' on Hush Hush. There are lots of these records around, and there's probably enough top-flight material to put together a three-CD box. Trad fans lap them up, though.

Also, in brief:

 The Storm Is Passing Over Lake LACD153. 92.

Reissue of a rather good GHB set from the early days of the All Stars.

 Let's Face The Music And Dance / (*) On The Road Again Lake LACD168 / 204. N.D.

Two more good ones, though the country elements on Road Again don't quite work.

 Once In A While Lake LACD 254. 02.

And still they keep coming! Christine Tyrrell's (v) in great form, though.

George Masso (born 1926)

TROMBONE, PIANO

Son of a local trumpet-player, he grew up in Rhode Island and mainly taught music before beginning full-time playing in the '70s. He has since built a considerable reputation in mainstream circles.

 The Wonderful World Of George Gershwin Nagel Heyer 001 Masso; Randy Sandke (t); Kenny Davern (cl); Danny Moss (ts); Eddie Higgins (p); Len Skeat (b); Jake Hanna (d). 9/92.

 Just Friends Nagel Heyer 5001 Masso; Ken Peplowski (cl, ts); Brian Dee (p); Len Skeat (b); Jake Hanna (d). 8/94.

(*) That Old Gang Of Mine Arbors ARCD 19173 Masso; Lou Colombo (t, c); Dick Johnson (as, cl); Dave McKenna (p); Marshall Wood (b); Artie Cabral (d). 11/96.

 Shakin' The Blues Away Zephyr ZECD6 Masso; Roy Williams (tb); Brian Lemon (p); Dave Cliff (g); Dave Green (b); Allan Ganley, Martin Drew (d). 11/95–11/96.

 C'est Magnifique! Nagel Heyer 060 Masso; Lou Colombo (t, flhn); Harry Allen (ts); Johnny Varro (p); Phil Flanigan (b); Jake Hanna (d). 3/99.

 At Long Last Love Arbors ARCD 19249 Masso; Lou Colombo (t); Artie Mentanaro, Dick Whaley, David Masso (tb); Dick Johnson (cl, ts); Mark Phaneuf (bs, f, cl); Jon Wheatley (g); Marshall Wood (b); Artie Cabral (d). 8/99.

Masso, who started out with Jimmy Dorsey 50 years ago, has a generous, peppery, surprising sound on the trombone, some notes turning into an abrupt bark, others crooning across bar-lines. The first two Nagel Heyer CDs are both live sessions from the label's Hamburg base, perhaps not quite out of the potboiler class. The Gershwin disc assembles a list of chestnuts, and the band blows with gusto though without producing anything too memorable. Just Friends (a 24-bit reissue of Trombone Artistry), benefits from Peplowski's cunning playing, though when they get to 'Blue Monk' it seems like the band think they're just blowing on the blues. The earlier Arbors CD is by a band in which all the hands come from southern New England, and it's genial regional jazz at its best, ten good tunes given an affectionate going-over. Shakin' The Blues Away takes him to England for some good-natured duelling with Williams over the Zephyr house rhythm section.

C'est Magnifique! is another in the seemingly endless run of live recordings from a team of Nagel Heyer all-stars. Never less than full value from a gang like this, and the concept is Cole Porter, composer of all seven tunes. Masso does 'Why Shouldn't I' and Allen gets 'I Love You Samantha'. At Long Last Love features a tentet, with a trombone trio plus baritone at its core, and the arrangements have class and skill; but the record is lacking in some basic spirit, and a few of the tempos feel fatigued.

Sabir Mateen

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, FLUTE

Fiery reedman who polished his technique as a subway busker before working with Horace Tapscott and occasionally with Sun Ra.

(*) Divine Mad Love Eremite MTE 11 Mateen; John Voigt (b); Laurence Cook (d). 97.

(*) Secrets Of When Bleu Regard 1961 Mateen; Raphe Malik (t); Naoko Ono (p); Jane Wang (clo, b, v); Ravish Momin (d). 5/01.

Divine Mad Love is very much a group effort. With solo spots for both bassist and drummer, this seems too consciously designed to show off Mateen's not yet developed multi-instrumentalism. He's no Dolphy yet and his flute – and clarinet – playing seem to lag behind the fiery entrances he makes on saxophone. He plays relatively conventionally, with not much in the way of multiphonics, or other extended technique, and you find yourself checking the date on this from time to time, lest it prove to be a lost tape from a late '60s loft session.

The next one was a huge step forward musically. Malik is the ideal front-line partner, and together the group carve out lines that are as empathetic and as fiercely logical as those Coleman and Cherry were making in the '50s. Most of the tracks here are long-form, with relatively simple ground structures providing a platform for high-level improvisation. The interest is always greatest when the two horns are locked together, leaving the other instruments very much as accompaniment.

Mat Mathews (born 1924)

ACCORDION

Born Matthieu Schwartz in the Netherlands and grew up during the Nazi occupation, when jazz was officially proscribed if not effectively banned, and he's been fighting different sorts of censorship ever since. A rare exponent of jazz accordion.

 The Gentle Art Of Love Dawn DP 1101 Mathews; Art Farmer (flhn); David Amram (frhn); Chasie Dean (as, ts, ob); Herbie Mann (f); Barry Galbraith, Joe Puma (g); Harry Lookofsky (vn); Oscar Pettiford (b). 2/56.

 The Modern Art Of Jazz Dawn DP 1104 As above, except omit Lookofsky, Galbraith; add Julius Watkins (frhn); Gigi Gryce (as); Dick Katz (p); Kenny Clarke (d). 2/56.

 Swingin' Pretty And All That Jazz Design 1036 Mathews; Bucky Pizzarelli (g); Gene Bianco (hp); Gunnar Hansen (vn); Vinnie Burke (b); Ted Sommer (perc). 59.

Any concern about the marginality of Mathews' effort will be dispelled by the personnel here if by nothing else. The accordion is still in some respects an awkward jazz instrument, relatively slow in articulation and with that slightly creaky, emphysemic sound that some find beguiling, others intensely irritating. Lookofsky is another little known player on a (relatively) unfashionable instrument, but he is a formidable soloist and his 1960 Atlantic Stringsville is worth searching out. Similarly, Amram is best known as a classical composer, with an interest in Latin jazz, and for his association with the Beat writers, but he adds an interesting dimension and some harmonic depth to the sound on these neglected sides, as does Watkins on the other date. And had it not been for Mathews, Herbie Mann might have remained in obscurity for longer. Mat was one of the flautist's first employers.

Mathews returned to Holland shortly after making Swingin' Pretty, apparently disillusioned with the business. Again, though, he'd produced some challenging music with another unconventional group. This time, he spoke out for jazz harpists by including Gene Bianco and cigars for anyone who can claim familiarity with his oeuvre; he was an associate of Paul Desmond and Harry Chapin and has shown up on rock and soul records. Like the Dawn discs, these All-Stars sides aren't jazz classics and may be of more interest as sidelights on famous and less well-known musicians, but anyone interested in the music's by-ways and branch lines should certainly sample Mathews's work. A few moments will suffice to let you know whether you've fallen for it or not.

Ronnie Mathews (born 1935)

PIANO

A failsafe group player and accompanist, who's never been properly recognized on his own account.

 Ronnie Mathews / Roland Alexander Prestige PRCD 24271 Mathews; Marcus Belgrave, Freddie Hubbard (t); Roland Alexander (ts); Charles Davis (bs); Gene Taylor (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath, Clarence Stroman (d). 6/61, 12/63.

 At Café Des Copains Sackville SKCD2-2026 Mathews (p solo). 2/89.

The Prestige set compiles two debutant recordings. Mathews is leader on the 1963 date, the little-remembered Alexander on the earlier one, with the pianist in the group. Ronnie's date (Doing The Thang) highlights his own material like 'Ichi-Ban' and 'The Thang', and the saxophonist proves to be an effective writer of lines, too, for his own recording, Pleasure Bent. There are other Mathews dates about, but mostly – as with so many American piano-players of this generation – on Japanese imprints. The live recording from Canada is a welcome glimpse of him as a solo performer, but there's really not enough about to prop up a reputation. His best work has to be found under other leaders.

Bennie Maupin (born 1946)

SAXOPHONES, BASS CLARINET, OTHER INSTRUMENTS

Studied in Detroit until 1962, then played with many leaders – Miles Davis, Roy Haynes, Horace Silver, Herbie Hancock.

(*) The Jewel In The Lotus ECM 172350 Maupin; Charles Sullivan (t); Herbie Hancock (p); Buster Williams (b); Billy Hart (d); Freddie Waits (d, mar); Bill Summers (perc). 3/74.

 Driving While Black ... Intuition INT 3242 2 Maupin; Dr Patrick Gleeson (ky, perc). 98.

(*) Penumbra Cryptogramophone 129 Maupin; Darek Oles (b); Michael Stephans (d); Darryl Munyungo Jackson (perc). 6 & 12/03.

Always more than a spear-carrier, Maupin exemplifies better than anyone the continuities between hard bop and fusion, having worked in one of trumpeter Lee Morgan's later groups, before helping to hybridize jazz and rock with Miles Davis and, crucially, with Herbie Hancock's Headhunters.

The Jewel In The Lotus was a belated reissue. Unlike Driving, which sounds like a curious period piece awkwardly transplanted in time, the first surviving evidence of Maupin as leader is a mysterious, quite avant-garde record that refuses to conform to any labels of the time or after. It doesn't even sound particularly like Bennie's album, so much does he play for the music rather than for himself. Marked by clever percussion effects (Summers's water-filled garbage can, Waits's marimba) and Hancock's floating electric piano, it's a record that steals into the room and leaves again without introductions, but without attempting to be pointlessly enigmatic.

Driving reinvents the wheel somewhat. The title-track would have sounded laboured in 1970, a slice of processed funk with none of the anger the title implies and little of Miles's boiling fury and application. Even so, Gleeson's rhythms are more than wallpaper for Maupin's plangent saxophone and the later Penumbra continues the feeling that these are ensemble records (that's how it's credited) rather than a Maupin showcase. That said, he takes 'Blinkers' and 'One For Eric Dolphy' on solo tenor and bass clarinet respectively, and both are strong, hard-to-pin-down statements from a man who's contributed hugely to the background sound of modern jazz but who's still not easily picked out of a line-up.

Earl May (born 1927)

DOUBLE BASS

Widely experienced section-man making a belated appearance over the title.

 Swinging The Blues Arbors ARCD 19230 May; David Glasser (as); Larry Ham, Barry Harris (p); Eddie Locke (d). 05.

Great to see a player of Earl's experience get his moment in the spotlight. He's obviously too mature to let it go to his head, crafting a neat set of bop and swing classics (including a delicious 'Blame It On My Youth', 'Lester Leaps In' and 'Confirmation') that gives his fruity bass due prominence without over-egging it. Harris's appearance just adds cachet and class to proceedings.

Tina May (born 1961)

VOICE

Born in Gloucester, she trained as both an actress and a singer, and she has become one of the best and boldest British jazz singers.

(*) Jazz Piquant – N'Oublie Jamais 33JAZZ042 May; Tony Coe (cl, ss, ts); Brian Dee (p); Alec Coburn (g); John Francis (vn); Julie Walkington (b); Vince Clarke (d). 1/98.

* One Fine Day 33JAZZ050 May; Alan Barnes (cl, ss, ts, bs); Nikki Iles (p); Mick Hutton (b); Simon Morton (d). 7/99.

May has some of the lean, light quality of the bop singers of Buddy Stewart's generation, yet her deep, English voice is strikingly apart from American influences; and she has a worldly, been-around-the-block quality which doesn't prevent her from investing even familiar lyrics with wonder. Jazz Piquant shows off her complete mastery of the French language in a set of the native songs, and with Coe on top form this is an irresistible confection. But it has to bow to the quite superb One Fine Day, a repertory record so finely achieved it should make most singers nod in appreciation at least. Starting with a gorgeous version of Anthony Newley's 'Pure Imagination' and ending on the heartbreaking folk piece 'Waley Waley', May works through every style and, abetted by wonderful work from Barnes and Iles, creates an intimate, intense atmosphere which asks for a listener's finest attention.

(*) I'll Take Romance Linn AKD 202 May; Scott Hamilton (ts); Nikki Iles, Robin Aspland (p); Alec Dankworth (b); Tristan Mailliot (d). 4/02.

With Scott Hamilton along as co-producer and soloist, this is Tina at her happiest and most sheerly entertaining. The set-list might look a bit tired but the record hardly stops swinging from 'I'll Take Romance' inwards, and band and vocalist cruise through the 11 songs (Iles and Aspland split piano duties between them). Ellington's 'Tonight I Shall Sleep' was one inspired choice, the almost unheard-of verse included, and 'Trust In Me' should delight Jungle Book fans. One might have wished for a single heartbreaker among the ballads; otherwise, light of heart and light on its feet.

* More Than You Know 33JAZZ100 May; Tony Coe (ts); Nikki Iles (p). 2/04.

Celebrating the 100th issue on the label, this is beautifully done. Seekers after a nice and easy jazz-singing record will most likely be dismayed by Tony Coe's perpetually off-kilter solos and obbligati, but it's all in tune with a singer who's coming into her most adventurous period. Iles plays with her characteristic serene energy and the songs – 'Very Early', 'November Girl' and 'So Long Big Time' are just three of the surprising choices – are ingenious props for May's most beguiling performance.

(*) A Wing And A Prayer 33 Records 33JAZZ134 May; Stan Sulzmann (as, f); Nikki Iles (p). 05–06.

Again, this is probably one killer track short of masterpiece quality. It's a delicious record, and Iles has acquired real authority as an accompanist, implying more than she states on the bittersweet 'Maybe September' and swinging out some of the faster tunes with a shrewd buoyancy that recalls Ellis Larkins. The voice/sax/piano formula shouldn't be overplayed, but in Sulzmann the singer has a partner who knows how to serve the song but also imply other things going on.

* The Ray Bryant Songbook 33 Records 33JAZZ156 May; Don Sickler (t, flhn); Bobby Porcelli (as, f, af, cl); Jay Brandford (bs, cl, bcl); Ray Bryant (p); Tim Givens (b); Vince Cherico (d, perc); Len Bryant (perc). 07.

Quite, quite dazzling, in both conception and execution. While other singers fiddle with the Great American Songbook like rag-pickers, May goes straight for the song at the heart of jazz's bluesiest contemporary master. Sickler's arrangements are spare and sassy; Rudy Van Gelder gives the studio a plain, intimate sound, with Tina sounding as if she's sitting on a barstool in a half-circle of players. 'Dreaming My Life Away' is a throwback to the great bop singers, but with a fresh-minted quality that keeps it miles from pastiche. Quite simply a faultless vocal album.

Also, in brief:

(*) Early May 33 Records 33JAZZ093. 91–94.

A useful compilation from Never Let Me Go, Fun and It Ain't Necessarily So.

 Live In Paris 33 Jazz 055. 12/99.

A stopgap live album, recorded in a dry and unflattering acoustic.

Bill Mays (born 1944)

PIANO

Born in Sacramento, he studied in San Diego and moved to New York in the mid-'80s.

* Summer Sketches / (*) Going Home / * Live At Jazz Standard Palmetto 2070 / 2090 / 3025 Mays; Martin Wind (b); Matt Wilson (d). 10/00; 02; 04.

 Fantasy Palmetto 2128 Mays; Marvin Stamm (t, flhn); Alisa Horn (clo). 01, 05.

Mays's Concords are out to grass, which is Palmetto's gain. The label seems determined to make musical quality rather than musical fashion its byword. Bill's 'Fireflies' on the summer-themed album is delicious but it's in strong company. 'Estate' is the obvious repertory tune, but Wind's mellow 'Late August' and Wilson's wry '(Gotta Go To) Summer School' are vividly complementary. There's a fantastic bass/piano duet on 'The Things We Did Last Summer' and, would you have guessed it, they get through the whole set without doing a certain Gershwin tune, though both Bill and Martin allude to it more than once. Deceptive as heat haze, this is a lovely, thoughtful album.

The follow-up album is also themed. The challenge is to make as varied and inventive a job as possible of tunes that are linked by title rather than key or tempo. 'You'd Be So Nice To Come Home To' is the obvious first call, but how often do you hear Red Mitchell's 'I'm A Homebody'? There are some vivid originals, each very much in keeping with the temperament of the trio members. Guess who wrote 'Nosey Neighbours'? Too many rhetorical questions; this is a wonderful record by an artist at the top of his powers.

The live disc finds the group in settled form. Bill's near-abstract account of 'Darn That Dream' is a sure sign that he doesn't want to be pigeonholed as a mainstream conservative. Wind takes the main theme statement arco on 'How Are Things In Glocca Morra?'. The long 'Willow Weep For Me' is a tour de force, and 'Smile' closes out a delightful record.

Fantasy introduces the Inventions Trio, and no misprints in the instrumentation. Mays has long been introduced in classical music, and Rachmaninov, Gershwin and Debussy are represented here, as well as his own effort in that direction, the three-part 'Fantasy', which is one of the parts that features Horn. She's absent for four lovely trumpet (or flugelhorn) and piano duets, which represent the core of the album. The cello, albeit beautifully played, doesn't do much more than embellish and reinforce the bass. Ironically, a few more guest spots – flute, guitar, vibes – might have given the album much-needed colour and drama.

Marilyn Mazur (born 1955)

PERCUSSION, VOICE

Born in New York but grew up in Denmark. She led her own Primi Band in the '80s before high-profile stints with Miles Davis, Wayne Shorter and Jan Garbarek. Winner of the 2001 Jazzpar prize.

 Circular Chant Storyville STCD 4200 Mazur; Nils Petter Molvaer (t); Per Jørgensen (t, v); Michael Riessler, Hans Ulrik (reeds); Bugge Wesseltoft (ky); Mikkel Nordsø (g); Klaus Hovman (b); Jacob Andersen (d). 3/94.

(*) All The Birds Stunt STUCD 02072 2CD Mazur; Palle Mikkelborg (t); Hans Ulrik (sax, cl, bcl, f); Fredrik Lundin (ts, f, bf, elec); Elvira Plenar (ky); Eivind Aarset (g); Anders Jormin, Klaus Hovman (b); Audun Kleive (d); Benita Haastrup, Birgit Løkke, Lisbeth Diers (perc, v); Aina Kemanis, Josefine Cronholm (v). 4/01.

 Daylight Stories Stunt 4082 Mazur; Hans Ulrik (reeds); Elvira Planar (ky); Klaus Hovman (b); Audun Kleive (d); Aina Kemanis (v). 9/03.

(*) Small Labyrinths ECM 533679-2 As above, except add Nils Petter Molvaer (t); Eivind Aarset (g). 97.

(*) Elixir ECM 1962 Mazur; Jan Garbarek (ss, ts). 6/05.

In addition to Primi, Mazur has run three groups: Pulse Unit on the first record, Percussion Paradise on the second and more recently Future Song. Much of the material on Circular Chant is by Harry Beckett and its sunny, challenging cast is spot-on for Marilyn and her players. The 2001 record features Mikkelborg and Lundin among the guest soloists. Jazz survives in the improvising from trumpet, saxes, guitar and bass, but the music is essentially a personal take on the kind of global fusion which Mazur has spent much of her playing career investigating: lots of airy textures and polyrhythmical this-and-that, yet done with a sparse and feelingful, tactile grace which is quite unlike the bland and unyielding style of most fusion. Some tolerance is called for in some of the wordless vocalizing, admittedly, although the record has been cannily sequenced out of material from four different concerts and the impeccable sound is a pleasure – it's almost startling when applause breaks in.

Future Song evolved while Mazur was touring with Miles and has remained pretty much intact since 1989. The Stunt record is very good, but nothing matches the exquisite sound on the first ECM disc, where the added presence of Molvaer and Aarset gives more colour and texture to the ensemble. Elixir is somewhat in the line of Jarrett's Spirits, an intensely personal record that seems eavesdropped rather than heard. Garbarek's saxophone figurations are mostly complementary, but just occasionally intrusive. It would have been bold indeed to release such a thing as a purely solo project.

Robert Mazurek

TRUMPET, CORNET

The Chicagoan spent some time in Scotland before moving from hard bop to more freely focused music.

 Man Facing East Hep CD 2059 Mazurek; Randolph Tressler (p); Tom Allen, John Webber (b); George Fludas (d). 12/93.
 Badlands /  Green & Blue Hep CD 2065 / 2067 As above, except omit Allen; add Eric Alexander (ts). 9/94, 7/95; 9/94, 7/95.
 Silver Spines Delmark DG-540 Mazurek (c, ky, bells). 3/02.
On the Hep discs Mazurek comes straight out of late-'50s Blue Note hard bop, direct and unadorned. Tressler, who hails from Detroit, provides a solid harmonic anchor, over which the trumpet skates and bounces. Mazurek delivers, then delivers again: a fast uptempo blues, a ballad, a mid-paced groove with a minor feel; and then the same again. No frills, but inescapably one-dimensional.

The addition of Alexander on the two subsequent discs rounds out the picture but also cements the Blue Note lineage. Badlands kicks off with a tribute to 'Arthur's Seat', the volcanic lump which dominates adoptive home Edinburgh, and it immediately suggests a musical personality that has matured in less than a calendar year. The inclusion of standards – 'Deep Purple', 'Every Time We Say Goodbye', 'Stranger In Paradise' and 'I Fall In Love Too Easily' – was a wise decision; though not the most melodic of players, Mazurek is absolutely across the chords, and Alexander trails him every inch of the way. Green & Blue is interesting not least because Mazurek doubles on cornet rather than flugelhorn, getting a tight, fat sound on the smaller horn.

Playing Silver Spines straight after any of the above makes little sense unless one has auditioned some of the discs by the later Chicago Underground Trio. The opening seconds will, indeed, have you checking to see if the disc is dysfunctional. Actually, the skipping and sundry bursts of offstage noise fit in with the modus operandi of a set which is more of an ambient pantechnicon seasoned with the odd dash of improvisation. When he wants to, Mazurek can still play stark, Cherry-flavoured lines, as he does (superbly) on track two. But this is more about pointillist sketches on empty air, or perhaps a patterning of frost on a window pane.

Christian McBride (born 1972)

DOUBLE BASS

Emerged in the '90s and has already built a sideman discography that vies with his mentors Paul Chambers and Ray Brown.

 Gettin' To It Verve 523 989 2 McBride; Roy Hargrove (t); Steve Turre (tb); Joshua Redman (ts); Cyrus Chestnut (p); Ray Brown, Milt Hinton (b); Lewis Nash (d). 8–9/94.
 A Family Affair Verve 314 557 554 McBride; Tim Warfield (ts); Charles Craig (p, ky); Russell Malone (g); Gregory Hutchinson (d); Munyungo Jackson (perc); Will Downing, Vesta (v). 1/98.
 Sci-Fi Verve 314 543 915 McBride; Ron Blake (ss, ts); James Carter (bcl); Toots Thielemans (hca); Herbie Hancock, Shedrick Mitchell (p); David Gilmore (g); Rodney Green (d); Dianne Reeves (v). 9/00.
With a big, woody sound and a fluent delivery, McBride is one of the few mainstream players who is always interesting to listen to. Brown and Hinton join him on the first record for a remarkable three-bass version of Neal Hefti's 'Splanky', but for the most part the date is unreconstructed and unapologetic hard bop. Gettin' To It might almost be a late-'50s Blue Note disc. McBride has perhaps been stalked by too many ancestors; add Paul Chambers and Oscar Pettiford to the list. There is something of O.P. to 'In A Hurry', with Josh Redman and Steve Turre, but the sound is also fresh and new.

The next two Verve albums have now been deleted, but A Family Affair was the sort of streetwise jazz-funk Miles was making two decades earlier. It just about comes off, largely because McBride and his fellow players are all such formidable technicians. Gregory Hutchinson is a drummer of the sort Miles searched after for years and Charles Craig has the ability to combine straightforward grooves with some thoughtful harmonic information. Kool And The Gang's 'Open Sesame' and Sly's 'Family Affair' are high-points, but there is some lovely bass work on Stevie Wonder's quiet 'Summer Soft'.

Sci-Fi picks up where the earlier Verve records left off and sees McBride exploring pop music as a source of new standards. The album kicks off with Steely Dan's 'Aja' and includes a brilliant version of Sting's 'Walking On The Moon'. There are also Jaco Pastorius and Stanley Clarke tunes. Great guest spots from Toots Thielemans and James Carter on bass clarinet (a great duet with McBride on the Sting tune) make this a memorable record, though one perhaps a little anxious to hit a bigger demographic.

 Vertical Vision Warner Bros 9362 48278 2 McBride; Ron Blake (ss, ts, f); Geoffrey Keezer (p); Terreon Gully (d). 6/02.
His solitary Warners date has great charm, considerable intelligence and a promising return to straightforward jazz chops. The inclusion of Joe Zawinul's 'Boogie Woogie Waltz' right at the end was a great stroke, but for the most part these are originals by the group, with Keezer well represented by two strong, dancing themes and Ron Blake checking in with the lovely 'Song For Maya'. The group sounds like a regular working outfit. The members are easy with each other and solos are distributed democratically and with due feeling for individual talents. Check out 'Technicolor Nightmare' for a taste of a group on top of its form.

(*) Live At Tonic Ropeadope 62072 3CD McBride; Ron Blake (ts); Jason Moran (p); Geoff Keezer (ky); Charlie Hunter, Eric Krasno (g); Jenny Scheinman (vn); Terreon Gully (d); DJ Logic (turntables). 3/06.
Phew! What's this for? A vast slab of music, much of it in huge undifferentiated jams. Disc one consists of opening-set highlights with the regular quartet of Blake, Keezer and Gully, but the second and third consist of funk workouts directly inspired by Miles and Herbie records of the '70s, with 'Boogie Woogie Waltz' thrown in as a remembrance of Weather Report. 'Bitches Brew' comes in at under five minutes, but 'See Jam, Hear Jam, Feel Jam' and 'E Jam' are both around the half-hour mark, and eye-wateringly tedious. Whatever excitement these generated in the club just doesn't translate to record and the guest spots (including label boss Hunter) offer only false climaxes. Apart from their appealing to samplers and DJs, it's hard to know who'd want discs two and three.

 New York Time Chesky 314 McBride; Javon Jackson (ts); Cedar Walton (p); Jimmy Cobb (d). 1/06.

... closely followed by the predictable reassertion of straight-ahead values, with 'My Shining Hour', 'Naima', Whisper Not' and a slew of Walton tunes. It's all done with impeccable professionalism, but little more, and after the indigestible Live At Tonic it smacks of cynical market repositioning.

Donny McCaslin (born 1966)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

From a musical family, he studied at Berklee and currently works the New York scene.

 Give And Go Criss Cross 1277 McCaslin; John Swana (t); Steve Gardenas (p); Scott Colley (b); Gene Jackson (d). 6/05.

McCaslin's Naxos debut Exile And Discovery (worth the search) was a hugely impressive display of post-Rollins tenor-playing, with two unaccompanied Piazzolla studies, an amazing 'Tenderly' and some original themes in the mix. Two Arabesques followed, and then this quartet/quintet date for Gerry Teekens. At past 40, McCaslin's no longer a startling newcomer, but there's no mistaking the originality and sheer imagination of the opening sequence here, 'Outlaw', 'Scrappy' and 'Drift', themes which toy with metre, awkward harmonic progressions and melody line in the most fascinating way. It works best when McCaslin's out front on his own, but Swana adds a dimension, even if he does reinforce memories of ambitious Blue Note hard bop of the '60s. Monk's 'Eronel' is the only non-original, tucked away at the end like a bit of filler. The set would have been just as strong without it.

 Soar Sunnyside 1150 McCaslin; Shane Endsley (t); Luis Bonilla (tb) Orrin Evans (p); Ben Monder (g); Scott Colley (b); Antonio Sanchez (d); Pernell Saturnino (perc); Luciana Souza (v). 05.

 In Pursuit Sunnyside 1169 As above, except omit Endsley, Bonilla, Souza; add David Binney (as). 06.

A bold approach on the first of these, with McCaslin digging not into some blandly 'Latin' bag but into the highly specific world of Panamanian music for the folk themes that begin and end this subtle record. As Santi Debriano and others have shown, the Central American country's musical culture is very specific and very challenging, and McCaslin's already well-developed rhythmic language chimes very well with it. His tone has become more vocalized but is still capable of delivering a phrase as hard as a diamond, as on 'Hero As A Boy' and 'Be Love', the two best tunes.

The same language is taken up on In Pursuit with 'Descarga', 'Madonna' and 'Sea Of Expectancy'. To an extent, Souza's vocalizing on the earlier record is replaced by Binney's alto on the second, and the effect is to make the set more like a conventional jazz set. And yet McCaslin's invention has never been stronger or more focused: this is bold, even innovative, modern jazz.

Ron McClure (born 1941)

DOUBLE BASS

A follower of Paul Chambers – whom he replaced in Wynton Kelly's group – he worked in big bands for a time, before joining Charles Lloyd's highly successful group, after which he began to emerge as a composer and leader.

(*) McJolt Steeplechase SCCD 31262 McClure; John Abercrombie (g); Richie Beirach (p); Adam Nussbaum (d). 12/89.

McClure's fusion group, Fourth Way, extended the jazz-rock idiom he had helped create with Blood, Sweat And Tears and the Charles Lloyd Quartet. A fine bassist, with an excellent arco technique, he is also an exceptional composer who draws on non-jazz tonalities. One of his characteristic devices is a percussive, almost marimba-like thrum achieved by striking the strings against the fingerboard.

McJolt is basically a standards set and McClure develops the LaFaro sound very impressively on tracks like 'Nardis', 'Stella By Starlight' and 'Once I Had A Secret Love'.

 Strikezone Steeplechase SCCD 31277 McClure; Marc Copland (p); Dave Stryker (d). 90.

 Never Forget Steeplechase SCCD 31279 McClure; Eddie Henderson (t); Vincent Herring (as); Kevin Hayes (p); Bill Stewart (d). 10/90.

 For Tonite Only Steeplechase SCCD 31288 McClure; Randy Brecker (t, flhn); John Abercrombie (g); Adam Nussbaum (d). 3/91.

(*) Sunburst Steeplechase SCCD 31306 McClure; Tim Hagans (t); Conrad Herwig (tb); Joe Gordon (as, ss); LeeAnn Ledgerwood (p); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 12/91.

(*) Inner Account Steeplechase SCCD 31329 McClure; Rich Perry (ts); Kenny Drew Jr (p); Vic Juris (g); Sylvia Cuenca (d). 11/92.

The bassist sounds less persuasive in a conventional horn-led quintet and Herring has an uneasy time of it on the later of the 1990 sessions. McClure likes to pair guitar and piano, usually allowing the keyboard-player long, developed lines, while the guitarist plays 'free' over the top. That's essentially what Abercrombie does on For Tonite Only, and Juris too, less confidently but ultimately with more success, on the impressive Inner Account.

The recording on Sunburst is very bright and detailed, without too much rumble from the bass, and the playing is straightforward and to the point. It started a streak that was to last through the decade.

(*) Concrete Canyon Steeplechase SCCD 31391 McClure; Tim Hagans (t); Marc Copland (p); Billy Hart (d). 3/96.

* Closer To Your Tears Steeplechase SCCD 31413 McClure; Jay Azzolina (g); Marc Copland (p); Billy Hart (d); Manolo Badrena (perc). 9/96.

A busy year. Hagans's early-Miles-influenced trumpet makes an attractive contribution to Concrete Canyon. With the exception of Copland's 'All That's Left', everything else on the set is a McClure original and, though the material isn't too varied, it's open-ended enough to be lifted in performance; 'Lock', dedicated to vibist Joe Locke, is a bright blowing theme. There's a prevalent minor-key feel, and an attractive drift towards polytonality on 'Deception', 'Ears' and the title-piece, a poem to McClure's beloved New York. Fine as Copland and Hagans are, one finds oneself listening out for the bass and drums most of the time. Hart is at the top of his powers and this is one of his best guest appearances for years.

He's back, and in form, on the lovely Closer To Your Tears, which has confusingly similar cover art to the other Steeplechase. The title-piece is movingly personal, true of his work generally, but especially heart-close here. If there is a drawback, it's a slightly jarring juxtaposition of bright, uptempo tunes and more expressive themes like 'Eli's Wine', and the closing 'He, Who Gares', which seems to reference Miles Davis. The album isn't quite solidly balanced but, unlike that extra cup of wine set out for Elijah, it's one that will be tasted and refilled many times.

(*) Dream Team Steeplechase SCCD 31435 McClure; Rich Perry (ts); Marc Copland (p); Billy Hart (d). 98.
A fascinating set that gets off to a wonderful start with 'Denial's Goat', a double-waltz-time groove which has Perry snaking off into a strange, shawm-like solo. 'Dream Time' has a floating minor feel. Copland brings in 'Darius Dance', but otherwise all the tunes are McClure's, united by his characteristic attention to voicings that work right through the band. Hart's in luminous form. A dream team, indeed.

(*) Double Triangle Naxos 86044 McClure; Tim Hagans(t); Conrad Herwig (tb); Rich Perry (ts); Marc Copland(p); Billy Hart (d). 99.
The concept here is that the horns and rhythm section represent two interlocking triangles, a musical geometry that yields some fascinating rhythmic and harmonic variations. Herwig is a powerful presence. His lead line on 'We'll Be Together Again' is echoed by the bass, while Hart weaves in and out of the mix. Perry is not such a commanding presence this time around and there are moments when he seems to lose his place and simply mark time with chromatic figures that do little more than unpick the theme.

McClure's writing is strong and idiosyncratic, but he also likes to develop new ideas out of existing material. 'Night Bird' is an imaginative reworking of the line of Herbie Hancock's 'Speak Like A Child', while Joe Henderson's 'Gazelle' seems to be the source material for 'Thunder'. He plays throughout with a calm authority.

(*) Match Point Steeplechase SCCD 31517 McClure; Jed Levy (ts); Bob DeVos (g); Jeff Brillinger (d). 02.
Instead of celebrating a decade's association and ten CDs with an upbeat set, McClure plays a markedly introspective one. Most of the material is written by Levy and DeVos, competent players but uninspiring writers. The real climax comes with Ron's own 'The Day After Christmas', which in nine minutes sums up why the bassist is such a treasure; a mournful but lyrical theme, it conjures some superb double-stopped passages and some lovely rhythmic variation. The other delight is a rare interpretation of Artie Shaw's 'Moonray'.

CORE COLLECTION

* Soft Hands
Steeplechase SCCD 31615 McClure; Rich Perry (ts); George Colligan (p). 1/06.
Ron marks his 65th year with a quiet masterpiece, his best record since Closer To Your Tears a decade earlier. These eight tunes are the work of a mature and assured composer and the drummerless format keeps the tempos open enough to allow at least some of the songs to change direction internally, as the last track, 'Marble Room', does to devastating effect. It's by some way the longest cut of the set. The rest come in around the seven- or eight-minute mark and seem designed to give all three members a chance to address the material at reasonable length. The title-tune and 'Gates Of Saffron' are the other two pieces in a closing stretch that must be heard; an essential modern album.

Also, in brief:

(*) Never Always Steeplechase SCCD 31355. 94.
Don Friedman's classically influenced approach is the key to this trio set with Billy Hart (d).

 Pink Cloud Naxos Jazz 86002. 94.
A reunion with Fourth Way's Mike Nock, who exec-produces this strange, bitty record.

 Age Of Peace Steeplechase SCCD 31544. 10/03.
The run of fine form continues.

Rob McConnell (born 1935)

TROMBONE, VALVE TROMBONE

Born in Ontario, he began by working in the Canadian dance band scene of the '50s and '60s, before forming Boss Brass in 1968, using brass sections in close harmony.

 Our 25th Year Concord CCD 4559 McConnell; Arnie Chycoski, Steve McDade, John MacLeod, Guido Basso, Dave Woods (t, flhn); Alistair Kay, Bob Livingston, Jerry Johnson (tb); Ernie Pattison (btb); Gary Pattison, Jim McDonald (frhn); Moe Koffman, John Johnson (ss, as, f, cl); Eugene Amaro (ts, cl, f); Rick Wilkins (ts, cl); Bob Leonard (bs, bcl, cl, f); Don Thompson (p); Ed Bickert (g); Steve Wallace (b); Terry Clarke (d); Brian Leonard (perc). 93.
(*) Don't Get Around Much Any More Concord CCD 4661 As above, except omit Pattison, Amaro, Thompson, Bickert, Wallace, Clarke, Brian Leonard; add Judy Kay (frhn); Alex Dean (cl, f, ts); David Restivo (p); Lorne Lofsky (g), Jim Vivian (b), Ted Warren (d). 4/95.
McConnell has kept his Boss Brass together on and off for more than 30 years. Initially, they did without any kind of sax section, but by the time of these records the band had grown bigger. McConnell's charts suggest expansiveness as the band's signifying element: although the leader worked with Maynard Ferguson for a spell, the brassiness of the BB is exploited for sonority rather than clout, and there's a kind of reluctance to even their toughest arrangements. The music is skilfully handled, but the various editions of the orchestra never seem really to set light to the charts. Even where McConnell seeks to evade cliché, he can't altogether shrug off the MOR atmosphere that hangs round most of their records. Our 25th Year is more businesslike than celebratory, and by the time of Don't Get Around Much Any More, which really starts to roll out the clichés, one feels that the band might be ready for its collective pension.

 Play The Jazz Classics Concord CCD 4784 McConnell; Guido Basso, Dave Dunlop, Steve McDade, Kevin Turcotte (t, flhn); Jerry Johnson, Alistair Kay (tb); Ernie Pattison (btb); James MacDonald (frhn); John Johnson (ss, as, cl, f); Moe Koffman (ss, as, cl, f, pic); Rick Wilkins (ts, cl); Bob Leonard (bs, cl, bcl, f); Dave Restivo (p); Ed Bickert (g); Jim Vivian (b); Ted Warren (d); Brian Leonard (perc). 5/97.
This came late in the run of Concords and it's one of the best, with a bright Horace Silver–Blue Mitchell medley, a terrific version of 'Invitation', Ellington tunes and Neal Hefti's 'Li'l Darlin''. The band's in good shape, with the reed section increasingly well integrated with the brass cadres. A winner.

(*) Thank You, Ted Justin Time 173-2 McConnell; Steve McDade (t); Guido Basso (flhn); Terry Promane (tb); P. J. Perry (as); Alex Dean, Mike Murley (ts); David Restivo (p); Steve Wallace (b); Terry Clarke (d). 4/02.

Pared back to a tentet, McConnell's music strips a lot fitter on these outings. The music's less about a band punching over its weight than a mobile and lively ensemble with a good gang of soloists for spice. Guido Basso, for instance, is quite superb on 'If I Were A Bell' on Thank You, Ted, which track for track is surely the best disc under McConnell's name. The title is a homage to veteran jazz-jock Ted O'Reilly.

 So Very Rob Hanssler 93107 McConnell; SWR Big Band. 5/03.

In terms of repertoire, this pretty much retreads the Boss Brass records, and particularly Jazz Classics, but the German big band gives the charts enormous oomph and if you buy the concept it's an exhilarating listen. 'What Am I Here For?' and 'Stella By Starlight' are the outstanding tracks.

Also, in brief:

(*) The Brass Is Back Concord CCD 4458. 1/91.

As accomplished as in their earlier days, but too much lingering over detail and texture for a band in which detail tends to disperse the impact.

(*) Even Canadians Get The Blues Concord CCD 4722. 4/96.

It's the concept that's flawed, since the blues hardly bring out the best in McConnell's charts.

(*) Big Band Christmas Concord 4844. 4/98.

Not a bad Christmas disc, as Christmas discs go.

 Music Of The Twenties Justin Time 196-2. 4/03.

He picked durable themes rather than just doing the Charleston.

Susannah McCorkle (1946–2001)

VOICE

The Californian spent 1971–7 in London. On her return, she made many records crossing between mainstream, blues and Brazilian material. Afflicted with depression, she took her own life.

 The Beginning 1975 A AL 73233 McCorkle; Keith Ingham (p). 75.

* The Quality Of Mercer The Jazz Alliance TJA-10031 McCorkle; Digby Fairweather (t, c); Danny Moss (ts); Keith Ingham (p); Ron Rubin (b); Derek Hogg (d). 9/77.

(*) The People That You Never Get To Love The Jazz Alliance TJA-10034-2 McCorkle; Keith Ingham (p); Al Gafa (g); Steve LaSpina (b); Joe Cocuzzo (d). 11/81.

 How Do You Keep The Music Playing? The Jazz Alliance TJA-10036-2 McCorkle; Al Cohn (ts); Ben Aronov (p); Gene Bertoncini (g); Steve LaSpina (b); Joe Cocuzzo (d). 6/85.

(*) No More Blues Concord CCD 4370 McCorkle; Ken Peplowski (cl, ts); David Frishberg (p); Emily Remler (g); John Goldsby (b); Terry Clarke (d). 11/88.

(*) Sabia Concord CCD 4418 McCorkle; Scott Hamilton (ts); Lee Musiker (p); Emily Remler (g); Dennis Irwin (b); Duduka Fonseca (d); Café (perc). 2/90.

 I'll Take Romance Concord CCD 4491 McCorkle; Frank Wess (ts, f); Allen Farnham (p); Howard Alden (g); Dennis Irwin (b); Keith Copeland (d). 9/91.

The Beginning is not a reissue but a first release for some demos made with Keith Ingham, for a putative EMI contract: a strange, sometimes tentative mix of jazz, blues, cabaret tunes and characteristic Ingham rediscoveries, but the singer approaches everything with fresh enthusiasm. McCorkle's records in the '70s, now returning via the Jazz Alliance imprint, established her as a major songbook interpreter, uncovering rarities and seldom-heard verses from some of the best American composers. The Quality Of Mercer is an absolute gem: 14 choice Johnny Mercer songs done with wit, feeling and guile in perfect balance, the charm of 'Love's Got Me In A Lazy Mood' matched to the wistfulness of 'Skylark'. A peerless session, with deft support from Ingham, Fairweather and the rhapsodic Moss. The People That You Never Get To Love is nearly as good. This is a more modern set of songs, with Blossom Dearie, Dave Frishberg, Neil Sedaka and Jobim represented, and McCorkle handles all of the lyrics in a hip, intelligent way, the pose just slightly world-weary, but with a clear streak of emotion below the surface cool. The somewhat later How Do You Keep The Music Playing? is the weakest of these three. Although there are a couple of sublime glimpses of Al Cohn in one of his last dates, some of the songs seem mishandled: a slow 'There's No Business Like Show Business' starts well but ends up far too overwrought, 'By The Time I Get To Phoenix' was a poor choice, and she overplays 'Blizzard Of Lies'.

Her tenure with Concord provided her with what became a wide variety of settings. No More Blues benefits from a superbly integrated band, with Peplowski and Remler chiming in with pithy solos and Frishberg adding the most alert and gracious of accompaniments: McCorkle's big, courageous voice is huskily entreating on the ballads and assuredly swinging on the faster tunes. She's an interpreter rather than an improviser, which sees her through the Brazilian songs on Sabia: the task here is to drift through the coolly appealing melodies rather than swinging them to pieces, and McCorkle does it with perfect aplomb. A couple of the ballads sound too stretched, but her take on Astrud Gilberto on 'So Danço Samba' is wholly beguiling, and Hamilton (in the Stan Getz role) and Remler (in her final studio date) are marvellous.

I'll Take Romance is perhaps a shade disappointing as a follow-up. Nothing wrong with the arrangements or the players, with Wess defining his role as strong-but-tender tenorman. But the material – all of it very well-known, and excessively so in the case of 'Lover Man' and 'That Old Feeling' – seems like a deliberate attempt to play down McCorkle's knack for discovering forgotten gems, and some of her interpretations sound like false trails towards 'new' transformations. 'My Foolish Heart' and 'I Concentrate On You' are studied enough to suggest caricature, although occasionally – as on a wonderfully sustained 'It Never Entered My Mind' – it works out, and the faster pieces are magical.

(*) From Bessie To Brazil Concord CCD 4547 McCorkle; Randy Sandke (t, flhn); Robert Trowers (tb); Dick Oatts (as, f); Ken Peplowski (ts, cl); Allen Farnham (p); Howard Alden (g); Kiyoshi Kitagawa (b); Chuck Redd (d). 2/93.

Almost a classic – what holds it back, as often seemed to happen with this tremendously gifted singer, is the odd, strange lapse of judgement as to the kind of song she can get away with. The flaws this time are an embarrassing 'My Sweetie Went Away', done as a misplaced tribute to Bessie Smith, and a wincingly cavalier 'Still Crazy After All These Years'. On the plus side are a dozen gorgeous interpretations. Her second attempt at 'The People That You Never Get To Love', Rupert Holmes's only memorable song, is as wryly affecting as Jobim's 'The Waters Of March' is coolly hypnotic, and she does Dave Frishberg ('Quality Time') and Mercer and Arlen as well as anyone today. Sound backing from a Concord repertory team.

 Let's Face The Music Concord CCD-4759-2 McCorkle; Greg Gisbert (t, flhn); Conrad Herwig (tb); Jerry Dodgion (as, f); Chris Potter (ts, cl, f); Allen Farnham (p); Al Gafa (g); Steve Gilmore (b); Richard De Rosa (d, ky). 10/96.

 Someone To Watch Over Me Concord CCD-4798-2 McCorkle; Randy Sandke (t, flhn); Conrad Herwig (tb); Jerry Dodgion (as, af); Chris Potter (ts, af); Allen Farnham (ky); Howard Alden (g); Steve Gilmore, Dick Sarpola (b); Richard De Rosa (d). 10/97.

(*) From Broken Hearts To Blue Skies Concord CCD-4857-2 McCorkle; Greg Gisbert (t, flhn); John Fedchock (tb); Jon Gordon (as, f); Dick Oatts (ts, ss, f); Allen Farnham (p); Al Gafa (g); Steve Gilmore (b); Richard De Rosa (d). 10/98.

The first is an Irving Berlin tribute, and the rarities are what emerge best: 'Love And The Weather', a beautifully spare 'Better Luck Next Time' and a languorous 'Supper Time'. She has another go at 'There's No Business Like Show Business' and again overdoes it, although Farnham's arrangement also leans towards bombast. Excellent band, all the same.

Farnham handles the charts again for the Gershwin album. These are among the most-sung and most-recorded songs of their century and, while the singer doesn't do anything to hurt them, it's asking a lot for anyone to make something fresh out of them at this stage (only the closing pairing of 'Will You Remember Me' and 'Drifting Along With The Tide' could be called unusual). Susannah does best by the slowest pieces, especially 'How Long Has This Been Going On'.

The subsequent From Broken Hearts To Blue Skies was her best for years. The only false note is 'I Ain't Gonna Play No Second Fiddle': McCorkle may harbour a great affection for the Bessie Smith style but it really doesn't suit her. 'Nuages' and a lovely 'Caminhos Cruzados' are impeccable, 'Laughing At Life' is wistful, 'A Phone Call To The Past' is a Henry Mancini nocturne that she handles supremely well, and even 'I Wish I Were In Love Again' isn't overdone.

(*) Hearts And Minds Concord CCD-4897-2 McCorkle; Dick Oatts (ts); Allen Farnham (p); Paul Meyers (g); Steve Gilmore, Dennis Irwin (b); Tim Horner, Vanderlei Pereira (d); Thiago DeMello (perc). 3/00.

She ought to be remembered as an important building-block in Diana Krall's style, a smart and wilful interpreter herself, and a stylist who did better than most in handling old standards with new manners, as well as trying to combine writers of different generations. She was getting that right more than ever: she does Dave Frishberg with the right measure of flipness, and the Simon Wallace–Fran Landesman tunes are a surprise, with 'Scars' a poignant climax. If she never made her masterpiece, she came close.

Also, in brief:

 Dream Concord TJA-10037-2. 12/86.

Her Concord debut, good though not outstanding.

 From Broadway To Bebop Concord CCD 4615. 4/94.

She does Broadway better. Classic: 'One Of The Good Girls'.

 Easy To Love – The Songs Of Cole Porter Concord CCD 4696. 9/95.

OK Porter homage, though she brings nothing new to the most familiar tunes.

Gary McFarland (1933–71)

VIBES, ARRANGER

Began working as an arranger on the New York scene of the early '60s and quickly made a substantial name for himself with scores for Mulligan's Concert Jazz Band and others. After making albums for Verve and Impulse!, he retreated into a kind of small-group mood-music and died suddenly of a heart attack, aged 38.

 The October Suite Verve 654413-2 Steve Kuhn (p); Ron Carter (b); Marty Morell (d); strings and woodwinds. 10–11/66.

Although Kuhn's name is at the top of the marquee, McFarland wrote and arranged all six pieces, and at present it's the only widely available survivor of his 11 albums for Verve and Impulse!. It's a strange record. Kuhn's playing dances inside and outside the underlying harmonies, resolutely avoids conventional areas of swing, and at times sounds like a rather bitter parody of Bill Evans's delivery (Evans had already recorded a comparable collaboration with McFarland). The composer scores a string quartet around the first three tracks, and a woodwind and harp group for the second: on 'Traffic Patterns', they seem to approximate the random interventions of car horns. The overall result is a mix of romanticism and atonality which is both very much of its period and queerly experimental.

(*) America The Beautiful Blue Moon SKYE 1004 McFarland; Randy Brecker, Richard Williams, Marvin Stamm, Snooky Young, Ernie Royal, Bernie Glow (t); Garnett Brown (tb); Harvey Phillips (tba); Ray Alonge, Jimmy Buffington, Earl Chapin (frhn); Jerome Richardson, Romeo Penque, Wally Caine, Danny Bank, Joe Farrell (reeds); Warren Berenhardt (p); Eric Gale (g); George Ricci (clo); Jerry Jemmott, Chuck Rainey (b); Bill Lavorgna, Bernard Purdie (d); Warren Smith (perc). 10/68.

Subtitled An Account Of Its Disappearance, this is McFarland's threnody for a raped and exploited landscape, an early example of a musical work inspired by the nascent ecological movement; McFarland had worked in lumber camps in his teens and later witnessed the sprawl of LA encroaching on virgin country. It's mournful music, by and large, and cast in a quasi-symphonic form, but the orchestra assembled by Jerome Richardson has some strong jazz voices and there are some powerful moments during '80 mph Through Beer-Can Country', 'Last Rites For The Promised Land' and 'Due To The Lack Of Interest, Tomorrow Has Been Cancelled'.

Rod McGaha

TRUMPET

Raised in Chicago by a jazz-buff father, McGaha has moved from an interest in soul and funk towards more straightahead playing.

 Preacherman Compass 4273-2 McGaha; Lori Meecham (p); Marc Harris (org); Roger Spencer (b); Chris Brown (d). 2/99.

McGaha's debut eluded us but it was apparently an exercise in jazz hip-hop. This is much more straight down the line. Clark Terry is one of his mentors and there's a lot of Clark in his playing, which is full of squeezed notes, growls and brassy shouts ('Splip, Bam, Boom' is almost a Terry homage). The record seems designed more for airplay than anything and the tracks tend to come out as a series of routines, but within that framework it's enjoyably done, even if by the end one feels that McGaha has been set up as a kind of pasticheur. Another horn might help him to balance the books a little better.

Lou McGarity (1917–71)

TROMBONE

Jack Teagarden-influenced swing player.

 Music From Some Like It Hot Lone Hill Jazz LHJR 10321 McGarity; Yank Lawson, Doc Severinsen (t); Bob Wilber (cl); Bill Stegmeyer (as); Dick Cary (p); George Barnes (g); Jack Lesberg (b); Don Marino (d); & others. 55, 9 & 12/59.

With a more ringing sound than his model Tea, McGarity was a fine section-player who made few forays on his own. Lone Hill have brought together the quintet Some Like It Hot date with the slightly earlier octet Blue Lou and the still earlier Dixieland Special EP to produce this useful compilation. It's fresh, breezy music, with Lou's horn sound attractively highlighted and on the octet tracks a respectable semblance of big-band playing stripped down to basics. Not essential music, but good enough to while away an afternoon.

Howard McGhee (1918–87)

TRUMPET

Born in Tulsa, Oklahoma, grew up in Detroit and won his spurs in territory bands. He was less of an innovator than either Fats Navarro or Dizzy Gillespie, and his rather light tone and legato phrasing reflect an apprenticeship on clarinet. Recreational habits cost him dear, but he kept gigging until late in life.

 Howard McGhee On Dial – The Complete Sessions: 1945–47 Spotlite SPJ CD 131 McGhee; Teddy Edwards, James D. King, James Moody (ts); Vernon Biddle, Jimmy Bunn, Hank Jones, Michael 'Dodo' Marmarosa (p); Milt Jackson (vib); Ray Brown, Bob Kesterson (b); J. C. Heard, Roy Porter (d). 9/45–12/47.

 Howard McGhee 1945–1946 Classics 1125 As above, except add Karl George, Snooky Young (t); Vic Dickenson, Gene Roland (tb); Jimmy Bunn (p); Stan Morgan (g); Charles Mingus (b); Nat McFay (d); Pearl Taylor, Estelle Edison (v). 45–46.

(*) Howard McGhee 1946–1948 Classics 1089 McGhee; James Moody, Teddy Edwards (ts); Jimmy Heath (as, bs); Hank Jones, Michael 'Dodo' Marmarosa, Will Davis (p); Milt Jackson (p, vib); Arv Garrison (g); Percy Heath, Ray Brown, Bob Kesterson (b); J. C. Heard, Roy Porter, Joe Harris (d); Earl Coleman. 46–48.

Howard was a prime mover in bebop on the West Coast. He came with Coleman Hawkins's group and stayed on, to the detriment of his health. The 1945–1946 Classics covers a range of material, including a big-band date and a few vocal sessions with Pearl Taylor and Estelle Edison. There's also an early glimpse of Mingus. The most famous of his recordings of this time, however, are those made with Charlie Parker.

Bird's infamous 'Lover Man' sessions were originally issued under McGhee's name, but the four sides recorded in LA in 1945 for the Philo Aladdin label (and subsequently taken up by Dial) were his first as leader. They feature the twin tenors of Edwards and King, the latter a friend from the Andy Kirk band. These and the jam band cuts from July 1946 are raw and shapeless. McGhee shows early signs of the signature bruised lyricism of later years, but his phrasing is often indistinct and the line not always convincing.

The Hollywood sextet of October 1946, which again uses Kesterson and Porter but with the perennially undervalued Marmarosa on piano, suggests how fruitful an association the McGhee–Edwards front line was going to be. 'Dialated Pupils' (sic) and 'Up In Dodo's Room' (two versions) are strong bebop performances, establishing a reputation that was also being fostered by JATP appearances..

The New York tracks from December 1947 are oddly unsatisfactory, and 'Sleepwalker Boogie' may be the most telling title of the bunch, for McGhee seems to be running on autopilot. 'Night Mist' is magnificent (and also in two versions), but much of the interest comes from tenor saxophonist Moody and from the interplay between Jackson and Jones.

There are signs even this early that McGhee was turning into not just a powerful soloist but a useful composer as well. 'Thermodynamics' from 1946, the delightful 'McGhee Special' and earlier cuts like 'Intersection' and 'Life Stream' bespeak a thoughtful talent who threw off his earliest influences quite quickly. The 1946–1948 Classics finds McGhee at the peak of his powers. In these cuts from right across the country, he sounds in fine fettle, blowing strong and free in a variety of contexts and for a number of prominent and less-prominent labels. The 1945–1946 disc is better still and completes the story of a wonderful year.

 Howard McGhee 1948 Classics 1058 McGhee; Fats Navarro (t); Billy Eckstine (vtb); Kenny Mann, Jesse Powell (ts); Jimmy Heath (as, bs); Will Davis, Hank Jones (p); Milt Jackson (vib); Ray Brown, Percy Heath (b); Joe Harris, J. C. Heard (d). 2/48.

 Maggie: The Savoy Sessions Savoy 269 As above, except add J. J. Johnson (tb); Rudy Williams (ts); Clifton 'Skeeter' Best (g); Charlie Rice (d). 2/48–52.

 Howard McGhee 1949–1952 Classics 1294 As above, except add Brew Moore (ts); Kenny Drew (p). 49–52.

The 1948 sides catch the trumpeter at a particularly tempestuous time, when music was taking a back seat to other imperatives. As ever, McGhee seems to alternate between intense, intuitive playing and banal passage-work, but the partnership with Milt Jackson is unexpectedly calm and centred, and there are half a dozen breathtaking moments from the trumpeter. 'I'm In The Mood For Love' is one of the finest things in Maggie's entire catalogue, but it is Jackson who shines on the opening 'Sweet And Lovely'.

The Classics compilation also includes material recorded in Paris for Vogue and Blue Star, working with Jimmy Heath, who was still on alto and not yet ready to shake off his 'Little Bird' tag. By the same analogy, Jesse Powell finds himself in the Lucky Thompson role, helping to anchor the top line but creating unexpected little paths of his own through the changes.

The set ends with one of the classic bebop encounters, the October 1948 one with the trumpeter who'd made the biggest impact on his developing style. These four sides are included on The Fabulous Fats Navarro, which anyone committed either to bebop or to the golden years of Blue Note will already have. As usual, the mastering does the music no favours, but hearing these numbers – 'The Skunk', 'Boperation' and two parts of 'Double Talk' – under McGhee's nominal leadership perhaps slants the emphasis away from Fats for a moment. Maggie's phrasing on the first track is intriguing, because again he seems to be imitating clarinet lines, a habit he shrugs off later on in the session in favour of a much crisper attack.

One thinks of Charlie Parker's career as punctuated by the Savoy and Dial sessions, and the same is true of McGhee, who made these dates for Savoy between February 1948 and 1952. There are some excellent things on the Savoy reissue from a jammed session with Jimmy Heath, Billy Eckstine on valve trombone and others; also later recordings made in the Pacific with a pianoless group that included J. J. Johnson and the little-known Rudy Williams. The Classics set brings the story up to date, but it's worth cross-checking personnels and dates before purchase.

 Maggie's Back In Town! Original Jazz Classics OJC 693 McGhee; Phineas Newborn (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Shelly Manne (d). 6/61.

McGhee was out of circulation for much of the '50s. On Maggie's Back In Town! he sounds straightened-out and clear-headed, tackling 'Softly As In A Morning Sunrise' and 'Summertime' at a hurtling pace that sounds good in the ensembles but flags a little when he is soloing. The opening 'Demon Chase', dedicated to Teddy Edwards's son, is similarly hectic, but is good-natured enough. 'Brownie Speaks', included in homage to Clifford Brown, stretches him a little more convincingly, but by then the set is over. There is really only one ballad, and 'Willow Weep For Me' takes a slightly hysterical edge from Newborn's very tensed-up accompaniment.

 Jazz Brothers Storyville STCD 4077 McGhee; Charlie Rouse (ts); Barry Harris (p); Lisle Atkinson (b); Grady Tate (d); Jual [sic]; Curtis (perc). 10/77.

This was made around the same time as Rouse's own Moment's Notice and features a familiar blend of bop, slower blues themes and a touch of Caribbean on 'In There'. There's also a nice version of 'Caravan' and a small-scale cutting contest on 'Search'. Nothing fancy, and nothing McGhee couldn't have run off in his sleep, but an appealing set all the same.

 Home Run Storyville STCD 8273 McGhee; Benny Bailey (t); Teddy Edwards, Sonny Redd (ts); Barry Harris, Art Hillery (p); Lisle Atkinson, Leroy Vinnegar (b); Bobby Durham, Billy Higgins (d). 10/78–10/79.

(*) Wise In Time Storyville STCD 8272 As above, except omit Redd, Harris, Durham. 10/79.

McGhee was still holding his act together at the end of the '70s. The tone was still light and almost fragile, but there was an obduracy and determination in the playing which is still very appealing. Thirty years on from his debut, McGhee is once again happy to work in a more or less straight bebop form on occasions, programming Parker tunes like 'Moose The Mooche', 'Yardbird Suite' and 'Relaxin' At Camarillo'.

These albums are slightly confusing in that both also include material from the related Storyville set, Young At Heart. The 1978 tracks with Benny Bailey sound like an attempt to recapture something of the sabres-at-dawn excitement of the McGhee–Navarro records. And yet it is the lyricism the two men share which comes across, rather than a simulacrum of the heady days of bop. The quintet with Edwards is by this stage rather like a comfortable old shoe, still capable of tramping out the miles without a pinch, and still capable of putting in a burst of speed on something like 'Moose The Mooche'. Autumnal jazz, but very beautiful.

Also, in brief:

 Complete Savoy And Dial Masters: Leader Sessions Definitive DRCD 11163. 45–52.

Valuable early material, but available elsewhere and in mostly better sound.

(*) Just Be There Steeplechase SCCD 31204 12/76

A very ordinary set with a Danish rhythm section.

Jimmy McGriff (born 1936)

ORGAN

Philadelphia-born, he learned a variety of instruments before studying organ at Juilliard. Had some single hits in the early '60s.

 I've Got A Woman Collectables COL 5752 McGriff; Walter Miller (g); Richard Easley (d). 62.

(*) One Of Mine Collectables COL 5715 McGriff; Morris Down (g, hca); Larry Frazier (g); Willie Jenkins (d). 63.

With 'I Got A Woman' and 'All About My Girl', Jimmy became a jukebox star. They're both on this first record, originally released on Sue and excerpted on the Blue Note compilation below. McGriff has more in common with Booker T. Jones than with the Jimmy Smith school, which is neither praise nor blame but a description of what you'll hear: funky, unsubtle jazz-blues, played with maximum power and a minimum of introspection. Fans regard this first album as a sacred text.

The follow-up isn't as exciting, as if Jimmy recognized even this early that he could make twice as many records by expending half as much energy. There's still more vim and vigour than you get later on, but it's all pretty haphazard stuff.

 Pullin' Out The Stops! The Best Of Jimmy McGriff Blue Note 830724-2 McGriff; various unlisted groups. 64–71.

 The Worm Blue Note 38699 McGriff; Blue Mitchell (t); Danny Turner (as); Fats Theus (ts); Bob Ashton (bs); Thornel Schwartz (g); Bob Bushnell (b); Mel Lewis, Grady Tate (d). 8/68.

 Electric Funk Blue Note 84350 McGriff; big band including Horace Ott (p). 9/69.

'I Got A Woman' and 'All About My Girl' are on Pullin' Out The Stops!, which adds a further 15 tracks of steadily diminishing virtue. By the time of the awful 'Fat Cakes', from 1970, McGriff's groove sounds pooped. The Worm has some good moments, and some fine, excitable trumpeting from Mitchell, who revelled in this kind of thing. 'The Worm' itself was supposed to deliver a hit of 'Sidewinder' proportions but didn't. Check out the nutty version of 'Take The "A" Train' at the other end of the disc. Electric Funk is a whole album of sad-sack funk from 1969 and it's hardly anything to get excited about, on or off a dance floor.

(*) Countdown Milestone MCD 9116 McGriff; Clifford Adams Jr (tb); Marshall Keys (as); Arnold Sterling (ts, as); Melvin Sparks (g); Vance James (d). 4/83.

 The Starting Five Milestone MCD 9148 McGriff; Rusty Bryant (as); David 'Fathead' Newman (ts); Mel Brown, Wayne Boyd (g); Bernard 'Pretty' Purdie (d). 86.

 Blue To The 'Bone Milestone MCD 9163 McGriff; Al Grey (tb); Bill Easley (as, ts); Melvin Sparks (g); Bernard 'Pretty' Purdie (d). 7/88.

(*) Right Turn On Blues Telarc CD-83366 McGriff; Hank Crawford (as); Rodney Jones (g); Jesse Hameen (d). 1/94.

 Blues Groove Telarc CD-83381 McGriff; Hank Crawford (as); Wayne Boyd (g); Vance James (d). 7/95.

 The Dream Team Milestone MCD 9268 McGriff; David 'Fathead' Newman (ts); Red Holloway (ts, as); Mel Brown (g); Bernard 'Pretty' Purdie (d). 8/96.

There seems little merit in differentiating between these records, since they're all basically the same. McGriff, playing Hammond's XB-3, which offers the old sound plus various MIDI tricks, pumps away at the blues in his filigree manner, rarely working up a head of steam and instead settling for a leaner line that carries the music on a slow simmer. He gets some of his favourite hornmen to keep him company, has either Vance James or Pretty Purdie thump out the beat, and that's it. Oh, and there's some guitar, too – Sparks, Boyd or Brown, what's the difference? Even Bob Porter, who produced The Dream Team, says that 'the best thing is to stay the hell out of the way and let them do their thing'. Well, yes and no. It wouldn't have hurt to have most of these records tuned up a bit. The studio sound is so polite that when the band hits a groove it sounds no different from when they're laying back and floating on the chords. Both the Telarcs (co-credited with old chum Crawford) and the Milestones are smooth enough to spread on toast, and if they'd piled everything right to the front of the mix it might actually sound exciting. But that wasn't the way jazz records were made those days.

 Straight Up Milestone MCD 9285 McGriff; David 'Fathead' Newman (ts); Frank Wess (ts, f); Wayne Boyd, Rodney Jones (g); Bernard 'Pretty' Purdie (d). 8/97.

 McGriff's House Party Milestone MCD 9300 McGriff; Kenny Rampton (t); Eric Alexander, Bill Easley (ts); Rodney Jones (g); Lonnie Liston Smith (org); Bernard 'Pretty' Purdie (d). 00.

Not half bad, as later McGriff albums went, Straight Up was something of a renaissance for the organ-man, though to be strictly honest it's the supporting cast who make it. The cover image of an aerobatics team – smoke on – in vertical climb is less honestly descriptive than a Second World War bomber in a slow dive would have been, but at least there's some energy to the playing here, even if each track drops its bombs in an entirely predictable pattern.

For House Party he invited along the impressively turbaned Dr Smith and young turk Alexander, who blows his socks off. The party mood isn't always obvious on the record, which at moments sounds quite sober and studied, but when Smith and McGriff get their thing together, the walls shake. As on the earlier record, Purdie adds some fire and despatch to the rhythm, and shakes the dust off McGriff's rather mechanical bass-lines.

 McGriff Avenue Milestone MCD 9325 McGriff; Gordon Beadle, Bill Easley (ts); Ronnie Cuber (bs); Melvin Hassan, Rodney Jones (g); Wilbur Bascomb Jr (b); Bernard 'Pretty' Purdie, Don Williams (d). 10/01.

One of a host of dates apparently booked into the studio on 11 September 2001 and brought to a premature halt. There's no obvious sign of shock or trauma about the reconvened session, but there is something dismayingly predictable about a version of 'America The Beautiful' on an album like this. Jimmy does also reprise 'The Worm' and 'All About My Girl' – two favourites of years gone by given fresh, if rather thin-voiced, makeovers. Easley is still in top form and Ronnie Cuber makes his presence felt with some weighty baritone.

Also, in brief:

 At The Organ / () Christmas With Jimmy McGriff / () At The Apollo /  Topkapi /  Blues For Mister Jimmy Collectables 5716 / 5747 / 5316 / 5717 / 5147. 63; 64–65; 65.

In the wake of 'I Got A Woman', Sue had McGriff churn out several more albums – live, Christmas, film themes, and a bit of jazz here and there.

 Feelin' It Milestone MCD 9313-2. 10/00.

Smooth latter-day McGriff, with enough go to make it worthwhile.

Bill McHenry

TENOR SAXOPHONE

New York tenorman with an insinuating style.

 Jazz Is Where You Find It Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 021 McHenry; Ben Waltzer (p); Alexis Cuadrado (b); Jo Krause (d). 3/97.

(*) Rest Stop Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 033 McHenry; Ben Monder (g); Chris Higgins (b); Dan Rieser (d). 9/97.

 Graphic Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 056 McHenry; Ben Monder (g); Reid Anderson (b); Gerald Cleaver (d). 9/98.

 Quartet Featuring Paul Motian /  Roses Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 160 / Sunnyside 281167 McHenry; Ben Monder (g); Reid Anderson (b); Paul Motian (d). 5/02; 12/06.

(*) Sonic Pressure Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 283 McHenry; Duane Eubanks (t); Peter Rende (p); Matt Penman (b); Jeff Williams (d). 6/05.

McHenry's delivery lacks little in muscularity, but it's not in the brawny traditional manner. He has a thoughtful, introverted style which shouldn't be mistaken for diffidence. The first record was cut while he and Waltzer were spending time in Barcelona, and even in an ordinary live club set (in excellent sound) the musicians take pains to avoid the obvious. The tunes include Elisabeth Raspall's haunting 'Eix', John McNeil's 'Greenwich' and John Lewis's blues 'Two Degrees East, Three Degrees West'. Waltzer has a simple, supportive approach which is very appealing. The piano itself, though, seems pretty average.

The next three are in a sense all of a piece, Monder and McHenry making their way through music (mostly originals by Bill) which sounds like rather more abstruse variations on the Ornette Coleman style. Long melodic lines are twinned between tenor and guitar, or aphoristic little phrases are shaped into the basis of a theme. Rest Stop is our favourite because it seems like the most natural and least self-conscious, happy to play a 'Blues' which might have been a Lee Konitz–Billy Bauer set-piece, yet full of fresh and idiomatic improvising. Monder uses more effects on the subsequent Graphic and somehow the music feels a shade less appealing. The problem with the third album is the gentleman in the title. If you're a Motian fan, you'll most likely find this the best record of all, but to us the drummer is simply too loud and strong for music which suits a quieter, defter touch. That same line-up reappears on McHenry's first appearance for Sunnyside, but the balance is rather better and the group has acquired a more coherent sound, notably on collaborations like 'The Abyss Opens Up' and 'The City'. We still doubt that Motian is the right drummer for the date, but he obviously brings experience and cachet. The Fat Cat date on Sonic Pressure is a winner, oblique but not pointlessly enigmatic, calm but by no means boring, arguably more conventional in approach than earlier records, but none the worse for that. 'The Hit' and 'WRU' both come across strongly and McHenry's own playing, individual and hardly ever routine, is a consistent pleasure.

Kalaparush(a) Maurice McIntyre (born 1936)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, BASS CLARINET, PERCUSSION

An adherent of AACM in Chicago, he absorbed more from New York-based players like Coltrane and Ayler.

 Humility In The Light Of The Creator Delmark DE 419 Mcintyre; Leo Smith (t, flhn); John Stubblefield (ss); Malachi Favors (b); Thurman Barker (d); George Hines (v). 2/69.

 Forces And Blessings Delmark DE 425 McIntyre; Sarnie Garrett (g); Fred Hopkins (b); Wesley Tyus (d); Rita Omolokun Worford (v). 11/70.

At first blush, McIntyre is a fairly orthodox New Thing modernist, exploiting Coltrane's extended harmony and the hands-on, little-instrument approach which was the AACM aesthetic. He also prefers open-textured, spacious music to the multi-note approach of some of his saxophone peers. The first album is very much in that more web-like sound-world and in an exploratory mould, though McIntyre always sounds more focused and organized than most of his contemporaries; compare him to a figure like Giuseppi Logan and he seems almost formal in organization. The opening sequence is a suite of short tracks under the general title 'Ensemble Love' followed by the far longer, almost 20-minute 'Ensemble Fate' and on this reissue by an alternate of 'Humility ...' which helps to show how organized McIntyre's concept of freedom was. Hines sings wordlessly and Smith brings a pan-cultural resonance. As time goes by, though, McIntyre seems a more individual figure, interested in African musics – most notably on Forces And Blessings – and in non-Western rhythms. The reissue of the 1970 album includes unissued alternatives of 'Behold! God's Sunshine' and 'Ananda', but neither is particularly revelatory.

(*) Peace And Blessings Black Saint 120037-2 McIntyre; Longineu Parsons (t, flhn, f, recorders); Leonard Jones (b); King I. Mock (d). 6/79.

The Black Saint album is somewhat dominated by Parsons, a neglected figure. He is credited with the best number, 'Anyway You Want It', a tough, hard-edged piece with less improvisational hinterland than McIntyre's pieces. The album as a whole has the looseness and immediacy of a live set, but is crisply recorded.

 The Moment / * Morning Song Entropy Stereo 012 / Delmark 553 McIntyre; Jesse Dulman (tba); Ravish Momin (d). 11/01; 9/02.

The trio, recorded in front of a studio audience, hots up. Dulman's intros and accompaniments have the benefit of plainness, and Momin seems to have reined in his 'freedom' in order to play some music. Henry Threadgill and John Coltrane are both given respect, and the spiritual agenda of 'I Don't Have An Answer Unless It's God' is clearly felt without being cloying or pretentious.

And then, back with Delmark after all these years, Kalaparush And The Light turn in an album that really has been worth waiting for. Despite the silliness of titles like 'Symphony No. 1', this is a set in which blues, bebop, raw field shouts and more abstract classical forms all seem to have contributed to an extraordinary musical alloy. There is a further and better version of 'I Don't Have An Answer ...', which suggests how much the group has evolved.

(*) Paths To Glory CIMP 306 McIntyre; Jesse Dulman (tba); Adam Lane (b); Ravish Momin (d). 3/04.

It may seem a minor circumstance, but trumpeter Roy Campbell was originally slated to play on this date. When his father died, Roy dropped out and Lane, fast becoming a CIMP regular, took his place, an unusual 'dep'. So immediate was the rapport between the guest and the leader that they take the opening 'Dream Of ...' as a duo, leaving Dulman and Momin to listen intently. What they heard undoubtedly feeds into the rest of the session. Lane has described his growing empathy with the drummer as 'a kind of Mingus/Richmond kinetic relationship', which sounds grandiose until you actually hear them on Lane's intense 'Dance', where he is again strongly featured in a drone-based introduction.

Paths Of Glory delivers what most CIMP recordings promise and often don't fulfil, a sense of an ongoing process of interaction between the players. By the time we are in 'Date', a swinging, punchy piece, the group dynamic is most impressive, with Dulman finding new territory well away from the string bass. 'Suite For My Mother' is overlong, but 'Let Us All Relax' from the second day's recording, is superb, as is a further closing duo from Kalaparush and Lane. Another exceptional record from an old master who has recorded more since 2000 than he did in the previous three decades.

Also, in brief:

 Dream Of CIMP 174. 6/98.

His first album in almost 20 years sounds like a throwback to an earlier age in jazz, but he is still a commanding voice.

* South Eastern CIMP 247. 5/01.

Needs a sympathetic ear to extract much pleasure; Jesse Dulman (tba) and Ravish Momin (d) vie for pointlessness.

Makanda Ken McIntyre (1931–2001)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, FLUTE, OBOE, BASSOON

Studied in his native Boston and made some striking early records with Eric Dolphy but moved into education after that.

(*) Looking Ahead Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 252 McIntyre; Eric Dolphy (as, f, bcl); Walter Bishop Jr (p); Sam Jones (b); Art Taylor (d). 6/60.

It remains McIntyre's misfortune to be remembered chiefly for his brief association with Eric Dolphy. Early appearances suggest a musician deeply influenced by Parker, but sounding like his own man in the search for a language beyond the orthodoxies of bebop. With the like-minded Eric Dolphy in tow, McIntyre made a more promising excursion on the well-named Looking Ahead, which is one of the most progressive recordings of its time, though Bishop, Jones and Taylor are still obviously thinking in the older idiom. Dolphy is, of course, superb, if still raw, and McIntyre almost inevitably plays second fiddle, but the younger man has his own things to say and he makes significant contributions to 'Lautir', 'Geo's Tune' and 'Dianna', not quite putting Dolphy in the shade but certainly making him wait in the shadows for a moment or two. The two saxophonists shared a joyous quality that was not much in evidence in the jazz of the time and there is an infectious exuberance to their side-by-side playing.

 Home Steeplechase SCCD 31039 McIntyre; Jaki Byard (p); Reggie Workman (b); Andre Strobert (d). 6/75.

 Open Horizon Steeplechase SCCD 31049 McIntyre; Kenny Drew (p); Buster Williams (b); Andre Strobert (d). 11/75.

McIntyre recorded nothing for a decade, but came back when Steeplechase began to show interest in progressive American jazz. Home ranges from bouncy, Caribbean impressions to funkier 'portraits' and dark-toned essays which bring together Byard and Workman in tight, adventurous arrangements. Open Horizon covers a similar range of material (no standards) but with a wider improvisational purview, and McIntyre appears to use his alternative horns structurally rather than to cosmetic effect. One of the few jazz players to make convincing use of the bassoon (Illinois Jacquet is another), he generally keeps to the centre of its range, much as he does with the bass clarinet, eschewing Dolphy's furious overblowing.

 Introducing The Vibrations Steeplechase SCCD 31065 McIntyre; Terumasa Hino (t); Richard Harper (p); Alonzo Gardner (b); Andre Strobert (d). 10/76.

(*) Chasing The Sun Steeplechase SCCD 31114 McIntyre; Hakim Jamil (b); Beaver Harris (d). 7/78.

The two later Steeplechases, from just before McIntyre's effective retirement from recording, are interesting in comparison of scale. The larger group with second horn and piano sounds drab now, partly because the cast of players doesn't throw up a natural front-man to stand alongside the saxophonist. The trio with Jamil and Harris is perhaps the best thing McIntyre ever did, a delicate, spacious sound which uses Jamil to generate a bit of harmonic width as well as keeping time, and allows Harris, always a busy player, to state melodies as well as sustain the count. Strong material.

 A New Beginning Passin Thru 41215 McIntyre; JoAnne Brackeen (p); Wilber Morris (b); Charli Persip (d). 01.

It's an ironic title, because this was released in the final year of McIntyre's life. Having devoted most of his energy to other pursuits, mostly jazz education, the multi-instrumentalist called up a fine quartet and released a forthright disc that suggested he was far from finished with jazz music. The tracks are mostly fairly short, song-based and atmospheric: 'Witch's Brew', 'Monk And Trane' and 'Breadfruit' are among the best of a dozen vivid originals that helped to restore Ken's reputation just as he left us.

* In The Wind: The Woodwind Quartets Passin Thru 41220 McIntyre (overdubbed ss, as, ts, bs; f, af, bf; cl, acl, bcl; ob, ehn, bsn). 10/95, 4/96.

A quite astonishing curtain-call, posthumously released. The title is oddly moving, for however much artifice there necessarily is in overdubbing multiple parts, these 11 performances have an entirely natural and poignantly evanescent quality that suggests they happened spontaneously. In terms of instrumentation, the most familiar sounds here are those of the two saxophone quartets. 'Puunti' is a gentle calypso, initially stated by the soprano, but featuring the other horns in turn, with the baritone kicking in last with a weighty but still limber solo. 'Black Sugar Cane' is even more remarkable, hard to believe that Makanda had to co-ordinate the different solo parts in studio.

He opens with an old favourite, 'Peas'N'Rice', another Caribbean-flavoured line which has appeared throughout his career, but played here on clarinets. There's another calypso – this time for flutes – in 'Amy'. On this, the final cut of the set, McIntyre again varies the timbres and textures wonderfully, vocalizing and overblowing like Roland Kirk. The other flute pieces are more obviously lyrical, but their accessibility doesn't in any way compromise the astonishing harmonic sophistication of 'Blanche' or 'Charsee'.

The double-reed cuts are the furthest from conventional jazz instrumentation, but they're arguably the most swingingly integrated things on the album. 'Chitlins And Cavyah' is raw and funky, while 'Chasing The Sun' sits among McIntyre's neglected classics, with a harmonic freight that will take even quick-eared listeners some time to unravel.

All in all, a record to savour over time, and a fitting memorial to a genuine original who diverted his talent to helping others.

Also, in brief:

(*) Stone Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1818. 5/60.

An obscure line-up, of interest only to someone deeply interested in McIntyre's development.

Dave McKenna (born 1930)

PIANO

Born in Rhode Island, he spent much of the '50s in sideman roles and much of the '60s with Bobby Hackett but became an international name after signing to Concord. The great encyclopaedist of mainstream jazz piano.

 Blues Up Fresh Sound FSRCD 463 McKenna (p solo). 10/55, 63.

 The Piano Scene Of Dave McKenna Koch 7809 McKenna; John Drew (b); Osie Johnson (d). 58.

Fresh Sound offer a really valuable reissue that brings together the 1955 ABC LP Solo Piano with the rather later Lullabies In Jazz for Realm. Dave's idea of a lullaby isn't always entirely soothing, and even though this is a long set – 27 tracks in all – none of it is going to put anyone to sleep. The familiar two-handed style still isn't as emphatic as it would become later, but he's certainly recognizable and his ability to invest mainstream playing with a strong stride feel remains definitive. The early trio is less individual because Dave doesn't have to work so hard in the bass, but it's a neat collection and stands tall among the other trios of the time.

 Quartet Featuring Zoot Sims Chiaroscuro 136 McKenna; Zoot Sims (ss, ts); Major Holley (b); Ray Mosca (d). 10/74.

 Solo Piano /  Dave 'Fingers' McKenna /  By Myself Chiaroscuro 119 / 175 / Shiah CD1 McKenna (p solo). 2/73; 6/77; 78.

McKenna hulks over the keyboard; Giant Strides it is. He is one of the most dominant mainstream players on the scene, with an immense reach and an extraordinary two-handed style which distributes theme statements across the width of the piano. The three solo dates from the '70s aren't his greatest records, but they're unmistakably Dave and thus to be treasured. The norm is gentle ballad and mid-tempo swingers, but there is a good version of Dave's original 'No More Ouzo For Puzo' on By Myself, which will intrigue those who remember later outings. Solo includes the remarkable 'Have You Met Miss Jones Sequence', three explorations which help an understanding of McKenna's amazing approach to songs. On 'Fingers', the opening read of 'My Melancholy Baby' is classic McKenna, slyly intelligent and thumpingly rhythmic. Other highlights include 'Somebody Stole My Gal' and Zez Confrey's 'Stumblin''.

The mid-'70s quartet with Zoot is useful to compare with later group sessions. Here McKenna still sounds pretty much like a regular sideman, not yet punching out the left-hand stuff that made him such a dominant figure later. The reissue has some nice alternates, including a longer 'I Cover The Waterfront' which can only have been squeezed out for reasons of duration.

 Giant Strides Concord CCD 4409 McKenna (p solo). 5/79.

 Double Play: No Bass Hit / Major League Concord CCD 2123 McKenna; Scott Hamilton (ts); Jake Hanna (d). 3/79, 86.

With the beginning of his Concord contract, Dave starts to punch his impressive weight. He doesn't threaten, he just plays, and on the solo date he plays up a storm. Long a 'players' player', he grew steadily in popularity during the Concord years, not least through his association with young Hamilton, who plays a forceful but secondary role on No Bass Hit and the follow-up, Major League. The bass-less trio gives Dave some extra work to do, but it sounds like meat and drink to him.

 A Celebration Of Hoagy Carmichael / () Dancing In The Dark / () Live At Maybeck Recital Hall / () Shadows And Dreams / () A Handful Of Stars / * Easy Street Concord CCD 4223 / 4292 / 4410 / 4467 / 4580 / 4657 McKenna (p solo). 5/83; 8/85; 11/89; 3/90; 6/92; 5/94.
McKenna is that rare phenomenon, a pianist who actually sounds better on his own. Though he is sensitive and responsive in group playing, and the association with Hamilton proves that, he has quite enough to say on his own account. The Hoagy tribute, recorded at the Second Story Club and the Tubaranch in Bloomington, Indiana, demonstrates his ability both to tame an audience and illuminate some turgid material in the process. No such problems (of the former kind, at any rate) at Maybeck Hall, where the audiences are famously well-behaved and attentive. McKenna's first Berkeley recital – Handful Of Stars was also played on that warm-hearted piano – is among the best of his solo performances. He medleys – a frequently tiresome practice – with considerable ingenuity and absolute logic, switching hands, reversing the direction of the new theme and carefully disguising the welds. The 'Knowledge Medley' sounds odd and contrived on paper ('Apple For The Teacher', 'I Didn't Know What Time It Was', 'I Wish I Knew', 'You'll Never Know' – you get the idea?) but works superbly in performance. The final 'Limehouse Blues' is archetypal. He does the same thing on Easy Street with road names in the first half and 'Gone' titles in the second: it's great.

Jazz players owe Arthur Schwartz an enormous debt. There are scores of 'Alone Together's in the current catalogue, up there with 'Body And Soul' and 'All The Things You Are'. McKenna treats the tunes on Dancing In The Dark with considerable respect, preserving their shape rather than just winkling out the meat of the chords. 'A Gal In Calico' and 'I See Your Face Before Me', both routinely sentimentalized, are played with exemplary taste, and the title-track has innate energy. The 1990 solo disc is a 'Dreams' and 'Shadows' medley, but McKenna is as distinct and wide-awake as ever. One of his best.

(*) An Intimate Evening With Dave McKenna Arbors ARCD 19264 McKenna (p solo). 11/99.
On the eve of his 70th, the saloon pianist turns in a typical solo recital. Nicely recorded on a decent piano, this is as fine a place as any to hear him, now that his Concord run has apparently finished. His encyclopaedic knowledge of songs comes out in three characteristic medleys; 'Fidgety Feet' takes in ragtime and stride.

Also, in brief:

 No Holds Barred Progressive 7135. 86.
The Swing Six, with Warren Vaché (t), Al Cohn and Scott Hamilton (ts), Milt Hinton (b) and Butch Miles (d), doesn't give Dave too much to do.

 Christmas Cocktail Party: Holiday Piano Spiked With Swing Concord CCD 4923. 2/97.
A happy holiday record.

 You Must Believe In Swing Concord CCD 4756. 97.
These duets with Buddy DeFranco (cl) include some highs but too many pedestrian parts.

Carlos McKinney

PIANO

Gifted sideman, now making a mark as leader.

 Up-Front Sirocco 1002 McKinney; Antoine Roney (ss, ts, bcl); Buster Williams (b); Ralph Penland (d). 00.
Carlos starts his solo debut with a standard, 'You And The Night And The Music', and introduces his muscular romanticism that way. It comes out again on the short, self-written 'Mademoiselle Gregoire' and on the following 'Black Beauty'. He claims most of the writing credits, and it's interesting that Buster Williams, also a fine writer, isn't given a track to himself. He's quieter here, and more workmanlike and subdued than on most of his recent outings; indeed, it's not until later in the set that you'd be able to say for sure that Buster is the bass-player. Roney brings a range of timbres and tonalities with his three horns and Penland goes to work with his usual lack of fuss.

McKinney's Cotton Pickers

GROUP

Originally led by drummer Bill McKinney, they were hired by Jean Goldkette for a residency at his Detroit Graystone Ballroom in 1927. Hugely popular, they eventually recorded several sessions in New York, but the band declined when several key players left in the early '30s, and it disbanded in 1934.

(*) McKinney's Cotton Pickers 1928–29 * / Put It There Volume 1 Classics 609/Frog DGF25 John Nesbitt, Langston Curl, Joe Smith, Leonard Davis, Sidney De Paris, George 'Buddy' Lee (t); Rex Stewart (c); Claude Jones, Ed Cuffee (tb); Don Redman, George Thomas (reeds, v); Milton Senior, Prince Robinson, Jimmy Dudley, Benny Carter, Coleman Hawkins, Ted McCord (reeds); Todd Rhodes, LeRoy Tibbs, Fats Waller (p); Dave Wilborn (bj, g, v); Ralph Escudero, Billy Taylor (tba); Cuba Austin, Kaiser Marshall (d); Jean Napier (v). 7/28–11/29.
(*) McKinney's Cotton Pickers 1929–1930 Classics 623 As above, except add James P. Johnson (p). 11/29–11/30.
* Cotton Picker's Scat Volume 2 Frog DGF 26 As above. 1–12/30.
 Shag Nasty Volume 3 – The Alternate Masters Frog DGF 27 As above. 7/28–9/31.
It was primarily John Nesbitt who built McKinney's Cotton Pickers (although Jean Goldkette, who booked the band into his Graystone Ballroom in 1927, gave them their name). Redman's arrival in 1928 brought his distinctive touch as arranger to the band's book, but Nesbitt's driving and almost seamless charts were as impressive, and they remain so, more than 60 years later. McKinney's Cotton Pickers were among the most forward-looking of the large bands of their era: while the section-work retains all the timbral qualities of the '20s, and the rhythm section still depends on brass bass and banjo, the drive and measure of the arrangements and the gleaming momentum of their best records both suggest the direction that big bands would take in the next decade.

On the later, New York sides, guest soloists include Coleman Hawkins, Rex Stewart and Fats Waller, and Benny Carter has one of his sharpest early outings on 'I'd Love It'. But Nesbitt, Robinson and Redman himself are significant players on the earlier sides, and the precision and verve of the band in toto is the main point of most of these tracks. Some of the vocals are banal, but that's the price on many such discs of the period. The recent reissues on Frog are easily the first choice in this important music, top-notch remastering by John R. T. Davies from fine original copies, and the great power and swing of the band come through better than ever. Whatever sources Classics used, they weren't as good, and in any case these discs came out some years earlier. Shag Nasty completes the story by rounding up various alternative takes: for specialists only, perhaps, but in itself still a fine CD.

Mike McKoy

VOICE, GUITAR

Son of a Jamaican father and German mother, he grew up in England, with Italian neighbours. A cinch for the bossa nova.

 Swings To The Bossa Nova Zephyr ZECD 35 McKoy; Bobby Wellins (ts); Anthony Kerr (vib); Pete LeTanka (p); Simon Woolf (b); Simon Morton (d). 7/02.

In his liner-note, Dave Gelly points to McKoy's instinct for languages as a key to his success with this repertoire. Certainly, it's difficult to hear these as anything other than authentic performances, and the decision to tape the sessions live (at London's Pizza on the Park) was an inspired one. Jobim dominates the set-list and 'Chega De Saudade', 'Retrato Em Branco E Preito', as well as a certain girl from Ipanema, are wonderfully graceful performances. That said, the stand-out track is Pat Martino's 'Estate', given a wonderfully fluent and evocative reading. Wellins is as light-toned and wistfully romantic as ever and the rhythm section is solid but relaxed, with Kerr in spanking form.

Hal McKusick (born 1924)

ALTO SAXOPHONE, CLARINET, BASS CLARINET

Work with Claude Thornhill and Boyd Raeburn was followed by small-group recordings in the '50s, some of which McKusick led himself. A cool stylist on alto and quite an adventurous thinker, but much of his best work is currently out of print.

* The Complete Barry Galbraith, Milt Hinton And Osie Johnson Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10176 2CD McKusick; Art Farmer (t); Jimmy Cleveland (tb); Gene Allen, Sol Schlinger (bs); Barry Galbraith, Jimmy Raney (g); Milt Hinton, Teddy Kotick (b); Osie Johnson, Sol Gubin (d); George Russell (perc); strings. 2/55–12/56.
 Triple Exposure Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1811 McKusick; Billy Byers (tb); Eddie Costa (p); Paul Chambers (b); Charli Persip (d). 12/57.

Meeting George Russell in the mid-'50s set McKusick on a course which might have seemed wilfully perverse to other players, exploring the outer edges of harmony, complex counterpoint, awkward time-signatures, and instrumentations not normally associated with jazz.

McKusick always took a thoughtful, melodic approach to soloing, keeping the tune in view at all times, rarely straying far into vertical fantasies. He's still perhaps best known for his clarinet work with Charlie Parker, and for the fine Cross Section Saxes, where he mixes ballad standards, 'Now's The Time' and 'Stratusphunk' by George Russell, a composer with whom he had a close relationship. Triple Exposure is probably the most straightforward representation of his playing style. The two horns blend particularly well on 'Con Alma', which is the archetypal McKusick performance.

The Lone Hill collection compiles 39 tracks, including virtually all of the albums Jazz Workshop (aside from three George Russell pieces), East Coast Jazz 6, the live Jazz At The Academy and In The Twentieth Century Drawing Room. Aside from the Workshop tracks these are by the quartet suggested by the rather ponderous CD title, and almost every track has airy, beautiful work from both McKusick and Galbraith. Miles Davis scholars will also welcome the chance to hear the prototype version of Gil Evans's 'Blues For Pablo'.

Also, in brief:

 Mal McKusick Plays, Betty St Claire Sings Fresh Sound FSRCD 103. 55.

Unhackneyed collaboration with the former Dizzy Gillespie singer.

John McLaughlin (born 1942)

GUITARS, GUITAR-SYNTHESIZER

He explored jazz-rock with Miles Davis, Lifetime and the Mahavishnu Orchetra and has subsequently explored Indian and classical forms.

♛ * Extrapolation Polydor 841598 McLaughlin; John Surman (bs, ss); Brian Odges (b); Tony Oxley (d). 1/69.
 My Goal's Beyond Rykodisc 10051 McLaughlin; David Liebman (ss); Jerry Goodman (vn); Billy Cobham (d); Mahalakshmi, Airto Moreira, Badal Roy (perc). 6/70.
 Devotion Movie Play 74058 McLaughlin; Larry Young (org); Billy Rich (b); Buddy Miles (d). 9/70.
* Where Fortune Smiles BGO 1006 McLaughlin; John Surman (bs, ss); Karl Berger (vib); Dave Holland (b); Stu Martin (d). 71.

Extrapolation is one of the finest jazz records ever made in Europe. Ranging between gently meditative runs, as on 'Peace Piece', and furious 13/8 scrabbles, it combines all of McLaughlin's virtues (accuracy, power, vision) on a single disc. The band was state of the art for 1969. Oxley's drumming has the firmness of a rock beat, even when the count is extremely irregular, and Surman's playing is cast midway between folksy melodizing and complete abstraction. Some British jazz fans will claim 'Bink's Beam' as their favourite track of all time; interestingly, the set gives off a timeless feel.

My Goal's Beyond isn't all sandals and cheesecloth, as it might appear. The original side one is a series of brief blowing themes, most of them despatched very crisply, with McLaughlin's acoustic lines almost abrasively focused. The remainder of the album is devoted to two longer pieces 'Peace One' and 'Peace Two', both slackly conceived and indifferently delivered.

Apart from Lifetime, Devotion is about as close as McLaughlin ever got to straight rock playing. It again features the churning organ of Larry Young, as well as members of Jimi Hendrix's controversial and underrated Band Of Gypsies line-up. 'Dragon Song' and 'Don't Let The Dragon Eat Your Mother' and 'Devotion' are similar to but grittier than the Mahavishnu Orchestra. If anyone wants to trace that group's lineage, Where Fortune Smiles is the place to look. Anticipations of Jan Hammer's rippling arpeggiations and electronic soars can be heard in Berger's vibes and Surman's deceptively plain-spoken saxophone-lines. It would be stretching it a bit to suggest that Dave Holland fulfilled the violin part, except that he does play genuine counter-melodies and does so in a rich, stringy tone that was so different from the amplified bass-playing of the time. Even after 30 years the musicianship is immediately impressive and the overall conception still valid. Extrapolation is still the masterwork, but its successor repays attention as well.

 Shakti Columbia CK 46868 McLaughlin; L. Shankar (vn); R. Raghavan (mridangam); T. H. Vinayakaram (perc); Zakir Hussain (tabla). 75.
Sweetly complex acoustic music that was initially hard to absorb after the fantastic energy of the original Mahavishnu Orchestra. Shankar quickly went on to personal stardom, but the real drama of this set is the interplay between McLaughlin and the tabla and clay pot percussion. Though it appeared to many fans that McLaughlin had simply gone native, it's easier in hindsight to see the continuity of all his work, in bop-influenced advanced rock, fusion, flamenco and Eastern forms, rather than its apparent breaks and changes of direction.

 Electric Dreams Columbia CK 48892 McLaughlin; David Sanborn (as); Stu Goldberg (p, org, syn); L. Shankar (vn); Fernando Sanders (b); Tony Smith (d, v); Alyrio Lima (perc). 11–12/78.
The One Truth Band was the successor to Mahavishnu. It conspicuously lacked both the spiritual intensity and the sheer musicianship of the earlier band. McLaughlin's very much the front-man, without much in the way of group improvisation. Echoes of his first dabblings in electric jazz are reinforced by a piece dedicated to and named after 'Miles Davis', returning the trumpeter's Bitches Brew compliment. 'Dark Prince' is in similar vein. Goldberg is revelatory on keyboards, and Sanborn as ever creates some emotional excitement, but by and large the group remains anonymous even at its most pumped-up.

 Friday Night In San Francisco / (*) Passion, Grace & Fire Columbia CK 65168 / 38645 McLaughlin; Paco de Lucía, Al Di Meola (g). 80; 10 & 11/82.
Separating the component guitar styles is easier on the later session, where the separate strands of interaction can be teased out. All three contribute characteristic themes: McLaughlin with 'Aspen' and 'David', which come from the milder end even of his recent output. Friday Night has been a successful and very popular album, but it never rises above its occasion.

* Qué Alegría Verve 837280-2 McLaughlin; Kai Eckhardt, Dominique De Piazza (b); Trilok Gurtu (d). 11–12/91.
Designer stubble on the liner-photo and the most robust set from McLaughlin in a long time. Gurtu has always been a pulse-driven percussionist, rarely content merely to provide exotic colours round the edges of the music, and he and the bassists (Eckhardt appears on 'Reincarnation' and '1 Nite Stand', the two most forceful tracks) push McLaughlin's acoustic but subtly MIDI'd lines almost to the limits.

 Tokyo Live / (*) After The Rain Verve 521870-2 / 527467-2 McLaughlin; Joey DeFrancesco (org, t); Dennis Chambers (d on Tokyo only); Elvin Jones (d on After The Rain only). 12/93; 10/94.
McLaughlin called this group the Free Spirits. McLaughlin really sounds as if he's having fun for the first time in a long while. He extends the big, chunky sound he was exploring again in the mid-'80s, throwing in Wes Montgomery octave-runs and some of his own old wobbly chords. 'JuJu At The Crossroads' is terrific, though it has to be said that some tracks, notoriously the closing 'Mattinale', drag their feet unconscionably.

Still Free Spirited, but darker and more serious in tone and with one significant change of personnel, After The Rain is a set of Coltrane and Coltrane-associated pieces, with a couple of McLaughlin originals thrown in. At moments, it recalls Lifetime: too cleanly recorded, though, and McLaughlin's guitar has a plainer, quasi-acoustic ring. Like his predecessor, Jones is almost too much in this context. The opening workout on 'Take The Coltrane' very nearly damps enthusiasm for what's to come, except that 'My Favorite Things' and 'Sing Me Softly Of The Blues' and then 'Naima' (big palpitating tattoos from Jones) are so damn beautiful you'd forgive him anything.

The mood is more sombre in the second half, and the drummer is less dominant, as if satisfied by his spot on McLaughlin's 'Tones For Elvin Jones'. On the face of it, 'Crescent' and 'After The Rain' aren't the likeliest items for this treatment, but they are exquisitely reimagined. A lovely record; shame about the rock album fades, though.

 The Guitar Trio Verve 533215-2 McLaughlin; Paco de Lucía, Al Di Meola (g). 5–7/96.
Composition, solo and production credits are divided with almost schoolboyish even-handedness, and the disc gives every indication of having been A&R'd by committee. Not that the playing isn't superlative. McLaughlin's two solos on 'Le Monastère Dans Les Montagnes' and his introduction on 'Midsummer Night', both his own compositions, are magisterial and quite beautiful. His partners contribute their share and more, with DeLucia sounding relaxed and unemphatic, but totally focused. DiMeola is the wild card, but for once he resists a long-standing tendency to grandstand and overstate; his composition 'Azzura' is perhaps the best thing on the whole album, a rich soundscape that inspires a wonderful opening solo from McLaughlin as well. Despite a slightly contrived summit conference feel, a marvellous album.

(*) The Heart Of Things Verve 539153-2 McLaughlin; Gary Thomas (ts, ss, f); Jim Beard (p, syn); Jean-Paul Celea, Matthew Garrison (b); Dennis Chambers (d); Victor Williams (perc). 97.
* Live In Paris Verve 543536-2 As above, except omit Beard, Celea; add Romario Ruiz (ky). 11/98.
In all but name, this is a Mahavishnu Orchestra for the end of the century, stripped of much of the Eastern philosophy, hooked into a more contemporary sound, but identifiable from the same balance of ensemble and individual playing, the same flyaway soloing, and the easily missed glint of steel amid the gentleness. Compared to previous horn-players Thomas is a tough customer, and he prompts a more abrasive and confrontational sound from McLaughlin, who again alternates electric and acoustic with MIDI guitars. The last of these performs much the same function as Jan Hammer's Moog once did, leaving Beard and Thomas to round out the front line in the same top-heavy way. The best of the music is concentrated in three long tracks: 'Acid Jazz', 'Seven Sisters' and a beautiful idea called 'Fallen Angels', which does as the album title suggests and cuts to the essential. McLaughlin sounds reserved but not uninvolved, playing free without lapsing into free-jazz cliché and able to revisit aspects of his own past without nostalgia or self-regard.

The live album might be compared to Miles's classic set in the same city and it focuses the energies of what has become McLaughlin's repertory band to an impressive degree. If this is what they can reproduce on tour, the prospects are scarily good. 'Fallen Angels' and 'Acid Jazz' are again the standout tracks and there is a beautiful tribute to the late Tony Williams, who would have enjoyed music of this intensity and rhythmic complexity. With a Ruiz, a Garrison, a Chambers and a Williams in the line-up, to say nothing of the redoubtable Thomas, it's hard to see how John McLaughlin can go wrong.

 Remember Shakti Verve 559945-2 2CD McLaughlin; Hariprasad Chaurasia (bansuri); Zakir Hussein (tabla); T. H. Vinayakram (ghatam). 97.

Reconvened for a tour that included these British dates, Shakti is still a compelling unit, though lacking the sheer percussive impact of the original group. Split over two discs, the set is dominated by an hour-plus performance of Chaurasia's 'Mukti', and there are also long versions of the flautist's 'Chandrakauns' and McLaughlin's 'Wish'. The pace is inevitably rather slacker and more meditative than of yore, but there is plenty of virtuosic playing and a joyous abandon which fans of the original group will value.

 Thieves And Poets Verve 000113702 McLaughlin; Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie; Aighetta Quartet. 6/02.

The main event here is a half-hour guitar 'concerto' played with the orchestra, a long-form and slightly lumpy affair that seems to draw on flamenco influences but with little of its abandon. The more interesting tracks are with the Aighetta Quartet, who have a fine reputation for this kind of work and also appeared on Time Remembered (see below, 'in brief'). McLaughlin gracefully reinterprets four standards in homage to Herbie Hancock, Gonzala Rubalcaba, Chick Corea and, on 'My Romance', the best of the four, Bill Evans. These are deceptively lightweight pieces, partly because of the instrumentation, but McLaughlin finds vivid new things to say about them.

 Industrial Zen Abstract Logix/Verve 706602 McLaughlin; Bill Evans, Ada Rovatti (ss, ts); Eric Johnson (g); Otmaro Ruiz (syn); Hadrien Feraud, Matthew Garrison, Tony Grey (b); Dennis Chambers, Vinny Colaiuta, Mark Mondesir (d); Gary Husband (d, ky); Zakir Hussain (tabla); Shankar Mahadevan (v). 5/06.

The title is something of a hostage to fortune. There is a slightly mechanical, production-line feel to this, and parts of the record are so swathed in processed sound that it's difficult to maintain a line on the music. As the collective personnel suggests, and the return to electric guitar confirms, it's something of a return to past sounds, none of them invested with very much new fire. The opening 'For Jaco' gives Feraud a chance to do his thing; Evans plays better than he has for some years, especially in the latter stages of 'Just So Only More So', testimony to the close bond between saxophone-player and leader; and Hussain is superb on the long 'Dear Dalai Lama'. Mahadevan is a bit of a star and his spot on the closing 'Mother Nature' is by no means a guest afterthought. Even so, and despite every sign that McLaughlin himself is still playing spiritedly and with invention as he approaches his 65th birthday, the record has a bitty quality that reflects and depends too much on the various line-ups.

Also, in brief:

(*) Adventures In Radioland Verve 519397-2. 1–2/86.

Confusingly, McLaughlin revived the Mahavishnu name for this lumbering, over-amped project. Chicken-coop effects from the keyboards don't help.

 Live At The Royal Festival Hall Winter & Winter 834436. 11/89.

Fast accurate guitar-playing, with strong support from Kai Eckhardt (b) and Trilok Gurtu (d, perc).

(*) Time Remembered Verve 519861-2. 3/93.

Though there is nothing inherently wrong with having an essentially classical group play Bill Evans's music (after all, the Kronos Quartet had done it), the guitar-based Aighetta Quartet is not the group.

 The Promise Verve 529828-2. 95.

What is 'the promise'? A rerun of Electric Guitarist, sampling tracks by half a dozen different line-ups, collaged with readings from Dante, Lorca and haiku. The effect is bitty and slightly bewildering, but there are a few treasures to be found.

 Remember Shakti – The Believer /  Saturday Night In Bombay Verve 549044-2 / 014164-2. 99; 00.

Stopgap live albums from the festival circuit.

* Montreux Concerts Warner Music Switzerland 50-50466-9701-21 17CD. 74–99.

Exhaustively reviewed in our previous edition.

Jackie McLean (1932–2006)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

His father worked with Tiny Bradshaw, and young John grew up surrounded by music, passing on the discipline to his son René. During a spell with The Jazz Messengers, Jackie struck out on his own, recording prodigally with his quartet and patenting a sound that was compounded equally of bebop and the new, free style.

 Presenting /  The Complete Jubilee Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 1634 / Lone Hill LHJ 10269 McLean; Donald Byrd (t); Webster Young (c on Complete only); Ray Draper (tba on Complete only); Gil Coggins (p on Complete only), Mal Waldron (p); George Tucker (b on Complete only); Doug Watkins (b); Larry Ritchie (d on Complete only); Ronald Tucker (d); 10/55; 10/55, 12/57.

(*) Lights Out Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 426 McLean; Donald Byrd (t); Elmo Hope (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 1/56.

 4, 5 And 6 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 056 McLean; Donald Byrd (t); Hank Mobley (ts); Mal Waldron (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 7/56.

 McLean's Scene Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 098 McLean; Bill Hardman (t); Red Garland, Mal Waldron (p); Paul Chambers, Arthur Phipps (b); Art Taylor (d). 12/56, 2/57.

 Makin' The Changes Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 197 McLean; Webster Young (t); Curtis Fuller (tb); Gil Coggins, Mal Waldron (p); Paul Chambers, Arthur Phipps (b); Louis Hayes, Art Taylor (d). 2/57.

 Alto Madness /  A Long Drink Of The Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1733 / 253 McLean; John Jenkins (as); Wade Legge (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 5/57; 8/57.

(*) Jackie McLean & Co. Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 074 McLean; Bill Hardman (t); Ray Draper (tba); Mal Waldron (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 2/57.

 Strange Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 354 McLean; Webster Young (t); Ray Draper (tba); Gil Coggins, John Meyers, Mal Waldron (p); Arthur Phipps, Bill Salter (b); Louis Hayes, Larry Ritchie, Art Taylor (d). 2 & 8/57.

 Fat Jazz Fresh Sound FSR CD 18 McLean; Webster Young (t); Ray Draper (tba) Gil Coggins (p); George Tucker (b); Larry Richie (d). 12/57.

Charlie Parker once invited Jackie McLean to kick him in the ass for some typically selfish transgression. There were those who felt that McLean in turn could have used similarly robust encouragement in the '50s.

These come from a turbulent but productive period in McLean's career. The early material is now out of copyright, so there is a certain repetition on the reissue front. Presenting was originally released as The New Tradition, a good early quintet, introducing 'Little Melonae' and 'Blue Doll' in the midst of a set of staples. The Lone Hill adds in the sextet date separately available as Fat Jazz, lean, muscular charts. The OJCs mine almost to exhaustion the mid-1956 and early-1957 sessions with Waldron, filling in with other Prestige and New Jazz materials. McLean's pure, emotive blues tone, characteristically taking off with a wail at the break, has already become a manner, but there is a searching, troubled quality to his work on 'Abstraction' (4, 5 And 6), 'Flickers' and 'Help' (& Co.) and the two takes of 'Long Drink Of The Blues' (OJC 253, which also includes desirable versions of 'I Cover The Waterfront', 'Embraceable You' and 'These Foolish Things'). Given the range and familiarity of material, this might seem a good place to start, but Scene ('Mean To Me' and 'Old Folks') and Changes ('I Hear A Rhapsody' and 'Chasin' The Bird') are more challenging, pointing a way out of the still-dominant Parker influence.

Perhaps the best of the group is one of the earliest. Lights Out has a directness and simplicity of diction that are not so evident elsewhere; where McLean does attempt something more adventurous, as in the 'bagpipe' introduction and carefully harmonized final chorus of 'A Foggy Day', he does so with taste and precision. As on 4, 5 And 6, Byrd is a fine collaborator, soloing in a sweet, Dorham-influenced tone on the ballad 'Lorraine' and on 'Kerplunk', both of which were written by the trumpeter.

 Jackie's Bag Blue Note 42303 McLean; Donald Byrd, Blue Mitchell (t); Tina Brooks (ts); Sonny Clark, Kenny Drew (p); Philly Joe Jones (d). 1/59, 9/60.

McLean's debut for Blue Note is split across two sessions more than a year apart. The September 1960 date is effectively co-led by Tina Brooks, a more experienced player whose reputation set with his short life. Some of that material was issued in Japan under Brooks's name and the title Street Singer and it's by far the best of the stuff here, quite exotic in tonality and ambitious in scope. 'Medina', 'Isle Of Java' and 'Street Singer' are all excellent themes, too rarely covered. Jackie's alto acquires a quavery, almost shawm-like quality in places that is clearly deliberate and very attractive. 'Appointment In Ghana' is similar in conception to the Brooks things. The stuff issued under his own name isn't as sophisticated, and only three cuts were considered good enough for release, which is why the Brooks materials filled out the original release. Even on the strength of those tracks, it's still a respectable debut. McLean seemed a natural signing for Blue Note, a prolific, hyperactive player with a deep grounding in the blues, able to turn his hand to any repertoire even remotely connected to a 12-bar theme and already turning out his own material.

* New Soil Blue Note 784013 McLean; Donald Byrd (t); Walter Davis Jr (p); Paul Chambers (b); Pete LaRoca (d). 5/59.
 Vertigo Blue Note 22669 As above, except add Kenny Dorham (t); Herbie Hancock (p); Butch Warren (b); Billy Higgins, Tony Williams (d). 5/59, 2/63.
 Swing, Swang, Swingin' Blue Note 56582 McLean; Walter Bishop Jr (p); Jimmy Garrison (b); Art Taylor (d). 10/59.

Transitional and challenging, New Soil seems reasonably tame by present-day standards. McLean had passed through difficult times and was visibly reassessing his career and direction. The extended 'Hip Strut' is perhaps the most conventional thing on the album, but the saxophonist is straining a little at the boundaries of the blues, still pushing from the inside, but definitely looking for a new synthesis. 'Minor Apprehension' has elements of freedom which are slightly startling for the period and wholly untypical of McLean's previous work. Davis contributes a number of compositions, including the previously unreleased 'Formidable' (which isn't). Byrd is still a more than viable player.

Vertigo has more material from the May date, together with further tracks from a 1963 session which marked the recorded debut of Tony Williams. Historically, this makes the album more important than the quality of performance might suggest. As ever, McLean seems poised between innovation and conservatism, and it's often hard to pin down where the music is coming from, less fruitfully so than on other discs.

The October session is less immediately compelling, partly because Jackie sticks to standards, but more because he so obviously remains within his comfort zone. The record was presumably an attempt to recapture commercial success, for it is palpably less compelling than its predecessors and some of the sessions that followed. Only the closing '116th And Lenox' has any of the saxophonist's ability to meld new and old in a single blues-based theme.

 Capuchin Swing Blue Note 84038 McLean; Blue Mitchell (t); Walter Davis Jr (p); Paul Chambers (b); Art Blakey (d). 4/60.

Not a classic record, but Mitchell's excitable trumpeting keeps the energy level high and perfectly pitched against McLean's strident blues tone. Davis is a great asset on dates like this and his comping is faultless throughout the set.

(*) Bluesnik Blue Note 84067 McLean; Freddie Hubbard (t); Kenny Drew (p); Doug Watkins (b); Pete LaRoca (d). 1/61.

Tough, unreconstructed modern blues that reveal considerable depths on subsequent hearings. That's particularly noticeable on the outwardly conventional title-track, on which McLean's solo has a formidably unexpected logic. The other soloists tend to take up space that one might prefer to have seen left to the on-form leader, but Hubbard is dashing and Drew affectingly lyrical. A word, too, for the seldom-discussed Watkins, who gives his lines a lazy-sounding drag that nevertheless holds the beat solidly together.

 A Fickle Sonance Blue Note 24544 McLean; Tommy Turrentine (t); Sonny Clark (p); Butch Warren (b); Billy Higgins (d). 10/61.

Now available in the Rudy Van Gelder Edition, A Fickle Sonance finds Jackie still firmly locked into hard bop and still sounding like a blues man, even when the harmonies are slightly unorthodox. The title-piece is his, though most of the rest of the date is by other hands, including Clark's boisterous 'Five Will Get You Ten' and 'Sundu'. Turrentine's 'Enitnerrut' is pretty generic, but the surprise is Butch Warren's 'Lost', the final cut of the set, the shortest but one of the best. It's never been Jackie's best-known or best-loved record, but it has its own strengths.

* Let Freedom Ring

Blue Note 46527 McLean; Walter Davis Jr (p); Herbie Lewis (b); Billy Higgins (d). 3/62.

A classic. Influenced by Ornette Coleman – with whom he was to record for Blue Note on Old And New Gospel – McLean shrugged off the last fetter of bop harmony and pushed through to a more ruggedly individual post-bop that in important regards anticipated the avant-garde of the later '60s. McLean's phenomenally beautiful tone rings out on 'Melody For Melonae', 'I'll Keep Loving You', 'Rene' and 'Omega'. Higgins's bright, cross-grained drumming is exemplary and the band is generously recorded, with plenty of bass.

(*) Destination ... Out! Blue Note 32087 McLean; Grachan Moncur III (tb); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Larry Ridley (b); Roy Haynes (d). 9/63.
Though he emerged as a relatively orthodox bebopper, McLean was deeply influenced by the free-jazz movement, as his collaboration with Ornette Coleman underlined. Its title was significant, though, because McLean was unwilling to throw over entirely a more traditional idiom. Destination ... Out! is a great album for the way it combines both idioms. Moncur has the bulk of the composing credits, with just 'Kahlil The Prophet' from the leader. Complex, tricky and thoroughly engaging.

(*) It's Time Blue Note 58286 McLean; Charles Tolliver (t); Herbie Hancock (p); Cecil McBee (b); Roy Haynes (d). 8/64.
(*) Action Blue Note 96499 McLean; Charles Tolliver (t); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Cecil McBee (b); Billy Higgins (d). 9/64.
These weren't widely available for a long time: they were only on Japanese issues or in the Mosaic box. The earlier of the two is perhaps the more conventional, but it's a cracking set, with some nice writing from Tolliver – 'Cancellation', 'Revillot', 'Truth' – stirred into the mix. The trumpeter's showcased on the other as well. Charles's two themes – 'Plight' and 'Wrong Handle' – have tightly wrought, demanding lines that are well within the capability of this band. Jackie's own title-piece is long and refreshingly open-ended, leaving everyone room to make a statement. 'I Hear A Rhapsody' is the only standard, and Jackie gives it his all in a rawly emotional solo.

(*) Right Now! Blue Note 84215 McLean; Larry Willis (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Clifford Jarvis (d). 1/65.
Tolliver's 'Right Now' (also represented in an alternate take) is typical of Jackie's controlled freedom at this period. The underrated Willis isn't immediately associated with McLean's music, but his two compositions (including a poignant farewell to Eric Dolphy) make up the heart of this fine session. Jackie himself is only represented by the opening 'Eco', a curiously familiar line that sounds like a retread of something else.

 Consequence Blue Note 11428 McLean; Lee Morgan (t); Harold Mabern (p); Herbie Lewis (b); Billy Higgins (d). 12/65.
Another session that didn't see the light of day for nearly 15 years, and one immediately wonders why it didn't pass muster. The music is hardly avant-garde, with soul and Latin elements on things like 'Bluesanova' and 'Tolypso'. Morgan's in cracking form and Mabern's big, solid accompaniment cracks the whip over some rock-solid charts.

(*) Dr Jackle /  Tune Up Steeplechase SCCD 36005 / 36023 McLean; Lamont Johnson (p); Scott Holt (b); Billy Higgins (d). 12/66.
The later '60s were a somewhat dead time for McLean, and it looked as though the huge strides he had taken at the beginning of the decade led nowhere. He acted in Jack Gelber's The Connection and played some of the script for real. His playing of the time has a slightly tired edge and a hesitancy that comes not from lack of confidence but from a seeming lack of motivation to develop ideas. Dr Jackle includes a take of 'Melody For Melonae' which is quite discouraging in its diffidence and defensive show; McLean clearly isn't helped by the rhythm section, but Higgins alone should have been enough to spur him to better things. Tune Up has an air of afterthought; an attractive enough session, it can safely be left to completists, though Higgins is a revelation throughout, a mischievous, endlessly inventive performance.

 New And Old Gospel Blue Note 84262 McLean; Ornette Coleman (t); Lamont Johnson (p); Scott Holt (b); Billy Higgins (d). 3/67.
A strange one, with Ornette taking on sideman duties on his 'other' instrument. Even after many hearings, this always takes the ear as a rather strange record. 'Old Gospel' itself is fine, but 'Strange As It Seems' and the long 'Lifetime' medley seem in search of something that isn't quite made explicit.

* Live At Montmartre /  A Ghetto Lullaby Steeplechase SCCD 31001 / 31013 McLean; Kenny Drew (p); Bo Stief (b on Live only); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (bb on Lullaby only); Alex Riel (d). 8/72; 7/73.
For sheer joie de vivre, albeit with a chastened edge, Live At Montmartre is hard to beat. Full-voiced and endlessly inventive, McLean romps through 'Smile', adding the 'shave-and-a-haircut-bay–rum' cadence to the end of his first statement with an almost arrogant flourish. 'Parker's Mood' is perhaps the best of his later bebop essays, shifting out of synch with Drew's excellent chording for a couple of measures. Lullaby is less immediately appealing, though NHØP adds a significant element to the group's harmonic output, and he is a much more solid player than Stief. 'Mode For Jay Mac' is interesting, and the title-track calls up some of McLean's most purely emotive playing.

 The Meeting /  The Source Steeplechase SCCD 31006 / 31020 McLean; Dexter Gordon (ts); Kenny Drew (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Alex Riel (d). 7/73.
Recorded over two nights, this isn't a good album plus make-weight but a 'double' of genuine quality. Gordon and McLean were poles apart stylistically, but temperament and geography suggested such a meeting was inevitable. The first volume is darker and more sensitive, and the opening 'All Clean' hits close to home. McLean is usually quicker to the punch, but Gordon spins out his ideas (particularly on the standards) with confidence and some in reserve. 'Half Nelson' and 'I Can't Get Started' (The Source) depend to a large extent on Drew's teasing out of the chords.

 New York Calling Steeplechase SCCD 31023 McLean; Billy Skinner (t); René McLean (ts, ss); Billy Gault (p); James Benjamin (b); Michael Carvin (d). 10/74.
New York Calling is a respectable performance from a band capable of better. The Cosmic Brotherhood featured McLean's talented and indoctrinated-from-the-cradle son, René. Far from sounding like a chip, he shows considerable individuality on both his horns, carving out intriguing counter-melodies and straightforward responses, neither over-respectful nor wilfully defiant. The charts are impressively varied, but New York Calling isn't a first-choice disc and has unaccountably flat sound..

Also, in brief:

(*) Ode To Super Steeplechase SCCD 31009. 7/73.
A disappointing confrontation that recalls the Alto Madness session with John Jenkins from 1957.

 Antiquity Steeplechase SCCD 31028. 8/74.
This duo with Michael Carvin (d, perc, v) is as far out as anything McLean has attempted. The core of it is an impressionistic account of slave days, with the drummer's passionate vocals helping to fill out the story.

 Jacknife Blue Note 40572. 75.
Two basic groups involved here: a quintet/sextet with Morgan and/or Tolliver and a later quartet. Probably too avant-garde for release at the time.

* Nature Boy Blue Note 523273-2. 6/99.
Despite the promising line-up and programme of standards, this sounds sadly like a man with nothing left to say in his idiom.

Harold McNair (1931–71)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

Jamaican-born, he became a revered figure on the British scene, though he was sadly short-lived.

 The Fence Hux CD095 McNair; Alan Branscombe, Keith Tippett (p); Rich Grech, Danny Thompson (b); Terry Cox (d). 70.
McNair is a legendary figure in British music, heard on such iconic soundtracks as Kes and Dr No. Arguably, his flute-playing, well featured on The Fence, is more individual than his saxophone work, which betrays an influence from both Charlie Parker and Sonny Rollins, but he also made inventive use of electric saxophone. Only the edgy title-track is strictly an original. The remaining cuts are either by Grech (who later made a career in rock) or arrangements of traditional material ('Early In The Morning', 'Scarborough Fair') and the Beatles' 'Here, There And Everywhere'. A touching memento from a very short career, brought to life by Val Wilmer's excellent liner-essay.

Jimmy McPartland (1907–91)

CORNET, TRUMPET, VOICE

Encouraged in his teens by Bix Beiderbecke, he went on to become one of the great brassmen in the Chicago Dixieland style. His wife Marian became a star in her own right.

() Jimmy McPartland And His All-Stars Jazzology JCD-16 McPartland; Slice Harris (tb, v); Tommy Gwaltney (cl); Marian McPartland (p); Steve Jordan (g); Keter Betts (b); Jake Hanna (d); Fat Cat McCree, Maxine Sullivan (v). 66.
McPartland led some fine sessions under his own name and it's a shame that no one's reissued them. This is a rather ordinary set from the Manassas Jazz Festival. Jimmy sounds in good heart and the band do well enough, but the sound is unappealing and the set-list is overstuffed with warhorses.

Marian McPartland (born 1920)

PIANO

Born in Windsor, Marian Turner married Jimmy McPartland in 1945 and went to the USA. She worked as a soloist in Chicago and had a long trio residency at New York's Hickory House in the '50s; now best known for her long-running Piano Jazz recitals on PBS.

 Contrasts Jazz Alliance TJA2-12044-2 2CD McPartland; Jimmy McPartland (c, v); Vic Dickenson, Hank Berger (tb); Jack Maheu (cl); Buddy Tate (ts, bs); Michael Moore, Rusty Gilder (b); Gus Johnson, Larry Bell, Mike Berger, Joe Corsello, (d). 11/72–6/73.
Marian's lengthy discography begins in the early '50s but she has been unjustly neglected by reissues as far as her early music is concerned. So we have to start in 1973, with the two discs we have previously listed as A Sentimental Journey and Music Of Alec Wilder. The former offers a lovely memento of two engagements by bands led by Jimmy, with Marian on piano and two entertaining front lines. Jack Maheu blends a spiralling virtuosity with Pee Wee-type licks, Tate is reliable (and picks up the baritone here and there), Dickenson is absolutely himself (his 'When You Wish Upon A Star' is priceless) and Jimmy leads with typical aplomb.

The Wilder programme is one of the great single-composer recitals and it should be far better known than it is. McPartland has been intensely involved in Alec Wilder's difficult, bitter-sweet music for decades and she gets closer to the heart of it than any jazz player ever has. 'Jazz Waltz For A Friend', the first track, was written for her, and several of the other pieces have scarcely been touched by other improvisers. The five pieces with the lone support of Michael Moore are wonderfully lyrical and searching, and though the remaining five with Gilder and Corsello are a shade less involving, it is a memorable occasion. The only regret must be that she didn't play Wilder's unforgettable 'Where Do You Go?' at the date.

 From This Moment On Concord CCD 4086 McPartland; Brian Torff (b); Jake Hanna (d). 12/78.
 Windows Concord CCD2-2233-2 As above, except add Jerry Dodgion (as, f); Mary Fettig (as). 5–8/79.
 Willow Creek And Other Ballads Concord CCD 4272 McPartland (p solo). 1/85.
Even though this would be classed by most as ostensibly 'mainstream jazz', there are inflexions in it which would be unknown to most of McPartland's immediate contemporaries. From This Moment On offers a clear-headed examination of some standards. Windows is a new edition of the albums Portrait and At The Festival, the latter a live set made a few months after the studio session. Dodgion's bristling alto and beautifully articulated flute are a bonus on the studio tunes. An incisive version of Herbie Hancock's 'Tell Me A Bedtime Story', a tart Dodgion blues called 'No Trumps' and an ideal treatment of the pianist's gorgeous 'Time And Time Again' are the highlights. The live music finds Marian in high-voltage form herself, sparkling on Chick Corea's 'Windows' and thinking through a rhapsodic version of her own 'In The Days Of Our Love'. Mary Fettig sits in on the last three tunes, which slackens things somewhat. If the solo set is a shade behind the others, it's only because McPartland uses the resources of a trio so intelligently that she seems relatively quiescent by herself.

 Plays The Music Of Billy Strayhorn Concord CCD 4326 McPartland; Jerry Dodgion (as); Steve LaSpina (b); Joey Baron (d). 3/87.
(*) Plays The Benny Carter Songbook Concord CCD 4412 McPartland; Benny Carter (as); John Clayton (b); Harold Jones (d). 1/90.
Strayhorn's suave impressionism is hard to evoke, let alone sustain for an entire album, but this is at least as convincing as any similar homage. Despite a couple of less successful entries – 'A Flower Is A Lovesome Thing', for instance, is a little too doleful – the quartet have the measure of this deceptive music. There is a witty, unpredictable revision of 'Take The "A" Train', a springy 'Intimacy Of The Blues' and a purposefully crafted 'Lush Life' by the trio without Dodgion. The meeting with Carter, who plays on six of the 11 tunes chosen from his book, is flawlessly paced. Though his technique is still astonishing for a man in his 80s, Carter's sound and delivery are rather old-world compared to McPartland's astute command. Trio versions of 'When Lights Are Low', the beautiful 'Key Largo' and 'Summer Serenade' are probably the most distinguished moments on the record.

(*) Live At Maybeck Recital Hall Vol. 9 Concord CCD 4460 McPartland (p solo). 1/91.

This solo recital finds the pianist in characteristically adventurous mood. The composers represented here include Alec Wilder, Ornette Coleman, Mercer Ellington and Dave Brubeck; there are her latest reflections on the tune she startled Ellington himself with, 'Clothed Woman', and one of the most affecting of her own themes, 'Twilight World'. Each interpretation contains nothing unnecessary in the way of embellishment, yet they all seem ideally paced, properly finished.

[illegible]

* In My Life

Concord CCD 4561 McPartland; Chris Potter (as, ts); Gary Mazzaroppi (b); Glenn Davis (d). 1/93.

A marvellous record. This time Marian sets Coltrane and Ornette alongside Lennon and McCartney, quietly introduces a couple of her own tunes, and invites one of the sharpest new saxophonists on the scene to sit in. The result is as catholic and accomplished a jazz record as one can find among modern releases. Chris Potter's unfussy virtuosity is a serenely appropriate match for the pianist's diverse tastes, and he is as purposeful and convincing on 'Close Your Eyes' as he is on 'Naima'. To close, there is a deeply affecting solo treatment of 'Singin' The Blues', done as a memorial to Marian's late husband, Jimmy. Essential.

(*) Plays The Music Of Mary Lou Williams Concord CCD 4605 McPartland; Bill Douglass (b); Omar Clay (d). 1/94.

One of the striking things about the playing is how Marian has an unerring instinct for the right tempo on a particular piece: 'Easy Blues' and 'It's A Grand Night For Swinging' hit an ideal pace from the start, and 'Cloudy', probably the most famous of Williams's tunes, is a beauty. If the disc has a weakness, it's that Marian doesn't always convince the listener that Williams's themes are as strong as they might be: her own composition, 'Threnody', a delightful tune in three, actually outclasses several of the pieces here.

 Live At Yoshi's Nitespot Concord CCD 4712 McPartland; Bill Douglass (b); Glenn Davis (d). 11/95.

(*) Silent Pool Concord CCD 4745 McPartland; Andy Simpkins (b); Harold Jones (d); strings, arr. Alan Broadbent. 2/97.

The live album might not quite rank among Marian's best, but this is still a hugely enjoyable date. 'Pretty Women', 'Chasing Shadows' and her own 'Silent Pool' are beautiful rarities in the repertory, and her version of Ellington's 'Warm Valley' is exquisite enough to remind any who have forgotten that she is one of our great ballad interpreters. A couple of the standards are comparatively routine, though, and newcomers should perhaps start with one of the earlier discs.

Her strings album is handsomely arranged by Alan Broadbent and at last offers a showcase of 12 McPartland originals in one place, with 'Twilight World', 'Time And Time Again' and 'There'll Be Other Times' among the most beautiful pieces. The only quibble might be that the languorous tempos and Broadbent's luxury-class scores are just a shade too relaxed at times.

(*) Just Friends Concord CCD 4805-2 McPartland; Tommy Flanagan, Renee Rosnes, George Shearing, Geri Allen, Dave Brubeck, Gene Harris (p). 9/97–1/98.

(*) Reprise Concord CCD 4853-2 McPartland; Bill Crow (b); Joe Morello (d). 9/98.

Marian's 80th birthday was greeted with the warmest of affection throughout the jazz world, with several special concerts to mark the occasion, and a reunion of her trio from the Hickory House days at New York's new Birdland. Reprise is the delightful result, the old firm still in joyful form, and the pianist still picking the most pleasing tunes, here including Hoagy Carmichael's 'New Orleans', the same arrangement of 'I Hear Music' which once started one of their Capitol dates, Henry Mancini's 'Two For The Road' and a piano/drums dialogue on 'Cymbalism'.

Just Friends is an album of duets, of the sort which she has been spontaneously performing on her Piano Jazz broadcasts for many years. Though one or two don't really come off – such as, surprisingly, a rather doom-laden 'Twilight World' with George Shearing – there are many more good ones: stomping along with Rosnes on 'It's You Or No One', playing tag with Brubeck on 'Gone With The Wind'. She closes it with a simple, lovely solo on 'When The Saints', dedicated to Jimmy.

 The Single Petal Of A Rose Concord CCD 4895-2 McPartland; Bill Douglass (b). 4/00.

(*) Ain't Misbehavin' Concord CCD 4968-2 McPartland; Willie Pickens (p). 12/00.

Recorded at the venerable Maybeck Hall, The Single Petal Of A Rose is a programme of Ellington tunes, either solos or duets with Bill Douglass. This isn't one of our favourites by Marian: the playing is as impeccable as ever, with some handsomely orchestrated versions ('Mood Indigo' taken at a very slow pace, which still works); the problem is that the material by now is all too familiar. Her sole original, 'Creulescence', is the most enjoyable moment.

At this point, nobody has played as many piano duets, with as many different pianists, as Marian. Cut over three nights at Joe Segal's in Chicago, the First Lady of jazz piano meets the ebullient bounce of Willie Pickens – solos, duets, a fine old time, with their contrasting styles meeting co-operatively head on.

(*) 85 Candles – Live In New York Concord CCD2-2218-2 2CD McPartland; Dave Douglas, Jon Faddis (t); Clark Terry, Roy Hargrove (flhn); Phil Woods (as); Chris Potter, Ravi Coltrane, Loren Schoenberg (ts); Regina Carter (vn); Barbara Carroll (p, v); Bill Charlap, George Wein, Jason Moran, James Williams, Billy Taylor (p); Jim Hall, Jackie King (g); Gary Mazzaroppi, Bill Crow (b); Glenn Davis (d); Karrin Allyson, Curtis Stigers, Jackie Cain, Nnenna Freelon (v). 3/03.

A pretty marvellous Birdland birthday celebration for Marian's 85th, in which she was a full-on participant: her duet with Jim Hall, 'Free Piece', is priceless. Everything in size between duo and sextet and every generation of players represented. Concord have introduced a corporate feel by having a bunch of their singers involved, but everything is so good-humoured and likeable that one can't really grumble.

Joe McPhee (born 1939)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, POCKET-CORNET, FLUGELHORN, VALVE TROMBONE, ELECTRONICS

A rare musician who's equally at ease on brass and woodwind. Only Benny Carter has sounded as comfortable on both, but Joe's fierce tone is very different..

 Underground Railroad Atavistic Unheard Music ALP/UMS 226 2CD McPhee; Otis Greene (as, hca); Reggie Marks (ts, ss, f, org); Joe Virgillio (ts, ss); Tyne Crabb (b); Ernest Bostic (d). 10/68–4/69.
 Nation Time Atavistic Unheard Music ALP/UMS 201 As above, except omit Virgilio; add Mike Kull (p, ky); Dave Jones (g); Bruce Thompson (perc). 12/70.
 Trinity Atavistic Unheard Music ALP/UMS 214 McPhee; Mike Kull (p); Harold E. Smith (d). 71.

The first of these features McPhee's semi-legendary Underground Railroad (originally just 450 vinyl copies) coupled with a previously unreleased set by the Contemporary Improvisational Ensemble, live at Holy Cross Monastery six months earlier. While both sets are a fascinating document of a little-known enclave of free players, they're not exactly lost masterpieces, with McPhee still finding his way towards the quality of his '70s performances and the others ranging from incoherent to awkwardly passionate. The LP session has some beautiful moments nevertheless, the long title-piece taking a natural trajectory through tension and release, while the rambunctious free-funk of 'Windy City Head Stompin' Blues' on the Ensemble session is exhilarating.

The second rarity comes from a little later in McPhee's effort to meld free jazz and the kind of raw electric funk that was creeping into jazz in the wake of Miles Davis's experiments. Kull's electric piano, rather than the leader's playing, confirms the connection. 'Nation Time' is credited to McPhee and played by his quintet of the time, but the two live pieces are improvisations from an expanded group with an extra saxophone, guitar and organ.

Also first released in a very limited run, Trinity saw McPhee continue his reduced group. The long 'Ionization' begins with trumpet, then tenor and drums, and it's some time before Kull enters very softly to pick up what turns into a long and possibly Coltrane-influenced improvisation. The second track is only a third of the length, with McPhee's assertive, almost preachy tenor-playing over electric piano chords. Smith is hyperactive, sometimes too busy for the health of the music, which is much simpler in outline and more blues-driven than at first appears. 'Delta' is reminiscent of both Albert Ayler and Leo Smith, a threatening, deceptively low-key theme that builds to an enormous climax.

(*) Impressions Of Jimmy Giuffre Celp C 21 McPhee; André Jaume (ts, bcl); Raymond Boni (g). 4/91.

This disc stands a little apart from his normal line of work, but there is no mistaking how much pleasure he took in making it. The trio kicks off with a glorious version of 'The Train And The River', with McPhee in the Brookmeyer role, and carries on with a mixture of Giuffre originals and specially written pieces which might have been laid down by the clarinettist's slightly wacky brother. There's even a posy for Juanita Giuffre, who has been a substantial influence on her husband's recent career. A sundae to balance the meatier side of McPhee's output.

* Common Threads: Live At The Tractor Tavern, Seattle Deep Listening DL4 McPhee; Stuart Dempster (tb, didjeridu); Loren Dempster (clo); Eyvind Kang (vn, erhu); Michael Bisio (b). 10/95.

Spookily, McPhee began this festival date playing 'Spirit Traveller' on his pocket-trumpet only to discover after the piece, lasting nearly three quarters of an hour, was over that Don Cherry had died that day. It's the most substantial track by far on this set, and might in some circumstances have made a decent CD on its own. There's great stuff on the two shorter cuts, though, and 'Red Enchantment', dedicated to Joe Sr, is delightful and warm. Dempster and son Loren create a huge range of sounds between them, though sometimes they are difficult to distinguish from what Kang is doing.

* As Serious As Your Life hatOLOGY 514 McPhee (solo). 5/96.

McPhee has identified 1996 as an important transitional year, a point at which he looks back and forward, with the oneiric logic that dominates 'Project Dream Keeper', his latest sequence of work. Working alone and with ambient sound welcomed rather than edited out, he creates a body of work which is as evocative and expressive as anything he has ever made. 'Tok' is a Coltrane-influenced tenor piece which harks back to the earlier solo performance. 'Conlon In The Land Of Ra' documents an imaginary meeting between Sun Ra and the radical composer Conlon Nancarrow, who spent much of his life writing for player piano. Dedicated to Marilyn Crispell, Coltrane's 'After The Rain' is a piano solo played on the house piano of the Village Gate jazz club and played with the sustain pedal depressed throughout, giving it a floating, fugitive quality. On 'The Man I Love', McPhee brings a highly personal focus to the Gershwin standard, a similar tonality and language to the two parts of 'As Serious As Your Life', named after an important book by British jazz writer and photographer Val Wilmer. As well as these, there is the opening 'Death Of Miles Davis', a heartfelt tribute, and 'Haiku Study #1', a sketch for work included on the duets with violinst David Prentice (see below).

* Legend Street One /  ... Two / (*) Inside Out CIMP 115 / 132 / 120 McPhee; Frank Lowe (ts on One and Two only); David Prentice (vn on One and Two only); Charles Moffett (d). 6/96.

McPhee's openness to all sound, natural and instrumental, recommends him to the unvarnished, non-hierarchical aesthetic espoused by CIMP. These two sessions are very much in keeping with the 'Dream Keeper' project, broodingly surreal and expressive encounters which refuse to obey the jazz rulebook. Like Henry Threadgill, McPhee now seems to have evaded bebop altogether and to be playing in an idiom that is entirely his own and almost beyond critical analysis. The bald session details are slightly misleading because on Legend Street One there are actually only two quartet tracks. The rest are either duos, like the two-tenor encounter of 'Loweville', a couple of tracks with Prentice anticipating the head-to-head of Inside Out, and the extraordinary flugelhorn/drums confrontation of 'Not Yet'. 'For Panama' is a drum solo, Moffett's tribute to Panama Francis, and one of the drummer's very best recorded performances. Indeed, the album is notably selfless, with considerable time and space for the remaining members of the group to establish their own musical personalities. The long group track, 'Up, Over And Out', is all the better for knowing more about how these remarkable men think and interact.

Volume two of Legend Street opens with a stunning version of Eric Dolphy's 'Something Sweet, Something Tender', with Lowe tracking the leader every inch. Again, Prentice is a significant presence, while the late Charles Moffett sustains a pulse that is at once clear and unambiguous but also elastic. 'Double Ten' and 'Dark Doings' are equally monumental performances, with great interplay between the saxophones and riveting detail from the violinist and drummer.

* A Meeting In Chicago Okkadisk OD 12016 McPhee; Ken Vandermark (reeds); Kent Kessler (b). 96.

Like Henry Threadgill, McPhee is hard to pin down critically because he belongs to no identifiable generic niche. This extraordinary set could almost be the work of some as yet unknown, conservatory-trained but sceptical modernist who has written his thesis on the wind groups of early modernism, those experimenters who took a perverse delight in trying combinations that had not been heard during the classical era. As a meeting of minds, this one is hard to improve on.

 The Brass City Okkadisk OD12025 McPhee; Jeb Bishop (tb). 10/97.

McPhee was to turn his back somewhat on brass after this astonishing tour de force. Brass duos are pretty rare in the canon, but this one sounds as straightforward and idiomatic as saxophone and piano or trumpet and organ, with Bishop providing much of the harmonic foundation. McPhee includes both soprano saxophone and valve trombone but concentrates for much of the time on pocket-cornet, a tight, terse sound similar to Don Cherry's. Most of the record is taken up with a suite of dance exercises for two horns, but there are also tributes to Tom Guralnick, and a delightful nod to Roswell Rudd in the oddly spelt 'Rozwell Incident'. Touches of distortion here and there when the two horns are playing forte, but generally speaking the sound is very good.

 The Watermelon Suite /  Rapture CIMP 183 / Cadence CJR 1106 McPhee; Rosi Hertlein (vn on Rapture only); Dominic Duval (b, elec); Jay Rosen (d, perc). 5/98; 12/98.

The trio with Duval and Rosen has proved to be a fruitful one for McPhee, the relationship with Cadence even more so. The elements of 'The Watermelon Suite' itself – whole, rind, meat, seeds – are treated with a strangely analytical certainty, but the playing is as refreshing and raw as ever. McPhee these days restricts himself to saxophone, and mostly the soprano. It is most effective on the long 'Putter Piece', but his solo on the closing 'My Funny Valentine' is wry and touching. Rosen and Duval take time out for a duet on 'Soundboard Safari'.

Rapture is hijacked by the astonishing violinist and singer Rosi Hertlein, who is destined for great things. With Duval's deployment of live electronics, the sound-world is greatly expanded and McPhee's prominence is scaled down somewhat. The opening fragment was inspired by composer and diarist Ned Rorem's eulogy on his partner of more than 30 years, but the main component of the album is a centenary reinterpretation of James Weldon Johnson's magnificent Negro anthem, 'Lift Every Voice And Sing', a performance that comes in at more than three quarters of an hour.

* The Dream Book Cadence CJR 1105 McPhee; Dominic Duval (b). 8/98.

A fascinating duo collaboration inspired by the work of Ornette Coleman and by many of those – Dewey Redman, Don Cherry, Scott LaFaro – who have played in the great saxophonist's groups. McPhee and Duval also seem to draw on the work of artist Helen Douglas. The music is stately, sometimes grave; there is no attempt to pastiche Ornette; and there is a rigorous equality between the two voices.

(*) In The Spirit CIMP 199 McPhee; Joe Giardullo (ss, bcl, f); Michael Bisio, Dominic Duval (b). 3/99.

The 'Spirit' is the Spirit Room at Rossie, New York, where CIMP sessions are recorded. But it also reflects the spiritual tradition that McPhee explores with his drummerless Bluette group. Almost all the material here – the only exceptions are McPhee's 'Astral Spirits' and his meditation on 'Come Sunday/Birmingham Sunday' – is from the church or its adherents. 'Deep River' and 'Just A Closer Walk With Thee' are performed alongside Curtis Mayfield's 'People Get Ready' and Billie Holiday's and Arthur Herzog Jr's 'God Bless The Child'. In this context, and played with McPhee's usual fervour, they sound spiritually consistent one with another. Pairing off with a second horn has always had an interesting effect on McPhee's approach and here he often sits back out of the foreground, working on the deep melody while Giardullo embellishes and improvises in the foreground.

 Specific Gravity Boxholder BXH 021 McPhee; Joe Giardullo (ss, f, bcl, elec). 9/97.

The duets with Giardullo use delay effects and there is some odd clicking in 'A Priori', a very long piece which mixes organic horn-playing and analogue effects to create a curious old–new hybrid. But they do better yet by a drily lyrical soprano duet on 'After The Rain', and the introduction of valve trombone into the McPhee instrument-stand on the final 'Sienna'.

(*) A Parallax View Slam 268 McPhee; Paul Hession (d). 1/03.

This was recorded during a short British tour in 2003 and Hession is magnificent throughout, and not just because he's playing to a home crowd. It's a pity Paul doesn't take a solo spot, as McPhee does on 'Blue Coat, Blue Collar', a tenor and vocal feature. For some reason, the Leeds recordings are better – both acoustically and in terms of performance – than those from the Bluecoat in Liverpool, but the set hangs together well and with McPhee on just tenor and soprano has a nice consistency of approach. One can hear ideas traded off from night to night. Some ideas from 'Evocation' in Liverpool, re-emerge in 'What Can We Do?' (a tribute to Peter Brötzmann and Michael Zerang) the next night in Yorkshire.

 Journey / (*) Sugar Hill Suite / * Playing With The Elements CIMP 283 / 320 / 328 McPhee; Dominic Duval (b); Jay Rosen (d). 2/03; 10/04; 10/04.

Trio X performing in real time in the Spirit Room at CIMP and extending a body of music that is one of the most interesting in contemporary improvisation. McPhee plays alto and tenor saxophones on the first record, with a greater emphasis on long lines and sustained harmonic ideas. The episodic structure of the record is mildly distracting when it seems that most of these pieces run together like stages in a real journey. The second disc is dominated by another of Joe's suites, this one structured with real care and sophistication; he plays tenor saxophone throughout. The third of the sequence is a stunner, with intense versions of 'Stella By Starlight' and 'Lonely Woman' and the amazing closer 'A Valentine In The Fog Of War'. McPhee is back on flugelhorn and pocket-trumpet as well as his saxophone.

* In Finland Cadence CJR1186 McPhee; Matthew Shipp (p); Dominic Duval (b). 05.

This unexpected association was either going to work triumphantly or falter awkwardly. We find it wholly compelling. Shipp seems to adjust his attack and note-choices to fit in with Joe's impassioned delivery, but there is a lot more calm thought in this set – notably on 'In Finland' itself – than on a lot of similar live recordings.

Also, in brief:

 Pieces Of Light 1974 Atavistic Unheard Music ALP/UMS 256. 74.

Originally on CJR, this curious set finds McPhee, with an additional array of little instruments, paired with John Snyder's willing but limited array of synth effects.

 Tenor & Fallen Angels hatOLOGY 544. 10/77.

Dazzlingly agile tenor saxophone, unaccompanied but packed with rich ideas.

 Oleo hatOLOGY 609. 8/82.
A surprise to find him playing bop repertoire, though needless to say the Rollins tune and 'I Remember Clifford' are idiosyncratically done.

 Visitation Boxholder 34. 11/83.
An interesting group date with avant-garde saxophonist Bill Smith, plus violin, bass and drums.

 Unquenchable Fire Deep Listening DL019. 96.
McPhee with Pauline Oliveros (acc) and other Deep Listening regulars on an extended suite of pieces which brood rather than storm.

 No Greater Love CIMP 209. 3/99.
Mostly duets in various combinations, although none as effective as a mournful 'Deep River'. The rest run the gamut between playful, passionate and plain gloomy.

 Grand Marquis Boxholder BXH 04. 8/99.
Duets with avant-garde drummer Johnny McClellan, who seems to provide most of the material. Interesting to compare this with McPhee's Hamid Drake duos.

 On Tour: Toronto/Rochester /  In Black And White – On Tour: Ann Arbor/NYC Cadence CJR 1134 / 1144. 3/01; 4/01.
Souvenirs from the road with Duval and Rosen. Vivid but scrappy.

 Let Paul Robeson Sing CIMP 257. 9/01.
Not so much a jazz album as a sonic homage to the great American singer and activist.

Charles McPherson (born 1939)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Not so much a jazz album as a sonic homage to the great American singer and activist.

 Be Bop Revisited Original Jazz Classics OJC 710 McPherson; Carmell Jones (t); Barry Harris (p); Nelson Boyd (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 11/64.
(*) Con Alma! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1875 McPherson; Clifford Jordan (ts); Barry Harris (p); George Tucker (b); Alan Dawson (d). 8/65.
 The Quintet Live! /  Live At The Five Spot Original Jazz Classics OJC 1804 / Prestige PRCD 24135 McPherson; Lonnie Hillyer (t); Barry Harris (p); Ray McKinney (b); Billy Higgins (d). 10/66.
McPherson credits the relatively unsung Barry Harris for his schooling in bebop, but it's clear he's also a Parker disciple. Con Alma! Suggests that Johnny Hodges was also a strong influence. The straightforward bop covers on Revisited and the slightly more individualized live material have an energy and clarity of tone that are completely missing from the later, over-produced sessions once reissued on Mainstream.

Of this early group, the Five Spot recording and Con Alma! are probably the most immediately approachable, but McPherson remains a performer who is hard to identify other than by his ancestral traits – which is a pity, because he has a lovely tone and seems constantly responsive to his colleagues. Some of the exchanges with Jordan, who takes a much more sceptical view of bop, are revelatory, though few of them are allowed to develop.

 From This Moment On! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1899-2 McPherson; Cedar Walton (p); Pat Martino (g); Peck Morrison (b); Lenny McBrowne (d). 1/68.
 Horizons Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1912-2 As above, except omit Morrison, McBrowne; add Nasir Hafiz (vib), Walter Booker (b), Billy Higgins (d). 8/68.
(*) McPherson's Mood Original Jazz Classics OJC 1947 McPherson; Barry Harris (p); Buster Williams (b); Roy Brooks (d). 12/69.
McPherson's growing confidence was cemented by a new working relationship with the up-and-coming Cedar Walton and with Pat Martino, a guitarist of genuine originality. The alto/guitar duet on 'Lush Life' on the August 1968 session is a remarkable performance, mining new insights from the old song and turning it into something altogether more solid and durable than the average 'standards' reading. The later of the 1968 albums starts stronger than it finishes, as if the summer heat of New York City gets to the players halfway and they lose pace and commitment.

From This Moment On! is a much more even album. If it lacks the excitement and sheer imagination of its successor, it is probably a more successful entity. McPherson has rarely sounded as briskly swinging, and the sheer drive and energy of these seven relatively short numbers is infectious. Again, Martino is a key element in a line-up with just a single horn, and his playing veers between rich chording and strong, saxophone-influenced lines. The rhythm section of Morrison and McBrowne is less graceful and sophisticated than that of Booker and Higgins (even Booker and Higgins on a slightly off-day) but it gets down to business with a will.

Reunited with Barry Harris for McPherson's Mood, he still sounds in prime voice and the music is a convincing marriage of on-the-edge bebop and a more personal, outward-looking music. The title-blues, opening with a resplendent Williams solo, is sheer class, and even the modish choice of Stevie Wonder's 'My Cherie Amour' gets a songful treatment, though it does tame the more daring elements of the set. McPherson's delivery is full of little inflexions and subtleties which even in his favoured high gear make a telling difference.

* Come Play With Me Arabesque AJ0117 McPherson; Mulgrew Miller (p); Santi Debriano (b); Lewis Nash (d). 3/95.
A smashing record from a dream band. McPherson still likes to pay homage on occasion, and 'Bloomdido' allows him to show how much he still draws from Charlie Parker's complex legacy but also how well he's invested his inheritance in new ideas. Mulgrew has never sounded comfortable round orthodox bop (none of McCoy Tyner's progeny ever did), but here he slips easily into the idiom and creates a space for himself which is as fruitful as it is challenging. McPherson's originals are as inventive as ever. 'Lonely Little Chimes' might well sound banal in other hands, but he creates a touchingly poignant song that swings in its own individual way. Debriano and Nash are beautifully caught by engineers Malcolm Addey and John Reigart, who both deserve a bigger credit for the set. The romping conclusion, a run-in of three wonderful new songs, is perfectly registered.

(*) Manhattan Nocturne Arabesque AJ 01189 McPherson; Mulgrew Miller (p); Ray Drummond (b); Victor Lewis (d); Bobby Sanabria (perc). 97.
Poised and quietly charismatic bop from a group which extends the new confidence that has suffused McPherson's recent work. 'Blue'N'Boogie' manages to sound both calm and hectic, and both 'How Deep Is The Ocean' and the title-track have a settled authority which even Bird never achieved. Lewis is in exceptional form and the only disappointment is the rather offhand playing of Mulgrew Miller.

 A Tribute To Charlie Parker Clarion 80501 McPherson; Randy Porter (p); Jeff Littleton (b); Charles McPherson Jr (d); Cleveland Chamber Symphony. 11/01.

Curated by Clarion's Leonard Herring Jr, this captures the spirit of Bird's own with-strings projects, and does so beautifully. McPherson's alto positively soars on 'Yardbird Suite' and 'If I Should Lose You', conjuring up a strong impression of how Parker might have sounded with modern recording equipment. The original arrangement by Joe Lippman, Jimmy Carroll and Mitch Miller are used. It's not pastiche, though, but a genuinely felt and highly intelligent set of interpretations which betray a deep understanding of the originals as well as a very personal take on what happened in jazz since. Beautiful.

Also, in brief:

 Live At The Cellar Cellar Live 000726. 7/02.

A cracking club set from Vancouver, with great versions of 'Blue'N'Boogie' and 'Star Eyes'.

Carmen McRae (1920–94)

VOICE

Born in New York, she played piano and wrote songs at an early age. Sang with Benny Carter, Basie and Mercer Ellington in the '40s, then began recording under her own name in 1953.

 The Complete Ralph Burns Sessions Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10152 McRae; Joe Wilder, Marky Markovitz (t); Al Klink, Ben Webster (ts); Andy Ackers, Don Abney (p); Barry Galbraith, Danny Perri, Mundell Lowe (g); Aaron Bell (b); Ted Sommer, Don Lamond, Nick Stabulas (d); orchestra. 12/55–8/58.

(*) Torchy / Blue Moon MCA MCLD 19392 McRae; orchestras led by Jack Pleis, Tadd Dameron and Jimmy Mundy. 12/56–3/59.

 Blue Moon Verve 543829-2 As above, except omit Pleis. 3/58–3/59.

 Birds Of A Feather / (*) Carmen McRae's Finest Hour Verve 589515 / 543760 McRae; orchestra arranged by Ralph Burns. 58; 55–59.

An accomplished pianist, Carmen McRae was something of a late starter as a featured vocalist, not recording a vocal session under her own name until 1954. Her fame has always lagged behind that of her close contemporaries, Sarah Vaughan and Billie Holiday, but eventually she did achieve something like the honour she deserved, and her commitment to jazz singing was unflinching. The CD era has not been very kind to her. Universal's stewardship of her Decca catalogue has been insultingly negligent. It eventually took the British arm of MCA to double up Torchy and Blue Moon, although the latter has subsequently been released as a Verve Master Edition, albeit with a miserly playing time.

There's always a tigerish feel to her best vocals – no woman has ever sung in the jazz idiom with quite such beguiling surliness as McRae. Torchy, the earlier disc, sets her against smoochy Jack Pleis orchestrations, and this is Carmen at her most amenable. Pitched as a set of slowish ballads, she sings them very straight, with an accommodating sweetness. The later Blue Moon may make some collectors sit up at the sight of Tadd Dameron and Jimmy Mundy orchestrations, but they're nothing remarkable. The tunes are rather more interesting, though. 'Nowhere' is a wry set-piece which is perfect for McRae, and the final 'All This Could Lead To Love' is a rarity which she handles well. The Verve edition comes in a smarter package but is docked a notch for meanness.

Birds Of A Feather wouldn't have been our first choice for a McRae reissue: respectable Ralph Burns charts, but the decision to make the concept all 'Bird' songs meant foisting the likes of 'When The Red Red Robin' and 'When The Swallows Come Back To Capistrano' on the singer. She does her best – and there is compensation in 'Baltimore Oriole' at least. This has now been coupled with an earlier date for The Complete Ralph Burns Sessions on Lone Hill Jazz, and given that there is twice as much music this makes for an attractive buy. Finest Hour, which includes a few scarce 45 sides as well as LP tracks, is also a good buy; but this is at least the fourth McRae compilation which the label has done and at this point it's the original ten albums that should be back in print.

 Sings Lover Man Columbia CK 65115 McRae; Nat Adderley (c); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis (ts); Norman Simmons (p, cel); Mundell Lowe (g); Bob Cranshaw (b); Walter Perkins (d). 6–7/61.

McRae's original tribute to Billie Holiday was something she had wanted to do during her Decca period. At Columbia, where she made only one other album, she got her chance. The deft arrangements are by the often undersung Norman Simmons, and Adderley and Lockjaw Davis take on the Harry Edison and Ben Webster roles. Though she follows Holiday's manner almost to the letter on some songs, notably 'Them There Eyes' and 'Trav'lin' Light', this is all Carmen McRae. She is quite imperious on 'Yesterdays', finds a deadly, almost sardonic note in 'Strange Fruit' and is ineffably tender on 'If The Moon Turns Green'. The musicians play superbly alongside her.

(*) The Sound Of Silence / Portrait Of Carmen Collectables COL 6835 McRae; with orchestras arranged by Shorty Rogers, Benny Carter, Jimmy Jones, Gene DiNovi, Oliver Nelson. 68.

 The Art Of Carmen McRae / For Once In My Life Collectables COL 6836 2CD As above, except add Jimmy Rowles (p); Johnny Keating Orchestra. 67–70.

Carmen's love–hate relationship with pop songwriters gets a fascinating airing on the pair of albums which make up the first of the Collectables discs. At a time when the jazz singers of her generation were being importuned to cover everything from the Lovin' Spoonful to the New Vaudeville Band, McRae did it absolutely her way. The charts are in decent hands, and she does some extraordinary things to the material: 'The Sound Of Silence' is transformed into a ferocious anthem of dissent, 'Gloomy Sunday' is chilling, 'I Sold My Heart To The Junkman' oddly ambivalent, as she often was. She ditches the 'cake' half of the 'MacArthur Park' lyric and sings only the haunting verse. Portrait Of Carmen isn't quite as good, and the mastering on this session isn't kind to the vocals.

The second set is a bit strange, since it reissues what was originally a double-LP compilation of her various Atlantic dates (and therefore duplicates some of the tracks on the other set) along with what was her first Atlantic LP, For Once In My Life. On the latter, she barely conceals her disdain for 'Got To Get You Into My Life' and 'Our Song', but 'The Look Of Love' is superbly Carmenized. Track for track a perfectly playable edition.

(*) The Great American Songbook Atlantic 781323 McRae; Jimmy Rowles (p); Joe Pass (g); Chuck Domanico (b); Chuck Flores (d). 72.

A couple of the songs are only questionably 'great', and some of the treatments seem surprisingly hurried or perfunctory. Otherwise this is blue-chip material, a top band and Carmen in excellent voice, cut live at Donte's in Los Angeles. There are too few such occasions in the McRae discography, so it's a welcome reissue.

(*) Heat Wave Concord CCD 4189 McRae; Al Bent, Mike Heathman (tb); Mark Levine, Marshall Otwell (p); Cal Tjader (vib); Rob Fisher (b); Vince Lateano (d); Poncho Sanchez, Ramon Banda (perc). 1/82.

(*) Fine And Mellow Concord CCD 4342 McRae; Red Holloway (ts); Phil Upchurch (g); Jack McDuff (org); John Clayton Jr (b); Paul Humphrey (d). 12/87.

(*) Ballad Essentials Concord CCD 4877 As above Concord albums, except add George Shearing (p). 82–87.

Her records for Concord were mostly rather disappointing, even if there is something good on all of them. The session with Tjader is blemished by the vibesman's usual flavourless Latin-jazz stylings which offer no backbone to the singer's efforts, and the Stevie Wonder tunes on the record scarcely suit a vocal personality which has a pronounced streak of cussedness when she warms up. Yet Fine And Mellow goes to the other extreme without much more conviction; McRae is too sophisticated a stylist to convince as an earthy R&B singer, which this programme and these accompanists are tailored for. However, the very shrewdly chosen compilation Ballad Essentials creams off all the best tracks from her three dates (including the deleted You're Looking At Me), plus three duets with George Shearing, which makes it definitely the one to get.

Jay McShann (born 1916)

PIANO, VOICE, BANDLEADER

'Hootie' was born in Muskogee, Oklahoma, and attended the famous Tuskegee Institute. He worked with Don Byas as a 15-year-old and later moved to KC, where his big band became a recruiting centre for soon to be legendary names.

(*) Jay McShann, 1941–1943 Classics 740 McShann; Harold Bruce, Orville Minor, Bernard Anderson, Bob Merrill, Willie Cook, Dave Mitchell, Jesse Jones (t); Joe Baird, Alonzo Pettiford, Alonso Fook, Rudy Morrison (tb); Charlie Parker, John Jackson, Rudolf Dennis (as); Bob Mabane, Harry Ferguson, Fred Culliver, Paul Quinichette, Bill Goodson (ts); Rae Brodely (bs); Leonard Enois (g); Gene Ramey (b); Gus Johnson, Harold 'Doc' West, Bob Merrill (d); Al Hibbler, Walter Brown (v). 4/41–12/43.

Historically, McShann's swing band will always be remembered as the incubator for Charlie Parker's raw talent. The orchestra packs a Kansas City punch that stands squarely as second-generation Basie, and the blues performances on 'Hootie Blues', 'Swingmatism' and 'Dexter Blues' still have an authentic tang. The Classics includes material from December 1943, three tracks of no special consequence, not least in not including Parker, who had already taken the next step in his career. McShann happily carried on and was still playing pre-bop almost 50 years after Bird's death.

 Jay McShann, 1944–46 Classics 966 McShann; Major Evans, Clarence Thornton, Oliver Todd (t); Tommy Douglas, Edmond Gregory, Theodore Smalls (as); Cleophus Curtis, Seeward Evans, Claiborne Graves (ts); Efferge Ware (g); Percy Gabriel, Walter Page, Raymond Taylor (b); Sam Lovett, Jesse Price, Albert Wichard (d); Numa Lee Davis, Julia Lee, Charles Waterford, Jimmy Witherspoon (v). 11/44–11/46.

After his military discharge, McShann had to rethink his strategy, scaling down his working band to a small, workable combo. The group's return to Kansas City in November 1944 yielded one of the best sessions of his career. Julia Lee's vocals were an integral part of the equation, but it is the quality of playing in this terse, taut small group that attracts the attention. Nothing else on this disc is as good. The vocal material with Witherspoon and others has its moments, but the verve and wit of 'Moten Swing' and 'On The Sunny Side Of The Street' aren't matched in the 1945 material for Philo and Premier, and the pace picks up again only after McShann signed for Mercury, using Witherspoon as front-man on material like 'Voodoo Woman Blues', 'Have You Ever Loved A Woman' and 'Gone With The Blues'.

* Early Bird Spotlite SPJ220 Similar to above. 40–43.

 Jumpin' The Blues Proper Pairs 131 2CD As for the above. 41–46.

The Proper Pairs is a good-value option for those who'd rather not go down the Classics route. This is a nicely produced and packaged set, with all the stuff one would want from this early period. It's arguable, though, whether Jay really hit his stride until later in life and we'd recommend you sample one of the later small-group discs first. The Spotlite set has more historical value, including important airchecks from Wichita and Kansas City, and is a must for students of the young Parker.

(*) Last Of The Blue Devils Koch Jazz 8525 McShann; Joe Newman (t); Paul Quinichette, Buddy Tate (ts); John Scofield (g); Milt Hinton (b); Jack Williams (d). 78.

A remarkable line-up and a wonderful set. One of the problems with the McShann discography is the relatively limited range of tunes and songs, but even familiar things like 'Hootie Blues', which he famously co-wrote with young Charlie Parker, and 'Jumpin' At The Woodside' are as fresh-minted as if they'd just been written on the piano lid. The two tenors give even the lightest of tunes a resonance and warmth and both Tate and Quinichette get off some very fine solos. The surprise in the personnel is, of course, the young Scofield, working on his formidable chops.

(*) Solos & Duets Sackville SKCD 5012 2CD McShann; Don Thompson (b). 6/78–8/80.

This brings together three LPs, the self-explanatory Tribute To Fats, with another solo disc from the same time, Kansas City Hustle, together with a duo date from a couple of years later. In addition, there are a couple of unreleased vocal numbers, 'Baby, Won't You Please Come Home' and 'Keep Your Hands Off Her', which are delightful in their simplicity.

 Last Of The Whorehouse Piano Players /  Last Of The Whorehouse Piano Players Chiaroscuro 206 / 306 McShann; Ralph Sutton (p); Milt Hinton (b); Gus Johnson (d). 12/79; 3/89.

A veteran's symposium; or, two crafty old beggars having a laugh. A decade apart, these are great sessions, full of rumbustious energy. Having Old Father Time on hand with the bull fiddle was an inspired decision. Milt has almost as much history as these two and still sounds full of life and mischief.

 Best Of Friends JSP CD 224 McShann; Al Casey (g); Kenny Baldock (b); Robin Jones (d). 4/82.

 Swingmatism Sackville SKCD 2-3046 McShann; Don Thompson (b); Archie Alleyne (d). 10/82.

 Just A Lucky So And So Sackville SKCD 2-3035 McShann; Jim Galloway (ss, bs); Don Thompson (b); Terry Clarke (d). 8/83.

(*) Airmail Special Sackville SKCD 2-3040 McShann; Neil Swainson (b); Terry Clarke (d). 8/85.

 At Café Des Copains Sackville SKCD 2-2024 McShann (p solo). 8/83–9/89.

McShann has recorded many albums for Sackville and they are starting to reappear on CD. At his best, he blends a wide variety of mannerisms into a personal kind of swing–stride–blues piano; at anything less than that, he can sound like a less than profound and overly eclectic performer. Most of these records feature moments when he's caught between those positions. The meeting with Al Casey is jolly, unprepossessing stuff, both men jogging along to no great end except to have a bit of fun. Swingmatism is rather better: focused by a decent rhythm section, McShann sets his mind to a programme that depends heavily on Ellington for source material, and 'The Jeep Is Jumpin'' and 'The Mooche' are good accounts of less frequently heard tunes. Jim Galloway is an engaging partner on Lucky So And So, which features some attractive playing from both men. McShann excels on 'Red Sails In The Sunset' and gives 'On A Clear Day You Can See Forever' real emotional impact.

Airmail Special is all right, if a bit uneventful, but the best disc is probably the solo set. McShann thinks through a wide spectrum of material – going as far back as Ferde Grofé's 'On The Trail' and ending up with Michel Legrand – and the good piano and live atmosphere elicit a sound series of interpretations, recorded during several visits over a period of six years.

 Havin' Fun Sackville SKCD 2-2047 McShann; Major Holley (b). 91.
(*) Some Blues Chiaroscuro CR(D) 320 McShann; Clark Terry (t, v); Al Grey (tb); Major Holley (b, v); Milt Hinton (b); Ben Riley, Bobby Durham (d). 2/90–9/92.
 My Baby With The Black Dress On Chiaroscuro 345 McShann (p, v). 92.
 The Missouri Connection Reservoir RSR CD 124 McShann; John Hicks (p). 9/92.

Now into his 80s, McShann remains amazingly spirited. His meeting with John Hicks is a discussion about the blues over two keyboards and, while it hardly says anything new about the form, it's a genial encounter.

In Major Holley he has a partner of the old school, a bassist who can 'walk' with the best of them, but who's also capable of playing strong melody lines. A completely engaging album. Some Blues is a hotch-potch that starts with more duos cut with Major Holley and two sessions with Terry, Grey and the others. The bass-and-piano tracks hit a characteristic McShann note of rough good humour, but the band titles are a bit thin. There's also a bonus track of the leader reminiscing for the microphone.

My Baby comes with a very racy cover and Hootie immediately whisks you back to a world of speakeasies, gin joints and women of easy virtue, a mini-musical of the old jazz world. The voice is in great shape, ever more intimate and confiding, and Jay plays the blues as brilliantly as ever.

Also, in brief:

 Confessin' The Blues Black & Blue 867. 3/69.
McShann contributes manfully to a fine set of blues-driven tunes featuring T-Bone Walker (g). A few raw edges.

 With Kansas City In Mind Swaggie 401. 69, 72.
Solos and group sides with the All-Stars. You could almost write out the programme yourself.

(*) Kansas City Memories Black & Blue 965. 70, 7/73.
Co-led with Milt Buckner, whose locked-hands approach was an insidiously imitable new style, this is a dull and muddled set.

(*) After Hours Storyville 8279. 4/77.
All but two tracks with a Scandinavian band are solos, and pretty familiar stuff.

 Hootie! Chiaroscuro 357. 10/97.
Phil Woods (as), Flip Phillips and Fathead Newman (ts) line up to blow alongside the old master on board the SS Norway, jazz cruisin'.

Brad Mehldau (born 1970)

PIANO, VIBES

Born in Florida, he arrived in New York in 1989 and established himself as a formidable sideman, then leader. Now a significant star.

(*) New York–Barcelona Crossing /  New York–Barcelona Crossing Fresh Sound FSNT 031 / 037 Mehldau; Perico Sambeat (as); Mario Rossy (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 5/93.
(*) When I Fall In Love Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 007 As above, except omit Sambeat. 10/93.
* Introducing Brad Mehldau Warner Bros 945997-2 Mehldau; Larry Grenadier, Christian McBride (b); Jorge Rossy, Brian Blade (d). 3–4/95.

Mehldau remains among the most keenly followed pianists in the music. His Warner records are a formidable lot, but the Fresh Sound releases, which he will probably look back on as mere student-work, are still exceptional. Both of the New York–Barcelona Crossing discs were cut live in a Spanish club and, besides the exemplary alto of Sambeat (who was the real leader of the date) and fine work from both the Rossys, Mehldau plays some uncannily beautiful jazz. His introduction and improvisation on 'Old Folks' are quite breathtaking and it's clear that the pristine touch of the later discs was already in place. The second volume isn't quite so impressive, although 'It's Easy To Remember' is another gorgeous ballad performance, at a dangerously slow tempo.

The trio record is a good display of chops. 'Anthropology' goes off at a hurricane tempo. The title-ballad takes a very long, expansive time over itself, and it does ramble a bit. 'At A Loss' and 'Convalescent' are fascinating originals and, as much as he enjoys exploring standards, Mehldau does seem to save some of himself for his own writing. Recorded live, this doesn't have the polish of the later records, but it still cuts most piano trio sessions.

The first album for Warners was a flying start. Though Mehldau's playing is structured in a familiar post-bop mode, it's as if he were aware of jazz tradition but entirely unencumbered by it. That lends such freshness to, say, the opening 'It Might As Well Be Spring' that he seems to be uncovering a previously overlooked but brilliant piano interpretation. On Coltrane's 'Countdown' he creates a logical solo out of phrases and whole passages that seem superficially disparate from one another. His slow playing is distinguished by an exquisitely light touch – 'My Romance' is made to glow – and it's lightness that characterizes his manner. He shies away from dense voicings and will leave a daring amount of space in even a fast improvisation. His own writing fits in with the rest of his style: sample the unexpectedly jaunty 'Angst'.

CORE COLLECTION

* The Art Of The Trio Volume 1
Warners 46260-2 Mehldau; Larry Grenadier (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 9/96.

The titles suggest some heavyweight expectations, and the records deliver on them all. The studio disc is a focusing of some of the flights he looked into on Introducing. An original like 'Lucid' is a beautiful, sculpted miniature which suggests that composing is something that comes easily to Mehldau – but also something which he may not actually be all that interested in, since his greatest energy seems to be reserved for his improvising on standards. 'Blame It On My Youth' sparkles at a slow-to-medium tempo, 'Blackbird' is shaped into a glittering new song, but it's his celestial treatment of 'I Fall In Love Too Easily' which is the heart of the record.

 The Art Of The Trio Volume 2: Live At The Village Vanguard
Warners 46848-2 As above. 97.

At the Vanguard, he played another version of Coltrane's 'Countdown', which can act as a marker for his progress from the debut album on Warners. Where the earlier version was created out of disparate lines, this one is detailed and dense – he gets a long, long way into the piece, which his unaccompanied passage seems suddenly to illuminate, as if abruptly finding answers to a lot of questions. This is perhaps a more ambitious record, sparked by the live situation, and it's like a detailed addendum to the finished elegance of the first volume. Rossy and Grenadier are inevitably overshadowed, but to their credit they follow Mehldau without a stumble.

(*) The Art Of The Trio Volume 3: Songs: / * ... Volume 4: Back At The Vanguard Warner Bros 9362-476051-2 / 9362-47463-2 As above. 5/98; 1/99.

The third volume sets his own songs alongside Rodgers and Hart, Nick Drake and Radiohead, the kind of juxtaposition – in a straight-ahead context – which a new generation of jazz players is making plausible. Mehldau takes what he wants from each of these songs and fashions it into a plausible improvisation, without entirely abstracting the original material. Admittedly, it works better with some pieces than with others – 'Bewitched' seems set in aspic – and his five originals, including new versions of 'At A Loss' and 'Convalescent', might sit better in an all-original programme. But the trio are growing more individual as a unit all the time, too. That's made even more clear by the return to the Village Vanguard for Vol. 4, another superbly effective session. The long 'Nice Pass' contains enough food for thought by itself, 17 minutes of steadily evolving trio music, with the pianist suddenly taking a solo part midway through that suggests a stride piano fantasia, before the other players are cleverly reintegrated into the action. Marvellous, but there is also a superbly compact 'Solar', a brimming 'All The Things You Are' which is a genuinely enjoyable show-off piece, and a general sense that Mehldau and his companions are pushing themselves and their audience that bit harder to cast away any demons of excessive introversion.

 Places /  Progression: The Art Of The Trio Volume 5
Warner Bros 9362-47693-2 / 9362-48005-2 2CD Mehldau; Larry Grenadier (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 1–3/00; 9/00.

One interesting matter about Mehldau's recordings is the way Warners have left him almost to his own devices: there've been no guest stars, no walk-on parts for singers, no remixes, no electricity, no one-composer concepts, no homages. After eight records, apart from the mild diversion of the solo record, it's been nothing but the trio, playing standards, jazz themes, a few originals and the odd piece of pop bricolage. At this point, we're so used to novelty in the way jazz players are handled at major labels that it almost seems perverse. Yet on they go. Maybe Places is a kind of concept-homage to various stopovers and watering holes in the lives of travelling musicians, all of it Mehldau-written, half-solo and half-group. It's sunny, even breezy, rather like a holiday record, although as with any vacation there are moments when one can feel suddenly tired, or homesick. 'Amsterdam' has a few dissonances that upset the carousel feel, and 'Paris' is under cloudy skies.

Back, yet again, at the Vanguard, the trio work through two and a quarter hours of intense music. It's too much and there are pieces which emerge barely alive from the pianist's quite ruthless style of inquiry. Nick Drake's 'River Man' is exposed as a tune that can only be taken so far. But it's a set for ingesting slowly, and even in smaller pieces the music suggests a group and a pianist who are working at a very high level. Several pieces are made into vehicles for pianistic displays of a striking kind, where the improvising is like a self-contained passage of virtuosity, Mehldau looking for a result far removed from a mere development out of chords or melody. It may strike some as pretentious, but when it comes off it's a dizzying alternative to what comes out of most piano trio music.

(*) Largo Warner Jazz 9362-48114-2 Mehldau; John Brion (g, syn); Larry Grenadier, Darek 'Oles' Oleszkiewicz, Justin Medal-Johnson (b); Matt Chamberlain, Jorge Rossy, Jim Keltner, Victor Indrizzo (d). 4/02.

Since Mehldau was the first to cover Radiohead, he's entitled to have another go, this time on 'Paranoid Android'. It's perhaps the central text in what some may have seen as his rock record: originals mixed in with a significant measure of contemporary writing (if the Beatles can be called contemporary), some studio experimentation, a carefully weighted degree of electronic injection. The trio is still the fulcrum, but Brion and the other players play their significant part, and horn sounds orchestrate a lush counterpoint on several pieces. There's little one could call experimental here, since it all sounds focused and finished, as if Mehldau knew just what he wanted from the idiom. And there's still a lot of piano.

(*) Day Is Done Nonesuch 7559-79910-2 Mehldau; Larry Grenadier (b); Jeff Ballard (d). 3/05.

The house may be divided on the arrival of Jeff Ballard as the trio's new drummer. Where Rossy is much more of a traditionalist, if that term means anything in contemporary jazz, Ballard revises his role with backbeats and hip-hop licks. It works brilliantly on the opening 'Knives Out', another Radiohead extrapolation, which is a furiously intense group performance that is lit up by one flourish after another from the keyboard. But it all but ruins 'Day Is Done' itself, which cries out for a more interesting approach to its underlying rhythms. One wonders if Mehldau, who produced the set himself, has been listening to The Bad Plus's records, because both Grenadier and Ballard play a more upfront role in the sound-mix. Slow ('Alfie') and medium-slow ('She's Leaving Home') tempos work well, but the most interesting music is on the less-familiar source material: the Mehldau originals 'Artis' and 'Turtle Town' and Chris Cheek's 'Granada'. Perhaps a transitional record, and still one that asks for a hearing.

(*) House On Hill Nonesuch 79911 Mehldau; Larry Grenadier (b); Jorge Rossy (d). 9/02–3/05.

It turns out that Anything Goes (see below) was a quick-release of standards material. These original cuts from the same 2002 sessions were held over and came out augmented with some later recordings. It's by no means a scary record in comparison to the preferred issue, but it certainly doesn't have the commercial advantage of familiarity. 'Fear And Trembling', 'Boomer', 'Bealtine' and the delightful 'Waiting For Eden' all explore unexpected harmonic and rhythmic configurations. It feels like a strong consolidation.

Also, in brief:

 Marian McPartland's Piano Jazz Jazz Alliance 30154. 9/96.
A delightful conversational encounter. He's smart, but she's smarter. Chivalrous and warm.

 Elegiac Cycle Warner Bros 9362-47357-2. 2/99.
The first solo record was a severe disappointment, a stiff truce between song form, jazz and classical piano.

* Anything Goes Warner Jazz 9362-46082-2. 9/02.
Mehldau's Accessible Album – standards, a bossa nova, a couple of rock tunes, a Monk. It's to his credit that he leaves the project unmarked by any hint of what might be called 'compromise'.

(*) Live In Tokyo Nonesuch 7559-79853-2. 2/03.
Not exactly Brad's Köln Concert, but a pretty impressive performance and a street ahead of the studio solo record.

Myra Melford (born 1957)

PIANO, HARMONIUM

New York-based pianist and composer, working on the cusp of completely free playing and post-bop composition.

(*) Alive In The House Of Saints hatOLOGY 2-570 2CD Melford; Lindsey Horner (b); Reggie Nicholson (d). 2/93.
The Melford discography is still missing some good records, but the sheer brio and bustle of this trio still sound like a tonic. Caught live, the group rattle through some of Melford's premier compositions with apparent abandonment one moment (the tumultuous 'Now & Now 1') and an almost grandiose sense of dignity the next ('Between Now And Then'). Bluesy and swinging but encompassing a lot of complexity and outward-bound structural freedoms, this was an exceptional band. The live recording may lack the last ounce of finesse but there's nothing obscured, and even though there's almost two hours of music here there's very little in the way of spacefilling – even Nicholson's drum solos are worth waiting for.

(*) Even The Sounds Shine hatOLOGY 597 As above, except add Dave Douglas (t); Marty Ehrlich (reeds). 5/94.
A bright and confident showing from the Extended Ensemble, with the emphasis falling heavily on 'La Mezquita Suite', a long-form composition with a dancing quality. 'That The Peace' and 'Frank Lloyd Wright Goes West To Rest, Pt 2' touch on a more sombre tonality that suits the Douglas–Ehrlich combination to perfection. Only the closing piece, 'Evening Might Still', seems unresolved and awkward.

(*) Yet Can Spring Arabesque AJO154 Melford; Marty Ehrlich (as, cl, bcl). 3/00.
They've worked in this pairing often enough to make a record date not just a happenstance collaboration, and with a mere 52 minutes of music there's nothing wasted, from the noise and subsequent resolution of the opening title-track to the finish on an Otis Spann blues. There's a nice bite to the upscale music, but not so much that it makes the more reposeful pieces seem too harsh a contrast; and Ehrlich continues to be one of the most melodious reed-players of his generation.

(*) Where The Two Worlds Touch Arabesque 159 Melford; Cuong Vu (t, elec); Chris Speed (cl, ts); Stomu Takeishi (b); Kenny Wollesen (d). 4/03.
The project as a whole is inspired by Rumi, whose mystical poetry has influenced Melford's titles for some time, but the title-track is a tribute to Andrew Hill. It's a theme that might well come from one of Hill's own latter-day records, sombre but mobile, harmonically complex and seeming to occupy different trajectories simultaneously. She switches to harmonium on 'Where The Ocean Misquotes The Sky', providing a gorgeous foil for Vu's amazing manipulations. The trumpeter actually suits this situation better than Douglas, though one misses Ehrlich's fustian genius.

This pretty much continues the language of the previous record. On occasions, Vu's distortions seem a little too much like effect for effect's sake, but the bassist keeps it all impressively well directed and Melford's hard/soft touch – she really makes it sound like a pianoforte – is ideal for music that seems to flirt with complete breakdown at points.

* Big Picture Crytptogramophone 134 Melford; Mark Dresser (b); Matt Wilson (d). 06.
This is Melford's Trio M and it jumps straight into the 'essential' category. It might seem strange that a record in what has become the most conventional of all jazz instrumentations should seem such an imperative, but even allowing that this is very much a collaborative trio, she's never played with such command and authority. 'BrainFire And BugLight' is a wild surreal thing, 'For Bradford' revisits Ornette Coleman on the least Ornettish of instruments, 'Freekonomics' suggests a world turned upside down, while 'Secrets To Tell You' is a small-scale emotional epic that must be stunning in live performance, with prominent roles for all three. A definitive modern jazz record.

Also, in brief:

 The Image Of Your Body Cryptogramophone 131. 12/03.
A poetry-driven set of real beauty, but diffuse in comparison to her best work.

Mike Melillo (born 1939)

PIANO

American-born post-bop pianist, based for a time in Italy.

 Symphonically Soul Note 121134 Melillo; Chet Baker (t); Massimo Moriconi (b); Giampaolo Ascolese (d); orchestra. 7/85.

 Moonlight On The Ganges Red 123264 Melillo; Michael Moore (b); Ben Riley (d). 5/94.
Melillo plays bop-and-after music with an attractively stuttering bounce but he makes it swing as well. There are other records to his name, but mostly they're gone. These, though, should be enough to establish his credentials. The highlight on Moonlight is the nutty variation on Ornette Coleman's 'Humpty Dumpty'. The date with orchestra is the kind of thing they do very well in Italy – or Europe more generally – using the band as a kind of mass instrument rather than a syrup. And of course Chet Baker thrived in this kind of musical environment. An unexpected delight.

Steve Melling (born 1959)

PIANO

Born in Accrington, Melling has brought a touch of northern grit to London jazz for many years. Has played with numerous high-profile British bands covering a wide expanse of post-bop ground.

(*) Trio Duo Solo Jazz House JHCD 045 Melling; Arnie Somogyi, Simon Woolf (b); Dave Ohm (d). 4/95–1/96.

Cut at four different sessions, this is an impeccable set. Melling brings the sort of no-nonsense fluency and skill suggested by the title to the various tunes and situations. 'What Is This Thing Called Love' is an individual essay to start, the source used as a prop for a solo that goes entirely its own way. Similarly, in the trio version of 'Night And Day' he comes up with a take on Porter's melody which seems new yet inevitable. McCoy Tyner, perhaps the most pertinent influence on Melling's delivery, has a hand in this and in the original 'In A Monochrome', while on the extended look at Coltrane's 'Wise One' (one of three live tracks) the pianist cleverly blends the Tyner blockbusting with his own kind of lyricism. An unpretentious and fine record to which we have returned more often than many more touted items.

George Melly (1926–2007)

VOICE

Writer, art critic, surrealist and singer, he was perhaps the greatest maverick in British jazz. He began singing in the trad movement of the '50s and has been at it ever since.

 The Pye Jazz Anthology Castle CMDDD 483 Melly; groups led by Mick Mulligan and John Chilton. 60–88.
(*) Goodtime George Spectrum 544465-2 Melly; other personnel unlisted. 51–73.
(*) Nuts / Son Of Nuts Warner Jazz 8122-73747-2 2CD Melly; John Chilton (t); Wally Fawkes (cl); Bruce Turner (as, cl); Colin Bates (p); Steve Fagg (b); Chuck Smith (d). 72–73.
(*) Singing And Swinging The Blues Robinwood RWP 0019 Melly; Digby Fairweather (t, v); Chris Gower (tb); Julian Marc Stringle (cl, as, ts, v); Derek Nash (ts); Craig Milverton (ky, v); Dominic Ashworth (g, v); Julian Tear (vn); Len Skeat (b); Bobby Worth (d). 4/03.
 The Ultimate Melly Candid CCD 79843 As above, except add John Chilton (t); Karen Sharp (ts); Van Morrison, Jacqui Dankworth, The Swingle Singers (v); stg. 10–11/05.
 Farewell Blues Lake LACD 250 Melly; Digby Fairweather's Half-Dozen (as above). 1/07.

The current state of Melly's CD catalogue is suitably chaotic. He began as the singer with Mick Mulligan's Jazz Band, in the peak years of the trad boom (memorably recounted in his Owning Up memoir), and has ever since delighted in treading the boards as an entertainer and raconteur, displaying his various affections for hot jazz, Bessie Smith, Fats Waller and others. The Pye Jazz collection covers a thoroughly motley group of titles, none of them reliably documented, but covering some 25 years of work: some of it is all over the place, other pieces are relatively smart, and Melly's chesty baritone makes the best of whatever's put in front of him.

Goodtime George is an appropriately cheap and nasty compilation that goes as far back as 'Send Me To The 'Lectric Chair' (1951!), but it concentrates on his '50s tracks and on that basis is probably the best example of his recorded work in print. That said, Nuts/Son Of Nuts is a welcome revival of his early association with the Chilton group, who kept him company as far as the new century, and there are fine moments for John and Bruce Turner, as well as the singer.

The news that Chilton was retiring might have led the foolish to think that George was going to do the same. No such thing. Instead, he simply embarked on a new lease of life with Digby Fairweather's gang. Going on 80, he gargles more lines than he used to, but crisp enunciation was never Melly's thing, and it's not as if Charley Patton was ever marked down on his consonants. The Fairweather Half-Dozen are too slick. The slow pieces are much the best. 'Michigan Water Blues' has just the right kind of weary, reflective feel, and 'September Song' is, affected or not, a notably poignant climax, even if the string parts are overdoing it. The Ultimate Melly continues the association and is rather better. The band still sound far too respectable, but George is in lusty voice on the likes of 'Kitchen Man', Van Morrison is put entirely in the shade, Jacqui Dankworth sounds like his naughty niece and the sublime jape of having The Swingle Singers turn up for 'Straighten Up And Fly Right' makes for a proper hoot.

George declined treatment for his cancer but didn't decline a last chance to record for Lake. The Half-Dozen are probably a bit respectful, which misses the point of George, but as a send-off it's appropriately raucous and nihilistic.

Victor Mendoza

VIBES

Mexican-born, a leading exponent of Latin jazz and educator at Berklee.

 If Only You Knew L+R 45019 Mendoza; Claudio Roditi (t); Paquito D'Rivera (as, ts); Bob Zung (as, f); Danilo Pérez (p); Oscar Stagnaro (b); Robbie González (d); Elmer Louis (perc). 88.
 This Is Why RAM 4515 Mendoza; Richard Nant, Juan D'Urquiza (t); Jim Odgren (as); Darío Eskenazi, Alain Mallet (p); Oscar Stagnaro (b); Horacio 'El Negro' Hernández (perc). 94.
 Black Bean Blues Sizzle Sticks 9801 Mendoza; Albert Leusink (t); Jim Odgren (as); Alain Mallet (p); Mark White (g); Fernando Huergo (b); Antonio Sánchez (d, timbales); Ernesto Díaz, Renato Thoms (perc). 98.

Mendoza calls his production company/label Sizzle Sticks. The only feasible alternative would have been Mighty Mallets. The artistic heir of Cal Tjader, he has a fizzy but by no means insubstantial approach to the vibes, which he places with a characteristically bright sound. Like his successful eponymous debut these are pleasant records without being exciting. Certainly no reason to think that the more prominent personnel on If Only You Knew is any guarantee of extra quality. There's an easy charm to Mendoza's writing which sometimes camouflages its sophistication; presumably more rugged live, as Berklee concerts have suggested.

Vince Mendoza (born 1961)

KEYBOARDS

A versatile musician who also learned trumpet, bass and drums and studied composition. His signature style is a fusion-oriented post-bop.

* Jazzpaña ACT 9212 Mendoza; Michael Brecker (ts); Al Di Meola, Steve Khan (g); Dieter Ilg (b); Peter Erskine (d); percussion ensemble; WDR Big Band; Arif Mardin (arr). 92.
(*) Sketches ACT 9215 Mendoza; Dave Liebman (ss); Charlie Mariano (as); Nguyên Lê (g); Dieter Ilg (b); Peter Erskine (d); WDR Big Band. 93.
Mendoza made Instructions Inside for Blue Note some 15 years ago, but it no longer seems to be available and he has had to record in Europe for some time. Jazzpaña, a hugely successful collaboration with Arif Mardin, was hailed by some as a latter-day Sketches Of Spain. It's a legitimate comparison, qualitatively, but the language is very different. Mendoza and Mardin give the component pieces a much tougher sheen and the rhythms are much tighter. Peter Erskine has been a close friend and collaborator for many years and he is, as always, magnificent in these expansive settings. The album begins with a lovely version of Ravel's 'Pavane Pour Une Infante Défunte', which is usually misinterpreted as a threnody for a dead princess rather than a stately dance for an infanta of past times, which is much closer to the reading here. The suite that follows is structured round a series of piano improvisations, cleverly shaped so as to follow a logical and compelling course.

 Epiphany Transparent 50019 Mendoza; London Symphony Orchestra. 7/97.
This was around a long time before release, and it's hard to see why. There's a wealth of detail, as well as beautiful melodies and texture, in these eight classically derived pieces. There's presumably not much room for improvisation with forces like this, but the whole set has an air of freedom and surprise. 'Esperanca' (incorrectly retitled) was once covered by Kurt Elling, with words by Neruda.

Misha Mengelberg (born 1935)

PIANO, COMPOSER

He made his recording debut on Eric Dolphy's Last Date. Later, he co-founded the Instant Composers Pool and became a key figure in the Dutch avant-garde.

(*) Change Of Season Soul Note 101104 Mengelberg; George E. Lewis (tb); Steve Lacy (ss); Arjen Gorter (b); Han Bennink (d). 7/84.
* Impromptus / * Mix FMP 7 / ICP 030 Mengelberg (p solo). 6/88; 4 & 5/94.
Mengelberg is also a 'legitimate' composer, albeit with a very strong jazz influence in his work. The collectivism that was so strong a component of the Dutch '60s avant-garde is evident in the autonomy granted to the performers on Change Of Season. Lewis seems most comfortable in the mixed idiom, though Lacy sounds a little glacial. Bennink whips up little rhythmic storms, but he plays with unwonted reserve and an often unrecognized sensitivity. Mengelberg plays with great assurance and a graceful disposition of apparently self-contained and discontinuous ideas that are more reminiscent of the Swiss Irène Schweizer than of his compatriots, Fred Van Hove and Leo Cuypers. Interesting, if for no other reason than that there are other directions for 'free' piano than the one taken and dominated by Cecil Taylor.

Impromptus makes a generic nod to a minor classical form. The 13 individual pieces aren't obviously linked by theme or as variations, but they follow a barely discernible logic that can be picked up via Mengelberg's untutored vocalese, which is of the Bud Powell/Keith Jarrett/Cecil Taylor persuasion. Mix, recorded at a couple of live solo concerts in Amsterdam and The Hague, is very much in the same territory: huge, quasi-tonal shapes and structures jumbled together in what at first glance seems disorder but which is suddenly pierced by light, a simple melodic line that pulls the whole 'mix' into symmetry; perhaps the effect of a magnet on iron filings would be a more effective analogy.

* Solo Buzz 76012 / 5033 CD/SCD Mengelberg (p solo). 12/99.
The similarities with Monk are very evident here: melodies of nursery rhyme simplicity undermined by sudden dissonance, swerving changes of mood, but an absolute clarity of purpose. A sequence of tracks is inspired by or dedicated to Richard Wagner, but there's also a piece called 'Bill Evans En Dan' which lets Bill's 'state of grace' improvising drift into seeming madness. 'Boodschappenlijst IV' is an utterly distinctive opener, as close to a 'typical' Mengelberg idea as there is, while the follow-up seems to start somewhere more distant only to be wrestled back into Mengelberg's sound-world.

* Four In One Songlines 1535 CD/SACD Mengelberg; Dave Douglas (t); Brad Innes (b); Han Bennink (d). 00.
This is Mengelberg's most completely satisfying record. The international group tackles the iconic bop of 'Hypochristmustreefuzz' (from Dolphy's Last Date) with utter conviction. Other pieces, like 'Kneebus' and 'Reef', are also familiar from other records, but the real delight here is a sequence of Monk tunes placed in the middle of the album like the meat in a sandwich. It would be hard to differentiate between the originals and these classics, for Mengelberg makes 'Four In One', 'Monk's Mood' and 'Criss Cross' entirely his own. Douglas is in great form and Bennink shows once again what a fantastic ensemble player he is.

(*) Senne Sing Song Tzadik 7613 Mengelberg; Greg Cohen (b); Ben Perowsky (d). 4/05.
An ongoing association with John Zorn bears more fruit. There is another version of the Last Date classic, a splendid 'Reef Und Kneebus' and another reading of 'Broezimann', which also appeared on the solo record above. At 70, Mengelberg is playing better and with better humour than at any time in his career. The sound here is crystal clear and richly nuanced.

Ian Menzies & His Clyde Valley Stompers

GROUP

Scotland's most eminent trad outfit, the Clydes were formed in 1952 and Menzies took over leadership in 1954. They lasted till 1963, having been regulars at all the Scottish clubs and halls, but re-formed for a couple of albums in 1981.

(*) Ian Menzies & His Clyde Valley Stompers Lake LACD79 Malcolm Higgins (t); Ian Menzies (tb); Forrie Cairns (cl); John Cairns (p); Norrie Brown, (bj); Bob Bain, Andrew Bennie (b); Bobby Shannon (d); Fionna Duncan, Lonnie Donegan (v). 4/59–5/60.
(*) Traditional Jazz Lake LACD126 As above, except add Pete Kerr (cl), Jim Douglas (bj), Robbie Winter (d). 4/59–5/61.
The CVS did staunch duty for Scottish trad followers, and their surviving records are in some ways disappointing. Recorded for Pye, and issued mainly as singles and EPs (their single album is on LACD79), their output is mostly sub-three-minute tracks at sometimes unsuitably fast tempos, with the rhythm section thumping along. The standout player is Forrie Cairns, a clarinet player with a touch of Celtic fire about him. Fionna Duncan belts out several vocals, and Donegan, who produced the original sessions, sings on three tracks.

Helen Merrill (born 1930)

VOICE

Born in New York, she was associated with the first-generation boppers and began recording in 1954. She lived in Italy for some years, later in Japan, and returned to Chicago and New York in the '70s. A Verve contract restored her eminence in the '80s and '90s.

CORE COLLECTION

* Helen Merrill With Clifford Brown And Gil Evans Emarcy 838292-2 Merrill; Clifford Brown, Art Farmer, Louis Mucci (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Joe Bennett (tb); John LaPorta (cl, as); Jerome Richardson (as, ts, f); Danny Bank (f); Hank Jones, Jimmy Jones (p); Barry Galbraith (g); Oscar Pettiford, Milt Hinton (b); Joe Morello, Osie Johnson, Bobby Donaldson (d); stg, horns. 12/54–6/56.

Helen Merrill has never made a bad record, and while she scarcely conforms to the image of a swinging jazz singer, she's a stylist of unique poise and sensitivity. Her early work is as involving as her mature records. She sings at a consistently slow pace, unfolding melodies as if imparting a particularly difficult confidence, and she understands the harmonies of the songs as completely as she trusts her way with time. That gives these lingering performances a sensuality which is less of a come-hither come-on than the similarly inclined work of a singer such as Julie London. Merrill thinks about the words, but she improvises on the music too. Her treatment of 'Don't Explain' is cooler yet no less troubling than Billie Holiday's exaggerated pathos, and 'What's New' is a masterpiece. Brown's accompaniments on seven tracks make an absorbing contrast to his work with Sarah Vaughan, and Evans's arrangements on the other eight songs are some of his most lucid work in this area.

* No Tears, No Goodbyes Sunnyside 3506 Merrill; Gordon Beck (p, org). 11/84.
(*) Music Makers Owl 014729-2 As above, except add Steve Lacy (ss); Stéphane Grappelli (vn). 3/86.
Most of Merrill's later work has been deleted. Both of these were originally on Owl. The duos with Beck are terrific when he sticks to grand piano, less admirable when he tries to vary the accompaniment. Beck's two originals, 'I Love Paris Too' and 'I Got It Good', are the cream of the crop. The other date is an unrepeatable collaboration which, in its strange way, holds up well. Lacy plays on the first half, Grappelli on the second. The saxophonist's playing seems as private as Merrill's own path through the lyrics, whereas Grappelli offers an antidote by pouring on the Gallic charm in 'As Time Goes By'. Beck, a frequent collaborator, provides the line to Earth.

* Brownie Emarcy 522563-2 Merrill; Roy Hargrove, Tom Harrell (t, flhn); Lew Soloff, Wallace Roney (t); Kenny Barron (p); Torrie Zito (ky); Rufus Reid (b); Victor Lewis (d). 2/94.
A surprise but welcome reissue of this classic session, which worked as a beautiful homage to Clifford Brown, gave starring spots to a host of trumpeters, and acted as a superb vehicle for Merrill's individual approach to time, every line flowing even at the slowest tempos. Arranger Torrie Zito is Mr Merrill.

 Lilac Wine Emarcy 067566-2 Merrill; Lew Soloff (t); Torrie Zito (ky); Alan Merrill (g, v); George Mraz (b). 02.
Merrill takes a gentle course through this material on a set recorded in Prague. Her voice isn't as sure and responsive as it once was, but there are insights which lend a graceful wisdom to the music.

Also, in brief:

 Complete Recordings With Clifford Brown /  Helen Merrill / Dream Of You Lone Hill LHJ 10164 / Rev-Ola 232. 2/54–6/56.
The music's great, of course, but it all sounds better on the original label.

Neil Metcalfe

FLUTE

Fine British improviser, yet to make much impression as a solo recording artist.

 2gether Slam CD 237 Metcalfe; John Rangecroft (cl). 99.
Metcalfe lent his quiet authority and questioning spirit to the later years of the Spontaneous Music Ensemble, never garnering more than an occasional respectful mention. These 29 untitled improvisations are about as far from ego-driven 'performance' as it's possible to get. They are not so much dry and abstract as purposefully objective, almost like stray pebbles of sound picked up on a beach. Rangecroft has the more varied range and the more emphatic presence but it's Metcalfe's dogged examination of his instrument that wins the day.

Pat Metheny (born 1954)

GUITAR

By the time he was 19 the Missourian had already been teaching at Berklee and playing with the Gary Burton group. He made a string of records for ECM and formed a hugely successful touring group, with keyboardist Lyle Mays. He has built an audience in both the jazz and the rock camps.

 Bright Size Life ECM 827133-2 Metheny; Jaco Pastorius (b); Bob Moses (d). 12/75.
 Watercolours ECM 827409-2 Metheny; Lyle Mays (p); Eberhard Weber (b); Danny Gottlieb (d). 2/77.
(*) Pat Metheny Group ECM 825593-2 As above, except omit Weber; add Mark Egan (b). 1/78.
 New Chautauqua ECM 825471-2 Metheny (g solo). 8/78.
 American Garage ECM 827134-2 Metheny; Lyle Mays (ky); Mark Egan (b); Danny Gottlieb (d). 6/79.
When he first appeared, as a coolly melodic electric guitarist for the ECM label, Metheny seemed content to drop his playing into whatever context it might find. The first two ECM albums are a little untypical – each depends more on its respective star bassist to give it some clout – but, like the ones that follow, they are pleasant, hummable records with a degree of fine playing which the high-grade production values and sometimes over-sensitive musicianship can occasionally block out with sheer amiability. At this time Metheny favoured a clean, open tone with just enough electronic damping to take the music out of 'classic' jazz guitar feeling, but he clearly owed a great debt to such urban pastoralists as Jim Hall and Jimmy Raney, even if he seldom moved back to bebop licks.

The Metheny Group albums settled the guitarist's music into the niche from which he is still basically working: light, easily digested settings that let him play long, meticulous solos which can as often as not work up a surprising intensity. Pat Metheny Group and American Garage each have their ration of thoughtful improvising which the guitarist settles inside a gently propulsive rhythm, more ruralized than the beefy urban beats of the contemporary fusion bands. That strain also colours the playing and composing of Mays, who has been Metheny's principal collaborator for 20 years. Scarcely a major voice in his own right – his own solo records have been entirely inconsequential – Mays is the perfect second banana. He feeds Metheny all kinds of tasteful orchestration without getting too much in his way.

New Chautauqua is a rare all-solo album in the Metheny canon. A pleasant, sweet-toned diversion, it hints at the multifariousness – with various electric and acoustic settings, including a 15-string harp-guitar – with which which Metheny has grown fascinated in recent times.

 80/81 ECM 843169-2 2CD Metheny; Dewey Redman, Michael Brecker (ts); Charlie Haden (b); Jack DeJohnette (d). 5/80.
At the time this sounded like an almost shocking departure, but Brecker and Redman adapt themselves to Metheny's aesthetic without undue compromise and Haden and DeJohnette play with great purpose. There's too much music here and some dreary spots, but some excellent moments too.

(*) Offramp / * Travels ECM 817138-2 / 810622-2 2CD Metheny; Lyle Mays (ky); Steve Rodby (b), Danny Gottlieb (d). 10/81; 7–11/82.
Offramp is another mild-mannered sequence, although here Metheny's knack for the melodic hook starts to blossom. 'Are You Going With Me', over a gently percolating bass vamp, remains an enduring set-piece which he is still playing today. Travels effectively summed up the band's tenure with ECM with a studious and densely packed live set. There are the kind of longueurs that one associates more with the double live album in rock, rather than the creative stretch of the jazz concert disc, but Metheny's group had built up a charisma of its own by this time and this is a good souvenir.

(*) Rejoicing ECM 817795-2 Metheny; Charlie Haden (b); Billy Higgins (d). 11/83.
All right, it's all too obvious citing this capital-letter jazz album as Metheny's best up to this point, but he finds a loneliness in Horace Silver's 'Lonely Woman' and a happiness in Ornette Coleman's 'Rejoicing' for which more severe interpreters of those composers don't seem to have time or room. By itself the playing isn't so remarkable, but pairing him with Haden and Higgins, on a programme of mostly Coleman and Metheny originals, sheds new lustre both on himself and on music that's often somewhat neglected.

(*) First Circle ECM 823342-2 Metheny; Lyle Mays (ky); Steve Rodby (b); Paul Wertico (d); Pedro Aznar (perc, v). 2/84.
The last ECM album is no kind of departure and even some fans were disappointed, but its larger sonic palette was a clear indication of where Metheny wanted to go next: expanding his group to a quintet, he staked a place in a much bigger sound. Unlike his ECM contemporary, Steve Tibbetts, who has never secured Metheny's audience yet whose works are an absorbing counterpart to his contemporary's, the guitarist seemed set on mediating his group's music through a fundamentally conservative synthesis of jazz, Latin and rock flavours; a catholic taste put through a blender to take all the harmful pieces out. And then he made ...

* Song X: Twentieth Aniversary Nonesuch 7559-79918-2 Metheny; Ornette Coleman (as, vn); Charlie Haden (b); Jack DeJohnette, Denardo Coleman (d). 12/85.
Metheny's great departure still seems like a bolt from the blue. It's the most astonishing move ever made by a middle-of-the-road jazz artist. Not only does the guitarist power his way through Coleman's itinerary with utter conviction, but he sets up opportunities for the saxophonist to resolve and creates a fusion with which Coleman's often impenetrable Prime Time bands have failed to come to terms. Melody still has a place here, which suggests that Metheny's interest in the original Coleman legacy may be carrying forward in his own work more intently than it is in the composer's. Either way, on many of the more raving episodes here both men sound exultant with the possibilities. Twenty years after its initial release, Metheny went back to the original tapes and prepared a new edition which restored six pieces left off the vinyl album. In a curious move, they appear as the first six tracks on the CD. 'Police People' and 'The Good Life' are especially interesting since they include blowing sections based around chord changes, an environment almost unthinkable for Coleman yet one which he handles with typical aplomb. 'Word From Bird', the slapstick 'Compute' and 'The Veil' put a further spin on what the group could do.

(*) Still Life (Talking) Geffen GED 24145 Metheny; Lyle Mays (ky); Steve Rodby (b); Paul Wertico (d); Armando Marcal (perc, v); David Blamires, Mark Ledford (v). 3–4/87.
 Question And Answer Geffen GED 24293 Metheny; Dave Holland (b); Roy Haynes (d). 12/89.
 The Road To You Geffen GED 24601 Metheny; Pedro Aznar (sax, vib, mar, perc, g, v); Lyle Mays (ky); Steve Rodby (b); Paul Wertico (d); Armando Marcal (perc, v). 92–3.
Still Life (Talking) drifts towards light rock, peaking on the infectious 'Last Train Home'; but there's an awful lot of fluff as well, courtesy of Mays's noodling keyboards. The wordless vocals of Ledford and Blamires remove the final barrier to a crossover audience by getting the human voice in there somewhere, and though the increased orchestration of the sound may have displeased some of Metheny's admirers, it waved in many more. Question And Answer – which seems to be the kind of periodic vacation that Metheny takes from his regular band, and may it continue – finds the guitarist, bassist and, especially, the drummer playing with great brio and suppleness. The tunes are another mix of standards and Coleman and Metheny originals; and if some of the charm of the ECM trio date is missing and a few pieces seem to end up nowhere, it's well worth hearing.

The Road To You, a concert album, is much livelier and is one of the best records by the regular group since the last live set. They are a fun group to see live (even if some of their sets go on longer than the Grateful Dead used to), and this pared-down souvenir will find plenty of appeal.

 We Live Here Geffen GED 24729 Metheny; Mark Ledford (t, flhn, v); Lyle Mays (ky); Steve Rodby (b); Paul Wertico (d); Luis Conte (perc); David Blamires (v). 94.
Back on undeadly ground. A few tracks work off programmed drum beats, and Metheny gets to do a Bensonesque bit here and there, but by the middle of the disc he's returned to his favourite platform, the soft cadences of Brazilian beat. Once there, he actually sounds in very good form, confirming that, with the rotten Secret Story (see below, 'in brief') behind him, this is a good period for him.

 Imaginary Day Warner Bros 46791 Metheny; Mark Ledford (t, vtb, flhn, v); David Blamires (mel, g, vn, mca, v); David Samuels (vib); Lyle Mays (ky); Steve Rodby (b); Paul Wertico (d); Glen Velez, Mino Cinelu, Don Alias (perc). 97.
Metheny plays at least ten different kinds of guitar on this one, the kind of arsenal one might once have associated with, say, Steve Howe, and perhaps it suits the kind of widescreen, almost symphonic music he seems to be increasingly in search of. If the jazz elements continue to filter away, he still manages to squeeze in solos of considerable moment. 'Follow Me' is a near-classic piece of instrumental pop with overtones of the jazz disciplines that he started out with. But too much of the rest runs into bombast.

(*) Trio 99–00 Warner Bros 9362-47632-2 Metheny; Larry Grenadier (b); Bill Stewart (d). 8/99.
This is his most straight-ahead situation since Question And Answer, although as a sideman he's been doing plenty of this sort of playing elsewhere. It would be interesting to poll Metheny's following on how they rate this kind of record next to his Group albums. For us – call us predictable if you have to – it rates ahead because it affirms what a graceful and quick-witted improviser the man is, away from his big-sound predilections. His version of 'Giant Steps' is light and airy but full of notes and intensely played. That said, there are many good guitar records like this out there, and it assists him enormously to have Grenadier and the admirable Stewart on hand, since they're integral to the record's success.

 Speaking Of Now Warner Bros 9362-48025-2 Metheny; Cuong Vu (t, v); Lyle Mays (ky); Steve Rodby (b); Antonio Sanchez (d); Richard Bona (v, perc). 01.
 The Way Up Nonesuch 7559-79876-2 Metheny; Cuong Vu (t, v); Grégoire Maret (hca); Lyle Mays (ky); Steve Rodby (b, clo); Antonio Sanchez (d). 03–04.
The association with Mays now stretches back 25 years and in this setting it's perhaps foolish to expect any kind of departure from a writing team who, by this juncture, have honed their formula to a very fine point. There is a slight shaking-out of excess in the production, but Mays continues to layer quasi-symphonic backdrops for Pat to solo over, while the drummer decorates what is essentially a rock beat. The surprise new name in the line-up is Vu, who's displaced Ledford's funky injections with a more consciously lyrical flow; his solo on 'Proof', the longest track, might almost have come out of Kenny Wheeler's bag. Bona, who makes world music records for Columbia, registers less forcefully.

The Way Up emerges as a four-part, 68-minute epic: blowsy orchestrations, quasi-symphonic hooks, the reassuring rock beat to settle the nerves of his core audience. Maret replaces Bona and adds a smidgeon more interest. As a piece of recording, naturally, it's spectacular.

 Day Trip Nonesuch 376828 Metheny; Christian McBride (b); Antonio Sanchez (d). 10/05.
Understandably, this was leapfrogged in the release schedule by the dates with Mehldau below. Fifteen years ago, this might have sounded like an exciting A&R coup. Thirty years after Pat's debut, it comes across as just another smartly curated studio encounter. To be fair, Pat's writing on things like 'Snova' and the title-track is still nicely nuanced, but the smoothness of the basic conception militates against any improvisational risk or danger and there's not much sense that McBride wants to chance his arm any more.

 Metheny Mehldau /  Quartet Nonesuch 7559 79964/ 79994 Metheny; Brad Mehldau (p); Larry Grenadier (b); Jeff Ballard (d). 12/05.
This was the association everyone wanted to see, but whether any but the already converted will want to hear these mild-mannered stravaigs round the chords more than once is open to question. On the first album, a number of tracks are duos, and it might perversely have been more effective to limit the set to these, wheeling on the quartet for a subsequent gig. Whatever the situation, Mehldau falls back into a version of Mays's approach and rarely produces a statement on either record that compares on any level with his own work. Pat, as ever, continues on his untroubled way: lovely, but curiously empty.

Also, in brief:

() As Falls Witchita, So Falls Witchita Falls ECM 821416-2. 9/80.
Basically a duo situation for Metheny and Mays, with guest Nana Vasconcelos (d, perc, v) adding a little zest.

* Secret Story Geffen GED 24468. 91–92.
Obese with strings and brass and overcooked arrangements, his least tractable set.

 Quartet Geffen GED 24978. 5/96.
Chamberish session by the core of the PMG.

 A Map Of The World Warner Bros 9362-47366-2. N.D.
A soundtrack record, packed with miniatures.

* One Quiet Night Warner Bros 9362-48473-2. 02.
Acoustic solo, and the dullest of all his records.

Nando Michelin (born 1965)

PIANO

A native of Uruguay, Michelin moved to Boston to attend Berklee in 1989. He continues to work in the city, in Brazilian groups and his own post-bop bands.

 Art Double-Time DTRCD-144 Michelin; Jerry Bergonzi (ts); Fernando Huergo (b); Steve Langone (d); Sergio Faluotico (perc). 10/98.
() Chants Double-Time DTRCD-169 As above, except add Alex Alvear, Chiara Civello, Sharine Ganse, Katie Viqueira (v); omit Faluotico. 12/99.
A series of dedications to Matisse, Miro and so forth, Art is suitably cultured post-bop. Bergonzi seems at home in Michelin's thoughtful compositions; 'Portrait', for instance, is a Wayne Shorterish ballad which suits him well. In return the pianist centres the saxophonist's occasional oddities. But the date lacks an individual note or two. If Michelin is bringing something of his background to what he does – in the notes he claims he uses the Uruguayan candomb rhythm 'constantly' – at this point it sounds as if it's been buried under his Berklee training.

Perhaps in response, Chants is a specific essay on his roots, subtitled 'A Candomblé Experience'. Each piece is named after a god of the Candomblé religion, and the vocalists set down the original chant while Michelin and company create music arising out of phrases from the vocal line. If it sounds integrated, in practice it isn't. The jazz and the voices hardly seem to meet in any useful way, except when the individual singers follow Michelin's own lines, which could be any bit of wordless vocalizing. Bergonzi, too, doesn't sound like the right man for the project at all.

The Microscopic Septet

GROUP

Favourites on the New York downtown scene of the '80s, purveying surreal modern swing. Led by Phillip Johnston.

 Seven Men In Neckties: History Of The Micros – Volume 1 Cuneiform RUNE 236/237 2CD Phillip Johnston (ss); Don Davis (as); John Hagen, Danny Nigro, Paul Shapiro (ts); Dave Sewelson (bs); Joel Forrester (p); David Hofstra (b, tba); Richard Dworkin (d). 80–85.

 Surrealistic Swing: History Of The Micros – Volume 2 Cuneiform RUNE 238/239 As above, except add John Zorn (as). 79, 86–90.

As a title, Take The Z Train pretty much sums up the Microscopic approach, tightly arranged ensemble swing built round a reeds-and-rhythm personnel, what Johnston describes in his superb liner-note as a 'brassless little big band' or 'guitarless r'n'b band'. The effect is either avant-garde or retro, depending on your stance, satirical or respectful depending on your prejudices, but it's all immaculately and lovingly played with a humour rarely encountered in modern jazz. Johnston also makes reference to 'legendary bad luck' in record deals. Much of this material has been unavailable for some time, but Cuneiform have come to the rescue. It's a terrific documentation, with brilliant cover art by Art Spiegelman, pulling together Z Train and the 'live in Holland' Let's Flip! on the first volume, which also includes a theme written for Terry Gross's NPR Fresh Air show, with Off Beat Glory, Beauty Based on Science and a couple of tracks featuring very early member John Zorn on the second.

Johnston explains the group's history and philosophy better than anyone else could, but it's fair to say that by being resolutely unfashionable and uncategorizable the Micros caught the spirit of a time, the era of Ronald Reagan and George H. W. Bush, better than anyone.

Palle Mikkelborg (born 1941)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN, COMPOSER

Although he has been a professional since 1960, his playing has now taken a secondary role to composing and conducting, often with big ensembles.

(*) Imagine Storyville STCD 4114 Mikkelborg; Kenneth Knudsen (ky); Niels-Henning Orsted Pedersen (b). 86.

A player of enormous technical capability and lyrical strength, Mikkelborg is one of the few convincing exponents of electric trumpet, which he uses to produce great sheets of harmonic colour against which he dabs acoustic notes of surprising purity. His 'concerto' for Miles Davis's Aura underlined one influence to the apparent exclusion of any other; but he is perhaps closer in conception to Chet Baker and, even on an impressionistic set like Imagine (formerly Heart To Heart) he can sound astonishingly like both Clifford Brown and Howard McGhee. The opening track is pure Miles, though played with a clear, brassy resonance that is his own. Fortunately, perhaps, it doesn't set a tone for the set, which is quite varied in temper, though mainly in a meditative mood. Knudsen's keyboard structures are always highly effective, and NHØP is far better recorded than usual.

(*) The Voice Of Silence Stunt 01042 Mikkelborg; Anders Gustafsson, Benny Rosenfeld, Thomas Kjaergaard, Henrik Bolberg Pedersen, Thomas Fryland (t, flhn); Vincent Nilsson, Steen Hansen, Peter Jensen (tb); Alf Vestergaard (btb); Axel Windfeld (btb, tba); Michael Hove (ss, as, cl); Nicolai Schultz (as, cl, f, af); Tomas Franck (ss, ts, cl); Uffe Markussen (ss, ts, cl); Flemming Madsen (bs, cl, bcl); Helen Davies (hp); Nikolaj Bentzon (p, ky); Anders 'Chico' Lindvall (g); Thomas Ovesen (b); Søren Frost (d); Ethan Weisgard (perc). 3–4/00.

This is Mikkelborg's first major composition for large jazz ensemble since Aura. It was written in homage to the Louisiana Museum Of Modern Art, founded by the wealthy Knud W. Jensen near Humlebaek, north of Copenhagen. The Voice Of Silence is a tribute to a visionary man and the artists he collected. The opening and closing sections are devoted to Jensen himself, the museum and Pablo Picasso. Both 'Prologue' and 'Epilogue' are dominated by flute and harp, evoking the otherworldliness of Louisiana.

Perhaps curiously, the second section is the most substantial, with guitarist Lindvall evoking the self-consciously flimsy throw-away aesthetic of Pop Art. Mikkelborg's musical intuition has never been more clearly expressed than in this deceptive composition. Most of the other tracks are considerably shorter, and mostly built round pairs of solos. The architects and designers of the Bauhaus and the arts of Japan are celebrated in 'Those Who Build', with trombonist Nilsson and percussionist Weisgard taking the lead. Sculptor Alberto Giacometti is the inspiration behind 'The Forest', a strangely bleak and anguished statement from trumpeter Pedersen which none the less manages to project a profound humanism. Another long composition, 'Authenticity' is the most overtly mystical and the most robustly structured, a typical Mikkelborg paradox. The title-track is dedicated to René Magritte and soprano saxophonist Franck manages to evoke the great Surrealist's ability to project both quotidian plainness and deep alienation.

Joakim Milder (born 1965)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Studied at Stockholm Conservatory, then worked with Fredrik Norén and in the Stockholm Jazz Orchestra.

(*) Still In Motion Dragon DRCD 188 Milder; Steve Dobrogosz (p); Christian Spering (b); Rune Carlsson (d). 9/89.

 Ways Dragon DRCD 231 Milder; Lasse Lindgren (flhn); Håkan Nyqvist (frhn); Staffan Mårtensson (cl); Steve Dobrogosz (p); Henrik Frendin (vla); Bertil Strandberg (euph); Christian Spering (b); Rune Carlsson (d); Pétur Östlund (perc); string section. 12/90–8/92.

 Consensus Opus 3 Milder; Johan Horlén (as); Anders Persson (p); Christian Spering (b); Magnus Gran (d). 2/92.
 Remains Dragon DRCD 285 Milder; Steve Dobrogosz (p); Max Schultz (g); Henrik Frendin (vn, vla); Mats Rondin (clo); Christian Spering (b); Pétur Östlund (perc). 10/94–3/95.
Milder sounded like one of the most adventurous and least conformist of players to emerge from the Swedish scene in the '80s. As an improviser he eschews both easy licks and long, heavily elaborate lines, preferring a scratchy tone to the open-voiced timbre of most tenor-players and fragmenting his lines with silences, rushes and retards, anything he can think of that varies the attack. Yet there is Rollins-like logic to some of his melodic paths, and on some standards he keeps the sense of the song to hand even as he takes it crabbily apart. The all-original Still In Motion was a tiny disappointment after the memorable debut LP, Life In Life, which is still unavailable on CD; a more unified but fractionally less compelling session, since nothing quite aspires to the interplay with Palle Danielsson and Carlsson on the earlier set. Ways is an album of low-key, chamber-like music, a distraction for those more interested in Milder's straight-ahead saxophone. The 11 originals are directed by their textural and tonal qualities rather than by anything rhythmic, and only 'Apart' and 'Where Do Pies Go When They Die' push Milder into his most effective improvising form. Otherwise it's the contrasting brass and string sections that drive the content: lyrical and desolate in the almost typecast manner of Scandinavian jazz. Remains is distilled from woodwind, piano and strings; it is bountiful in terms of texture and variation, but not terribly vital to listen to. A theme like 'Simply Drift' shows how skilled Milder has become at fashioning themes out of fragments (and harmonic hooks), but his own playing here sounds relatively becalmed.

Consensus was a rare '90s foray away from Dragon. It's a standards-dominated set, but given presence by a wise and sparing use of Horlén and continual varying of the group in other ways. No outstanding performances; just a very satisfying jazz record.

(*) Epilogue Mirrors MICD 007 Milder; Bobo Stenson (p); Palle Danielsson (b); Fredrik Norén (d). 1/97–1/98.
(*) Associations Mirrors MICD 009 Milder; Christian Spering (b); Fredrik Norén (d). 8/00.
Epilogue puts him at the head of a quartet of elders playing the music of Börje Fredriksson. There's the odd trace of impressionism (as on 'Epilogue II'), but much of this is plainly cast and asks the players to work through gritty and deceptively demanding material.

He's never a player to collar the attention, and some may wonder if a gathering of nine standards and jazz themes, given an unfussy and at times introverted delivery, is really going to compel the interest. But Associations draws the listener in. It helps that Spering is a very alert and creative part of the music, almost constantly in dialogue with Milder on melodic as well as rhythmical levels, and that old pro Norén is in good heart. It's Milder's playing, though, which attracts the ear, as if he was asking us to help him puzzle out the route to the heart of material such as J. J. Johnson's 'Lament'.

 Silent Room Apart APCD 001 Milder; Mats Äleklint (tb); Nils Ölmedal (b); Jon Fält (d). 11/02.
(*) Monolithic Apart APCD 002 Milder; Staffan Svensson (t); Peter Dahlgren (tb); Mattias Ståhl (vib); Christian Spering (b); Peter Danemo (d). 11/02–5/03.
Considering the tumult which often comes out of the Glenn Miller Café, the appositely titled Silent Room, recorded live there, seems like an anomaly. Bar one original, it's all Monk and Coleman tunes, sometimes played as ghostly laments: sample the very slow 'Sadness'. Given the lugubrious trombone–tenor tonality and the pianoless sound, it all has a skeletal, almost parched quality to it. Milder's admirers will warm to it anyway, but this probably isn't the place to start listening to him.

Monolithic is calm, detailed, but coiled too – the horns seem always about to burst into some unfettered sequence of blowing, but something in the 13-section structure holds them in. Again, Milder trades in sombre tonalities and pastel shadings, but there's much tension in the music.

Ron Miles (born 1963)

TRUMPET

Born in Indianapolis, he studied in Colorado before working with the Mercer-led Ellington orchestra.

(*) Heaven Sterling Circle SCS 151 Miles; Bill Frisell (g). 01.
The simple elegance of the playing, drily recorded, falls so sweetly on the ear it's hard to resist. There's an almost busking plainness to the likes of 'Coward Of The County', but once they get to 'We See', Ellington's 'Heaven' and Morton's 'King Porter Stomp', the manners of jazz repertory impose a discipline which puts them on their mettle. It's still a superb simulation of a back-porch conversation, and we can worry about authenticity later.

 Laughing Barrel Sterling Circle 5C1219 Miles; Brandon Ross (g); Anthony Cox (b); Rudy Royston (d). 9/02.
Here Miles is working with a new group which seems ideally sensitive to his needs. Cox and Ross are Cox-and-Box from the opening phrases of 'Parade' and on 'Psychedelic Black Man' they push Miles out into new territory, a remarkable performance. 'Sunday Best' is very similar to the work Miles did with Bill Frisell, particularly since the guitar part has a jangle between banjo and National Steel.

 Stone/Blossom Sterling Circle SC1513 2CD Miles; Erik Deutsch, Eric Gunnison (p); Eric Moon (org, acc, ky); Roger Green (g); Kent McLagan (b); Rudy Royston (d). 10/06.
Two different groups here: a straightforward acoustic quartet with Gunnison, McLagan and Royston for the Stone half of the package, the more varied ensemble for the rest. It's a sensible hedge, because the busier, thicker sound of the sextet doesn't immediately suite Miles's familiar approach and it takes some getting used to. However, 'Gethsemane' and 'Sleepyhead' on Blossom are among the trumpeter's (strictly cornetist's on this disc) best recorded performances.

Harry Miller (1941–83)

DOUBLE BASS

Much-missed, he was the anchorman of the British free-jazz scene in the '70s. Born in Johannesburg, he came to London at the age of 20 and joined drummer Don Brown's Sounds Five. He died in a car accident in the Netherlands.

 The Collection Ogun HMCD 1/2/3 3CD Miller; Marc Charig (c, ahn); Malcolm Griffiths, Radu Malfatti, Wolter Wierbos (tb); Mike Osborne (as); Trevor Watts (ss, as); Willem Breuker (ts, bcl); Sean Bergin (ts); Keith Tippett (p); Louis Moholo (d); Julie Tippetts (v). 74–3/83.

 Which Way Now Cuneiform RUNE 233 Miller; Mongezi Feza (t); Nick Evans (tb); Mike Osborne (as); Keith Tippett (p); Louis Moholo (d). 11/75.

Harry Miller was an inspirational presence wherever he played, a musician who spoke entirely in his own voice, and with a quiet passion. The gentleness of his solo bass on Children At Play was perfectly at ease with the rhythmic intensity of his section-work on group albums like Down South or Family Affair, which he made with his group, Isipingo. Most of his records as leader were released on the label he helped found, and The Collection has been put together with loving care by Hazel Miller and John Jack, keepers of the flame. In addition to the three albums already mentioned, the set includes Bracknell Breakdown, a set of duets with trombonist Radu Malfatti, and In Conference, with the two-saxophone front line of Trevor Watts and Willem Breuker. The box also includes a booklet of photographs and the memories of friends and fellow players.

The best measure of Harry's gifts can be had from the solo record, which has overdubbed flute and percussion parts, played over a rolling township beat that conveyed Harry's profound immersion in the musics of his native country. As with many of the South African exiles who came to Britain in the '60s, he found the transition from settled grooves to free music perfectly congenial, and his out-of-tempo work on Bracknell Breakdown and Down South (made during the last year of his life and the only record not released on Ogun) is suggestive of a player who worked to a deeper, inner rhythm. He always had a special understanding with trombonists, perhaps drawn to that low, vocalized tonality, and some of his best work was in the company of Malfatti, Wierbos and Griffiths.

Harry was often so busy that he had little time for his own projects; however, he did establish one extraordinary band. On its day, Isipingo was one of the most incendiary and compelling bands around and Which Way Now, taken from a 1975 radio broadcast, is a compelling experience in terrific sound. 'Aitchy' lives.

Mulgrew Miller (born 1955)

PIANO

Born in Greenwood, Maine. He emerged as a major pianist in the '80s, following stints with Woody Shaw, the Ellington Orchestra and the Jazz Messengers.

 The Sequel Max Jazz MXJ 204 Miller; Duane Eubanks (t); Steve Wilson (ss, ts); Steve Nelson (vib); Richie Goods (b); Karriem Riggins (d). 9/02.

(*) Live At Yoshi's: Volumes 1 & 2 MaxJazz MXJ 208 / 212 Miller; Derrick Hodge (b); Karriem Riggins (d). 03.

(*) Live At Kennedy Center: Volumes 1 & 2 MaxJazz MXJ 217 / 219 Miller; Derrick Hodge (b); Rodney Green (d). 9/02.

Miller hadn't recorded under his own name since 1995, a self-imposed decision that saw him concentrate on sideman duties but in no way temper his hyperactive output. The Sequel reunites him with his 'Wingspan' group. Rather than retread work from that session he has written a hatful of new pieces, all of which sound very much of a piece with the work of the '90s. 'Go East, Young Man' is a bright and breezy opening, based on familiar chords, but unfamiliarly deployed. 'The Sequel' is every bit as good, but it's 'Know Wonder', a vaguely Middle Eastern idea conceived as a feature for Steve Wilson, that stands out. It's nice to welcome the big man back, even though he hardly seems to have been away.

The Kennedy Center material was only released after the Yoshi's tapes. It's easy to see why the club date was preferred. The music's lighter and more limber and the trio works together with greater facility and confidence. Miller favours a contemporary bop idiom with some impressively co-ordinated standard and repertory themes. Enough for two discs? Not from Kennedy, though the Yoshi's albums underscore Miller's niche: as the utterly dependable, heavyweight pianist destined to succeed Kenny Barron and John Hicks in the American piano lineage. There's little in his work which can be counted as surprising, but it's his satisfying and almost invincible variations on the mainstream post-bop language which sustain such music-making.

Punch Miller (1894–1971)

TRUMPET, VOICE

Made an early name with Kid Ory in New Orleans, then worked in Chicago and New York in the '20s and '30s, before moving in revivalist circles. He was still playing in his flashy, almost defiant style in the last year of his life, including a last appearance at the Newport Jazz Festival.

 Prelude To The Revival Volume 1 American Music AMCD-40 Miller; Richard Harris (p, v); Clifford 'Snag' Jones (d). 1/41.

(*) Punch Miller's New Orleans Band 1957 504 CD 34 Miller; Eddie Morris (tb); Simon Frazier (p); Ricard Alexis (b); Bill Bagley (d). 3/57.

 1960 American Music AMCD-52 Miller; Eddie Morris (tb); Captain John Handy (cl); Louis Gallaud (p); Emanuel Sayles (bj); Sylvester Handy (b); Alex Bigard (d). 7/60.

 Punch Miller And Louis Gallaud American Music AMCD-68 As above, except omit Morris, Handy, Handy, Bigard; add Emanuel Paul (cl). 5–7/61.

The five tracks featuring Miller on the first disc offer a glimpse of a fine New Orleans hornman (Punch wasn't a native, but he is closely associated with its music) in mid-life, following plenty of sideman appearances in the '20s. His quick-fingered lines and excitable attack are unencumbered by other horns on these rough but listenable recordings, made at the H&T Tavern in Chicago.

It's hard to know how good a player Miller really was: he wasn't recorded very often in what should have been his prime, and by the time of the later sessions he was clearly wavering. The 504 CD is part of their 'Larry Borenstein Collection' and is probably the best of these, though that's not saying all that much: cobwebby sound, Frazier mostly almost inaudible, and Morris, not much of a soloist, taking a lot of solos. But the rhythm players set a hearty pace and Miller's best solos have much of his showmanship in good order.

The 1960 disc suffers from a somewhat chaotic personnel – John Handy was unused to playing clarinet, Miller struggles at the often too-fast tempos, and Morris drifts in and out of focus – and a pinched, dry sound. The last disc sounds better, but Gallaud's stentorian piano is a lumbering partner for Punch – he sounds better in the oddball duet with Sayles, 'I Never Had A Chance' – and the trumpeter veers between lovely singing notes and fumbling lines that are barely linked together.

Dave Milligan

PIANO

Fine Scottish player, recently eclipsed by Brian Kellock, but still a formidable presence.

 Late Show Caber CD 030 Milligan; Tom Lyne (b); Tom Bancroft (d). 02.

Fine debut showing from a band who're as seasoned and case-hardened as Inspector Rebus. Milligan's influences are increasingly hard to separate out. His attack is vigorous and his solos – notably on 'Tom, Tom, Tom' and 'Boiler Man' – are pungent and accurately played. Nice group sound on the record and sterling work as ever from label boss Bancroft.

Lucky Millinder (1900–66)

BANDLEADER, VOICE

Grew up in Chicago and had all kinds of showbiz jobs – including fortune-telling – before fronting bands. Made his own records, 1942–52, and later worked in the alcoholic-drinks business.

 Lucky Millinder 1941–1942 Classics 712 Millinder; William Scott, Archie Johnson, Nelson Bryant, Freddy Webster, Dizzy Gillespie (t); George Stevenson, Eli Robinson, Donald Cole, Floyd Brady, Edward Morant, Sandy Williams, Joe Britton (tb); Bill Bowen, George James, Ted Barnett, Tab Smith (as); Buster Bailey (cl, ts); Stafford Simon, Dave Young (ts); Ernest Purce (bs); Bill Doggett, Clyde Hart (p); Trevor Bacon, Sister Rosetta Tharpe (g, v); Sterling Marlowe (g); Abe Bolar, George Duvivier, Nick Fenton (b); Panama Francis (d). 6/41–6/42.

 Lucky Millinder 1943–1947 Classics 1026 Millinder; Joe Guy, Frank Humphries, Joe Jordan, Chiefie Scott, Curtis Murphy, Leroy Elton Hill, Lamar Wright, Henry Glover, Thomas 'Sleepy' Grider, Archie Johnson, John Bello, Harold 'Money' Johnson, Leon Meriam (t); Joe Britton, Gene Simon, George Stevenson, Alfred Cobbs, Money Johnson, Frank Mazzoli (tb); Billy Bowen, Tab Smith, Preston Love, Bill Swindell, Burnie Peacock, John Harrington, Sam Hopkins, Big Nick Nicholas (as); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Michael Hadley, Sam 'The Man' Taylor, Bull Moose Jackson, Elmer Williams (ts); Ernest Purce (bs); Ray Tunia, Ellis Larkins, Bill Doggett, Sir Charles Thompson (p); Trevor Bacon (g, v); Lawrence Lucie, Bernard McKey (g); George Duvivier, Beverly Peer, Al McKibbon, Jerry Cox (b); Panama Francis (d); Sister Rosetta Tharpe, Wynonie Harris, Judy Carol, Leon Ketchum, The Lucky Seven, The Lucky Four, Annisteen Allen, Paul Breckenridge (v). 8/43–4/47.

Millinder's sessions for Decca (there are a scant four titles for V-Disc on Classics 1026) are energetic but middleweight titles which the occasional bright solo brings to life. Much of it yearns to be slimmed down to R&B small-band size, and Millinder's use of vocalists such as Rosetta Tharpe and Wynonie Harris – as well as instrumentalists like Sam Taylor, Bull Moose Jackson and Bill Doggett – tells its own story about the direction of the music. A solitary date right at the end of Classics 712 hints at a different direction: Dizzy Gillespie is in the band, and there's a spirited version of 'Little John Special' (alias 'Salt Peanuts'). But that was a moment of madness in the Millinder story. He sings here and there, but otherwise his great contribution – an almost maniacal energy in directing the band onstage – has been lost to posterity. These discs pall over the long haul, but in small doses they're a worthwhile reminder of a staple part of black music in the early '40s.

Mills Blue Rhythm Band

GROUP

One of the major Harlem orchestras of the '30s. Impresario Irving Mills took over the original band in 1930, but it subsequently had several different leaders, including Harry White, Edgar Hayes, Baron Lee and Lucky Millinder.

 Blue Rhythm /  Mills Blue Rhythm Band 1931 Hep CD 1008 / Classics 660 Wardell Jones, Shelton Hemphill, Ed Anderson (t); Harry White, Henry Hicks (tb); Crawford Wethington (cl, as, bs); Charlie Holmes (cl, as); Ted McCord, Castor McCord (cl, ts); Edgar Hayes (p); Benny James (bj, g); Hayes Alvis (bb, b); Willie Lynch (d); Dick Robertson, Chick Bullock, George Morton (v). 1–6/31.

(*) Rhythm Spasm /  Mills Blue Rhythm Band 1931–1932 Hep CD 1015 / Classics 676 As above, except add George Washington (tb); Gene Mikell (cl, as); Joe Garland (cl, ts, bs); O'Neil Spencer (d); Billy Banks (v). 8/31–8/32; 7/31–9/32.

* Mills Blue Rhythm Band 1933–1934 Classics 686 Wardell Jones, Shelton Hemphill, Ed Anderson, Eddie Mallory, Henry 'Red' Allen (t); George Washington, Henry Hicks, J. C. Higginbotham (tb); Crawford Wethington, Gene Mikell, Joe Garland, Buster Bailey (reeds); Edgar Hayes (p); Benny James (bj, g); Lawrence Lucie (g); Hayes Alvis, Elmer James (b); O'Neil Spencer (d); Lucky Millinder, Chuck Richards, Adelaide Hall (v). 3/33–11/34.

(*) Mills Blue Rhythm Band 1935–1936 Classics 710 As above, except omit Anderson, Mallory, Hicks, James, Alvis; add Tab Smith (cl, as). 1/35–8/36.

Although it lacked any solo stars in its early years, the Mills Blue Rhythm Band was a very hot outfit when the first of these records were made, even though it was originally used by its boss, Irving Mills, as a substitute band for either Ellington or Calloway. The lack of a regular front-man and a rag-tag sequence of arrangers prevented the band from ever establishing a very clear identity, but it still mustered a kind of fighting collectivism which comes through clearly on its best records. Cover versions of Ellington ('Black And Tan Fantasy') and Calloway ('Minnie The Moocher') reveal what the band's purpose was to start with, and the most interesting thing about the earlier tracks is usually the soloists' role, particularly the impassioned and badly undervalued trumpeter, Ed Anderson. But by the time the music on Rhythm Spasm was made, the band was energizing itself in splendid charts such as 'The Growl' and the overwhelmingly swinging 'White Lightning', which reveals the dynamism of Hayes Alvis and O'Neil Spencer in the rhythm section. There are some cringingly awful vocals from such experts as Billy Banks and Chick Bullock, but those used to music of the period will know what to expect. John R. T. Davies remasters with his usual care and attentiveness to the music on the Hep discs.

The 1933–6 material shows a steady if unspectacular growth, the personnel remaining surprisingly stable over the period, although the arrival of Henry Allen, Buster Bailey and J. C. Higginbotham, all from Fletcher Henderson's band, gave the orchestra a new team of star soloists. Classics 686 is one of the best of the series, with swinging scores in 'Kokey Joe', 'The Growl', the terrific 'The Stuff Is Here (And It's Mellow)' and Allen's debut with 'Swingin' In E Flat'. There is also Adelaide Hall's extraordinary treatment of Ellington's 'Drop Me Off In Harlem', although the Classics remastering seems to be faulty here. There are more vital pieces on the next disc – the superb 'Harlem Heat' is one of Will Hudson's best scores, and 'Cotton', 'Truckin'' and 'Congo Caravan' aren't far behind – but the occasional show of routine and Chuck Richards's consistently unappealing vocals let matters down.

Pino Minafra (born 1951)

TRUMPET, BUGLE, DIDJERIDU, OCARINA, PERCUSSION, VOCAL, ETC.

Italian brass player whose range spans post-bop, orchestral work and entirely free improvisation.

 Noci ... Strani Frutti Leo LRCD 176 Minafra; Ernst Reijseger (clo); Han Bennink (d). 7/90.
* Sudori Victo CD034 Minafra; Lauro Rossi (tb, perc, v); Carlo Actis Dato (ts, bs, perc, v); Giorgio Occhipinti (ky, perc, v); Daniele Patumi (perc); Vincenzo Mazzone (d). 1/95.
Look out: genius at work. Minafra's early LPs for Splasc(h) were enjoyable post-bop outings of a comparatively conventional bent, but these are something else. The Leo disc catches him on the hoof at a late-night festival set with Reijseger and Bennink: his confiding, sputtering sound reminds one at different moments of Miles Davis, Ted Curson and Donald Ayler; but it's a very personal manner, and it fits well over the tumbling dialogue of the other two. Forty-five minutes of strong improvisation.

Sudori is entirely different. Meticulously arranged yet spontaneously exciting, Minafra's Sud Ensemble must be among the smartest outfits in European jazz today. With daredevil spirits like Dato and Rossi on hand, matters could have descended into chaos, given Minafra's own taste for excitement. Yet everything is perfectly realized, from the mounting movie-score drama of 'Exorcism' to the astonishing blues fantasy of 'Au Fond Je Suis Un Africain Du Nord'. The ensemble playing is as impeccable as the solos are rich and detailed, and in meltingly beautiful pieces like the gorgeous 'Tango', dedicated to Federico Fellini, one can hardly credit that this is the same band responsible for the uproarious stuff. A major piece of work that deserves the widest attention.

 Canto Libero Victo 077 Minafra; Sandro Satta(as); Giorgio Occhipinti (p); Vincenzo Mazzone (d). 3/00.
Minafra's Banlieues Blues Quartet, captured at that festival (in Paris) in 2000. Four of the six pieces are entirely free, and only the first and last have sketched-out melodies by Minafra. He describes it as a refreshing change in his notes, after the stricter environments he's been working in, but with so little of the Sud Ensemble on record it's a bit frustrating for us listeners. As a free-ish blow, not bad, though some of it seems like inappropriate showboating (especially the 'Night In Tunisia' episode). A stop-gap till we hear some of Minafra's more substantial music. And we're growing impatient!

Dom Minasi (born 1943)

GUITAR

A New Yorker whose appearances on record are rare, Minasi plays electric guitar with a semi-acoustic sound on this 'comeback' session.

(*) Finishing Touches CIMP 196 Minasi; Michael Bocchicchio (b); Jay Rosen (d). 2/99.
A strange one. This is Minasi's return to recording after a hiatus of some 25 years: he cut a couple of lite-jazz albums in the twilight stages of Blue Note's Liberty period, but has done nothing visible since. He plays these open-ended pieces with dexterity and spirit, but his rather shapeless style suggests that fundamentally he wants to play pretty and is awkward with the wilder leanings which this setting encourages. His thin, light tone shies away from any effects and he sometimes sounds a bit intimidated by loud bass and drums. The record is far too long and is interesting as an unvarnished block of music, but it's scarcely a cogent statement.

Charles Mingus (1922–79)

DOUBLE BASS, PIANO, COMPOSER

He was born in Nogales, Arizona, and grew up in the Watts district of LA. After learning cello and trombone, he took to double bass and started to write a workbook of compositions and develop a workshop approach that would continue through his life. Worked with vibist Red Norvo and then became involved in bebop. A turbulent and difficult man, he none the less proselytized tirelessly for 'jazz' (he disliked the term) and for his own large-scale work, founding Debut Records and the Jazz Artists Guild in opposition to commercialization.

 West Coast: 1945–1949 /  Complete 1945–1949 West Coast Recordings Uptown 2748 / Jazz Factory 22825 Mingus; John Anderson, Buddy Childers, Hobart Dotson, John Coppola, Karl George, Eddie Preston (t); Henry Coker, Jimmy Knepper, Britt Woodman (tb); Jewell L. Grant, Art Pepper (as, cl); Willie Smith (as); Eric Dolphy (as, cl, f); Maxwell Davis, Don Smith, Lucky Thompson (ts); William Woodman Jr (ts, bs); Gene Porter (bs, cl); Wilbert Barranco, Jimmy Bunn, Russ Freeman, Don Trenner, Richard Wyands (p); Red Callender (b); Roy Porter, Chuck Thompson, Cal Tjader, Lee Young (d); Helen Carr, Claude Trenier (v). 45–49.
Credited to Charles 'Baron' Mingus, the Uptown compilation of early sides needs a bit of work before the bassist's personality shines through. There are some extraordinary bass breaks and introductions, notably on Helen Carr's 'Say It Isn't So', and there is a fantastic solo on 'Mingus Fingers'. There are early chances to hear Eric Dolphy (though not as a soloist) in the Roy Porter band and a precocious composition in 'The Story Of Love', a tiny big-band arrangement that encapsulates much of what was to come in future years. For the most part, though, this is a specialist's record and won't contain much that will appeal to the more casual listener. There are more wonders to come later in the story.

The Jazz Factory option is probably more widely available now and worth a look if you're interested in the man and his later work. 'Weird Nightmare' and 'Shuffle Bass Boogie' are both here and first signs of the important stuff that was to follow.

* The Complete Debut Recordings Debut 12DCD 4402 12CD *Mingus; Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie, Louis Mucci, Thad Jones, Clarence Shaw (t); Eddie Bert, Willie Dennis, Bennie Green, J. J. Johnson, Jimmy Knepper, Kai Winding, Britt Woodman (tb); Julius Watkins (frhn); Charlie Parker, Lee Konitz, Joe Maini (as); Paige Brook, Eddie Caine (as, f); George Barrow, Phil Urso (ts); Frank Wess, Shafi Hadi, Teo Macero (ts, f); Danny Bank, Pepper Adams (bs); John LaPorta, Julius Baker (woodwinds); Spaulding Givens, Hank Jones, Wynton Kelly, Wade Legge, John Lewis, John Mehegan, Phyllis Pinkerton, Bill Triglia, Mal Waldron, Hazel

Scott (p); Teddy Charles (vib); George Koutzen, Jackson Wiley (clo); Fred Zimmerman (b); Elvin Jones, Kenny Clarke, Al Levitt, Joe Morello, Dannie Richmond, Max Roach, Art Taylor (d); Phineas Newborn Jr, Horace Parlan (perc); Bob Benton, George Gordon, George Gordon Jr, Honey Gordon, Richard Gordon, Jackie Paris (v). 4/51–9/57.

 Debut Rarities: Volume 1 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1807 Mingus; Ernie Royal (t); Willie Dennis, Jimmy Knepper (tb); Joe Maini (as); Eddie Caine (as, f); Teo Macero (ts, f); John Lewis, Bill Triglia (p); Jackson Wiley (clo); Kenny Clarke, Dannie Richmond (d). 10/53, 6/57.

(*) Debut Rarities: Volume 2 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1808 Mingus; Spaulding Givens (p); Max Roach (d). 4/51, 4/53.

 Debut Rarities: Volume 3 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1821 Mingus; Clarence Shaw (t); Shafi Hadi (as, f); Pepper Adams (bs); Wade Legge, Wynton Kelly (p); Henry Grimes (b); Dannie Richmond (d). 9?/57.

(*) Debut Rarities: Volume 4 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1829 Mingus; Lee Konitz (as); Paige Brook (as, f); John Mehegan, Hank Jones, Phyllis Pinkerton (p); George Koutzen, Jackson Wiley (clo); Al Levitt, Max Roach (d); Bob Benton, Jackie Paris, The Gordons (v). 4/52, 4/53.

(*) Jazzical Moods Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1857 / Fresh Sound FSCD 62 Mingus; Thad Jones (t); John LaPorta (cl, as); Teo Macero (ts, bs); Jackson Wiley (clo); Clem De Rosa (d). 12/54.

 Complete Savoy And Period Master Takes Fresh Sound FSRCD 391 As above, except add George Barrow (ts, bs); Mal Waldron (p); Jackson Wiley (clo); Rudy Nichols (d). 10 & 12/54.

In addition to pioneering modern bass-playing, Mingus is responsible for some of the greatest large-scale compositions in modern jazz. Mingus also transformed the conception of collective improvisation, restoring the energies and occasionally the sound of early jazz to an identifiably modern idiom. He pioneered overdubbing and editing, thereby paving the way for Miles Davis and Teo Macero, who appears on these curiously lifeless, virtually identical compilations from two albums recorded for Period.

These can really only be mined for pointers to more impressive work later. 'Four Hands' experiments with overdubbed piano, and there are out-of-tempo sections that anticipate later, more radical experiments. 'What Is This Thing Called Love' undergoes interesting transformations, in keeping with Mingus's palimpsest approach to standards and new composition, and the use of cello (one of Mingus's first instruments) is intriguing. The problem lies in the playing. Macero – later to achieve his apotheosis as producer/arranger for Miles Davis – is unpalatably dry, and the drummer tackles his part with no discernible enthusiasm. Jazzical Moods and the overlapping Jazz Experiments (which was formerly issued under the name Abstractions) also contain Macero's Third Streamish 'Abstractions', but that's a fairly minor plus. For serious Mingus scholars only.

The inevitably pricey Debut set, which covers the period 1951–7, is a completist's dream. The musician-owned Debut was started by Mingus and Max Roach as a way of getting their own adventurous music recorded, and it was briefly influential. With nearly 170 individual tracks under 19 nominal leaderships, and including many alternative takes, it's an exhaustive and occasionally exhausting compilation, well out of the range and probable requirements of the average fan, who may have some of the material elsewhere. One example might well be Mingus's own tape-recording of the famous Massey Hall, Toronto, 'Quintet Of The Year' gig of 15 May 1953, and it's good to know that even some of the lesser material remains in circulation. The four Rarities abstracts may well be enough for most people, particularly those who have other, more accessible stuff on LP. The duos with Givens on Volume 2 are well worth dusting down, as are the 1957 Workshop pieces on Volume 4, which point the way forward to Mingus's '60s masterpieces..

The Fresh Sound is in a limited edition, but Jazzical Moods, co-led with LaPorta, offers much of the same material.

 Mingus At The Bohemia /  Plus Max Roach Original Jazz Classics OJC 045 / 440 Mingus; Eddie Bert (tb); George Barrow (ts); Mal Waldron (p); Willie Jones, Max Roach (d). 12/55.

The Jazz Workshop in fine, searching form. The opening theme on At The Bohemia is a Monk dedication (with Waldron re-creating an authentic cadence) that underlines Mingus's increasing emphasis on the rhythm section as a proactive element in improvisation. 'Septemberly' is a characteristic hybrid of 'Tenderly' and 'September In The Rain', and 'Percussion Discussion' a duet between Mingus, on bass and cello, and Max Roach, just one of a long line of challenging duos set up by or for the great drummer. The rest of the material from this session was issued on a Prestige album called simply Charles Mingus.

[redacted]

* Pithecanthropus Erectus

Atlantic 81227 5357-2 Mingus; Jackie McLean (as); J. R. Monterose (ts); Mal Waldron (p); Willie Jones (d). 1/56.

One of the truly great modern jazz albums. Underrated at the time, Pithecanthropus Erectus is now recognized as an important step in the direction of a new, freer synthesis in jazz. To some extent, the basic thematic conception (the story of humankind's struggle out of chaos, up and down the Freytag's Triangle of hubris and destruction, back to chaos) was the watered-down Spenglerism which was still fashionable at the time. Technically, though, the all-in ensemble work on the violent C section, which is really B, a modified version of the harmonically static second section, was absolutely crucial to the development of free collective improvisation in the following decade. The brief 'Profile Of Jackie' is altogether different. Fronted by McLean's menthol-sharp alto, with Monterose (a late appointee who wasn't altogether happy with the music) and Mingus working on a shadowy counter-melody, it's one of the most appealing tracks Mingus ever committed to record, and the most generous of his 'portraits'. McLean still carried a torch for orthodox bebop and soon came to (literal) blows with Mingus; the chemistry worked just long enough. 'Love Chant' is a more basic modal exploration, and 'A Foggy Day' – re-subtitled 'In San Francisco' – is an impressionistic reworking of the Gershwin standard, with Chandleresque sound-effects. Superficially jokey, it's no less significant an effort to expand the available range of jazz performance, and the fact that it's done via a standard rather than a long-form composition like 'Pithecanthropus' gives a sense of Mingus's Janus-faced approach to the music.

(*) Tijuana Moods Complete RCA Victor 74321 74999-2 Mingus; Clarence Shaw (t); Jimmy Knepper (tb); Shafi Hadi (as); Bill Triglia (p); Dannie Richmond (d); Frankie Dunlop (perc); Ysabel Morel (castanets); Lonnie Elder (v). 7 & 8/57.

Tijuana Moods Complete combines the original release with the complete (that is, unedited) performances from which the label not always successfully spliced together LP-length tracks. 'Ysabel's Table Dance'/'Tijuana Table Dance' is the classic track, with Mingus's structures constantly erupting into group improvisations. Nothing else quite compares, though 'Dizzy Mood' is also very fine, and 'Los Mariachos' is an impressive piece of writing. There is inevitably a bit more room on the longer versions for the soloists to stretch out; but, apart from that, most seasoned listeners will probably still want to cue the original releases on their CD players rather than the restored versions. What Tijuana Moods called for was better editing, not no editing.

 Mingus Three/Trio Blue Note 57155 Mingus; Hampton Hawes (p); Dannie Richmond (d). 7/57.

A mostly standards set, apart from Charles's 'Dizzy Moods' and 'Back Home Blues' and Hawes's 'Hamp's New Blues', this gives extensive solo space to the bassist as well as the piano-player. It feels like a fairly routine date for all three, and there's no obvious attempt to polish the performances or try anything out of the ordinary.

(*) Jazz Portraits: Mingus In Wonderland Blue Note 827325 Mingus; John Handy (as); Booker Ervin (ts); Richard Wyands (p); Dannie Richmond (d). 1/59.

Mingus's appearance as part of the Nonagon Art Gallery Composers' Showcase series in 1959 was a significant moment of recognition for a man whose life was passed in resistance to the 'jazz musician' tag. Previous composers showcased there had been Virgil Thomson, Aaron Copland and Carlos Chavez, and in addition there had been notable appearances by the MJQ and Cecil Taylor.

Mingus was working with something of a scratch band, so more emphasis than usual fell on his bass-playing, which is consistently marvellous from the opening moody strains of 'Nostalgia In Times Square', written as part of the soundtrack to John Cassavetes's movie Shadows, to the closing 'Alice's Wonderland', which gave the record its original title. 'I Can't Get Started' had become one of his favourite standards, indeed the only non-original that seemed to fire him up to the heights of invention audible here, fiery double-stops and intense lyrical passages alternating with softer, almost guitar-like strums.

(*) Blues And Roots Warner Jazz 8122-73617-2 Mingus; Willie Dennis, Jimmy Knepper (tb); John Handy, Jackie McLean (as); Booker Ervin (ts); Pepper Adams (bs); Horace Parlan, Mal Waldron (p); Dannie Richmond (d). 2/59.

♛ * Mingus Ah Um Columbia CK 65512 As above, except omit Waldron, McLean; add Shafi Hadi (ts). 5/59.

A classic period. This was the point where, rising 40 and aware of the encroachment of younger and perhaps more accommodating musicians, he began to show his absolute understanding of the African-American musical tradition. Ah Um is an extended tribute to ancestors, cemented by the gospellish 'Better Git It In Your Soul', a mood that is also present on Blues And Roots with the well-loved 'Wednesday Night Prayer Meeting' in its doubled-up 6/4 time. Everything here has its place. The shouts and yells, the magnificently harmonized ostinati which fuel 'Tensions' and the almost jolly swing of 'My Jelly Roll Soul' (Blues And Roots), the often obvious edits and obsessive recycling of his own previous output all contribute to records which are entire unto themselves and hard to fault on any count. The latest (digipack) reissue of Blues And Roots, however, contains four alternative tracks, perfectly viable performances in their own right, albeit lacking the indefinable dramatic tension of the release versions.

 Mingus Dynasty Columbia CK 65513 Mingus; Don Ellis, Richard Williams (t); Jimmy Knepper (tb); Jerome Richardson (f, bs); John Handy (as); Booker Ervin, Benny Golson (ts); Teddy Charles (vib); Sir Roland Hanna, Nico Bunink (p); Maurice Brown, Seymour Barab (clo); Dannie Richmond (d); Honey Gordon (v). 11/59.

Often thought to refer to a posthumous album, the title's a pretty obvious pun. It wraps up a period of activity that seems to catch Mingus in mid-mood-swing between fired up and confident and way down low. 'Strollin'' is a version of 'Nostalgia In Times Square' and the music written for the (mostly improvised) John Cassavetes film Shadows, in which jazz almost takes the place of orderly narrative dialogue. There is also a version of 'Gunslinging Bird', a take each of 'Song With Orange', 'Far Wells, Mill Valley', 'Slop' and, memorably, 'Mood Indigo'. As with so many other Mingus albums, this is somehow better and more coherent than it ought to be. Though not intended to be put together in this form, it works as an entity, and one wouldn't want the original sessions to be reconstructed in any other way.

 Pre-Bird Verve 538636-2 Mingus; Marcus Belgrave, Ted Curson, Hobart Dotson, Clark Terry, Richard Williams (t); Eddie Bert, Charles Greenlee, Slide Hampton, Jimmy Knepper (tb); Don Butterfield (tba); Robert DiDomenica (f); Harry Schulman (ob); Eric Dolphy (as, bcl, f); John LaPorta (as, cl); Yusef Lateef (ts, f); Bill Barron, Booker Ervin (ts); Jake Hanna (p); Dannie Richmond (d). 60.

 Mingus Revisited Emarcy 826 496 As above, except add Danny Bank, Charles Greenlee (tb), Don Butterfield (tba), Joe Farrell (woodwinds), Paul Bley, Sir Roland Hanna (p), Charles McCracken (clo), Sticks Evans, George Scott (d, perc), Lorraine Cousins (v). 5/60.

Mingus Revisited was originally released as Pre-Bird in 1960, before being reissued by the Limelight label five years later with a liner-note by Leonard Feather. With the exception of 'Half-Mast Inhibition', a piece written by Mingus when he was just 18, conducted by Gunter Schuller, all the material is in short-song form, opening with a strikingly original sandwich of 'Take The "A" Train' and Dorothy Fields's 'Exactly Like You' and continuing later with another Ducal interpolation, 'I Let A Song Go Out Of My Heart' amidst 'Do Nothing Till You Hear From Me'; this is a record that puts all its emphasis on ensemble playing rather than extended soloing. Verve have now reissued the original session as it was intended to be heard, though it seems slightly odd that both albums should remain in catalogue. All that is extra on Revisited is two songs, albeit two of Mingus's most important, 'Eclipse' and 'Weird Nightmare', sung with estranged passion by Lorraine Cousins, one of the few Mingus interpreters to understand the balance between music and text.

* Mingus At Antibes Atlantic 7567 90532-2 Mingus; Ted Curson (t); Eric Dolphy (as, bcl); Booker Ervin (ts); Bud Powell (p); Dannie Richmond (d). 7/60.

Charles Delaunay memorably likened Mingus's performance in the mellow warmth of Juan-les-Pins to a 'cold shower'. Certainly in comparison with the rest of the Antibes line-up, the '60s band was intellectually recherché and somewhat forceful. Unreleased until after Mingus's death – the tapes had lain, unexamined, in Atlantic's vault – the set contains a valuable preview of some of the material to be recorded that autumn for Candid (see below), and for a thumping 'I'll Remember April' with the exiled Bud Powell guesting. Mingus himself gets behind the piano on a number of occasions, perhaps trying to give the slightly chaotic ensembles more shape. The essence of the performance lies in the solos. Ervin is fine on 'Better Git Hit In Your Soul', as is Dolphy, still sounding like a renegade Parker disciple, on a first version of the gospelly 'Folk Forms', which reappears on Presents. The bass/bass clarinet sparring on 'What Love' isn't quite as over the top as the later, studio version, but it shows how far Dolphy was prepared to move in the direction of Ornette Coleman's new synthesis. Not just another 'previously unreleased' money-spinner, the Antibes set contains genuinely important material.

[illegible]

 Charles Mingus Presents Charles Mingus
Candid CCD 79005 Mingus; Ted Curson (t); Eric Dolphy (as, bcl); Dannie Richmond (d). 10/60.

Mingus's association with Candid was brief (though no briefer than the label's first existence) and highly successful. His long club residency in 1960 (interrupted only by festival appearances) gave him an unwontedly stable and played-in band to take into the studio (he recorded a fake – and uncommonly polite – night-club intro for the set), and the larger-scale arrangement of 'MDM' negatively reflects the solidity of the core band. Presents is for pianoless quartet and centres on the extraordinary vocalized interplay between Dolphy and Mingus; on 'What Love' they carry on a long conversation in near-comprehensible dialect. 'Folk Forms' is wonderfully pared down and features a superb Mingus solo. 'All The Things You Could Be By Now If Sigmund Freud's Wife Was Your Mother' has a wry fury (Mingus once said that it had been written in the psychiatric ward at Bellevue) which is more than incidentally suggestive of 'harmolodic' and 'punk' procedures of the '80s. The 'Original Faubus Fables' was a further experiment in the use of texts, here a furious rant against what Mingus later called 'Nazi USA', and his later '60s brothers 'Amerika'. It's powerfully felt but less well integrated in its blend of polemic and music than Max Roach's Freedom Now Suite on the same label.

(*) Charles Mingus Candid CCD 79021 As above, except add Lonnie Hillyer (t); Jimmy Knepper, Britt Woodman (tb); Booker Ervin (ts); Paul Bley, Nico Bunink (p). 10/60.

 Reincarnation Of A Love Bird / (*) Mysterious Blues Candid CCD 79026 / 79042 As above, except omit Woodman, Bunink; add Roy Eldridge (t); Tommy Flanagan (p); Jo Jones (d). 11/60; 10 & 11/60.

If Presents is a classic, Charles Mingus falls slightly short. The augmented band on 'MDM' sounds uninspired, either unfamiliar or unhappy with the material (which isn't exceptionally demanding). 'Stormy Weather', also released on Candid Dolphy (see entry for Dolphy), features a monster introduction by the saxophonist. 'Lock 'Em Up' makes some reference to Bellevue (or to Charlie Parker's 'holiday' in Camarillo), if only because it's taken at the same hare-brained pace, and Mingus bellows instructions to his troops in a voice that sounds on the brink. At producer Nat Hentoff's suggestion, he had attempted to vary the existing band and re-create the energy of the 'Newport rebels' anti-festival by bringing in past associates. The most notable of these was Roy Eldridge, who is featured (with Knepper, Flanagan and Jo Jones also guesting, as the Jazz Artists Guild) on the long 'R&R', a superb 'Body And Soul' and a previously unreleased 'Wrap Your Troubles In Dreams'. 'Reincarnation Of A Love Bird' and 'Bugs' are both Parker-inspired. The title-track features Hillyer, McPherson and Ervin over Dolphy's uncredited bass clarinet (Curson isn't listed either, and is mentioned only in Brian Priestley's characteristically detailed liner-note). By no means a classic Mingus album, it restores some fascinating performances and alternatives from a critical period in his career.

 Oh Yeah Rhino/Atlantic 8122-73748-2 Mingus; Jimmy Knepper (tb); Rahsaan Roland Kirk (ts, manzello, stritch, f, siren); Booker Ervin (ts); Doug Watkins (b); Dannie Richmond (d). 11/61.

The addition of Rahsaan Roland Kirk gave the Mingus band the kind of surreality evident on the spaced-out blues 'Ecclusiastics', which Mingus leads from the piano. Kirk is also the main attraction on 'Wham Bam, Thank You Ma'am', a typically de-romanticized standard. On the closing 'Passions Of A Man' Mingus overdubbed a bizarre, associative rap, which is rather more effective than the instrumental backing.

 Passions Of A Man Rhino/Atlantic R2 72871 6CD As for Atlantic albums. 56–61.

As will have been seen from the above sequence, it doesn't make entire sense to talk about 'the Atlantic years'. However, the albums the bassist made for the Erteguns are among the best in the canon: Pithecanthropus Erectus, The Clown, Mingus At Antibes, the little-known Tonight At Noon, Mingus Oh Yeah! and the user-friendly Blues And Roots. Some of the material from it turned up, reworked, on the earliest of Mingus's Columbia sessions, and Ah Um almost feels like a record from the same stable. This, though, was a period in which the creative and experimental fires were at their height; there is an astonishing level of creative interplay between projects. As throughout his career, it wasn't so much a case of plans going awry as of ideas becoming fragmented and being distributed across foreground and background of the discography. Rhino's compilation has restored Tonight At Noon, a two-part work, to its position amid the sessions that yielded Oh Yeah! and The Clown. The set contains about 30 minutes of previously unissued music, not much for a six-CD (or effectively five, since the last of the run is devoted to interview material, more than an hour of Mingus's blustery observations on his life, music and milieu). Of the new material, the most important is alternative tracks from Blues And Roots which has itself recently been polished and reissued to the same crisp standard.

 The Complete Town Hall Concert Blue Note 28353 Mingus; Snooky Young, Ernie Royal, Richard Williams, Clark Terry, Lonnie Hillyer, Ed Armour, Rolf Ericson (t); Britt Woodman, Quentin Jackson, Willie Dennis, Eddie Bert, Jimmy Cleveland (tb); Don Butterfield (tba); Charles McPherson, Charlie Mariano (as); Buddy Collette (as, ts, f); Eric Dolphy (as, bcl, f); Booker Ervin, Zoot Sims (ts); Dick Hafer (ts, cl, f, ob); Pepper Adams (bs); Jerome Richardson (bs, ss, f); Teddy Charles (vib); Toshiko Akiyoshi, Jaki Byard (p); Les Spann (g); Milt Hinton (b); Dannie Richmond (d, tim). 10/62.

These ambitious charts, which were related to the huge Epitaph suite performed only after his death, were being prepared for a recording or concert-recording (the ambiguity was never quite settled) at New York's Town Hall. (This shouldn't be confused with the later occasion listed and discussed below.) Preparations were chaotic and there was no proper run-through on the night, leaving a body of material which was significantly flawed and in some cases considered unreleasable. The original LP lasted only 36 minutes. This reissue, digitally remixed from the original three-track tapes and produced by biographer Brian Priestley, restores the whole extraordinary occasion with one minor re-ordering of tracks. 'Clark In The Dark', a feature for trumpeter Terry, is marred by a completely skew-whiff mix; the engineer still apparently hadn't managed to effect a proper balance. The next piece, 'Osmotin', breaks off, much like some of the internal sections on Blues And Roots and Ah Um. The opening part of 'Epitaph' features a glorious solo from Dolphy, communicating with the leader on a level far beyond any of the other soloists.

There are versions of 'Peggy's Blue Skylight', more from 'Epitaph' and a new contrafact, 'My Search', on 'I Can't Get Started'. With time marching on, and the audience – presumably unused to the disciplines of recording – becoming restless, Mingus was signalled to stop towards the end of 'Please Don't You Come Back From The Moon', one of the previously unissued tracks. At this point, with the leader heading offstage and many of the players winding up, Terry, who'd kicked the whole thing off, went into 'In A Mellotone', and brought the band together again.

It was, to be sure, something of a shambles, but a magnificent shambles. The reconstructed evening has its rough edges and unresolved parts, but it is an essential document in Mingus's progress, and who can say what might have happened had the record company been more accommodating.

♛  The Black Saint And The Sinner Lady Impulse! 051174-2 Mingus; Rolf Ericson, Richard Williams (t); Quentin Jackson, Don Butterfield (tba); Jerome Richardson (as, bs, f); Booker Ervin (ts); Dick Hafer (ts, f); Charlie Mariano (as); Jaki Byard (p); Dannie Richmond (d). 1/63.

(*) Mingus Mingus Mingus Mingus Mingus Impulse! 051170-2 As above, except add Britt Woodman (tb); Jay Berliner (g). 1 & 9/63.

Almost everything about Black Saint is distinctive: the long form, the use of dubbing, the liner-note by Mingus's psychiatrist. On its release, Impulse! altered its usual slogan, 'The new wave of jazz is on Impulse!', to read 'folk', in line with Mingus's decision to call the group the Charles Mingus New Folk Band. Ellingtonian in ambition and scope, and in the disposition of horns, the piece has a majestic, dancing presence, and Charlie Mariano's alto solos and overdubs on 'Mode D/E/F' are unbelievably intense. There is evidence that Mingus's desire to make a single continuous performance (and it should be remembered that even Ellington's large-scale compositions were relatively brief) failed to meet favour with label executives; but there is an underlying logic even to the separate tracks which makes it difficult to separate them other than for the convenience of track listing.

Mingus etc. comes from the same and one later session. It includes 'Celia' and 'I X Love', both older pieces, both distinguished by great Mariano performances, with 'Theme For Lester Young', which is a variant on 'Goodbye, Pork Pie Hat', and 'Better Git Hit In Your Soul'. Nothing comes close to Black Saint, but the pair give an even better account of Mingus's thinking at the time. Whatever the compromises forced upon him in the past by musicians (or now by his label), he is creating music of classic scope and lasting value.

(*) Cornell 1964 / * Town Hall Concert 1964 /  Mingus In Europe: Volumes 1 & 2 Blue Note 92210 / Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 042 / Enja 3049 / 3077 Mingus; Johnny Coles (t); Eric Dolphy (as, f, bcl); Clifford Jordan (ts); Jaki Byard (p); Dannie Richmond (d). 3/64; 4/64; 4/64.

 The Great Concert Of Charles Mingus /(*) The Great Concert, Paris 1964 Verve 00026820 / Musidisc 500072 2CD As above, except omit Coles. 4/64.

This is undoubtedly the most heavily documented period of Mingus's career. The body of work has been freshly augmented with the discovery of a hitherto unlisted Cornell concert taped the day after St Patrick's (hence the otherwise baffling 'When Irish Eyes Are Smiling'), but not heard in any form until 2006. What's striking about the date, which precedes the Town Hall concert by about a month, is that Dolphy doesn't sound like the star of the band. Byard, who gives his potted history of piano right at the start, Coles and particularly Jordan all sound much more intensely focused. The Town Hall concert in turn predated the European tour, and this set consists of two long tracks which strongly feature Dolphy (the dedicatee) on each of his three horns. The release shouldn't be confused with a 1962 Blue Note recording of the same name, which contains entirely different material.

There is a vast amount of bootleg material from the European tour of April 1964. We have omitted all but respectably licensed releases. Dedicated collectors may want to check dates and itinerary in our second edition and argue about the respective merits of individual performances, for the repertoire overlaps very considerably. 'Peggy's Blue Skylight' is ubiquitous, only omitted on Great Concert; other staples include 'Orange Was The Color Of Her Dress, Then Blue Silk' and 'Fables Of Faubus'. 'So Long, Eric' isn't a threnody for Dolphy, as sometimes suggested, but an affectionate wish that he'll return quickly from a planned sojourn in Europe. Sadly, Eric died in Berlin on 29 June.

A bonus on the Enjas (which were recorded in Wuppertal at the opposite end of the month to the Amsterdam material, which was taped on the 10th) is a flute/bass duo credited to Dolphy as 'Started', but actually based on 'I Can't Get Started'.

The Verve set restores the previously mistitled and then badly edited 'So Long Eric' (once labelled 'Goodbye Pork Pie Hat') and packs in a whole evening of powerful music. 'Parkeriana' shows how closely Dolphy had listened to Bird's work, quoting several tunes and solos in his statement. The set also restores Byard's 'A.T.F.W.', named after Art Tatum and Fats Waller and used to start the set; it was previously thought too poor a recording to issue. After it, Mingus introduces the band, and points to Johnny Coles's trumpet, lying on stage in its case. Coles had collapsed with a stomach ulcer shortly before the concert and the band had to rehearse and then perform without him.

 Music Written For Monterey 1965. Not Heard ... Played In Its Entirety At UCLA Sunnyside / Sue Mingus 013/014 2CD Mingus; Hobart Dotson, Lonnie Hillyer (t); Jimmy Owens (t, flhn); Julius Watkins (frhn); Howard Johnson (tba); Charles McPherson (as); Dannie Richmond (d). 12/65.

Not even the Christmas season slackened Mingus's professional standards. After 20 minutes, he sin-bins half the band for 'mental tardiness'. It's a harsh judgement. This is a very strong outfit, playing tough and uncompromising charts and Dotson in particular has a terrifically good time of it: his solo on 'Don't Be Afraid, The Clown's Afraid Too' (played before the tantrum) is crackling; Mingus thought so highly of it, after the fact, at least, that he orchestrated it for inclusion on Let My Children Hear Music.

These sets have a curious history. The title is explained by Mingus only being given a 30-minute slot at Monterey to showcase his new brass-heavy octet and withholding the new music for a later occasion. Mingus pressed a limited edition of double LPs but Capitol erased the master tapes in 1971, clearly dismayed by Mingus's persistent interruption of the music. Patient research by Fred Cohen and Sue Mingus has restored this remarkable occasion.

Another of the pieces played at UCLA resurfaced on Let My Children. 'Once Upon A Time There Was a Holding Corporation Called Old America' was recast as 'The Shoes of the Fisherman's Wife Are Some Jiveass Slippers'. On this version, Mingus attempts to make his intentions clear at the piano before dismissing the band – to rehearse! – and continuing as a quartet on 'Ode To Bird And Dizzy'. He also includes a fine 'Muskrat Ramble', but one listens to this not so much for the history lesson as for the vivid insight into Mingus's working practices.

(*) In Paris – The Complete America Session Sunnyside SSC 3065 Mingus; Eddie Preston (t); Charles McPherson (as); Bobby Jones (t); Jaki Byard (p); Dannie Richmond (d). 10/70.

This fills in an important part of the story, the complete tape of an all-night session just off the Champs-Elysées, taped just a couple of nights after the group's appearance at T.N.P. There are a lot of false starts and breakdowns, and the session, made for the America label, has never been very highly appreciated, but the music performed – 'Reincarnation Of A Lovebird', 'Peggy's Blue Skylight', 'Pithecanthropus Erectus', 'Love Is A Dangerous Necessity' – intriguingly mixes older pieces with new ones, as if Mingus is trying to bulwark his own under-appreciated repertory. It wasn't his greatest band, but it had sufficient of the older line-ups to guarantee its quality.

(*) Live At Carnegie Hall Rhino/Atlantic R2 72285 Mingus; Jon Faddis (t); Charles McPherson (t); John Handy (as, ts); George Adams (ts); Roland Rahsaan Kirk (ts, stritch); Hamiet Bluiett (bs); Don Pullen (p); Dannie Richmond (d). 1/74.

What deep satisfaction he must have felt to see his name bracketed with that of America's toniest concert hall, a small step forward in his insistence that jazz was Afro-America's classical music. There is nothing classically calm about the music, which rumbles threateningly, then hints at a sunnier mood and then, just when the sky seems clear, delivers bolts of lightning. If it was Duke Ellington who cleared the way for Afro-Americans to be recognized as full partakers in the country's musical culture, then the concert's apparent dedication to Duke and his spirit seems entirely appropriate, with 'C Jam Blues' and 'Perdido' delivered with respect. To be frank, there are better Mingus albums and even the more chaotic live appearances delivered more compelling music than anything here, but it was an important step for him and for creative jazz in general. Sometimes the event is bigger than any single element it contains.

() Changes One / () Changes Two Rhino/Atlantic 8122-71403-2 / 8122-71404-2 Mingus; Jack Walrath (t); Marcus Belgrave (t on Two only); George Adams (ts); Don Pullen (p); Dannie Richmond (d); Jackie Paris (v on Two only). 12/74.

These are among the best of Mingus's later works. Recorded in a single session, they represent definitive performances by a group that had played and gradually transformed this material – 'Orange Was The Color Of Her Dress', 'Devil Blues', two versions of 'Duke Ellington's Sound Of Love', one instrumental, one vocal – over a longer period than almost any previous Mingus unit. Some of the fire has definitely gone, and there is a hint of studio polish that was never evident on the band's live dates; but they are powerful records nevertheless, and essential documents for Mingus enthusiasts.

 His Final Work Master Dance Tones 8471 Mingus; Woody Shaw, Jack Walrath (t); Peter Matt (frhn); Ricky Ford (ts); Gerry Mulligan (bs); Lionel Hampton (vib); Bob Neloms (p); Dannie Richmond (d); additional personnel. 11/77.

Arranged and led by Lionel Hampton, this was a last fling in the studio for the ailing Mingus, though he was to direct a couple more sessions from his wheelchair. To be frank, the music is rather routine. 'Fables Of Faubus' and 'Peggy's Blue Skylight' have lost their antagonism and eager passion respectively and now sound like well-structured charts, played with competence. The new things are a bit drab, almost pastiche Mingus. Arranger Paul Jeffrey has done a fine job, and even though the ever-mischievous Jack Walrath lobs a few well-aimed cherry bombs, the general impression is polite and unemphatic. Even so, it's remarkable that a player of Hampton's generation and persuasion should have chosen to be involved in this at all, even though he played a part in promoting Mingus's early career. The record has a rather complicated discographical history and there may be other versions of it in circulation. The version of 'So Long, Eric' certainly doesn't appear on them all.

Also, in brief:

 Thirteen Pictures: The Charles Mingus Anthology Rhino R2 71402 3CD. 52–77.

A beautifully packaged compilation of Mingus's work for Atlantic, with material from Pre-Bird, Chazz!/At The Bohemia, Plays Piano, Cumbia And Jazz Fusion, The Clown, the immortal Ah Um, Oh Yeah and Mingus Mingus Mingus Mingus Mingus, Pithecanthropus Erectus, Money Jungle, At Monterey and a rare Debut single from 1952.

 The Very Best Of Charles Mingus Atlantic 79988. 55–61.

The opening sequence of 'Pitchecanthropus Erectus', 'Profile Of Jackie', 'Tonight At Noon' and 'Haitian Fight Song' is about as good a half-hour introduction to Mingus as you'll find.

 The Clown Atlantic 8122-73749-2. 2 & 3/57.

With the first appearance of 'Reincarnation Of A Lovebird' and the mano a mano simplicities of 'Haitian Fight Song', this is not a negligible record. It has never, though, been a great favourite.

 A Modern Jazz Symposium Of Music And Poetry Bethlehem 6015. 10/57.

A chance to experiment with texts and sound. It's inevitably datestamped, but the music holds up well.

 Mingus Plays Piano Impulse! 051217-2. 7/63.

Mingus more than held his own at the keyboard and never played 'composer's piano'. His touch and harmonic sense were secure rather than virtuosic, but he more than passes muster on a resonant and richly toned instrument.

 Right Now Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 237. 6/64.

Mingus's Californian band of that summer featured John Handy (as) on one track and Jane Getz (p) in for Byard.

 Three Or Four Shades Of Blues Atlantic 7567 81403. 3/77.

Despite Mingus's deep and vocal reservations about a new rock-aware sound (Sco, Larry Coryell and Philip Catherine, all on guitar), this was one of his most successful albums commercially.

(*) Cumbia And Jazz Fusion Atlantic 8122 71785-2. 3/76–3/77.

An awkward stylistic hybrid, further marred by congested arrangements and instrumentation. But the power is still there.

() Me, Myself An Eye Atlantic 8803. 1/78.

A slightly tawdry send-off, though he's still in there, punching.

Mingus Big Band

GROUP

A 'ghost' group playing the music of Charles Mingus.

 Nostalgia In Times Square Dreyfus FDM 36955 2 Randy Brecker, Christopher Kase, Ryan Kisor, Lew Soloff, Jack Walrath (t); Art Baron, Sam Burtis, Frank Lacy (tb); Dave Taylor (btb, tba); Alex Foster, Steve Slagle (as); Chris Potter (as, ts); John Stubblefield, Craig Handy (ts); Ronnie Cuber, Roger Rosenberg (bs); Joe Locke (vib); Kenny Drew Jr (p); Michael Formanek, Andy McKee (b); Victor Jones, Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d); Ray Mantilla (perc). 3/93.

 Gunslinging Birds Dreyfus FDM 36575 2 Randy Brecker, Ryan Kisor, Philip Harper (t); Frank Lacy, Jamal Haynes, Earl McIntyre (tb); Steve Slagle (as); Chris Potter (as, ts); David Lee Jones (as); John Stubblefield, Craig Handy (ts); Gary Smulyan (bs); Kenny Drew Jr (p); Andy McKee (b); Adam Cruz (d). 95.

* Live In Time Dreyfus FDM 36583 2 2CD Randy Brecker, Ryan Kisor, Earl Gardner, Alex Sipiagin (t); Frank Lacy, Robin Eubanks, Conrad Herwig, Britt Woodman, Dave Taylor (tb); Steve Slagle, Gary Bartz (as); John Stubblefield, Seamus Blake, Mark Shim (ts); Gary Smulyan, Ronnie Cuber (bs); Kenny Drew Jr, John Hicks (p); Andy McKee (b); Adam Cruz, Tommy Campbell (d). 96.

 Que Viva Mingus Dreyfus FDM 36593 2 Randy Brecker, Ryan Kisor, Earl Gardner, Alex Sipiagin (t); Steve Turre (tb, shells); Frank Lacy, Clark Gayton (tb); Earl McIntyre (btb, tba); Dave Taylor (btb); Steve Slagle, Chris Potter, Vincent Herring (as); John Stubblefield, Seamus Blake, Mark Shim, David Sanchez (ts); Ronnie Cuber (bs); David Kikoski (p); Andy McKee, John Benitez (b); Adam Cruz, Gene Jackson (d); Steve Berrios, Milton Cardona (perc); La Conja (v, perc). 9/97.

(*) Blues And Politics Dreyfus FDM 36603 2 Randy Brecker, Earl Gardner, Alex Sipiagin (t); Conrad Herwig, Akili Jamal Mshauri Haynes (tb); Dave Taylor (btb, tba); Vincent Herring, Bobby Watson, Alex Foster (as); John Stubblefield, Seamus Blake, Mark Shim (ts); David Kikoski, John Hicks (p); Andy McKee, Boris Kozlov (b); Gene Jackson, Jonathan Blake (d); Eric Mingus (v). 1/99.

Of the projects dedicated to the great man's memory and legacy, this is perhaps the most important, and now the most durable as well, enjoying the active blessing of the composer's widow and access to tapes and manuscripts from the huge Mingus archive. The band began round a regular Thursday session at Fez under the Time Café in New York City. Mingus had shrewdly recognized that a band could rehearse at the public's expense if an event was labelled a 'workshop' rather than a concert, and so the Mingus Jazz Workshops were born. These days the task is perhaps less urgent, and less driven by constraint; the Big Band provides an opportunity to work through the scrolls, providing exegesis and commentary on a vast body of work.

But what of the records themselves? The sleeve of Gunslinging Birds is misprinted Mingus Big Bang, which is just about right. Both the first records listed deliver with ferocious power and, when required, some delicacy as well. As usual, the material is taken from throughout the Mingus archive. Nostalgia is probably more interesting in terms of material – 'Don't Be Afraid, The Clown's Afraid, Too', 'Weird Nightmare', the title-piece – but the playing and the recording are sharper and more exact on the later album, which centres on a superb reading of 'Fables Of Faubus'.

Live In Time of course refers to the venue, but it also underscores the vital, ongoing nature of the project and the fact that all of this music is being worked out in real time. A huge slab of music spread over two discs, it comes the closest of the group to recapturing the spirit of Mingus himself. The opening is stunning; 'Number 29' was written by Mingus as a challenge to all the gunslinging trumpet-players in town – and, as written, it was impossible. Arranger Sy Johnson has spread the part through the trumpet section and given it a hard, bi-tonal quality that is pure Mingus. Two early pieces, 'Baby, Take A Chance With Me' and 'This Subdues My Passion', are recorded here for only the second time since they were written in the '40s. Conrad Herwig solos on the second, Frank Lacy and Gary Bartz on the first. 'So Long Eric' is a tour de force, a solo feature for the entire horn section; sheer excitement.

Disc two is not quite as powerful as the first, though Johnson's long arrangement on 'The Shoes Of The Fisherman's Wife Are Some Jive-Ass Slippers' and the superb 'E's Flat, Ah's Flat Too' are impeccably conceived and performed. The night ends a day late with 'Wednesday Night Prayer Meeting', a stunning solo from Randy Brecker, ably supported by Shim and Eubanks.

Que Viva Mingus can't hope to reach the same heights, and for some reason the band this time out doesn't sit quite right, sounding rather tired and lacking in lustre. There are some superb moments, needless to say. Lacy, Stubblefield and Brecker make a wondrous thing of 'Love Chant' and Sy Johnson's arrangement of 'Cumbia And Jazz Fusion' could hardly have been bettered by the man himself. Many of the other arrangements are by Michael Mossman, and he directs 'Tijuana Gift Shop', teeing off fine solos from Ryan Kisor and Vince Herring. Ysabel – in the boisterous form of La Conja – does her table dance to end the session.

As the title suggests, Blues And Politics foregrounds Mingus's fierce activism. It begins with the great man's voice, reciting 'It Was A Lonely Day In Selma, Alabama' at the Tyrone Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis, with interjections from the band of the time. That segues into a new recording of 'Freedom', arranged by Mike Mossman and bracketed by archive and new recordings of the narration by Charles and Eric Mingus. Boris Kozlov plays the opening cadenza of 'Haitian Fight Song' on Mingus's own lion-head bass, and the young Russian steals the apostolic thunder of Andy McKee, who is relegated to a single solo on 'Pussy Cat Dues'. The Russian surfaces again on 'Goodbye Pork Pie Hat', which shifts the emphasis from politics to blues, and 'Meditations For A Pair Of Wire Cutters'.

The lament for Lester Young opens with a magnificent Seamus Blake cadenza which confirms his rising status, but he is upstaged by Bobby Watson's searingly beautiful statement on 'Pussy Cat Dues', a high-point on the album. No sign that the legacy is in anything but the safest and most committed hands, and certainly no sign that Mingus's turbulent output will not continue to inspire big-band performance of the highest quality and the strongest passion.

(*) Tonight At Noon: Three Or Four Shades Of Love Dreyfus 36633 Randy Brecker, Earl Gardner, Jeremy Pelt, Kenny Rampton, Alex Sipiagin, Jack Walrath (t); Conrad Herwig(tb); Ku-umba Frank Lacy (tb, v); Vincent Herring (ss, as); Alex Foster (ss, as, cl, f); Wayne Escoffery, John Stubblefield (ts); Ronnie Cuber (bs); Doug Yates (bcl); Michael Rabinowitz (bsn); David Kikoski (p); Adam Rogers (g); Boris Kozlov, Andy McKee (b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d); Jonathan Blake (d, perc); Elvis Costello (v); other instruments. 11–12/01.

The latest of the ensemble's tributes to the master is perhaps the most beautiful yet, dedicated as it is to the theme of love, which, in its most turbulent forms, was a dominant one for Charles Mingus. Four of the songs are orchestrated and feature a newly convened orchestra which is intended to complement the big band, but for the most part this is a regular MBB disc. 'Passions Of A Woman Loved' is nearly ten minutes of rousing jazz; 'Tonight At Noon' is no less involving and features a stunning solo from trumpeter Sipiagin.

On the vocal side, Elvis Costello brings a hurt passion to 'Invisible Lady', but it is Frank Lacy's vocal on the long, extraordinary 'Black Saint And The Sinner Lady' which clinches the set. Frank's singing has always taken second place to his horn work, but this is a man who is musical to his very toes and there is no one better qualified to take forward the Mingus legacy.

Also, in brief:

(*) The Essential Mingus Big Band Dreyfus 36628. 93–99.
We'd still recommend that you explore the original CDs, but this compilation offers a very decent representation of the Big Band's output since 1993.

 I Am Three Sunnyside 3029. 10 & 11/04.
For the first time, the MBB sounds like a routine repertory unit. Still powerful, but without the punch of earlier records.

Phil Minton (born 1940)

VOICE, TRUMPET

Worked with Mike Westbrook as singer and trumpeter in the '60s and '70s, but moved increasingly towards entirely free vocal music.

 Up Umea Blue Tower CD07 Minton; Lars Goran Ulander (as); Lars Gunnar Gunnarsson (b); Sten Oberg (d). 1/69.
A fascinating early glimpse of Minton – though he was already nearly 30 when this was taped in the television studios at Umea, Sweden – still in what is recognizably a jazz idiom, and still playing trumpet. It's already the singing that catches the ear, though. The brass work is perhaps more adventurous in conception than it is successful in execution. The Swedish group isn't bad. Ulander has a bright, slightly sharp sound that sits well with Minton and the rhythm guys don't seem fussed by the off-kilter nature of the music.

(*) A Doughnut In Both Hands Emanem 4025 Minton (solo v). 75–82.
Minton's singing has now replaced his trumpet-playing. He is a stunning vocal improviser, with a tonal and timbral range that seems quite uncanny. Most of the material on this remarkable record was released in America years ago as a Rift LP. Its concentration is extreme, both technically and emotionally. Seemingly inspired by the literature of the First World War, which (if Paul Fussell is to be believed) is definitive of many 20th-century attitudes and obsessions, 'Cenotaph' and 'Wreath' are only three quarters of a minute apiece, but overflowing with pain and pride, anger and redemption. A group of five 'Wood Songs' aren't quite so compelling, but a tiny dedication to German revolutionist Emma Goldman and the stunning 'Notes On Avarice' and 'Blasphemy' demand frequent recourse to the repeat button. 'Blasphemy' is one of half a dozen additional tracks not included on the original album.

* Ammo / (*) Dada Da Leo Golden Years Of New Jazz GY 22 / Leo CD LR 192 Minton; Roger Turner (perc). 2/84; 1/93.
The key cut on Ammo is 'Cold Storage', named for the venue where they recorded. Phil is often reduced to an archaic drone over Turner's echoey metal sounds, a sharp contrast to the opening track's virtuosic Mel Blanc vocal effects. 'Ing-A-Ting' could be a field-recording of night-birds but with a gypsy caravan passing across the foreground rattling its wares. It's the only cut that has any kind of pictorial element. 'Feral' continues in a similar basic sound-world, but Phil's grunts and moans suggest no obvious animal equivalent, just a joyous concentration in the sound itself.

Then, after the slightly repetitive 'Rubbed And Told', which seems to track back over stuff we've already heard, we come to 'Round About Midnight', which is wonderful but unrecognizable. The set peters out a bit after that.

A decade on, the pairing still sounds profoundly empathetic. This is a drier and more abrasive record, almost like an experiment in some post-Beckettian dialect and it's an undeniably hard listen, albeit a relatively brief one for CD. The long 'Chacha' is a tour de force, but unnecessarily extended; the shorter cuts work better.

 Songs From A Prison Diary / (*) Past Leo CDLR 196 / ReR 18 Minton; Veryan Weston (p). 10/91; 12/01.
Weston is another sympathetic partner. The Ho Chi Minh texts on Songs From A Prison Diary are intensely moving and Minton brings to them a natural actor's ability to deliver apparently banal lines with a weight of experience that far exceeds their ostensible meaning. The later record uses material – vocal and musical – by Schumann, Heine, Shakespeare, Parry, e. e. cummings and others in a bizarre and wonderful sound-collage that collapses any distinction between 'music' and 'text'. Genuinely extraordinary.

(*) Two Concerts FMP OWN 90006 Minton; John Butcher (ts, ss); Erhard Hirt (g, elec). 6 & 8/95.
(*) Mouthfull Of Ecstasy Victo CD 041 Minton; John Butcher (ts); Veryan Weston (p); Roger Turner (perc, v). 1/96.
The FMP record documents a long-standing group which has over time achieved an almost perfect balance and economy of means. Hirt is something of a miniaturist; he has been described as the Webern of improv guitar, splitting up a line into an array of different sounds, and then drifting in behind Minton's shredded semantics and Butcher's wonderfully elegant, almost courtly wooing of the saxophone. The surprising revelation about this music is how romantic it seems. There's an unevenness of quality between the two sets represented, one from Vandoeuvre in June, the other from the Antwerp Free Music Festival later in the summer. The five numbers from Musique Action are oddly scrappy and unformed, impressive only in bulk. The Antwerp set consists of a massive central movement, fiercely dramatic and delicately modulated by turns, surrounded by two shorter items, prologue and epilogue, introduction and peroration, discursive by the standards of this music and, as so often, hovering on the fringes of orthodox song form.

That side of Minton is always more obvious when Veryan Weston is in attendance, and the London recording on Victo is full of moments when some melodic revelation seems near. (The inspiration is Finnegans Wake.) Butcher loves to toy with such shapes, but it is clear that familiar material is both intellectually present and very distant. What one is hearing is pre-standard material, shapes and anticipations of song. Minton himself does much the same thing, constantly reworking the timbral and dynamic envelope within which songs can exist.

* A Doughnut In One Hand FMP CD 91 Minton (v solo). 1/96.
This category-stretching return to solo singing has no intrinsic relation to the earlier disc that (almost) shares its title. Now one doughnut short, Minton also has a spare hand free to conduct himself through a disciplined and rigorous sequence of miniatures, 30 tracks in an hour of spectacular vocal acrobatics..

Relations between groups of pieces – 'Dough Songs', 'Para Songs', songs about 'drainage' and a Mr Wilkins, and 'Tip Head' – are never made entirely explicit, but by sequencing the CD differently one gets a strong impression of areas of concern approached and developed organically and then reordered to create a fractured narrative. The voice has seldom been better and Minton's use of space and microphone distance (the only kind of processing on the record) adds dimensions that are entirely unexpected.

* Slur Emanem 4140 Minton; John Butcher (ss, ts); Veryan Weston (p); Roger Turner (perc). 1/06.
Exactly a decade on from Mouthfull Of Ecstasy Minton has abandoned any identifiable verbal component and the group behave more than ever like a prismatic lens, revolving around him. Here and there, notably in the main section of 'Closer', but also near the beginning of 'A Bit More', they come together in something like conventional ensemble or combo playing, but for the most part the instruments maintain a certain distance one from the other, which gives Phil's yelps, barks and wails an even stranger connotation. Wonderful stuff.

Also, in brief:

(*) Drainage Emanem 4213 2CD. 5/98–2/03.
More from Minton and Turner. Still powerful, though it lacks the coherence and sheer presence of Ammo.

 q For 4 Ears CD 1551. 5/02.
With percussionist Günter Müller, electronics men Andy Guhl and Norbert Möslang, and an array of iPods, 'cracked everyday electronics', minidisks, and no generic hang-ups.

 Activity Center & Phil Minton Absinth Records 006. 6/03.
Officially a guest here with Michael Renkel (g, zither, perc) and Burkhard Beins (d, perc), but as powerful as always.

Bob Mintzer (born 1953)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, BASS CLARINET, EWI, ETC.

His experience is primarily with big bands, from Tito Puente and Buddy Rich in the '70s onwards. He has played, written and arranged for many orchestral situations since, although his most significant small-group experience may have been his association with the pop-jazz group The Yellowjackets.

 Source Explore 0033 Mintzer; Lew Soloff, Randy Brecker, Alan Rubin (t); Tom Bones Malone, Alan Raph (tb); Carl Poole (f); Don Grolnick, Mark Gray (ky); Hugh McCracken, Bill Washer (g); Tom Barney, Will Lee, Jaco Pastorius (b); Peter Erskine, Brian Brake (d); Chuggy Carter, Frank Malabe (perc); Carter Cathcart, Lillias White (v). 82.
 Latin From Manhattan DMP CD-523 Mintzer; Bob Millikan, Larry Lunetta, Scott Wendholt, Michael Mossman (t); Larry Farrell, Keith O'Quinn, Sam Burtis, Dave Taylor (tb); Bob Malach, Lawrence Feldman, Pete Yellin, Roger Rosenberg (sax); Phil Markowitz (p); Jay Anderson (b); John Riley (d); Louis Bauza (perc). 1/98.
 Live At MCG MCG Jazz MCGJ 1016 Mintzer; Frank Greene, Bob Millikan, Michael Philip Mossman, Scott Wendholt (t); Michael Ashby, Michael Davis, Keith O'Quinn (tb); David Taylor (btb); Lawrence Feldman, Bob Malach, Roger Rosenberg, Pete Yellin (sax); Phil Markowitz (p); Rufus Reid (b); John Riley (d); Kurt Elling (v). 5/02.
 Old School: New Lessons MCG Jazz MCG J1020 Mintzer; Scott Wendholt (t, flhn); Terell Stafford, Frank Greene (t); Michael Davis, Jason Jackson, Larry Farrell (tb); David Taylor (btb); Peter Yellin, Lawrence Feldman (as, f); Bob Malach (ts, cl); Scott Robinson (bs, cl); Russell Ferrante (ky); Phil Markowitz (p); Jay Anderson, Jimmy Haslip (b); John Riley, Marcus Baylor (d); Kurt Elling (v). 4/05.
Mintzer is an accomplished soloist and arranger who's been recording big-band albums for many years now. Earlier albums have been hit-and-miss affairs, with too much piling on of effects and a certain cuteness standing in for wit or ingenuity. That said, Source anticipates his work with Yellowjackets and holds him up as a pretty useful leader. The cast is obviously impressive, too, and Pastorius's presence gives the occasion an extra fillip, despite the hideously dated sound.

Moving on a ways, Latin From Manhattan is about the pick of a sequence Mintzer has made for DMP. Tom Jung's sleeve-note captures the flavour of their accomplishments pretty well: top-flight technique and musicianship, meticulous studio sound. For people who want a drilled, hi-fi experience out of a big-band record, Minzter's albums are hard to top. A glance through the personnel shows what a formidable team he's got. This one has nine new tunes and an agreeable revamp of Tito Puente's 'Oye Como Va'. In its way, though, this music is for specialized tastes, just as much as, say, a Vinny Golia large-ensemble record. It seeks a perfection which many will find hard to warm to.

The next two, recorded live at the now well-established Manchester Craftsmen's Guild location in Pittsburgh, are strong examples of Mintzer's methods in action. The first record is a clever mixture of swinging originals, like the opening 'El Caborojeno' and repertory stuff like 'My Foolish Heart' and 'One O'Clock Jump'. Elling's not just a walk-on but a genuine collaborator. By having the Yellowjackets join in on two titles on the second record, Bob closes the circle on the range of his interests, and with Elling sitting in on 'My One And Only Love' and an impassioned version of Coltrane's 'Resolution' there's a pleasing variety to the programme. There's a fine team of soloists and everything runs like clockwork, impeccably recorded. In person this would most likely be a tremendous experience, but on disc there still seems to be a want of real excitement.

 In The Moment Art of Life 1024 Mintzer; Phil Markowitz (p); Jay Anderson (b); John Riley (d). 12/04.
It's not often one encounters Mintzer in a small-group setting. It's a nice set, though hard to pick out of a score and more such sax-and-rhythm situations that would have been released in the same year. The tracks all follow pretty much the same trajectory, and come in at pretty much the same duration, often with Anderson or Riley providing the variations of texture. That said, it's a solid, intelligent performance and fans of Mintzer's work will welcome the chance to hear him in a more open context.

(*) Longing Sunnyside SSC3517 Mintzer; Gil Goldstein (p, acc). 07.
Sax/piano duos can quickly turn boring, but this one entirely avoids the usual conversational clichés and delivers something thoughtful and strong. It doesn't hurt that Goldstein has an interesting double on hand.

Blue Mitchell (1930–79)

TRUMPET, CORNET

The Miami man's soulful delivery was an asset whether it was deployed in jazz or R&B. After inheriting the Horace Silver band, he made some fine recordings of his own.

* Big Six Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 615 Mitchell; Curtis Fuller (tb); Johnny Griffin (ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Wilbur Ware (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 7/58.

(*) Out Of The Blue Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 667 Mitchell; Benny Golson (ts); Cedar Walton, Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers, Sam Jones (b); Art Blakey (d). 1/59.

(*) Blue Soul Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 765 Mitchell; Curtis Fuller (tb); Jimmy Heath (ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Sam Jones (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 9/59.

(*) Blues On My Mind Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 6009 Mitchell; Curtis Fuller (tb); Benny Golson, Johnny Griffin, Jimmy Heath (ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers, Sam Jones, Wilbur Ware (b); Art Blakey, Philly Joe Jones (d). 7/58–9/59.

Mitchell took over the Silver band in 1964, replacing the former leader with the young Corea. After a fairly unmemorable debut the line got even more heavyweight. Big Six is unquestionably the trumpeter's finest achievement. It contains the first recorded version of Golson's classic 'Blues March', a punchy version of what was to become a chestnut. The Blues On My Mind compilation is, for most casual purchasers, a good buy, bringing together 'Brother Ball' and 'There Will Never Be Another You' from OJC 615 and 'It Could Happen To You' and a rousing 'Saints' from Out Of The Blue.

Blue Soul is also very good, though here Mitchell is occasionally outclassed by his band; Heath in particular sounds as if he's trying not to muscle in and one or two of his solos are curtailed rather suddenly, perhaps lest he outstay his welcome. Jimmy Heath resurfaces to equally good effect on A Sure Thing (see below), especially on 'Gone With The Wind', which is arranged for just trumpet, saxophone and rhythm, a welcome variation on the big-band material but rather wastefully tucked away at the end. The two baritones and french horn provide a solid bottom for Heath's arrangements.

 Blue's Moods Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 138 Mitchell; Wynton Kelly (p); Sam Jones (b); Roy Brooks (d). 4/60.

 Smooth As The Wind Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 871 Mitchell; Burt Collins, Bernie Glow, Clark Terry (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Urbie Green, Britt Woodman, Julian Priester (tb); Willie Ruff (frhn); Tommy Flanagan (p); Tommy Williams (b); Philly Joe Jones, Charli Persip (d); stg. 12/60, 3/61.

(*) A Sure Thing Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 837 Mitchell; Clark Terry (t); Julius Watkins (frhn); Jerome Richardson (as, f); Jimmy Heath (ts); Pepper Adams, Pat Patrick (bs); Wynton Kelly (p); Sam Jones (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 3/62.

 The Cup Bearers Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 797 Mitchell; Junior Cook (ts); Cedar Walton (p); Gene Taylor (b); Roy Brooks (d). 4/63.

At the start of the '60s, Blue was still with Horace Silver but was already branching out on his own. Like many of his contemporaries, Mitchell long nursed a desire to work with strings. Smooth As The Wind is the result, an on-again, off-again mish-mash of terse big-band jazz arranged by Tadd Dameron and Benny Golson with oddly distanced orchestral washes that neither add nor significantly detract but which over the entire session pall rather badly.

The Cup Bearers is a disappointment. Unlike the urbane Heath on the earlier record, Cook is forever in a tearing rush to get back and have a further say, not quite knowing how to get out of what he's set up for himself. What it palpably needs is someone of Heath's intelligence to tie up the loose ends.

Blue's Moods suggests some forgotten Lee Morgan session with the leader sounding unusually raw and unsettled. It's an oddly inelegant performance from Mitchell. 'Scrapple From The Apple' settles any doubt about who is playing, a definitive performance on material that doesn't obviously suit him, though towards the end of his life he was to form a bebop group with Harold Land. Kelly was a long-time collaborator and he brings his usual fresh-faced composure to all these tracks. A Sure Thing is another excellent record from Mitchell, an artist who needs to be experienced in depth before he starts to pay dividends.

 Down With It Blue Note 11493 Mitchell; Junior Cook (ts); Chick Corea (p); Gene Taylor (b); Al Foster (d). 7/65.

 Boss Horn Blue Note 63814 Mitchell; Julian Priester (tb); Jerry Dodgion (as, f); Junior Cook (ts); Pepper Adams (bs); Cedar Walton, Chick Corea (p); Gene Taylor (b); Mickey Roker (d). 11/66.

Recently returned from soul-jazz limbo, Down With It is an undemanding and largely entertaining session that delivers on promise without scattering any pigeons. The soloists – Corea, Cook, Mitchell – are good enough to sustain attention over a rather scant 40 minutes, even though the material is fairly light and trite. 'Hi-Heel Sneakers' is pitched straight at the jukeboxes, while tunes like 'Perception' (credited to Blue and Chick) and 'March On Selma' are more demanding.

Duke Pearson's charts for Boss Horn add a little variety to what's otherwise a standard Blue Note blow for Blue. Corea's 'Tones For Joan's Bones' and 'Straight Up And Down' made their debut here, but the strongest track is a strolling 'I Should Care', handsomely framing Mitchell at his lyrical best.

Nicole Mitchell

FLUTES, VOICE

Co-president of AACM and the Tribune's 'Chicagoan Of The Year 2006', she's a powerful presence on the scene and guardian of a living tradition.

(*) Black Unstoppable Delmark DE 575 / DVD 1575 Mitchell; David Young (t); David Boykin (ts); Jeff Parker (g); Tomeka Reid (clo); Josh Abrams (b); Marcus Evans (d); Ugochi (v). 5/07.

The music is utterly fresh and contemporary, but it has unmistakably nostalgic connotations. Mitchell's Black Earth Ensemble is a throwback to the early days of AACM, except there were next to no female leaders making records 40 years ago. Her flutes – alto and piccolo both favoured – are capable of both abrasive attack and a kind of floating lyricism. 'Love Has No Boundaries' and 'The Creator Has Other Plans For Me' manage to touch on both. Only the relatively slight 'February' and 'Navigator' fail to convince. The group's admirably tight and well-versed in her ideas. Parker's certainly the best-known, but both trumpeter and saxophonist are some kind of veterans. The DVD – live versions of the material from the Velvet Lounge – is a nice alternative, but the studio album is by no means fettered and has bags of atmosphere. Nicole has earlier discs out, but they're on small labels. This is the place to start.

Red Mitchell (1927–92)

BASS, PIANO

Born Keith Moore Mitchell, he came from New York but did much of his most familiar work on the West Coast, from 1954. Left for Stockholm in the '60s and stayed there almost until his death.

(*) Presenting Red Mitchell Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 158 Mitchell; James Clay (ts, f); Lorraine Geller (p); Billy Higgins (d). 3/57.

Mitchell was known for a fluent improvising style in which pulled-off (rather than plucked) notes in a typically low register (Mitchell used a retuned bass) suggest a baritone saxophone rather than a stringed instrument; Scott LaFaro was later sanctified for a broadly similar technique. Mitchell is also an accomplished pianist, with a hint of the romantic approach of his former colleague, Hampton Hawes. The early stuff on OJC with the short-lived Geller instead of Hawes is decent, boppish jazz consistently lifted by Mitchell's singing lines. 'Scrapple From The Apple' is a joy and a delight. The Sunnyside originals – with titles like 'I'm A Homeboy' and 'It's Time To Emulate The Japanese' – quash any notion that Mitchell is merely a standards hack, though he is more approachable in that territory.

 Red Mitchell–Warne Marsh Big Two: Volumes 1 & 2 Storyville STCD 8252 / 8257 Mitchell; Warne Marsh (ts). 4/80.

Recorded over two nights at the Fasching Club in Stockholm and released for the first time in the mid-'90s, this is a fascinating but relatively unvaried set of improvisations in Marsh's familiar abstract–harmonic style. The chemistry between the two is interesting enough, but there's very little action off the ball, as it were, in the absence of a pianist, or guitarist, and drummer. Rhythmically, Mitchell has no problems and Marsh sticks to his own patiently metronomic delivery, but one consistently feels the lack of an extra element. The second volume has some interesting bebop excursions, notably 'Hot House' (the highlight of the two discs), 'Ornithology', 'Lover Man' and 'Scrapple For The Apple'. It's a more ragged set of tunes than the first issue and thus perhaps preferable in that the joins show and Mitchell in particular is required to work very hard to keep up the harmonic momentum.

 Simple Isn't Easy Sunnyside SSCD 1016 Mitchell (p solo). 9/83.

Simple Isn't Easy is entirely for piano and voice, and to that extent isn't typical; even so, it suggests that most of the elements of Mitchell's shaping intelligence are at work: harmonically limber, melodically sophisticated and rhythmically just dynamic enough to be listenable.

 Mitchell's Talking Capri 74016 Mitchell; Kenny Barron (p); Ben Riley (d). 1/89.

Towards the end of his life, Mitchell went back to the US to live in Oregon, where he died three years after this session was taped. In company with his most sympathetic piano-playing partner, Red sounds in good form, still low-toned and full-voiced on the title-piece, which is an original. He's even more prominent on 'I'm Old Fashioned', which he introduces almost like a singer. Barron's swinging 'El Sueno' is a highlight and the long 'Don't Explain' and 'She's Funny That Way' make this a top pick for Mitchell fans, and for Barron collectors as well.

 Evolution /  Live In Stockholm Dragon DRCD 191 / 219 Mitchell; Joakim Milder (ts); Lars Jansson (p on Evolution only); Roger Kellaway (p on Live only). 2/90; 8/91.

Towards the end of Mitchell's Swedish exile, these dates found him in fine, humorous form. Evolution was recorded in his apartment, with two of the young players who'd benefited from his presence in Stockholm. Red's the star, though, offering a surreal view of life in his spoken intro to 'Talking' and roistering through a set of fine standards, as well as a couple of originals by Jansson and Milder respectively. The club date sees Milder take a jump forward in quality, and Kellaway is a highly sophisticated accompanist. 'Life's A Take' follows an equally long, equally fine 'Sophisticated Lady', with the familiar bass sound uncovering lots of unsuspected harmonic riches in the Ellington piece and punching through the original blues.

(*) Live At Port Townsend Challenge 70107 Mitchell; George Cables (p). 7/92.

Towards the end, Mitchell kept busy and these duets are well up to scratch. There's a faint autumnal tinge to some of the pieces in place of the old humour – they kick off with a certain Kosma–Prévert song – but 'Body And Soul' is packed with muscle and spirit and the closing 'Big N And The Bear' is absolutely typical Mitchell. He died just over three months later.

Also, in brief:

(*) Chocolate Cadillac Steeplechase SCCCD 1161. 12/76.

The writing is good and Mitchell is playing but even Horace Parlan (p) seems to be having trouble keeping up, let alone the rest of the band.

 The Red–Barron Duo Storyville STCD 4137. 8/86.

Worth it for the title alone. Red and Kenny explore some familiar material, reach intriguing conclusions.

(*) A Declaration Of Interdependence Four Leaf Clover FLC CD 105. 88.

Overdubbed bass, piano and vocal. The first two are good, the last frankly awful, but loads of personality.

 Live At Salishan Capri 74033. 3/92.

Fine, late duets with the overlooked Joe Beck (g).

Robert Mitchell (born 1971)

PIANO

Born in England to a Barbadian mother and Grenadian father, Mitchell draws on a classical training and an ear-opening journey to Africa and Asia. Nominated Rising Star in the 2002 BBC Jazz Awards.

 Voyager Dune CD04 Mitchell; Steve Williamson (ss); Barak Schmool (ss, as); Omar Puente (vn); Roberto Bellatalla, Nico Gomez (b); Victor Spaven (d); Volker Strater (perc); Eska Mtungwazi (v). 02.

 Trust F-IRE CD 05 Mitchell; Barak Schmool (ss, as, ts); Tom Mason, Mike Mondesir, Robin Mullarkey (b); Richard Spaven (d); Volker Strater (perc); Deborah Jordan, Norma Winstone, Eska Mtungwazi, Gurdeep Stephens, Eugene Skeef, Ty (v). 8–10/04.

(*) Bridges F-Ire CD 16 Mitchell; Omar Puente (vn). 05.

Mitchell has talent, passion and a generous spirit and they all come out on the debut album. Built around his Panacea sextet (and you suspect listening to him that he really does think of music as the key to all the world's problems), it's a rhythmic, densely layered set that recalls some of the African-tinged British groups of the '60s and '70s in the wake of the Brotherhood Of Breath. It takes a certain style to programme both an Alec Wilder and a Keith Jarrett tune in a set of this kind, but the pianist pulls it off with aplomb and his arrangement of Jarrett's 'Days And Nights Waiting' is one of the best things on the album. His own writing is terse and loping by turns, with a revolving rhythm that horn-players enjoy. Williamson and Puente are the guest musicians; Jason Yarde and Gary Crosby produce and deliver a solid ensemble sound, perhaps a little overpowering for some of the soloists.

Trust finds Mitchell and Panacea steadily consolidating his vision, and drawing in further elements from Cuban music and hip-hop. Jordan's vocals are often reminiscent of Edge Of Time-era Norma Winstone, so it's no surprise that the great lady turns up for a guest spot. Mitchell's a poet as well as a musician, so the work is lyrically as well as musically interesting.

The duo set with Puente is a revelation. A guest on the first Panacea record, the electric violinist plays a full and fiery part here. He has a similar background to Mitchell, having been a classical player with the Orquesta Sinfónica Nacional de Cuba, but the Latin rhythms he brings help to relax Mitchell's rather clenched approach. Compositional credits are shared, with a couple of repertory pieces thrown in, and the only quibble is that an arrangement of 'Mambo Influeniando' by Chucho Valdez, one of Puente's mentors, is much too short. Otherwise a nicely sequenced set and further testimony to Mitchell's steady evolution.

Roscoe Mitchell (born 1940)

REEDS, PERCUSSION

One of the key figures in the Chicagoan avant-garde. His AACM-associated group was transmuted into the Art Ensemble Of Chicago but he continued to experiment and record under his own name.

CORE COLLECTION

* Sound
Delmark DE 408 Mitchell; Lester Bowie (t, flhn, hca); Lester Lashley (tb, clo); Maurice McIntyre (ts); Malachi Favors (b); Alvin Fielder (d). 6/66.

What a vital, electrifying document this remains! Restored to an excellent CD edition (original Delmark vinyl was seldom very clean), with an alternative version of 'Ornette' and the title-track, originally a composite of two versions, heard as two separate takes, there is a lot more music and nothing to diminish the power of the occasion. The two key pieces, 'Sound' and 'The Little Suite', are a message of freedom quite different from that being communicated by the contemporaneous recordings of Albert Ayler and Peter Brötzmann. Mitchell organizes his group around the notion of sounds entering into – and interrelating with – silence. So there are tiny gestures and startling emptinesses alongside long lines and soliloquies. Bowie, Lashley and McIntyre work in overtones and distortions more than they do in 'true' tones, and in 'The Little Suite' the sound of toys and bells and other found instruments carries as much sensitivity as the horns do elsewhere. Both a manifesto and an unrepeatable event, Sound remains a marvel.

 3 × 4 Eye Black Saint 120050-2 Mitchell; Hugh Ragin (t, picc-t, flhn); Spencer Barefield (g); Jaribu Shahid (b); Tani Tabbal (d). 2/81.
* Roscoe Mitchell And The Sound And Space Ensembles Black Saint 120070-2 Mitchell; Mike Mossman (t, flhn); Gerald Oshita (ts, bs, Conn-o-sax, cbsrspn); Spencer Barefield (g, v); Jaribu Shahid (b, v); Tani Tabbal (d, v); Tom Buckner (v). 6/83.
 Live At The Knitting Factory Black Saint 120120-2 Mitchell; Hugh Ragin (t, picc-t, flhn); Spencer Barefield (g); Jaribu Shahid (b); Tani Tabbal (d). 11/87.

Mitchell's '70s music is awaited in new CD editions, so the story picks up with these Black Saint albums of the '80s. 3 × 4 Eye features a picked team tiptoeing around a number of themes, including his tribute to Jarman, 'Jo Jar', and the ironic 'Variations On A Folk Song Written In The Sixties'. Improvisation becomes almost ritualized, yet the leader's idiosyncratic deployment of sound and space renders the sequence of events as something extraordinary. The subsequent Sound And Space Ensembles is completely sui generis. The trio of Mitchell, Oshita – on some of the oddest reed instruments ever made – and the classical tenor Tom Buckner perform an eerie mixture of Kurt Schwitters and Wilton Crawley, before a pseudo-funk rave-up by the whole ensemble, which features probably the only recorded solo on the contrabass sarrusophone. The two ensembles go on to blend again in two long, beautiful tracks, the needle-fine 'Linefine Lyons Seven' and the scuttling-drifting 'Variations On Sketches From Bamboo'.

In the latter part of the '80s, though, Mitchell seemed to lose his listeners. While a colleague such as Anthony Braxton worked out many directions through obsessive recording, Mitchell scarcely recorded at all. Live At The Knitting Factory replaces the live album from 1988 on Cecma, which so far is not on CD. The group is in good shape, but Mitchell's notebook-like approach to recording tends to make for a fragmented listening experience: the short pieces and the two cut-out solos break up the impact of the powerful 'Almost Like Raindrops' and the blowout memorial, 'The Reverend Frank Wright'. Ragin's impassioned yet curiously selfless playing is as effective as Mitchell's own.

 New Music For Woodwinds And Voice / An Interesting Breakfast Conversation Mutable 17501-2 2CD Mitchell; Gerald Oshita (as, ts, bs, Conn-o-sax, srspn, cbsrspn); Thomas Buckner (v). 1/81–84.
 8 O'Clock: Two Improvisations Mutable 17505-2 Mitchell; Thomas Buckner (v). 12/00.

The trio Space arguably had more to do with extended techniques in contemporary composition than with jazz, though one of their two 1750 Arch albums (now reissued as the two-disc Mutable set) was entirely improvised. If the group had a dominant member soundwise, it was Oshita rather than Mitchell, partly because of the extraordinary sonorities of the sarrusophones and straightened-out saxes which he employed. Their surviving recordings are exercises in sound and space which, however, are entirely in keeping with Mitchell's most specialized solo work.

Many years on, the Mitchell–Buckner duo continues to perform. Buckner's techniques are drawn from what often sounds like conventional counter-tenor vocabularies: he seldom explores the kind of range which Phil Minton pursues as a matter of course, and he works often quietly and carefully around Mitchell's equally sparing sound-making. Both sets will appeal to admirers of Mitchell's researches; the less committed listener may balk at what is, for all its deftness and intensity, difficult music.

 Sound Songs Delmark 2DE-493 2CD Mitchell (reeds solo). 94–97.

No lack of energy here: in some of the longer pieces, such as the concert recordings, 'Full Frontal Saxophone', 'Near And Far' and 'Closer', Mitchell has never sounded more powerful and adroit. Elsewhere, particularly in the application of little instruments to a saxophone line, as in much of disc two, he harks back not only to his early soliloquies but also to some of Julius Hemphill's overdubbed solo music. But the record is simply too long. The more absorbing pieces sit next to what could be called sound-exercises, a useful notebook for the performer and a test for impatient listeners. Mitchell's music often seems to need a large-scale overview; as with Braxton, one tries to fathom out the big picture. As an individual component, this tends towards the inscrutable.

 In Walked Buckner Delmark DE-510 Mitchell; Jodie Christian (p, bells); Reggie Workman (b, perc); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d, f, didjeridu). 7/98.

A slight return to the terrain of the previous Delmark group-record, and this one is better. 'Off Shore' proposes the sort of elliptical, intuitive aesthetic which Mitchell has made something like his own, and when they shift from there into the bleary bop of the title-piece it seems like a discouraging retreat. But the record has more in common with Mitchell's taste for the baroque. He picks up the piccolo and the bass recorder as well as the saxophones and, if Christian and Heath couldn't help their orthodox tendencies on the previous album, they seem willing to chance their arm a little further here. It remains an awkward rapprochement, but it's working a little more easily.

 Song For My Sister PI 03 Mitchell; Corey Wilkes (t); Anders Svanoe (cl, bcl); Willy Walter (bsn); Craig Taborn, Vijay Iyer (p); Spencer Barefield (g); Janse Vincent (vn); Nels Buttmann (vla); Jaribu Shahid, Leon Dorsey (b); Gerald Cleaver (d, xy); Vincent Davis (d). 01.

As a record, this is another curious assemblage. Helter-skelter group improvising in 'Sagitta', 'When The Whistle Blows' and 'The Inside Of A Star' is balanced by the meticulous sound-and-space essay 'This', the oddly gloomy title-piece and the large-scale group music of 'Wind Change'. Mitchell closes the set with one of his attempted funk tunes, 'Count-Off'. As an entity, the ensemble feels shapeless in the way it handles its various talents, and Mitchell himself never imposes enough of himself to unify it all. A probably logical continuation of what's now a perplexing discography.

 Solo 3 Mutable 17515-2 3CD Mitchell (sax, f, perc solo). N.D.

A marathon which recalls some of Mitchell's Nessa recordings of a quarter-century earlier, these three discs include 38 separate solo performances. Most of the sax pieces are solo, though a few feature bits of overdubbing, and disc three is performed in Mitchell's 'percussion cage', a construction which holds scores (hundreds?) of percussion implements. The playing suggests a more musing, spacious approach – less agitated, less momentous. Not that Mitchell is growing peaceable in his old age – there's nothing especially lyrical or ballad-like here, either. If there's a sweetness, it comes out in the percussion passages on the third disc, which have a charm that the saxophone solos reject.

[illegible]

* Composition/Improvisation Nos. 1, 2 & 3

ECM 1716989 Mitchell; Corey Wilkes (t, flhn); Evan Parker (ss, ts); Anders Svanoe (as, bs); John Rangecroft (cl); Neil Metcalfe (f); Craig Taborn (p); Philipp Wachsmann (vn); Nils Bultmann (vla); Marcio Mattos (clo); Barry Guy, Jaribu Shahid (b); Paul Lytton, Tani Tabbal (d, perc). 9/04.

In the autumn of 2004, Parker and Mitchell came together in a Munich concert hall to record a grouping that involves members both of the Englishman's ensemble and of the Note Factory, as well as others, under the ad hoc title The Transatlantic Art Ensemble. The immediate feel is very much of a classical group, with strings, tymps and piano generating a sound-world reminiscent of European art music. Indeed, there is little obviously improvised about the longish opening track. Mitchell plays soprano saxophone throughout, while Parker also deploys his tenor, but what defines this music most clearly as the American's is not the sound of his horn per se, but something about the way the music organizes itself, periods of intense activity bracketed by silence, duos (beginning with Lytton and Tabbal in the second section) breaking out of the ensemble. The sequence of 'movements', nine in all, and the title reference to three parts don't quite seem to square unless one checks the sleeve frequently, but that is why the title is not given as Composition & Improvisation (as if a set of themes and variations) but with a slash that more or less suspends any fundamental distinction between the two. As with much of Mitchell's work, the delivery is mostly rather quiet and unemphatic, with a tendency to dwell not just on exact pitchings but also on the precise tone-colour of particular sounds. Taborn's role is fascinating. At moments, he seems to be articulating some approximate tonal centre for the music, some gravitational point of reference that never quite manages to resist the centrifugal energy of the strings and horns; at others, he is the archetypal pianist-as-percussionist, banging out sharp attacks that are more reminiscent of Cecil Taylor's famous '88 tuned drums' definition than most of the work lazily and misleadingly attributed to Taylor's influence.

The long 'Movement III' moves into something like 'free jazz', but while there is considerable exhilaration in the playing, this is arguably the least typical and least successful aspect of the performance. After some more short sequences, there are two extended movements – 'VII/VIII' – in which the integration of elements seems more complete though not subject to any discernible logic or determination. The coda is deliciously ambiguous. Far from reaching a climax, the sequence dissolves into a shimmer, as if some tiny subset of the whole cosmological process has gone into reverse, solids turning to gas, orbits no longer regular or fixed, location and velocity uncertain. Nothing in the canon of 20th-century Western art music conveys so much satisfying mystery.

Also, in brief:

 The Flow Of Things Black Saint 120090-2. 6–9/86.

A static and tamely conventional reeds-and-rhythm studio date.

 Duets And Solos Black Saint 120133-2. 3/90.

An oddly rambling encounter with Muhal Richard Abrams.

(*) This Dance Is For Steve McCall Black Saint 120150-2. 5/92.

A first appearance by the Note Factory: blunt but unresolved.

(*) Hey Donald Delmark DE-475. 5/94.

Mitchell's mordant honks over the rhythm section's straight-time grooves sound odd and out of place.

 Nine To Get Ready ECM 539725-2. 5/97.

The grand, expansive nonet sound may divide some listeners. It surely benefits the processional feel of 'Leola', but does the luxurious reverb suit the testy interplay of the following 'Dream And Response'?

Bill Mobley (born 1953)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Memphis-born, he taught at Berklee in the late '80s, and then began extensive touring. A fine arranger and bandleader.

(*) Triple Bill Evidence ECD 22163 Mobley; Bill Easley (as); Billy Pierce (ts); Kenny Barron (p); Christian McBride (b); Alan Dawson (d). 8/93.

If anyone on the current scene has 'paid dues' it is Bill Mobley, who has turned out for innumerable dates and never been less than excellent. Some hear a tinge of Booker Little in his playing; we think he's closer to Fats Navarro, but he has other registers as well, including a deep, velvety tone on the flugelhorn. The sextet record will conjure up some memories of Miles's classic group. Easley and Pierce are still largely coterie reputations who blow everyone away here, including the leader. This was Alan Dawson's last major recording before the veteran drummer succumbed to a blood disorder.

Hank Mobley (1930–86)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Mobley was playing in R&B bands before joining Max Roach in 1951. Came to prominence in the Jazz Messengers in 1954 and then worked on numerous Blue Note record dates, many of which he led. With Miles Davis, 1961–2, then toured in other hard-bop situations, but eventually left music in the late '70s because of ill health. Brief attempt at a comeback in 1986 but died of pneumonia shortly after.

(*) Peckin' Time Blue Note 81574-2 Mobley; Lee Morgan (t); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Charli Persip (d). 2/58.
* Soul Station Blue Note 95343-2 Mobley; Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Art Blakey (d). 2/60.
(*) Roll Call Blue Note 6442 7028 Mobley; Freddie Hubbard (t); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Art Blakey (d). 11/60.
(*) Workout Blue Note 55205-2 Mobley; Wynton Kelly (p); Grant Green (g); Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 3/61.
 The Turnaround Blue Note 24540-2 Mobley; Freddie Hubbard, Donald Byrd (t); Herbie Hancock, Barry Harris (p); Paul Chambers, Butch Warren (b); Billy Higgins, Philly Joe Jones (d). 3/63–2/65.
(*) No Room For Squares Blue Note 524539 Mobley; Lee Morgan, Donald Byrd (t); Andrew Hill, Herbie Hancock (p); Butch Warren, John Ore (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 3–10/63.
 Dippin' Blue Note 46511 Mobley; Lee Morgan (t); Harold Mabern (p); Larry Ridley (b); Billy Higgins (d). 6/65.
 A Caddy For Daddy Blue Note 84230-2 Mobley; Lee Morgan (t); Curtis Fuller (tb); McCoy Tyner (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Billy Higgins (d). 12/65.
 Reach Out Blue Note 11497-2 Mobley; Woody Shaw (t, flhn); Lamont Johnson (p); George Benson (g); Bob Cranshaw (b); Billy Higgins (d). 1/68.

Mobley's music was documented to almost unreasonable lengths by Blue Note, with a whole raft of albums granted to him as a leader, and countless sideman appearances to go with them. A collectors' favourite, his assertive and swinging delivery was undercut by a seemingly reticent tone: next to his peers in the hard-bop tenor gang, he could sound almost pallid. But it shouldn't detract from appreciating a thinker and a solidly reliable player. Despite frequent personal problems, Mobley rarely gave less than his best in front of the microphones.

Peckin' Time is typical Blue Note hard bop, fired up by the ebullience of Morgan and the persuasiveness of Mobley's solos. He made many records with Morgan as his partner and they already knew each other's moves so well that there's a symmetry to go with the regulation fireworks. Mobley fans are divided as to whether Soul Station or Roll Call is his masterpiece, but the Rudy Van Gelder Editions of both (with the latter a recent return to the catalogue) are a welcome reminder of how creative a player Mobley was, here transcending his normal consistency and making two modest classics. Good as the other drummers on his records are, Blakey brings a degree more finesse, and their interplay on 'This I Dig Of You' is superb. Hank seldom took ballads at a crawl, preferring a kind of lazy mid-tempo, and 'If I Should Lose You' is one of his best. 'Dig Dis' is a top example of how tough he could sound without falling into bluster. A virtually perfect example of a routine date made immortal by master craftsmen.

Workout is really only a shade behind. Listen to how Mobley flirts with stomping-tenorman clichés on 'Uh Huh' and still turns in a decisively individual solo. Green is a splendid assist and Philly Joe's beat is unstoppable. The Turnaround is made up of two sessions, either side of a problem period for Mobley, and is a mixed bag: the title-piece is a 'Sidewinder' clone of the sort that Alfred Lion insisted on from numerous Blue Note dates of the time and some of the other material is routine, but the two ballad features are lucid examples of Mobley's exceptional way with a slow tempo and make one wish that he'd managed a full album in that vein.

No Room For Squares brings together the results of two 1963 sessions, one with Morgan and Hill, the other with Byrd and Hancock. The tenorman's solo on 'Three Way Split' is classic Mobley, cooked up at a very fast pace but built without excessive hurry and good enough to spark Morgan into turning in a dramatic solo of his own. 'Carolyn' is a lovely ballad feature for Morgan. The date with Byrd isn't quite so strong, but this is still an excellent Mobley Blue Note..

Dippin' and A Caddy For Daddy are, by the high standards of his best Blue Notes, relatively ordinary sessions, but they will still satisfy any appetite for authentic and hard-won hard bop. Some of Hank's other Blue Notes remain in limbo and, of his late-'60s records, Reach Out is one which has been back of late; but what a peculiar session. They start with jazzed versions of 'Reach Out (I'll Be There)' and 'Goin' Out Of My Head', which are as soft as a marshmallow cushion. Thereafter it's down to Blue Note business with four hard-bop nuggets. Hardly Hank's best, but enough to keep the flame just about lit.

Also, in brief:

 The Flip /  Thinking Of Home Blue Note 93872 / 40531. 7/69; 7/70.

Going-through-the-motions stuff from an artist who'd lost what little edge he had but who, more seriously, had lost his consistency, too, and found himself night-watchman at a fading label.

Modern Jazz Duo

GROUP

A pairing of veteran big-band trumpeter Don Rader and Australian pianist-composer-educator Roger Frampton.

(*) Off The Beaten Track Tall Poppies TP130 Don Rader (t, flhn); Roger Frampton (sno, p, recorder). 7/98.

Rader and Frampton struck up a partnership following the former's move to Australia in the '90s, and this duo session is one result. They do well by the jazz and other standards, including Horace Silver and Jimmy Heath tunes; the originals and improvs are less appealing. Rader's big sound is somewhat effaced by the overdressed mix, which sites them in what sounds like a huge concert hall: intimate is better. There's also far too much music here – 50 minutes of the best stuff would have been better than the 75 on offer. Frampton has also made three solo improv records for the same label, but from what we've heard of them, they're very hard work. Better to hear him with the larger group Ten Part Invention.

Modern Jazz Quartet

GROUP

The MJQ was originally the rhythm section of Dizzy Gillespie's post-war band, initially with Ray Brown on bass and Kenny Clarke on drums. After 1955, Connie Kay became a permanent member, joining pianist John Lewis, vibraphonist Milt Jackson and bassist Percy Heath in one of the most enduring jazz groups of all time.

 Beginnings Savoy Jazz 17528 Bill Massey (t); Julius Watkins (frhn); Frank Morgan (as); Walter Benton (ts); Walter Bishop Jr, John Lewis, Gerald Wiggins (p); Milt Jackson (vib); Nelson Boyd, Ray Brown, Percy Heath (b); Kenny Clarke, Roy Haynes (d); other personnel. 49–54.

A glimpse of the MJQ when they were still the Milt Jackson Quartet and still not settled into their long-serving line-up. The 2003 reissue changes the original Modern Jazz Quartet title. There are extra tracks here from bigger groups, but the nub of the material is still recognizable, though Ray Brown, Kenny Clarke and, briefly, Al Johns all give the group a different rhythmic slant. 'D & E', 'Heart And Soul' and 'Movin' Nicely' all give a flavour of the highly rhythmic, blues-based group that was gradually taken over by John Lewis's classically tinged composition. There are a couple of extra tracks added to the original Savoy releases; 'Bluesology' has Milt Jackson in front of a biggish band, while 'Blue Mood' is credited to Kenny Clarke's All-Stars.

(*) The Artistry Of The Modern Jazz Quartet Prestige 60 016 Sonny Rollins (ts); John Lewis (p); Milt Jackson (vib); Percy Heath (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 12/52–7/55.

(*) Django Original Jazz Classics OJC 057 As above, except omit Rollins. 6/53–1/55.

(*) MJQ Original Jazz Classics OJC 125 As above, except add Henry Boozier (t); Horace Silver (p). 6/54, 12/56.

Frequently dismissed – as unexciting, pretentious, bland, Europeanized, pat – the MJQ remained hugely popular for much of the last 30 years, filling halls and consistently outselling most other jazz acts. The enigma lies in that epithet 'Modern' for, inasmuch as the MJQ shifted more product than anyone else, they were also radicals (or maybe that American hybrid, radical-conservatives) who have done more than most barnstorming revolutionaries to change the nature and form of jazz performance, to free it from its changes-based theme-and-solos clichés. Leader/composer John Lewis has a firm grounding in European classical music, particularly the Baroque, and was a leading light in both Third Stream music and the Birth Of The Cool sessions with Gerry Mulligan and Miles Davis. From the outset he attempted to infuse jazz performance with a consciousness of form, using elements of through-composition, counterpoint, melodic variation and, above all, fugue to multiply the trajectories of improvisation. And just as people still, even now, like stories with a beginning, middle and end, people have liked the well-made quality of MJQ performances, which, on their night, don't lack for old-fashioned excitement.

The fact that they had been Dizzy's rhythm section led people to question the group's viability as an independent performing unit. The early recordings more than resolve that doubt. Lewis has never been an exciting performer (in contrast to Jackson, who is one of the great soloists in jazz), but his brilliant grasp of structure is evident from the beginning. Of the classic MJQ pieces – 'One Bass Hit', 'The Golden Striker', 'Bags' Groove' – none characterizes the group more completely than Lewis's 'Django', first recorded in the session of December 1954. The Prestige is a useful CD history of the early days of the band, but it's probably better to hear the constituent sessions in their entirety. Some of the material on the original two-disc vinyl format has been removed to make way for a Sonny Rollins/MJQ set ('No Moe', 'The Stopper', 'In A Sentimental Mood', 'Almost Like Being In Love'), which is a pity, for this material was long available elsewhere.

 Concorde Original Jazz Classics OJC 002 John Lewis (p); Milt Jackson (vib); Percy Heath (b); Connie Kay (d). 7/55.

 Live At Music Inn With Sonny Rollins Atlantic 75687-80794-2 As above, except add Sonny Rollins (ts). 8/55.

() Fontessa / () Pyramid / * Dedicated To Connie / (*) Lonely Woman /  The Sheriff Atlantic 81227-3687-2 / 81227-3679-2 / 82763 2CD / 8122 75361-2 / 8122-73520-2 As above, except omit Rollins. 1 & 2/56; 8 & 12/59, 1/60; 5/60; 62; 5/63.

Connie Kay slipped into the band without a ripple; sadly, his ill-health and death were the only circumstances in the next 40 years of activity necessitating a personnel change. His cooler approach, less overwhelming than Clarke's could be, was ideal, and he sounds right from the word 'go'. His debut was on the fine Concorde, which sees Lewis trying to blend jazz improvisation with European counterpoint. It combines some superb fugal writing with a swing that would have sounded brighter if recording quality had been better. Though the integration is by no means always complete, it's more appealing in its very roughness than the slick Bach-chat that turns up on some of the Atlantics.

Atlantic didn't quite know what to do with the MJQ, but the Erteguns were market-shrewd and knew good music when they heard it. One of the problems the group had in this highly creative phase was that everything appeared to need conceptual packaging, even when the music suggested no such thing. Chance associations, like the celebrated version of Ornette's 'Lonely Woman', were doubtless encouraged by the fact that they shared a label, and this was all to the good. Though home-grown compositions reappear throughout the band's history (there's a particularly good 'Django' on Pyramid), there are also constant references to standard repertoire as well and some of these are among the group's greatest achievements.

Jazz snobs professed to enjoy only MJQ albums with high-powered guests. The earlier Silver collaboration isn't as well-known as a justly famous encounter with Sonny Rollins at Music Inn, reprising their encounters of 1951, 1952 and 1953, which were really the saxophonist's gigs. Restored in a fresh mastering, it's clear how much Sonny was an interloper in an already skilled, tight unit. Most of the record is by the MJQ alone, including one of their delicious standard medleys and a brilliant reading of Lewis's 'Midsömmer'. The two (live) tracks which Rollins appears on aren't entirely satisfactory, since he cannot make much impression on 'Bags' Groove', already a Jackson staple, and sounds merely discursive on 'A Night In Tunisia'. Overall, this set very much belongs to the MJQ.

Lewis's first exploration of characters from the commedia dell'arte came in Fontessa, an appropriately chill and stately record that can seem a little enigmatic, even off-putting. The themes of commedia are remarkably appropriate to a group who have always presented themselves in sharply etched silhouette, playing a music that is deceptively smooth and untroubled but which harbours considerable jazz feeling and, as on both Fontessa and the currently missing Comedy, considerable disruption to conventional harmonic progression.

Given Lewis's interests and accomplishments as an orchestrator, there have been surprisingly few jazz-group-with-orchestra experiments. More typical, perhaps, than the 1987 Three Windows is what Lewis does on Lonely Woman. One of the very finest of the group's albums, this opens with a breathtaking arrangement of Ornette Coleman's haunting dirge and then proceeds with small-group performances of three works – 'Animal Dance', 'Lamb, Leopard' and 'Fugato' – which were originally conceived for orchestral performance. Remarkably, Lewis's small-group arrangements still manage to give an impression of symphonic voicings.

After Kay's death in December 1994, the MJQ issued a 1960 concert from Yugoslavia in his memory. As John Lewis discovered when he auditioned these old tapes, it was one of the truly great MJQ performances and knocks into a cocked hat even the new edition of the so-called Last Concert. Jackson's playing is almost transcendentally wonderful on 'Bags' Groove' and 'I Remember Clifford', and the conception of Lewis's opening commedia sequence could hardly be clearer or more satisfying. Dedicated To Connie is a very special record and has always been our favourite of the bunch.

(*) Blues At Carnegie Hall Collectables CD 6279 As Concorde above. 67.

Peculiarly, this is doubled up with the classic Art Blakey–Thelonious Monk Atlantic album – and annoyingly that's left no space for two tracks from the original MJQ LP, which have been omitted. Still, it was a great concert. All blues, as the title infers, a great shout for Milt Jackson and a warm crowd.

 Live At The Lighthouse Wounded Bird 1486 As above. 67.

Originally on Atlantic, but one of the group's less well-known records for some reason, unless the reason is that on this occasion the MJQ sound rougher and bluesier than usual. Jackson seems to be dominant, not just in the sound-mix but also creatively and there's real steel in his solos.

 Under The Jasmin Tree /  Space EMI/Capitol 97582 / 853816 As above. 12/67; 69.

The Beatles didn't just introduce Mary Hopkin and fund John Tavener's The Whale. They also put out these two largely forgotten discs on their Apple label. There's not even a token Lennon–McCartney tune to repay the debt. Both are dominated by Lewis compositions, with an interstellar feel on the latter record, though it also includes 'Here's That Rainy Day' and Rodrigo's 'Concierto De Aranjuez'.

(*) Blues On Bach Atlantic 7831393 As above. 11/73.

Lewis was always suspended somewhere between Bach and the old blues, and this intriguing project alternates original blues tunes with adaptations of J. S. Bach which stop short of suggesting that he and not W. C. Handy was the father of jazz blues but which nevertheless point up the kinship between the styles. As a further tribute to the father of classical music, Lewis doubles on harpsichord and still manages to get a solid, flowing sound. Jackson is as masterful as ever and his own 'Blues In H (B)' even makes reference to the traditional B-A-C-H signature theme.

 Plastic Dreams Atlantic 81227-4702-2 As above, except add Joe Newman, Snooky Young (t); Garnett Brown (tb); Jimmy Buffington (frhn); Don Butterfield (tba). 5/71.

The garish cover image, a Pop Art rendition of a blow-up sex doll, seemed wildly out of place for the MJQ and has little relevance to the music inside. The title-track is a faux-tango into which Lewis sews some clever variations, but it's hardly bump-and-grind jazz. 'Walkin' Stomp' gets the set moving in brisk fashion, but nothing else comes up to this pace or quality and 'England's Carol', based on 'God Rest You Merry, Gentlemen', is a very curious selection in this context. 'Piazza Navona' is one of Lewis's tone-pictures, and as such very effective, but one comes away from Plastic Dreams feeling as if one's just sampled a disc of off-cuts rather than the attention-grabbing Atlantic wanted. The brass quintet make an interesting contribution on a couple of tracks, but again the integration of guests with the group isn't securely done.

CORE COLLECTION

(*) The Complete Last Concert

Atlantic 81976 2CD As In A Crowd above. 11/74.

Given the closeness of the relationship and its prolific nature, it wasn't entirely surprising that the four should have decided after more than 20 years as a unit to give their individual careers a little space and air. What was billed as the last concert was very much considered to be just that, rather than a shrewd marketing ploy at the start of a short sabbatical. It would be wrong to say that the music was inspired or more intense than usual, but certainly these are all very fine performances. The short bebop section in the middle – 'Confirmation', 'Round Midnight', 'A Night In Tunisia' – gives the lie to any prejudice that the group were uneasy with those jaggy changes and rhythms; they had, after all, cut their professional teeth in such a context. But it's the other, more familiar MJQ material that is most impressive. There are several blues pieces carried over from Blues On Bach, versions of 'The Golden Striker' and 'Cylinder' and a few of Lewis's more impressionistic compositions, such as 'Skating In Central Park' and 'Jasmine Tree'. One additional outstanding performance was the arrangement of Rodrigo's Miles-blessed 'Concierto De Aranjuez'.

(*) Together Again /  Together Again – Echoes /  Topsy – This One's For Basie Pablo 2308244 / 2312142 / Original Jazz Classics OJC 1073 As above. 7/82; 3/84; 6/85.

There is little question that the energy and inventiveness of the band were diluted by time. By the early '70s the MJQ had become stylists first and improvisers only then. They disbanded in 1974, after a final flourish; but after seven years in the wilderness, and they were notably uncreative years for each of the members, they got together again and continued to produce vital music, much of it written by Lewis and all of it, as before, technically and structurally challenging. Together Again was recorded at the Montreux Jazz Festival. After the hiatus, the group seems content to deliver a set of familiar material – 'Django', 'The Cylinder', 'Woody'N'You' and what is listed as 'Bags' New Groove', though how substantially it really differs from the old one isn't entirely obvious. It's a nice, light performance, typical festival fare. The 1985 disc isn't, as it has sometimes been advertised, a programme of Basie tunes, but a tribute to the Count written almost entirely by Lewis. The only exceptions are 'Topsy' itself, 'Nature Boy' (which is played, unaccompanied, by Jackson) and Milt's composition, 'Reunion Blues'. The playing is sharp and engaging and both Lewis and Jackson are in fine form.

Also, in brief:

* The Complete Prestige And Pablo Recordings Prestige 4438 4CD. 52–85.
Music from Django, Fontessa, Concorde, the film soundtrack No Sun In Venice, Reunion At Budokan, Together Again, Echoes and Topsy – This One's For Basie.

* MJQ 40 /  The Best Of The MJQ Atlantic 7 82330 2 4CD / Pablo 2405 423. 52–88; 80s.
The Atlantic is a magnificently packaged ruby-anniversary celebration, 54 tracks in all. The Pablo sampler does a pretty good job of boiling down and reducing the group's work since the reunion of 1981.

 Third Stream Music Wounded Bird 1345. 8/57–1/60.
Lewis was a leading exponent of the movement, but striking how much more old-fashioned these sound.

 Jazz Dialogue Wounded Bird 1449. 5/65.
Some very distinguished names among the guest horns here (Clark Terry, Phil Woods, etc.), but the concept doesn't catch fire.

 Live At The Lighthouse Wounded Bird 1486. 67.
Rougher and bluesier than usual, and Jackson's in steely form.

 Three Windows Atlantic 8176. 87.
Almost a John Lewis project, incorporating soundtrack music; with the New York Chamber Symphony.

 A Celebration Atlantic 782538. 6/92, 4/93.
Fortieth-anniversary celebrations continued without Kay but with Mickey Roker standing in and a procession of star guests.

Paul Moer (born 1916)

PIANO

Briefly an associate of Charles Mingus, Moer has worked as a studio arranger for much of his career. These discs are virtually unknown to the wider jazz community.

 The Contemporary Jazz Classics Of The Paul Moer Trio Del-Fi 71212 Moer; Jimmy Bond (b); Frank Butler (d). 61.
 Plays The Music Of Elmo Hope Fresh Sound FSRCD 1019 Moer; John Heard (b); Larance Marable (d). 91.
A solidly competent player with an easy if slightly rigid swing, Moer deserves to be somewhat better known. No one can claim he is a significant innovator, but these sets, recorded three decades apart, are worthy of attention for the sharp writing on the earlier set and for Moer's attempt to bring to light some of Elmo Hope's least known compositions.

The earlier record has languished in obscurity since its first release. The originals, like the generic 'Moer Or Less', don't take much time to absorb but the driving rhythm set up by Bond and Butler gives the set a certain energy that fans of piano jazz will enjoy. The Hope disc is full of good things – 'Minor Bertha', 'Carving the Rock', 'Low Tide', 'Moe's Bluff', 'Later For You' – but we suspect its main value will be to send you straight back to Elmo's still undervalued body of work. Which may be exactly what Paul Moer wants.

Codaryl 'Cody' Moffett

DRUMS

Son of the late Charles Moffett and equally in-demand.

 Evidence Telarc 83343 Moffett; Wallace Roney (t); Ravi Coltrane (ss, ts); Kenny Garrett, Antoine Roney (as); Kenny Drew Jr (p); Charnett Moffett (b). 3/93.
Two pairs of brothers, four sons-of-famous-dads, Kenny Garrett and a list of modern jazz classics. It should be a surefire recipe. Unfortunately, Cody turns it into a drumming showcase of a kind even Art Blakey would have found excessive. The opening and closing 'Melodic Drum March' was surely enough to establish his leadership, but unfortunately he splashes percussion over every track, and they're all interesting: Ornette's 'Blues Connotation', Monk's 'Evidence', Cedar Walton's 'Bolivia', Hubbard's 'Red Clay', as well as 'Salt Peanuts', 'Nardis' and 'Beautiful Love'. On Coltrane's 'Equinox', the formula works just fine, and it's the longest cut, so all's not lost, particularly with such good players in the line-up, but it's an awkward record and a hard one to listen to often.

 My Favorite Things TCB 21192 Moffett; Mondre Moffett (t); Chris Cox (tb); Dudi Domedi (ts); Stanley Jordan (g); Leonardo Suarez Paz (vn); Charnett Moffett (b); Cherelle Shabazz (v). 5/01.
And pretty much the same story on this one. The ingredients are terrific, though the vocals leave something to be desired and Jordan really doesn't fit into a concept like this. The choice of material is every bit as good as before – 'Maiden Voyage', 'Naima', the standard – and some of the playing is top-notch. But it still feels forced and Cody doesn't play for the group nearly enough.

Louis Moholo(-Moholo) (born 1940)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

Born in Cape Town, he led The Cordettes before joining the Blue Notes in 1962. Based in London from 1967, he has worked with Brotherhood Of Breath and his own Spirits Rejoice and Viva La Black. He returned to South Africa after the end of apartheid.

 Bush Fire Ogun OGCD 131 Moholo; Evan Parker (ss, ts); Pule Pheto (p); Barry Guy (b); Gibo Pheto (d). 75.
* Spirits Rejoice! / Bra Louis – Bra Tebs Ogun OGCD 017 / 018 2CD Moholo; Claude Deppa, Kenny Wheeler (t); Nick Evans, Radu Malfatti (tb); Jason Yarde (ss, as); Toby Delius, Evan Parker (ts); Pule Pheto, Keith Tippett (p); Johnny Dyani, Roberto Bellatella, Harry Miller (b); Francine Luce (v). 78, 95.
 Tern Atavistic Unheard Music. ALP/UMS 176 Moholo; Larry Stabbins (ts); Keith Tippett (p). 82.
 Exile Ogun OGCD 003 Moholo; Sean Bergin, Steve Williamson (reeds); Paul Rogers (b). 90.
 Freedom Tour: Live In South Afrika, 1993 Ogun OGCD 006 Moholo; Claude Deppa (t, flhn, v); Sean Bergin (ts, f, cna, v); Tobias Delius (ts, v); Jason Yarde (as, ss, v); Pule Pheto (p); Roberto Bellatalla (b); Thebe Lipere (perc). 93.

 Mpumi /  Meets ... Ogun OGCD 132 / OGCD 14 Moholo; Mervyn Africa, Keith Tippett (p); Pule Pheto (p on Meets only). 95.

(*) Khumbala Ogun OGCD Moholo; Stan Tracey (p). 04.

More than most of the South African exiles active on the jazz scene in Britain Moholo was able to make the transition between time-playing and free drumming without undue strain. His own bands have always contained free or abstract elements, and Moholo has always been in demand as a more experimental improviser, where his drive and intensity are comparable to those of Americans Milford Graves and Andrew Cyrille.

The early quintet with Parker and Guy underlines Moholo's extraordinary ability to mix the hottest African grooves with entirely free playing. It's hugely impressive and moving, as is the live session captured on Tern, in which Moholo discovers the chemistry with Tippett that is evident again on the piano duo set Mpumi, where he is listed as Louis Moholo-Moholo. Pule Pheto is the connecting thread between those earlier and the more recent sets, a fine rhythmic player with his own idiosyncratic harmonic language.

Pheto is strongly featured on the second piano/drums duets record and on Bra Louis – Bra Tebs, which is now reissued with the earlier Spirits Rejoice!. It's an invigorating pairing, showing how Moholo's music continued to evolve from the free interpretations of township jazz on the first to something much more sophisticated, but still darkly funky, on the second. Deppa, Yarde and Delius aren't yet players with the range and subtlety of their seniors, but they play with admirable concentration. The unifying factor is Moholo's formidable metrics.

Exile is a hot, dangerous session, with Bergin's ferocious statements in constant opposition to Williamson's much cooler delivery, and with Rogers and Moholo working independently of the horns most of the time. 'Wathinta Amododa' is the main piece, but most of its initial power is thrown away in an overlong development-cum-denouement.

Viva La Black's tour and roving workshop for young South African musicians was, inevitably, a powerfully moving experience for Moholo; much of that comes across on the live record, fighting through a not very good recording which resists even Steve Beresford's skill at the final mix. Many of the tracks are short song-forms, some of them traditional; only the opening 'Woza' is substantially longer than five minutes, but the whole thing has the feel of a long, continuous suite, mostly celebratory in nature but with a few, entirely expected, dark corners and ambiguities.

Moholo and Stan Tracey apparently hadn't played together for 30 years and never as a duo when the 2004 recording was made. With Moholo again living in South Africa, such possibilities were diminishing. The pianist admits he approached the date cautiously, but from the first notes of 'Molo Afrika – Later Europe' the chemistry is assured and strong, with Tracey's Monkish figures leading into a roiling stew of sound which then moves to quieter territory. On 'Landela', his signature chords move over the drummer's most orthodox jazz mode, with toms and cymbals locked together. It's an astonishing performance, and one of Moholo's most instantly approachable records.

Miff Mole (1898–1961)

TROMBONE

A pioneer of trombone as a viable jazz instrument. He became one of the kingpin figures in the New York dance band and session scene of the '20s but then moved into more anonymous studio work and died forgotten and in penury.

CORE COLLECTION

* Slippin' Around

Frog DGF19 Mole; Red Nichols (c, t); Leo McConville, Phil Napoleon (t); Dudley Fosdick (mel); Jimmy Dorsey (cl, as); Fud Livingston, Pee Wee Russell (cl, ts); Frank Teschemacher (cl); Babe Russin (ts); Adrian Rollini (bsx); Arthur Schutt, Lennie Hayton, Ted Shapiro, Joe Sullivan (p); Eddie Lang, Carl Kress (g); Dick McDonough (bj, g); Eddie Condon (bj); Joe Tarto, Jack Hansen (tba); Vic Berton, Ray Bauduc, Chauncey Morehouse, Gene Krupa, Stan King (d). 1/27–2/30.

Miff Mole was one of the master jazz musicians of the '20s. Though subsequently eclipsed by Teagarden, Dorsey and others, he was the first trombonist to make any significant impression as a soloist, sounding fluent and imaginative as far back as the early recordings of the Original Memphis Five and Ladd's Black Aces at the beginning of the decade. His partnership with Red Nichols was as interesting in its way as that of Armstrong and Hines or Beiderbecke and Trumbauer. Though sometimes seen as a kind of jazz chamber music, or at worst a white New York imitation of the real thing, their records were a smart, hard-bitten development out of their hot-dance environment and, with no vocals, little hokum and plenty of space for improvisation, the music has an uncompromising stance which may surprise those who've heard about it secondhand. The first of these overdue compilations brings together most of the sessions by Miff's Molers for OKeh, along with four Victor titles by Red and Miff's Stompers and a further pair of tunes credited to the Red Nichols Orchestra. The earlier dates have no more than five or six musicians on them, and titles like 'Hurricane' and 'Delirium' are intense little set-pieces. The later sessions have more players and feel more orchestrated, less private, though no less intriguing: two versions of Fud Livingston's 'Feeling No Pain' are remarkable, and so is the furious charge through 'Original Dixieland One Step'. Nichols, Russell, Rollini and others all have their moments, but Mole himself, alert and quick-witted and always able to find a fruitful line, has no peers here. The final two sessions, with the much-praised 'Shim-Me-Sha-Wabble' among them, seem rowdier and less personal.

* Slippin' Around – Again! Frog DGF20 Similar to above, except add Gordon Griffin (t); Paul Ricci (cl); Toots Mondello (as); Frank Signorelli (p); Sid Weiss (b); Sam Weiss (d); Chick Bullock (v). 2/27–2/37.

This volume is handled to similar standards as the one above. There are six titles by Red & Miff's Stompers, 15 by the Molers, two interesting airshots from 1936 featuring Mole with an unidentified band, and most of the titles from a 1937 date for Vocalion by a 'new' set of Molers. It should be noted that Classics have issued two discs which cover almost identical ground, Miff Mole 1927 (Classics 1269) and Miff Mole 1928–1937 (Classics 1298). As Max Harrison once remarked, the later sessions by the Molers are less private and more public, which makes them neither better nor worse, only different. Mole's solo on 'Moanin' Low', delicate and nuanced next to the rowdiness of the closing chorus, underlines his originality, and it's a small sadness in jazz history that this talented man was largely left behind by the music as it progressed.

Ravish Momin

PERCUSSION, VOICE

New talent bent on exploring the borderline of tradition and innovation.

 Climbing The Banyan Tree /  Five Nights Clean Feed CF030 / Not Two MW 770 Momin; Jason Kao Hwang (vn); Shamir Ezra Blumenkranz (b, oud). 8/03–1/04; 04.

* Miren (A Longing) Clean Feed CF087 Momin; Sam Bardfeld (vn); Tanya Kalmanovitch (vla); Brandon Terzic (oud, fx). 9 & 10/06, 3/07.

It is hard to keep track of the musical traditions informing the Trio Tarana debut. Hwang, a distinguished composer as well as improviser, visits Chinese opera on the opening 'Dai Genyo'. Blumenkranz takes on archaic Levantine ritual on 'Song At Dusk', while Momin himself, very much the fulcrum of these performances, sings an ancient pattern at the beginning of 'String Drum Tarana'. His percussion-playing is no less effortlessly melodic, making this a fascinating and challenging collage of musical philosophies. Five Nights came out on the excellent Polish label Not Two. It finds the group exploring similar territory, but with a growing authority. A hard choice between the two discs.

The third CD, with a new personnel, is a huge step forward. The aesthetic here is more obviously jazz-based. Bardfeld sounds more in tune with contemporary jazz violin-players like Mark Feldman, and Terzic maintains a steady drone behind the others, even when he isn't featured. Kalmanovitch is only present on a second version of 'Fiza', which closes the album and may signal an interest in larger, string-based ensembles in future. 'Ragalaya' is based on a traditional theme and finds Momin at his most physical, using hands and body to accentuate the linear progress of the piece as well as its visceral impact. 'What Reward?' is the most interesting hybrid, coming over like a cross between a gutbucket blues and some pan-Asian thing of complex provenance. 'Fiza' in both its forms probably represents the best of the set, especially when Momin uses Paul Motian-influenced cymbals as a backdrop to the violin. Impressive, and lovely.

Antonio Moncada

DRUMS

Contemporary Italian drummer, working in both free improvisation and a more structured post-bop.

 The True Story Of Twelve Colours Splasc(h) H394-2 Moncada; Sebi Tramontana (tb, v); Stefano Maltese (ss, as, bcl, hca, p); Gioconda Cilio (v, p). 8/91.

(*) Trois Éclats De Temps Splasc(h) H740-2 Moncada; Tony Cattano (tb); Stefano Maltese (ss, as, ts, f, bcl, p, perc); Michele Conti (vn); Fred Casadei (b). 5/00.

Moncada and Maltese are regular workmates, but The True Story showed very little creative understanding among the four players across a dozen improvisations. Tramontana is painfully inept at times, Maltese rattles away at the piano (when he's not on reeds) and Cilio is the acquired taste which so many improvising vocalists turn out to be. A misfire.

The wait for the follow-up was nearly ten years. Though the group is working from more specific structures this time, there remains a sense that these are mere props (or cues) for rambling improvisations. Not hopeless, but there are many more worthwhile examples of the style – and this is not the place to hear Maltese for sure.

Grachan Moncur III (born 1937)

TROMBONE

Father (II) played bass with the Savoy Sultans. Our man started trombone pre-teens and became one of the first on the instrument to explore free jazz.

* Evolution Blue Note 784153 Moncur; Lee Morgan (t); Jackie McLean (as); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Bob Cranshaw (b); Tony Williams (d). 11/63.

(*) Some Other Stuff Blue Note 9548 Moncur; Wayne Shorter (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Cecil McBee (b); Tony Williams (d). 7/64.

Evolution wasn't the first or last attempt to convey the broader movements of humankind in a jazz setting; one thinks inevitably of Mingus's Pithecanthropus Erectus or George Russell's The African Game. Moncur's composition is less ambitious: the actual track is much shorter for a start and hovers between bop orthodoxy (strong J. J. Johnson influence) and some attempt to keep up with the free movement.

He probably had the wrong line-up to take that second route any further. Morgan's strengths were considerable but tramlined and only Hutcherson and Williams showed much interest in the avant-garde. That said, Moncur handles the players with great skill. The looseness of 'Evolution' reflects more a desire to imbue the idea with the new freedom than any lack of arranging skills. He liked to treat the rhythm section as an independent unit. That much is obvious on the opening 'Air Raid'. Moncur had debuted with Jackie McLean's band earlier the same year for One Step Beyond and that title seems even more relevant here as Jackie plays some very untypical stuff.

Recorded a day before JFK was shot in Dallas (was there something in the air in America?), the whole record has a dark, misterioso quality that the lowering trombone sound (not prominently featured, but always there in attendance) strongly accentuates. 'The Coaster' subordinates strict metre to pulse, a device typical of Thelonious Monk, who is celebrated on the fourth track, 'Monk In Wonderland'. It's the most rigorous of the tracks, completing an invigorating and intellectually satisfying set.

The follow-up Blue Note was a considerable rarity before its reissue in 2003. Despite the diffident title, it's by no means a second-order project. Having piano instead of Hutcherson's drifting vibes harmonics makes the music seem more conventional at first glance, but 'Gnostic' is hardly orthodox hard bop, and 'Thandiwa' is curiously reminiscent in retrospect (and possibly because three of his players or future players were present) of Miles's more inflammatory projects of the later '60s. Shorter would soon become part of Miles's group; here he is as impressively cross-grained and inventive as anywhere.

Again, just four long tracks. 'The Twins' is a single-chord idea, brilliantly sustained by the group over nearly 13 minutes. The only slight disappointment is the closing 'Nomadic', too much of which is given over to Tony Williams in slightly self-indulgent form. But for that, we might be tempted to place Some Other Stuff on a footing with the excellent Evolution.

(*) New Africa / Aco Dei De Madrugada Charly 529631 Moncur; Roscoe Mitchell (as); Archie Shepp (ts); Dave Burrell (p); Fernando Martins (p, v); Beb Guérin, Alan Silva (b); Andrew Cyrille (d); Nelson Serra De Castro (d). 8, 10 & 11/69.

These were recorded for BYG-Actuel at a time when much of the American avant-garde seemed to be in Paris. Actually, only the first of the pair is in that free-form mode, with a familiar blaze of sound and open structure. Old boss Shepp guests. The other record will test all but the very sharp-eared, since Moncur is playing essentially Brazilian forms and rhythms. Martins's vocals tend to dominate when they're featured, but there's some nice work from the only horn.

(*) Exploration Capri 7468 Moncur; Tim Hagans (t); John Clark (frhn); Gary Bartz (ss, as); Billy Harper (ts); Gary Smulyan (bs); Ray Drummond (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 6/04.

In the '90s dental problems curtailed Moncur's activities further. This session was the brainchild of producer Mark Masters and it brings back into focus a major compositional figure. Moncur's chops are still pretty good, too, but the emphasis as ever falls on the very fine writing and on a band of equally undersung players.

Masters has done fine work transcribing some of the trombonist's earliest charts, including 'Monk In Wonderland', but it's the sound of Billy Harper singing his way through a solo on the ballad 'Love And Hate' that really sets the record on fire. Bartz is often considered to be in the Jackie McLean lineage. That's more obvious here than is usually the case: Gary's attack on 'Frankenstein' is as truly innovative and off-the-wall as McLean's work 40 years earlier. Moncur as ever doesn't hog the limelight, but he still has that hard-to-pin-down quality.

 Inner Cry Blues Lunar Module 10011 Moncur; Erik Jekabson (t); Mitch Marcus (ts); Ben Adams (vib); Lukas Vesely (b); Sameer Gupta (d). 2/07.

These are all tributes to honoured shades: Clifford Brown, Jackie McLean, Duke, Pops, the still-living Sonny Rollins, and working with his youngish group Moncur sounds like an elder statesman communing with vanished peers. He has acquired an otherworldly quality which sits well with vibist – and label boss – Adams's attractively floating sound. Whether the other horns fit the concept quite so well is to be doubted, but great to hear such a senior figure back in action.

Monday Night Big Band

BIG BAND

Exciting repertory unit founded by Jorgen Nilsson and manned by highly professional Swedish colleagues.

 Live / (*) Thanks To Thad Imogena 4 / TCB 97902 Various personnel. 94; 12/96, 2/97.

Nothing here that will frighten the horses, but these Swedes can certainly show their American equivalents a thing or two about ensemble playing. The Thad Jones album (with one Ray Charles track, for some reason) is the more inventive and exciting of the two, and there are a few rough spots on the Live disc that let it down a notch.

Ben Monder

GUITAR

Monder got his start as a Jack McDuff sideman but has since then worked in a characteristically broad range of settings in the New York avant scene.

 Flux Songlines SGL 1509 Monder; Drew Gress (b); Jim Black (d). 1 & 6/95.

(*) Dust Arabesque 131 Monder; Ben Street (b); Jim Black (d). 12/96.

* Excavation / (*) Oceana Arabesque 148 Monder; Skuli Sverrison (b); Kermit Driscoll (b on Oceana only); Jim Black (d on Excavation only); Ted Poor (d on Oceana only); Theo Bleckmann (v). 6 & 7/99.

 The Distance Songlines SGL 1557 CD/SACD Monder; Dylan van der Schyff (b); Chris Gestrin (d). 04.

The first record is well-titled, because the ideas seem to flow inexhaustibly from the trio. Monder's solo pieces are uncategorizable, with little of the rock influence that still touches his group work. With the hugely experienced Gress and Black, though, he moves into overdrive and there are moments when all three men seem to be moving in different but excitingly complementary directions.

What a difference a year makes? It would be tempting to make play with album titles and say that the sophomore record was as dry as the first was fluid and fertile. It's true, though. The label debut entirely lacked the clarity and vision of its predecessor. Then Excavation came along and restored faith. It whirls with energy, and the addition of Bleckmann, who vocalizes without obvious language, gives the album a surreal beauty. 'Windowpane' is the best thing yet, though there is an even more surprising pay-off in the closing 'You Are My Sunshine'. A terrific record.

Though it sees the (temporary, one hopes) departure of Black, Oceana is a fine consolidation and would be worth the extra star if Excavation weren't so outstanding. Driscoll also comes in and brings his eclectic signature. Monder's resemblance to other guitarists – Frisell, Metheny, most obviously – has almost disappeared. He's now absolutely his own man.

T. S. Monk (born 1949)

DRUMS

Thelonious Jr made his public debut with his dad at the age of just ten and, after some time away from jazz, has devoted himself to the old man's memory and to a sound that is intended to recapture the melodic energy of '50s Blue Note hard bop, influenced by Max Roach and Tony Williams.

* Monk On Monk N2K Encoded Music N2KW 10017 Monk; Laurie Frink, Virgil Jones, Wallace Roney, Arturo Sandoval, Don Sickler, Clark Terry (t); Roy Hargrove (flhn); Eddie Bert (tb); David Amram, John Clark (frhn); Bobby Porcelli, Bobby Watson (as); Wayne Shorter (ts, ss); Jimmy Heath, Roger Rosenberg, Grover Washington, Willie Williams (ts); Howard Johnson (bs, tba); Geri Allen, Herbie Hancock, Ronnie Mathews, Danilo Perez (p); Ron Carter, Dave Holland, Christian McBride, Dave Wang (b); Nnenna Freelon, Kevin Mahogany, Dianne Reeves (v). 2/97.

By the time Monk On Monk appeared, one might have expected the rising-50-year-old to have pushed out into territory he could legitimately call his own, rather than continue playing dad's work. The dedication and obvious affection are hard to fault and some of the playing is very fine indeed. On this occasion, T. S. has assembled a superband which must have been the envy of the block. All the songs are by Monk, though 'Ruby My Dear' and 'In Walked Bud' have been transformed into vocal vehicles for Kevin Mahogany and Nnenna Freelon respectively. Herbie Hancock and Ron Carter solo on 'Two Timer', but the best double act of the evening bouquet goes to Bobby Watson and Wallace Roney for their spirited and lyrical attack on 'Jackie-ing'.

(*) Higher Ground Thelonious 9313 Monk; Winston Byrd (t, flhn, v); Bobby Porcelli (as, f); Willie Williams (ts); Ray Gallon

(p, syn, ky); David P. Jackson (b); Jeremy Berberian, Victor See-Yuen (perc); Miles Griffith (v). 02.
Released on a home label devoted to his own work and to his father's legacy of live concert tapes, this is T. S. Monk's most eclectic set yet, a mix of hard bop, funk and fusion styles. No Monk tunes at all this time, though Kenny Dorham's 'Philly Twist' is very much of that vintage. Saxophonist Willie Williams is in strikingly good form, and the flagrantly underrated Bobby Porcelli beefs up the front line and brings in the brilliant opening track, 'Haristocracy'. There's a guest appearance from Miles Griffith as well, adding a vocal line to Cedar Walton's 'Mosaic'.

Also, in brief:

() Cross Talk N2K 4202. 5/99.
A funkier sound, with electric drums and synths as well as horns. Don Sickler's arrangements are generous and tough-minded.

Thelonious Monk (1917–82)

PIANO

Far from being unrecognized in his lifetime, he was a major star who retired early, recording nothing in the last few years of his life. Present at the birth of bebop, his angular, asymmetrical themes are always rooted in the blues.

 After Hours At Minton's Definitive Classics 11197 Monk; Roy Eldridge, Hot Lips Page (t); Herbie Fields, Al Sears (ts); Charlie Christian (g); Nick Fenton(b); Kenny Clarke (d). 5/41.
 Genius Of Modern Music: Volumes 1 & 2 / * The Best Of Thelonious Monk: The Blue Note Years /  Thelonious Monk 1947–1948 Blue Note 32137 / 32138 / 795636 / Classics 1118 Monk; Kenny Dorham, Idrees Sulieman, George Taitt (t); Lou Donaldson, Sahib Shihab, Danny Quebec West (as); Billy Smith, Lucky Thompson (ts); John Coltrane (ts on 2 only); Milt Jackson (vib); Nelson Boyd, Al McKibbon, Bob Paige, Gene Ramey, John Simmons (b); Art Blakey, Max Roach, Shadow Wilson (d). 10/47–7/48; 10/47–5/52; 47–51; 10/47–7/48.
Monk is one of the giants of modern American music whose output ranks with that of Morton and Ellington, as composition of the highest order. Though no one questions his skills as a pianist (they were compounded of stride, blues and a more romantic strain derived from Teddy Wilson and filtered through Monk's wonderfully lateral intelligence), it is as a composer that he has made the greatest impact on subsequent jazz music. Even so, it is vital to recognize that the music and the playing style are necessary to each other and precisely complementary. Though he has attracted more dedicated interpreters since his death than almost any musician, the originals are unsurpassed. Frequently misunderstood by critics and even some less-discerning musicians, he received due public recognition only quite late in his career, by which time younger pianists originally encouraged by him and his example (Bud Powell is the foremost) had recorded and died and been canonized.

The Minton's material catches him in the crucible of bebop, and working through some of the innovations that were to make the new style so vital and very quickly so central to the jazz mainstream. The material is still very much what you'd expect from a swing set – 'I Got Rhythm', 'Sweet Georgia Brown', 'Body And Soul' – but one can hear Monk starting to think through the harmonic variations that would fuel the bop revolution. Whether he can claim priority in some of these, or whether the action was elsewhere remains unproven, but Minton's was certainly one of the places where the new style was worked out, and Monk was one of the players who was thinking in new ways.

Though some of his work, like 'In Walked Bud' on Genius Of Modern Music, utilized a straightforward chord sequence, and though 'Eronel', one of the additional tracks from the critical July 1951 session with Milt Jackson, is relatively orthodox bop, Monk's interest in tough, pianistic melody, displaced rhythm and often extreme harmonic distortion (as in his treatment of 'Carolina Moon') sets him apart from the bop mainstream.

Monk recorded only intermittently over the next ten years. Thwarted first by an American Federation Of Musicians recording ban and later by a prison sentence and a blacklisting, Monk took time to regain the highs of these remarkable sides. The earliest of the sessions, with Sulieman, Danny Quebec West and Billy Smith, is not particularly inspired, though the pianist's contribution is instantly identifiable; his solo on 'Thelonious', built up out of minimal thematic potential, is emotionally powerful and restlessly allusive. A month later he was working with a more enterprising group (the difference in Blakey between the two sessions is remarkable) and producing his first classic recordings – of 'In Walked Bud' and 'Round About Midnight'.

The addition of Milt Jackson exactly a year later for the session that yielded 'Epistrophy' and 'Misterioso' was a turning-point in Monk's music, enormously extending its rhythmic potential and harmonic complexity. Jackson makes an incalculable contribution to the music, here and on the session of July 1951 which yielded the classic 'Straight, No Chaser'. The later recordings are more conventionally arranged and lack the excitement and sheer imaginative power of the earlier cuts, but they do help overturn the received image of Monk as a man who wrote one beautiful ballad and then dedicated the rest of his career to intractable dissonance. Between 1952 and 1955, when he contracted to Riverside Records, Monk's career was relatively in the doldrums. However, he had already recorded enough material to guarantee him a place in any significant canon. No jazz fan should be without these records. No self-respecting one will flaunt the Classics set rather than the original Blue Notes, but the French label is now squarely established in the bebop era, the music is the same, if muzzily transferred, and they're cheap.

CORE COLLECTION

♛  The Complete Blue Note Recordings
Blue Note 830363 4CD As above, except add Ahmed Abdul-Malik (b); Kenny Hagood (v). 47–58.
The Blue Notes are essential Monk recordings, no less achieved and magisterial for being his first as a leader. The Complete Blue Note Recordings, which takes in a rediscovered live recording with John Coltrane at the Five Spot in New York City, inevitably changes the picture slightly. It is tempting to say that all that the newcomer needs is here, expensive as it is. For those who can't quite stretch to it or who need convincing, the Best Of set is very acceptable indeed, with 'Epistrophy', 'Misterioso', 'Round About Midnight', 'Evidence', 'Ruby, My Dear' and 'Straight, No Chaser' all included from the classic performances.

 Thelonious Monk Trio / Blue Monk: Volume 2 Prestige CDJZD 009 Monk; Ray Copeland (t); Frank Foster (ts); Percy Heath, Gary Mapp, Curley Russell (b); Art Blakey, Max Roach (d). 10/52–9/54.

(*) Thelonious Monk Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 010 Monk; Percy Heath, Gary Mapp (p); Art Blakey, Max Roach (d). 10/52–9/54.

(*) Thelonious Monk/Sonny Rollins Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 059 Monk; Sonny Rollins (ts); Julius Watkins (frhn); Percy Heath, Tommy Potter (b); Art Blakey, Willie Jones, Art Taylor (d). 11/53–10/54.

(*) Monk Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 016 Monk; Ray Copeland (t); Julius Watkins (frhn); Sonny Rollins, Frank Foster (ts); Percy Heath, Curley Russell (b); Art Blakey, Willie Jones (d). 11/53–5/54.

The end of Monk's Prestige period included some remarkably inventive and adventurous music, which isn't always played as well as it deserves. The trios with Heath and Blakey remain among the best performances of his career, however, and should on no account be missed. The first of this group is a valuable twofer reissue of Prestige P7027 and 7848, with original liner-notes in each case; though it involves repetition with the OJCs, it's a useful way of getting the best of the material on a single CD. OJC 010 repeats all the material save for four quintet tracks from May 1954 featuring Copeland and Foster on 'We See', 'Smoke Gets In Your Eyes', 'Locomotive' and the too-little-played 'Hackensack', all of which are taken from Monk. The latter album also includes additional material from the November 1953 recordings with Sonny Rollins which yielded OJC 059. That date was marked by the astonishing 'Friday The 13th', a brilliant use of simultaneous thematic statements which doesn't quite come off in this performance but which sufficiently survives the group's uncertainty to mark it out as daring. The September 1954 session with Heath and Blakey was originally the basis of the Prestige Monk's Moods, and it's good to have it filled out with the additional 'Work' and 'Nutty', which are also on Monk/Rollins. Even with a repeat of 'Blue Monk' (the definitive version) and the solo slot, 'Just A Gigolo', the Prestige is unbeatable value, clocking in at nearly 78 minutes.

Monk's treatment of standards is remarkable. When he strips a tune down, he arranges the constituent parts by the numbers, like a rifleman at boot camp, with the overall shape and function always evident. On 'These Foolish Things' and 'Sweet And Lovely' he never for a moment loses sight of the melody and, as with the originals, builds a carefully crafted performance that is light-years away from the conventional theme–solo–theme format into which even relatively adventurous jazz performance seemed to be locked. A vital episode in modern jazz.

CORE COLLECTION

* Brilliant Corners

Original Jazz Classics OJC 026 Monk; Clark Terry (t); Ernie Henry (as); Sonny Rollins (ts); Oscar Pettiford (b); Max Roach (d). 12/56.

A staggering record, imperfect and patched together after the sessions, but one of the most vivid insights into Monk's music. The title-tune was so difficult that no single perfect take was finished (after 25 tries), and what we hear is a spliced-together piece of music. Full of tensions within the band, the record somehow delivers utterly compelling accounts of 'Pannonica', 'Bemsha Swing', 'Ba-Lue Bolivar Ba-lues Are' as well as the title-piece, and Monk ties it up with a one-take reading of 'I Surrender Dear'.

* Thelonious Himself Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 254 Monk; John Coltrane (ts); Wilbur Ware (b). 4/57.

* Thelonious Monk With John Coltrane Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 039 Monk; Ray Copeland (t); Gigi Gryce (as); Coleman Hawkins, John Coltrane (ts); Wilbur Ware (b); Shadow Wilson, Art Blakey (d). 4–6/57.

* Monk's Music Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 084 Monk; Ray Copeland (t); Gigi Gryce (as); Coleman Hawkins, John Coltrane (ts); Wilbur Ware (b); Art Blakey (d). 6/57.

Thelonious Himself is a solo album, and one of his definitive statements up to this point. Alone at last, Monk's prevarications on his own pieces begin to sound definitive as each progresses: he unpicks them and lays them out again with almost scientific precision, but the immediacy of each interpretation is anything but detached. 'Functional' was probably never given a better reading than here, and his accompanying interpretations of standards are scarcely less compelling, melody and rhythm placed under new lights in each one. Capping it is the trio version of 'Monk's Mood' with Coltrane and Ware, and again, even with all the many versions of this tune which are extant, this one is unlike any other.

The sessions which made up Thelonious Monk With John Coltrane and Monk's Music are arguably the most compelling records with horns that he ever made. The first is actually by the quartet with Coltrane, Ware and Wilson on three tracks (frustratingly, the only ones the quartet made, despite working together for no less than six months at a New York residency), which include a lovely reading of 'Ruby, My Dear', and throughout Coltrane seems to play humbly, in almost complete deference to the leader. This contrasts pretty strikingly with Hawkins on the second session, of which two alternative takes are also on OJC 039. The sonorous qualities of the horns make this one of the most beautiful-sounding of Monk sessions, and his inspired idea to start the record with an a cappella arrangement of 'Abide With Me' sets an extraordinary atmosphere at the very start. There are still problems: the group play stiffly on these rhythms, Hawkins comes in wrongly a couple of times and, as fiercely as everyone is trying, it often sounds more like six men playing at Monk rather than with him. But the flavour of the session is fascinating, and Monk himself sounds wholly authoritative.

♛ * With John Coltrane At Carnegie Hall / * Live At The Five Spot: Discovery! Blue Note 35153 / 799786 Monk; John Coltrane (ts); Ahmed Abdul-Malik (b); Roy Haynes (d). 11/57 ; 57.

On atmosphere, Live At The Five Spot can't be faulted. The music's pretty good, too. These tapes were made by Juanita Coltrane (better known to posterity as Naima) during the band's residency at the Five Spot. The track order has been altered only slightly from the original performance, putting 'Crepuscule With Nellie' at the end of the disc in order to give the opening a rather more cosmetic quality. Predictably, the quality of sound is thoroughly archaeological. The tapes were made on a portable machine with a single mic. The wonder is that so much does actually register. From the prominence of Abdul-Malik's bass it has to be assumed that Mrs Coltrane was in front of him, to her husband's left and at some distance from the piano, which actually registers most poorly of all the instruments, sounding like an out-of-tune clavichord. Collectors of Coltrane solos will be transfixed by his opening statement on 'Trinkle Tinkle', where Monk drops out to let him play with just bass and drums, a practice that is repeated later. This is still in the 'sheets of sound' period and that much-misapplied concept may well become clearer after a listen to this record. There are many electrical and mechanical noises on the tape, a huge dropout during 'Epistrophy', where a portion was accidentally over-recorded and an odd, dissociated feel to the whole thing, not unlike the effect of listening to a sold-out gig through a fire-escape door or side window. A discovery, indeed. However, a remastered version, with a speed correction, is available on the complete Blue Note edition.

The discovery in early 2005 of tapes in the Library Of Congress containing a high-quality Voice Of America recording of the short-lived group at Carnegie Hall was a was a genuinely epochal moment in jazz. It has been suggested that the opening 'Monk's Mood' from the early house was used on Clint Eastwood's Straight, No Chaser documentary, in which case the tapes cannot have been entirely 'lost', but to all intents and purposes this is their first appearance for nearly 50 years. The quality is superb, though nay-sayers have complained that Blue Note's copy-control technology has compromised the sound to some degree and made it impossible to download to an iPod. Hmm. Music of this quality is so precious that one can both understand and forgive the label's reasoning. Coltrane is titanic at both houses. His phrasing on 'In Walked Bud' shows how fast he was evolving at this period, with a looser and rhythmically subtler delivery than he had shown on his earlier performances with the group, when he might still have been intimidated by Monk's enigmatic authority. The complete take of 'Epistrophy' is classic Monk, who is also outstanding on 'Crepuscule With Nellie', leaving Trane a bystander on both, though the saxophonist shines on the other version of the first tune. Given the importance of the release, the liner-notes are a disappointment, but few listeners will care much about that. A landmark.

() Thelonious In Action / () Misterioso Original Jazz Classics OJC 103 / OJC 206 Monk; Johnny Griffin (ts); Ahmed Abdul-Malik (b); Roy Haynes (d). 8/58.

It might, on the face of it, seem improbable that such a headstrong and unmysterious character as Johnny Griffin could be so masterful an interpreter of Monk. But their partnership was an inspiring one, the tenorman unperturbed by any idea that Monk's music was difficult, and the quartet is on blistering form on these dates, recorded live at New York's lamented Five Spot.

(*) At Town Hall Original Jazz Classics OJC 135 Monk; Donald Byrd (t); Eddie Bert (tb); Bob Northern (frhn); Phil Woods (as); Charlie Rouse (ts); Pepper Adams (bs); Jay McAllister (tba); Sam Jones (b); Art Taylor (d). 2/59.

Although Monk regarded this Town Hall concert as a triumph, the results seem rather mixed now. The long and suitably grand attempt at 'Monk's Mood' sounds rather lugubrious, and in general the ensemble catches only elements of Monk's intentions: his peculiar truce between a sober gaiety, bleak humour and thunderous intensity is a difficult thing for a big band to realize and, while there is some fine playing – by Woods and Rouse in particular – the band could probably have used a lot more time to figure out the composer's vision.

 The Art Of The Ballad Prestige 11012 Monk; Ray Copeland (t); Gigi Gryce (as); John Coltrane, Frank Foster, Coleman Hawkins (ts); Gerry Mulligan (bs); Oscar Pettiford, Curley Russell, Wilbur Ware (b); Art Blakey, Kenny Clarke, Shadow Wilson (d). 55–62.

The album begins and ends with interpretations of 'Ruby, My Dear', featuring respectively Coleman Hawkins and John Coltrane. 'Monk's Mood' is for trio without percussion, and there is a generous smattering of solo tracks as well. 'Sweet And Lovely', as so often, is an occasion for extended performance, but 'Monk's Mood' and 'Ruby, My Dear' are also the object of notably tender readings. This being Monk, the interpretation of 'ballad' is idiosyncratic.

(*) San Francisco Holiday Milestone 9199 Monk; Joe Gordon (t); Johnny Griffin, Harold Land, Charlie Rouse (ts); Sam Jones, Ahmed Abdul-Malik, John Ore (b); Art Blakey, Frankie Dunlop, Billy Higgins, Art Taylor (d). N.D.

A generous compilation of sessions on which Monk finds himself briefly outclassed by an in-form Griffin and an unexpectedly powerful Land. Not much here for anyone but a devoted Monkian, but a good buy for all that.

♛  The Complete Riverside Recordings / () The Thelonious Monk Memorial Album / () Thelonious Monk And The Jazz Giants / 022 15CD / Milestone 47064 / Riverside 60-018 As for OJC discs above. 55–62.

The two single-disc compilations are perfectly adequate snapshots of Monk's Riverside period, but The Complete Riverside Recordings is another monument for the shelves; there is so little flab and so much music in this set that it defies criticism. Superbly annotated by producer Keepnews, and including many out-takes and extras absent from the original records (though many of those have now been restored to the CD reissues of the appropriate albums), this is enough for a lifetime's study.

 Monk's Dream /  Criss Cross Columbia CK 40786 / Legacy 513356 2 Monk; Charlie Rouse (ts); John Ore (b); Frankie Dunlop (d). 10 & 11/62; 11/62, 3/63.

Columbia shrewdly signed Monk just as he was making the transition from underground to mainstream, which is why there's a certain irony in the choice of Underground as the title of his last small-group album for the label (see below). Dream was his first, and, as Peter Keepnews points out in the reissue notes, it established the pattern for those that followed. Each contained a mixture of originals and standards, and marked a slight softening of Monk's once rather alien attack. The standards performances – 'Body And Soul', 'Just A Gigolo', 'Sweet And Lovely' – are not always immediately identifiable with the brittle, lateral-thinking genius of the Blue Notes and Riversides and are increasingly dependent on rather formulaic solutions. 'Monk's Dream' and 'Bye-Ya' are slightly tame and the changes of title on 'Bolivar Blues' (weirdly phoneticized in its first version) and 'Five Spot Blues' (originally 'Blues Five Spot') suggest how much Monk was unconsciously and partially moving towards the mainstream. No one seems to have told Charlie Rouse, who really takes over on some of these tracks. The saxophonist sounds jagged and angular where the rhythm has been somewhat rationalized, intensely bluesy where the harmony begins to sound legitimate. Worthy of three stars for Rouse alone, despite the slighting column of Monk scholar Brian Priestley, who questions that Thelonious ever took the saxophonist seriously.

Seriously enough to hang on to him through the Columbia years. Rouse is back on Criss Cross, which uses up the last of the material from November 1962, 'Hackensack', 'Rhythm-A-Ning' and a retaken 'Coming On The Hudson'. The last of these previously appeared only on the Giants Of Jazz anthology, so it's good to have it in circulation and in proper context. The reissue also includes variant takes of 'Eronel' and 'Tea For Two', and what riches they contain for Monk fans, dramatically rethought solos and altered chords in the accompaniment. The idea that Monk was used up by the time he got to Columbia is one that will take some shifting, but only ever appealed to those for whom a measure of commercial success necessarily entails creative decline. No longer the firebrand of earlier days, Monk has consolidated and steadily builds a body of new and rethought work.

(*) At Newport 1963 And 1965 Columbia 63905 Monk; Pee Wee Russell (cl); Charlie Rouse (ts); Larry Gales, Butch Warren (b); Frankie Dunlop, Ben Riley (d). 63, 65.

At Newport 1963 Monk proved he was still more subversively radical than the so-called Newport Rebels of an earlier year. In 1965, he was a major American star, sanctified by Time magazine. These tapes have been available in different forms down the years, but it is instructive to have them complete and together. The surprise package in the earlier set with Rouse, Warren and Dunlop is a guest appearance by clarinettist Pee Wee Russell, who might seem to belong to an earlier generation and an alien style, but who proves to be as lateral a thinker as the pianist, piling dissonances on one another until the chords almost seem irrelevant. It's possibly all too much of a surprise for Russell as well, because he gets lost here and there, notoriously in the middle of 'Nutty', when Monk pulls the carpet out from under his feet. His other appearance on 'Blue Monk' is more assured.

It's not a vintage date for Monk, who seems reserved and in places either uneasy or diffident, and Rouse has to do some work on 'Epistrophy' and 'Criss Cross' (both quartet tracks) to keep the impetus going. He has less to do in 1965 with the later group, but these four performances, highlighted by a quirky 'Hackensack' and a monumental reading of 'Off Minor', are a hugely valuable addition to the canon.

(*) Monterey Jazz Festival '63 Storyville 8255 2CD As above, except omit Warren; add John Ore (b). 9/63.

The quartet was perfectly attuned to Monk's conception and, apart from two long standards – 'I'm Getting Sentimental Over You' and 'Sweet And Lovely' – all the tunes are originals and are dispatched with a sardonic insouciance. Rouse is in exceptional form, carving out blunt, massy solos that are a near-exact corollary of the leader's. Unless the source-tapes are compromised in some way, the piano is slightly off in the middle register, but Monk works round its limitations and dead spots.

(*) Big Band / Quartet In Concert Columbia 476898 2CD Monk; Thad Jones (c); Nick Travis (t); Eddie Bert (tb); Charlie Rouse (ts); Steve Lacy (ss); Phil Woods (as, cl); Gene Allen (bs, cl, bcl); Butch Warren (b); Frank Dunlop (d). 12/63.

The original LP release trimmed this important document in an irritatingly Procrustean manner, lopping off two long orchestral numbers, 'Bye-Ya' and 'Light Blue', a tiny quartet version of 'Epistrophy' and a long, magisterial 'Misterioso', also by Monk, Rouse, Warren and Dunlop. The sound has also been tweaked into something like acceptable form, reducing the cavernous boom of the Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center, where the concert was recorded the day before New Year's Eve 1963. Monk himself sounds very relaxed, and one can't help comparing his almost Zen-like calm on occasions like this with Charles Mingus's torrential outpourings. The pianist's exchanges with Rouse on 'Misterioso' are some of his gentlest on record, and his reinvention of the obscure 'When It's Darkness On The Delta', a pop song from 1932, is redolent of great predecessors like Tatum, Waller and, at one point near the end, usually unnoticed, Earl Hines. The orchestra plays vigorously and well, seemingly well acquainted with Hall Overton's charts and able to handle some of the quicker turns on 'I Mean You' and 'Oska T', neither of them unchallenging charts, with great aplomb. Fascinating to find that most resolute Monkian, Steve Lacy, in the ensemble.

(*) It's Monk's Time Columbia Legacy 513557 2 Monk; Charlie Rouse (ts); Butch Warren (b); Ben Riley (d). 1–3/64.

It's Monk's Time is one of the best sessions of the period, recorded at the height of Monk's critical standing. In 1964 he was the subject of a cover story in Time magazine, one of only three jazz artists to have been accorded that accolade. There's certainly nothing compromised or middle-market about this tough, abrasive set. Monk's sound had softened considerably over the past decade, partly as a result of playing on better instruments, partly because of more sensitive recording set-ups. He still sounds angular and oblique, but he does so without the percussive edge he was wont to bring to theme statements like 'Lulu's Back In Town', 'Stuffy Turkey' and 'Shuffle Boil', which stand out from the rest for the piquancy of the melodic invention. More important than the alternative takes are the unedited performances.

 Solo Monk Columbia Legacy 513558 2 Monk (p solo). 10/64, 3/65.

His only solo record for Columbia, but full of gems. Compared to the unaccompanied performances of the mid-'50s, it's a relaxed set, though spiked with acid here and there. His attack on 'Dinah' and 'These Foolish Things' is impeccable, planting an idiosyncratic flag on both tunes. 'North Of The Sunset' reprises the stride references of 'Lulu's Back In Town' but makes them more integral to this rare and precious performance. There are no fewer than nine bonus tracks, including a variant on 'Dinah', a first, flawed take of 'Ruby, My Dear' and the unissued 'Introspection'. To what extent this finds Monk in more than usually introspective mode isn't clear.

 Monk Columbia Legacy 86564 Monk; Charlie Rouse (ts); Larry Gales (b); Ben Riley (d). 64.

A good set, often overlooked. Almost none of the material is Monk's own, just 'Pannonica' (two versions) and a curious reworking of the traditional 'Children's Song (That Old Man)'. There's also a second version of 'April In Paris' and a fine medley of show tunes. The standout is a solo reading of Irving Berlin's 'I Love You (Sweetheart Of All My Dreams)'. Deserves to be better known.

 Live At The It Club – Complete /  Live At The Jazz Workshop Columbia C2K 65288 2CD / 65189 2CD Monk; Charlie Rouse (ts); Larry Gales (b); Ben Riley (d). 10/64; 11/64.

Established connoisseurs of live Monk material will value the latter of these for a fizzing performance of the challenging 'Hackensack' and for a rhythmically adroit 'Bright Mississippi', on which Monk calls the shots to his rhythm section. The earlier session is more convincing all round, though, with particularly fine readings of 'Misterioso', 'Blue Monk' and 'Ba-Lu Bolivar Ba-Lues Are'. As with several of these reissues, the sound reveals significantly more of the bass and drums than on earlier sessions. The It Club session, recorded live in San Francisco, is now available complete and as performed, with three tracks which were previously unreleased and another nine restored to their original length. What's restored isn't simply empty duration but the whole feel of a Monk gig, its texture and pace, and something of its enigmatic logic. The previously unavailable 'Teo', 'Bright Mississippi' and 'Just You, Just Me' aren't revelatory in themselves. What is, though, is the dynamic of the session as a whole and, with the sound also restored to present-day standards, this is as good as it gets for live jazz performance.

 Monk In Paris: Live At The Olympia /  Olympia, 6 Mars 1965, Parts 1 & 2 / (*) Olympia, 7 Mars 1965 Thelonious TMF 9316 + DVD / Trema 710591 / 710592 / 710590 Monk; Charlie Rouse (ts); Larry Gales (b); Ben Riley (d). 3/65, 4/66; 3/65; 3/65.

 Paris At Midnight Varese 061243 As above, except add Ray Copeland, Clark Terry (t); Jimmy Cleveland (tb); Phil Woods (as); Johnny Griffin (ts). 65.

Thelonious Records was set up by T. S. Monk Jr to release his own music and to legitimize the vast body of bootleg recordings that have circulated since Monk's death. Live At The Olympia covers material available elsewhere and in fuller form, even if it does give these rather shaky tapes a professional gloss. Just as we'd recommend the original Blue Notes over a Classics compilation, we'd have to recommend the Thelonious release, which includes a stunning 'Bright Mississippi' and a moody 'Body And Soul' on which Monk pays tribute to the harmonic genius of Coleman Hawkins, while saxophonist Rouse contents himself picking splinters out of the melody. However, there is a genuine fascination in tracing these performances over two nights. Monk came onstage on the night of 7 March in blistering form. He launches straight into 'Rhythm-A-Ning' as if the fire bells were about to go and doesn't put it down until he's wrung every conceivable variation and a few inconceivable ones out of it. The intensity of these performances is usefully compared to those of the night before, which are quieter, less flowing and much more deliberate.

Not to build up the suspense unnecessarily, the Thelonious tapes are of the second night and they are certainly the better ones, but anyone seriously interested in Monk will want to hear the 6 March date as well, if only to compare 'Rhythm-A-Ning', which was the climax, not the opening, of the earlier set. A fascinating insight into Monk's practice at the time. To sway your decision, the Thelonious disc has a DVD component, three tracks ('Lulu's Back In Town', 'Blue Monk', 'Round Midnight') filmed in Oslo the following year with the same personnel. If Eric Dolphy was right and you had to see Monk as well as hear him, this is a key purchase.

 Straight, No Chaser Columbia CK 64886 Monk; Charlie Rouse (ts); Larry Gales (b); Frankie Dunlop (d). 11/66–1/67.
Recently restored to its full recorded length by Orrin Keepnews, this is a complete version of the sessions of November 1966 and January 1967. This impeccably remastered issue includes a full version of the intriguing 'Japanese Folk Song' (which had been reduced by almost six minutes to conform to LP length) and a spanking version of 'We See', which had lost almost three minutes for the same reason. There are two unaccompanied piano solos, 'Between The Devil And The Deep Blue Sea' and the tiny 'This Is My Story, This Is My Song'. The two additional tracks are an alternative of 'I Didn't Know About You' and the original 'Green Chimneys', both of them well worth having. This is as late as Monk remains interesting. There are already longueurs and too many of the eccentricities seem carefully studied.

* Underground Columbia Legacy 513559 2 Monk; Charlie Rouse (ts); Larry Gales (b); Ben Riley (d); Jon Hendricks (v). 11/67, 2/68.
The Grammy-winning cover art was pitched at the new youth culture in a year of stillborn revolutions. It shows Monk at the piano in his bunker, machine pistol slung over his shoulder, grenades on the table and a Wehrmacht officer tied to a chair behind him, while a fille de la Résistance poses in the background.

It doesn't work quite so well at CD size, but there are a few musical grenades and rapid-fire tunes to enjoy as well. And there is that cameo appearance by Jon Hendricks on 'In Walked Bud'. On his last quartet date for Columbia, Monk introduced no fewer than four new tunes, unprecedented in this period and unrepeated after as his output slowed prior to the dramatic retirement/disappearance of 1978. One of the four, 'Ugly Beauty', is Monk's only documented composition in three-quarter time, an amazing detail only if you're unused to the devoted foursquare of his subversively traditional pianism. The other new tunes are 'Raise Four', yet another brilliant reinterpretation of blues form, and two less well-known items, 'Green Chimneys' and 'Boo Boo's Birthday'. Neither of these has found much favour with piano-players, though Kenny Drew Jr is a great exponent of 'Boo Boo'.

The real plus of the set isn't the addition of bonus tracks but that five of the seven original titles are in unedited form. The band is as tightly disciplined and single-minded as a Resistance cell, explosive outbursts from Riley, a strict cadence from Gales, bristling wires of melody from Rouse and strong revolutionary philosophy from Monk, still very much the master of surprise. The irony is that the most notorious Monk cover should conceal some of his least-known tunes, though it's hard to contradict producer Peter Keepnews's assertion that this would be a significant moment in the canon even if it came in plain brown wrappers.

 Monk's Blues Columbia CK 53581 Monk; Robert Bryant, Frederick Hill, Conte Candoli, Bob Brookmeyer (t); Billy Byers, Michael Wimberley (tb); Ernie Small, Tom Scott, Gene Cipriano, Ernie Watts, Charlie Rouse (sax); Howard Roberts (g); Larry Gales (b); Ben Riley (d); John Guerin (perc). 11/68.
For some reason, this one was credited to Thelonious Sphere Monk, his full name. Given the cost of this session, arranged and produced by Oliver Nelson, perhaps Columbia wanted it to sound as black-tie as possible. Monk came out to the Coast to do the session and to pick up a few side-gigs at the same time. It had apparently been impossible for Nelson, who was a busy television and film music writer and arranger, to get over to New York. What isn't clear is whether the pianist was attracted first and foremost by Nelson or by the chance to work in the sunshine for a while. Nelson certainly gives the complex tunes highly convincing arrangements. The horn-players have some lip-busting parts to negotiate on 'Little Rootie Tootie' and 'Brilliant Corners', but they seem to manage. There was only one non-Monk tune on the list, Teo Macero's wryly titled 'Consecutive Seconds', and it stands out very prominently. The CD is filled out with about ten minutes of new material, including a rather slushy 'Round Midnight' which was quite properly omitted from the original release.

* Monk Alone: The Complete Columbia Solo Studio Recordings, 1962–1968 Columbia 2K 65495 2CD Monk (p solo). 62–68.
Glorious. Unaccompanied performances pulled together from Monk's Dream, Criss Cross, It's Monk's Time, Monk, Straight, No Chaser, the less well-known Always Know and the whole of Solo Monk. In addition, there are 14 previously unreleased tracks, mostly alternatives, some of them clearly sub-standard, like the rejected 'Body And Soul' from 31 October–1 November 1962, but all of them absolutely packed with musical invention. Remastered to the highest quality, these brisk, bright sessions show how complete a musician Monk was, using his piano like a drum kit, horn and full orchestra. This is an essential purchase, uncategorizable and resistant to the adjectival attentions of critics; the work of an artist who was completely sui generis, it's the kind of record that needs to be lived with for a time.

 Standards Columbia CK 45148/465681-2 Monk; Charlie Rouse (ts); Larry Gales, John Ore (b); Frankie Dunlop, Ben Riley (d). 62–68.
But, almost needless to say, not predictable standards. Selected from the Columbia years, this is the obvious counterbalance to the assumption that Monk played just Monk. Apart from 'Tea For Two' and 'Nice Work If You Can Get It', these are songs from down the Broadway bill. Gershwin's 'Liza (All The Clouds'll Roll Away)' and Eubie Blake's 'Memories Of You' are stunning reinventions, but there isn't a dull track on the album. We'd still counsel turning to the original records, but as a sample of Monk as an interpreter it's hard to fault.

Also, in brief:

 Criss Cross /  Round Midnight Proper 114 2CD / Definitive DRCD 11133. 47–58.
Proper offers a 31-track survey of Monk's music as it evolved in the transition from swing to bop and towards the mature work of the Blue Notes and the Riversides. Definitive goes slightly shorter and with a different range of personnels.

 The Complete Prestige Recordings Prestige 4428 3CD. 52–54.
The Prestige years went by quickly but there are half a dozen extra tracks to fill this out.

() Monkism Laserlight 17179. 6/54.
In between contracts, Monk recorded these eight short solo tracks for Vogue while in Paris. One bonus cut from a different session.

 Plays Duke Ellington /  The Unique Thelonious Monk Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 024 / 064. 7/55; 3 & 4/56.
A curious start at Riverside. Orrin Keepnews remembered how assiduously Monk had picked at Dukes's music, trying to get it right. A respectful nod. Unique is a standards album that manages to avoid extremes of demolition.

 5 By Monk By 5 Original Jazz Classics OJC 362. 6/59.
A relatively little-known Monk session, but a very good one, with Thad Jones (t) joining Rouse (ts) in the front line. The CD includes the first two (rejected) takes of the new 'Played Twice'.

 Thelonious Alone In San Francisco Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 231. 10/59.
Another ruminative solo masterwork.

 At The Blackhawk Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 305. 4/60.
Live in San Francisco. Harold Land (ts) and Joe Gordon (t) were late additions to the band but both men play well.

 Monk In France / (*) Monk In Italy /  Monk In Copenhagen Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 670 / 488 / Storyville 8283. 4 & 5/61.
The last Riverside albums with Rouse (ts), John Ore (b), Frankie Dunlop (d) were recorded during a wide-ranging European tour, and they sound horribly like contract fillers or at the very best like repertory dates. There's some fine music – this is Monk, after all – but it's thinly spread. The Scandinavian disc is better.

 Live At The Village Gate Prevue 9. 11/63.
Previously issued on Xanadu, this helps fill in another corner of what was probably Monk's most densely documented year.

 The Columbia Years: 1962–1968 /  The Essential Columbia 64887 3CD / 89175. 62–68.
The Columbia Years includes three valuable unreleased performances and is a beautiful package. The Essential plucks just 11 tracks from the Columbia years; a good budget option.

 1963: In Japan / (*) Monk In Tokyo Prestige PRCD SP 202 / Columbia C2K 63538 2CD. 5/63.
He was revered in the Far East. There are hesitant, even dead spots on these but by and large they're fine.

 The Nonet – Live! Le Jazz 7 11/67
A rare chance to hear Monk work with other voices on this concert recording from Paris. Not strictly a nonet, but the quartet with guests: Clark Terry (t), Phil Woods (as), Johnny Griffin (ts), others.

... and many others ...

J. R. Monterose (1927–93)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Hard-bop stylist, in thrall to few influences.

 Jaywalkin' Fresh Sound FSRCD 320 Monterose; Phil Sunkel (t); Wade Legge, Ralph Sharon (p); Teddy Charles, Eddie Costa (vib); Joe Puma (g); Milt Hinton, Charles Mingus, Doug Watkins (b); Bill Bradley, Kenny Clarke, Jo Jones (d). 55, 56.
Detroit-born Monterose fell into none of the familiar tenor-playing niches and so fell out of jazz history. If there was a single strong influence, it was probably John Coltrane; but Monterose was anything but a slavish Trane copyist and forged his own odd but inimitable style: a slightly tight, almost strangled tone, delivered before and behind the beat, often in successive measures, thin but curiously intense and highly focused. He was also a rare exponent of electric sax. With no sign of the 1956 Blue Note Quintet in the offing, these '50s dates with mixed personnel are the best guide to what the saxophonist was doing at the time. Prominently featured is Charles Mingus – revelatory on 'Have You Met Miss Jones?' – with whom Monterose recorded the peerless Pithecanthropus Erectus the same year. This was J.R.'s purple patch, so much so that it's still mysterious why in later years he was so eclipsed. Other tracks see him working with the less-celebrated Wade Legge and Phil Sunkel, both of whom are worthy of further notice. Ralph Sharon, later associated with Tony Bennett, is an able and adroit accompanist and Teddy Charles, very much part of the Mingus circuit in those days, produces some fine, swinging vibes on a number of cuts; Eddie Costa, more of a Latinist than a bebopper, does a similar job elsewhere.

 Live At The Tender Trap Fresh Sound FSRCD 1023 Monterose; Dale Oehler (p); Dick Vanizel (b); Joe Abodeely (d); Al Jarreau (v). 63.
The early-'60s session features J.R.'s regular band, an able if slightly colourless unit, based at The Tender Trap in Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The group (with minor variants) enjoyed a long residency at The Tender Trap. Occasional guest players were David Sanborn and the young Al Jarreau, who studied psychology at the University of Iowa. His vocals are a must for collectors, as an earnest of the subtle stylist he was to become in later years. Alas, no glimpse of the young Sanborn.

 Body And Soul Blue Moon BMCD 1605 Monterose; Jon Eardley (t); Rein de Graaff (p); Henk Haverhoek (b); Pierre Courbois (d). 1/70.
This seems to have been recorded, if not issued, under de Graaff's leadership and he claims a good deal of attention on it. The real event isn't the title-track but fine interpretations of 'How Deep Is The Ocean' and 'Old Folks', on which Monterose plays with great dexterity and feeling.

 T. T. T. Storyville STCD 8291 Monterose; Hod O'Brien (p); Guffy Pallesen (b); Jesper Elen (d). 7/88.
We'd be much more enthusiastic if the label had taken the trouble to spell J.R.'s surname correctly. Late in life, and flatly recorded for Danish Radio at the Jazzhus Slukefter, it catches him sounding rather strained but still generating ideas at an impressive rate. As ever, the programme is largely standards-based, with a movingly querulous 'You Don't Know What Love Is' and 'All The Things

You Are'. He covers 'Central Park West' once again and also Sonny Rollins's 'Airegin'. The house band is sound enough, but hardly up to his standard.

Buddy Montgomery (born 1930)

PIANO

The youngest of the Montgomery brothers, Charles began his career playing vibes with Monk in the Mastersounds and later with Wes as well. At the end of the '60s, he settled in Milwaukee.

 Here Again Sharp Nine 1008 Montgomery; Jeff Chambers (b); Ray Appleton (d). 97.

 A Love Affair In Paris Spacetime 2116 Montgomery; Donald Brown (p); Robert Hurst (b); Lenny White (d); Anga Diaz (perc). 10/00.

The last surviving Montgomery brother, Buddy seems ever quieter and more wistful as the years go by. There's not much drama in recent work, just a quiet application and a gentle expressiveness. So uniform is the material on Here Again that one appreciates it more as a rolling suite of themes, some familiar, some less so, than as individual tracks. Originals like '1,000 Blues' and 'Hob Nob For Brother Bob' are nicely crafted but unmemorable and one tends to pick up on the standards (including a lovely 'That Old Black Magic') just for reference points.

On A Love Affair In Paris, which mixes live and studio material, he returns to vibraphone for some tracks, using Donald Brown as accompanist. The surprise package on this French release is White, now better known as a fusioneer but still a compelling jazz drummer with a fine sense of time and a gentle snap to his snare work that he didn't learn in Return To Forever. The opening 'Night Has A Thousand Eyes' even manages to wring some fresh ideas out of the old warhorse, while the originals 'Waterfall' and 'Irregardless' are surprisingly fresh and unhackneyed for a 70-year-old whose career has never been about innovation.

Wes Montgomery (1925–68)

GUITAR, BASS GUITAR

The middle and famous Montgomery brother was also born in Indianapolis. He took to guitar late and began his professional career with Lionel Hampton at 25. He died unexpectedly, at the height of his commercial appeal if not of his creative powers.

(*) Fingerpickin' Pacific Jazz 8 37987 Montgomery; Freddie Hubbard (t); Wayman Atkinson, Alonzo Johnson (ts); Buddy Montgomery (vib); Joe Bradley, Richie Crabtree (p); Monk Montgomery (b); Benny Barth, Paul Parker (d). 12/57–4/58.

Wes Montgomery seemed to play effortlessly, loosing off solos as if he was sitting on his back porch talking to friends. He used a homely, thumb-picking technique, with distinctive octaves as accompaniment. Stylistically, he copied Charlie Christian but added elements from Django Reinhardt. Wes's most prominent latter-day disciple, George Benson, made almost exactly the same career move, trading in a genius for improvisation against commercial success.

The story under his own name starts with Pacific Jazz. This is a strong, assured set which benefits from a string of horns. Hubbard is in good form on his four tracks, though Buddy Montgomery's themes don't give him a great deal to bite on. The remaining tracks from the Christmas 1957 session are too short to establish much of a presence, and one is left feeling slightly short-changed by something like 'All The Things You Are', which bounces by in little more than it would take to deliver the song, and with much less going on. The remaining three tracks were taped at the Forum Theater in Los Angeles the following spring, with Crabtree and Barth joining the brothers. 'Baubles, Bangles And Beads' is lovely, if a touch raggedy round the edges. The sound lets things down here and there, and there may be a couple of reconstructed dropouts on 'Not Since Nineveh'.

 Far Wes Pacific Jazz 94475 Montgomery; Pony Poindexter (as); Harold Land (ts); Buddy Montgomery (p); Monk Montgomery (b); Tony Bazley, Louis Hayes (d); collective personnel. 4/58–10/59.

Montgomery plays fluently if a trifle dispassionately but emerges here as a composer of some substance. The title-track is in relatively conventional bop idiom but has an attractive melodic contour (which Land largely ignores) and a well-judged 'turn' towards the end of the main statement. The later sessions are a trifle disappointing, though the great Louis Hayes weighs in at the drum kit with characteristic confidence. It's worth buying for the first half-dozen tracks alone.

 A Dynamic New Jazz Sound Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 034 Montgomery; Mel Rhyne (org); Paul Parker (d). 10/59.

(*) Movin' Along Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 089 Montgomery; James Clay (ts, f); Victor Feldman (p); Sam Jones (b); Louis Hayes (d). 10/60.

(*) So Much Guitar Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 233 Montgomery; Hank Jones (p); Ron Carter (b); Lex Humphries (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 8/61.

(*) Full House Riverside 9434/Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 106 Montgomery; Johnny Griffin (ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 6/62.

(*) Boss Guitar Riverside 9459/Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 261 Montgomery; Mel Rhyne (org); Jimmy Cobb (d). 4/63.

 Portrait Of Wes Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 144 Montgomery; Johnny Griffin (ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); George Brown (d). 10/63.

 Fusion! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 368 Montgomery; Phil Bodner (sax, f); Dick Hyman (p, cel); Hank Jones (p); Kenny Burrell (g); Milt Hinton (b); Osie Johnson (d); stg. 4/63.

 Guitar On The Go Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 489 Montgomery; Melvin Rhyne (org); George Brown, Jimmy Cobb, Paul Parker (d). 10–11/63.

* The Complete Riverside Recordings /  The Artistry Of Wes Montgomery /  Dangerous Riverside 12 RCD 4408 12CD / FCD 60 919 / Milestone 9298 As for the above, except add Nat Adderley (c); Joe Gordon (t); Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley (as); Harold Land (ts); Barry Harris, George Shearing, Bobby Timmons (p); Victor Feldman, Milt Jackson, Buddy Montgomery (vib); Ray Brown, Monk Montgomery (b); Walter Perkins (d); woodwinds; stg. 59–63.

In career terms, Montgomery really did seem to prefer his back porch. During the '50s, which should have been his big decade, he hung around his native Indianapolis, playing part-time. When his recording career got going again, he was still capable of great things. The massive Riverside box, including everything he did under the auspices of the label, has turned this entry on its head. Though much of the best material was and still is available separately, access to it in this bulk, and with a huge range of material recorded for other leaders – the Adderleys, Shearing, Land – and with the Montgomery Brothers makes a substantial difference to our view of the guitarist, highlighting his awesome consistency, pointing a slightly accusing finger at his tendency to settle for the obvious and familiar on occasion, rarely pushing out into the more experimental mode that he had flirted with early on.

Guitar/organ trios take a little getting used to nowadays, but New Sound and Boss Guitar contain some of the guitarist's most vibrant recordings. While some of the best of the material – 'Round Midnight', 'Fried Pies' and so on – has been sampled on the Milestone sets, below, these are worth hearing and having in their entirety. For no readily discernible reason, Boss Guitar sounds flatter than the others.

On So Much, Montgomery's smooth and uncannily fluent lines and Jones's elegant two-handedness lift 'Cotton Tail' out of the ordinary. Never a blindingly fast player, Montgomery specialized in sweeping oppositions of register that lend an illusion of pace to relatively stately passages. The live Full House! pitched Montgomery in with the Wynton Kelly Trio, an association that promised a lot and delivered more.

Guitar On The Go was Wes's last release on Riverside. The dating may seem odd, but there is just one track – 'Missile Blues' – from the 1959 album. It was a remarkable and powerful end to a very fruitful relationship, and as well as the extra track there is a spankingly good alternative of 'The Way You Look Tonight' and an untitled solo-guitar improvisation which will intrigue established fans and make them wish there were more of Wes's rehearsal work and solitary musings available. Dangerous is a valuable compilation of alternatives and live tracks, issued at a price that is more approachable than the box set.

The title Fusion! is interesting because in a sense Wes was one of the figures who lay behind later attempts to integrate the rhythm and energy of rock with jazz harmonies. Ironically, there isn't much trace of that here. Jimmy Jones's arrangements are engagingly tight and spare – one has to admire the sheer workmanship of 'Baubles, Bangles And Beads' – but the one thing these sessions lack is energy. Wes sounds positively pipe-and-slippers and, but for 'God Bless The Child', rather detached and disengaged. As with all these later recordings, though, remastering significantly improves the overall balance of sound.

[illegible]

* Incredible Jazz Guitar

Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 036 Montgomery; Tommy Flanagan (p); Percy Heath (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 1/60.

This is probably the best Montgomery record currently available. His solo on 'West Coast Blues' is very nearly incredible, though there are hints of banality even there, in his trademark octave runs, which he borrowed from Django. Flanagan may have slipped the engineer a sawbuck, for he's caught beautifully, nicely forward in the mix. His lines on Sonny Rollins's buoyant 'Airegin' are exactly complementary to the guitarist's. There's a 'D-Natural Blues' and covers of 'In Your Own Sweet Way' and 'Polka Dots And Moonbeams', which further hint at Montgomery's eventual artistic inertia, but for the moment he sounds like a master.

 Encores: Volume 1 – Body And Soul Milestone MCD 9252 Montgomery; Milt Jackson (vib); Victor Feldman (vib, p); Wynton Kelly, Buddy Montgomery (p); Sam Jones, Monk Montgomery (b); Louis Hayes, Philly Joe Jones, Bobby Thomas (d). 10/60–11/63.

(*) Encores: Volume 2 – Blue'N'Boogie Milestone MCD 9261 Montgomery; Johnny Griffin (ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 6/62–11/63.

Two very different and inevitably rather patchy sets from the Milestone archive. The first album pulls together a disparate body of material and makes a certain sense of it. 'Body And Soul' is worthy of its title position, a smooth but not unsubtle reading. Volume 2 has rather more bite. Under normal circumstances Griff is too incendiary for a gig like this, but he and Wes struck up a strong relationship, and the fruits are very impressive indeed, with strong, punchy choruses from both on 'Born To Be Blue' and the inevitable 'Baubles, Bangles And Beads'.

() The Incredible Jazz Guitar Of Wes Montgomery / () Live In Belgium 1965 Definitive DRCD 11224 / Gambit 69225 Montgomery; Johnny Griffin (ts); Martial Solal (p); Arthur Harper, Michel Gaudry (b); Jimmie Lovelace, Ronnie Stephenson (d). 2 & 4/65; 3–4/65.

* Complete Live In Paris, 1965 Definitive DRCD 11244 As above; omit Solal, Gaudry, Stephenson. 65.

A star in Europe, Johnny Griffin was the guest at the Paris and Hamburg dates, the latter comprising the second half of Incredible Jazz Guitar. That set begins with rare live tapes from the Half Note Club in New York City, a tryout for Wes with Mabern, Harper and Lovelace. Though the sound isn't wonderful – Wes is fine but the excellent pianist sounds as if he's in the corridor – the playing is exquisite and this has to count as one of Wes's most sympathetic bands. Mabern is often overlooked in the roster of important piano-players of the time, but here he is a revelation, quick-fingered and dextrous and endlessly subtle in his choice of chords and passing notes. The Paris concert is one of the best things Wes ever did. His read of 'Impressions' is awesome in its simplicity and blues fire; it's done in an unusual time sequence, though, something like 11/8 in threes and a two and so delighted is Wes to have pulled it off that he laughs audibly during the final chorus. Griffin helps build up the drama, though apart from the Coltrane theme nothing here is quite as exciting as Griff's solo on 'Blue Monk' from the Hamburg date. That occasion saw Wes working with the exquisite Solal as well, an unexpected association that works better than anyone could have expected. The new Gambit release also includes the Hamburg tracks, as well as his five numbers from the BBC Jazz 625 series and (justifying the title at least) five numbers from a show somewhere in Belgium.

* Impressions: The Verve Jazz Sides Verve 521690-2 2CD Montgomery; Donald Byrd, Mel Davis, Bernie Glow, Danny Moore, Joe Newman, Jimmy Nottingham, Ernie Royal, Clark Terry, Snooky Young (t); Wayne Andre, Jimmy Cleveland, Urbie Green, Quentin Jackson, Melba Liston, John Messner, Tony Studd, Bill Watrous, Chauncey Welsh (tb); Jimmy Buffington (frhn); Don Butterfield, Harvey Phillips (tba); Jerome Richardson (ts, ss, f); Stan Webb (as, bs, cl); Ray Beckenstein (as); Bob Ashton, Jerry Dodgion, Romeo Penque (reeds); Danny Bank (bs, af, f, bcl); Walter Kane (bs, cl); Herbie Hancock, Roger Kellaway, Wynton Kelly, Bobby Scott (p); Jimmy Smith (org); Jack Jennings (vib); Al Casamenti, Bucky Pizzarelli (g); Paul Chambers, Bob Cranshaw, George Duvivier (b); Jimmy Cobb, Sol Gubin, Grady Tate (d); Ray Barretto, Willie Bobo (perc). 11/64–11/66.

 Movin' Wes Verve 521433-2 Montgomery; Ernie Royal, Clark Terry, Snooky Young (t); Jimmy Cleveland, Urbie Green, Quentin Jackson, Chauncey Welsh (tb); Don Butterfield (tba); Jerome Richardson (sax, f); Bobby Scott (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Grady Tate (d); Willie Bobo (perc). 11/64.

 Bumpin' Verve 539062-2 Montgomery; Roger Kellaway (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Helcio Milito, Grady Tate (d); strings. 5/65.

(*) Smokin' At The Half Note Verve 829578 2 Montgomery; Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 5 & 9/65.

 Willow Weep For Me Verve 589486 2 As above; unknown brass and woodwinds. 6 & 10/65.

(*) Tequila Verve 547769-2 Montgomery; George Devens (vib); Ron Carter (b); Grady Tate (d); Ray Barretto (perc); Bernard Eichem, Arnold Eidus, Paul Gershman, Emmanuel Green, Julius Held, Harry Lookofsky, Joe Malin, Gene Orloff (vn); Abe Kessler, Charles McCracken, George Ricci, Harvey Shapiro (clo). 3 & 5/66.

(*) California Dreaming Verve 827842-2 Montgomery; Mel Davis, Bernie Glow, Jimmy Nottingham (t); Wayne Andre, John Messner, Bill Watrous (tb); Jimmy Buffington (frhn); Don Butterfield (tba); Ray Beckenstein (as, picc, f); Stan Webb (as, bs, cl, eng hn); Herbie Hancock (p); Al Casamenti (g); Jack Jennings (vib); Richard Davis (b); Grady Tate (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 66.

The 'jazz' in the title of the two-CD set is a careful hedge, in recognition of the unreconstructed commerciality of much that Wes was doing at the time. Just as the Riversides have realigned the pre-1963 material, this elegantly packaged compilation brings together the best of albums like Willow Weep For Me, The Small Group Recordings, Just Walkin', Smokin' At The Half Note, California Dreaming, Goin' Out Of My Head and Movin' Wes.

Bumpin' was the record that established a working relationship between Wes, Creed Taylor and arranger Don Sebesky, who is responsible for the strings. As with much of the guitarist's work, it has acquired a new currency through the acid-jazz movement. Without those loyalties it isn't so much revelatory as pleasantly irrelevant. Restored to pristine condition, it's technically flawless and expressively a bit dead, though 'Bumpin'' itself is as lovely as ever.

As an entity, Movin' has a lot more presence than the majority of the later discs; remastering brings guitar and band into better balance than on the original release. The only soloist on the date, Wes is playing very smoothly indeed. Tunes like 'The Phoenix Love Theme', 'Moca Flor' and 'Theodora' are little more than beefed-up elevator music. The title-tune (which comes in two parts, 'Born To Be Blue' and 'People') is a bit more focused, but there still isn't much excitement.

Willow Weep For Me isn't quite as soporific as it maybe sounds, but there isn't much drama there either; the later brass and woodwind overdubs, conducted by Claus Ogerman, swamp a perfectly good quartet date. As if to underline the missed potential, it's Smokin' At The Half Note that stands out. Pat Metheny is on record as saying this is the greatest guitar jazz album of all time, an extravagant claim and, without context, a misleading one. It's certainly Wes's most stimulating association. Kelly stokes the blues material and emerges as a subtle and dynamic soloist, to the extent that an equally enthused fan might claim this as the best piano trio with guitar album of all time. 'No Blues' and 'Unit 7' are extraordinary performances; Wes's solo on the latter is his time capsule piece, quintessential Montgomery played with taste and fire combined. Whatever its league position, Smokin' is well worth having.

Tequila is one of the sessions that Verve have plundered in order to reposition Wes as a founding father of both acid jazz and a smooth, ambient saloon funk. It finds Montgomery rather wearily putting in his time with the Claus Ogerman Orchestra. 'Bumpin' On Sunset' is of course a long-standing favourite (subsequently revived by Brian Auger's Oblivion Express in the jazz equivalent of minimalist trance music). Montgomery is still harmonically inventive, but the arrangements are too pre-packaged for very much in the way of surprises.

California Dreaming kicks off with another pop hit but the record contains some brief flashes of Montgomery the jazz master and it's better than most of the later records.

(*) A Day In The Life A&M 75021 0816 2 Montgomery; Herbie Hancock (p); Ron Carter (b); Grady Tate (d); Ray Barretto (perc); woodwinds, stg. 6/67.

 Down Here On The Ground A&M 396994-2 Montgomery; Hubert Laws, George Marge, Romeo Penque (f, ob); Mike Mainieri (vib); Ron Carter (b); Grady Tate (d); Ray Barretto, Bobby Rosengarden (perc); stg. 12/67, 1/68.

(*) A Day In The Life / Down Here On The Ground BGO CD 718 As above discs. 6/67–1/68.

 Road Song A&M 75021 0822 2 Montgomery; Marvin Stamm (t); Wayne Andre, Paul Faulise (tb); Jimmy Buffington (frhn); Herbie Hancock, Hank Jones (p); Ron Carter, Richard Davis (b); Ed Shaughnessy, Grady Tate (d); Ray Barreto (perc); woodwinds, strings. 5/68.

There is precious little jazz on these chart-orientated sessions for Herb Alpert's label. The familiar parallel octaves are there in plenty, but Montgomery does little more than register the melody, repeat it with some slight elaboration, negotiate a middle eight as straightforwardly as possible, and then on out to a faded ending.

A Day In The Life and the feeble Road Song are both larded with pop songs in unchallenging but often overbearing arrangements; 'Eleanor Rigby', 'A Day In The Life', 'Greensleeves' are all played straight. Wes's moments of genuine artistry are few and far between and one longs to hear some of the tracks done as small groups with more attention to Hancock and Carter in particular, but also with a more realistic mix for the lyrical Tate, who made the drums sing.

One can't begrudge Wes his moment of commercial success but he had little time to enjoy it: just five weeks after Road Song was taped, he succumbed to a heart attack.

Also, in brief:

() Complete Recordings With Lionel Hampton Definitive DRCD 11241 2CD. 1/49 & 1/50.

A swindle. Wes is virtually inaudible, lost in hefty ensembles.

 The Alternative Wes Montgomery Milestone M 47065. 10/60–11/63.

A mess of material and no maps. There aren't many revelations here.

 Complete Live At Jorgies Definitive DRCD 11247. 8/61–11/63.

Live material keeps turning up. This material has been available before, but never in complete form. Four extra tracks from 1963 and a different group.

(*) Jazz Masters 14 /  Ultimate /  Talkin' Verve – Roots Of Acid Jazz Verve 519826-2 / 539787-2 / 529580-2. 64–66.

Three strong compilations drawn from Verve's capacious catalogue of Montgomery material. Some inevitable overlaps. George Benson selects his master's work for Ultimate.

 Body And Soul Ronnie Scott's Jazz House JHAS 604. 4 & 5/65.

Souvenirs from a fondly remembered British visit, where most music fans were decamping to rock'n'roll. Stan Tracey's trio accompanies.

Montgomery Brothers

GROUP

The Montgomery 'family' group, which worked in San Francisco in 1960–1.

 Groove Yard Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 139 Buddy Montgomery (vib, p); Wes Montgomery (g); Monk Montgomery (b); Bobby Thomas (d). 1/61.

Monk and Buddy doubtless gained considerably from their association with Wes, but he also gained a sympathetic, supportive group which never quite attained its full potential in the midst of Wes's Riverside period. This record represents the group's best output. Buddy's vibes-playing was not quite in the Milt Jackson class but it was more than workmanlike, and his piano-playing, which developed in years to come, is bright and rhythmic, with a slightly melancholy quality which suits the group very well. Monk has always been overshadowed, but the CD transfer allows him to come through quite strongly and his passage-work on 'If I Should Lose You' and 'Groove Yard' is quite impressive.

Tete Montoliu (1933–97)

PIANO

Born blind – and subsequently hearing-impaired too – in Barcelona and played and recorded with visitors to his local scene in the '50s before being internationally discovered. He toured widely in the '70s and '80s but died from lung cancer in 1997.

 Primeros Pasos Discmedi Blau 4189 Montoliu; Manuel Mercedes, Ramón Aragall (t); Lionel Hampton (vib); Billy Mackel (g); Peter Badie, José Vives (b); Enrique Cifuentes (b, v); Ramón Farrán, Albert 'June' Gardner, Rafael Verdura (d, perc); Pedrito Díaz (perc); Jorge Candela, Jorge Pérez (perc, v); María Angélica (castanets); Enrique Domínguez, Lorenzo González, Pilar Morales (v). 6/54–6/56.

Almost unbelievably, the first tracks here have Montoliu as a 12-year-old member of the Cuarteto Latino recording a 78 for Dutch Decca. His facility is already evident, as it was to any musical visitors to Barcelona, and the sequence ends with three tracks – the only three that featured Tete – from Lionel Hampton's Flamenco Five. The distinctive Catalan swing – a sort of dip in the beat – and unusual, folkish harmonics are already evident. Much of the rest of the set has a novelty feel now, but as an indication of 'first steps' it's an extraordinary document.

(*) A Tot Jazz! Fresh Sound FSRCD 448 Montoliu; Eric Peter (b); Billy Brooks (d). 65.

The first jazz 12-inch LP recorded in Spain, now compiled with a second disc taken from the same sessions in Barcelona. It isn't Bill Evans, and the Jamboree club isn't the Village Vanguard, but these are extraordinary standards performances, vividly melodic, harmonically astute and driven along as much by the pianist's own unfailing sense of time as by the rhythm section. His bop touch is best sampled on 'Au Privave', but elsewhere he calls on swing, classical models (Mompou?) and folk forms. 'Israel', 'Secret Love' and 'How High The Moon' are outstanding. Impeccable modern piano jazz.

 That's All Steeplechase SCCD 31199 Montoliu (p solo). 9/71.
 Lush Life Steeplechase SCCD 31216 Montoliu (p solo). 9/71.
(*) It's About Blues Time Fresh Sound FSR-CD 305 Montoliu; Dusko Goykovich (t); Ferdinand Povel (ts); Robert Langereis (b); Joe Nay (d). 11/71.

Montoliu was a European maverick whose ebullient music could be tender, memorably exciting, gracefully virtuosic. Dazzlingly fast in execution, his improvisations are mostly based on a standard bebop repertoire, yet at his best he seemed driven to making his music fresh and new from record to record. From moment to moment he might suggest Tatum, Powell or Garner, and his feeling for blues playing was particularly sharp. He began recording in 1958, but most of his '60s sessions as a leader are still hidden on obscure, out-of-print Spanish labels (for contemporaneous work as a sideman, see under Dexter Gordon's entry). Frustratingly, a live set for Impulse! at the Village Vanguard in 1967, with Richard Davis and Elvin Jones, has never been released.

Montoliu opened a prolific decade of recording with a single session in Munich, half of which was released at the time by Enja, the remainder turning up many years later on the Steeplechase albums. Little to choose among the three discs (the Enja will have to be sought in the secondhand bins now). The question of Montoliu's employment of his Catalan roots in a jazz environment is an interesting one: his oft-quoted remark 'Basically, all Catalans are blacks' isn't very helpful, but there's little doubt that he is exceptionally responsive to using his native music in a post-bop setting.

It's About Blues Time brings back an enjoyable quintet session from the Barcelona scene of 1971. Joe Nay makes a tremendous noise at the drums and, with Povel coming on like he's just heard his first Coltrane record, the marathon blues which opens the set hits a formidable high. Goykovich is in spanking form throughout and his 'Bosnia Calling' is impressive. The one who suffers, ironically, is Montoliu: the fierce studio separation shunts him to one side, and he's well down in the mix anyway.

 Catalonian Fire / (*) Tete! Steeplechase SCCD 31017 / 31029 Montoliu; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 5/74.

 Music For Perla Steeplechase SCCD 31021 Montoliu (p solo). 5/74.

() Tête A Tete / () Tootie's Tempo Steeplechase SCCD 31054 / 31108 Montoliu; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath (d). 2/76.

 Words Of Love Steeplechase SCCD 31084 Montoliu (p solo). 3/76.

Montoliu seemed to release a lot of records in the '70s, but actually he had only a few concentrated bursts of recording. The four albums by the trio with NHØP and Heath remain among his most impressive offerings: played with both elegance and fire, his improvisations on favourite themes have a poise and dash that make one overlook the frequent appearance of many familiar runs and manipulations of the beat. Pedersen, who loves to play with a pianist of outsize technique, holds nothing back in his own playing, while Heath's rather gruff and unfussy drumming makes him a nearly ideal timekeeper for the situation. Of the Steeplechases, Tootie's Tempo and Tete! are particularly good, but any one is highly entertaining. The solo records are slightly less interesting.

 Boston Concert Steeplechase SCCD 31152 Montoliu (p solo). 3/80.

 I Want To Talk About You Steeplechase SCCD 31137 Montoliu; George Mraz (b); Al Foster (d). 3/80.

Another year that turned out to be a busy one. Mraz and Foster weren't Tete's ideal rhythm section but they don't get in his way too much, and the solo concert from Boston includes some of his most detailed and handsome playing.

 The Music I Like To Play: Volumes 1–4 Soul Note 121180 / 121200 / 121230 / 121250 Montoliu (p solo). 12/86; 12/86; 1/90; 1/90.
Montoliu tended throughout his career to get maximum mileage from each session. The difference on the later date here is that the playing is inexplicably more percussive and direct. The earlier Soul Notes number among the most finished of Montoliu's albums, with a superior studio sound and one or two unexpected choices: Bobby Hutcherson's 'Little B's Poem', for instance, on the first record. But some routine improvisations betray that the pianist can defer to familiar patterns on some tunes that he knew a little too well. There's a nice smattering of Monk tunes on the latter pair and some ballads that have not previously figured in the Catalan's discography. Though it might seem a hefty investment to spring for all four, these are better value than most.

(*) And Orquestra Taller De Músics Discmedi Blau 46769 Montoliu; Jordi Rossy (t, d); Juanjo Arrom (tb); Perico Sambeat (ss, as); Xavier Figuerola, Eladio Reinón (ts); Jorge Luis Gámez (g); Zé Eduardo, Mario Rossy (b); David Xirgu (d). 6/88.
A terrific late date, with a strong Iberian band and fine arrangements by Thad Jones and Ernie Wilkins. 'C.T.A.' is a terrific read and there's a cracking version of Joe Henderson's 'Recorda Me'. Interesting, too, to hear bassist Eduardo, who recently became a recording star on Clean Feed, contributing some strong themes. Good sound. Was this released before? It seems only to have appeared in 2005.

 Music For Anna Mas I Mas 002 Montoliu; Hein van de Geyn (b); Idris Muhammad (d). 10/92.
Montoliu surfaced only rarely in the '90s, but this club set suggests that his playing lost little of its flash or surprise. The dramatic deconstruction of 'I'll Remember April' is a single example, but it's something he does at some point on most of the tunes on offer. As with Solal, the pianist's uncommon syntax has become a commonplace with the wider currency of his work via recordings, yet the impact of his most vivid improvising remains startling, and it's good to have this recent reminder. Sound is decent – Van de Geyn comes through strongly – though the piano itself sounds like a sometimes unresponsive instrument.

Also, in brief:

 Momentos Inolvidables De Una Vida: Barcelona 1965–1992 Fresh Sound FSRCD6001. 65–92.
Invaluable double-CD compilation of his best years.

(*) Presenta Elia Fleta Fresh Sound FSRCD 50. 66.
The singer's voice is good and her delivery accomplished, but there isn't enough Montoliu on this to sustain interest.

 Catalonian Nights: Volumes 1–3 Steeplechase SCCD 31148 / 31241 / 31433. 5/80.
Three discs of trios with John Heard (b) and Tootie Heath (d). Poorly balanced sound undercuts sometimes thrilling interplay.

 Face To Face Steeplechase SCCD 31185. 4/82.
Dazzling duets with Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b).

 Sweet 'N' Lovely: Volumes 1 & 2 Fresh Sound FSR-CD 161 / 162. 6/89.
Genial and more pacific duets with Mundell Lowe (g).

James Moody (born 1925)

TENOR, ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE, VOICE

Initially influenced by Lester Young, he devised a harder and more abrasive tone, but then also majored on flute. His solo on 'I'm In The Mood For Love' became the basis of the vocalese fad. He prefers to be addressed as 'Moody', nothing else. Still burgeoning.

 James Moody 1949–1950 /  Moody's Blues Classics 1169 / Prestige 24228 Moody; Ernie Royal (t); Ted Kelly, Nat Peck (tb); Arne Domnérus, Russell Procope (as); Jacques Dieval, Raymond Fol, Thore Swanerud, Gösta Theselius (p); Rolf Berg (g); Yngve Åkerberg, Pierre Michelot, Emmanuel Soudieux (b); Anders Burman, Kenny Clarke, Richard Frost, Jack Norén (d); Annie Ross (v). 49–50.

 James Moody 1950–1951 Classics 1263 Moody; Ernie Royal (t); Leppe Sundevall (bt); Ted Kelly, Nat Peck (tb); Marshall Allen, Arne Domnérus, Hubert Fol (as); Carl-Henrik Norin (ts); Lars Gullin (bs) Raymond Fol (p, cel); Rolf Larsson, Rafe Schecroun (p); Gunnar Almstedt, Alvin Banks, Wendell Marshall, Pierre Michelot (b); George Ballard, Benny Bennett, Anders Burman, Kenny Clarke (d). 4/50–1/51.
Moody was in Europe for most of this period, working in France and Sweden, where he achieved considerable celebrity. Some of these sides were cut under Ernie Royal's leadership, which makes their inclusion slightly suspect under Classics' usually restrictive ethos. However, it's the saxophonist's gossamer-light tenor-lines that distinguish these cuts, which overlap the two volumes. Most of the other material on 1263 was made in Paris or Stockholm with a variety of competent but hardly eye-opening bands. Arne Domnérus provides some interest on the 1949–1950 compilation, as he did on the earlier disc. This material is also available – with rather cleaner sound – on a Prestige reissue from 1999. The sound of Leppe Sundevall's bass trumpet is of interest on the 23 January 1951 cuts, but there's not much else to listen to except Moody's relaxed and unchallenged soloing. 'I Can't Get Started', from 9 October 1950, is a gem and worth the set on its own.

 James Moody 1951 Classics 1388 Moody; Sixten Eriksson (t); Lars Gullin (bs); Rolf Larsson, Raymond Fol (p); Gunnar Almstedt, Pierre Michelot (b); Jack Norén, Anders Burman, Pierre Lemarchand (d); orchestra. 1–7/51.
This starts with six small-group titles cut in Stockholm, where the main interest is in hearing Moody swapping phrases with Lars Gullin – and, if anything, it's the Swede who comes off rather better. Next he fronts eight titles arranged by André Hodeir for orchestra and soloist, and while it's nothing special, it's interesting to hear him on French tunes such as 'Aimer Comme Je T'Aime'. The rest of the disc has eight quintet titles which were his final Paris recordings, for Vogue. Moody plays alto and Roger Guerin is on trumpet: decent Eurobop, though rather scrappy sound.

(*) Moody's Moods For Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1837 Moody; Dave Burns (t); William Shepherd (tb); Pee Wee Moore (bs); Sadik Hakim, Jimmy Boyd (p); John Latham (b); Joe Harris, Clarence Johnson (d); Eddie Jefferson, Iona Wade (v). 1, 4 & 9/54, 1/55.

(*) Hi Fi Party Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1780 Moody; Dave Burns (t); Bill Shepherd (tb); Numa Moore (bs); Jimmy Boyd (p); John Latham (b); Clarence Johnson (d); Eddie Jefferson (v). 9/54.

(*) Wail, Moody, Wail Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1791 As above, except omit Jefferson. 1, 8 & 12/55.

He's joined on Hi Fi Party and on the extra 'I Got The Blues' on Moods by Eddie Jefferson, who reworked a vocal version of the hit, thereby (allegedly) giving King Pleasure the idea for adding his own lyrics to bebop tunes. Moody has a strongly vocalized tone and frequently appears to shape a solo to the lyric of a tune rather than simply to the chords or the written melody, and that vocalized sound is perhaps more evident on his alto-playing, though he even adapts it later in his career to flute, using a 'legitimate' version of Roland Kirk's vocalization. The saxophonist was off the scene for much of the '70s, certainly as far as significant recording was concerned, and his reputation went into something of a decline. Without star names, though, both Hi Fi Party and the rather less gimmicky and straightahead Wail establish a strong, individual sound that deserves to be more widely known and that certainly stands up very strongly alongside later works.

 Hey! It's James Moody Lone Hill Jazz LHJR 10195 Moody; Johnny Coles, Flip Richard, Earl Turner, Sonny Cohn, Howard McGhee (t); William Shepherd, John Avant (tb); Bill Atkins, Lenny Druss (as); Vito Price, Sandy Mosse, Eddie Johnson (ts); Tata Houston, Pat Patrick, Musa Kaleem, Pee Wee Moore (bs); Jimmy Boyd, Gene Kee, Junior Mance (p); John Gray (g); Eldee Young, John Latham, Johnny Pate (b); Clarence Johnston, Red Holt (d); Eddie Jefferson (v). 2/56–12/59.

Basically this couples the small-group albums Flute N' The Blues and Hey! It's James Moody and annoyingly chucks in three tracks from other records altogether. Each session dates from his association with Argo, whose bargain-basement production values tend to show up the music: why didn't they remake 'Don't Blame Me', which has an awful clinker from the leader? They're entertaining sets, all the same, if one isn't looking for a masterpiece. A big-band version of 'Last Train From Overbrook' is one of the 'bonus' pieces.

(*) The Legendary 1963–64 Sessions Lone Hill Jazz LHJR 10313 Moody; Johnny Coles (t); Thad Jones (flhn); Patti Bown (p); Jim Hall (g); Richard Davis, Reggie Workman (b); Al 'Tootie' Heath, Mel Lewis (d). 63–64.

* Fly Me To The Moon Lone Hill LHJR 10287 Moody; Paul Serrano (t); John Avant (tb); Kenny Barron (p); George Eskridge (g); Ernest Outlaw, Chris White (b); Rudy Collins, Marshall Thompson (d). 1/62, 9/63.

Lone Hill are doing sterling work in restoring Moody's deleted '60s work and in the process revealing how originally and idiosyncratically he evolved beyond bop, particularly in his association with producer Tom McIntosh. Two terrific bands on the first of these, which brings together Great Day (originally Chess) and the later Running The Gamut (Scepter). Jones and Coles are ideal foils in the front line, but it's the bassists and drummers who underline how confidently Moody was experimenting in post-bop: limber, agile, lateral. The earlier of the dates on Fly Me To The Moon compiled here is Another Bag, an Argo date that makes a lot of later soul-jazz sound decidedly jaded and formulaic. The later Comin' On Strong, with a guitar in the ensemble, and Moody pretty much on his own out in front, is even better. McIntosh wrote demanding charts that for all their visceral energy (try 'Fly Me To The Moon', 'Sassy Lady', 'Ally, Pts 1–3') hover close to the avant-garde. Moody gobbles up the challenge, sounding as magisterial as Rollins in places and as harmonically daring as Coltrane. Hugely underrated jazz.

(*) And The Brass Figures Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1009 Moody; Joe Newman, Jimmy Owens (t, flhn); Snooky Young (t); Jimmy Cleveland (tb); Don Butterfield (tba); Kenny Barron (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Mel Lewis (d). 10 & 11/66.

This took a long time to appear on CD and then disappeared again around the time of our last edition. Hard to understand the disfavour: it's a crisply arranged set (by Tom McIntosh) with an unusual sonority. Moody sticks to tenor and sounds full-voiced and fruity on 'Au Privave', 'Ruby, My Dear' and a batch of fine originals, including the too-brief 'Simplicity And Beauty'. The rhythm section is state of the art.

 Don't Look Away Now! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 925 Moody; Barry Harris (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Alan Dawson (d); Eddie Jefferson (v). 2/69.

It was relatively unusual at this time for Moody to steer clear of flute, but the defining item of this session is the saxophonist's last-ever recording with Eddie Jefferson, who turns up on 'Hey Herb! Where's Alpert!', not the best thing they ever did together, but an effective enough use of Eddie's vocal skills. Moody plays alto on 'When I Fall In Love' and 'Don't Look Away Now' and gives a superb performance on tenor on the long 'Hear Me'. There's a retread of 'Last Train From Overbrook', which will appeal to anyone who loves the song or who's hipped to Moody's extraordinary story of survival and growth. At just 40 minutes, one looks to more material, even if just a miscued alternative, but none is forthcoming. We have no idea how much – if any – of this session still lies in the vaults.

 The Teachers /  Heritage Hum / The Teachers Sanctuary 81222 / Collectables COL 5617 Moody; Richard Meisterman, Jay Silva, Bob Summers, Jay Thomas (t); Michael Gibson (tb); John Huston (vtb); Adam Ippolito (tba); Joe Brazil (ts); Bill Chelf, Mike Longo (p); Howie Wyeth (p, org); Paul Dickler, Steve McCord (g); Billy Elmiger, Clint Houston, Sam Jones, Peter Petruccelli (b); Barry Lazarowitz (d, perc); Freddie Waits, Chip White (d); Otis Smith (perc); Eddie Jefferson (v). 70.

Teachers, just one of two very different albums Moody released in 1970, is ostensibly an extended tribute to those figures – musical and non-musical – who inspired him. An eclectic bunch to be sure, including JFK, Martin Luther King, Malcolm X and the Beatles. The two albums (Heritage Hum is also available in the same reissue package) could hardly be more different, the first thick with production by Howie Wyeth and others, the second a quartet date with a crisper attack from the leader and much simpler lines. The album's every bit as varied, featuring some deeply felt things like Bill Chelf's 'Rest Sweetly, Brother Dove' and 'Unchained', alongside more skittish things like the Lennon–McCartney 'Hello Goodbye' and 'Travel On' and 'Parker's Mood', which see the quartet augmented by singer Eddie Jefferson, a significant reunion for Moody. Neither is a great album, though the small-group tracks from Heritage Hum are streets ahead of the bigger arrangements. As a sample of Moody's range and ability to juggle tones and moods, it's pretty good. Also available on the Collectables format, though it has one track fewer: for some reason 'Soul Searching' is missing.

 Feelin' It Together Savoy 17276 Moody; Kenny Barron (p); Larry Ridley (b); Freddie Waits (d). 73.

Formerly on Muse, then from 1998 on Joel Dorn's short-lived reissue label 32 Jazz, this quartet session from 1973 has defied oblivion again, offering a further glimpse into Moody's overlooked work from the '70s. Again, Barron is on electric piano, an instrument he invested with considerable expressive personality;

we're not too sure about the harpsichord switch, though. The redoubtable Waits does his thing at the kit as he did on a number of Moody dates from this time. Long versions of 'Anthropology' and 'Autumn Leaves' will attract standards lovers, but there are also two strong originals from the pianist and a helping of Jobim just to alter the swing a bit. It would be good to see some more of Moody's Muse catalogue back in circulation: Never Again from the previous year was his promise to stick to tenor and abandon the alto for ever. As Feelin' It Together, with its alto and flute features, bears out, it was a promise made to be broken.

 Moody's Party Telarc 83382 Moody; Arturo Sandoval (t); Grover Washington Jr (ss); Mulgrew Miller (p); Todd Coolman (b); Terri Lyne Carrington (d); Roy Ayers (v). 3/95.

The old dog turned 70 with a party at the Blue Note, compèred by the one and only Bill Cosby. The seven tunes selected for release are pretty familiar, but with an unexpected emphasis on bebop classics: 'Groovin' High', 'Parker's Mood', 'Bebop'. Moody is in sparkling form on all his horns and rises to the guest appearances of Washington and Sandoval with just the right mixture of challenge and graciousness. A lively, uncomplicated record to mark a significant anniversary.

(*) Homage Savoy Jazz 17200 Moody; David Hazeltine (p); Todd Coolman (b); Anthony Pinciotti (d). 03.

As he approached his 80th birthday, Moody showed no sign of slowing up or, worse still, hanging up his saxophones. The closing track, 'Love Was The Cause For All Good Things', is a reworking of a Kid Next Door rap which might seem inappropriate for a man of Moody's age, except when you think that his role in the framing of vocalese put him at the very centre of an earlier craze. Most of the material is for quartet, with Hazeltine very much in charge and contributing one fine original, 'We All Love Moody'. There is, though, the delightful experiment of an arrangement of James Newton Howard's main title-sequence to the film version of Glengarry Glen Ross, the David Mamet play. Moody is here augmented by a larger wind ensemble, but it's the leader's voice that carries the track, as he does everything else. Joe Zawinul and Herbie Hancock both contribute to a celebratory liner-note, and both deliver a tune, 'A Message To Moody' and 'Into The Shadows' respectively. The best thing on a thoroughly entertaining set – that hip-hop nonsense apart – is a version of Kenny Barron's 'And Then Again', testimony to Kenny's great gifts but also the lasting affection in which Moody is held.

Also, in brief:

(*) James Moody 1948–1949 Classics 1116. 10/48–10/49.

The early sessions were occasionally quirky bop, eight titles (with The Modernists) for Blue Note, the rest recorded with Scandinavian and other European bands.

(*) James Moody 1951–1954 Classics 1410. 10/51–4/54.

Back in the States, and capitalizing on vocalese success with jive vocals from Babs Gonzales and Eddie Jefferson, but for the most part very ordinary.

(*) Blues And Other Colors Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 954. 69.

Restricted to soprano and flute for this curious nonet session.

 Timeless Aura Universe 52. 76.

A welcome date in a fallow period, but producer Ed Bland's material isn't much and the '70s electric sound takes some getting used to.

Jemeel Moondoc (born 1951)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Comparisons between his fiery alto and the styles of Ornette Coleman or Jimmy Lyons are useful as navigation lines, but they don't do justice to his originality. He took some time away from music, working in architectural design.

 Konstanze's Delight Soul Note 121041 Moondoc; Roy Campbell (t); Khan Jamal (vib); William Parker (b); Dennis Charles (d); Ellen Christi (v). 10/81.

 Judy's Bounce Soul Note 121051 Moondoc; Fred Hopkins (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 11/81.

 We Don't Eremite 43 Moondoc; Dennis Charles (d). 81.

(*) Nostalgia In Times Square Soul Note 121141 Moondoc; Bern Nix (g); Ron Burton (p); William Parker (b); Dennis Charles (d). 11/85.

It was Cecil Taylor who turned the young Moondoc on to modern jazz, and he's remained a devoted disciple ever since. His early group, Ensemble Muntu, which also included the ubiquitous William Parker, was very much in the Taylor mould, but Moondoc remained open to other influences as well. 'One For Ornette' on Judy's Bounce accounts for only the most obvious; his playing style sits somewhere between Ornette's country wail and Jimmy Lyons's street-corner preaching.

Konstanze's Delight consists of just three long pieces, the first of them an opportunity for the whole band to show its stuff. As so often in this context, Parker is the cement, setting off on a dark, seductive chant that gradually reels in Moondoc, Campbell and the underrated Jamal, who conjures up storms on this record. The two horns seem to be engaged in a game of one-on-one ball, chasing, dodging, body-checking and setting up half a dozen false climaxes before the whole thing unwinds. At longer than half an hour, it palls pretty seriously before time's up, but it's part of a live set and is doubtless pretty typical of what Moondoc was doing at the time. 'Chasin' The Moon' is high-octane stuff, a starring vehicle for Jamal and Christi.

Judy's Bounce was recorded only a month later, but it's a very different sound, reminiscent more than anything of Ornette's trio with David Izenzon and Charles Moffett. The Coleman tribute is based on an authentically simple march-based riff, over which Moondoc declaims like a man possessed. 'Echo In Blue' might be one of Ornette's dirges, except that it stays much closer to bebop harmonies. The opening 'Judy's Bounce' is terser and tighter, almost joyous, with Hopkins pushing things along at a brisk walk. The set closes as far out as Moondoc has been. 'Nimus' is one of Jupiter's shattered moons, and Moondoc responds to the idea with a lonely, plangent sound that might well serve as an interplanetary lament, one of his strongest ideas and a perfect vehicle for this particular trio.

We Don't was finally issued in 2003 and offers a further fascinating glimpse of Jemeel's '80s work. Saxophone and drums is a tough discipline, sanctified by John Coltrane's duets with Rashied Ali. These are harsher and more abstract sessions, and the more realistic parallel might be Ornette Coleman and Ed Blackwell. 'Judy's Bounce' is there again and sounds all the more interesting for the stripped-down format.

The last album of the group is interesting for the addition of a guitar-player and the abandonment of vibes for piano. It's certainly a conservative step and there's nothing on the set that really grabs the attention. Nix is most closely associated with Ornette's Prime Time experiments, but he gets little chance to play outside an Ulmer-ish R&B groove, with a few abstract flourishes.

* New World Pygmies Eremite MTE020 Moondoc; William Parker (b). 7/98.

This is Moondoc's first recorded encounter with bassist Parker since Nostalgia In Times Square and is a revelatory moment in the saxophonist's recorded output. People talk about the conversational quality of duo performance, but this is more like twin preachers in the mission hall, playing hard priest, soft priest alternately, the one threatening brimstone, the other promising redemption. Most of the writing is by Parker and includes the magnificent 'Huey Sees A Rainbow' and 'Theme For Pelikan', as well as the brief, intense 'Another Angel Goes Home', a dedication to drummer Dennis Charles, whose presence would have made this record near-perfect.

Moondoc's playing is most convincing on the opening title-track and the encore. It's Parker who holds the attention most securely, a master musician who continues to develop by the session.

 All-Stars Live In Paris Cadence CJR 1151 Moondoc; Roy Campbell (t); Zane Massey (ts); William Parker (b); Cody Moffett (d). 3/99.

 Spirit House Eremite MTE 029 Moondoc; Roy Campbell (t, flhn); Lewis 'Flip' Barnes (t); Tyrone Hill, Steve Swell (tb); Zane Massey (ts); Michael Marcus (bs); Bern Nix (g); John Voigt (b); Codaryl Moffett (d). 3/00.

 Revolt Of The Negro Lawn Jockeys Eremite MTE 028 Moondoc; Nathan Breedlove (t); Khan Jamal (vib); John Voigt (b); Codaryl Moffett (d). 5/00.

Moondoc's mergings of various free-jazz and more traditionally inflected post-bop sounds have been difficult to catch right in front of microphones, and both of the 2000 live sets have moments to enthrall, others to dismay. The quintet record offers three longish pieces, two more declamatory themes sandwiching a ballad, and while the more upbeat music draws succour from some fine improvising, the ballad seems merely drear. Spirit House gives the Jus' Grew Orchestra its first full outing. Unfortunately, the live sound is inadequate, which takes some of the sting out of the cacophonous blues, 'Quick Pick', and befuddles the details in a couple of intriguingly conducted improvisations. That said, this is a bustling, often teeming music, brought vividly to life, and given a full and flattering sound the tremendous blowout of 'Spirit House' itself would really shake the timbers.

The All-Stars gig is another slightly shambolic affair, a more pared-down sound than the Jus' Grew orchestra and therefore a sharper and less filled-in sound. Much of the emphasis falls on the leader, but Massey's rugged tenor and Campbell's yelping trumpet make their presence felt as well.

 New World Pygmies Volume 2 Eremite MTE 030/1 2CD Moondoc; William Parker (b, bombard, gralle); Hamid Drake (d). 11/00.

A repeat match with Parker across two gigs on successive days: Drake enters the fray on the first, cut at Chicago's Velvet Lounge. Parker does some magnificent work – his arco intro to 'New World Pygmies 11/05/00' is mesmerizing – and there's a sense that he adapts better to this kind of exposed, long-form improvising than does Moondoc, who sometimes seems to noodle (though it's intense noodling, for sure). The session with Drake inevitably benefits from the drummer's mighty presence, which carries them through all the eastern skirling of this day's version of 'Pygmies'. An intermittently powerful document which, as with so much in an obsessively documented area, sometimes feels like too much has been taken down.

(*) Live At The Glenn Miller Café: Volume 1 Ayler ayl 026 Moondoc; William Parker (b); Hamid Drake (d, perc). 4/02.

There's an exceptional understanding between these three, now built up over some years of collaboration. The set divides into two half-hour blocks of sound, with the slight suspicion that these improvisations were constructed with an eye on the clock. They are fascinating, but without much structural logic, so the interest lies in the moment-to-moment interaction rather than any sense of destination or progress. 'Hi-Rise' is the better of the two.

Also, in brief:

 Tri-P-Let /  Fire In The Valley Eremite MTE01 / MTE08. 6/96; 7/96.

The trio with John Voigt (b) and Laurence Cook (d) was his bread-and-butter group and these are fiery workouts, leavened with subtle musical understanding.

 Live At The Vision Festival Ayler ayl 047. 6/01.

Not clear whether the Tentet and the Jus' Grew Orchestra are one and the same. Here's a fairly raw live set by the big group which gives a clear sense of his ensemble philosophy.

 Live In Paris Cadence CJR 1151. 02.

'Not Quite Ready For Prime Time' is presumably a dig at comparisons with Ornette: an air of weary aggression pervades.

Brew Moore (1924–73)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A faithful Lester Young disciple, he played in New York in the '40s, in San Francisco in the '50s and in Europe in the '60s.

 I Should Care Steeplechase SCCD 36019 Moore; Atli Bjørn (p); Benny Nielsen (b); William Schiøpffe (d). 4/65.

Moore was a terrific but star-crossed tenor-player, at his best as good as Getz and Sims but never able to get a career together as they did. He left only a small number of records behind him. The Steeplechase album is a surviving memento from a stay in Copenhagen: solid, but not quite Brew at his best. The city turned out to be his nemesis: Moore died when he fell down some stairs in Copenhagen in 1973.

Michael Moore (born 1945)

BASS, PIANO

Moore came to New York in 1968, from his native Cincinnati, played bass with James Brown, and became a stalwart of the mainstream-modern jazz circle in the city thereafter, although he also spent time in both London and India. He has only rarely recorded as a leader.

(*) The History Of Jazz Volume 1 / * ... Volume 2 Arbors ARCD 19211 / 19256 Moore; Ken Peplowski (cl, ts); Tom Melito (d). 8/98; 4/01.

Moore's failsafe presence on the bass fiddle has made him an invincible element of his circle, and on the strength of these beautiful, surprising records it's a pity he's neglected as a leader. The first disc mixes up everything from 'That Da Da Strain' to Coltrane's 'Wise One' and 'Monk's Dream'. The second has rare nuggets from Cannonball Adderley, Strayhorn and Jim Hall, but also includes a whole series of 'abstract paintings of musicians', as Peplowski describes them, exquisite musical miniatures which seem to catch the very essence of such figures as Jimmy Rowles, Dave Brubeck, Wayne Shorter and Herbie Nichols. As a mix of repertory exercise and original music-making it's wholly successful, with echoes of such old units as the Jimmy Giuffre trio married to a contemporary and swinging feel that is magically spontaneous. Moore's note-choices are marvellous, Peplowski has rarely sounded as characterful on both clarinet and tenor, and Melito has excellent hands.

Michael Moore (born 1954)

CLARINET, BASS CLARINET, ALTO SAXOPHONE, ETC.

Based in Europe, where he has found a more sympathetic outlet for his demanding music. Main associations include Gerry Hemingway, Available Jelly, Clusone 3 and Jewels & Binoculars. He runs the Ramboy label.

(*) Home Game Ramboy 02 Moore; Herb Robertson (t, c); Fred Hersch (p); Mark Helias (b); Gerry Hemingway (d). 10/88.
 Négligé Ramboy 04 Moore; Alex Maguire (p); Ernst Reijseger (clo); Michael Vatcher (perc). 12/89, 5/92.
 Klezmokum Ramboy 07 Moore; Larry Fishkind (tba); Burton Greene (p, perc); Roberto Haliffi (d, perc). 92.
* Chicoutimi / * Bering Ramboy 06 / 11 Moore; Fred Hersch (p); Mark Helias (b). 9/93.
(*) Tunes For Horn Guys Ramboy 08 Moore; Wolter Wierbos (tb); Frank Gratkowski (as, bcl); Ab Baars, Tobias Delius (ts, cl). 4, 5 & 8/95.
(*) Mount Olympus Ramboy 13 Moore; Alex Maguire (p). 98.

Ramboy is Moore's own label, named for his son (apparently R. A. Moore or some such) and largely dedicated to disseminating his own music. Home Game was recorded in New York City with an intriguing quintet which embraces the avant-garde and mainstream jazz. As ever, Robertson is a dominant presence, squally and lyrical by turns, with a fierce attack and a gentle edge to temper it. On the long 'Suburban Housewives', he and Moore interact in an unexpectedly complex way, weaving together wind figures which might almost come from a more formal conservatory piece. Everything points to the record being an attempt to recapture early and family memories, but it's not just this that suggests a seemingly improbable similarity to some of Charlie Haden's Quartet West recordings. The relation of bass, piano and horns, together with old-fashioned, swing-influenced drumming from Hemingway, is very much the same, and Moore's clarinet has never again sounded so Goodman-like. Hersch is the surprise package, a notably eclectic player who moves freely between idioms and genres but who always maintains a consistency of presence and expression.

On Négligé, Moore has assembled another like-minded group with a similar balance of sound. Maguire is completely at ease in environments like these, and his own 'Sparky' and 'Epigram' sit at the heart of the disc. There are 15 tracks, offering a good initial sample of Moore's music. Chicoutimi and Bering are the ones to have, exquisitely executed and thoughtfully expressed, poised between modernist and mainstream, wacky and sentimental by turns. The latter is intriguing for its choice of material, which ranges from Irving Berlin's 'The Best Thing For You' (probably worked up with the Clusone 3), Wayne Shorter's 'Albatross', John Lewis's '2 Degrees East, 3 Degrees West', Theodorakis's 'Vradiazi' and Jimmy Rowles's 'The Peacocks'. Either of these records will delight.

Klezmokum is superficially reminiscent of Don Byron's Mickey Katz project, but Moore is both a more serious and a more humorous musician, so the blend of moods is altogether more satisfactory. 'Oy Tate S'iz Gut' is spot-on: emotive, wry and so totally ironic that it sounds entirely sincere. The presence of the legendary Burton Greene guarantees interest, and the two rhythm players yomp along with enthusiasm.

Moore's saxophone work on Tunes For Horn Guys is sterling, but the real meat of this still quite slim output (more may be found on Ramboy and on other small labels) is on the trio album with Hersch and Helias, where Moore is able to work in a free but strictly controlled environment, trading on that dry but not unexpressive tone.

The duos with Alex Maguire open up a new dimension again, drawing on free improvisation but also on formal composition. The Englishman is a stunningly good player, robust and muscular, who sounds as if he is climbing Olympus by some heroically self-reliant route. Moore is as quizzically lyrical as ever, popping question marks and inverted commas on top of even the simplest melodies. A beautiful album.

(*) Jewels And Binoculars / * Floater / (*) Ships With Tattooed Sails Ramboy 15 / 20 / Upshot 043 Moore; Bill Frisell (g on Ships only); Lindsay Horner (b); Michael Vatcher (d, perc). 11 & 12/00; 5/03.

Recent years have seen several improvising projects that use the work of Bob Dylan as source material. None is more thoroughgoing and more effective than this one by Moore. He has managed to capture perfectly the precarious equilibrium of lyricism and fierce anger in songs like 'Visions Of Johanna', 'I Pity The Poor Immigrant', 'Boots Of Spanish Leather' and 'With God On Our Side'. Moore himself has never sounded more like a singer and his tone is richly vocalized, alternately sardonic and celebratory.

Though Michael brings on his clarinets, saxophone, melodica and bells, the basic instrumentation is stripped down and there is an intriguing tension between the familiar themes and the free-bop idiom. The second set is even better and takes fewer liberties with the songs (though 'All I Really Want To Do' is unrecognizable until three minutes in) and, on 'Man In The Long Black Coat', delivers one atmospheric masterpiece. Though he switches to the bass instrument for that track, Moore's clarinet is his dominant voice; alto and melodica are reserved for changes of pace and mood. The intro to 'Farewell Angelina' is outrageously beautiful. Vatcher and Horner swing the faster tracks, turning 'Buckets of Rain' into something you might have heard on a Bob Wills record.

The drummer favours a light, slightly clattery delivery which is absolutely right for this material, while Horner is unavoidably reminiscent of Charlie Haden doing his Americana stuff. Frisell extends that association on his three tracks on the third record, but he's hardly needed in this tight, durable ensemble.

(*) White Widow Ramboy 16 Moore; Alex Maguire (p); Mark Helias (b); Han Bennink (d). 1/01.

Some of the numbers here, like the opening 'Moffat', seem to be spontaneously improvised. This was a London session, recorded in a very good studio acoustic and the album is faithfully and warmly produced with a fullness of sound that suits all four players very well indeed. The longest piece is a suite of pieces by Maguire, all of them named after some Parmigiano association – cheese, ham, violets. There is nothing cheesey, hammy or artificially perfumed about any of them. Like all of Alex's work, it flows logically, intelligently and with unexpected wit, and rounds out a very effective and desirable modern jazz record. A live set from this same group would be most desirable.

 Monitor / (*) Air Street Between the Lines btl 003 / 023 Moore; Cor Fuhler (keyolin, p); Tristan Honsinger (clo). 2/99; 5/01.

Here is yet another of Moore's associations. The key (!) element here is Fuhler's curious gizmo, which is best described as a two-string viola suspended over a small keyboard. The sound is utterly distinctive and utterly compelling. Moore sounds faster on his feet in this company than on many of his projects, and his reaction time, especially on the later record, is extremely impressive. Fascinating music.

 Osiris Ramboy 22 Moore; Eric Vloeimans (t); Marc van Roon (p); Paul Berner (b); Owen Hart Jr (d). 10/05.

The most recent line-up is a quintet that once again emphasizes the jazz side of Moore's idiom. He composed all ten pieces and the American-based group swings the music vigorously without losing sight of its subtleties. By this stage Moore seems so much his own man that there's no critical language large enough to contain his expressive range.

Oscar Moore (1912–81)

GUITAR

Influenced by Charlie Christian, he enjoyed near-superstardom in the Nat Cole Trio.

 Oscar Moore Quartet With Carl Perkins VSOP 34 Moore; Carl Perkins (p); Joe Comfort (b); Lee Young (d). 54.

Moore's easy style is so intent on not frightening the horses that one might well miss its subtleties. His originals on this well-earned spotlit moment are mostly workmanlike variations on basic changes, but he plays a good blues and with Perkins on the disc (this is likely to be its main selling-point) there's enough interesting harmonic activity for anyone. A lot of the tracks are jukebox-short but they're often the best.

Ralph Moore (born 1956)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

British-born, he went to live with his father in the US, turning from trumpet to saxophone. Busy, but his own career seems to have stalled.

 Round Trip Reservoir RSR CD 104 Moore; Brian Lynch (t, flhn); Kevin Eubanks (g); Benny Green (p); Rufus Reid (b); Kenny Washington (d). 12/85.
 623 C Street Criss Cross 1028 Moore; David Kikoski (p); Buster Williams (b); Billy Hart (d). 2/87.
(*) Rejuvenate! Criss Cross 1035 Moore; Steve Turre (tb, conch); Mulgrew Miller (p); Peter Washington (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d). 2/88.

Moore has always known who he is and where he is going, even if in the early days his self-confidence was not yet accompanied by much profundity. A hard-bopper in the approved retro style, he has demonstrated that there is still plenty of good music to squeeze out of the idiom. Moore does nothing to ironize it or spice it up with contemporary references (other, perhaps, than Kevin Eubanks's soupy guitar on parts of Round Trip, for which he also wrote the final track).

Rudy Van Gelder has been engineering this kind of material for longer than even he cares to remember, and all the records are technically flawless. The performances are equally unexceptionable but may prove a little cool. Though his writing skills have sharpened considerably ('Josephine', 'C.R.M.' and 'Song For Soweto' on Rejuvenate!), he draws much of his material from piano-centred late bop – Bud Powell's 'Un Poco Loco' on 623 C Street – though rarely anything as ambitious as Elmo Hope's inventively Monkish 'One Second, Please', which appears on a later record.

His soprano-playing, restricted to 'Cecilia' and 'Christina' on 623 C Street, still needs thinking out, and he seems to have some intonation and breath-control problems, neither of which are remotely evident in his supremely confident tenor-playing. Moore has not been lucky with records of late, and to have a 1988 date as your most recent available session suggests an unwonted neglect.

Tony Moore

CELLO

Located at the free end of the spectrum, but with much of Pettiford's rapidity of attack and tonal sureness. Involved with improvising ensemble Kiln.

(*) Observations Matchless MRCD 22 Moore (clo solo). 8/93.
(*) Assessments And Translations Matchless MRCD 28 Moore; Josep Vallribera (gesto-grafia). 5/95.

Listening to the 16 improvised Observations is a little like doing a jigsaw without the lid, and doing a jigsaw of a late Jackson Pollock at that. There is a strongly marked personality in every gesture, but even the longest and most discursive sections manage to be both lucid and elusive. Moore's use of extended techniques is less overt than Marie-France Uitti's, closer perhaps to another classically literate improviser with ties to Matchless, Rohan de Saram. As label founder Eddie Prévost perceptively suggests in his introduction, Moore's main focus of observation is the cello itself, which is observed historically, dialectically and sometimes even subversively. Catalan artist Josep Vallribera drew Moore for the cover of the first disc; his contribution to the second requires a tiny gloss: 'gesto-grafia' is a method of non-notational scoring in which graphic gestures are translated into sound. These are longer and more developed pieces, just four of them on the CD, but perhaps easier to get inside.

Jason Moran (born 1975)

PIANO

A youthful New Yorker, he came to prominence with Greg Osby's group.

(*) Soundtrack To Human Motion Blue Note 97431-2 Moran; Greg Osby (as, ss); Stefon Harris (vib); Lonnie Plaxico (b); Eric Harland (d). 8/98.

That's motion, rather than emotion, and as another of Blue Note's family of young stars takes his turn in the limelight it's a hint that what he's about – as with many of the most interesting young players in this precinct – is the momentum and the dynamic of his music as much as its body-weight of 'feeling'. Pieces such as 'Gangsterism On Canvas' and 'Snake Stance', the opening two here, are self-consciously hip and trickily built, as if Moran was concerned that he might be seen not to present strong enough meat for a top dog like Osby to work on. The pianist isn't given to preening, though. The trio piece which comes next, 'Le Tombeau De Couperin/States Of Art', is thoughtful and generously lyrical without falling back on any sort of navel-gazing.

He has a lively imagination, for sure. He says that 'Retrograde' was 'created from an Andrew Hill piece playing backwards on my record player'. The tracks with Osby and Harris tend to be stolen from under him, since those players are so strong; so it's the three trio pieces that offer the most exposure for a style that's unexpectedly dignified and even grandmasterly: listen to the beautifully voiced lines of 'Release From Suffering'. The brief solo, 'Kinesics', is three fascinating minutes by itself.

(*) Facing Left Blue Note 23884-2 Moran; Tarus Mateen (b); Nasheet Waits (d). 99.
* Black Stars Blue Note 32922-2 As above, except add Sam Rivers (ss, ts, f, p). 01.

The trio has built itself into a group of quite breathtaking empathy and intensity, although for Facing Left they were still feeling their way: 'Another One', a rather extraordinary piece that keeps changing its pace, sounds like it's giving Mateen and Waits some trouble. But Moran asks all sorts of questions of the listener as well as his fellow players. 'Wig Wise' dupes us into thinking it might almost be a Blue Note boogaloo, but it gets turned every which way after that. Moran's complexities can be hard to fathom, but it's an exhilarating departure from the piano trio norm, for sure.

Black Stars brings off the coup of enlisting paterfamilias Sam Rivers into the trio's fold. His presence is almost a bonus in what's otherwise a hard, detailed, highly achieved trio record. Moran goes back to an ancient piece of Ellington, 'Kinda Dukish', and mingles it with his own here-and-now, 'Draw The Light Out' and 'Gangsterism On A River'. Where some pianists impose themselves on their material by spinning out ever more fanciful embroidery, Moran already seems to be seeking essences and irreducible core matter. Nothing here goes on for very long; every piece seems brilliantly finished.

(*) Modernistic Blue Note 39838-2 Moran (p solo). 4/02.
* Presents The Bandwagon Blue Note 91893-2 Moran; Tarus Mateen (b); Nasheet Waits (d). 11/02.

Solo, Moran is free to go wherever he pleases, so he starts with James P. Johnson's 'You've Got To Be Modernistic' and goes as far forward (into the past) as Afrika Bambaataa's 'Planet Rock' ('from my own era'). One curious piece is 'Moran Tonk Circa 1936', executed on what sounds like a toy honky-tonk keyboard. Two more 'Gangsterism' pieces rub shoulders with 'Body And Soul'. Live, he's developed these pieces far beyond their duration on the record, which feels a bit curtailed, as if it were a notebook of ideas in progress. Pretty interesting notebook, though.

The trio return for Presents The Bandwagon. Refracted through Ellington, Johnson, Byard, Monk and Hill, Moran's playing sounds ever more like himself, even as it is populous with spirits from every part of the jazz past. Anyone who's been mesmerized by his playing around samples in a club situation will be delighted to find three such instances here, and it would spoil it for the reader if we were to reveal what they consist of. More 'traditionally', there is his interplay with Mateen and Waits, which seems to be moving through ever-higher levels as the records progress: the abundant dialogue of 'Another One' is but a single instance. Vital and essential.

 Same Mother / (*) Artist In Residence Blue Note 71781 / 71711 Moran; Marvin Sewell (g); Tarus Mateen (b); Nasheet Waits (d); Alicia Hall Moran, Adrian Piper (v on Artist only). 5/04; 1 & 2/06.

Adding Marvin Sewell's guitar to the group is one discomforting element in a strangely disappointing record. Interesting as his playing is on Same Mother, it feels like the unbalancing of a trio that was already going to so many intriguing places on their own. 'I'll Play The Blues For You' seems fatally self-conscious, and even the hair-raising treatment of Mal Waldron's 'Fire Waltz' is too ingenious by half. Filter some of this away and there is still plenty to listen to. Adding vocalists to the next disc was a perverse further step in the same direction. Piper adds her looped incantation to 'Break Down' right at the start and to the curious 'Artists Ought To Be Writing', with Alicia Moran coming in on 'Milestone' with a brooding atonal line that immediately sets a sombre mood. The best thing on the record is 'Refraction 2' with Mateen laying down an improvised bass intro that fuels one of the leader's best-ever ideas. Everything's too short: live versions of some of this material would be riveting. As it is, it feels like an opportunity thrown away.

Pat Moran

PIANO, VOICE

A late-'50s fixture on the Chicago scene, she recorded only sparsely and isn't much discussed now.

 Pat Moran Quartet EMI 6537 Moran; John Doling (b, v); John Whited (d, v); Beverley Kelly (v). 5/56.
 This Is Pat Moran: Complete Trio Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 440 Moran; Scott LaFaro (b); John Whited (d); Beverley Kelly (v). 12/57.

When Scott LaFaro was asked about making records he said that he didn't much enjoy listening to them because that meant looking back. However, he singled out an early date with Pat Moran for Audio Fidelity. It's now available again thanks to those estimable sound archaeologists at Fresh Sound, and it looks as if there might be a mini-revival in progress, with the reappearance of her two records for Bethlehem on the EMI compilation.

The style is light bop, handled with considerable facility but not much depth. The group vocals are frankly tiresome, but with so little of her work available it's good to have the bulk of the output available again and one can see what LaFaro might have meant. The trio session (Kelly appears on just a few cuts) is limber and joyous. Fans of the bassist will have no difficulty picking out his sound, already distinctive four years before his apotheosis with the Bill Evans trio. The opening 'Makin' Whoopee' and 'In Your Own Sweet Way' are gorgeous, and there's a lovely version of 'Come Rain Or Come Shine'. 'Onilosor' is a tribute to Frank Rosolino, whose comic vocals may well have made an impact on Moran. Cheerful stuff and worth investigating.

Herb Morand (1905–52)

TRUMPET, VOCAL

Born in New Orleans, Morand started there but did most of his playing in Chicago, especially with the Harlem Hamfats. Returned to New Orleans in the '40s, ran his own group and performed with George Lewis.

 Herb Morand 1949 American Music AMCD-9 Morand; Louis Nelson (tb); Andrew Morgan (ts, cl); Albert Burbank (cl, v); Johnny St Cyr, Raymond Glapion (g); Austin Young, Eddie Dawson (b); Albert Jiles, Andrew Jefferson (d). 5–7/49.

 Herb Morand 1950/Paul Barabarin 1951 American Music AMCD-106 Morand; Eddie Pierson (tb); Albert Burbank (cl); Lester Santiango (p); Louis James (b); Morris Morand (d). 2/50.

Morand wasn't a typical New Orleans brassman and he sounds a little out of place with these old-school players, but his firm lead and terse solos give the music an extra ounce of assertiveness. Most of it comes from a session recorded by Bill Russell, a large part of it too long for 78s and heretofore unreleased, but there are four rough and exciting tracks recorded at a dance at Mama Lou's Lounge two months earlier. The sound is a little muffled throughout but all the players come through clearly enough.

The second CD is shared with a session under Paul Barbarin's leadership. Morand's seven tracks were made for Oren Blackstone's New Orleans label. Routines such as 'If You're A Viper' and 'Have You Seen My Kitty' hark back to his Harlem Hamfats days, which slightly contradicts Barry Martyn's description of the music as 'an important session of the "old-time" style'. Either way it's a tough, enjoyable date, with Burbank in particular stealing solo honours.

Frank Morgan (born 1933)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Morgan grew up in Minneapolis, the son of guitarist Stanley Morgan of the Ink Spots but began his career in the nascent West Coast bebop scene. Drug problems interrupted his progress but also froze his Parker-indebted saxophone style at somewhere around the year Bird died. A passionate improviser, he organizes his solos in a songful, highly logical way.

 Gene Norman Presents Frank Morgan /  Frank Morgan Fresh Sound FSR CD 71 / GNP Crescendo GNP5-9041 Morgan; Conte Candoli (t); Wardell Gray (ts); Carl Perkins (p); Wild Bill Davis (org); Howard Roberts (g); Bobby Rodriguez, Leroy Vinnegar (b); Jose Mangual, Lawrence Marable (d); Ralph Miranda, Uba Nieto (perc). 55.

Frank Morgan's story is not just about paid dues. Shortly after this record was made he was sentenced to a term in San Quentin for drug offences. He maintained his involvement in music while in jail, jamming with the likes of Art Pepper. Though he had worked locally following his release, he reappeared on a wider stage in the mid-'80s, purveying a brand of chastened bop, his initially bright and Bird-feathered style only slightly dulled by a spell in the cage.

In the mid-'50s, he was one of a group of saxophonists who hung on Charlie Parker's coat-tails. The currently deleted Savoy sessions aren't the best place to pick up on what Morgan was doing at the time, partly because the material is relatively unfamiliar and partly because the dominant figure on the session is Milt Jackson, who is already thinking in new directions. The Fresh Sound CD is a much better place to begin, though the septet tracks with Wild Bill Davis and three Latin percussionists are a touch crude; 'I'll Remember April' succumbs almost completely. Wardell Gray lends his easy swing to 'My Old Flame', 'The Nearness Of You' and four other tracks, and Carl Perkins's bouncy clatter at the piano keeps the textures attractively ruffled. These were also Wardell Gray's last recordings before his untimely death (which may not have been drug-related as originally thought).

 Easy Living Original Jazz Classics OJC 833 Morgan; Cedar Walton (p); Tony Dumas (b); Billy Higgins (d). 6/85.

After so long off the scene, it seems extraordinary that Morgan should have returned with something as confidently shaped and expressive as this. It's still some way short of the work he was to do in the later '80s, but of all Morgan's records Easy Living is least in thrall to the ghost of Charlie Parker, despite a wonderful version of 'Now's The Time'. Frank also picks up on material that had been written while he was away, tunes by Jobim ('Easy Living'), Wayne Shorter ('Yes And No') and Cedar Walton ('Third Street Blues'). A remarkable comeback, tougher and more pointed than the records that followed.

 Major Changes Contemporary 14039 Morgan; McCoy Tyner (p); Avery Sharpe (b); Louis Hayes (d). 4/87.

Modern recording makes his sound more intimate – grainier, anyway – so there's no reason to suppose that occasional huskiness is especially significant. What is noticeable, even with closely focused recording, is that he has grown quieter and more reflective. He seems rather hung up on favourite ballads. McCoy Tyner, himself a great romantic, provides the focus of Major Changes and looks after him well.

 Yardbird Suite Original Jazz Classics OJC 1060 Morgan; Mulgrew Miller (p); Ron Carter (b); Al Foster (d). 11/88.

(*) Reflections Original Jazz Classics OJC 1046 Morgan; Joe Henderson (ts); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Mulgrew Miller (p); Ron Carter (b); Al Foster (d). 89.

Probably the best of the comeback albums is the complex Reflections. The straight-shooting thing Morgan does with Joe Henderson nudges him into a different gear, sometimes reminiscent of Jackie McLean, sometimes – unexpectedly – of Lou Donaldson. Of all the pianists Morgan has worked with since his return, though, Miller is the least sympathetic, ironically because he is not forceful enough. He sounds much too respectful on Yardbird Suite; at this point in time, isn't it legitimate to interrogate that material a bit more vigorously?

 Gene Norman Presents Frank Morgan /  Frank Morgan Fresh Sound FSR CD 71 / GNP Crescendo GNP5-9041 Morgan; Conte Candoli (t); Wardell Gray (ts); Carl Perkins (p); Wild Bill Davis (org); Howard Roberts (g); Bobby Rodriguez, Leroy Vinnegar (b); Jose Mangual, Lawrence Marable (d); Ralph Miranda, Uba Nieto (perc). 55.

 Love, Lost and Found Telarc 33374 Morgan; Cedar Walton (p); Ray Brown (b); Billy Higgins (d). 3/95.

Unapologetically low-key and romantic, this was not the kind of label move that signalled an adventurous new direction. Morgan seems happy to coast along on familiar tunes, played with a lyrical generosity that sometimes borders on sentimentality. Walton and the others in the rhythm section manage to keep it tight and disciplined, though. Nicely recorded.

 Bop! Telarc 83413 Morgan; Rodney Kendrick (p); Ray Drummond, Curtis Lundy (b); Leroy Williams (d). 8/96.

Our rhetorical question about Yardbird Suite is at least partially answered here. A nearly 12-minute reading of 'Half Nelson' might seem a fairly strenuous work-out, but for the fact that it contains no new ideas whatsoever and pretty much rehashes orthodox bebop playing of a sort that had by this time been around for nearly 50 years. It sounds lovely though, slightly reminiscent in places of one of Bobby Watson's quartets, partly because Lundy is so distinctive.

 City Nights: Live At Jazz Standard /  Raising The Standard: Volume Two High Note HCD 7029 / 7034 Morgan; George Cables (p); Curtis Lundy (b); Billy Hart (d). 11/03.

Morgan continues to work with a group that doesn't so much challenge him to try new things as offer an intriguing backdrop to some fairly routine playing of his own. There's nothing much in the long version of 'Cherokee' here, certainly nothing you couldn't have heard 30 or more years ago. It's saved by Morgan's lovely tone, though, and he's a bit more adventurous on Coltrane's 'Equinox' and 'Impressions', which round out a thoroughly enjoyable set.

Also, in brief:

 You Must Believe In Spring Antilles 312-5705204. 3/92.

Delightful set of duets with top-flight pianists: Kenny Barron, Tommy Flanagan, Hank Jones, Roland Hanna, Barry Harris. Still available in some territories.

Lanny Morgan (born 1934)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Grew up in Des Moines but based for much of his career in LA, apart from a spell with Maynard Ferguson and a freelance stint in New York.

 It's About Time Quicksilver 4024 Morgan; Don Rader (flhn); Lou Levy (p); Bruce Forman (g); Monty Budwig (b); Nick Ceroli (d). 9/81.

(*) The Lanny Morgan Quartet VSOP 92 Morgan; Tom Ranier (p); Bob Maize (b); Frankie Capp (d). 6/93.

 A Suite For Yardbird Fresh Sound FSRCD 5023 Morgan; Lou Levy (p); Tom Warrington (b); Paul Kreibich (d). 9 & 10/97.

If you go to see Lanny Morgan in a club (that would probably mean a trip to LA) and he doesn't play 'Cherokee' then it's almost certainly an impostor. Morgan has acquired squatter's rights on the song, which has long been his showpiece. There are other good things on the VSOP – Konitz's 'Subconscious-Lee' and Gigi Gryce's 'Minority', as well as Bird's most underrated line, 'Bloomdido' – but it's the Ray Noble tune, placed at the heart of the record, that stands out.

The Fresh Sound is more explicitly devoted to Parker's legacy. There are hints and false trails dotted all over it, but no 'Cherokee' this time. Morgan is well aware of that song's place in the bop mythology but has no intention of simply rerunning the old story. 'Steeplechase' and the opening 'Ornithology' are the two grandest statements.

The debut disc, not made until Morgan was well through his 40s (hence the title, perhaps), was originally on Palo Alto, but has recently reappeared on CD. Rader is only involved on the title-cut, but the basic band is briskly competent on a tough bebop set, mostly of originals, but with fine readings of 'KoKo' and 'Jitterbug Waltz'. No 'Cherokee', which he must have been saving for the long-deferred follow-up.

Lee Morgan (1938–72)

TRUMPET

Like fellow-trumpeters Fats Navarro, Booker Little and Clifford Brown before him, Lee Morgan lived fast and died young. He is arguably the defining figure of hard bop. Born in Philadelphia, he played with the Messengers and, at first in parallel and later as a solo artist, embarked on a long series of tight, vociferous solo sessions on which his punchy, out-of-kilter phrasing is always the main component. Though he is scarcely underdocumented, Morgan's early death was a serious loss to jazz.

 The Birth Of Hard Bop Savoy Jazz 17072 2CD Morgan; Donald Byrd (t); John LaPorta (as); Hank Mobley (ts); Ronnie Ball, Barry Harris, Hank Jones, Horace Silver (p); Wendell Marshall, Doug Watkins (b); Kenny Clarke, Arthur Taylor (d). 11/56.

 Those Dizzy Days /  Complete Introducing Sessions Lone Hill Jazz 10107 / 10160 Morgan; Dizzy Gillespie Orchestra. 11 & 12/56; 11/56.

 Dizzy Atmosphere Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1762 Morgan; Al Grey (tb); Billy Mitchell (ts); Billy Root (bs); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul West (b); Charli Persip (d). 2/57.

Though he gets the month wrong, David H. Rosenthal's history of Hard Bop gives central symbolic place to the death of Lee Morgan, victim not of overdose or car crash like so many of his peers, but murdered by a jealous girlfriend. If Morgan's passing in 1972 felt like the end of an era in jazz, it was an era he can certainly claim to have helped define. Masaya Matsumara's painstaking website discography lists 151 sessions at which Morgan was present. We would not presume to suggest there were more, but there were certainly umpteen undocumented live dates in that same 16-year period, a prodigious outpouring of music. In 'The Sidewinder' he created what may usefully stand as the representative hard-bop tune. If he was to repeat the formula to the point of redundancy in years to come, he had the justification of having shaped the formula in the first place.

The early material on Savoy was mostly recorded under Hank Mobley's leadership and Donald Byrd is featured on the first half of the reissue. However, there are enough examples of the 18-year-old Morgan on the set, including a superb 'Hank's Shout' and 'Bet', to make it worthy of inclusion in the discography. As an introduction to this corner of hard bop, it's a very attractive option. So is the Lonehill, which parcels together the early Savoy stuff . The other one from the budget label is really a Gillespie album from Birdland, with fine moments from Benny Golson and Wynton Kelly, but not really one for any but avid Morgan collectors.

Morgan was one of the very few top-flight players to adopt former boss Dizzy's trademark 'bent' trumpet. It's only the most obvious gesture of homage to the other player, who made a big impact on his playing style. This tribute band, which seems to have been called Dizzy Atmosphere, balances him on top of a substantial front line, skiting ideas around like a superball on string. The release of alternative takes on the CD gave a reasonable indication of how Morgan rethought his solo approach. 'Whisper Not' is a particularly good example, a subtle reworking which on the issued take 5 has a much sharper and more emphatic delivery. This is not a classic album by any stretch of the imagination. It gives a good indication of what the young man was capable of and where he came from stylistically. Beyond that, it is only intermittently engaging.

 Candy Blue Note 46508 Morgan; Sonny Clark (p); Doug Watkins (b); Art Taylor (d). 11/57, 2/58.

Recorded around the time the 20-year-old graduated from section duties with Dizzy Gillespie's group to featured soloist with the Jazz Messengers (with whom he was to record two classics, Moanin' and A Night In Tunisia), these quartet sessions have an attractive frosting of arrogance that doesn't quite disguise a callow romanticism on things like Buddy Johnson's 'Since I Fell For You' and 'Who Do You Love'.

 Expoobident Vee Jay VJ008 Morgan; Eddie Higgins (p); Art Davis (b); Art Blakey (d). 2/60.
 Here's Lee Morgan Vee Jay 30050 Morgan; Clifford Jordan (ts); Wynton Kelly (p); Paul Chambers (b); Art Blakey (d). 2/60.
A nice 21st present for the trumpeter: a session that most casual listeners will assume is a Messengers gig. Morgan's open, declamatory horn is always to the fore, at its best when the blues are the lingua franca, but equally at ease with the more lateral harmony of Shorter's 'Running Brook'. The original LP has been augmented with a number of alternative takes, notably of the opening 'Terrible T', and there is additional material from this and from an October 1960 date on Here's Lee Morgan. Buyers of another reissue on Le Jazz have a different combination of tracks. For Morgan enthusiasts and hard-bop scholars, this is doubtless a plus. For the majority of listeners, though, the additional material might well seem to blunt a tough, terse album, and they may choose to skip it. A useful reissue of the Vee Jay disc, all the same.

 Lee-Way Blue Note 40031 Morgan; Jackie McLean (as); Bobby Timmons (p); Paul Chambers (b); Art Blakey (d). 4/60.
One of the least known of Morgan albums even among his fans, this was a relatively late reissue. This is surprising given how good it is. Morgan sounds relaxed and soulful on four long tracks, ably supported by Jackie McLean, who contributes 'Midtown Blues'. There are also two Cal Massey numbers, further testimony to his once-high standing; of these, 'Nakatini Suite' at the end of the set is probably too rarefied for this context and company, though the other, 'These Are Soulful Days', is inch-perfect and brings out the best in Morgan. The trumpeter includes a blues of his own, dedicated to Blue Note bosses Alfred Lion and Francis Wolff. The gesture obviously stood him in good stead; the label was to be his regular berth for much of the rest of his life.

 Take Twelve Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 310 Morgan; Clifford Jordan (ts); Barry Harris (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Louis Hayes (d). 1/62.
The years 1958 to 1961 were taken up mostly with Messengers duties, though Morgan also fitted in sessions for Ernie Henry, Curtis Fuller and fellow-Messenger Wayne Shorter. His own Expoobident, taped in October 1960, was a rare date as leader in this period. Take Twelve originally appeared on Jazzland, and it's one of the first places where one can assess Morgan the composer. It also offers evidence that he was developing as a performer as well, ironically by turning back to the work of older figures like Rex Stewart (who wrote the book on half-valving) and Roy Eldridge. 'Raggedy Ann', 'Lee-Sure Time' and 'A Waltz For Fran' all come pretty much from the basic lode: driven, blues-inflected themes with a brisk bounce. Hayes is a less dominant player than Blakey and he leaves more room for Morgan to develop his blues phrasing asymmetrically and with occasional unexpected nods in the direction of polytonality. Compositions like Elmo Hope's title-track suggest that Morgan was looking for something more than orthodox 'hard bop'. What was to follow the next year more or less guaranteed that he would never break the mould.

[illegible]

♛ * The Sidewinder
Blue Note 95332 Morgan; Joe Henderson (ts); Barry Harris (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Billy Higgins (d). 12/63.

The title-track was written in the heads towards the end of the session, a glorious 24-bar theme as sinuous and stinging as the beast of the title. It was both the best and the worst thing that was ever to happen to Morgan before the awful events of 19 February 1972. 'The Sidewinder' was an instant jazz hit, one of those themes, like 'So What', that insinuate themselves into the subconscious and remain there for ever. Unfortunately, it also established a more or less unbreakable pattern for future LPs, a bold, funky opener – often with a title intended to recall 'Sidewinder' – followed by half a dozen forgettable blowing themes, or, if you were lucky, another swinger to kick off the second side. The other pieces on the record have never been acknowledged to the same degree, but 'Totem Pole' and the superb 'Hocus Pocus' are the best available evidence for Morgan's gifts as a writer: vivid, often unexpectedly angled themes with every potential for extended blowing and not just off the back of a few algebraic chords. Of the other members of the group, Henderson stands out for his solo on the title-track and on 'Hocus Pocus'. Harris is rock solid from start to finish, and the bass-and-drums team can hardly be faulted.

* Search For The New Land Blue Note 84169 Morgan; Wayne Shorter (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Grant Green (g); Reggie Workman (b); Billy Higgins (d). 2/64.
This is the exception. Though much of Morgan's output for Blue Note after 1962 was pretty formulaic, Search was a musical exploration as much as a programmatic one. The presence of Shorter and Hancock guaranteed a measure of lyrical unpredictability, which is immediately registered on the title-piece. 'The Joker' might be thought to be the 'Sidewinder' piece this time around, except that it's a darkly playful, rather treacherous idea built on altered chords, and certainly not a theme that encourages a relaxed or lazy approach. Workman fits into this context particularly well, and the hyperactive Higgins drills away without a pause. 'Mr Kenyatta' may point towards one possible new inspiration for Morgan's music, though the two remaining numbers, albeit more than makeweights, are more off-the-peg: 'Melancholee' is a tight, bluesy ballad and 'Morgan the Pirate' another fairly orthodox improvising tune. A fine, questing record, and a pity that – The Gigolo apart – there weren't to be more like it. The latest release contains some bonus tracks, though nothing that prompts a wholesale reassessment of an already surprising set.

(*) Tom Cat Blue Note 355515 Morgan; Curtis Fuller (tb); Jackie McLean (as); McCoy Tyner (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Art Blakey (d). 8/64.
With complete absence of irony, the final track is 'Rigor Mortis', for this is the least distinguished of Morgan's Blue Notes, and one of the very few that doesn't manage to lift itself even for a couple of tracks. The three-horn front line sounds cluttered, despite some great episodic playing from Fuller and McLean. The fault lies not so much with the pristine Van Gelder recording as with the arrangements, which have no air in them.

 The Rumproller Blue Note 21229 Morgan; Joe Henderson (ts); Ronnie Mathews (p); Victor Sproles (b); Billy Higgins (d). 4/65.
A fairly transparent attempt to recapture the commercial success of The Sidewinder. The only obvious drawback is the lack of a theme with quite that sinuous memorability. This time, the composer is Andrew Hill, though 'The Rumproller' isn't quite the dark and brooding theme one associates with Hill. Either way, it didn't catch as the earlier album had and though it's been in catalogue pretty consistently, and is now available in a Rudy van Gelder edition, it's hard to treat it with the same affection. Morgan was recording regularly at this point and playing with almost insulting ease. His solo on the bossa nova 'Eclipso' (an original) is as laid back as it's possible to be and still maintain an embouchure. Two Wayne Shorter tunes help fill out the package, and Joe Henderson rises to his fellow saxophonist's challenge on both of them.

(*) The Gigolo Blue Note 355206 Morgan; Wayne Shorter (ts); Harold Mabern (p); Bob Cranshaw (b); Billy Higgins (d). 6 & 7/65.

 Cornbread Blue Note 84222 Morgan; Jackie McLean (as); Hank Mobley (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Larry Ridley (b); Billy Higgins (d). 9/65.

() Infinity Blue Note 97504 Morgan; Jackie McLean (as); Larry Willis (p); Reggie Workman (b); Billy Higgins (d). 11/65.

The Gigolo is relatively unusual at this point for the inclusion of a standard – 'You Go To My Head' – but again Morgan seems to be trying to pull himself at least halfway free of the coils of The Sidewinder. Mabern is a strong, funky player, ably supported by Cranshaw, but Shorter keeps things broken up and unpredictable. 'Yes I Can, No You Can't' plays a brisk game of musical catch, while 'Speedball', which was to become a live favourite, pushes at the limits of orthodox hard bop. The title-piece is a slinky and seductive tune, one of the better compositions of recent years in this idiom.

Cornbread is production-line Morgan, no more inspired than that. With the exception of 'Ill Wind', all the tunes are the trumpeter's and, with the exception of 'Ceora', most of them pretty forgettable. Morgan still sounds brash, brassy and full-toned, but the urgency has gone out of his playing and he seems to rely more and more on predigested licks. They're still a lot more compelling than most of his peers', but they are too conventionalized to be involving.

Infinity is no less generic and formulaic, but by this point Morgan was so utterly confident that one tends to forget that most of these ideas are already well trodden. The title-track is overlong and a touch lumpy and it's only Jackie McLean's 'Portrait Of Doll' that changes the tonality by a degree or two.

 The Procrastinator Blue Note 33579 Morgan; Julian Priester (tb); George Coleman, Wayne Shorter (ts); Herbie Hancock (p); Bobby Hutcherson (vib); Walter Booker (b); Billy Higgins, Mickey Roker (d). 7/67.

 The Sixth Sense Blue Note 571065 Morgan; Jackie McLean, Frank Mitchell (as); Harold Mabern, Cedar Walton (p); Victor Sproles (b); Billy Higgins (d). 7/67.

The music on The Procrastinator isn't so very radical, and yet it was deemed sufficiently outside the market standard to justify holding it back for two years before release. Some of this material has found its way onto the augmented Sonic Boom. Morgan was never dully formulaic, but it would take a seasoned listener or a dedicated Morgan fan to distinguish this from any other album of the period. The Sixth Sense is virtually unknown, even by Morgan fans. Almost axiomatically of albums from this period, it sounds like the work of an artist who has heard the future and is anxious to make it work. On 'Psychedelic' and 'Leebop', and on the Cal Massey tune, 'City Of My People', Morgan is nudging at the frangible boundaries of hard bop, which was always one of those categories that were more useful than significant. The recorded sound has also got funkier and more rock-orientated, with extra weight on the bass and a hefty backbeat.

 Taru Blue Note 22670 Morgan; Bennie Maupin (ts); John Hicks (p); George Benson (g); Reggie Workman (b); Billy Higgins (d). 2/68.

 Caramba Blue Note 53358 Morgan; Bennie Maupin (ts); Cedar Walton (p); Reggie Workman (b); Billy Higgins (d). 5/68.

Taru is certainly only an inch away from the kind of stuff with which Miles Davis was to revolutionize jazz in the next couple of years. The presence of George Benson has something to do with it, and underneath his smooth and unguent approach there is a whiff of cold steel. The recruitment of Maupin to Morgan's group was to be a significant one. After Shorter, he was perhaps the most adventurous saxophonist Morgan was to work with. Often dismissed as a colourist with no real jazz centre, Maupin always sounds completely convincing in the trumpeter's company. Among the tracks on Caramba, on 'Suicide City', 'Helen's Ritual' and another Cal Massey song, 'A Baby's Smile', he brings a dark-toned eloquence which fits the bill exactly. Morgan himself is more reticent than in the past and, one suspects, short on new angles.

(*) Standards Blue Note 23213 Morgan; James Spaulding (f, as); Wayne Shorter (ts); Pepper Adams (bs); Herbie Hancock (p); Ron Carter (b); Mickey Roker (d). 1/67.

A lovely – in some regards unexpected – record from a vintage group. The combination of Morgan and Shorter was always an unlikely one, the driving, linear approach of the trumpeter pitched against the more lateral and enigmatic musings of the saxophonist. Spaulding and Adams glue it all together, and Hancock is absolutely on the case throughout. Marked out by its choice of material, which includes a glorious version of Tim Hardin's 'If I Were A Carpenter' and a yearning but tough-minded reading of the Sondheim–Bernstein 'Somewhere', this is playing of the highest order. It also serves as a reminder of what an excellent drummer Mickey Roker is. Like Grady Tate, one almost expects him to break into song at any moment. One to watch out for.

(*) Live At The Lighthouse Fresh Sound FSRCD 140/141 2CD Morgan; Bennie Maupin (ts); Harold Mabern (p); Jymie Merritt (b); Mickey Roker (d). 6/70.

 Live At The Lighthouse Blue Note 35228 3CD As above, except add Jack DeJohnette (d). 7/70.

(*) We Remember You Fresh Sound FSRCD 1024 Morgan; Jimmy Heath (ts); Billy Harper (ts, f); Barry Harris, Harold Mabern (p); Spanky DeBrest, Jymie Merritt (b); Albert 'Tootie' Heath, Freddie Waits (d). 11/62, 1/72.

The Fresh Sound live set is misnamed. For a long time it was believed that it consisted of material excluded from Blue Note's Live At The Lighthouse release, when it fact it was recorded some time earlier at a club called the Both/And. Some of the material from the same session appeared on a disc called Speedball which was issued in Japan, but the Spanish issue is pretty decent, sharing a few technical shortcomings with the official Blue Note release from the Lighthouse, but bringing together a lot of good live stuff. At this stage in the game, Morgan was doubling on flugelhorn, perhaps looking for a richer, fatter sound. It isn't always possible to tell what horn he's on, which is some testimony to his razor-sharp accuracy and the hardness of his tone.

DeJohnette is the guest drummer on 'Speedball' on the official Blue Note release, and his brisk, contemporary sound points to some of the directions the trumpeter might have followed had he been allowed another few years of activity. Certainly Jack offers rhythmic possibilities which are not available elsewhere. Maupin's 'Peyote' and an extended version of 'The Sidewinder' are stand-outs. There seems to be some confusion between 'Meo

Felia’ (credited to Morgan) and ‘Neophilia’ (which is ostensibly a Maupin composition) and between ‘Ujamma’ on Fresh Sound and ‘Meo Felia’. Both sets are compromised by technical shortcomings, with some dropouts on the Blue Note, and one track on which the tape obviously ran out just before the finish. There are also some problems with the sound. The piano was prebalanced and couldn’t be altered, and there are some places where the bass seems to disappear. Blue Note seem to have been motivated by the existence – and the success – of bootleg sets from around this time to put the whole thing out, warts and all, and, given the quality of the music, who can blame them?

All the more reason to release it, when there was to be just one more session for the label, in September 1971. Thereafter, Morgan recorded with flautist Bobbi Humphrey and, a mere two days before his death, with Charles Earland’s orchestra. In January 1972 he was playing with Billy Harper, Mabern, Merritt and Freddie Waits, a set that included a fine latter-day version of ‘The Sidewinder’. Not enough material for a whole disc, so Fresh Sound, whose provenances aren’t always immaculate, have added three items from almost a decade before, a band co-fronted by Jimmy Heath. It isn’t quite the headstone Morgan deserves, but it does provide an insight into the changes in his playing style over ten years. Something mellower and more thoughtful has crept in, something almost vulnerable. Underneath the incendiary nature, a more reserved individual.

(*) The Last Session Blue Note 493401 Morgan; Grachan Moncur III (tb); Billy Harper (ts, af); Bobbi Humphrey (f); Harold Mabern (p); Reggie Workman (b, perc); Freddie Waits (d, perc). 9/71.

Originally released as a double album called simply Lee Morgan, this captured a young man trying to find a new direction, to push out beyond the borders of hard bop. It’s a big and rangy group sound with the addition of Moncur and Humphrey and with the talented Harper, composer of ‘Capra Black’ (which occupied the original side one) and ‘Croquet Ballet’, coming on very powerfully. Though very similar to the band which played at the Lighthouse, this is much more modern in focus; the title ‘In What Direction Are You Headed?’, written by Mabern, is quite readily directed at both Morgan and the music, for at this point he seems determined to try out a harmonic direction which is close to what Coltrane was doing a few years before he died. Harper is less of a colour player than Bennie Maupin, but he is certainly not a one-dimensional bopper, and almost all his solo spots are engagingly lateral. Freddie Waits is also a great revelation, a freely swinging but never mechanical stylist whose composition, ‘Inner Passions Out’, is the most radical thing on the record, and one of the most ‘out’ pieces Morgan ever recorded under his own name.

On 19 February 1972, Lee Morgan was shot dead by Helen More as he relaxed between sets at Slugs Saloon in New York City. For some at least, a whole generation in jazz-playing was brought to an abrupt and tragic end.

Also, in brief:

 Introducing Lee Morgan Savoy 116. 11/56.

Originally a Hank Mobley session, but repackaged to feature the better-known man. Strong hard bop.

 The Very Best Blue Note 77400 2. 3/57–9/65.

‘The Sidewinder’, ‘Since I Fell For You’, ‘Speedball’, ‘Ceora’, ‘The Rumproller’, ‘I Remember Clifford’. So no surprises there.

 Unforgettable Lee / (*) More Birdland Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 357 2CD / 1029. 4, 5, 6, 9 & 11/60.

A Messengers live date from Birdland, repackaged as a Morgan album. The second record is barrel-scraping and much of it poor quality, both creatively and acoustically.

 Blue Breakbeats Blue Note 94704. 63–68.

Similar to the above, but with more of a party atmosphere.

 Charisma Blue Note 59961. 9/66.

The most formulaic of the Blue Notes, but with the first shadowings of fusion in place. Jackie McLean and Hank Mobley are in good form, but Lee is on tramlines.

 Sonic Boom Blue Note 90414. 67, 69.

Blue Note had over-invested in falling stock and this wasn’t released until seven years after Lee’s death, and one can see why. Despite the cast, a rather disappointing record.

 Live In Baltimore Fresh Sound FSRCD 1037. 7/68.

Clifford Jordan dominates and no Morgan originals, so not such an essential purchase.

Sam Morgan (1887–1936)

CORNET, VOCAL

Morgan led one of the classic New Orleans bands of the ’20s, and their records are historically important as well as enduringly powerful. Illness forced him out of the busines in 1932.

♛  Papa Celestin & Sam Morgan Azure AZ-CD-12 Morgan; Ike Morgan (c); Jim Robinson (tb); Earl Fouche (as); Andrew Morgan (cl, ts); Tink Baptiste, O. C. Blancher (p); Johnny Davis (bj); Sidney Brown (b); Nolan Williams, Roy Evans (d). 4–10/27.

The eight titles by Morgan’s band are among the classics of ’20s jazz. They are a very rare example of a New Orleans group recorded in the city during this period, and it’s been claimed that these are the most truthful recordings of how such a band sounded in its prime. Morgan’s music is ensemble-based, solos and breaks threaded into the overall fabric, the playing driven by the gusty slap-bass of Sidney Brown. Fouche might be the outstanding player, with his mile-wide vibrato, but it’s as a band that these players have endured. There are few more exhilarating records from the period than ‘Steppin’ On The Gas’ or ‘Mobile Stomp’. Together with the Celestin tracks, this makes up one of the most essential reissues of early jazz, in outstandingly fine sound.

Joe Morris (born 1955)

GUITAR, DOUBLE BASS

The Boston-based guitarist has a highly distinctive playing style, almost always in fast, single-note lines, with distinctive mid-phrase trills and a notable use of space.

 Symbolic Gesture Soul Note 121204 Morris; Nate McBride (b); Curt Newton (d). 6/93.

 Illuminate Leo Lab CD 008 Morris; Rob Brown (as); William Parker (b); Jackson Krall (d). 95.

 No Vertigo Leo CD LR 226 Morris (g, mand, banjouke solo). 4/95.

A charter member of the Boston Improvisers’ Group, Morris was an actively eclectic sideman and local star before he made it big as a recording artist. He has a facility for straight blues and fusion playing, but works in a pumped-up free style that works in quite stark, abstract ways. The Soul Note is not a debut because Morris has put material out on his own Riti label for some time. As a first point of contact, it is slightly soft-centred, and it might be as well to move quickly on to Illuminate on Leo's radical Lab imprint, before coming to any settled conclusion. The quartet there is fresh and unclichéd, but comes off the back of saxophonist Brown's Riti session with Morris and other associations for different labels. A clangorous, unfussy record, it will appeal not just to guitar trio fans (who may feel more comfortable with Symbolic Gesture) but also to those who don't like their free jazz too vegetarian and mild.

The best record of the three is the solo No Vertigo. Morris has obviously been influenced by British improviser Derek Bailey. His acoustic work is very reminiscent of Bailey's '70s work but with a hint of a jazz groove always hovering in the background, which Bailey seldom permits. He also includes tracks on an electric instrument (the long, very detailed 'For Adolphus Mica'), banjouke ('Long Carry') and even mandolin (a sequence called 'The Edges'). There is nothing slipshod about this music. Morris is a stern self-disciplinarian and the defining characteristic of the music on Illuminate is the responsiveness of the players to one another, a listening quality that extends not just to pitching but also to dynamics, rhythmic and para-rhythmic properties, even the use of space and (relative) silence.

 Antennae AUM Fidelity AUM 004 Morris; Nate McBride (b); Jerome Dupree (d). 7/97.

(*) A Cloud Of Black Birds AUM Fidelity AUM 009 Morris; Mat Maneri (vn); Chris Lightcap (b); Jerome Dupree (d). 6/98.

While Morris was attending a special school in the Boston area, as he movingly relates, he spent a lot of time alone watching starlings flock and fly outside his bedroom window. Their movement – patterned, complex, only seemingly chaotic – made a great impression on Joe, and some of that experience comes out in the densely packed music on 'A Cloud Of Black Birds'. Reunion with Maneri sparks off a lot of shared experience, and their interaction, notably on the duo, 'Renascent', is close, intelligent and thoroughly sympathetic. The group tracks are inevitably denser in conception but no less powerful. The same language applies in the trio setting, except Morris is more obviously out front as a soloist. Here, Morris acknowledges a debt to the pianist and composer Lowell Davidson, whose advanced notational ideas involved colour imaging, use of light and extremes of concentration. The tracks on Antennae are among the most intense Morris has produced. He seems more inclined to dwell on notes and to explore the light and shade that gather between attack and delay. His use of upstrokes affects the sound significantly and he varies pressure on the strings to create subtle harmonic overtones which also emerge on the sessions with Maneri and are perhaps influenced by Mat's father Joe Maneri's theories on microtonality.

 Underthru Omnitone 11904 Morris; Mat Maneri (vn); Chris Lightcap (b); Gerald Cleaver (d). 3/99.

 Many Rings Knitting Factory KFCD 243 Morris; Rob Brown (as, f); Karen Borca (bsn); Andrea Parkins (acc). 99.

Morris's brand of free-form composition/improvisation is well represented on these two contrasting sets. In some regards, Underthru is the more conventional, with front-line 'horns' supported by a relatively familiar rhythm section; but in actual practice, and for all its unconventional instrumentation, Many Rings feels more like a generic free-jazz date. As second leads, Brown and Maneri are very different and play instruments with sharply contrasting capabilities, but they both understand that with Morris most of the action takes place between the notes and across the bar-lines; in other words, there isn't much about either set that is formulaic.

'Remarks' on Underthru is a remarkable performance, as is 'Two Busses And A Long Walk'. The title-piece of the Knitting Factory set is the most convincing representation of its unconventional sonority, and some care has been taken to register all the elements with something like democracy.

(*) At The Old Office Knitting Factory KFCD 272 Morris; Mat Maneri (vla); Chris Lightcap (b); Gerald Cleaver (d). 11/99.

(*) Soul Search Aum Fidelity AUM 14 Morris; Mat Maneri (vn). 8/99.

Morris and Maneri are clearly soulmates, and the relationship blossoms again on this powerful duo set, which takes forward many of the ideas represented on earlier Aum Fidelity recordings. The two-stringed instruments frequently exchange roles, with Maneri producing big chords and Morris teasing out single-note lines at great speed.

The Knitting Factory set consists of two long improvisations and two composed tracks, though these sound almost as chaotically energetic as the free-form performances. Maneri's viola has a wonderfully rich quality that sits well with the guitar, probably more comfortably than the electric violin he characteristically uses, and on 'Matter Of Fact' the exchange of lead lines is virtuosic and completely convincing.

(*) Beautiful Existence Clean Feed CF050 Morris; Jim Hobbs (as); Timo Shanko (b); Luther Gray (d). 05.

After a period playing double bass, Morris returns to guitar as if nothing had ever happened. This is a powerful statement, with a kind of chastened beauty, from a label that seems determined to catch anything new and exciting in contemporary music on the fly. The other players will not be known much outside their own circles, but they work together as a unit and generate a strong and lasting chemistry.

(*) Rebus Clean Feed CF083 Morris; Ken Vandermark (ts); Luther Gray (d). 1/06.

A rebus is an enigmatic representation of a name or word using graphics, symbols or unorthodox configuration of letters. It's an ideal name for this project, which reunites Morris and Vandermark in a trio that had played at Tonic a couple of days previously. The three individuals are clearly represented – Vandermark with his argumentative, dogged approach, Morris in his bass-influenced murmur, Gray hyperactive but measured in the middle – but as with DKV (see Vandermark's entry), on which Morris has guested, the sum is considerably different to and greater than the parts. It starts in deceptive calm, but the blowtorches and acetylene lamps are out soon enough and by the second number, it's powering along.

Also, in brief:

(*) Elsewhere Homestead Records HMS233-2. 2/96.

With Matthew Shipp (p), William Parker (b) and Whit Dickey (d): a first-call contemporary combo worked hard by the leader.

 You Be Me Soul Note 121304. 5/97.

Hung up on the tension between Morris's and Mat Maneri's (vn) radical approach and a relatively conventional rhythm-section, this one doesn't quite come off.

 Like Rays Knitting Factory 224. 98.
Hectic, clattering free improvisation with Ken Vandermark (cl, bcl) and Hans Poppel (p).

(*) Singularity Aum Fidelity 18. 5/00.
Not previously associated with acoustic guitar, here he abandons amplification in favour of rapid picking and sonorous chords on steel-strung strings. Remarkable stuff.

 Age Of Everything Riti 4. 1/02.
A tough trio date with Timo Shanko (b) and Luther Gray (d), released on Morris's own label.

Lawrence 'Butch' Morris (born 1947)

CORNET, CONDUCTOR

He began on the Californian free scene and frequently partnered David Murray. A prolific composer, he largely gave up playing in order to pursue 'comprovisation' and 'conduction', a system of conducting improvised music.

(*) Burning Cloud FMP CD 77 Morris; J. A. Deane (tb, f, elec); Lê Quan Ninh (perc). 10/93.
Some ten of Morris's conductions are available on New World discs, but these seem like documents of live events rather than the kind of record one would want to listen to repeatedly. With Morris turning away from performing himself, at least as an instrumentalist, it is good to have this reminder of his powers in a small-group context, recorded at one of Berlin's Total Music Meetings. The key player here is arguably Deane; besides his trombone-lines, his meticulous use of electronics creates much of the backdrop, while Ninh and Morris step in and out of view. Morris plays a jazzman's role, tightly muted, dappling the canvas with tiny, stringent melodies. As modest as the instrumentation is, this is a rich and exciting music.

 Berlin Skyscraper '95 FMP CD 92/93 2CD Morris; Axel Dörner (t); Marc Stutz-Boukoya (tb); Gregor Hotz (ss); Kirsten Reese (f); Johanne Braun (ob); Wolfgang Fuchs (bcl); Elisabeth Böhm-Christl (bsn); Bernhard Arndt (p); Albrecht Riermeier (vib); Dietrich Petzold (vn, vla); Alex Kolkowski (vn); Nicholas Bussman (clo); Tatjana Schütz (hp); Olaf Rupp (g); Davide De Bernardi (b); Stephan Mathieu, Michael Griener (perc). 11/95.
From the 1995 Total Music Meeting in Berlin, these are numbers 51, 52, 55 and 56 in the numbered sequence of Morris conductions. Although these events are difficult to evaluate from the cold evidence of a CD recording, this one seems like a considerable success, since it passes the litmus test of excellent sound, a team of skilful players and an ensemble willing to listen and be generous. Some truly fascinating and unpredictable textures arise from the instrumental combinations, often with a degree of refinement that makes it hard to believe that certain passages weren't composed.

() Holy Sea Splasc(h) 802/3.2 2CD Morris; J. A. Deane (tb, elec, sampling); Riccardo Fassi (p); Otomo Yoshihide (turntable, sampling, elec); Orchestra della Toscana. 2/96.
This one points up two things: that Morris needs performers skilled in improvisation, and the recordings need a good mix and acoustics. The players of the Orchestra della Toscana don't really match up to the former requirement, and with Deane and Yoshihide playing too strong a role, the music often feels stiff and unappealing. Fassi, though, copes well. The three pieces also suffer from environments which damage the sensitivity the players are looking for. As ever, there are still moments to savour, but mostly this one's a miss.

Sonny Morris

TRUMPET, VOCAL

A founder-member of the Crane River Jazz Band, Morris led his own Delta Jazz Band for many years, and they play fundamentalist revivalism, British style.

 The Spirit Lives On Lake LACD46 Morris; Bob Ward (tb, v); Terry Giles (cl); Ben Marshall (bj); John Sirett (b); Colin Bowden (d). 9/94.
() For The Good Old Boys Lake LACD 63 As above, except add John Clark (p), Eric Webster (bj, g); omit Marshall. 3/96.
 Sonny Meets Pat Lake LACD81 As above, except add Pat Halcox (t, v). 11/96.
(*) Silver Bell Lake LACD102 As above, except Chris Satterly (p, v) replaces Clark; omit Halcox. 3/98.
(*) Near The Cross Lake LACD125 As above. 6/99.
* Sonny Morris And Friends In Germany Upbeat URCD 181 Morris; Sven Küpper, Michael Schneider, Patrick Mader (tb); Ian Wheeler (cl); Mitch Kreilein (as); Ray Smith, Thomas Guthoff (p); Dickie Bishop (g, v); Sean Moyses, Sandra Mimstedt (bj); Gunter Barfuss, Franziska Mouse (b); Lutz Eikelmann (d, tba); Colin Bowden (d); Benny Korn (wbd); Manfred Möhl (v). 4/99–7/00.
 Sonny Lake LACD 152 Morris; Roy Maskell (tb); Terry Giles (cl, as); Chris Satterly (p, v); Andy Maynard (g, bj); John Sirett (b); Colin Bowden (d). 12/00.
The spirit in question is that of the Johnson/Lewis American Music groups of the '40s, and this congenial group of veterans pay a likeable homage on The Spirit Lives On. Morris and Marshall have their own authenticity in spades, both being founder-members of the Crane River Jazz Band alongside Ken Colyer, and the rest of the group hardly put a foot wrong. The anti-virtuosic solos are scarcely the point of this music. What counts is the steady beat, the simpatico ensembles and the irresistible sense of inevitability about it all. Crucially, the rhythm section are exactly right, with Bowden in particular outstanding in the Baby Dodds manner. Excellent choice of material, and docked a notch only for the occasional shakiness and the vocals, dispensable as usual. For some reason, For The Good Old Boys isn't quite so good: a few of the tracks lumber along, and the tunes aren't so appealing.

Recorded at Farnham Maltings, Sonny Meets Pat is very good fun, with guest Pat Halcox sitting in with Sonny's Delta Jazz Band. The horn players all hit the odd clinker here and there and nobody's that bothered. Morris and Halcox don't so much duel in the front line as nudge each other, and the crowd love it.

On the evidence of the next pair of discs, the band were getting better (except in the vocal department, so we'll gloss over what singing there is). Hard to say how it's better, since the playing isn't sharper or more accomplished as such: more that the ensembles gather momentum with an ounce more certainty, the tunes are carried with a shade more lightness. Silver Bell is the usual mixed bag but Near The Cross is all sacred material of some sort and, with many of the tempos extraordinarily slow, it's a tribute to the band that they muster so much conviction at that pace. Morris's little solo on 'Were You There?' is also a fine example of his perfectly appropriate improvising.

The German sessions are alright, and here work up a fine head of steam, but they also have a lot of very dispensable (to put it politely) vocals. Not a good example of Sonny's work. Sonny's passing in 2001 may have called time for the group. Sonny was recorded only weeks before his death, but shows no sign of the dimming of the day, and gathers a very pleasing range of rags, blues, old-time tunes and whatever else the band felt like doing.

Jelly Roll Morton (1890–1941)

PIANO, VOICE

He led a picaresque life in New Orleans as a pianist, pimp, billiards player, tailor, minstrel-show entertainer, hustler and more. Began recording in Chicago in 1923, then bandleading with his Red Hot Peppers, making some of the classic early jazz recordings and the first great jazz compositions. Scuffled and fought over unpaid royalties during the '30s, then began recording his life story (and his history of jazz) for the Library Of Congress in 1938. Various comebacks, 1939–41, but Morton died in LA, bitter and unrewarded.

(*) The Piano Rolls Nonesuch 79363-2 Morton (p roll). 20–2/97.

() Blues And Stomps From Rare Piano Rolls Biograph BCD111 Morton (p roll). 24–26.

The Nonesuch disc is one of the most fascinating retrievals of recent years. Morton's 12 original piano rolls have been analysed in the light of his other recordings by Artis Wodehouse, who has subsequently converted the information to computer data and edited a previously missing interpretative element into the way the rolls are reproduced. The subsequently annotated rolls were then played back on a nine-foot Disklavier piano, in a concert hall, and recorded. The remarkable outcome may be the closest we can ever get to hearing what Morton might truly have sounded like at this early peak of his career. Or they may not. Sceptics will point to the issue that, however meticulous the homework, this is still only somebody's idea of how the rolls should sound. Yet the results are exhilarating enough to suggest that Jelly's ghost is indeed seated at the keyboard. If there is an inevitable sense of something mechanical in the delivery, it's offset by the rocking syncopations, rips and general brio which always seem to be among the hallmarks of a Morton performance. The odd combination of ferocity and gentility in 'Grandpa's Spells', the dizzying double-time break in 'Midnight Mama' and the unbridled virtuosity of 'Shreveport Stomps' have certainly never sounded more convincing. It is altogether a memorable event and indispensable to anyone intrigued by the early steps of the master. The Biograph disc, unadorned renditions of the original rolls, is rendered somewhat redundant by the Nonesuch CD, but we list it anyway.

 Jelly Roll Morton 1923–1924 Classics 584 Morton; Tommy Ladnier, Natty Dominique (c); Zue Robertson (tb); Wilson Townes, Boyd Senter, Horace Eubanks (cl); Arville Harris (as); W. E. Burton (d, kz); Jasper Taylor (d). 6/23–6/24.

* Piano Solos Retrieval RTR 79002 Morton (p solo). 7/23–4/26.

Although we are listing the piano roll discs first, most assessments of the self-styled originator of jazz and stomps commence with these mainly solo sessions. Morton's all-embracing mastery of the keyboard makes these 19 solos a sublimation of everything jazz had done up to this point. He combines the formal precision of ragtime with a steady melodic flow and a portfolio of rhythms that are tirelessly varied: if Louis Armstrong finally liberated jazz rhythms, Morton had already set out the possibilities to do so. As a series of compositions, this was a storehouse of ideas which has yet to be exhausted: here are the first versions of two of jazz's most enduring masterworks, 'King Porter Stomp' and 'Wolverine Blues', as well as such definitive Morton portraits as 'The Pearls' and the brilliantly delivered 'Shreveport Stomps'. His timing is ambitious yet miraculously secure: listen to the poetic elegance of 'New Orleans (Blues) Joys' or the famous 'Spanish Tinge' in 'Tia Juana'. Considering the roughness of the original recordings, the fact that the music remains utterly compelling is testament to Morton's greatness. The piano sound is still pretty awful to modern ears, and some of the (often very rare) originals are clearly in less than perfect shape, but this is essential music. The Classics CD scarcely improves on the earlier Fountain/Retrieval LP, now on CD, although the individual tracks have not been remastered from their 1972 incarnation. Admittedly, it adds what were really some false starts in Morton's career – two very cloudy 1923 tracks for Paramount, with a band that may or may not include Tommy Ladnier, a not much better session for OKeh with the feeble Dominique, Robertson and Eubanks, and a fairly disastrous 'Mr Jelly Lord', where he's buried behind Boyd Senter and some kazoo-playing – but some may feel that it simply devalues the consistency of the solos. Retrieval's reissue now also includes the four solos for Vocalion from 1926, and this is certainly our first choice.

 Jelly Roll Morton 1924–1926 Classics 599 Morton; Lee Collins, Joe 'King' Oliver, George Mitchell (c); Roy Palmer, Kid Ory, Ray Bowling (tb); Omer Simeon (cl, bcl); Barney Bigard (cl, ts); Balls Ball, Volly DeFaut, Darnell Howard (cl); Alex Poole (as); W. E. Burton (kz); Clarence Black, J. Wright Smith (vn); Johnny St Cyr (bj, g); John Lindsay (b); Clay Jefferson, Andrew Hilaire (d); Edmonia Henderson (v). 9/24–12/26.

* Jelly Roll Morton 1926–1928 Classics 612 Morton; Ward Pinkett (t); George Mitchell (c); Kid Ory, Gerald Reeves, Geechie Fields (tb); Omer Simeon, Johnny Dodds (cl); Stump Evans (as); Bud Scott, Johnny St Cyr (g); Lee Blair (bj); Bill Benford, Quinn Wilson (tba); John Lindsay (b); Andrew Hilaire, Tommy Benford, Baby Dodds (d). 12/26–6/28.

* Jelly Roll Morton 1928–1929 Classics 627 Morton; Ed Anderson, Edwin Swayzee, Boyd 'Red' Rosser, Walter Briscoe, Henry 'Red' Allen, Freddy Jenkins (t); William Cato, Charlie Irvis, J. C. Higginbotham (tb); Russell Procope, Albert Nicholas, Wilton Crawley, George Baquet (cl); Paul 'Polo' Barnes (ss); Joe Thomas, Johnny Hodges (as); Joe Garland, Walter Thomas (ts); Luis Russell, Rod Rodriguez (p); Lee Blair, Will Johnson (g); Barney Alexander (bj); Bill Moore, Harry Prather (tba); George 'Pops' Foster (b); Manzie Johnson, William Laws, Paul Barbarin, Sonny Greer (d). 12/28–12/29.

 Jelly Roll Morton 1929–1930 Classics 642 Morton; Ward Pinkett, Bubber Miley (t); Geechie Fields, Wilbur De Paris (tb); Albert Nicholas, Barney Bigard, Ernie Bullock (cl); Bernard Addison, Howard Hill (g); Lee Blair (bj); Billy Taylor, Bill Benford, Pete Biggs (tba); Zutty Singleton, Tommy Benford, Cozy Cole (d); Billie Young (v). 12/29–7/30.

 Jelly Roll Morton 1930–1939 Classics 654 Morton; Ward Pinkett, Sidney De Paris (t); Geechie Fields, Claude Jones, Fred Robinson (tb); Sidney Bechet (ss); Albert Nicholas, Eddie Scarpa (cl); Happy Caldwell (ts); Bernard Addison, Lawrence Lucie (g); Billy Taylor (tba); Wellman Braud (b); Bill Beason, Zutty Singleton (d). 10/30–12/39.

♛ * Jelly Roll Morton Volumes. 1–5 JSP JAZZBOX 903 5CD As above discs. 9/26–10/30.

Classics 599 starts with a 1924 date with Morton's (so-called) Kings Of Jazz, and horrible it sounds too, poorly transferred from grim originals and featuring diabolical clarinet from the suitably named Balls' Ball and even worse alto by Alex Poole. Trio versions of 'My Gal' and 'Wolverine Blues' with Volly DeFaut aren't much better, but a fine 1926 solo date for Vocalion is included, and these tracks (unavailable elsewhere) must make the disc attractive to Morton specialists. Two sides with (allegedly) King Oliver and Edmonia Henderson are a further bonus. They then go into the Victor sequence, which continues through Classics 612 and 627, although the latter adds an unremarkable session at the end under Wilton Crawley's leadership, with (somewhat mystifyingly) a number of Ellingtonians present.

Morton's recordings for Victor are a magnificent body of work which has been done splendid but frustratingly mixed justice by the various reissues, stretching back to the start of the LP era. His Red Hot Peppers band sides, particularly those cut at the three incredible sessions of 1926, are masterpieces which have endured as well as anything by Armstrong, Parker or any comparable figure at the top end of the jazz pantheon. Morton seemed to know exactly what he wanted: having honed and orchestrated compositions like 'Grandpa's Spells' at the piano for many years, his realization of the music for a band was flawless and brimful of jubilation at his getting the music down on record. Mitchell, Simeon and the others all took crackling solos, but it was the way they were contextualized by the leader that makes the music so close to perfection. The 1926–7 dates were a summary of what jazz had achieved up to that time: as a development out of the New Orleans tradition, it eschewed the soloistic grandeur that Armstrong was establishing and preferred an almost classical poise and shapeliness. If a few other voices (Ellington, Redman) were already looking towards a more modern kind of group jazz, Morton was distilling what he considered to be the heart of hot music, 'sweet, soft, plenty rhythm', as he later put it.

While the earliest sessions are his greatest achievements, it's wrong to regard the later work as a decline. There are the two trio tracks with the Dodds brothers, with Morton tearing into 'Wolverine Blues'. The 1928 sessions feature his ten-piece touring band on the fine 'Deep Creek' and a small group handling the beautiful 'Mournful Serenade', while 1929 saw a memorable solo session which produced 'Pep', 'Fat Frances' and 'Freakish', and an exuberant band date that uncorked swinging performances in 'Burnin' The Iceberg' and 'New Orleans Bump'. But the sessions from 1930 onwards suffer from personnel problems and a vague feeling that Morton was already becoming a man out of time, with New York and territory bands moving into a smoother, less consciously hot music. His own playing remains jauntily commanding but sidemen become sloppy, and a piece like the complex 'Low Gravy', from July 1930, never reaches its potential on record. His last session for Victor until 1939 produced a final shaft of Mortonian genius in 'Fickle Fay Creep'; but a feeling was now deep-set that the pianist was a declining force, and he didn't record for Victor again until the end of the decade.

The 1939 tracks show the old master in good spirits, singing 'I Thought I Heard Buddy Bolden Say' and 'Winin' Boy Blues' with his old panache and directing an authentic New Orleans band with resilient aplomb. It is very old-time music for 1939 but it's still very different from the early Peppers sides, and none the worse for either. Classics 654 covers these sessions and also includes four titles from an excellent solo date from 1938.

Morton's music demands a place in any jazz collection. We are delighted to be able to welcome back the superlative set of five CDs from JSP. John R. T. Davies's remastering work is exemplary and does justice to music which has in the past been often brutally and shoddily presented, even by owning label RCA. At a modest price for the five-disc set, this is perhaps the greatest bargain in the jazz catalogue.

The Classics CDs have the field to themselves, in terms of single-disc sequences, and it's a pity that their remastering is often spotty and unpredictable.

* The Complete Library Of Congress Recordings Rounder ROUCD 1888 8CD Morton (p, v); Alan Lomax (v). 5–6/38.

In the summer of 1938, broke and almost finished, Morton was recorded – almost by chance at first – by Alan Lomax at the Library Of Congress, and when Lomax realized the opportunity he had on his hands he got Morton to deliver a virtual history of the birth pangs of jazz as it happened in the New Orleans of the turn of the century. His memory was unimpaired, although he chose to tell things as he preferred to remember them, perhaps; and his hands were still in complete command of the keyboard. The results have the quality of a long, drifting dream, as if Morton were talking to himself. He demonstrates every kind of music which he heard or played in the city, re-creates all his greatest compositions in long versions unhindered by 78 playing time, remembers other pianists who were never recorded, spins yarns, and generally sets down the most distinctive (if not necessarily the most truthful) document we have on the origins of the music.

The sessions were made on an acetate recorder and, while the sound may be uncomfortably one-dimensional to modern ears, everything he says comes through clearly enough, and the best of the piano solos sound as invigorating as they have to be. Yet another edition of these priceless recordings has been issued by Rounder, amounting to eight CDs and what is surely the most comprehensive coverage of the speech and music to date. The overall sound-quality has become something of a cause célèbre among jazz scholars – at times it does seem inferior to the previous four-disc edition on the same label – but for the general listener, this should be accorded a warm welcome, expensive though it is. It is a wonderfully illustrated lecture on Morton's music by the man who created it. Indispensable records for anyone interested in jazz history.

(*) Jelly Roll Morton 1939–1940 Classics 668 Morton; Henry 'Red' Allen (t); Joe Britton, Claude Jones (tb); Albert Nicholas (cl); Eddie Williams (as); Wellman Braud (b); Zutty Singleton (d). 12/39–1/40.

Morton's final recordings are relatively little-known, cut originally for General and later appearing on Commodore. The tracks by the Morton Six and Seven find him back with several sons of New Orleans, but the music lacks the authority of his great days; a couple of solo sessions from 1939 do, though, reassert his enduring powers at the keyboard, with several favourites still sounding like pieces of jazz legend. When one tracks through his legacy, there is actually little enough (compare him with Ellington or Armstrong for prolificity!) to make any survivals rather precious.

Sal Mosca (born 1927)

PIANO

He has carried forward the Tristano spirit by making himself scarce and recording only very sparingly.

(*) A Concert Jazz Records JR-8 Mosca (p solo). 6/79.
Belatedly released in 1990, this is a rare example of one of the leading followers of Lennie Tristano in a solo situation. Because Mosca has made so few recordings, his appearances always seem eventful and, despite the dour atmosphere of the CD – which settles for the grimmest monochrome packaging and presentation, a characteristic refusal to distract from the music's inner qualities – it is played electrically. Though most of the tunes are 'originals', they usually follow the standard Tristano-ite practice of an abstruse variation on a standard. Mosca's approach is formidably varied, both from piece to piece and within individual treatments. 'Co-Play', which starts as a relatively simple variation on 'Sweet And Lovely', becomes a labyrinthine investigation of the properties of the song, and 'That Time' turns 'That Old Feeling' into a fantasy on a number of kinds of jazz rhythm. Sometimes he plays it straight, but unexpectedly so: 'Prelude To A Kiss' has voicings more dense than in any authentic Ellington version. Always he is prodigiously inventive: while the music sometimes takes on a painstaking quality, Mosca's spontaneity is genuine enough to pack the programme with surprises.

 Sal Mosca/Warne Marsh Quartet Volumes 1 & 2 Zinnia 103/ 104 Mosca; Warne Marsh (ts); Frank Canino (b); Skip Scott (d). 81.
More problems with sound quality here. Mosca taped these Village Vanguard sessions himself and, for a recording dating from the '80s, it's pretty shabby, though Tristano-ites and other scholars will have their ears used to this sort of thing by now. Still, it does detract from music that is as refined and impeccable as chords-based improvising with no emotional agenda can get. Marsh's streaming elegance matches Mosca's slightly more fanciful playing to the expected 't'. As always, they are working on old staples such as '317 East 32nd' and the usual thinly disguised standards, and as always their inventiveness on material they'd mused on countless times already is enough to provoke disbelief. Canino and Scott are no more than functional, though that is presumably how the principals wanted it.

 Thing-Ah-Majig Zinnia 118 Mosca; Don Messina (b); Bill Chattin (d). 5/04.
Sal would be 80 in no time and was still doing the business. Shorthand talk about Tristano 'influence' makes less and less sense of this music. Truth is, he works a parallel course rather than a strict disciple's path. Check out the wonderful rising figure that comes out of nowhere on 'I'll Remember April' and it's clear that Sal's idiolect is compounded of much more than Cool School rigours. There's bebop, Broadway schmaltz, and a little whiff of Chopin and Debussy, not enough to make him sound 'classical', just a little truffle-shaving of flavour.

As does Lennie, he likes to start with standard material and see how far he can get away from it without losing sight of it altogether. That's particularly true on 'I Can't Get Started', which gives off a discomfiting air of omniscience, as if Mosca has heard and cherrypicked every jazz variation on the tune before coming up with his own witty digest. He does something of the same on 'How High The Moon'.

The two best performances are the long ones: 'If I Had You' and his own 'Nowhere', which goes to some remote places before coming back home. He's not recorded so very much given his senior status and has been uniformly badly served by sleeve-designers. As with A Concert, this one is almost self-consciously low-key.

Danny Moss (born 1927)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Made his name in dance and swing bands in the late '40s, and was then known as a sideman and leader in British mainstream. Left for Australia in 1990.

 At University College Oxford MacJazz MAC CD004 Moss; Brian Lemon (p). 2/85.

 Weaver Of Dreams Nagel Heyer 017 Moss; Brian Lemon (p); Len Skeat (b); Butch Miles (d). 11/94.

 A Swingin' Affair Nagel Heyer 034 Moss; Heinz Buhler (t); Hans Meier (tb); Werner Keller (cl); Buddha Scheidegger (p); Peter Schmidli (g); Vinzenz Kummer (b); Carlo Capello (d). 11/96.

 Three Great Concerts Nagel Heyer 019 Moss; Tom Saunders (c); Bill Allred (tb); Chuck Hedges (cl); Brian Dee, Brian Lemon, Johnny Varro (p); Isla Eckinger, Len Skeat (b); Oliver Jackson, Butch Miles (d); Jeanie Lambe (v). 11/3–9/95.
Moss has often been hidden by his surroundings on record, usually in sections or anonymous groups, and he's had only a few opportunities of clear space. These discs give a decent idea of his powers. The Hawkins–Webster tradition is what he sticks to closest, and it comes out mainly on slow and medium tempos. With Lemon, the most fail-safe of accompanists, Danny lays back on the chords and relaxes. They hustle through some of the pieces, especially 'Struttin' With Some Barbecue', but the moments to savour come in the likes of 'You're Blasé'. Dave Bennett's sound catches the tone of both players nicely.

Weaver Of Dreams finds him in Hamburg, delivering a faithful set of tenorman's staples – '9.20 Special', 'Smoke Gets In Your Eyes', 'Blue Lou' – and a small number of choice ballads. Utterly reliable playing, though some of the old facility has been worn away, and one regrets that Moss wasn't featured more in his prime.

He seems to have made up a fruitful relationship with the Nagel Heyer enterprise. A Swingin' Affair finds him guesting with the German mainstream group Buddha's Gamblers, and while there's nothing remarkable the group takes great satisfaction in swinging through some fine old Basie, Goodman and Ellington staples. Moss is right at home here. Three Great Concerts works primarily as a feature for vocalist Lambe, whose big voice and buttonholing style may not be to all tastes, but she can certainly make the most out of a lyric like 'You Came A Long Way From St Louis'. The other horns turn up on only one track; Moss and the rhythm sections make most of the running.

 Keeper Of The Flame /  Steamers Nagel Heyer CD 064 /049 Moss; John Pearce (p); Len Skeat (b); Charly Antolini (d). 10/98.
Sampling any track from these two baker's dozens will make one appreciate Hans Nagel Heyer's appreciation for the tenorman, and why he wants to keep recording him – hefty sound, big swing, beefy imagination. But the record's too much of a good thing. Moss clobbers tunes at medium–uptempo, and he relies on the Websterian ballad method – do as little as possible, and let the sound and the melody carry it. Except Danny's not really Ben. The drummer often makes a difference in situations like this, and Charly Antolini is terrific, swinging all the time. Still, 76 minutes is a long haul for anyone and two volumes' worth can only be recommended to an absolute devotee.

Also, in brief:

 At Bob Barnard's Jazz Party 1999 /  Returns To Bob Barnard's Jazz Party 2000 /  At Bob Barnard's Jazz Party 2001 /  At Bob Barnard's Jazz Party 2006 Nif Nuf 43/004 / 43/07 / 43/010 / 43/012. 4/99; 5/00; 4/01; 5/06.
Working on what became home territory, at St Kilda and Melbourne. Barnard's annual jazz bashes are always good mainstream fests and the playing is top-notch for the idiom. Danny's been seriously ill since these, but has managed to make some appearances.

Bennie Moten (1894–1935)

PIANO, BANDLEADER

Born in KC, he was bandleading in the city by 1920. He built the best band in the region for more than a decade, but died in Chicago following a surgical accident.

() Bennie Moten 1923–1927 Classics 549 Moten; Lamar Wright, Harry Cooper, Ed Lewis, Paul Webster (c); Thamon Hayes (tb, v); Harlan Leonard (cl, ss, as); Woody Walder (cl, ts); Jack Washington (cl, as, bs); LaForest Dent (as, bs, bj); Sam Tall, Leroy Berry (bj); Vernon Page (tba); Willie Hall, Willie McWashington (d). 9/23–6/27.
 The OKeh Sessions Cygnet CYG 1004 As above; also personnel from 1931 sessions, listed below. 9/23–4/31.
Moten's band was the most important group to record in the American south-west in the period, and luckily it made a large number of sides for OKeh and Victor; but the quality of the music is very inconsistent, and much of the earlier material is of historical rather than musical interest. This first CD in the complete edition on Classics couples the band's 14 sides for OKeh from 1923–5 with the first recordings for Victor. The OKeh tracks are a curious mixture: the very first two, 'Elephant's Wobble' and 'Crawdad Blues', are little more than strings of solos, while the subsequent 'South' and 'Goofy Dust' are driving, rag-orientated tunes which emphasize the ensemble. Wright is the only really interesting soloist from the period, and Walder, the apparent star, indulges in some idiotic antics on the clarinet; but, even so, the lumpy rhythms and clattery ensembles yield some strong, hard-hitting performances, sometimes redolent of Sam Morgan's New Orleans band of a few years later. The early Victors don't show a very great advance, despite electrical recording, and one must wait for the later sides for Moten's band to really shine.

Classics offer a fair remastering of what are very rare originals, although they are not superior to the old Parlophone LP which first collected the OKeh tracks. The Cygnet release, though, is in much better sound overall, and includes the bonus of four previously unissued takes from some of the final Victor sessions of 1931.

(*) Bennie Moten 1927–1929 Classics 558 As above, except omit Wright, Cooper, Tall, Hall; add Booker Washington (c); Buster Moten (p, acc); James Taylor, Bob Clemmons (v). 6/27–6/29
 Bennie Moten 1929–30 Classics 578 As above, except omit Buster Moten; add Hot Lips Page (t), Eddie Durham (tb, g); Count Basie (p); Jimmy Rushing (v). 7/29–10/30.
(*) Justrite Frog DGF29 As discs above. 26–27.
(*) Kansas City Breakdown Frog DGF 30 As discs above. 28–29.
Moten's band progressed rather slowly, handicapped by an absence of both truly outstanding soloists and an arranger of real talent. The surprisingly static personnel did the best they could with the material, but most of the tunes work from a heavy off-beat. Walder has barely improved, and the arrival of Bennie's brother, Buster, with his dreaded piano-accordion, was enough to root the band in novelty status. The second Classics CD still has some good moments – in such as 'The New Tulsa Blues' or 'Kansas City Breakdown' – but sugary saxes and pedestrian charts spoil many promising moments. Matters take an immediate upward turn with the joint arrival of Basie and Durham in 1929. 'Jones Law Blues', 'Band Box Shuffle' and 'Small Black' all show the band with fresh ideas under Basie's inspirational leadership (and soloing – here with his Earl Hines influence still intact). 'Sweetheart Of Yesterday' even softens the two-beat rhythm. The two Frog issues offer the music in splendid sound with excellent documentation and these are now a clear first choice over the Classics.

 Bennie Moten 1930–1932 Classics 591 Moten; Ed Lewis, Booker Washington (c); Hot Lips Page, Joe Keyes, Dee Stewart (t); Thamon Hayes, Dan Minor (tb); Eddie Durham (tb, g); Harlan Leonard, Jack Washington, Woody Walder, Eddie Barefield, Ben Webster (reeds); Count Basie (p); Buster Moten (acc); Leroy Berry (bj, g); Vernon Page (tba); Walter Page (b); Willie McWashington (d); Jimmy Rushing (v). 30–32.
Under Basie's effective leadership, the Moten orchestra finally took wing, and its final sessions were memorable. There were still problems, such as the presence of Buster Moten, the reliance on a tuba prior to the arrival of Page, and a general feeling of transition between old and new; but, by the magnificent session of December 1932, when the band created at least four masterpieces in 'Toby', 'Prince Of Wails', 'Milenberg Joys' and 'Moten Swing', it was a unit that could have taken on the best of American bands. Page, Rushing, Webster, Durham and especially Basie himself all have key solo and ensemble roles, and the sound of the band on 'Prince Of Wails' and 'Toby' is pile-driving. Ironically, this modernism cost Moten much of his local audience, which he was only recovering at the time of his death in 1935.

[illegible]

 Band Box Shuffle 1929–1932
Hep 1070/2 2CD As discs above. 29–32.
The Hep edition completely outclasses the Classics CDs, and with the Cygnet and Frog issues listed above this makes up the entire Moten story in fine and revealing detail.

Paul Motian (born 1931)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

Born in Philadelphia, he matured artistically in the Bill Evans trio and subsequently became a fine composer.

 Conception Vessel ECM 519279-2 Motian; Becky Friend (f); Sam Brown (g); Leroy Jenkins (vn); Keith Jarrett (p, f); Charlie Haden (b). 11/72.
 Tribute ECM 519281-2 Motian; Carlos Ward (as); Sam Brown, Paul Metzke (g); Charlie Haden (b). 5/74.
These were startling records when they first appeared, and they have retained their vigour and freshness. The single unaccompanied track on Conception Vessel, 'Ch'i Energy', provides a good representation of his basic sound-palette: sweeping cymbals, soft, delicately placed accents, a sense of flow and togetherness that is difficult to break down into components. Max Roach is the only other modern drummer who can sound anything like this, but Roach is a soapbox orator by comparison. Most of the first record is devoted to duo settings. The title-track and 'American Indian: Song Of Sitting Bull' are duos with Keith Jarrett (who plays flute on the latter). There are two trios with Haden and Brown, and the set closes with 'Inspiration From A Vietnamese Lullaby', which uses Friend and Jenkins, and points to the drummer's fascination with musical traditions outside the European/American orbit.

The 1974 album is a small classic. Ward is used sparingly, but the twinned guitars are a key component and, given the prominence of Bill Frisell in later years, it's interesting to note how Motian was using the instrument as early as this. The session consists of three Motian tunes, of which 'Sod House' and 'Victoria' are the best-known; also on the session, wonderful readings of Ornette's 'War Orphans' and Haden's 'Song For Ché'. The leader is seldom far from the centre of things, but as ever he plays with grace and composure.

(*) Dance ECM 519282-2 Motian; Charles Brackeen (ts); David Izenzon (b). 9/77.

 Le Voyage ECM 519283-2 Motian; Charles Brackeen (ts, ss); Jean-François Jenny-Clark (b). 3/79.

Timbrally, these trios are very different from the earlier ECMs. Motian plays in a more linear way, pushing the ideas along, and it is interesting to hear him in the company of such an emphatic horn-player as Brackeen, who seems to anticipate much of what Joe Lovano would bring to a Motian trio in later years. Izenzon and Jenny-Clark both carry deep, rich voices and an unorthodox approach to chords. Though neither will ever be mistaken for Haden, there is at least a consistency of sound. The earlier of the records is probably the more sheerly involving, largely because of Izenzon's immense power and throbbing, almost tragic voice. However, 'Folk Song For Rosie' and 'Le Voyage' itself are both delightful compositions, and Motian enthusiasts should certainly track down these fine discs.

 Psalm ECM 847330-2 Motian; Joe Lovano (ts); Billy Drewes (ts, as); Bill Frisell (g); Ed Schuller (b). 12/81.

The bones of the great trio with Frisell and Lovano are here, but muddied by the second saxophone and by the rather undefined bass-playing of Schuller. That having been said, this record contains some of Motian's darkest and most intriguing compositions: 'Mandeville' and 'Second Hand' are superb, and it's a pity that they aren't played with greater clarity.

(*) It Should've Happened A Long Time Ago ECM 823641-2 Motian; Joe Lovano (ts); Bill Frisell (g). 7/84.

A retake of 'Conception Vessel' gives some sense of how far the drummer had come in a decade. This is a roller-coaster ride in comparison to what went before. Lovano and Frisell conjure up a storm of ideas, combative, stirring and to the point. The guitarist seldom sounds less dreamy than in this context.

* Misterioso Soul Note 121174 Motian; Jim Pepper (ts, ss); Joe Lovano (ts); Bill Frisell (g); Ed Schuller (b). 7/86.

'Folk Song For Rosie' is the outstanding track here, an unaffectedly beautiful idea. He was also beginning to explore standards and repertory pieces with greater enthusiasm; Monk's 'Pannonica' glows with affection and imagination. The sound isn't pristine and some of the softer cymbal accents seem unduly hissy, but there is no mistaking the fact that Motian is playing with joy and enthusiasm.

 One Time Out Soul Note 121224 Motian; Joe Lovano (ts); Bill Frisell (g). 9/87.

Monk was the defining presence during this period, and he even stands behind some of the standard treatments on this disconcertingly mild and low-key recording. 'The Man I Love' is lent a jaggy, almost disillusioned quality that some will find troubling, while 'If I Should Lose You' and 'My Funny Valentine' are rethought almost from the bottom up. Lovano knows this material inside out, and one suspects that it's Frisell who's the sheet-anchor. The Monastic canon is explored direct via 'Monk's Mood', and you kind of suspect that an all-Monk set is only just around the corner.

(*) On Broadway: Volume 2 Winter & Winter 919038 Motian; Joe Lovano (ts); Bill Frisell (g); Charlie Haden (b). 9/89.

Here, the material is so familiar as to seem almost hackneyed on paper. In performance, though, these songs are transformed. Not since Charlie Parker worked his magic on 'All The Things You Are' has the old love song vibrated with so much hidden significance. 'But Not For Me' is titanic, with Motian's rippling percussion providing a whole new scenario for Frisell's bent-out-of-shape solo and Haden's sweet, rocking bass. We heard this version of 'Moonlight Becomes You' the day Bob Hope died ...

(*) In Tokio Winter & Winter 919052 Motian; Joe Lovano (ts); Bill Frisell (g). 91.

Issued in 2004, this is a superb performance from the trio, with some adventurous choices of material. 'Mumbo Jumbo' is the longest single piece, and perhaps outstays its welcome, but it is fascinating to hear the group stretch out and develop ideas in a way that studio discipline would preclude. A version of Ornette Colemans's and Pat Metheny's 'Kathelin Gray' shows how eager Motian always was to expand his repertory. The remainder are all Motian compositions, ranging from the tiny, one-minute caprice of 'The Hoax' to two parts of 'Birdsong' (beautiful) and the impressive 'Two Women From Padua'.

(*) Reincarnation Of A Love Bird Winter & Winter 919071 Motian; Chris Cheek, Chris Potter (ts); Wolfgang Muthspiel, Kurt Rosenwinkel (g); Steve Swallow (b); Don Alias (perc). 6/94.

Given that this was the Elecric Bebop Band, 'Ornithology' might have received a more convincing rendition. As it is, the swirling melody and complex harmonics seem to have been slowed and normalized. Nevertheless, this is a fine record and is full of impressive music. Swallow is masterful and Wolfgang Muthspiel his foil and willing partner. The two Chrisses always have things to say, though sometimes not the technical wherewithal to say them with absolute conviction. Reference solos on 'Be-Bop' and 'Round Midnight'. On Monk's 'Skippy', the guitars play a fascinating opening cadenza before the rest of the group comes in, a sure sign that Motian is trying to keep his approach even to this hoary repertoire as fresh as possible. Paul knows full well that the real energies of bop came from the rhythm section and he pointedly reinvents the bop drumming wheel with some whirlingly exuberant drumming, complete with occasional 'bombs'.

[illegible]

* Sound Of Love

Winter & Winter 910 008 Motian; Joe Lovano (ts); Bill Frisell (g). 6/95.

Winter & Winter evolved out of JMT, which perhaps fell foul of corporate lack of imagination. The first record for the new label is a live session from the Village Vanguard, and it catches the trio in cracking form, opening with 'Misterioso' and Mingus's most yearning composition, 'Duke Ellington's Sound

Of Love', before diving into two bright, effusive originals ('Once Around The Park' is menthol-fresh) and closing on 'Good Morning Heartache'. There are some glorious moments of interaction between the three players. The obvious difference between now and 1984 is that in the interim Lovano and Frisell have become superstars in their own right.

() Europe / () Holiday With Strings Winter & Winter 63 / 69 Motian; Pietro Tonolo (ss, ts); Chris Cheek (ts); Steve Cardenas, Ben Monder (g); Anders Christensen (b). 7/00; 11/01.
This is where the Electric Bebop idea really does pay off. Anders Christensen isn't the player that Steve Swallow is, but (much as Michael Henderson did for Miles) his occasional crudities are part of the message. On the first album, it's oddly disconcerting to hear Monk tunes, three of them, along with Parker's 'Bird Feathers', Herbie Nichols's '2300 Skidoo' and Tadd Dameron's 'If You Could See Me Now', played amplified and with an almost fusion twist. But right from the start, with Monk's rare 'Oska T', the idiom seems just right. Paul includes a couple of originals, 'Blue Midnight' and 'Fiasco', and demonstrates in each how much of his own thinking has grown out of – and now significantly out of – bebop. The time signatures wouldn't scare anyone of the founding generation, but the layering of harmonic ideas would certainly startle them. Motian never relies on preset licks; his own statements sound fresh and one can hear him cajoling and challenging the members of the band. Cheek is a doughty presence, but it's Tonolo who's a bit of a revelation, particularly on soprano.

Holiday With Strings conjures up certain expectations as a title. No orchestral accompaniment, however, just another rugged outing from an increasingly flexible outfit. Intriguing as the original material is, it's the standards that benefit from the closest attention. 'It Never Entered My Mind' has hints of Miles and Coltrane with slower and more spacious passages interspersed with harmonically busier sections. That same easy switch of registers and dynamics transforms 'Oh, What A Beautiful Morning' into a tiny epic. 'Arabesque', 'Endgame' and 'Look To The Black Wall' are all tightly constructed and crisply played. Tonolo again shines, though Cheek seems to be looking more to his laurels this time out and fires off some bursting solos.

 I Have The Room Above Her ECM 982 4056 Motian; Joe Lovano (ts); Bill Frisell (g). 4/04.
A now long-established association and inevitably, given the personnel, playing like a group of equals rather than a drummer-led group. Indeed, often it is Lovano who seems to dominate and not just by virtue of volume and personality. Quite the reverse; if anything he's subdued, but the set does seem shaped by his solo ideas and his immaculate phrasing of Motian's originals. Frisell has rarely sounded more thoughtful, even abstracted, and here and there he drifts off into private musings. This is still a remarkable group to catch live and live recording would seem to be the answer to these small quibbles. It's still a compelling record, albeit quietly.

 Garden Of Eden ECM 1917 Motian; Chris Cheek, Tony Malaby (sax); Jakob Bro, Steve Cardenas, Ben Monder (g); Jerome Harris (b). 11/04.
Though recorded some time before, this was released to mark Motian's 75th birthday. So quiet and subtle has he been over the years that there was never any prospect that he would slow up with age. This is a delicately beautiful set, very much in line with ECM's ethos of using a group as a flexible ensemble, rather than all-in all the time. 'Mesmer', one of the originals, is stated by saxophone, bass and drums, before the other instruments enter, and that variation of instrumentation is the most effective device here. The formation recalls the Electric Bebop Bands of earlier years and refers in some oblique way to Ornette's Prime Time experiments, but Motian uses each instrument like a palette-colour, holding it back for certain passages, then bringing it forward carefully blended into its surroundings.

The spirit of Mingus falls across the session from the beginning, with 'Pithecanthropus Erectus' being given an effective reading (remember: it was originally scored for two saxophones with rhythm) and a lovely interpretation of 'Goodbye Pork Pie Hat' following it. There are Monk and Parker tunes later (Bird's 'Cheryl' is despatched in just two minutes), and a lovely version of Jerome Kern's 'Bill', but it's the neo-bebop stuff that gives this group its unique character and the record its quiet power.

 On Broadway: Volume 4 – Or The Paradox Of Continuity Winter & Winter 910125 Motian; Chris Potter (ts); Masabumi Kikuchi (p); Larry Grenadier (b); Rebecca Martin (v). 11/05.
No guitar on this set, interestingly, and so a more conventional jazz sound to these fresh settings of Broadway material. Kikuchi keeps the harmonic open, though. There's a floating, almost gossamer quality to Motian's settings of late, but this has a quiet muscularity which doesn't in any way diminish the lyricism. Opening with Sammy Cahn's and Jimmy Van Heusen's 'The Last Dance' is a nice touch, but the key performances are the extended versions of 'Last Night When We Were Young' and 'I Loves You, Porgy', which help sustain the air of yearning melancholy. Potter is a revelation, executing the melodies crisply but allowing his long tones to drift softly across the bar-lines. Martin only comes in right at the end with 'How Long Has This Been Going On?' and unusually one wishes she might have stepped up for a couple more. A two-part 'Never Let Me Go' is the other highlight, and a sign that Motian is still prepared to let instinct run his programme. It sounds as though they simply decided to pick it up again. Nice stuff and an improvement on the last volume (see below, 'in brief'), which was recorded over a decade earlier.

 Time And Time Again ECM 170 1137 Motian; Joe Lovano (ts); Bill Frisell (g). 5/06.
This sounds like an association that has run its course, as the title unwittingly implies. In earlier years the impression of three strong personalities moving in parallel was a positive one, since what they eventually wove together was of cable strength. Here, even the freshest of the originals sound unravelled and uncommunicative and one wouldn't be entirely surprised to learn that the parts were recorded separately and then assembled.

Also, in brief:

 :rarum: – Selected Recordings ECM 000180102. 72–85.
Artists make their own selections and Motian has ignored everything for ECM after 1985. Material from his debut Conception Vessel, tracks from Dance, Psalm and It Should Have Happened A Long Time Ago; also work for other leaders and collaborations.

 The Story of Maryam /  Jack Of Clubs Soul Note 121074 / 121124. 7/83; 3/84.
An augmented version of the trio with Lovano and Frisell, parts of these seem self-consciously abrasive.

 On Broadway: Volume 3 Winter & Winter 919046. 6/90.
More delightful melody from the Great White Way. 'Pennies From Heaven' and 'The Way You Look Tonight' stand out.

 Trioism Winter & Winter 919067. 6/93.
Valuable reissue, but not a vintage record.

(*) Flight Of The Blue Jay Winter & Winter 910 009. 8/96.
The Electric Bebop Band with another Monk-shaded programme.

 Monk & Powell Winter & Winter 910045 2. 11/98.
Insight and musicality on five Monk compositions and three by Powell.

(*) 2000 + One Winter & Winter 919032. 99.
A set of consolidated brilliance rather than millennial intensity. The tracks are short and carefully paced; the drums sit well forward in the mix, but with just a single horn and with Steve Swallow playing like a second lead there is plenty of action.

Famoudou Don Moye (born 1946)

PERCUSSION

The last recruit to the originally drummerless Art Ensemble Of Chicago, he combines rhythmic power with sound-colour.

() The African Tapes Leo Golden Years of New Jazz GY 9/10 Moye; John Tchicai (as, perc); Hartmut Geerken (perc); others. 4/85.
 Ancestral Memories From Afrika To Chicago Il Manifesto 038 Moye; Billy Brimfield (t); Ari Brown (as, ts, p); Ken Prince (p); Calvin Brunson (ky); Herb Walker (g); Oscar 'Bobo' Brown, Rollo Radford, Thomas Palmer (b); Mamane Samake (djembe); Enoch Williamson (perc); P. C. Cotton, Luba Raashiek (v); Sela Allen, Babu Atiba, Clifton Robinson, Meshack Silas (v, perc). 10/98.
 Bamako Chicago Express Il Manifesto 410977 Similar to above, except add add Baba Sissoko (v, perc). 99.
The result of a trio tour through West Africa, the Leo Golden Years set is not the easiest of listens, comprising as it does a rather personal diary of encounters with local people, some trained musicians, most not. Tchicai plays mightily as he always does, but some of the extended percussion passages are hard to absorb without some visual stimulation. An earlier release, Cassava Balls, covers the same tour.

Ancestral Memories comes from a very similar musical language, but there is a sense of order and of traditional authority in much of this material which gives it strength. Moye's own role in this is often unclear because the density of percussion-lines and his own frequent switches can confuse. However, the Sun Percussion Summit is best heard as an undifferentiated orchestra. Even with Sissoko as guest star on the subsequent album, it is the ensemble that makes the music fly along.

Also, in brief:

 Jam For Your Life! /  Afrikan Song Southport 3007 / 3009. 83–91; 2 & 3/95.
Earlier collaborations with Enoch Williamson (perc) and the Sun Percussion Summit.

George Mraz (born 1944)

BASS

Originally Jiri, he has a Czech background, but has been an American stalwart for many years.

 Jazz Milestone MCD 9248-2 Mraz; Rich Perry (ts); Richie Beirach, Larry Willis (p); Billy Hart (d). 9–10/95.
 My Foolish Heart Milestone MCD 9262-2 As above, except omit Perry, Willis. 6/95.
 Bottom Lines Milestone MCD 9272-2 Mraz; Rich Perry (ts); Cyrus Chestnut (p); Al Foster (d). 4/97.
(*) Duke's Place Milestone MCD 9292-2 Mraz; Cyrus Chestnut, Renee Rosnes (p); Billy Drummond (d). 11/98.
(*) Morava Milestone MCD 9309-2 Mraz; Emil Viklicky (p); Zuzana Lapcíková (cymbalom, v); Billy Hart (d). 6/00.
After many years as the most dependable of rhythm men, Mraz suddenly accrued a small string of albums to his name. Jazz and My Foolish Heart are both basically trio dates (Willis and Perry have three guest appearances between them) with the bass given more prominence than usual. Beirach is a sympathetic confrère and Hart is appropriately discreet. There are some lovely things on both records: Beirach's almost motionless ballad, 'Sunday's Song', the steady investigation of 'Cinema Paradiso' and a surprisingly vivid arco reading of Strayhorn's 'Passion Flower'. But there's quite a lot of chaff, too. Bottom Lines introduces the concept of nine tunes all written by bassists. Perry is on hand throughout this time, and his rather gentle manner suits the occasion. 'Mr Pastorius', which Marcus Miller wrote for Miles Davis, has the original trumpet solo scored and played as a duo line by Mraz and Perry: handsomely done, if seemingly rather pointless. The best things come at the end, with a soft-centred 'Goodbye Porkpie Hat' and a very incisive reading of Steve Swallow's 'Falling Grace', surely the best thing on the record.

Duke's Place just shades the other records. Although it's yet another Ellington tribute, and at least half of it qualifies as over-familiar even by the standards of that songbook, the playing by Chestnut and Rosnes (they have five tracks each and share a mutual joust with 'Duke's Place' itself) affirms their individual eminence among today's pianists. Since they are featured on alternate tracks throughout the session, the record works nicely in terms of contrast, a fulsome Chestnut treatment of 'Come Sunday' followed by a quicksilver Rosnes version of 'Angelica', and so on. Mraz plays a somewhat more supportive role rather than a front-line one as on the other albums – and it doesn't hurt.

The last in the sequence, though, is an extraordinarily beautiful record, of Moravian folk melodies and songs. Mraz himself is actually from Bohemia, but his father was a Moravian, and Viklicky also belongs to the region. When they play an almost straight jazz piece such as 'Myjava' the record's not so strong, but in tandem with the simple, direct singing of Lapcíková, the haunting sound of the cymbalom and melodies as heartbreaking as 'Aspen Leaf', the record mines a unique strain – as well as surrendering nothing in terms of the quality of the playing, completely integrated with the material.

Bheki Mseleku (born 1955)

PIANO, TENOR SAXOPHONE

From Johannesburg, but stateless for many years during the apartheid era.

 Celebration Sheer Sound SLCD 039 Mseleku; Steve Williamson, Courtney Pine (ss); Jean Toussaint (ts); Eddie Parker (f); Michael Bowie (b); Marvin 'Smitty' Smith (d); Thebe Lipere (perc). 91.

 Beauty Of Sunrise Polygram 531868 Mseleku; Graham Haynes (c); Ravi Coltrane (ss, ts); James Spaulding (as, f); Michael Bowie (b); Elvin Jones, Ralph Peterson (d); Daniel Moreno (perc). 95.

Mseleku's distinctive sound has been likened to a cross between McCoy Tyner and Abdullah Ibrahim. While that's hardly a belittling comparison, it doesn't quite do justice to his individuality of touch, almost caressing, or to his ability to play tenor as he works the keyboard. There is a rapturous quality to the playing, not unmixed with angry fire. Much of Mseleku's highly trumpeted work for Polygram has disappeared but Beauty Of Sunrise remains and the South Africal label Sheer Sound has restored Celebration, which sounds surprisingly dated. This isn't his best record: we tend to prefer the early ones where he sounds like a man soliloquizing in the desert. There's an air here of everyone striving for some signature of authenticity that hardly seems necessary, and the famous guests are as much intrusion as blessing. But one can hardly grudge Mseleku his return; a later Sheer Sound release, Home At Last, is also worth pursuing.

Mujician

GROUP

Free improvising quartet. The title comes from Tippett's daughter, describing what dad does for a living.

 The Journey Cuneiform RUNE 42 Paul Dunmall (reeds); Keith Tippett (p); Paul Rogers (b); Tony Levin (d). 6/90.

 The Bristol Concert What Disc WHAT7 As above, except add Julie Tippetts (v); Georgian Ensemble. 6/91.

 Poem About The Hero / (*) Birdman / * Colours Fulfilled /  Spacetime / * There's No Going Back Now Cuneiform RUNE 62 / RUNE 82 / RUNE 102 / RUNE 162 / RUNE 232 As for The Journey. 92; 5/95; 5/97; 2/01; 6/05.

There is an impressive selflessness to Mujician's music, but an impressive muscularity as well. The balance of voices – guiding spirit Tippett's extraordinary piano-forte language, Dunmall's folk-tinged post-Coltrane horns, the onrush of seven string A.L.L. bass which Rogers devised with the group (though he left for a time) and Levin's jazz-based drumming – is such that one cannot imagine Mujician playing with any other member. The collaboration with the Georgian ensemble, fruit of a visit to Tbilisi, is a delightful exception, but not even Julie Tippetts, with whom husband Keith has an extraordinary musical chemistry, has been a regular guest.

Hard to make distinctions within a body of work that is now two decades in the making. The Journey was out of print for some time, and returns with a fresh impact: a continuous, almost-hour improvisation recorded at the Bath Festival. The most recent disc is of equal quality, the journey between them consistently moving. Only on Spacetime is the long-form improvisation approach laid aside in favour of shorter, more obviously end-stopped pieces. It's still intriguing, but it misses some essence of the group which only works in a more generous spacetime.

Jim Mullen (born 1945)

GUITAR

The Glaswegian began as a bass-player, but guitar has been his calling, with stints in both rock and jazz situations. His partnership with Dick Morrissey was very successful in the '80s.

(*) Rule Of Thumb Jazzprint JPVP 104 Mullen; Dave O'Higgins (ss, ts); Lawrence Cottle (b); Ian Thomas (d). 8/94.

 We Go Back / (*) Live In Glasgow Jazzprint JPVP 105 / JPVP 103 Mullen; Gareth Williams (p); Mick Hutton (b); Gary Husband (d). 1/96.

Mullen is a redoubtable musician who's brought both an exciting style and a keen intelligence to playing situations which might have otherwise encouraged either noodling or showing off. He understands the attraction of rock as a crowd-pleaser, but what he plays is never diluted by mere showboating or self-indulgence. The Jazzprint releases document both his early-'90s band (with Cottle on electric bass) and the 'acoustic' quartet of more recent times. Rule Of Thumb is all snap and hustle, a lean group sound on which the soloists expand. O'Higgins goes a little too far here and there, but Mullen himself is quick to right any piece which sounds like it might have got out of hand. Crisp and smartly organized, with ten pieces despatched inside an hour, it works very well as a CD.

We Go Back lets Mullen nod acknowledgement to some of his favourite tunes, as well as a few originals such as the needle-fine 'Medication'. The quartet sound heavier and less mobile than the old unit, but there's nothing wrong with the playing. Live In Glasgow is a homecoming in front of old friends, and by now the quartet is well played-in. Horace Silver's 'Peace' gets things off to a powerful start, and Mullen is clearly in the mood to blow; it's a live set where you can feel the band flexing their muscles without losing their heads. 'My Ideal', with a particularly graceful cadenza, cools them off. Williams, like O'Higgins before him, occasionally overdoes it, but it does add to the excitement.

(*) Somewhere In The Hills Hep CD 2085 As above. 8/02.

The same band, but a couple of years on and sounding increasingly magisterial. 'Smile', 'The Night We Called It a Day' and Jobim's 'Somewhere In The Hills' are immaculate and thoughtful jazz performances with enough jazz-rock flavouring to add bite. There is a brief reprise of the Burnsian strain with 'The Craw That Killed The Pussy, O' (maybe more familiar as 'Green Grow The Rushes'), but the emphasis this time is less eclectic. Williams is outstanding as usual and Husband always has interesting things to say without grandstanding.

 Gig Bag Artists /  Smokescreen Diving Duck DDRCD 001/005 Mullen: Stan Sulzmann (ss, as on Smokescreen only); Mike Gorman (org); Matt Skelton (d). 04; 06.

A logical project for Jim, and given a new respectable profile for the old-fashioned guitar/organ trio, one in which he can express himself vehemently. Sulzmann's guest appearance on the second record is obviously a bonus, but he's hardly needed. Gorman's very much to the manner born, a latter-day Brian Auger, but with something of the spirit of the classic American Hammond men. Nice new British imprint, too.

Also, in brief:

 Soundbites Jazzprint JPVP 118. 93.

A strong set with Dave O'Higgins (ts) in particularly good form.

(*) Burns Black Box BBJ2016. 4/00.

The Rabbie Burns Songbook; Jim and a fine band keep it real.

Gerry Mulligan (1927–96)

BARITONE AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONE, PIANO

He made a cumbersome horn sound fleet and natural. The career began with Gene Krupa and 'Disc Jockey Jump', the first of many composition/arrangements. Later a key presence in the Birth Of The Cool project and co-leader of the famous pianoless group with Chet Baker. Later years saw him combine sophisticated arrangement with cool, often tender baritone.

 Mullenium /  Young Mulligan Columbia CK 65678 / Proper PVCD 119 2CD Mulligan; Ed Badgley, John Dee, Don Fagerquist, Don Ferrara, Jerry Lloyd, Al Porcino, Red Rodney, Phil Sunkel, Joe Techner, Ray Triscari (t); Sy Berger, Warren Covington, Jim Dahl, Chuck Harris, Frank Hunter, Frank Rehak, Jim Seaman, Dick Taylor, Jack Zimmerman (tb); Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Louis Giamo, Charlie Kennedy, Lee Konitz, Hal McCusick, Joe Soldo, Harry Terrill (as); Charlie Rouse, Zoot Sims, Phil Urso, Charlie Ventura (ts); Gene Allen, Jack Schwartz (bs); Elliot Lawrence, Teddy Napoleon (p); Mike Triscari (g); Joe Benjamin, Bob Strahl (b); Dave Bailey, Gene Krupa (d). 46–57; 46–52.

 Legacy N2K 10002 Mulligan; Chet Baker, Pete Candoli, Miles Davis, Jon Eardley, Don Ferrara, Wallace Roney, Clark Terry, Nick Travis (t); Wayne Andre, Dave Bargeron, Kai Winding (tb); Bob Brookmeyer, Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); John Clark, Junior Collins, John Graas (frhn); Billy Barber, Ray Siegel (tba); Dick Meldonian, Bud Shank, Phil Woods (as); Gene Quill (as, cl); Zoot Sims (ts); Gene Allen, Don Davidson (bs); Al Haig (p); Dick Mathes, Greg Phillinganes (ky); Mike Renzi (syn); Joe Mondragon, Joe Shulman, Bobby Whitlock (b); Dave Bailey, Bernie Dresel, Mel Lewis, Max Roach (d); Patti Austin, Diva Gray, Darryl Tookes (v). 49–96.

The most important baritone saxophonist in contemporary jazz, Mulligan took the turbulent Serge Chaloff as his model, but he blended his fast, slightly pugnacious delivery with the elegance of Johnny Hodges and Lester Young. This produced an agile, legato sound which became instinct with the cool West Coast style, the flipside of bebop. Mulligan's – and Claude Thornhill's – major role in what became known as Miles Davis's Birth Of The Cool is now increasingly acknowledged, as is his genius as a composer/arranger. On the model of the Birth Of The Cool nonet, his big bands have the intimacy and spaciousness of much smaller groups, preferring subtlety to blasting power. His small groups, conversely, work with a depth of harmonic focus that suggests a much larger outfit.

In his short story 'Entropy', the novelist Thomas Pynchon takes Mulligan's early-'50s pianoless quartets with Chet Baker as a crux of post-modernism, improvisation without the safety net of predictable chords. The revisionist argument was that Mulligan attempted the experiment simply because he had to work in a club with no piano. The true version is that there was a piano, albeit an inadequate one, but he was already experimenting with a much more arranged sound for small groups (to which the baritone saxophone was peculiarly adaptable) and the absence of a decent keyboard was merely an additional spur.

The material on Mullenium surfaced in the '70s on an LP called The Arranger. It comprises a lost big-band session from 1957 and a number of arrangements made for Gene Krupa ('Disc Jockey Jump' and 'How High The Moon') and for Elliot Lawrence. These do not feature Mulligan much or at all as a player, but they offer a valuable insight into his skill as an orchestrator, with a distinctive emphasis on the middle register and a relaxed and easy swing. There are valuable insights to be gleaned here, but it is probably best to leave this album till later in your exposure to Mulligan and his music, since any epiphanies are likely to be retrospective.

The material on Legacy covers a similar span of time. Mulligan is beginning to emerge as a soloist of some power and confidence, but even here the emphasis is still on arrangement. The selections are familiar enough – 'Jeru', 'Bernie's Tune', 'Mainstream', 'Boplicity' and 'Walking Shoes', as well as later stuff – but as a single-volume sampling of Mulligan's career this is hard to beat, scamped as the chronology is.

The Proper set is extremely good value and covers the waterfront with admirable thoroughness given the chronological span.

CORE COLLECTION

* The Original Quartet
Blue Note 94407-2 2CD Mulligan; Chet Baker (t); Bob Whitlock, Carson Smith, Joe Mondragon (b); Chico Hamilton, Larry Bunker (d). 8/52–6/53.

Mulligan's pianoless quartet is one of the epochal jazz groups, even if it had no such aspirations, formed for nothing more than a regular gig at The Haig (where some of the tracks were recorded) and even though many of its sessions were recorded quickly and with little preparation. In retrospect, it's the simplest pleasures which have made the music endure: the uncomplicated swing of the varying rhythm sections, the piquant contrast of amiably gruff baritone and shyly melodious trumpet, the coolly effective originals like 'Nights At The Turntable' and the irresistible 'Walkin' Shoes', and the subtle and feelingful treatments of standards such as 'Lullaby Of The Leaves'. Cool but hot, slick but never too clever, these are some of the most pleasurable records of their time. The two-disc set includes the basic library of 42 tracks and is an indispensable part of Mulligan's legacy.

(*) The Best Of The Gerry Mulligan Quartet With Chet Baker
Pacific Jazz CDP 7 95481 2 Mulligan; Chet Baker (t); Henry Grimes, Carson Smith, Bob Whitlock (b); Dave Bailey, Larry Bunker, Chico Hamilton (d). 8/52–12/57.

This compilation CD, drawn from singles (including the classic 'Soft Shoe'/'Walkin' Shoes' combination) and subsequent 10-inch LPs, is an excellent sampling of Mulligan's 11-month association with Chet, with a single item, 'Festive Minor', from the same December 1957 sessions that yielded Reunion. It's fair (to Chet, at least) to record that it was Mulligan, not the famously unreliable trumpeter, who brought the line-up to an end. In June 1953, Mulligan was jailed for several months on a drugs offence. It is perhaps as well that the group was folded at its peak. Generously recorded in a warm close-up, the sessions convey all of Mulligan's skill as a writer and arranger, with the saxophone and a very foregrounded bass filling in the space normally occupied by piano.

 With The Chubby Jackson Big Band Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 711 Mulligan; Chet Baker, Don Ferrara, Howard McGhee, Al Porcino (t); J. J. Johnson, Kai Winding (tb); Charlie Kennedy (as); Georgie Auld, Zoot Sims (ts); Tony Aless (p); Chubby Jackson, Carson Smith (b); Chico Hamilton, Don Lamond (d). 5/53.

An odd, rather fudged release, pairing the classic quartet, with Mulligan as featured soloist, with the bassist's outfit. Stellar and magnificently organized, it seems to be in the wrong gear for Mulligan, who works through the dense, rather toppy arrangements like a man cheerfully walking through a rainstorm. Fascinating to hear so many remarkable soloists all pulling together, though they all sound as if they're protesting too much. Not an unqualified success, but a further interesting byway on Mulligan's recording career.

 California Concerts Pacific Jazz 46860 Mulligan; Jon Eardley (t); Red Mitchell (b); Chico Hamilton (d). 11/54.

Post-Chet. As far as French fans and critics were concerned, this was how young America looked and sounded. Sunny, cooled-out, elaborated but determinedly un-profound, it smacks very strongly of a time and place. No less than the slightly epicene Baker, the crew-cut, square-jawed Mulligan became a kind of icon, in sharp counter-definition to the long-hair, goatee and beret image of jazz.

The California material showcases a bold and inventive group. Eardley sounds not a bit like Chet and shapes a solo entirely differently, and the whole rhythmic/harmonic cast of the group changes with the introduction of Mitchell and Hamilton, who mesh instantly on 'Blues Going Up' and turn in a remarkable rhythm performance on 'Yardbird Suite'. The inclusion of 'Darn That Dream' and 'Makin' Whoopee' only serves to highlight the originality of Mulligan's conception. Again one can hear him working over chord variants which come out of bebop, but he may be influenced by classical precedents as well.

 At Storyville Pacific Jazz 94472 Mulligan; Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Bill Crow (b); Dave Bailey (d). 12/56.

There is a romping self-confidence and camaraderie to this live date (from the Boston club rather than New Orleans). For all the buttoned-down sobriety of this group, it is also a fleet and powerful outfit, capable of generating a big, resonant sound. Mulligan takes the lion's share of solos, but Brookmeyer is often working softly just behind, his gentle attack and rhythmically relaxed delivery acting as counterpoise to the leader's unusually punchy articulation. It would have been interesting to hear an occasional switch to soprano at this stage; one can hear Mulligan striving for a tighter, more pinched tonality on occasion, though generally he favours a mid-range, playing a couple of solos which might just as easily have been done on tenor, but for a few tell-tale pedal points.

(*) Mulligan Meets Monk Riverside 1106 Mulligan; Thelonious Monk (p); Wilbur Ware (b); Shadow Wilson (d). 8/57.

Not an entirely probable encounter, but Mulligan more than keeps afloat on the Monk tunes, sounding least at ease on 'Rhythm-A-Ning', but absolutely confident on 'Straight, No Chaser' and, of course, 'Round About Midnight'. The dark, heavy sound of Wilbur Ware's bass is sufficiently 'below' Mulligan's horn and his intervals sufficiently broad to tempt the saxophonist to some unusual whole-note progressions. Monk darts in and out like a tailor's needle, cross-stitching countermelodies and neatly abstract figures. The 2003 edition is 20-bit mastered but with no additional material, beyond the alternates included on earlier CD issues.

(*) Gerry Mulligan–Paul Desmond Quartet Verve 519850-2 Mulligan; Paul Desmond (as); Joe Benjamin (b); Dave Bailey (d). 8/57.

Another of Verve's summit conferences – and a felicitous one. There has probably never been a saxophone sound as finely blended as this, and our only quibble – 'Body And Soul' notwithstanding – is that the material is not really up to the playing. Some of the tunes are obscure enough to suggest that it wasn't just run down on the spot, but there is a lack of anything to get one's teeth into. The best moments are, as in 'Body And Soul', when Desmond moves to the front and Mulligan plays what are effectively piano chord-shapes behind him. Glorious.

(*) Songbook Blue Note 33575-2 Mulligan; Lee Konitz (as); Allen Eager, Zoot Sims (as, ts); Al Cohn (ts, bs); Freddie Green, Paul Palmieri (g); Dick Wetmore (vn); Calo Scott (clo); Vinnie Burke, Henry Grimes (b); Dave Bailey (d). 12/57.

Mulligan had a busy year in 1957, which is perhaps why this largely forgotten session was arranged by Bill Holman. There is no discernible difference in the voicings, but of course the multi-saxophone line-up is already rather startling. Allen Eager was effectively lost to the music after this point, which seems all the greater pity given the strength and authority of his playing (like Zoot Sims, he also doubles unexpectedly on alto) and the calm, authoritative logic of his soloing. Mulligan is as ever the centre of attention, but only as the apex of a highly organized octet consisting of individualists. He reprises 'Disc Jockey Jump' in a new, more smoothly contoured form and he showcases 'Turnstile' and 'Venus De Milo', two of his best and most adaptable compositions. The CD also includes four boppish tunes recorded with bassist Vinnie Burke and what amounts to a non-classical string quartet: guitar, violin, cello, bass.

 Reunion With Chet Baker Pacific Jazz 46857 Mulligan; Chet Baker (t); Henry Grimes (b); Dave Bailey (d). 12/57.

For one reason and another, there weren't many opportunities to reconvene the classic group. After a gap of some years, there is a touch of reserve – and maybe suspicion – in this reunion recording. Chet's tone is reserved and his delivery rather wandery, and there is an oddly clenched quality to Mulligan's playing as well. There are still, though, wonderful moments to be had from the album. 'Ornithology' is unexpected in its freshness and vivacity, and the alternative takes of 'Trav'lin' Light' and 'Gee, Baby, Ain't I Good To You' are a measure of how intuitively these musicians responded to one another when given time and the right context. Also, the closing version of 'All The Things You Are' is very special and maybe stands as epigraph – if not epitaph – to Gerry's association with Chet.

* What Is There To Say? / (*) News From Blueport Columbia CK 52978 / Jazz Hour 73577 Mulligan; Art Farmer (t); Bill Crow (b); Dave Bailey (d). 12/58, 1/59.

Farmer doesn't quite have the lyrical poignancy of Chet Baker in this setting, but he has a full, deep-chested tone (soon to be transferred wholesale and exclusively to flugelhorn) which combines well with Mulligan's baritone. What Is There To Say? was Mulligan's first recording for Columbia. It's very direct, very unfussy, very focused on the leader, but with the same skills in evidence as on the earlier The Arranger, which was a dry run for the label. The first album proper is a small masterpiece of controlled invention. Mulligan's solos fit into the structure of 'As Catch Can' and 'Festive Minor' as if they were machine-tooled. Farmer responds in kind, with smooth legato solos and delicate fills.

The Newport tapes are technically flawed, with drop-outs and distortions on several tracks, but this was a wonderful performance from all concerned and Mulligan collectors will certainly want to hear it.

 Live In Rome Lone Hill Jazz LHJR 10103 Mulligan; Art Farmer (flhn); Bill Crow (b); Dave Bailey (d). 5/59.

This has appeared in several forms before but never complete. The restoration of Mulligan's theme song 'Utter Chaos' rounds out an excellent set, marked by a fantastic romp through Farmer's 'Blueport' and some great piano from Gerry on 'Spring Is Sprung'. The radio recording is pretty decent, though there are one or two dead spots.

(*) The Complete Gerry Mulligan Meets Ben Webster Sessions Verve 539095-2 2CD Mulligan; Ben Webster (ts); Jimmy Rowles (p); Leroy Vinnegar (b); Mel Lewis (d). 11 & 12/59.

 Verve Jazz Masters 36 Verve 523342-2 Mulligan; Conte Candoli, Don Ferrara, Doc Severinsen, Clark Terry, Nick Travis (t); Willie Dennis (tb); Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Alan Ralph (btb); Gene Quill (as, cl); Bob Donovan, Dick Meldonian (as); Jim Reider, Zoot Sims (ts); Gene Allen (bs); Buddy Clark, Bill Crow (b); Gus Johnson, Mel Lewis (d). 7/60–12/62.

Webster is magisterial on the sessions of November and December 1959 and the two saxophones blend gloriously in the lower register. Any quibbles about some other aspects of the sound have been allayed by a digitally remastered edition which restores the whole of the session, complete with alternatives. There is probably a surplus of material for most tastes, but hearing these two remarkable figures, with their very different backgrounds and approaches, working in this proximity is a rare privilege.

The Jazz Masters collection is an excellent buy but is relatively limited in scope. Drawn in the main from the Concert Jazz Band discs, Gerry Mulligan '63 (albeit recorded a year earlier) and A Concert In Jazz, it nevertheless gives full measure from these and fills in an important stage in Jeru's progress.

 Gerry Mulligan And The Concert Jazz Band /  Live At Paris Olympia 1960 /  Live In Zurich, 1960 /  Concert In The Rain RTE Europe 1 710382/83 2CD / Laserlight 14354 2CD / TCB 02122 / Jazz Band 2129 As for Jazz Masters. 60; 60; 60; 62, 63.

The RTE set is one of a series of live airshots. The Concert Jazz Band was an extraordinary outfit, perhaps the best representation there was of Mulligan's music. Unfortunately, this recording is not especially good; it is muddy and indistinct in important areas, lacking in pep and definition at exactly the moment when one senses the music taking flight. The performances are mostly long and designed to give maximum exposure to the soloists, but there is enough tight ensemble work to confirm that, even in this environment, Mulligan was absolutely in the driving seat.

Concert In The Rain finds the Concert Jazz Band at a wet Newport, together with some later sextet material. Sound is again not great, but it's a valuable document for collectors. So, too, is the Laserlight set, also available on French Trema, and, though not too clever a tape, a very enjoyable performance. The Zurich date is better recorded but the players sound rather distant, not so much sonically but in terms of ensemble and improvising.

(*) Live At The Village Vanguard Verve 589488 Similar to above, except add Clark Terry (t); Jim Reider (ts). 60.

Ostensibly a limited edition, but still available, this is a quality recording of the Concert Band in a club setting. Terry is the most obvious additional asset, but the long opening 'Blueport' has a nice solo by Jim Reider, who will be unknown to many fans. Mulligan himself is in excellent form throughout, as he tended to be on American soil, and in terms of snap and tension these are far more impressive performances than any of the European dates from the same year. 'Come Rain Or Come Shine' is Mulligan at his best, though Brookmeyer's reworking of 'Body And Soul' is worth having. Easily the best-buy live set from this period.

 Jeru Sony Columbia 77634 Mulligan; Tommy Flanagan (p); Ben Tucker (b); Dave Bailey (d); Alec Dorsey (perc). 62.

A lovely remastering of a fairly low-key but always subtle record that gains unexpected impetus from Dorsey's congas. Interesting always to hear Mulligan with a piano-player, given the false impression that he preferred to dispense with them. 'Lonely Town' and 'Get Out Of Town' are the only familiar themes, with Gerry's own 'Blue Boy', but there's plenty of substance even in the obscurities.

 Night Lights Mercury 818 271-2 Mulligan; Art Farmer (t, flhn); Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Jim Hall (g); Bill Crow (b); Dave Bailey (d). 63.

A somewhat overlooked Mulligan session, but marked out by some super playing from both Farmer and Brookmeyer. Mulligan himself is somewhat muted and concentrates as so often on filling out the middle of the orchestration. Hall is perhaps the key to the whole thing, an endlessly inventive and subtle player who takes great chances without fanfare.

 Carnegie Hall Concert Epic 450554 Mulligan; Chet Baker (t); Ed Byrne (tb); Bob James (ky); John Scofield (g); Dave Samuels (vib, perc, v); Ron Carter (b); Harvey Mason (d). 11/74.

This was only the second – and would be the last – reunion between Jeru and Chet, and it was by and large a happy one. If there were differences and ongoing problems, they were very largely kept off the stand and both front-men respond to the gala occasion with impassioned and highly focused playing. The rhythm section was the obvious sign of the times, though it's discreet and under-amplified enough not to intrude. Anyone keen on tracing the early career and influences of John Scofield will be delighted to hear his clean, spacious lines. Needless to say, they did 'My Funny Valentine', but the tune which sounds most refreshed and urgent is 'Line For Lyons', one of the less celebrated products of their association. A strong album, and by no means an exhaustive document of the occasion.

 Idol Gossip Chiaroscuro 155 Mulligan; Hank Jones, Tom Fay, Bill Mays (p); Lionel Hampton, Dave Samuels (vib); Bucky Pizzarelli, Mike Santiago (g); George Duvivier (b); Bobby Rosengarden, Grady Tate (d); Candido Camero (perc). 11/76.

Mulligan's New Sextet, of which two contrasting versions are heard, was a showcase for new and reworked material (including a second version of 'Song For Strayhorn') and an unexpected cover of 'Waltzing Matilda'. Dave Samuels and Bucky Pizzarelli are key structural elements, though neither has much to say in solos. A lost curiosity, too accomplished to be set aside as 'transitional' and yet not entirely satisfactory as a finished album. Mulligan's soprano still sounds like an uneasy double, but it's kept to a sensible minimum.

 Re-Birth Of The Cool GRP 059679-2 Mulligan; Wallace Roney (t); Dave Bargeron (tb); John Clark (frhn); Bill Barber (tba); Phil Woods (as); John Lewis (p); Dean Johnson (b); Ron Vincent (d); Mel Torme (v). 1/92.

There has been some rewriting of the history books on behalf of Mulligan and pianist/arranger John Lewis vis-à-vis the original Birth Of The Cool. Mulligan is on record as feeling that the project was subsequently hijacked in Miles Davis's name. Though Miles 'cracked the whip', it was Lewis, Gil Evans and Mulligan who gave the music its distinctive profile. In 1991, Mulligan approached Miles regarding a plan to re-record the famous numbers, which were originally released as 78s and only afterwards given their famous title. Unfortunately, Miles died before the plan could be taken any further, and the eventual session featured regular stand-in Roney in the trumpet part. With Phil Woods in for Lee Konitz, the latter-day sessions have a crispness and boppish force that the original cuts rather lacked. Dave Grusin's and Larry Rosen's production is ultra-sharp and perhaps too respectful of individual horns on 'Deception' and 'Budo', where a degree less separation might have been more effective (unless this is an impression based entirely on folk-memories of the original LP). The mix works rather better on the boppish 'Move' and 'Boplicity', and on the vocal, 'Darn That Dream'. An interesting retake on a still-misunderstood experiment, Re-Birth sounds perfectly valid on its own terms.

 Paraiso: Jazz Brazil Telarc 83361 Mulligan; Charlie Ernst, Cliff Korman (p); Emanuel Moreira (g); Rogerio Maio, Leonard D. Traversa (b); Duduka da Fonseca, Peter Grant (d); Waltinho Anastacio, Norberto Goldberg (perc); Jane Duboc (v). 7/93.
(*) Dream A Little Dream Telarc 83364 Mulligan; Bill Mays, Ted Rosenthal (p); Dean Johnson (b); Ron Vincent (d). 4/94.
 Dragonfly Telarc 83377 Mulligan; Warren Vaché (c); Ryan Kisor (t); Grover Washington Jr (ss, ts); Dave Grusin, Ted Rosenthal (p); Dave Samuels (vib); John Scofield (g); Dean Johnson (b); Ron Vincent (d); brass. 3–6/95.
(*) Triple Play /  The Art Of Gerry Mulligan: The Final Recordings Telarc 84353 3CD / Telarc 83517 As above three discs. 93–95.
The final run of albums for Telarc have been boxed together, with no additional material, as Triple Play. Good value though it is, not every purchaser will be thrilled with Paraiso and might prefer to acquire the records individually, or to opt for the selections on The Art, which is a very respectable sampling of that last period. Mulligan towers head and shoulders above all the other musicians on the slightly cheesy Latin American date. Jane Duboc's vocals are actually rather winning and grow with familiarity, but the arrangements lack the subtlety and depth of focus for which one always looked to Mulligan in the old days.

There had been rumours for some time about Mulligan's health, and most of them proved to be premature. Certainly there is no lapse in quality on the gloriously recorded Dream A Little Dream. Some of the best moments are the most intimate, a duo version with Rosenthal of Alec Wilder's 'I'll Be Around' and duet versions of 'My Funny Valentine' and 'As Close As Pages In A Book' with guest pianist Bill Mays, who had been a regular performer with the quartet. The closing 'Song For Strayhorn' pays tribute to one of the saxophonist's great friends and idols and the man who, perhaps more than any other – more than Ellington, arguably – influenced his approach to the jazz orchestra. But then, of course, Mulligan always thought of a small group, even a duo, as an orchestra in miniature, so the piece has the bigness of spirit and sound one would expect.

Mulligan's final studio recording was a compromise, boosted by overdubbed brass and redolent of nothing but failing powers. That said, Jeru remains very much the focus and is featured on most tracks, none of which are intrinsically arresting. We've returned to this record many times in the hope of catching some overlooked last wisdom, but in the final measure it's a competent and gently paced set, designed to flatter an ailing man.

 Midas Touch: Live In Berlin Concord CCD 2169 Mulligan; Dave Brubeck, Ted Rosenthal (p); Dean Johnson (b); Ron Vincent (d). 5/95.
Gerry Mulligan died in January 1996, so this really is a last throw. The set was recorded for German radio and it's impressive not so much for the quality of Jeru's playing as he battles with cancer as for the fine new writing he unveiled on what was to be his last European tour. 'Midas Lives', 'Sun On The Stairs' and (possibly an ironic title in the circumstances) 'Curtains' are all marked by the saxophonist's trademarks of firm, middle-register melody, solid harmonic grounding with some treacherous spots (notably on 'Midas Lives'), and a subtle and unflurried approach to rhythm. He sounds in very good voice and his phrasing is anything but laid-back but is often taut and propulsive. Rosenthal is a more than able accompanist, aware that Mulligan's ability to hold the chords in his head frees the pianist considerably. However, it's the final duet on 'These Foolish Things' with former employer and special guest Dave Brubeck which gives the set a special sense of occasion; deeply moving.

Also, in brief:

() Nights At The Turntable, 1951–1952 Jasmine 2957. 51–52.
So-so compilation of material from the early West Coast days.

 Mulligan Plays Mulligan Original Jazz Classics OJC 003. 8/51.
The writing is still rather featureless, but in retrospect the qualities are all there.

 The Original Gerry Mulligan Tentet & Quartet GNP Crescendo 56. 53.
Dameron's 'Lady Bird' points to an obvious source for the tentet. Good small-group material, too.

(*) The Gerry Mulligan Quartets In Concert Pablo 5309-2. 8/57, 10/62.
From the Granz archive (he introduces both gigs, the second in French), this couples quartet dates with Bob Brookmeyer (vtb) from the Hollwood Bowl and Paris.

* Jazz Casual: Gerry Mulligan And Art Pepper Koch 8559. 63.
Unfortunately, not Mulligan and Pepper together, but two broadcast sets taken from a public television series hosted by Ralph J. Gleason.

 Blues For Gerry: The Lionel Hampton Sessions Universe 65. 10/77.
A delightful encounter that inspired some first-rate playing all round.

 Walk On The Water DRG CDSL 5194. 9/80.
Some years after the demise of the Concert Jazz Band, Mulligan reconvened a similar project with wonderful latter-day soloists of the quality of Tom Harrell (t) and the long-overlooked Gerry Niewood (as). The set consists of four originals, among them the gorgeous 'Song For Strayhorn'.

 La Menace Proper PROPERBOX 96 4CD. 50–54.
Soundtrack to a largely forgotten film. The backgrounds are thick with synthesizers and whooshing percussion and Jeru's few solo moments are mostly over before they're properly under way.

 Jeru Proper PROPERBOX 96 4CD. 50–54.
One of the best of Proper's packages, with a sensitive spread of material, including some of Gerry's more demanding pieces.

Mick Mulligan (born 1928)

TRUMPET, VOICE

A quixotic hero of the British trad boom, he was never much of a trumpet player, but his bandleading exploits have gone down in legend.

 Ravers Lake LACD 150 Mulligan; Dave Keir, Frank Parr (tb); Ian Christie, Wally Fawkes (cl); Ronnie Duff (p); Nevil Skrimshire (g); Tom Page, Terry Forster, Alan Duddington, Major Holley (b); Pete Appleby (d); George Melly (v). 1/56–6/57.
() Live Lake LACD 176 As above, except omit Fawkes, Keir, Page, Forster, Holley. 56–57.
() Meet Mick Mulligan And George Melly Lake LACD 66 Mulligan; Frank Parr (tb); Ian Christie (cl); Ronnie Duff (p); Bill Bramwell (g, v); Gerry Salisbury (b, tb); Alan Duddington (b); Pete Appleby (d); George Melly (v). 9/58–4/59.

Mulligan's band gained a picaresque reputation via George Melly's memoirs; their records are rather less interesting, although the earlier Lake records fare much better than the reissue of their Pye sessions. Ravers collects some tracks made for Tempo and presents the band at what was presumably their best: honest British trad, with Christie taking playing honours and George's vocals very spirited. Live finds them in a pub in Hampstead and at the Festival Hall (a certain dichotomy there), and they certainly sound more relaxed and outgoing in the hostelry, with Mulligan playing a decent lead. The 1958–9 sessions show them flagging. Nobody's useless, there are some worthwhile solos – especially Christie's somewhat crazed version of 'All Of Me' – and Melly contributes some entertaining vocals. But the band never sound like much of a unit, tending to play at the same time rather than together, and the dull material and thin sound tell against them.

Jimmy Mundy (1907–83)

ARRANGER, COMPOSER

Born in Cincinnati, he learned arranging in Chicago; wrote for Earl Hines, then was a staff arranger for Benny Goodman and Count Basie. Later work was for 'sweet' orchestras.

 Jimmy Mundy 1937–1947 Classics 1200 Mundy; Walter Fuller (t, v); Frank Galbreath, Bobby Moore, Elton Hill, Clyde Hurley, Ray Linn, Walter Williams, McClure Morris, Harry Parr Jones (t); Trummy Young, Eddie Johnson, Norman Greene, John Rocks McConnell, Juan Tizol, Britt Woodman, Henry Coker, Vernon Brown (tb); Omer Simeon (cl, as); Jimmy Hamilton (cl); Ted Barnett, Les Robinson, Willie Smith (as); Lucky Thompson, Skippy Williams, Babe Russin (ts); Alfred Gibson, Dick Clark (bs); Billy Kyle, Bill Doggett, Milt Raskin, Eddie Beal (p); Dick Palmer, Connie Wainwright, Irving Ashby (g); Quinn Wilson, Jack Jarvis, Artie Shapiro (b); Chick Webb, Shadow Wilson, Ray Hagen (d); Madeline Green, Jimmy Young, Ginger Snaps (v). 3/37–47.

Mundy's story is largely tied up with the Goodman and Basie bands, but these surviving echoes of his own groups are interesting, sometimes terrific, and the disc neatly collects all his own 78-era material. Two 1937 tracks for Varsity include a group of Mundy's mates from the Earl Hines band and end up being features for the singing and playing of Walter Fuller. Then there's the only four sides made by Jimmy's 1939 big band (with Jimmy Hamilton making his debut); fair enough, although two are little more than settings for vocalist Madeline Green.

A session where Mundy arranges for the harmony group the Ginger Snaps was hardly worth reviving, but then we come to the meat in this sandwich – four excellent V-Disc tracks by Mundy's almost ad hoc Los Angeles big band of 1947. The trombone section alone was formidable – Tizol, Woodman, Henry Coker and Vernon Brown – and with presumably Mundy himself shouting on the soloists and the section-work, these versions of 'Fiesta In Brass', 'Hello, Goodbye, Forget It', 'Fiesta In Blue' and 'Airmail Special' have an infectious joy as well as real musical muscle. The Aladdin session of 1947 which rounds off the disc is more mysterious – the personnel largely a guess – but the boogie set-pieces and blues feature for Jimmy Young are attractive. Transfers are fair to excellent, although there's a terrible speed wobble at the end of one of the final tracks.

Tisziji Munoz (born 1946)

GUITAR, SYNTHESIZER

A key figure on the Toronto underground scene, New York-born Munoz overcame a crippling hand injury to learn percussion and then guitar. His music is intensely spiritual, in the manner of John Coltrane.

 Divine Radiance Dreyfus FDM 36706 Munoz; Ravi Coltrane, Pharoah Sanders (ts); Paul Shaffer (ky); Cecil McBee, Don Pate (b); Rashied Ali (d). 02.

In the words of an early composition, Tisziji Munoz – you say it 'tee-see-ye moon-yos' – insists he is just visiting the planet. He studied music while in the military and made friends with associates of John Coltrane, who is still his main influence. Many recordings from the '80s and after have been issued on his own Anami Music label, but this is the only set that is generally available.

Like earlier albums, Presence of Joy, Presence of Truth, Presence of Mystery and Death is a Friend of Mine, the music is intensely mystical. The brief prologue, 'Moment of Truth', leads into a long and amorphous psychodrama. 'Initiation By Fire' is equally long but more impressionistic in concept. Munoz occasionally sounds like fusion-period Larry Coryell, but Carlos Santana's collaborations with both John McLaughlin and Alice Coltrane are possibly better points of reference. 'Fatherhood' is perhaps closest to a straight jazz number.

Sanders and Ravi Coltrane have both dabbled in funkier and more atmospheric projects and these backgrounds colour the music strongly, especially on the long title-track, where the drama unfurls and cools steadily, a besetting problem with earlier discs. The two bassists maintain a steady turbine of sound; Ali reproduces moments from Interstellar Space; and long-term associate Shaffer acts as fulcrum.

A genuinely original and beguiling character, Munoz is probably best considered a creative catalyst whose own productions are a shadow of his influence on others.

Mark Murphy (born 1932)

VOICE

Worked in New York clubs in the '50s. Lived in Europe for many years from the mid-'60s, then returned to the USA in 1975. Originally perceived as a hipsterish stylist, Murphy's command increased, allowing him to sing effectively in a wide range of settings.

(*) Crazy Rhythm: His Debut Recordings Decca/GRP 050670-2 Murphy; orchestra including Ralph Burns (p); Don Lamond (d). 6/56–8.

(*) Rah Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 141 Murphy; Ernie Wilkins Orchestra. 9–10/61.

 That's How I Love The Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 367 Murphy; Nick Travis, Snooky Young, Clark Terry (t); Bernie Leighton, Dick Hyman (org); Roger Kellaway (p); Jim Hall (g); Ben Tucker (b); Dave Bailey (d); Willie Rodriguez (perc). 62.

Mark Murphy's been hip all his professional life. His first sessions, released as Meet Mark Murphy and Let Yourself Go, are rarities which are welcome on CD for the first time. The sheer youthful ebullience of these dates comes as a tonic after the self-absorbed mooning of so many of today's would-be jazz crooners. Murphy hits the demanding tempo of 'Fascinating Rhythm' so quickly and confidently that it makes one gasp to think this was his first outing in a studio. Beautiful intonation, every word immaculately there, and, with helpful charts from Ralph Burns, Murphy hardly takes a false step. On ballads he sometimes strains for a big bel canto sound, and just occasionally he tries too hard or attempts to do too much, but that is a young man's fancy, and it's kept the records alive.

His Capitol albums are still in limbo, but next come the Riverside sets. Five years of work made him a stronger and more capable performer. While his delivery is still sometimes self-consciously cool in its use of dynamics and bent notes, he's always an impassioned singer, sometimes too much so, such as on an overwrought 'Blues In My Heart' on the Blues collection. That record may annoy some with its showmanlike approach to a set of downbeat material, but Murphy is no more overbearing than Billy Eckstine or Al Hibbler. Rah, pitched as a college man's text of hipsterism, is marginally more enjoyable, but both records benefit from the singer's assurance – he's enough his own man never to shoot for black pronunciation – and canny arrangements by Ernie Wilkins and (on Blues) Al Cohn.

(*) Some Time Ago High Note HCD 7048 Murphy; Dave Ballou (t); Allan Mezquida (as); Lee Musiker (p); Steve LaSpina, Sean Smith (b); Winard Harper (d). 12/99.

(*) Links High Note HCD 7077 As above, except add Cidinho Teixeira (p); Sergio Brandão (b); Tim Horner, Paulo Braga (d); Memo Acedivo (perc); Angela DeNiro (v). 12/00.

Here approaching 70, and with much of his back catalogue in abeyance, Murphy has all the command and serene eloquence of the great jazz instrumental seniors. Of course the voice isn't the limber trumpet of his youth, but listeners shouldn't expect some kind of old man's wisdom as the premier emotion – 'I'm A Fool To Want You', on the first record, is as torn and uncomprehending as any tyro in romance could express. At the same time, it takes enormous mastery to make such a convincing, beautiful matter out of 'The Peacocks' (with Norma Winstone's exceptional lyric). The second record, though it uses the same cast for much of the way, rings a few changes: DeNiro scats along on a few passages, the bossa nova sidles in with 'Breathing' (a Murphy original) and the Frishberg set-piece 'Wheelers And Dealers' is almost a touch of black humour. The instrumental line-ups are almost as hip as Murphy himself, and there's no fusion fudging anywhere along the line.

(*) Lucky To Be Me High Note HCD 7094 Murphy; Scott Wendholt (t, flhn); Bobby Porcelli (as, f); Lee Musiker (p); Jay Leonhart, David Finck (b); Tim Horner (d); Memo Acevedo (perc). 12/01.

(*) Memories Of You High Note HCD 7111 Murphy; Bill Easley (ss, ts); Norman Simmons (p); Paul Bollenback (g); Darryl Hall (b); Grady Tate (d). 2/03.

 Once To Every Heart Verve 9872410 Murphy; Till Brönner (t, flhn); Frank Chastenier (p); Christian von Kaphengst (b); stg. 02.

An Indian summer in the studios for Mark. As usual, one has to be a Murphy believer to accept these ratings: if you dislike scat, shy away from the melodic reconstructiion which he helplessly submits to, or otherwise prefer standards sung straight as a die, these records won't appeal. The first is a nicely paced mixed bag of good songs, several relatively unexposed; the second is a Joe Williams tribute (with Joe's old pianist Norman Simmons on hand) which suits him splendidly, the rocking Williams swing and big, hearty emoting resting comfortably on Murphy's shoulders. The voice may have frayed a little, but the mastery is absolutely intact.

The Verve album looks like a slightly strange one-off. The setting is the kind of lush, rhapsodic mood which Brönner's records have customarily been involved with, and Murphy certainly sounds like he's enjoying the upholstery. But it's rather one-noted: creakingly slow tempos throughout, and after 30 minutes or so one longs for a burst of familiar Murphy adrenalin.

(*) Love Is What Stays Verve 6025 17329096 Murphy; Till Brönner (t, flhn); Lee Konitz, Johan Leijonhufvud (as); Peter Weniger (ts); Grégoire Peters (f, bcl); Frank Chastenier (p); Kai Bruckner (g); Christian von Kaphengst(b); Sebastian Merk (d). 06.

This is a very clever set that pushes a Johnny Cash song faster than it's ever gone, retreads a couple of golden standards, turns Mark's signature 'Stolen Moments' into a kind of running theme, and even introduces a Coldplay song. The only reason to dislike it is that the band sounds cold and not as smart as the boss. The Oliver Nelson tune kicks it off, with 'Angel Eyes' and 'My Foolish Heart' despatched near the top, followed by that galloping 'So Doggone Lonesome' and the English rock band's 'What If', which was apparently brought to Murphy by Till Brönner, damn him. 'Once Upon A Summertime' tees up the first reprise of 'Stolen Moments' and so it progresses: clever, worldly wise, emotionally unguarded singing of a very high order. 'The Interview' is a strange poetry-scat, backed with just bass. Otherwise, shame about the group, who must sound better than this on a club stand.

Also, in brief:

 Sings Mostly Dorothy Fields And Cy Coleman Audiophile 132. 77.

Interesting repertoire for Murphy, imaginatively handled.

() Night Mood /  September Ballads Milestone MCD 9145 / MCD 9154-2. 86; 87.

Milestone tended to give him a light fusion of jazz and Latin rhythms. The singing's fine, but the material is thin.

 Bop For Miles High Note HCD 7126. 5–6/90.

On stage in Vienna with a band of unknowns and a Miles Davis tribute. Near-bootleg quality.

Paul Murphy

DRUMS

Free player with much experience behind him, including on New York turf; currently working in and around Washington, DC.

() Red Snapper: Paul Murphy At CBS Cadence CJR 1167 Murphy; Dewey Johnson (t); Jimmy Lyons (as); Karen Borca (bsn); Mary Anne Driscoll (p, v). 6/82.

(*) Enarre Cadence CJR 1147 Murphy; Joel Futterman (p); Kash Killion (clo). 6/01.

The Enarre trio have worked together before and for this studio session they were clearly bursting to play: one piece, 'SFERICS', passes the 30-minute mark with no apparent loss of energy or – more surprisingly – invention. Murphy can stoke up some terrific bouts of noise at the kit, although for much of the way he's happy to play more sparsely – this is particularly effective in 'Desert Fire', a duet piece which Futterman sits out and where Killion keeps returning to the same figures in an abrasive show of repetition. Futterman is as fulsome as usual, but Killion is perhaps the most intereresting contributor, favouring the bow over the fingers and finding a powerful middle ground between cello and bass terrain.

The earlier record exhumes a session made at CBS studios but never previously released. Operating at an opposite extreme, here the tracks are all brief – 19 completed in just over an hour – and a lot of music gets started and stopped before it's done. Interestingly, Borca is one of the strongest voices here, but it's Lyons who gets the most space in what is actually a series of duos and trios rather than any full performances by the quintet. Johnson flails about all over the place and Driscoll does little of value, but even if everything else were filtered out, the dialogue between Murphy and Lyons yields some powerful episodes, although 'episodic' just about sums up the whole thing.

Turk Murphy (1915–87)

TROMBONE

Melvin Murphy is a sometimes exalted figure among followers of American jazz revivalism. He made his name working alongside Lu Watters in the Yerba Buena Jazz Band and ran Earthquake McGoon's Club in San Francisco.

 Turk Murphy's Jazz Band Favourites Good Time Jazz 60-011 Murphy; Don Kinch, Bob Scobey (t); Bill Napier, Skippy Anderson, Bob Helm (cl); Burt Bales, Wally Rose (p); Bill Newman (g, bj); Pat Patton, Dick Lammi, Harry Mordecai (bj); Squire Gersback, George Bruns (b, tba); Stan Ward, Johnny Brent (d). 49–51.

 Turk Murphy's Jazz Band Favourites Volume 2 Good Time Jazz 60-026 Similar to above, except add Claire Austin (v). 49–51.

* Turk Murphy And His San Francisco Jazz Band Volumes 1 & 2 GHB 091 / 092 Murphy; Leon Oakley (c); Jim Maihack (tb); Phil Howe (cl); Pete Clute (p); Carl Lunsford (bj). 4/72.

 Southern Stomps Lake LACD 178 Murphy; Bob Schulz, Jim Cullum, Michel Bastide (c); Ed Hubble (tb); Jean-François Bonnel (cl, as, c); Virginie Bonnel (cl, as); Lynn Zimmer (cl, ss); Allan Vaché, Bob Helm (cl); Pete Clute, Ray Skjelbred, Jim Maihack, John Sheridan, Stéphane Matthey (p); John Gill (bj, d, v); Howard Elkins (bj, g); Bill Armstrong, Jean-Pierre Dubois (bj); Bill Carroll, Christian Lefèvre (tba); Ed Torres, Wayne Jones (d). 5/80–1/87.

Murphy's music would be a little more credible if he hadn't gone on making it for so long. At the time of his earliest recordings, when he was a member of the Lu Watters circle, the Californian traditional jazz movement had some nous as revivalists of music which had lain, unjustly neglected, for many years. In that light, the two Good Time Jazz compilations, hammy though much of the playing is, and often painfully (as opposed to authentically) untutored, are both interesting and enjoyable. But after more than 20 years of this kind of thing, Murphy's one-track traditionalism sounds tiresome and soulless on the two GHB CDs, taken from a single 1972 session. It might be cheerful and boisterous enough, and Murphy's own playing has achieved a ready constituency, but there are many better arguments for revivalism than this music. That said, the Lake CD, which is a compilation of various latter-day Murphy sessions and has guest roles for Cullum's band and the Hot Antic Jazz Band, is a clever piece of dovetailing which makes the best of a somewhat modest choice of music.

David Murray (born 1955)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, BASS CLARINET

Born in Berkeley, where his mother was a gospel piano-player, Murray was alerted to modern jazz by Stanley Crouch and Arthur Blythe but became known to a wider public as a member of the World Saxophone Quartet. His signature style is a mixture of bebop, swing and free elements, alternated with boogie and funk.

 Solo Live Cecma 1002 Murray (ts solo). 77.

Over the last two and half decades David Murray would seem to have confirmed Ornette Coleman's famous claim that the soul of black Americans is best expressed through the tenor saxophone. One of the most comprehensively documented players in contemporary jazz, Murray has patiently created a radical synthesis of John Coltrane and Albert Ayler with the classic jazz tradition.

This early solo record is still raw in places, but Murray's note-choices are formidably logical and educated for a 22-year-old. If 'Body And Soul' is still the test-piece for tenor saxophonists, he passes with flying colours, though his own untitled piece is more impressive still.

 Interboogieology Black Saint 120018 Murray; Lawrence 'Butch' Morris (c); Johnny Mbizo Dyani (b); Oliver Johnson (d); Marta Contreras (v). 2/78.

Two compositions each by Murray and Butch Morris. The opening 'Namthini's Song' is a stately procession, marked by Morris's typically unpredictable voicings. Marta Contreras sings wordlessly, somewhere up near the cornet's register; it's certainly a more convincing use of her voice than the Abbey Lincoln mannerisms of the title-track. 'Home' is a huge duet from Murray and Dyani, with the bassist's solid chant underpinning a free-flowing improvisation. 'Blues For David' is uncharacteristically direct for Morris, a fine blowing number with the leader's most shaped solo contributions of the set. There is a strong vernacular thread running through the music that clinches the association with Ayler and makes a nonsense of many critics' professed surprise at his rejection of unmediated avant-gardism.

(*) The London Concert Cadillac SGCD 08/09 Murray; Lawrence 'Butch' Morris (c); Curtis Clark (p); Brian Smith (b); Clifford Jarvis (d). 8/78.

Recorded in the Collegiate – now Bloomsbury – Theatre in London by John Jack, who was expecting to tape about an hour of good music and in the event managed to get down almost two and a half of Murray at his most joyously declamatory. From the opening 'JasVan', which sounds as if it might easily be reset for steelpans, the group is coasting with ease. Murray and Morris weave tight, high lines over Clark's Monkish comping, while Smith and Jarvis (both well recorded) fuel the engines. Some of these are titanic performances: 'Flowers For Albert' comes in at nearly half an hour and Smith's 'Spanish Love Song' isn't so very far behind. Murray deploys more extended technique here than in later years, and the main influence isn't Coltrane, surprisingly, but Eric Dolphy. The skittish, almost toneless yelps that start as accents and build into whole phrases, are reminiscent of the points and stops Eric would build into an otherwise conventional blues chorus. Even listening to this record is an exhausting experience, since it takes you by the scruff of the neck and doesn't let you go till the end, but it's worth every moment.

 Sweet Lovely Black Saint 120039 Murray; Fred Hopkins (b); Steve McCall (d). 12/79.

Stripped down to basics, this anticipates The Hill (see below). The first version of 'Hope/Scope', which has a slightly odd subsequent history, is the clearest, pivoted on Hopkins's booming bass. 'Coney Island' and 'The Hill' are at opposite ends of Murray's repertoire, but the trio gives them an unexpected coherence.

CORE COLLECTION

* Ming / (*) Home

Black Saint 120045 / 120055 Murray; Olu Dara (t); Lawrence 'Butch' Morris (c); George E. Lewis (tb); Henry Threadgill (as); Anthony Davis (p); Wilber Morris (b); Steve McCall (d, perc). 7/80; 10/81.

For many fans, the jazz album of the '80s was recorded before the decade was properly under way. Ming is an astonishing record, a virtual compression of three generations of improvised music into 40 minutes of entirely original jazz. The opening 'Fast Life' has a hectic quality reminiscent of another of Murray's household gods, Charles Mingus. 'Jasvan' is a swirling 'Boston' waltz that gives most of the band, led off by the marvellous Lewis' ample solo space. 'Ming' is a sweet ballad which follows on from the troubling, almost schizophrenic 'The Hill', a piece that occupies a central place in Murray's output, perhaps an image of the jazz gradus ad Parnassum that he is so studiously and passionately scaling.

Recorded by the same octet, Home is very nearly the better album. The slow opening title-piece is a delicately layered ballad with gorgeous horn voicings. 'Last Of The Hipmen' is one of his best pieces, and the Anthony Davis vamp that leads out of Steve McCall's intelligent and exuberant solo is a reminder of how close to Ellington's bandleading philosophy Murray has come.

(*) Morning Song Black Saint 120075 Murray; John Hicks (p); Reggie Workman, Ray Drummond (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 9/83.

Recorded by the same octet, Home is very nearly the better album. The slow opening title-piece is a delicately layered ballad with gorgeous horn voicings. 'Last Of The Hipmen' is one of his best pieces, and the Anthony Davis vamp that leads out of Steve McCall's intelligent and exuberant solo is a reminder of how close to Ellington's bandleading philosophy Murray has come.

Hicks is a wonderfully supportive and sensitive partner, particularly on the standard, and Blackwell's drumming touches all the right bases. A pity they haven't done more together.

 Live At Sweet Basil: Volumes 1 & 2 Black Saint 120085 / 120095 Murray; Olu Dara (c); Baikida Carroll, Craig Harris (t); Bob Stewart (tba); Vincent Chancey (frhn); Steve Coleman (ss, as); John Purcell (as, cl); Rod Williams (p); Fred Hopkins (b); Billy Higgins (d); Lawrence 'Butch' Morris (cond). 8/84.

Volume 2 kicks off with a version of the wonderfully cheesy 'Dewey's Circle' from Ming, one of those compositions of Murray's that many listeners swear they have heard somewhere before. It's not quite the best piece on the set, but it's the one where most of the constituent elements are coming together. 'Bechet's Bounce' and 'Silence' on the first volume redirect some of Murray's increasingly familiar obsessions in quite new ways. The final track is a brief dedication to Marvin Gaye; by this stage in his career Murray is namechecking at an impressive rate.

The live context, with a hefty band pushing from behind, makes for some inventive conjunctions, but Murray's tone is uncharacteristically acid.

(*) I Want To Talk About You Black Saint 120105 Murray; John Hicks (p); Ray Drummond (b); Ralph Peterson Jr (d). 3/86.

Those who were disturbed by Murray's apparent abandonment of the avant-garde might have been reassured by his firm rejection of the backward-looking stance of Wynton Marsalis and others. It's clear from the live I Want To Talk About You that, while the saxophonist is looking increasingly to an earlier generation of saxophone-players, Sonny Rollins pre-eminently, but also synthesizers like Paul Gonsalves, he is doing so with instincts very explicitly conditioned by Coltrane and Ayler. His reading of 'I Want To Talk About You' has to be heard in the context of Coltrane's own version; as a ballad player, Murray is vibrant and expansive and 'Heart To Heart' (written by Hicks) is one of his most nakedly emotional recorded performances.

* The Hill Black Saint 120110 Murray; Richard Davis (b); Joe Chambers (d). 11/86.

One of the peaks of Murray's career. The title-piece, pared down from eight voices to three, doesn't fall apart but retains its rather mysterious and troubling presence. Murray has significantly toned down his delivery from the immediately previous sessions and sounds altogether more thoughtful. The material, by now, is quite self-consciously programmed, with 'Chelsea Bridge' and 'Take The Coltrane' mixed in with the originals. 'Herbie Miller' contains Murray's best recorded bass clarinet solo; pitched against Richard Davis's rich arco, he develops an intense thematic discourse that takes enough time to vary its accents in keeping with the changing emotional climate of the piece. By contrast, 'Fling' is exactly as throwaway as it sounds.

 Hope Scope Black Saint 120139 Murray; Hugh Ragin, Rasul Siddik (t); Craig Harris (tb); James Spaulding (as); Dave Burrell (p); Wilber Morris (b); Ralph Peterson (d). 5/87.

Released only in 1991 (by which time Murray was recording for DIW), this is a bright, exuberant album, full of the band's palpable delight in what they're doing. This version of 'Hope/Scope' is much less convoluted than the one on Special Quartet, below, but it inspires some raggedly spirited ensemble improvisations. The tributes to Lester Young and Ben Webster are closer to pastiche than usual, reflecting a rather lightweight side to the album that is initially appealing but increasingly puzzling as the layers come off.

 The Jazzpar Prize Enja ENJCD 7031 Murray; New Jungle Orchestra: Pierre Dørge (g); Per Jorgensen (t); Harry Beckett (t, flhn); Jörg Huke (tb); Jesper Zeuthen (as, bcl); Jacob Mygind (ts, ss); Horace Parlan (p); Irene Becker (ky); Jens Skou Olsen (b); Audun Kleive (d); Donald Murray (v). 3/91.

In the spring of 1991 Murray was awarded the third annual Jazzpar Prize, perhaps the only major international jazz award in the world. It was a significant accolade for a man not yet 40. During the course of the prize project, Murray recorded with Pierre Dørge's New Jungle Orchestra. The two men share an interest in Ellingtonian composition and sounds, and Murray fitted into the band with his usual ease. The two opening pieces are by the guitarist; there follows a gospel medley, with vocals from Donald Murray, a beautifully constructed version of 'In A Sentimental Mood', finishing with full-throated performances of 'Shakill's Warrior' and 'Song For Doni'.

Murray's solo is more restrained than usual, and in this context his kinship with Paul Gonsalves becomes entirely unambiguous. Though he varies the melody of the Ellington tune to spark off his solo, ironically it's one of the straightest and most respectful repertoire performances to be found anywhere in his recorded output.

 A Sanctuary Within Black Saint 120145 Murray; Tony Overwater (b); Sunny Murray (d); Kahil El'Zabar (perc, v). 12/91.
This might almost have come from a decade previously, when Murray was firmly locked into his avant-garde phase. Yet he has become much more varied in his choice of sounds, plumbing not just the stoical moods of 'Ballad For The Blackman' but also the more buoyant and affirmative 'Waltz To Heaven', a theme that was to reappear over the succeeding couple of years in a number of playing contexts, not least the bass clarinet album, above.

El'Zabar, a founding member of the Ethnic Heritage Ensemble, creates a whirl of exotic tinges round the fringes of each piece, but he doesn't feel integral to the project and a couple of tracks would certainly be improved if he simply weren't there.

(*) Live '93 Acoustic Octfunk Sound Hills SSCD 8051 Murray; Fred Hopkins (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 7/93.
This was a very successful tour for Murray, artistically if not always at the box office. Trio-playing encouraged him to play simply, in bold strokes and relatively unadorned. His solos, as here on 'Mr P.C.' and 'Flowers For Albert', are intense, but it is the interplay among the three members of the group that is so impressive, and it communicates itself even across a rather unforgiving recording that booms and thuds away awkwardly. Hopkins plays superbly, and Cyrille's fills and solo spots are packed with ideas.

* Body And Soul Black Saint 120155 Murray; Sonelius Smith (p); Wilber Morris (b); Rashied Ali (d); Taana Running (v). 2/93.
By the end of the '80s, Murray's traditionalism was expressing itself in unambiguously literal form. Time and again, he plunged back into the history of the music, dredging up performances that fell somewhere between wholesale revision and an awkward fidelity to the originals. Because it always sounded like Murray, nobody minded; but much of that was superficial, disguising how little he was prepared to disturb ancestral ghosts.

It was odds-on that Murray would one day record an album called Body And Soul. His understanding of Hawkins's classic solo is obvious from the outset of his own interpretation, which works a very specific, palindromic variation on the opening phrases. However, Murray's solo has an artificial shape, not the almost organic unity of Hawkins, and any coherence comes largely from Taana Running's vocal. The band on Body And Soul is superlative, always just poised to take the music one stage higher.

(*) Windward Passages Black Saint 120165 Murray; Dave Burrell (p); Monika Larsson (v). 12/93.
Not released for some time after recording, this basically duo session documents one of Murray's closest artistic partnerships. Burrell's range of influences, everything from calypso and reggae to the modernist avant-garde, fuels the saxophonist's own eclecticism. From the opening 'Sorrow Song', through two beautiful takes of Coltrane's 'Naima', to the vocal tracks, 'It Hurts So Much To See' and 'Cela Me Va', the partnership is flawlessly intuitive, a conversation in which ordinary niceties can be elided and both players get straight to the meat of a tune.

Murray has regularly expressed his desire to work with songs and singers. In Larsson he has found a lyricist who has just the right mixture of romanticism and sardonic bite, but given the chemistry with Burrell the vocal tracks are more of a distraction than an asset.

(*) Dark Star Astor Place TCD 4002 Murray; Omar Kabir, Hugh Ragin, James Zollar (t); Craig Harris (tb); Robert Irving III (p, org, syn); Bob Weir (g); Fred Hopkins (b); Renzell Merritt (d). 1/96.
It was David Crosby who described the Grateful Dead's music as 'Electronic Dixieland'. Listening to this tribute, recorded not long after Jerry Garcia's death, it's not hard to see what he means, and the only surprise is that no one had thought of turning the Dead's long, floating lines and open-ended aesthetic to jazz use before. The material is far from predictable. It includes things like the traditional 'Samson And Delilah' and Bob Weir's 'One More Saturday Night' but saves the real joys for what was the vocal entry on 'Dark Star'. In keeping with the Dead's own philosophy, there is more emphasis on group interplay than on soloing as such, though Murray does tend to dominate the foreground. Sometimes the brasses don't seem quite right, but that has more to do with their position in the mix than anything else. Bob Weir is on hand on 'Shoulda Had Been Me' to add a seal of approval to the project.

 Live At The Village Vanguard Luminescence LNCD 4002 Murray; Hilton Ruiz (p); Kelly Roberty (b); Pheeroan akLaff (d). 8/95.
Not issued until 2001, this is a curious release. There are some fiery moments, notably on 'The Desegregation Of Our Children' and 'Hope/Scope', which see the saxophonist drifting into Albert Ayler's R&B idiom, somewhere between 'Ghosts' and the R&B period. AkLaff is very much in that mould and there are some tedious passages when the rhythm section lapses into production-line boogie. Ruiz is too gifted a performer to be swallowed up by anyone, but he comes close to losing the plot here on a number of occasions and falls back on clumpy vamps and chromatic runs when in doubt.

(*) Speaking In Tongues Enja ENJ 9370-2 Murray; Hugh Ragin (t); Jimane Nelson (org, p); Stanley Franks (g); Clarence Jenkins (b); Ranzell Merritt (d); Leopoldo Fleming (perc); Fontella Bass (v). 98.
After trips to Senegal and Guadeloupe, this has Murray diving back into his own musical heritage in the most direct way yet. Murray's mother was a renowned gospel pianist and Speaking In Tongues mixes gospel-influenced originals with material that would have been deeply familiar to her, like 'Just A Closer Walk With Thee'. Musically, it is by far the most compelling of the recent trilogy of transcultural projects, perhaps because emotionally and expressively Murray has such a profound stake in it.

The idea came about when Hamiet Bluiett invited Fontella Bass to sing with the World Saxophone Project. Murray had himself been working with a gospel choir, and the ground seemed ready for a project of this sort. 'How I Got Over' establishes an atmosphere of passionate witness and has Murray make the first of his fiery, overblown solos. Ragin is another horn-player who can move with comfort from R&B grooves and shuffle rhythms to free-form playing, and his contribution here shouldn't be underestimated. The guitar/organ/electric bass section has an honourable ancestry in this music, and Jimane Nelson emerges as an authentic voice with very definite ideas of his own, as he reveals on 'Jimane's Creation'.

Bass is one of the great American voices, emotional and resonant but without the hysterical edge that overtakes some sanctified singers. Her 1965 hit 'Rescue Me' would have been a delightful addition to this set, but even without it Speaking In Tongues is a marvellous album.

(*) Octet Plays Trane Justin Time 131 Murray; Ravi Best, Rasul Siddik (t); Craig Harris (tb); James Spaulding (as, f); D. D. Jackson (p); Jaribu Shahid(b); Mark Johnson (d). 4–5/99.
Murray's own 'The Crossing' is dropped into the middle of this typically thoughtful and inventive tribute to John Coltrane. All five of the other cuts are Trane themes, played on tenor and bass clarinet with the octet boiling away behind. 'Giant Steps' is no merely academic workout, but a radical rethinking of some aspects of the original harmonics. 'Lazy Bird' is a straightforward blowing vehicle which betrays some familiarity with the Tadd Dameron source material; Craig Harris is especially strong here, perhaps mindful of Curtis Fuller's role in the original. 'Naima' and 'India' change the pace markedly and coax some of Murray's most tender playing, set against a floating, almost Oriental accompaniment from the ensemble. The best is saved for last, a climactic version of 'A Love Supreme: Acknowledgement' which comes close to the original for sheer power, but yet manages to sound more light-hearted and less freighted.

 Like A Kiss That Never Ends Justin Time JUST 152-2 Murray; John Hicks (p); Ray Drummond (b); Andrew Cyrille (d). 6/00.
This is the group that Murray calls his Power Quartet, and yet the approach is less muscular, more lyrical than that might suggest. There are no spectacular stylistic revelations to be had from these seven originals (Drummond's 'Dedication' is the only non-Murray tune), but plenty of fiery playing that continues to reflect David's interest in extending the boundaries of song-form. The title-piece is confidently executed, and gracefully developed, but it's the following sequence of pieces, 'Suki, Suki Now', 'Ruben's Theme Song' and 'Mo' Bass', which most fully reflect Murray's inventive approach to the tradition. He is a less abrasive player than of yore, but his ability to shape a solo that is both well-structured and open-ended has been finely tuned over the years. The group delivers generously and enthusiasts will find much to admire.

 Yonn-Dé Justin Time JUST 140 Murray; Hugh Ragin (t); Craig Harris (tb); Santi Debriano (b); Pheeroan akLaff (d); Klod Kiavue, François Lendreseau (d, v); Guy Konket (v). 02.
Reminiscent of the West African experiments of Fo Deuk Revue (see below, 'in brief'), this sees Murray engaging with the musical culture of Guadeloupe and with three masters of gwo-ka music. It's a style that is reminiscent of voudou, full of whirling trances and ecstatic swoons. Konket is the composer of all the material, which imposes certain restrictions on Murray as soloist. To be truthful, he sounds reserved and almost marginalized on much of the set, however strong-voiced his statements, but it is clear that he is trying to align with the three guest stars as much as possible. The shorter cuts in the middle of the record are the easiest to sample, but it's only on the longer tracks that the integration of parts really makes sense; try 'On Jou Maten', which almost has the colouration and pace of a blues ballad.

* Now Is Another Time Justin Time JUST 161 2 Murray; Hugh Ragin (t); Hamiet Bluiett (bs); large Latin ensemble. 4/01–6/02.
Unlike most such sessions, and unlike most of Murray's earlier dabblings in other traditions, these Latin-inspired charts, almost all new material, sound absolutely authentic and absolutely David Murray. His orchestrations are chunky and massive, even when he is negotiating a detailed passage. In lesser hands, this could seem like ugly caricature, but Murray the arranger has the same deceptive delicacy as Murray the saxophonist.

In addition, he has peppered the Latin band with familiar accomplices, of whom Bluiett and Harris give generously of themselves. 'Mambo Dominica' provides a vantage for both of them to soar, while Murray himself delivers an impassioned statement on 'Sad Kind Of Love' and the extraordinary 'Blue Muse', which sounds like Africa/Brass-vintage Coltrane rearranged by an Afro-Cuban outfit. Murray continues to surprise and delight.

(*) Waltz Again Justin Time JUST193 Murray; Lafayette Gilchrist (p); Jaribu Shahid (b); Hamid Drake (d); strings. 12/02.
With-strings projects can be soggy and unappealing affairs, or they can be as tough as old boots, like this brave and completely successful confrontation (as it sometimes sounds) between Murray's latest quartet and a fine group of string-players. The opening 'Pushkin Suite' occupies almost half an hour of the record and its evocation of a 'blackamoor' at the court of Peter the Great shows how widely Murray's cultural reference has ranged over the years. His solos are often surprisingly angular for the settings, though he has the harmonic subtlety to pick cues off innocuous string glissandi and turn them into chromatic ideas that take the music up and out. A word for young Gilchrist, who hails from Baltimore and seems certain to be a star.

 Gwotet Justin Time JUST200 Murray; Pharoah Sanders (ts); Jaribu Shahid (b); Gwo-Ka Masters. 10/03.
Since moving to France, Murray has been exposed to an ever-broadening range of new sonics. This powerful African set features some remarkable ensemble playing from the Gwo-Ka Masters and a better than usual guest spot from the these days rather dull Sanders. There's some nice traditional material and a couple of sparkling originals. Very different in tonality and manner to his work of the '80s, but another important step in David Murray's evolution.

* Sacred Ground Justin Time JUST204 Murray; Lafayette Gilchrist (p); Ray Drummond (b); Andrew Cyrille (d); Cassandra Wilson (v).
Here, Murray draws on music written for the Marco Williams film Banished (a track of that title is the centrepiece of the set and a bass clarinet feature), which tells the story of thousands of African-Americans driven from the American South and further West after Reconstruction. He also approached poet and novelist Ishmael Reed to write two lyrics for Cassandra Wilson, who opens and closes the record with the title-track and 'The Prophet of Doom' respectively. The Black Saint Quartet has a wise authority, and Gilchrist is an admirable replacement for the late John Hicks. His comping is straightforward and unshowy, but there is always a deep undercurrent of ideas, and his playing on the long boppish 'Transitions' is admirably controlled. Cyrille is as musical as ever, though he seems to have pared down his technique in more recent years. 'Pierce Cithy' is a curious mixture of balladry and free playing, while the lovely 'Believe In Love' is one of Murray's most beautiful conceptions for years. Gilchrist comes into his own strongly on the final track, which references the mythological resonances of the singer's first name. There are strong blues connotations at work in the basic theme and set-up, but Murray keeps out of the way until halfway through, coming back in with an idea that makes the hairs stand up on the back of the neck. The tempo shifts, much as Reed's texts shifts between detached historical interest and visceral anger. Gilchrist takes another fine solo and the album draws to a close. David Murray's finest statement in years.

Also, in brief:

 Murray's Steps Black Saint 120065. 7/82.
This hasn't quite the sharpness of Murray's other octets. The retake of 'Flowers For Albert' is an important index of how unwilling Murray has always been to leave his own output alone.

 Children Black Saint 120089. 10 & 11/84.
Rededicated to his son, David Mingus Murray, this is one of the poorer '80s albums.

 The Healers Black Saint 120118. 9/87.
Duos with Randy Weston (p), who turns out to be an inhibiting presence with an utterly different development.

(*) Tea For Two Fresh Sound FSRCD 164. 5/90.
Duos with pianist Georges Arvanitas, who curates the project. The menu of standards doesn't really stretch Murray technically and there's a hint of a more mannered approach to jazz history.

(*) Fo Deuk Revue Justin Time JUST 94. 6/96.
Canadian label, African recording: small wonder that there is an element of confusion to this rather banal project.

 Seasons Pow Wow 7468. 98.
As close as it gets to David Murray Lite, this set of mostly ballad performances is testimony to an abiding interest in song.

Sunny Murray (born 1937)

DRUMS

The real inventor (with Milford Graves) of free-jazz drumming. He was exposed early to Cecil Taylor's atonality, but heard something new in John Coltrane and built his approach on that, using the kit as a colour-palette rather than a metronome.

 Sunny Murray Quintet ESP Disk 1032 Murray; Jacques Coursil (t); Jack Graham, Byard Lancaster (as); Alan Silva (b). 66.
 Sunshine & An Even Break (Never Give A Sucker) /  Sunshine Fuel 2000 061215 / Sunspots 530 Murray; Lester Bowie (t); Arthur Jones, Roscoe Mitchell (as); Byard Lancaster (ss, as, bcl, f); Archie Shepp (ts); Kenneth Terroade (ts, f); Dave Burrell (p); Malachi Favors (b). 69.
Until recently, despite his presence on some of the key records of the period – including Cecil Taylor's 1962 Café Montmartre sessions and Albert Ayler's Spiritual Unity – Murray had surprisingly few albums under his own name. A trio of albums for BYG and the remarkable Apple Cores for Philly Jazz were just about all there were until the '90s.

Like most of the label's output, it's pretty uncompromising fare. Murray isn't overly prominent on his own long composition, though his driving metres and fractured lines are the key to 'Phase 1, 2, 3, 4' and 'Hilariously'. Then a surprise. Altoist Graham, otherwise subordinate to Lancaster and not at all widely known, contributes the Aylerish 'Angels And Devils', one of the strongest things on the set. Silva is majestic and much more audible on CD. Coursil seems a bit lost, though a few Don Aylerish flourishes allow him to make his presence felt.

An Even Break and Sunshine, both recorded for BYG, reappeared as a twofer in 2003. On Sunshine Murray again introduces an otherwise unknown hornman. Terroade plays one trio track with Murray and Favors, while the rest of the set is played by two larger groups. There was never much coherence to the album and it's vastly improved, not least in duration, by being paired with the slightly later and rather better An Even Break, which is Murray's finest hour of the fast-disappearing '60s. 'Giblets Part 12' and the rollicking 'Invisible Rules' are the equal of anything on the first disc, except perhaps 'Flower Trane', which is Sunny's only real repertory piece, occasionally covered since.

(*) Illuminators Audible Hiss 008 Murray; Charles Gayle (p, ts). 96.
* We Are Not At The Opera Eremite MTE 014 Murray; Sabir Mateen (as, ts, f). 6/98.
The duo with Gayle was to provide some of the most ferociously beautiful live moments of the '90s. Inevitably, it transfers to record only with an overall loss of drive, but these five pieces, all but one by Murray himself, are as clear a representation of his art as one could hope for. Less Afrocentric than either Jones or Cyrille, less abstract than Milford Graves, Murray still cleaves to a dark, punchy groove, the percussion equivalent of what Cecil Taylor was doing, but with more song in it.

Paris suits Sunny Murray and there has been a new tranquillity in his work. However, there are still occasional opportunities to visit the USA, and the June 1998 recital at the Amherst Unitarian Meetinghouse is a reflection of how different the 60-year-old is from his own younger self. Mateen is a much less incendiary partner than Gayle, and his almost boppish phrasing on 'Musically Correct' coaxes some inspired metrical drumming from Sunny. The opening 'Rejoicing New Dreams' is a much gentler piece, a duet for flute and the most delicately enunciated percussion. Apparently Sunny was so drawn to his kit that he started playing during an intended intermission, a sound which attracted Mateen out from the dressing-room to join him; 'Too Many Drummers, Not Enough Time'. We are most certainly not at the opera. The music is made in a spirit of sympathetic informality, unbuttoned and relaxed, and it includes some of Sunny's very best work on record. A gentle classic.

 Perles Noires, Volume 1 Eremite MTE 045 Murray; Sabir Mateen (as, ts, acl); Louis Belogenis (ts); Dave Burrell (p); Alan Silva (b). 6/02, 10/04?.

 Perles Noires, Volume 2 Eremite 046 Murray; Sabir Mateen (as, ts, B♭– cl, f); Oluyemi Thomas (Cmel, bcl); John Blum (p). 10/04?.
The same spirit infuses much of the music on these. The exception is a slightly fraught reunion with Burrell on the three parts of 'Fox Hunting In Manhattan' and the tellingly named 'Three Is A Crowd' (Volume 1, recorded at Tonic), where there is definitely gunpowder in the air. Sunny plays quietly for the most part, but with a constant threat lying below the surface. The only duet with Mateen, 'Top Dogs Boogie', is a career highlight and an ideal place to study Murray's close attention to horn-lines, which he seems able to duplicate precisely. The remaining material comes from a quartet date back at the Unitarian Meetinghouse in Amherst. They start with a subtle, moving version of Ornette Coleman's 'Lonely Woman', followed by a brief, oddly uncertain 'Trail Of Tears' which casts a slight shadow over Eremite's insistence that there was more than enough material available from Murray's north-eastern tour (inconsistently dated autumn 2003 and autumn 2004 in the liner-notes) for two CDs.

Volume 2 has some of the best music but again is marred by the uncertainty of Thomas, who hadn't worked with this pairing before and sounds awkward. Add to that the unfamiliar pitch and attack of his C melody saxophone and the chemistry is just slightly off. By contrast Blum fits in beautifully and 'Changing Times II' shows off Murray's gift for working with piano-players as well, taking keyboard phrases and blending them to his own idiom. 'Nostalgia' sees Mateen keep to the background after a fine alto opening, but he's back in force on the closing 'Now You Hear It, Now You Don't'. Of the tracks recorded the day before with Thomas, only 'Philly Sure Has Changed' is completely successful. Mateen's tenor is in great voice and Thomas has found his place in the mix. Murray puts in some Blackfoot figures towards the end and then comments wryly 'Sometimes it's nice to be with cowboys and Indians.' Typically, he then changes the pace entirely with 'Sundance At Midnight', a lyrical interlude, and on 'Changing Times I', where he places bebop with dizzying ease.

(*) The Gearbox Explodes Foghorn FOGCD009 Murray; Tony Bevan (ts, bsx); John Edwards (b). 10/06.

Recorded live in Newcastle with two of the younger stalwarts of the British free scene, and how Sunny enjoys working with them. Some of this material will apparently be included in a documentary film about the drummer to be released in 2008. It should make for riveting watching: Murray moving over his kit like a dancing painter, Edwards bent over his fretboard, plucking out lines as hard as a shower of pebbles, and Bevan wrestling sound out of his two hefty horns. It's a terrific audio experience too, loud but not uninflected and on the closing title-improvisation almost intimate in feel.

Also, in brief:

 Homage To Africa Sunspots 531. 8/69.

One of the first sessions released on BYG-Actuel but now available again. A rather muddy ensemble date with some nice Grachan Moncur III (tb), but little real drama.

Music Improvisation Company

GROUP

An important group of improvisers from the iron age of British free music.

(*) The Music Improvisation Company 1968–1971 Incus CD12 Evan Parker (ss, autoharp); Hugh Davies (org, elec); Derek Bailey (g); Jamie Muir (perc). 68–71.

British improvisers were already a determined if small and embattled community by the time these recordings were made. As documentary pieces, culled from years of occasional work, they are in some ways charming, with Davies's fiercely primitive electronics countering Bailey's resolutely un-guitar-like guitar-playing, an ongoing dialogue that will seem nostalgic of a vanished era to some older listeners. Parker's soprano is years away from his major developments and discoveries, yet it still sounds startlingly original: like Bailey, he was set on searching out a new way to play. Muir's contributions are arguably the least impressive, at least when set beside what free percussionists have done both before and since, and he isn't so well served by the recording; yet the six pieces are in the main about a quartet thinking and speaking as freely with one another as they possibly could.

Michael Musillami

GUITAR

Moved from California to the East Coast in the '80s and garnered much experience on the organ combo circuit.

 Archives Playscape 20990 Musillami; Thomas Chapin (as, f); Kent Hewitt (p); Nat Reeves (b); Steve Johns (d). 12/90.

(*) Mar's Bars Playscape 20192 Musillami; Randy Brecker (t, flhn); Thomas Chapin (as, f); Kent Hewitt (p); Ray Drummond (b); Steve Johns (d). 12/92.

Musillami works with an interesting blend of tonal and harmonic orthodoxy while encouraging the music to extend itself. Mar's Bars is a reissue of an album which we had previously listed as Glass Art on Evidence, and Archives is a new edition of The Young Child from Stash. One interesting influence that the guitarist claims is Bill Barron, and his themes certainly manage to revise conventional forms in the way that Barron's compositions often would. The intricacies of 'Beijing' and 'Mohawk Mountain' on the first record typify his intentions. Both discs brim with strong improvisation and there's little to choose between them, with Chapin's generously featured flute another reason to listen; he plays with a sweetness that is turned around by the fierceness of his articulation. Mar's Bars, though, has a clear edge as a group performance, with Brecker and the rhythm section adding extra value.

 Perception Playscape 40400 Musillami; George Sovak (as, ts); Paul Arslanian (p); Dave Shapiro (b); Claire Arenius (d). 4/00.

 Those Times Playscape JO 12603 Musillami; Ted Rosenthal (p); Dave Shapiro (b); George Schuller (d). 1/03.

Strictly speaking, Perception should be credited as a group record to Playscape, but we are listing it under Musillami's name for convenience. The intention of the band is to work, evolve and record as a unit, going against the tide of ad hoc all-star combos which form the diet of contemporary jazz recording sessions. It's an honourable undertaking, and one which merits following, but the proviso should be that this initial report is work in progress. Musillami himself sounds like the outstanding player and Arslanian's suggestion that the music is 'like friendly, familiar and stimulating conversation' isn't too wide of the mark. But it doesn't necessarily make it a priority listen.

Those Times is back to heartland guitar/rhythm section music. Rosenthal plays some fine stuff; so does the leader, and in the end one looks for peaks in a record which is even-tempered enough to pass by pleasantly, and not linger.

(*) Dachau Playscape PSR 020505 Musillami; Dave Ballou (t); Tom Christensen (ts); Peter Madsen (p); Joe Fonda (b); George Schuller (d). 2/05.

The core trio of Musillami, Fonda and Schuller handle three tracks, and the others play guest roles. The dour title suggests some sort of intimidating concept, but it actually refers to a concert the trio played in Dachau. Whatever the import, the music is certainly the most intense and power-packed collection Musillami has put his name on. 'Dresden' is a superbly controlled triologue, the music rising to fever pitch with a compensating iron logic. Christensen walks into 'Archives' with a blazing sound. Madsen adds strength and depth on two other tunes. The only disappointment, oddly, is the title-track, which features all six men and dissolves into a routine blowout.

* The Treatment Playscape PSR#050607 CD/DVD Musillami; Mark Feldman (vn); Joe Fonda (b); George Schuller (d). 5/07.

The interesting thing here is that the live DVD performance of three of the pieces was recorded in Connecticut three days before the studio recording. There are, we suppose, a few rough edges, but it's an absolute delight to have so much more of this remarkable music. Musillami's in great form, but it's Feldman who steals the show. His quotation from 'Surrey With The Fringe On Top' in the middle of 'Brooms' is a sign of how quickly he's thinking and his articulation is needle-sharp all the way. 'Human Conditions' has him playing mostly pizzicato, an extraordinary effect when combined with guitar and bass. 'Stark Beauty' is exactly what it says it is. Musillami has come on in bounds even since the last record, not least in his ability to integrate a new voice into the trio. This one is a minor modern classic.

Melton Mustafa

TRUMPET

Spent some time playing R&B but best known for his work with the Count Basie and Duke Ellington 'ghost' bands before setting out on his own.

 Boiling Point Contemporary 14075 Mustafa; John Bailey, Brian McDonald, Doug Michels (t); Jason Pyle, Tom Warfel (tb); Mike Balogh (tb, btb); Neil Bonsanti, David Fernandez, Scott Klarman, Ed Maina, Jose Vera (sax); Jesse Jones Jr (as, v); John McMinn (ts); Billy Ross (ts, f); Silvano Monasterios (p); Lonnie Smith (org); Jeff Grubbs (b); James Cotmon (d); Luis Roberto, Wiso Santiago (perc). 95.

But the boiling point of what? Mustafa's big-band sound, honed by his years in the Basie outfit, could melt rock and he plays for heat rather than light for most of this session, which will appeal to big-band fans who enjoy the Maynard Ferguson end of the spectrum. Mustafa is a strong soloist who relies on his power rather than on any great sophistication of ideas. The ensembles are forceful to put it mildly; the more reflective solos not much more than oases. Saxophonist Jesse Jones Jr is Mustafa's brother and is strongly featured, though he's a less individual player than his sibling.

(*) St Louis Blues Contemporary 14085 Mustafa; Kenneth Faulk, Pete Minger, Yamin B. Mustafa (t); Ira Sullivan (t, af); Milton Omar Dailey, Dante Luciani (tb); Joe Barati (btb); Jesse Jones Jr (ss, as, f, v); Elvis Paschal (as, f); Matais Oxidine (ts, f); John McMinn (p); Robert Grabowski (b); James Cotmon (d, perc, v); Rabecca Boyko (perc). 97.

This is great big-band music, combining power and delicacy. Very much a family affair, as the other Mustafas on the liner details bear out. Jesse is back as a featured soloist, but so too is Pete Minger from the Basie band and the long-overlooked Ira Sullivan brings his oblique, hard-blowing lines as well. Ira's alto flute has a low, intense sound, perfect for the charts of 'Conquest'. The key performance, though, is Mustafa's own history of jazz trumpet on 'St Louis Blues Overture', in which the Handy tune (and the album is dedicated to W. C. and to the ailing Muhammad Ali) is portrayed as the catalyst for everyone and everything from Louis Armstrong to Miles Davis. There is also a tribute track to Miles. Of the Mustafa originals, 'Little Old Groove Maker', at the end of the set, is the least idiosyncratic and the most straightforwardly enjoyable. With this set, Melton proves his mettle not just as a player and arranger but as a fine composer as well. Anyone interested in the afterlife of the big-band era should sample it.

Wolfgang Muthspiel (born 1965)

GUITAR

Thoughtful technician with ambitious ideas, sometimes cast as a European Scofield but far more individual than that.

 Daily Mirror /  Daily Mirror Reflected Material MRE 001 / 002 Muthspiel; Chris Cheek (ts); Scott Colley (b); Brian Blade (d); Rebekka Bakken (v). 2/00.

 Echos Of Techno Material MRE 003 Muthspiel; Christian Muthspiel (tb, etc). 00.

Muthspiel has been poorly served by the majors over the last few years and these discs are released on his own label. The duo set with brother Christian is full of interesting ideas, but as with so much of his work previously one suspects that an industry in a hurry rarely stops to ponder the potential of such ambitious work. The group set with Rebekka Bakken is a series of settings of lyrics by Bernd Hagg, entertaining in their way but a long way removed from the reflective jazz sets Muthspiel released on Amadeo a decade ago. The remix album is pretty dull, to be honest, but may be more to some tastes than the original.

(*) Real Book Stories Quinton Q0101 2 Muthspiel; Marc Johnson (b); Bobby Battle (d). 3/01.

And just when we thought all was lost, back comes Muthspiel with this delicately understated and beautifully crafted album of jazz standards ('All The Things You Are', 'I Hear A Rhapsody') and repertory pieces as challenging as 'Giant Steps' and 'Solar'. The guitarist's playing is exquisite and there are moments when the sophistication of harmony and integration of harmonic and rhythmic ideas equal the Bill Evans trio. Johnson, of course, cut his teeth there and must have been aware of the parallel, as he hints in some of his solo passages. A quiet but forthright record that should be sampled by anyone interested in jazz guitar.

 Solo Material MRE 010 Muthspiel (g solo). 7/04.

This can hardly be said to be a stripping down to basics, so rich and varied is Muthspiel's vocabulary, but it does come across as some kind of cleaning of the Augean stables. He does some Metheny/Ornette-type stuff on 'My Own', some Frisellish musing on the opening 'Bird's Eye View', and boldly throws in his own 'Django', just to show that his roots really are in jazz guitar, but jazz guitar done the Muthspiel way. It's a thoughtful and thoughtfully produced set that should reawaken interest in an artist who's slipped somewhat from the headlines: too individual, we suspect, for the majors.

 Friendly Travelers Material MRE017 Muthspiel; Brian Blade (d, g). 2/07.

Not just fellow travellers. This is a fascinating encounter, built on some years of collaborative work. Muthspiel still favours a rock/fusion edge to some of his playing (as on 'Andrej Rubljow') and there is an extensive use of loops and samples (notably on the magnificent 'Youssou', dedicated to the great Senegalese singer n'Dour), but mostly it's about creative interplay between two distinct instrumental voices. Blade plays a bit of acoustic guitar, as Elvin Jones once did, on the title-piece, and there's a gentle logic to that. The set's at its best, though, when the electric parts aren't too cluttered and the chemistry is at its least adulterated.

Also, in brief:

 Continental Call Quinton Q0201 2. 1/02.

This is a kind of concerto for guitar, written for Muthspiel by Ed Partyka of the Vienna Art Orchestra, who claims to dislike the guitar. His hostility is of the passive-aggressive sort, since he drowns Wolfgang in arrangements so sumptuous that they'd make Richard Strauss blush.

 That's All Daisy Needs Material MRE 5. 03.

Like much of Muthspiel's recent work almost a crossover/classical set, with Muthspiel pitched against a sparky string trio.

Amina Claudine Myers (born 1943)

PIANO, ORGAN

Born in Arizona, Amina has forged her own hybrid of jazz, soul, gospel and blues, combined with a strong infusion of the avant-garde. Predictably, she has been largely ignored by the major labels and has recorded mainly in Europe.

* Salutes Bessie Smith Leo CDLR 103 Myers; Cecil McBee (b); Jimmie Lovelace (d). 2/83.
(*) The Circle Of Time Black Saint 120078 Myers; Don Pate (b); Thurman Barker (d). 2/83.
Myers's discography is far skinnier than it ought to be, but natural selection has thinned the output to these two records. The Black Saint catches Amina in free-ish mode, but sounding remarkably like her great predecessor, Mary Lou Williams. Barker is a player of ferocious intensity and great concentration and occasionally sounds as if he has stopped listening to what's going on around him. Myers refuses to be browbeaten, though, and punches out chords and melody lines. Pate is largely surplus to requirements – no disrespect to him, but indicative of how much Myers likes to shape her own bass-lines.

She had kicked off the soon-to-be-influential Leo label with an album called Song For Mother E, which had teamed her with percussionist Pheeroan akLaff but no bass-player. McBee is always a strong presence and, freed from the normal requirement to keep time and anchor the chords, he creates some pungent figures. Without attempting to pastiche the great blues singer, Myers gets inside Bessie Smith's music completely. It's doubly unfortunate that later work should have been so blandly commercial.

Simon Nabatov (born 1959)

PIANO

An 'American of Russian origin', he turned from the classics to jazz. He works out of Cologne and is a structured player who pushes the frame as far as it will go.

(*) Sneak Preview hatOLOGY 548 Nabatov; Mark Helias (b); Tom Rainey (d). 1/99.
Reconvened in a studio seven years after its debut, Tough Customer, the trio picks up where it left off. Nabatov's ideas are as extravagant as ever, in the elaborate dedication 'For Steve' (Lacy) no less than in the displaced accents and off-kilter harmonies of the otherwise almost dance-like 'Let's Go Baby'. Helias and Rainey are as reflexive and attentive as before. Just here and there Nabatov's ingenuities are almost too private to communicate, even to a sympathetic listener, but he's making exhilarating trio music for sure.

 The Master And Margarita Leo CD LR 322/3 2CD Nabatov; Herb Robertson (t); Mark Feldman (vn); Mark Helias (b); Tom Rainey (d). 2/99.
(*) Nature Morte Leo CD LR 310 Nabatov; Nils Wogram (tb); Frank Gratkowski (cl, as, bcl, f); Phil Minton (v). 4/99.
Nabatov set himself a couple of formidable tasks here: setting music for the phantasmagoric novel The Master And Margarita and creating a quartet piece to go with Joseph Brodsky's fierce poem Nature Morte. Mother Russia may be the environment, but the American group do an impressive enough job on the two hours of music in the former. Feldman, who these days seems to be asked to perform a bit of the old world to order, has some handsome moments, as does the similarly can-do Robertson; but if anything they get in Nabatov's way, and the writing is sometimes mixed – the Monk rip-off 'The Last Days' seems a poker-faced homage.

Nature Morte looks ready to challenge Michael Mantler's incomparable miserabilism, but this is an altogether juicier, darker, sometimes even funny piece – Wogram plays some sensational stuff, and the slimline group follow Nabatov's witty, scuttling score with great finesse. Minton, as so often in this kind of situation, has the gravitas and guts of a great Shakespearean. Where The Master And Margarita is the kind of piece you nod to respectfully, Nature Morte is one to return to.

 Starting A Story ACT 9402-2 Nabatov; Nils Wogram (tb). 3/00.
Surveying the discography to date, one feels that Nabatov can play whatever he likes, however he likes, which endangers his individuality as much as enhances it. A run of ACT CDs (two more noted below) pointed up the problem. Fortunately, with Wogram he's in dialogue with a similarly mercurial mind and temperament, and the wonder is that the trombonist is able to get his recalcitrant instrument to go at Nabatov's pace: try the lip-busting 'The Mistake' for evidence. There are plenty of beautiful passages, and concluding with the Herbie Nichols tune 'East 117th Street' centres the record nicely on a genuine jazz axis, but at 76 minutes it's far too long and several pieces do degenerate into merely showing off.

* A Few Incidences Leo CD LR 446 Nabatov; Nils Wogram (tb);Frank Gratkowski (as, cl, bcl, f); Ernst Reijseger (clo); Matt Penman (b); Michael Sarin (d); Cor Fuhler (live elec, keyolin); Phil Minton (v). 4/04.
These are settings of text by the Soviet era satirist Daniil Kharms, a contemporary of Shostakovich who was gaoled for 'defeatism' during the siege of Leningrad and died of malnutrition. Kharms – born D. I. Yuvachov – took his name from that of Sherlock Holmes, misheard or Russified, and much of his style from the enigmatic urban clutter of Conan Doyle's fictional world. Somewhat in the yurodivy – or Holy Fool – tradition adopted by Shostakovich as a mask, Kharms wrote much of his work for children, tiny narratives and vignettes of such brutal inconsequence ('The Plummeting Old Woman') that they acquire a perverse grandeur in the repetition.

The sound-world is reminiscent of Carla Bley and Paul Haines in Escalator Over The Hill, though without its rocky swing; or the Beckett and Gorey settings of Michael Mantler, though Nabatov is pretty chipper by comparison. All the instruments have their spots, whether in the plinky pointillism of 'An Encounter' or the almost symphonic language of 'The Start Of A Very Nice Summer's Day'. Wogram's big, foghorn voice has always sounded just right in the context of Nabatov's music, but the additional players – Reijseger, Penman, Sarin and Fuhler – bring a depth of focus this music needs.

At the heart of it, Minton's extraordinary Dickensian ventriloquism. He's never deployed so many voices and with such chillingly comic effect. Everything from Ray Winstone growls to super-fast scats and wails, and sometimes nothing more than unadorned recitation of Kharms's words. It's a further, welcome reminder of Phil's scantly acknowledged brilliance. Pure genius all round.

* Around Brazil ACT 9754 2 Nabatov (p solo). 9/05.
A quite extraordinary essay in modern pianism, this comes as part of ACT's Piano Works series and is perhaps the best to date. The thought of Nabatov being let loose on a set of themes by Gilberto Gil, Caetano Veloso, A. C. Jobim and others is initially odd, but typically he takes each piece out into areas of creative improvisation that no one else would have thought of, exploring extremes of dynamic and register, and on his 'Partita de Marco' seeming to create something in reverse, a wild improv that gradually reveals a formal theme buried away under the notes. It is almost like the sculptor finding the form that is already present in the uncut stone. The piano seems to be prepared in places, and is recorded in such a way that there is tremendous separation between the bass and treble sound, to such a degree that when the two blend in one of Nabatov's massive two-handed explorations, it really sounds like two different instruments. There are simpler pleasures, too, as when he plays Jobim's 'Valsa A Porto Das Caixas' relatively straight, and Veloso's 'Voce E Linda' is a very quiet curtain-piece. A rich, complex record that sounds like nothing and no one else on the scene at the moment.

* Steady Now Leo CDLR 463 Nabatov; Tom Rainey (d). 8/05.
A frequently dissonant but often surprisingly accommodating duo set with the fine drummer. Nabatov increasingly makes use of a cracklebox and other small instruments, but it doesn't interrupt his flowing pianism. Rainey keeps pace and even edges ahead here and there.

* Jazz Limbo Leo CD LR 485 Nabatov; Nils Wogram (tb). 10/06.
It's not quite clear what's meant by limbo here but this is an association that goes back nearer 20 years than not and it's as close as breathing. Cast as a vast 'sonata', this live date doesn't even offer an inkling of that form, but it has a classical majesty that has to be taken all in all rather than in parts. A tremendous record by a genuinely important contemporary musician.

Also, in brief:

 Swing Kings ACT 9298-2. 9/96.
A club set with Nabatov in Tatum mode, working with mainstream duo Wolfgang Schlüter (vib) and Charly Antolini (d). Frantic.

* Perpetuum Immobile Leo LR CD 358. 11/00
The influences on this solo recital come from the entire modern classical canon, and quite explicitly so.

 Three Stories, One End ACT 9401-2. 11/00.
Doing a more or less standards trio with Drew Gress (b) and Tom Rainey (d) seemed like an odd diversion, but there's real sensitivity at work here.

(*) Chat Room Leo CD LR 378. 9/01.
With Han Bennink (d), he's taking on the biggest show-off in the music, but Han's also a shrewd and diligent improviser. It works.

 Autumn Music Leo CD LR 397. 11/03.
Live at the Loft in Cologne, with Ernst Reijseger (clo) and Michael Vatcher (d), this is a clever, continuous set which explores unpitched noise, quiet, almost Messiaen-like pianism and areas of silence.

Ray Nance (1913–76)

TRUMPET, VIOLIN

After stints with Earl Hines and Horace Henderson, he joined Duke Ellington in 1940 and stayed for nearly quarter of a century.

 The Complete 1940–1949 Non-Ducal Violin Recordings AB Fable 1014 Nance; Harold 'Shorty' Baker, Emmett Berry, Pee Wee Jackson (t); Nat Atkins, Edward Fant, Tyree Glenn, J. J. Johnson (tb); Don Redman (ss); Johnny Hodges, Russell Procope (as); Don Byas, Flip Phillips, Sonny Rollins, Elmer Williams, Dave Young (ts); Ben Webster (ts, cl); Aaron Sachs (cl); Albert Socarras (f); Horace Henderson, Eddie Heywood, Earl Hines, Dick Katz, Wynton Kelly (p); Ivory Joe Hunter (p, v); Lauderic Caton, Fred Guy, Hurley Ramey (g); Jimmy Blanton, Coleridge Goode, Bruce Lawrence, Wendell Marshall, Oscar Pettiford, Jesse Simpkins (b); Big Sid Catlett, Oliver Coleman, Ray Ellington, Sonny Greer, Ray Haynes, Shelly Manne (d); Babs Gonzales, Betty Roche (v). 2/40–4/49.
The atrocious title notwithstanding, the AB Fable compilation is the most useful sampling of Nance's violin-playing imaginable, covering early material with Henderson shortly before joining Duke, some attractively rare Ben Webster on clarinet, and some later stuff with Ivory Joe Hunter. It's not to every taste, but there's no better way to make the acquaintance of one of jazz's most sophisticated stylists on his 'second' instrument. There's trumpet as well, of course, a lovely double line with Webster on tenor on 'I Never Knew' and with Byas on 'Penthouse Serenade'. 'Moon Mist' was his party-piece with Ellington and it receives a thoroughly romantic reading. With a great cast, a relatively unusual sound and virtually no alternative version, this is a treat for Nance fans.

 Body And Soul Mighty Quinn Nance; Brew Moore (ts) Jaki Byard (p); Roland Hanna (p, org); Tiny Grimes, Tommy Lucas (g); Carl Pruitt (b); Steve Little (d). 5/69.
Recorded quite late in life, this has some interesting cast members and one outstanding performance in 'Take The "A" Train', which Ray performed as a lament at Billy Strayhorn's funeral but is played here as a duet with Hanna. A strange choice for first item, but there are more oddities to come, with 'A Hard Day's Night' up against 'Body And Soul' and 'Mimi'. There are a couple of rare originals: 'Jolie Janice' and 'Tranquility', tucked away diffidently towards the close. A nice curtain-call for a great old stager, who passed away seven years later.

Phil Napoleon (1901–90)

TRUMPET

A genuine pioneer, Filippo Napoli was one of the earliest white-hot trumpeters, and his lead work in the Original Memphis Five, one of the key small groups of the '20s, was profoundly influential on men such as Red Nichols and Bix Beiderbecke.

(*) The Original Memphis Five/Napoleon's Emperors/The Cotton Pickers 1928–1929 Timeless CBC 1-049 Napoleon; Tommy Dorsey (tb, t); Glenn Miller (tb); Jimmy Dorsey (cl, as); Frank Signorelli, Arthur Schutt (p); Joe Venuti (vn); Eddie Lang (g, bj); Carl Kress (g); Perry Botkin (bj); Joe Tarto (b); Vic Berton, Stan King (d); Hoagy Carmichael, Marlin Hurt, Dick Robertson, Libby Holman, Scrappy Lambert (v). 6/28–7/29.

 Live At Nick's, NYC Jazzology JCD-39 Napoleon; Andy Russo (tb); Phil Olivera (cl); Joe Rand (p); Jack Fay (b); Tony Spargo (d). 49–50.
Napoleon is today virtually forgotten, yet he is among the most prolifically recorded of all jazz trumpeters, beginning with the Original Memphis Five in 1921 and still making tight, accomplished Dixieland for Capitol in the '50s. The Memphis Five sessions by themselves would be enough to fill a boxful of CDs, and the few so far reissued are listed under the group's name. The Timeless CD gathers in a couple of sessions where the name was used by Napoleon again, along with the five tracks by Napoleon's Emperors, and four dates featuring the Cotton Pickers, a name used on Brunswick for a slightly enlarged OMF. Whatever the names, the music's all of a piece: small-band white New York jazz at the close of the '20s, a degree hotter than the hot-dance situations for which these players were usually engaged. It's all built around Napoleon and the Dorseys, with the likes of Miller, Venuti and Lang going out front now and again. Not too many period vocals, but Hoagy Carmichael and Marlin Hurt (whoever that is) have some indecent fun on the two takes of 'St Louis Gal'.

The airshots on Live At Nick's were taken from radio sessions in New York and they find Napoleon in self-effacing mood. He gives almost all the solo space to Olivera and Rand and is content to play a firm, unshakeable lead horn himself. Besides the obvious staple tunes, strung together in medleys, there are some nice rarities such as 'In My Merry Oldsmobile', once recorded by Bix Beiderbecke with Jean Goldkette, and 'I Used To Love You'. There's nothing outstanding and the sound is about average for the source and period, but Napoleon's determined, unflashy leadership has its own rewards, and the sound the band makes (with the ODJB's drummer Spargo driving them along!) is appealing.

Derek Nash

SOPRANO, ALTO, TENOR AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

Award-winning multi-horn player whose band Sax Appeal has won hearts in Britain. He also works as a sound engineer.

 Setting New Standards Jazzizit JITCD 981 Nash; Graham Harvey (p); Alec Dankworth (b); Clark Tracey, Ian Thomas (d). 02.

Having cut his teeth with the late Spike Robinson on Young Lions, Old Tigers, Nash has moved forward with this bright, swinging set of mainstream originals. His rhythm section is about as good as there is in the country and though he tends to play all four of his saxophones with a similar intonation and phrasing, they give the set an attractive range of tonalities. Stand-out tracks are the opening 'Blue For You' and 'New York Walk'.

Paul Nash (1948–2005)

7-STRING GUITAR, FLUTE, COMPOSER

The son of a classical pianist, he started out in rock bands in his native New York, studied at Mills College, Oakland, and became an inventive figure in the Bay Area, running a Jazz Composers Orchestra and other ensembles before returning east in 1990 to found the Manhattan New Music Project. He died prematurely of a brain tumour.

 Second Impression Soul Note 121107 Nash; Tom Harrell (t, flhn); Gerard Carelli (tb); Allen Braufman (ss, as); Greg Yasinitsky (ss, ts); Ann Yasinitsky (f); Michael Cochrane (p); Anthony Cox (b); Jimmy Madison (d); Michele Hendrix (v). 10/84, 4/85.

(*) The Soul Of Grace Soul Note 121317 Nash; Jack Walrath (t); David Taylor (btb); Tom Varner (frhn); Bruce Williamson (reeds); Neil Kirkwood (p); Jeff Carney, Andy McKee (b); Grisha Alexiev (d). 6 & 12/97.

 Jazz Cycles MNMP Records, no number Shane Endsley (t); Bruce Williamson (ss, as); Tim Ries (ts); Jim Ridl (p); Vic Juris (g); Jay Anderson (b); Grisha Alexiev (d). 12/04.

Before his early death, Nash was working with producer Julia Reinhart to put together a suite of music that would represent some kind of career summation. Nash himself attended the mixing sessions, but in declining health and he left the studio on 7 December 2004 and admitted himself to hospital, where he died six weeks later. Jazz Cycles has all the elements one would expect from his work, and from the Manhattan New Music Project, which he founded: elegant counterpoint in classically tinged forms, elements of free jazz (which had led him near the end of his life to dabble in site-specific composition), and an ability to match music to specific instrumental voices.

Juris plays the lovely opening ostinato to 'Passaglia' (which may refer to a Canadian footballer or a renegade 19th-century Jesuit priest, or might be a misprint for passacaglia, and it appears in that form on The Soul Of Grace). Williamson responds with a glorious alto solo that sets the tone for the entire album. 'Night Flight' follows seamlessly, with solos from much of the band, including drummer Alexiev. 'Wind Over The Lake' was originally written for group and orchestra but is held together here by Ridl, who also figures strongly on the hard-driving 'It's Only A Dream'. 'Starlit Skylight' is a return (one of several older pieces) from Second Impression with the tenor solo taken this time by Tim Ries, who builds magnificently on the original. There are interludes and bridging passages, all creating the sense of a continuous performance, with 'Night Flight' reprised as an epilogue. A tremendous memorial to an inspirational musician.

Nash had recorded as early as 1977, but A Jazz Composers Ensemble for Revelation has long since disappeared and nothing survives earlier in catalogue than Second Impression, which is why the posthumous projects are so important. The Soul Notes are excellent, though quite demanding in their way. With Harrell in the group, as well as the not widely known Greg Yasinitsky, who solos on 'Starlight Skylight', and Hendricks, who adds a lyric to 'Passing Glance', the solo features are impressive, and Nash himself creates some lovely textures on his 7-string acoustic and occasional flute. There are rock flourishes when he plays electric, but for the most part The Soul Of Grace continues in a very similar vein, written in a style which suggests Nash had heard as much Shostakovich as he had jazz (which might explain the closing 'Passacaglia'. The soloists here are probably better integrated into the ensemble, giving this album a more coherent quality. The full title is given in 'Restless Is The Soul of Grace'. Nash never stopped experimenting and listening, and only stopped playing when he had to. His legacy is a rich one.

Ted Nash (born 1959)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

The nephew of Ted Nash, who played tenor with the Les Brown band, he's a modernist who has veered between hard bop and the avant-garde.

 Rhyme & Reason Arabesque 196 Nash; Wynton Marsalis (t); Frank Kimbrough (p); Erik Charlston (vib); Miri Ben-Ari, Joyce Hamman (vn); Ron Lawrence (vla); Tomas Ulrich (clo); Ben Allison (b); Tim Horner (d). 96.

In the mid-'90s, Nash was already a veteran, having debuted for Concord aged 20. Billed as a Double Quartet record, which may conjure up memories of Ornette Coleman's Free Jazz, though a glance at the personnel should rule out any likelihood of that being an influence. Wynton Marsalis doesn't do Ornette. Basically, this is a small-scale with-strings project, though the quartet are not there for broad-brush backgrounds but to add a different level of detail to some imaginative and unexpected charts. The presence of Allison, now a superb leader in his own right and leader of the Herbie Nichols Project, helps to integrate the two elements harmonically. 'Apollo 9' gets things off to a very promising start and immediately establishes the role the strings will play in what follows. 'Rhyme' features a brief vocal sample from the saxophonist's daughters, who are also the inspiration for 'Sisters', a delightful idea that conceals some hard-as-iron structure.

Nash's tone is quite rugged, forthright without being declamatory, and there are hints of both Wayne Shorter and Joe Henderson in his solos. Ted's Lincoln Center boss, Marsalis, is limited to two tracks, but his presence is intriguing, since this isn't his usual gig by any means. A nod to vibist Charlston as well for his sophisticated comping and splintery runs against the saxophone.

(*) Sidewalk Meeting Arabesque 156 Nash; Wycliffe Gordon (tb, sousaphone); Miri Ben-Ari (vn); William Schwimmel (acc); Jeff Ballard, Matt Wilson (d). 10/00.

This is the group Ted calls Odeon. The signature sound comes from trombone and sousaphone master Gordon, from Ben-Ari's violin and Schwimmel's accordion, and from Nash's own increasingly sophisticated solo presence. Just to wrong-foot the listener a tad more, he starts off with an unconventional arrangement of a Debussy rhapsody. Later material is less unexpected, a few sharp originals dotted round 'Bemsha Swing' and the relatively unknown Ellington–Strayhorn theme 'Amad'. Gordon, a further Marsalis connection, doubles on sousaphone and is used as the bass instrument, filling in broad intervallic leaps and swoops and keeping the music very much in a classic jazz idiom, despite the unfamiliar sonority of the other front-line players. 'Sidewalk Meeting' sees Ted switch to bass clarinet (he's also a fine flautist) for a delightful urban fantasy that has strong hints of Charles Ives. The two drummers are terrific and their interwoven lines add the final lustre to a genuinely surprising and thoroughly delightful record.

 Still Evolved Palmetto PM 2092 Nash; Wynton Marsalis, Marcus Printup (t); Frank Kimbrough (p); Ben Allison (b); Matt Wilson (d). 8/02.

Something of a disappointment after Sidewalk Meeting, but only because it lacks that album's lyrical originality and unique timbre. Marsalis is back again, in an unusual sideman's role, and brings his taut, ripe tone to four Nash originals, the rest being co-fronted by the excellent Printup, who mixes Freddie Hubbard and early Donald Byrd in his sound. Kimbrough and Allison are back and all to the good, while Wilson stokes his growing reputation with a driving, subtly melodic accompaniment that suggests he's aware of some of the more inventive of the avant-garde percussionists: Andrew Cyrille, Milford Graves, Ed Blackwell. Nash concentrates on tenor and sounds ever more restlessly inventive, though here he focuses on line and harmony rather than the unusual orchestral effects of earlier records.

* La Espada De La Noche Palmetto PM 2108 Nash; Clark Gayton (tb, tba, bhn); Bill Schimmel (acc); Nathalie Bonin (vn); Matt Wilson (d). 4/04.

It's an immediately striking line-up and Nash's subtle reworking of Latin and Latinized themes – 'Tico Tico', 'A Night In Tunisia' and Rodrigo's 'Concierto De Aranjuez' – yields some unexpected results. Neither Schimmel nor Bonin sounds as if they originally work in a jazz idiom, but Wilson does enough on his own to generate a complex pulse and metre, so that the set swings along effortlessly. Nash's solo developments are seamless, unhackneyed and often quite startling. With Gayton as second horn and bass-man, he marshalls a rich palette with great skill.

(*) In The Loop Palmetto PM 2120 As for Still Evolved, except omit Marsalis. 3/06.

Wynton sits this one out and the set seems tighter for it, though the real reason is likely to be Nash's still evolving skills as a leader. It's a terrific record, with something of the lyrical originality and sound-colour of Sidewalk Meeting restored. 'The Cubist' and 'Durning's Dance' make for an arresting sequence in the latter third of the record, and the rhythm section carries it along triumphantly, with Wilson in exemplary, even inspirational form. Nash's own sound has taken on new authority as well.

Also, in brief:

 Out Of This World Mapleshade 153. 10/91

A live date from North Carolina: good early glimpse of Nash with Frank Kimbrough (p) and Ben Allison (b).

 European Quartet Elabeth 621024. 4/94.

Recorded in Europe, with three strong French players. He's moved on since this.

Roy Nathanson

SOPRANO AND ALTO SAXOPHONES, VOICE

A founding member with Curtis Fowlkes of the Jazz Passengers, who created a Zappa-tinged satirical post-bop. Also a member of the Lounge Lizards.

 Lobster & Friend /  The Coming Great Millenium / (*) I Could've Been A Drum Knitting Factory Works KFW 147 / 119 / Tzadik 7113 Nathanson; Anthony Coleman (p, samples); Marc Ribot (g on Drum only). 93; 94; 3/97.

(*) Sotto Voce AUM Fidelity 037 Nathanson; Curtis Fowlkes (tb, v); Sam Bardfeld(vn, v); Tim Kiah (b, v); Napoleon Maddox (v, perc). 11/05.

Satire is always a risky discourse in music and Nathanson has sometimes been dismissed as a puerile con artist. Like the late Frank Zappa, he takes chances and sometimes they fall short. When they hit the mark, though, the saxophonist's barbs are stingingly effective. On The Coming Great Millenium [sic] the duo's interpretation of 'You Took Advantage Of Me' makes a light-hearted tune seem like a passionate polemic on exploitation. Similarly, 'Birds/Jews', which drifts into Lennie Bruce territory, rises above its own adolescent humour and asks hard questions about religious intolerance. Musically, it's a cracking record, too, with some deft and daring work from both participants. The set-list also includes Mingus's 'Orange Was The Colour Of Her Dress, Then Blue Silk' and Strayhorn's 'U.M.M.G.', both played with great authority and feeling. Swee'Pea is obviously a favourite, because Lobster & Friend features a lovely 'Johnny Come Lately' as well as a rare modern cover of the Ellington–Miley classic 'The Blues I Love To Sing', alongside the usual roster of sharp originals.

The addition of Ribot on a few tracks for the 1997 record lends it some nice variations of texture, but while Ribot's musicianship is always an asset, it's scarcely needed here. The duo format has worked very well down the years, though 'Soprano Ballad' seems unwontedly tentative and the traditional 'Ija Mia' rather chaotic.

The recent Sotto Voce is the closest thing here to the Jazz Passengers, largely because of Fowlkes's presence. No great surprise to find Roy tackling (and adding lyrics to) Roland Kirk's 'The Inflated Tear', but he's upstaged by Maddox's 'human beatbox' percussion, which ranges from straight beats to extraordinary vocal impressions like the Tube train effects on 'London Story'. The closing 'It's Alright' should be enough to convince any remaining sceptics that Nathanson isn't just a clown, but is a swinging jazz player who recruits equally solid sidemen: Kiah is another revelation.

Also, in brief:

 Fire At Keaton's Bar And Grill Six Degrees 1024. 3/00.
Superstar-fronted concept album about the eponymous combustible diner. Elvis Costello and Deborah Harry star.

Fats Navarro (1923–50)

TRUMPET

Brilliant, but unfortunate, he worked with Andy Kirk and in Billy Eckstine's legendary band, where he replaced Dizzy Gillespie. Fats was a more lyrical player and sounded easier in the middle register. His career was foreshortened by narcotics and tuberculosis, but he recorded some of the finest brass solos of the bebop era, many with bandleader Tadd Dameron.

[illegible]

 The Complete Fats Navarro On Blue Note And Capitol
Blue Note 33373 2CD Navarro; Howard McGhee (t); Ernie Henry (as); Allen Eager, Wardell Gray, Sonny Rollins, Charlie Rouse (ts); Tadd Dameron, Bud Powell (p); Milt Jackson (p, vib); Nelson Boyd, Tommy Potter, Curley Russell (b); Kenny Clarke, Roy Haynes, Shadow Wilson (d); Chano Pozo (perc). 9/47–8/49.

These sessions are one of the peaks of the bebop movement and one of the essential modern-jazz records. Navarro's tone and solo approach were honed in big-band settings and he has the remarkable ability to maintain a graceful poise even when playing loudly and at speed. The contrast with McGhee (it seems extraordinary that some of their performances together have been misattributed) is very striking. Their duelling choruses on 'Double Talk' from a marvellous October 1948 session are some of the high-points of the record; there is, as with several other tracks, an alternative take which shows how thoughtful and self-critical an improviser the young trumpeter was, constantly refining, occasionally wholly rethinking his approach to a chord progression, but more frequently taking over whole segments of his solo and reordering them into a more satisfying outline. Navarro is rhythmically quite conservative, but he plays with great containment and manages to create an illusion, most obvious on 'Boperation', from the same session, that he is floating just above the beat; by contrast, McGhee sounds hasty and anxious. One hears the same effect rather more subtly on both takes of 'Symphonette' and on an alternative take of 'The Squirrel'.

 Goin' To Minton's Savoy 92681 Navarro; Sonny Stitt (as); Leo Parker (as, bs); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Charlie Rouse (ts); Tadd Dameron, Al Haig, Bud Powell (p); Nelson Boyd, Gene Ramey, Curley Russell (b); Denzil Best, Art Blakey, Kenny Clarke (d). 9/46–12/47.

(*) Fats Navarro Featured With The Tadd Dameron Band
Milestone M 47041 Navarro; Tadd Dameron (p); Rudy Williams (as); Allen Eager (ts); Milt Jackson (vib); Curley Russell (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 48.

 His Best Recordings: 1946–1949 Best of Jazz 4068 As above; add Andy Kirk Orchestra, Coleman Hawkins Orchestra; Be Bop Boys; Tadd Dameron Sextet & Orchestra. 46–49.

 The Fats Navarro Story Proper 1011 4CD As for the above. 46–50.

(*) Fats Navarro, 1947–1949 Classics 1108 As above; except add Earl Coleman (v). 47–49.

 Bird & Fats – Live At Birdland Cool & Blue C&B CD 103 Navarro; Charlie Parker (as); Walter Bishop Jr, Bud Powell (p); Tommy Potter, Curley Russell (b); Art Blakey, Roy Haynes (d); Chubby Newsome (v). 6/50.

Like Howard McGhee, Navarro came up through the Andy Kirk band, having already worked with Snookum Russell. Overweight, with a high, rather effeminate voice (and nicknamed either 'Fat Boy' or 'Fat Girl'), he had by 1945, when he replaced Dizzy Gillespie in the Billy Eckstine orchestra, developed a trumpet style which replaced Gillespie's burp-gun lines with a more elegantly shaped approach that emphasized a bright, burnished tone. The open texture of his solos was altogether better suited to the Tadd Dameron band, which became his most effective setting. Dameron is the accompanist on the best of the material, which provides an additional 20 minutes' top-flight Navarro, with four dispensable tracks from a drab December 1946 session alongside Lockjaw Davis and Al Haig. There's also a slice of pre-Dameron work on Memorial, credited to Gil Fuller's Modernists, together with later stuff by an equally good band (Henry, Dameron, Russell, Clarke) and marred only slightly by Kay Penton's inconsequential vocals.

Goin' To Minton's mops up some of the best of the material Fats recorded before his Blue Note apotheosis. Covering mainly tracks cut over five sessions round the autumn of 1946 and through the following year, they catch him developing into an ever more confident and moving soloist. His empathy with Bud Powell on 'Boppin' A Riff' and 'Fat Boy' is extraordinary and, generally speaking, he sounds better when unaccompanied by more than a single saxophone. Such was Fats's ability to blow resonant middle-register phrases that there is none of Dizzy's skyscraping which often sounded very far removed from the basic melody and key centre. Lennie Tristano may have been right in his valuation of the two trumpeters: Lennie thought Diz was a fine enough player, but he was no Fats Navarro.

There is an excellent version of 'Symphonette', from 1948, on the Milestone Navarro/Dameron compilation. Milt Jackson is present, but these performances, which also include 'The Squirrel', 'Dameronia' and two fine versions of 'Anthropology', are not up to the standard of the Blue Note recordings above.

The tracks on Live At Birdland, one with his own quartet and 15 more with Bird's group, document his last public appearance. They find him still poised and lyrical, but lacking the dramatic edge of the classic sessions, and unmistakably weary.

The Classics set is, as always with this imprint, a respectably detailed but aurally unedifying option.There is some additional material on which Fats backs vocalist Earl Coleman, but the key recordings are there and, if the budget is tight, this is a reasonable option. Also a generously proportioned career survey, Story includes all the material you would expect and does so at a very attractive budget price. The pioneering bebop material on the first disc is the freshest and the rawest. Fats would play better, but rarely with the same headlong urgency and joie de vivre. It traces his apprenticeship in the Billy Eckstine Orchestra and his emergence as a valid frontline soloist who might have rivalled the attainments of some of his now more celebrated colleagues had he lived. The second CD concentrates on Fats's work with two great tenors, Lockjaw Davis and Coleman Hawkins, though it also includes his forays with the Thin Men, his own first quartet as leader. The remaining two discs cover the Royal Roost sessions and Navarro's flurry of recording activity on a variety of larger and smaller labels in the period before his death. All the material has been available before but it is wonderful to have these sides in such accessible and affordable form. The Best Of Jazz compilation also has the benefit of tracing Fats's development from his days with the Kirk band, with Coleman Hawkins, early stuff as leader with the Be Bop Boys and the Thin Men group and the best of the Dameron sides, but such was the concentration of Navarro's career that these sets are heavily overlapped and often pointlessly repetitive. Navarro died a week after the Birdland date of tuberculosis exacerbated by drug abuse. As an artist he was already astonishingly mature; many of the stylistic innovations and developments attributed to Clifford Brown were actually instigated by Navarro. Small as his legacy is, it is one of the finest in all of jazz.

Louis Nelson (1902–90)

TROMBONE

Born in New Orleans, although he grew up in nearby Napoleonville, he played trombone with the Sidney Desvigne band for 15 years. After war service, he played extensively with the Kid Thomas band and was a regular at Preservation Hall with many leaders.

 Louis Nelson's Creole Jazz Band GHB BCD-173 Nelson; Cuff Billett (t, v); John Defferary (cl); Richard Simmons (p); Paul Sealey (g); Brian Turnock (b); Barry Martyn (d). 66.

 Jazz At The Palm Court Vol. 1 GHB BCD-551 Nelson; Wendell Brunious (t, v); Sammy Rimington (cl); Butch Thompson (p); Danny Barker (bj, v); Chester Zardis (b); Stanley Stephens (d). 4/89.

This is the 'other' Louis Nelson, who came to prominence almost a generation after Big Eye Louis. Although most regularly appearing as a sideman, Nelson has a few records under his own name – although, strictly speaking, the first GHB date features him as a guest with the Barry Martyn Ragtime Band, a souvenir of a British visit. The record was made in an old hall attached to the White Horse pub in Willesden. Nelson contributes his unchanging, gruff trombone parts to the enthusiastic playing of these young Brits, and the session has a degree of charm as well as a bluff, good-humoured spirit, kept up to speed by Martyn's doughty and tireless drumming.

Louis was still determined to blow the horn, even at 86, and the Palm Court Jazz Band had plenty of fun on their regular gig. Brunious and Rimington will always seem like youngsters in this company, but they were pretty experienced themselves by this point, and the music has all the pungency it needs. Nelson himself is taking it easy, though his solos sound like an old man's defiance, even with Father Time knocking at the door.

Oliver Nelson (1932–75)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, CLARINET

Unremarkable sideman career until he began recording as a leader in 1959, then arranging for big-band settings, especially with Jimmy Smith and Wes Montgomery. His own playing featured less as he won commissions for film and TV work from the late '60s onwards. Died suddenly of a heart attack.

 Meet Oliver Nelson: Featuring Kenny Dorham Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 227 Nelson; Kenny Dorham (t); Ray Bryant (p); Wendell Marshall (b); Art Taylor (d). 10/59.

 Taking Care Of Business Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1784 Nelson; Lem Winchester (vib); Johnny Hammond Smith (org); George Tucker (b); Roy Haynes (d). 3/60.

Nelson served his apprenticeship with Louis Jordan and the Erskine Hawkins and Quincy Jones big bands, and he probably learned most from working with Quincy, not least that ability to combine sophisticated intervals and expansive shapes with a raw blues feel. Sadly, Nelson was to spend his last few years in the same direction, writing TV themes like 'The Six Million Dollar Man', lucrative but an unsatisfactory legacy for a man with an impressive jazz discography

These early records are nicely arranged, well textured, but ultimately a bit flat. Dorham's contributions to the earlier of the pair are exactly what you'd expect of him: fluid, punchy and lyrical in all the unexpected places. The second is much more of an arranger's record, and it's the interplay of timbres and textures that one remembers rather than anything in the themes.

(*) Screamin' The Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 080 Nelson; Richard Williams (t); Eric Dolphy (as, bcl, f); Richard Wyands (p); George Duvivier (b); Roy Haynes (d). 5/60.

Nelson cottoned on to Dolphy before the latter began to make a mark as a solo artist, and he blatantly and quite forgivably used him as a colourist rather than a lateral improviser. Nelson's own solos weren't quite as pedestrian as they sometimes sounded (we suggested he played 'arranger's sax'), but they were somewhat limited both in sound and in ideas, so Dolphy was an ideal recruitment; Richard Williams, destined never to have much of a career under his own name, is excellent in this context, brighter and sharper than Dorham, though without the softer, lyrical quality. The rhythm section has an almost time-capsule quality. If one were played this in the dark, it would be possible to date it almost to the month. The bebop figures are less in evidence. There's a growing attraction to diminished and off-centre chords, and the drumming is beginning to sound multi-directional, free of the bomb-dropping aggression of a previous generation. Haynes is one of the key protagonists here in one of his best sessions of this vintage.

* Blues And The Abstract Truth Impulse! 051154-2 Nelson; Freddie Hubbard (t); Eric Dolphy (as, f); George Barrow (bs); Bill Evans (p); Paul Chambers (b); Roy Haynes (d). 2/61.

Restored to its original cover artwork (a portrait of Nelson was substituted when the stereo version appeared), this is one of the classics of the period, and if there were one Nelson track to take away to a desert island it would have to be the one that starts the album, the haunting 'Stolen Moments' with its mournful Hubbard solo and a lovely statement from Dolphy on flute. The great man left his bass clarinet behind for this session, and it isn't missed. Nelson tended to arrange for higher voices, and for this record he didn't stray outside 12-bar blues and the chords of 'I Got Rhythm'. 'Stolen Moments' is a minor blues, opening in C minor, with some fascinating internal divisions. 'Hoe Down' is a 44-bar figure based on the opening two notes. 'Teenie's Blues' is dedicated to the composer's sister, a talented singer. It rests on just three intervals, with transpositions for the two altos to maintain a level of tension and release. The rhythm section is again very fine, with Haynes relishing this setting and Chambers producing some lovely countermelodies and stop-time figures under the basic changes. The sound is now as good as anyone could possibly want, close and sharp enough to hear Dolphy's breath across the mouthpiece of the flute.

 Afro / American Sketches Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1819 Nelson; Billy Byers, Jerry Kail, Joe Newman, Ernie Royal (t); Paul Faulise, Urbie Green, Melba Liston, Britt Woodman (tb); Don Butterfield (tba); Ray Alonge, Jimmy Buffington, Julius Watkins (frhn); Bob Ashton, Eric Dixon, Jerry Dodgion, Charles McCracken (sax); Peter Makis (p); Art Davis (b); Ed Shaughnessy (d); Ray Barretto (perc). 62.

Nelson prepared very carefully for this; indeed, he insisted that such a project was possible only with a lot of preparation. Perhaps that is the problem, for what this record desperately lacks is a measure of spontaneity, and this is a rather stiff and ungiving set. The story is that Nelson was originally unwilling to take on the project but eventually agreed to do so on his own terms. The themes are all very much in his normal range and there is more than enough space for the soloists, but something about the way the record is voiced leaves a rather flat impression. Nelson himself is not much interested in soloing and responds only perfunctorily when he does.

 More Blues And The Abstract Truth Impulse! 051212-2 Nelson; Thad Jones, Danny Moore (t); Phil Woods (as); Phil Bodner (ts, eng hn); Ben Webster (ts); Pepper Adams (bs); Roger Kellaway (p); Richard Davis (b); Grady Tate (d). 9/64.

In this case, more means less. This lacks the impact and the punch of the original session, not because the players are lacking in fire (any session that boasts Thad Jones, Phil Woods and Ben Webster isn't struggling for charisma), but because the music is already drifting towards the formulaic television funk that was to occupy too much of Nelson's later life. 'Theme From Mr Broadway' and 'Blue For Mr Broadway' are the strongest things, both of them big, generous themes with more bottom end than is usual in a Nelson composition and arrangement.

Also, in brief:

 Nocturne /  Straight Ahead Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1795 / 099. 60, 3/61.

Two notably subtle records, perhaps too much so to catch the ear of most fans; Nelson thought out his arrangements with more care than instinct. Eric Dolphy (as, bcl, f) plays on the second and it's one of the few disappointments of his short career.

(*) Soul Battle Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 325. 9/60.

King Curtis and Jimmy Forrest (ts) bring the funk; Nelson leaves behind the sophistication. Drab.

 Main Stem Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1803. 61.

At the end of a hectically busy period for Nelson, he sounds tired and short of ideas. Not playing well, he's upstaged by the band.

(*) Jazz Masters 48 Verve 527654. 11/62–11/67.

A valuable compilation of material spanning just five years but covering a huge amount of ground in stylistic terms.

(*) Live From Los Angeles Impulse! 427502. 6/67.

This big band date perfectly illustrates the schizophrenic cast of Nelson's career: one part subtle composer and master arranger; one part crowd-pleasing entertainer.

Steve Nelson (born 1955)

VIBRAPHONE

Originally worked with Grant Green, but has diversified into modern settings and established a strong presence as leader with his Milt Jackson-influenced approach.

 Communications Criss Cross 1034 Nelson; Mulgrew Miller (p); Ray Drummond (b); Tony Reedus (d). 12/87.

There are a handful of phrases on 'The Song Is You' and 'I Didn't Know What Time It Was' when it might have been Bags playing, except the phrasing is not so taut or rhythmically propulsive and the attack is sharper and more ringing. One of the most interesting vibists on the scene, Nelson has often been better recognized for his work with other leaders. The Criss Cross contract doesn't seem to have worked out, or at least wasn't continued, which is a great shame since this is the sort of context which suits Steve best and it would have been good to hear more in this vein and of this quality. The long workouts, especially 'Dignity', are the best.

 Live Session: Volumes 1&2 Red RR 123231 2 / 123232 2 Nelson; Bobby Watson (as); Donald Brown (p); Curtis Lundy (b); Victor Lewis (d). 7/89.

Watson and Nelson had struck up a good working relationship and Steve always plays well alongside Bobby's boppish, Rabbit-tinged alto. 'New Beginning' which opens Volume 1 is a terrific piece, packed with energy and marked by some agile, percussive playing from Nelson, who seems to strike his keys with power but maintains a warm, full tone, presumably something to do with the mallets. Brown is a bit lost in places, recessed in the live mix, and his contribution is hard to assess. Lundy is superb and Lewis can't be faulted, even though this might have been a better gig for Marvin 'Smitty' Smith.

'Afro Blue' is the big piece on Volume 1, stretched out to more than 20 minutes; 'Quiet As It Is Kept' is a lovely ballad. On Volume 2, Watson is absent for 'I Can't Get Started', leaving Nelson to work his way through a thoroughly imaginative version of the standard that implies familiarity with the Mingus/Dolphy version. Most of the tunes are standards and though Watson isn't thought of as primarily a standards player, his graceful turn on 'Sweet And Lovely' and his passionate declamations on 'The Song Is You' make this a fine outing for the saxophonist as well as for Nelson.

 New Beginnings TCB 99302 Nelson; Mulgrew Miller (p); Peter Washington (b); Kenny Washington (d). 99.

The '90s were relatively quiet for Nelson in recording terms, though he became part of Dave Holland's regular band and poured much of his energies into that; he also worked with Kenny Barron, Jeanie Bryson and others. The chops are still very strong on this belated return to the studio. 'New Beginnings' is a powerful starting-point, as it's intended to be, but working without a horn allows Steve to weave his own top line over Miller's open, Tynerish chords. After two more originals, Steve switches to standards fare, including an unexpectedly extended version of 'It's The Talk Of The Town' and a beautiful closing meditation on Dmitri Tiomkin's 'Wild Is The Wind'. Lovely stuff.

 Sound Effect High Note HNCD 7175 Nelson; Mulgrew Miller (p); Peter Washington (b); Lewis Nash (d). 6/07.

Though he records on his own account infrequently, Nelson always brings something special to the table and there are two outstanding tracks on this quartet date. Freddie Hubbard's 'Up Jumped Spring' doesn't sit very obviously for the vibes, but Steve makes something special out of it. He also delivers a magnificent solo on his own 'Sound Essence' (sic – different title to the album) and on 'You And The Night And The Music' he delivers some choruses that will make Bobby Hutcherson look to his laurels. A fine return for a great professional.

'Big Eye' Louis Nelson (1885–1949)

CLARINET

Born in New Orleans, he played bass in the Buddy Bolden group in 1900 but switched to clarinet, later working with most of the major early groups in the city. Taught many up-and-coming talents and spent most of his life playing in cabaret and theatres, but was rediscovered in the '40s.

 Big Eye Louis Nelson Delisle American Music AMCD-7 Nelson; Wooden Joe Nicholas (t, v); Charles Love (t); Louis Nelson (tb); Louis Gallaud (p); Johnny St Cyr, Louis Keppard (g); Austin Young, Albert Glenny (b); Ernest Rogers, Albert Jiles (d); William Tircuit (v). 5–7/49.

The only record under the nominal leadership of a man who taught Bechet and was an acknowledged inspiration of Dodds and Noone. The CD consists of three informal studio or home sessions and seven tracks from a dance hall date in New Orleans; ten tracks appear for the first time. Whatever the credentials outlined above, Nelson sounds like a man content to coast through his working life: the clarinet-playing ambles along, mixing fluffs and good notes. The live tracks are a bit more animated, played over a very steady beat, and, though Love and Nicholas provide firm leads, the horns (the other Louis Nelson, on trombone, is no relation) play things very straight.

Phineas Newborn Jr (1931–90)

PIANO

Technically, he was sometimes claimed to run a close second to Art Tatum. In reality, Newborn was a more effective player at slower tempos and with fewer notes; but he could be dazzling when he chose, even after illness and injury hampered his progress. A sensitive and troubled soul.

 Here Is Phineas Koch International 8505 Newborn; Oscar Pettiford (b); Kenny Clarke (d). 5/56.

 Phineas' Rainbow / While My Lady Sleeps Collectables 2737 As above. 10/56–4/57.

(*) Piano Artistry of / Fabulous Phineas Jazz Beat 10435 Newborn; Calvin Newborn (g); George Joyner, Oscar Pettiford (b); Denzil Best, Kenny Clarke (d). 57, 3–4/58.

 Harold Arlen's Jamaica / Fabulous Phineas Collectables COL 2740 As above. 9/57, 4/58.

(*) Stockholm Jam Session Volume 1 /  Volume 2 Steeplechase SCCD 36025 / 36026 Newborn; Benny Bailey (t); Oscar Pettiford (b); Rune Carlsson (d); unidentified (tb) and (bs). 9/58.

A player of tremendous technical ability, often likened to Oscar Peterson, the younger Newborn was flashy, hyped-up and explosive, eating up themes like Clifford Brown's 'Daahoud' and Rollins's 'Oleo' as if they were buttered toast. Underneath the super-confident exterior, though, there was a troubled young man who was acutely sensitive to criticism, particularly the charge that he was no more than a cold technician. Newborn suffered a serious nervous collapse from which he only partially recovered, and the remainder of his career was interspersed with periods of ill-health. His later recording output is spasmodic to say the least, marked by a chastened blues sound which contrasts sharply – in style and quality – with the early work..

Much of his work is now available on two-for-one compilations. A shameless display of technical virtuosity, it is almost too technically accomplished and is difficult to absorb at length. Rainbow is full of his patented dazzle, but While My Lady Sleeps, soaked in Robert Farnon's strings, is more like chrome-plated mood music. The Jamaica session, now available on a twofer with Fabulous, is a curious set of calypso-ish themes ('Hooray For The Yankee Dollar' is one) with a full band; but Fabulous returns to a quartet and is a lot stronger, the material including the deathless 'Pamela'. And yet even here the tendency to elaboration won't be curbed. Absurdly fast octave runs follow one another in quick succession, and even in ballad performances Newborn seems compelled to scatter notes in every direction, when a degree of reticence would be far more effective. Piano-players will marvel, but most casual listeners may find the sum effect excessive.

Fortunately, it transpired in 1992 that tapes of Newborn's 1958 visit to Stockholm had survived, unheard, for 34 years. Expertly cleaned up by Nils Winther, they sound fresh and bright enough to counterbalance the vagaries of a single-mic recording and a ropey piano. The music is of an unexpectedly high quality for a spontaneous session. Some other instruments can be heard during the ensembles, but these did not play a major role and the individuals cannot be identified. Newborn's opening solo on the first session (Volume 1) is patient and unhurried, growing in expressiveness as he moves outside the basic chords. It's perhaps his most complete statement of the evening. Elsewhere, he solos with great clarity and occasional glimpses of irony, as on Dizzy Gillespie's 'Woody'n'You', where, with Bailey sitting out, he mimics the punchy attack of the original trumpet-line. Though badly recorded, Oscar Pettiford nearly makes the session his own. The bass solos on 'Ladybird' (Volume 1) and 'It's You Or No One' (Volume 2) are equally valuable additions to the Pettiford canon, and Bailey's luminous account of 'Confirmation' (Volume 2) deserves a star or two. Local man Carlsson does his thing politely and professionally.

(*) A World Of Piano! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 175 Newborn; Paul Chambers (b); Louis Hayes, Philly Joe Jones (d). 10-11/61.

 The Great Jazz Piano Of Phineas Newborn Jr Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 388 Newborn; Sam Jones, Milt Turner, Leroy Vinnegar (b); Louis Hayes (d). 11/61–9/62.

(*) The Newborn Touch Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 270 Newborn; Leroy Vinnegar (b); Frank Butler (d). 4/64.

(*) Harlem Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 662 Newborn; Ray Brown (b); Elvin Jones (d). 2/69.

 Please Send Me Someone To Love Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 947 As above. 2/69.

Newborn made a string of records for Contemporary during the '60s, though he was also hampered by a hand injury that curtailed some of his more virtuosic effects. It might be argued that this, compounded by a growing self-doubt, made him a more expressive player. The best of these sides are genuinely moving, as when on 'Prelude To A Kiss' (Great Jazz Piano) he restates the theme in octaves and floats it away over his own restatement, like a ghost score. There are equally lovely moments on Harlem Blues, most obviously a version of 'Tenderly' that melts the heart.

Throughout this period, he benefited from superb rhythm players. Vinnegar and Butler weren't the right combination for him, but Jones's celebrated polyrhythms, coupled to Brown's resolute chording and fast runs, were an ideal match for his own omnidirectional approach. Harlem Blues remains our favourite of the bunch by just a whisker, though there isn't much in it. The remainder of the session was released as Please Send Me Someone To Love, and surely now there's a strong case for editing together a good single CD from this pair?

 Back Home Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 971 Newborn; Ray Brown (b); Elvin Jones (d). 76.

 Look Out – Phineas Is Back! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 866 Newborn; Ray Brown (b); Jimmie Smith (d). 12/76.

Newborn enjoyed a brief resurgence in the '70s and was taken up by Pablo for a time. Interestingly, this was the closest he ever came to delivering a straight bebop record. Though his hand-speed would have suggested that the rapid-fire changes of bop would be meat and drink to him, he never seemed enamoured of the Monk/Powell axis, continuing to draw sustenance from Tatum and Peterson. On Phineas Is Back! he gives 'A Night In Tunisia' and 'Salt Peanuts' exuberant airings and adds the now familiar touch of pathos, even a hint of anger, to 'You Are The Sunshine Of My Life'. Brown and Smith are not well recorded, but both are audible and both play well.

Though there was a smattering of later records, for us these are the last on which Newborn plays like his old self. Stories were rife about his psychological frailty in these years and it is remarkable that he managed to sustain a career at all, let alone at this generally impressive level. The trio on Back Home was one that he had worked with in the late '60s and there is genuine enjoyment in each other's company. Brown is happy to fill when the pianist's thoughts wander or when inspiration deserts him, as it seemed to in latter days, but the closing four tracks – 'Back Home', 'On Green Dolphin Street', 'Pamela' and 'Love For Sale' – are almost back to classic form.

Also, in brief:

(*) Solo Piano Collectables COL-CD-6372. 3/75.

Made for Atlantic. Despite four different engineers, the piano sound is thin and the interpretations wilful and inconsistent. Moments of brilliance are often matched with misfingerings and alarming lapses of concentration.

(*) Tivoli Encounter Storyville STCD 8221. 7/79.

Newborn recorded almost nothing in his final decade, so this has to be regarded as some sort of farewell. He battles manfully through some old favourites but the fires are almost out.

New Departures Quartet

GROUP

Formed to accompany Michael Horovitz's New Departures poetry events.

 New Departures Quartet Hot House HH CD 010 Bobby Wellins (ts); Stan Tracey (p); Jeff Clyne (b); Laurie Morgan (d). 6 & 7/64.

In his liner-note, Victor Schonfield suggests that Bobby Wellins is the finest saxophonist to emerge outside America since the war. It's hard to argue on the strength of this and the Scotsman's work for the Stan Tracey Quartet on projects like the fabled Under Milk Wood. What Schonfield hears as a folkish strain is sometimes harder to detect, though the lightness and simplicity of the saxophonist's lines are strongly evident, as is that characteristically airy delivery. 'Culloden Moor' is a good example of the group's free-improvising sound, the kind of work they must have done at live New Departures events. 'McTaggart' is a more blues-based idea, meat and drink to both Wellins and Tracey. Bass and drums offer solid but unspectacular support (though Clyne's intro to 'McTaggart' is part of its success) and it's a pity that there isn't more material with just saxophone and piano. A reminder of how inventive British jazz was even in the early Beatles era.

New Jazz Composers Octet

GROUP

Founded by David Weiss and devoted to imaginative hard bop.

 First Steps Into Reality Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 059 David Weiss (t); Andrew Williams (tb); Myron Walden (as); Jimmy Greene, Greg Tardy (ts); James Farnsworth, David Reikenberg (bs); Xavier Davis (p); Dwayne Burno (b); Nasheet Waits (d). 99.

 Walkin' The Line Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 151 As above; except omit Reikenberg; add Steve Davis (tb); Craig Handy (ss, as, ts); Chris Karlic (bs); Joe Chambers (d). 1/03.

The sharp-eyed will have noticed ten performers listed for the first CD. Greene and Reikenberg are in for their opposite numbers on three tracks, adding in the former case a very different flavour to the tenor solo on Freddie Hubbard's 'D Minor Mint'. Trombonist Williams is strongly featured on the same tune and one wishes there were more from him. Despite Weiss's nominal leadership, the two main composers are Davis and Walden; Myron's 'Untitled In A Flat Minor' isn't quite as schematic as it probably sounds and his touch with a big romantic theme is evident on 'I'll Always Love You'. Davis sets things in motion with the title-track and then delivers the sucker punch with the delightful three-quarter time 'When The Spirit Hits'. Burno gets his spot on 'I'm Comin' On Home'.

As music goes, it isn't quantum physics. There's a bright contemporary edge to the playing, but the basic idiom is 40 years old and none the worse for that, though it makes the 'new' ring with irony. The second album is lifted out of the ordinary by some fine guest appearances: Handy is always an exciting player and his 'Abdullah's Demeanour' is the longest and most ambitious track. This time the writing divides between Davis and Weiss, and the pianist's 'Dead Weight' and 'The Dove' are strong ideas which require nimble thinking. They also do Chick Corea's 'Inner Space' and do it more justice than most.

David 'Fathead' Newman (born 1933)

TENOR, ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

Born in Dallas, he was recording with R&B bands in the early '50s and spent many years as the principal saxophonist in the Ray Charles group.

 Fathead Atlantic 8122-73708-2 Newman; Marcus Belgrave (t); Bennie Crawford (bs); Ray Charles (p); Edgar Willis (b); Milton Turner (d). 11/58.

In spite of his unfortunate nickname (which doesn't seem to bother him), Newman is an ornery, driving saxophonist whose R&B background – including 12 years with Ray Charles – has left him with a consummate knowledge in the use of riffs and licks in a soul-to-jazz context. He always swings and his unmistakable Texan sound is highly authoritative, but, like so many musicians of a similar background, he's had trouble finding a fruitful context.

Fathead was his name-debut on Atlantic, under the imprimatur of a Ray Charles 'presents' logo. The music is pitched a little awkwardly between jazz, R&B and proto-soul sax. Lightweight, yet heavy on the soul, the music retains a cheerfully bluesy appeal.

 Chillin High Note HCD 7036 Newman; Bryan Carrott (vib); John Hicks (p); Steve Novosel (b); Winard Harper (d); Cadino Newman (v). 12/98.

(*) Keep The Spirits Singing High Note HCD 7057 Newman; Steve Turre (tb); John Hicks (p); Steve Novosel (b); Winard Harper (d); Steve Kroon (perc). 3/00.

A 40-year gap in the story, somewhat filled by the compilations on Collectables (see below, 'in brief'). The old warrior's taking things easy on Chillin, and while not all the tempos are slow, none of them exactly canter out of the gate. Carrott takes rather more of the improvising honours, and son Cadino sings on two tracks, quite effectively too. A likeable reminder that Newman's still around.

It was a good idea to enlist the reliably forceful Turre for Keep The Spirits Singing, even if he's on only three of seven tracks. They get off on a terrific groove on the title-track, and things never look back from there. It's a textbook example of putting a veteran player in a setting which he can feel relaxed in without letting things settle down into too cosy a spot. Hicks (though he doesn't sound like he's on the best piano in the world) finds space for a few well-chosen words and Novosel and Harper get things swinging without trying to take over the show. Flute feature, tenor ballad, alto joust with 'Willow Weep For Me' – Fathead hasn't sounded this phat in years.

 Davey Blue High Note HCD 7086 Newman; Cedar Walton (p); Bryan Carrott (vib); David Williams (b); Kenny Washington (d). 01.

 The Gift High Note HCD 7104 Newman; John Hicks (p); Bryan Carrott (vib); Buster Williams (b); Winard Harper (d). 02.

(*) Song For The New Man High Note HCD 7120 Newman; Curtis Fuller (tb); John Hicks (p); John Menegon (b); Jimmy Cobb (d). 10/03.

 I Remember Brother Ray High Note HCD 7135 Newman; John Hicks (p); Steve Nelson (vib); John Menegon (b); Winard Harper (d). 04.

Newman has clearly found a congenial home at High Note, and has been contentedly turning out an album a year for them with a team of heavyweights backing him up: interesting that he always seems to want a vibes-player on hand. The only dud in the batch is Song For The New Man, which for some reason sounds fallible and tired in parts. The others are each like a plateful of good home-cooking: warm, satisfying, meaty blowing with just a trace of spice here and there. The homage to old boss Ray Charles is obvious, but well done.

(*) Cityscape High Note HCD 7150 Newman; Winston Byrd (t, flhn); Benny Powell (tb); Howard Johnson (tba, bs); David Leonhardt (p); John Menegon (b); Yoron Israel (d). 8/05.

 Life High Note HCD 7166 As above, except omit Byrd, Powell, Johnson; add Steve Nelson (vib); Peter Bernstein (g). 9/06.

 Diamondhead High Note HCD 7179 Newman; Curtis Fuller (tb); Cedar Walton (p); Peter Washington (b); Yoron Israel (d). 10/07.

Newman marches on towards national-institution status with these further instalments. With some old confreres on hand to fill out his regular band, Cityscape is one of the best of the whole catalogue, and there are some terrific charts by Johnson and Ronnie Boykins. Fathead restores the vibes on Life and the sound seems to inspire him to some further great playing, though there are signs of tiredness here and there and the studio sound sometimes sounds artificially thickened. The latest CD, which is probably one of the most recently recorded in this edition of the Guide, is another veteran encounter. More energetic and imaginative than the disappointing Song For The New Man, which also included Fuller and the now deceased John Hicks, whose composition gave Life its title. The pianist is replaced on this one by the remarkable Walton, who's also nearing his mid-70s. Together they turn in a recital that's warm, accomplished and full of quiet wisdom.

Also, in brief:

() The Weapon / At Home And Abroad /  Lonely Avenue / Newmanism /  Captain Buckles / Front Money / () The Many Facets Of / Heads Up / (*) Collectables Classics
Collectables COL 6280 / COL 6607 / COL 7671 / COL 7839 / COL 0415. 70–87.

Doubled-up reissues from David's capacious Atlantic catalogue, with some Warners and Cotillon material, too. Solid and reliable, but there's probably most jazz content on 1987's Heads Up. The box is a nice option for the recent convert.

Joe Newman (1922–92)

TRUMPET

A deep-thinking musician with a reflective sound and a passion for jazz education. Newman was the Johnny Hodges of the Basie band. He also had stints with Illinois Jacquet and with Benny Goodman and continued to record under his own name until quite late in life.

* The Count's Men Fresh Sound FSR CD 135 Newman; Benny Powell (tb); Frank Foster (ts); Frank Wess (f, ts); Sir Charles Thompson (p); Eddie Jones (b); Shadow Wilson (d). 9/55.

 Byers' Guide Fresh Sound FSCD 2004 Newman; Billy Byers (tb); Gene Quill (as, cl); Lou Stein (p); Milt Hinton (b); Osie Johnson (d). 56.

Newman was never a whole-hearted modernist. His sharp attack and bright sound were derived almost entirely from Louis Armstrong and, though he was chief among the cadre of the 'Basie Moderns' in the '50s, he maintained allegiance to the Count's music over any other. His preference for the middle register meant he was never an excessively dramatic soloist. The octet I'm Still Swinging is currently out of catalogue, but as a useful compare-and-contrast exercise, try 'A. M. Romp' on The Count's Men with the same tune on Good'n'Groovy, below. The later version is slightly wilder, but it's the tighter version with Sir Charles Thompson that really impresses, and newcomers to Newman's entertaining sound would do well to begin with the mid-'50s stuff.

The other Fresh Sound is co-led with Byers, who is an underrated figure and well worth sampling. Joe's Satchmo-influenced trumpet is still the dominant voice and it's a cracking set if you enjoy this brand of mild 'modernism'.

(*) Jive At Five Original Jazz Classics OJC 419 Newman; Frank Wess (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Eddie Jones (b); Oliver Jackson (d). 5/60.

 Good'n'Groovy Original Jazz Classics OJC 185 Newman; Frank Foster (ts); Tommy Flanagan (p); Eddie Jones (b); Bill English (d). 3/61.

Good'n'Groovy was recorded at about the time of Newman's departure from the Basie band, though it's pretty clear that Joe retains a considerable loyalty to a sound and conception that he himself did so much to shape. Jive At Five has very much the same feel, but it's a more relaxed and poised performance. Newman always sounds good round Frank Foster, and the album bounces along with enough vigour to cut through a rather flat mix.

 I Love My Woman Black & Blue 970.2 Newman; Hank Jones (p); George Duvivier (b); Alan Dawson (d). 7/79.

Like a lot of Americans at the time, Newman found a place with the French Black & Blue imprint and in 1979 recorded a brisk, swinging jam set with what was effectively the house band. His plain-spoken trumpet is heard at its best on 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise', 'Prelude To A Kiss' and 'Summertime'. Jones for the most part keeps out of the way, but his solos are welcome when they come and he's in great form on the Gershwin tune. Duvivier could probably do these dates in his sleep and Dawson doesn't get over-exercised, though he's often a more interesting drummer than the other B&B regular, J. C. Heard.

Also, in brief:

 Jazz At Midnight Emarcy 18446. 10/56, 1/59.

Two 10-inch LPs recorded in France and reissued under the Jazz In Paris rubric. They're not inspiring dates, despite the presence of Cootie Williams (t) and Frank Wess (ts), but there are some collectable moments.

 Soft Swingin' Jazz With The Happy Cats Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10123. 57, 1/58.

A nice compilation of Soft Swingin' Jazz and other material credited to the Happy Cats, with Frank Rehak (tb), Frank Wess (ts, f), Shirley Scott (p) and others.

 The Hot Trumpets Of Joe Newman And Henry Red Allen Prestige 24232. 61, 62.

Two different groups here, so a useful introduction for anyone who wants something of both the front-men.

New Orchestra Workshop

GROUP

Canadian 'workshop' group, active in the early '90s, working in a free-form idiom and featuring some of the major players of the Canadian improvisation scene.

(*) The Future Is N.O.W. Nine Winds NWCD 0131 Daniel Lapp, Bill Clark (t); Graham Ord, Coat Cooke, Bruce Freedman, Roy Stiffe (reeds); Paul Plimley (p); Clyde Reed, Paul Blaney, Ken Lister (b); Claude Ranger, Gregg Simpson, Roger Baird, Stan Taylor (d). 90.

 NOW You Hear It Nine Winds NWCD 0151 Bruce Freedman (as); Graham Ord (ts, ss); Coat Cooke (ts); Joseph Danza (shakuhachi); Paul Plimley (p); Ron Samworth (g); Lisle Ellis, Clyde Reed, Paul Blaney (b); Gregg Simpson, Roger Baird, Buff Allen (d); Jack Duncan (perc); Kate Hammett-Vaughan (v). 5–11/91.

Vancouver's New Orchestra Workshop is a co-operative venture inspired by Chicago's AACM. The Future Is N.O.W. offers the chance to sample the work of five different bands which have grown out of NOW. The outstanding piece is the opening track by Plimley's Octet, a swirling, compelling montage of rhythmic and melodic figures that is gripping throughout its nine-minute length; but there isn't a bad track among the six here. The harmolodically inspired quartet, Lunar Adventures, contribute two tracks; Chief Feature is a quartet that brews up a long, blustering workout reminiscent of early Archie Shepp; and Unity purvey a vivacious free improvisation, with excellent work by Lapp, Blaney, Ord and Baird. Only the muddled piece by Turnaround is in any way disappointing.

Their second report on NOW You Hear It is mildly disappointing: plenty of interest, but nothing that really stands out. The Plimley–Reed duo contribute three interactive duets, and MuseArt, a trio with Plimley, Ellis and Baird, offers a long abstraction of the blues. Lunar Adventures make brainy jazz-rock, Garbo's Hat are a chamberish trio featuring the singing of Kate Hammett-Vaughan; and the closing 'jam' by a group featuring Ord, Blaney and Baird, with Danza's shakuhachi hanging around the perimeter, isn't bad.

(*) WOWOW Spool SPL107 John Korsrud, Bill Clark (t, flhn); Ralph Eppel, Rod Murray, George Lewis (tb); Vinny Golia (cl, f, saxes); Graham Ord (ss, as, ts, f, picc); Coat Cooke (as, ts, bs, f); Mark Nodwell (ss); Saul Berson (as); Paul Cram (bs, cl); Paul Plimley (p); Ron Samworth (g); Peggy Lee (clo); Paul Blaney, Clyde Reed (b); Dylan van der Schyff (d); Kate Hammett-Vaughan (v). 11/97.

Three long concert pieces from a celebration of NOW's 20th anniversary. Coat Cooke's title-piece is an arresting dedication to Ellington, with plenty of echoes of the master intermingled with a broad range of borrowings from 20th-century composition and sundry free passages. The orchestra play it with splendid commitment, and if it feels like fin de siècle pastiche to some extent, it's beautifully done. Samworth's 'The Yellow Sound', inspired by a text from Kandinsky, is on a similar scale, but darker, with more jarring switches of direction. Cram, one of three guest stars (the others are Golia and Lewis), offers 'The Tyranny Of Interest', which sounds like a Frank Zappa structure some of the way – charging brass and woodwind figures over rockish beats – and ends the disc in cacophonous exultation. A good show.

New Orleans Rhythm Kings

GROUP

Paul Mares put the band together to play in Chicago, and they were hugely popular at the Friars Inn, refusing all other offers. Reformed briefly in the '30s.

* The New Orleans Rhythm Kings And Jelly Roll Morton Milestone 47020-2 *Paul Mares (c); George Brunies, Santo Pecora (tb); Leon Roppolo (cl); Don Murray (cl, as); Charlie Cordella (cl, ts); Jack Pettis (Cmel, ts); Elmer Schoebel, Mel Stitzel, Jelly Roll Morton, Kyle Pierce, Red Long (p); Lou Black, Bob Gillett, Bill

Eastwood (bj); Arnold Loyacano, Chink Martin (b); Frank Snyder, Ben Pollack, Leo Adde (d). 8/22–3/25.

♛  New Orleans Rhythm Kings 1922–1925 The Complete Set Retrieval RTR 79031 2CD As above except add Omer Simeon (cl), Boyce Brown (as), Jess Stacy (p), Marvin Saxbe (g), Pat Pattison (b); George Wettling (d). 2/22–1/35.

One of the major groups of jazz records, from the first stirrings of the music in recording studios, the New Orleans Rhythm Kings' sessions still sound astonishingly lively and vital some 80 years later. The band recorded in Chicago but had come from New Orleans: Mares was already a disciple of King Oliver (who hadn't yet recorded at the time of the first session here), Roppolo played fluent, blue clarinet, and even Brunies made more of the trombone – at that time an irresponsibly comical instrument in jazz terms – than most players of the day. The rhythms tend towards the chunky, exacerbated by the acoustic recording, but the band's almost visionary drive is brought home to stunning effect on the likes of 'Bugle Call Blues' (from their very first session, in August 1922), the relentlessly swinging 'Tiger Rag' and the knockabout 'That's A Plenty'. On two later sessions they took the opportunity to have Jelly Roll Morton sit in, and his partnership with Roppolo on 'Clarinet Marmalade' and 'Mr Jelly Lord' – something of a sketch for Morton's own later version – invigorates the whole band. 'London Blues' and 'Milenberg Joys' find Morton more or less taking over the band in terms of conception. The final session they made, early in 1925, is slightly less impressive because of Brunies's absence, and there are moments of weakness elsewhere in the original records: the use of saxes sometimes swamps the initiative, Mares isn't always sure of himself, and the beats are occasionally unhelpfully overdriven. But this is still extraordinarily far-sighted and powerful music for its time, with a band of young white players building on black precepts the way that, say, Nick LaRocca of the ODJB refused to acknowledge.

The superb Retrieval edition collects all of the original masters, 12 alternative takes and the reunion session of 1935, where Mares convened a gang of contemporary Chicagoans to play alongside himself and Pecora, the results of which are surprisingly strong. In excellent sound from top-quality originals, this is the NORK as they should be heard.

Sam Newsome (born 1965)

TENOR AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Settled on music after trying out as a stand-up comic! He now largely concentrates on the soprano.

(*) Sam I Am Criss Cross Jazz 1056 Newsome; Marcus Miller (p); Steve Nelson (vib); James Genus (b); Billy Drummond (d). 11/90.

 The Tender Side Of Sammy Straighthorn Steeplechase SCCD 31452 Newsome; Bruce Barth (p); Ugonna Okegwo (b); Matt Wilson (d); Elisabeth Kontomanou (v). 4/98.

Newsome emerged as a tenorman of unpretentious authority with the Criss Cross album. He courts trouble by framing tributes to both Coltrane and Rollins here, but 'In The Vein Of Trane', basically a simple F minor vamp, manages to reflect on Coltrane without slavishly copying him, and 'Pent-Up House' settles for the brazen confidence rather than the delivery of the young Sonny. Actually, Newsome takes his time in his improvising, building solos methodically, savouring his best phrases and going for tonal extremes only when he sees their logical point. A rich, dark tenor tone and a penchant for fitting in with the band rather than dominating them give this record much bonhomie as well as a lot of rigorous playing. Nelson is in his most attacking form, throwing off some dazzling solos in single lines rather than multiple-mallet chords, and the rhythm section is as impressive as always on Criss Cross dates.

By the time of the Steeplechase date, Newsome had decided to switch exclusively to soprano. He's recorded in a somewhat distant way on the session, and the music never quite takes a grip. The reaction of most will depend on how they respond to Kontomanou's singing, wordless but not resorting to scat, instead singing open-throated counterpoint to the leader's soprano-lines. It's a curious combination, although she appears on only three of the seven tracks. A long fantasy on 'All The Things You Are' is intermittently impressive, and the Japanese 'Lullaby Of Takeda' is attractive.

() Global Unity Palmetto PM-2074 Newsome; Jean Michel Pilc (p); Jeff Berman (vib); Matt Balitsaris (g, mand); Marvin Sewell (g); Meg Okura (vn); Ugonna Okegwo, Mel Baker (b); Adam Cruz, Gilad, Satoshi Takeishi (perc); Elisabeth Kontomanou (v). 1–3/01.

Newsome had a brief dalliance with Columbia and released a similar set there to this one. Global unity may be the concept, but it needs more than this mild-mannered blending of pancultural tropes and affectations. Newsome hits on some nice melodic hooks and textures but nothing here digs below any kind of surface. Kontomanou's wordless vocalizing (much in the manner of Pat Metheny's singers) is a primary ingredient, and while it all passes very pleasantly, it needs the titanic self-assurance of a Zawinul to make the concept stand up by itself.

 This Masquerade Steeplechase SCCD 31503 Newsome; Bruce Barth (p); Ugonna Okegwo (b); Gene Jackson (d). N.D.

Could be that this is a leftover from the previous Steeplechase session, since otherwise it looks like a retrenchment after the Palmetto album. The material is mostly straight from the jazz repertory – 'Pent-Up House', 'Footprints', 'Blue Monk' – with only a Japanese piece, 'Toryanse', hinting at the previous direction. There are unusual courses taken through some of the material, but so far Newsome hasn't really asserted an individualism on the soprano and it feels like good but unremarkable work.

 24/7 Satchmo 67 Newsome; Jerome Harris (g); Greg Lewis (b); Derek Phillips (d). 11/02.

This is Sam's Groove Project, and the record kicks off with a bright, clever tribute (challenge?) to Eminem. The personnel is quite stripped down, as if Newsome wants this new funky style to be delivered with the straightforwardness and lack of clutter you'd associate with a bop date. Harris's guitar is inevitably an important element, but the whole group knits tightly on an all-original programme that sounds well played-in.

(*) Monk Abstractions Sam Newsome 6589 Newsome (ss solo). 6/06.

A fascinating project. Ten Monk themes, interspersed with some very short 'abstractions' of Newsome's, which obviously attempt to extract some common essence from the work. The obvious – too obvious – comparison is Steve Lacy, but Newsome plays as if Steve's meditations simply didn't exist. He keeps the bluesy quality of the originals intact but tinkers with the form, which is an interesting alternative approach. Some quibbles with the sound, but mostly it's good and certainly sustains attention.

Tommy Newsom (1929–2007)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Arranger and big-band sideman of long standing, Newsom spent many years in the Tonight Show band, and these albums are a belated coming-out for him.

 The Feeling Of Jazz Arbors ARCD 19195 Newsom; Ken Peplowski (ts); Ben Aronov (p); Mike Peters (g); Greg Cohen (b); Chuck Redd (d). 11/97.

 Friendly Fire Arbors ARCD 19251 Newsom; Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); John F. Hammond (p); Bob Bain (g); Jim Hughart (b); Dave Hunt (d). 10/00.

(*) And His Octo-Pussycats Arbors ARCD 19238 Newsom; Warren Vaché (c); Wayne Andre (tb); Karolina Strassmayer (as); Derek Smith (p); Noriko Ueda (b); Sherrie Maricle (d). 05.

Newsom's style is all affable, amiable rambling, exactly the persona Tommy affected as Doc Severinsen's straight man on The Tonight Show. It works well enough on The Feeling Of Jazz because Peplowski is on hand to provide some real energy and the two tenors growl their way through an interesting programme, somewhat in the manner of a decent Zoot 'n' Al date. But Friendly Fire is very slack. Enevoldsen sounds past his best – what a pity this fine musician was never much use in the limelight – and while the music isn't exactly bad, it's awfully tame.

The Octo-Pussycats – an equal-opportunity outfit – is a distinct improvement. The nine themes are mostly arrangements of fairly well-known material, including 'Upper Manhattan Medical Group', Delibes's 'Maids Of Cadiz', 'Speak Low' and 'In A Mellotone', but the opening 'Titter Pipes' suggests that Tommy has some compositional tricks up his sleeve. It's all gently swinging and at times very laid-back jazz, but the charts are subtle and appealing.

David Newton (born 1958)

PIANO

Born in Glasgow, Newton worked on the Edinburgh scene before a move to London helped establish him as one of the leading younger British pianists, much in demand as accompanist and sideman.

 Eyewitness Linn AKD 015 Newton; Dave Green (p); Allan Ganley (d). 2/90.

(*) Victim Of Circumstance Linn AKD 013 As above, except add Alec Dankworth (b); Clark Tracey (d). 1 & 5/90.

Like the young Americans of the same generation – from Geri Allen to Cyrus Chestnut – Newton served his apprenticeship as accompanist and musical director to a singer, in David's case stablemate Carol Kidd. His technique is briskly correct, sometimes a little too formal and orderly, though the rhythm section is so full-on that he's never allowed to sound stuffy. Newton worked with Dankworth and Ganley on a Buddy DeFranco record, and one can't quite escape the sensation that Victim Of Circumstance is a superior play-along disc, with a horn-line constantly implicit. It certainly needs something. Hard to put air between them, but Eyewitness is perhaps more straightforwardly swinging. Green and Ganley only appear once on the second disc, and their absence is duly noted. Victim is one false climax after another, and only the unaccompanied 'It Never Entered My Mind' really stirs the blood.

(*) In Good Company Candid CCD 79714 Newton; Dave Green (b); Allan Ganley (d). 9/94.

It was thought when Newton switched to Candid that he might go for broke and record with an American trio. No problems whatsoever with the line-up on this, as we've said before, but it does seem time to kick over the traces and take some chances on a wider stage. With almost any transatlantic pairing – and it would be invidious to throw names about – this would be a more compelling record. As played, it's chunky, cable-knit jazz which trades funk and attitude for a smooth sophistication that shortens its shelf-life considerably.

* Twelfth Of The Twelfth: A Jazz Portrait Of Frank Sinatra Candid CCD 79728 Newton (p solo). 8/95.

The key track here is 'All The Way', just over halfway through the set. Newton reworks the tune and invests it with a sardonic quality that was never detectable in the original but which makes perfect sense, whether one takes the original as a jumping-off point or a sacred text. The pianist's long meditation on the Sinatra voice and legend, the title-track, is the most substantial single track. Everything else is at song length and absolutely faithful to the great man's own conception. It's easy to pick holes in this. Sinatra's own light legato and almost conversational phrasing are extraordinarily difficult to duplicate instrumentally, but it's hard to imagine them done better. Some will wish the choice of tracks were different – 'This Love Of Mine' in for 'It's Nice To Go Trav'lling', 'Fly Me To The Moon' instead of 'This Is All I Ask' – except that one suspects Newton might well return to the territory, now that Sinatra is no longer around.

 Pacific Heights Bright New Day BNDCD0031 Newton; Dave Chamberlain (b); Colin Oxley (d). 03.

The launch disc on a new jazz imprint, which is always good to see: a brightly professional trio which doesn't seem to have enough character to match the leader's but which delivers him robust support.

(*) Inspired Bright New Day BNDCD032 Newton; Matt Miles (b); Steve Brown (d). 04.

A new trio and a richly romantic sound. 'Isfahan' is magnificent, even if you think that no one who can play in tune could destroy it. Newton's note-choices are always intriguing and the bassist is an excellent accompanist who finds ideas of interest in every tune. Newton even manages to find some new things to say on 'Alone Together'. Another successful outing, but perhaps a whisker short of inspired.

 Portrait Of A Woman Bright New Day BNDCD035 Newton; Jim Mullen (g); Andy Cleyndert (b); Steve Brown (d); orchestra. 06.

Newton's richly romantic voicings work fine in a more elaborate context like this, but the record as a whole doesn't have much presence, despite some sterling contributions from Mullen and Cleyndert.

Also, in brief:

(*) Return Journey Linn AKD 025. 2/92.

He's too self-dramatizing for some tastes and an all-original solo set was daring at this stage.

 Meets Brian Lemon To Play Hoagy Zephyr 20. 96.

The difficulty of this two-piano set was always going to be balancing the familiar and obvious ('Skylark', 'Stardust') with some more challenging themes. They pull it off magnificently with 'Two Sleepy People'.

(*) DNA Candid CCD 79742. 11/96.
The first time on record with a horn-led quartet – and, by and large, a success. Iain Dixon (ts) is a seasoned player, somewhat anonymous and obvious in his range of ideas, but capable of giving even a relatively uncomplicated theme a mature lift and presence.

(*) Bootleg Eric ASC ASCCD23. 02.
Credited to Newton and Clarke Tracey (d), this seems to fall somewhere between the two of them.

Frankie Newton (1906–54)

TRUMPET

Played in several New York bands in the early-to-middle '30s and recorded on his own account, but he never made much of his career and faded away after 1940.

(*) Frankie Newton 1937–1939 Classics 643 Newton; Cecil Scott (cl, ts); Edmond Hall (cl, bs); Mezz Mezzrow (cl); Pete Brown, Russell Procope, Tab Smith, Stanley Payne, Gene Johnson (as); Kenneth Hollon (ts); Don Frye, James P. Johnson, Kenny Kersey, Albert Ammons, Meade Lux Lewis (p); Frank Rice, Al Casey, Ulysses Livingston, Teddy Bunn (g); Richard Fulbright, John Kirby, Johnny Williams (b); Cozy Cole, O'Neil Spencer, Eddie Dougherty, Big Sid Catlett (d); Clarence Palmer, Slim Gaillard, Leon LaFell (v). 3/37–8/39.
Newton was an intriguing, unguessable player whose small number of recordings represents the rare strain of swing-era small groups at their most interesting. In some ways he was an old-fashioned hot player, using a terminal vibrato borrowed directly from Armstrong and turning in oblique, poetic solos on otherwise slight material. He worked extensively at New York's Onyx Club in the late '30s, when these tracks were made. 'Who's Sorry Now' features a Newton solo which summarizes his style: the quirky lyricism and sudden bursts of heat make him exhilaratingly hard to predict. But it's his four choruses on 'The Blues My Baby Gave To Me' which are close to perfection, beautifully controlled and achingly lyrical reflections on the blues. There are other good solos from Brown and Hall scattered through these sides; Johnson is in fine form on the 1939 Bluebird session, and there are one or two strikingly unusual tunes, including 'Vamp' and the odd 'Parallel Fifths' from the final (1939) date.

James Newton (born 1953)

FLUTE

Raised in California, Newton studied with Buddy Collette and dabbled in both funk and the avant-garde before devoting himself exclusively to flute. He characteristically projects a strong, very exact classical line, but he modifies it with various extended techniques, including multiphonics, flutter tonguing and toneless blowing.

* Axum ECM 835019-2 Newton (f solo). 81.
 Echo Canyon Celestial Harmonies 13102 Newton (f solo). 9/84.
One of the first contemporary players to foster a direct Eric Dolphy influence, Newton started out as a multi-instrumentalist but gave up alto saxophone and bass clarinet towards the end of the '70s. As a virtuoso flautist, he has worked in both formal and improvised contexts and has developed a wholly original means of vocalizing while he plays. This is by no means new (Roland Kirk was exceptionally proficient at it), but Newton has taken the technique far beyond unisons and harmonies to a point where he can sing contrapuntally against his own flute line. The results are frequently dazzling, as on the African-influenced Axum. Newton's vocalizations allow his pieces to develop with unprecedented depth, and his tone is quite remarkable. Echo Canyon sounds more classically inspired and there are a few places where Newton appears ready to drop into a concert hall manner and deliver subtle but unfunky tone poems. More often than not, though, he reverses and manages to create something deceptively raw and blues-soaked out of the most formal of materials.

The New York Hard Bop Quintet

GROUP

Founded in 1990 as a quartet, the NYHBQ recruited saxophonist Eddie Weldon and replaced founding drummer Eddie Ornowski with Mickey Roker and later Clifford Barbaro. Unashamed revivalists, they play '50s Blue Note bop with a few modern flourishes.

 The Clincher TCB 95202 Joe Magnarelli (t); Jerry Weldon (ts); Keith Saunders (p); Bim Strasberg (b); Eddie Ornowski (d). 94.
 Rokermotion TCB 96352 As above, except omit Ornowski; add Mickey Roker (d). 96.
(*) Whisper Away TCB 98702 As above, except omit Roker; add Clifford Barbaro (d). 99.
 A Mere Bag of Shells TCB 20702 As above. 01.
Lee Morgan didn't die in vain! Or at least, not as long as the N.Y. Hardbop Quintet are around to carry the torch. To their credit, they've not been content to rehash old standards and bop warhorses but have built up their own repertoire of originals, leavened with just a couple of familiar cuts per album. The problem is that the musicianship is thoroughly derivative and unless one is particularly keen on apostolic re-creations of Morgan, early Trane and Horace Silver, there isn't much on offer here.

The earliest and most recent of the albums are probably the best of the bunch. The Clincher reflects a band already well played-in. Saunders is the dominant writer this time, with three carefully crafted tunes, of which the opening 'New Jazz World Order' is the best. Weldon shines on his own 'Leroy Street', sounding a little like Stanley Turrentine, and Magnarelli does his bit on 'Poor Little Birdie'.

The recruitment of Mickey Roker was a shrewd move. He brings a graceful authority to the second album and shows his moves to good effect on the waltz-time 'The Hip Naz' (written by Magnarelli) and an imaginatively reworked 'East Of The Sun, West Of The Moon'. Some of the originals this time are not much more than contrefacts on familiar tunes, but that never held back the first-generation boppers and the musical thinking is always intelligent.

Whisper Away is a disappointment; no less confident and accomplished than its predecessors, it lacks their drive and presence. The saving grace is a sense of humour – these guys know they're not the Messengers – which comes through again on A Mere Bag Of Shells, which was originally intended as a tribute to the Jackie Gleason television show The Honeymooners, a concept that perhaps mercifully survives only in the album title. New drummer Barbaro has his feet well under the table and swings righteously throughout. Bud Powell's 'Time Waits' is an interesting inclusion, again deftly reworked. It seems a bit sad that a band so American in philosophy should be dependent on a Swiss label, but hard bop is probably hipper in Zurich than in the Big Apple these days, and these guys keep time like watchmakers, with the occasional daft cuckoo just to remind us it's not meant to be high art.

Albert Nicholas (1900–73)

CLARINET

Bandleading in New Orleans in the early '20s, he then played with King Oliver before going to the Far East; returned to work in the Luis Russell band. Spent the '30s in New York, then re-emerged as a revivalist in the '40s. Moved to France in 1953, an honoured and much-travelled elder statesman.

 Live In Copenhagen Storyville STCD 5522 Nicholas; Dutch Swing College Band. 9/54.

(*) The New Orleans–Chicago Connection Delmark DE 207 Nicholas; Art Hodes (p); Earl Murphy (b); Fred Kohlman (d). 7/59.

 Albert's Back In Town Delmark DE-209 Nicholas; Nappy Trottier (c); Floyd O'Brien (tb); Art Hodes (p); Marty Grosz (g); Mike Walbridge (tba); Fred Kohlman (d). 7/59.

One of the least exposed of the New Orleans clarinet masters on record, and Nicholas's surviving discs are mostly delightful. For a man who played with King Oliver and Jelly Roll Morton, he seemed quite at ease in the company of musicians generations younger than himself. Art Hodes at least was a contemporary, and their Delmark album is a spirited ramble through some of the old tunes, Hodes's Chicagoan blues meshing easily with Nick's pithy solos. He has an odd way of mixing a circumspect, behind-the-hand manner with a piercing attack: a diffident statement of the melody may suddenly blossom on a sudden high note with a fast vibrato, before the line drops back into the depths of his horn. 'He could always get you with that tone,' Barney Bigard remembered, and something of the young Bechet survives in Nicholas's most sprightly playing. The original Delmark album has been fleshed out with a stack of alternative takes, none of them especially meaningful, but the body of the music is fine. Albert's Back In Town was recorded around the same time with a larger group. More prosaic, less personal, but still plenty to enjoy, with Nicholas and Hodes again getting in some good moments for themselves.

The earlier date with the Dutch Swing Collegians came just after Nicholas's removal to Europe, and there's an air of relaxation and contentment about it which is impossible to dislike. The sound isn't wonderful and the band tends to blur into mush, but Albert's playing is out front and clear.

Also, in brief:

 New Orleans Clarinet ASV Living Era 5586. 25–54.
A good sampling of the earlier years; probably contains all a casual visitor might want.

 Classic Jazz At Saint-Germain-Des-Prés Verve 13045. 54, 1/55.
Again, from the beginning of the exile years, when Nicholas was becoming an international star. With Jimmy Archey (tb).

 Albert Nicholas With Alan Elsdon's Band Vols. One & Two Jazzology JCD-259 / 269. 2/67.
Nicholas had fun with the Elsdon band and these souvenirs of a gig in Manchester stand up respectably.

(*) Baden 1969 Sackville SKCD2-2045. 9/69.
He thrived in Europe and this set with Henri Chaix (p) and rhythm is well up to snuff.

Wooden Joe Nicholas (1883–1957)

TRUMPET, CLARINET

Albert Nicholas's uncle played with King Oliver in 1915 and modelled his style on Bolden, but missed out on recording in the golden age and left only a few documents during the '40s revival.

 Wooden Joe Nicholas American Music AMCD-5 Nicholas; Jim Robinson, Louis Nelson, Joe Petit (tb); Albert Burbank (cl); Johnny St Cyr (g); Lawrence Marrero (bj); Austin Young, Alcide 'Slow Drag' Pavageau (b); Josiah Frazier, Baby Dodds, Albert Jiles (d); Ann Cook (v). 5/45–7/49.

A legend calls down the years. Wooden Joe's main idol was Buddy Bolden, and hearing him play may offer us the best idea of what Bolden himself might have sounded like. Nicholas blew a very powerful open horn, and was famous for dominating a dance hall sound. These were his only recordings, and they are clustered together from a session at the Artesian Hall and two later dates. A lot of New Orleans history is tied up here: the fearsome blues singer Ann Cook is on one track, the legendary trombonist Joe Petit on another. Nicholas and Burbank are the main voices on all the tracks (Wooden Joe also played clarinet, and does so on two numbers): compared with the clarinettist's weaving lines, Nicholas is reserved in his phrasing and takes only a few breaks and solos. But much of his power and stately delivery was intact.

Herbie Nichols (1919–63)

PIANO

Worked largely in swing, mainstream and R&B settings from the late '40s, mostly for other leaders; but his few own-name recordings show an original mind playing very different music. Succumbed to leukaemia.

* The Complete Blue Note Recordings Blue Note 8 59355 2 3CD Nichols; Teddy Kotick, Al McKibbon (b); Art Blakey, Max Roach (d). 5/55–4/56.

* The Complete Studio Master Takes Lone Hill Jazz LHJR 10188 2CD As above, except add Danny Barker (g); George Duvivier, Chocolate Williams (b); Dannie Richmond, Shadow Wilson (d). 3/52–11/57.

'There is a kind of culpability in the discovery of dead artists', and in Herbie Nichols there is an almost perfect example of an artist who was largely ignored during his lifetime, only to be canonized as soon as he was gone. When Nichols died, he had been working professionally for a quarter of a century, ever since joining the Royal Baron Orchestra in 1937. Yet in all those 26 years, by A. B. Spellman's reckoning, there was not one during which he was able to earn a living making the music he loved.

Nichols scuffled as a recording artist, doing R&B sides here and there, even accompanying lesbian shows, until Alfred Lion of Blue Note decided to sign him up. Two 10-inch LPs were issued from the May 1955 sessions, both called The Prophetic Herbie Nichols. How forward-looking he was as a composer may be judged by his use in 'The Third World', the opening item on The Complete, of a chord progression that would still sound radical when John Coltrane experimented with it more than a decade later (nearer two decades from the date of composition, since it seems to have been written as early as 1947). Typically, Lion gave him generous rehearsal time, and neither McKibbon nor Blakey sounds as though he is running down unfamiliar material. The playing is crisp and buoyant, and even alternative takes are worth hearing.

Nichols and McKibbon reconvened in August 1955 with Max Roach at the kit, and they recorded his best-known composition, 'Lady Sings The Blues', as well as the joyous 'The Gig'; but it is tunes like '23 Skiddoo' and 'Shuffle Montgomery' from the earlier sessions which have restored him to favour, largely through the advocacy of younger present-day players for whom he's a distinguished forerunner.

The Blue Note set is perhaps his best testament, but the Lone Hill has some advantages, including Nichols's work for Bethlehem (Love, Gloom, Cash, Love) and an early (March 1952) session with Barker, Williams and Wilson, which will be new to most and a delight to Nichols fans.

Keith Nichols (born 1945)

PIANO, VOICE

Born in Ilford. He has a versatile background in acting and entertaining, but is primarily a practising scholar of ragtime and early jazz repertory.

 I Like To Do Things For You Stomp Off CD1242 Nichols; Guy Barker (c); Gordon Blundy (tb); Mac White (cl, bcl, ss, as); Randy Colville (cl, as, ts); Mike Piggott (vn); Mike French (p); Martin Wheatley (g, bj); Graham Read (bsx, tba, sou, b); Barry Tyler (d); Janice Day, Johnny M, The Happidrome Trio (v). 6–7/91.

* Henderson Stomp Stomp Off CD 1275 Nichols; René Hagmann (c, tb); Bent Persson, Guy Barker, Mike Henry, Rolf Koschorrok (t); Alistair Allan (tb); Claus Jacobi (ss, as, bsx, cl); Nicholas Payton (as, cl); Michel Bard (ts, cl); Martin Wheatley (bj); Graham Read (sou); Richard Pite (d). 11/93.

Nichols is a British specialist in American repertory: ragtime, hot dance music, New York jazz of the '20s, Blake, Morton, Berlin, whatever. His piano-playing and Hoagy Carmichael-like singing are less important than the mastery of old form that he successfully displays on these records. I Like To Do Things For You is more of a chamber-jazz session: the instrumentation varies, but the largest group has eight players, while 'I'm Nobody's Baby' cuts the cast to three. Familiarity with any Nichols–Mole session or even the Bix and Trumbauer dates will give the idea. Janice Day's rather plummy contralto is much featured and may be an acquired taste. There are plenty of tunes among the 20 tracks that have probably been unrecorded since the '20s, and the irony of having a brilliant modernist like Barker on hand goes almost unnoticed (he is at least as good as Wynton Marsalis at this kind of thing).

Henderson Stomp, though, is surely his finest hour to this point and one of the most convincing pieces of authentic-performance jazz ever set down. Twenty-two of Fletcher Henderson's most effective pieces – from several hands, though many of Don Redman's somewhat familiar charts are bypassed in favour of other arrangements – are re-created by a picked team of some of the most talented repertory players and revivalists in Europe: the brass team alone is gold-plated, with the amazingly versatile Persson and Barker set alongside the brilliant Hagmann. The reed section seems totally schooled in the appropriate section sound of the period, and each of the tunes emerges with the kind of rocking swing that is properly flavoursome of the era. With such a strong team of soloists, the various breaks and carefully fashioned improvisations have the nous needed to transcend any scripted mustiness.

* Harlem's Arabian Nights Stomp Off CD1320 As above, except omit Barker, Payton, Bard; add Bob Hunt (tb); Matthias Seuffert (cl, as, ts); Janice Day (v). 9–10/96.

Outrageously good. This is the result of Nichols doing some digging for early manuscripts in the Library Of Congress – rarities by Ellington, James P. Johnson, Waller and others. So here are 'Yam Brown' and 'Rub A Dub-Lues' (Ellington), 'Mistuh Jim' and 'She's The Hottest Gal In Tennessee' (Johnson), 'Say It With Your Feet' (Waller) and 18 others, knocked out with stunning panache by Nichols's Cotton Club Orchestra, the finest assemblage of repertory players he could muster. As with the Henderson collection, they make it new by playing it old, and though some of the phrasing may suggest a vaudevillian bent, we prefer to hear it as old-fashioned virtuosity put to very specific ends. Dave Bennett once again gets an ideal sound in the 'ballroom' ambience of Pizza Express, Maidstone.

(*) Kansas City Breakdown Stomp Off CD 1387 Nichols; Bent Persson, Enrico Tommaso, Mike Daniels (t); René Hagmann (tb); Claus Jacobi, Matthias Seuffert (cl, ss, as, ts); James Evans (cl, ss, as, bs); Martin Wheatley (bj, g); Malcolm Sked (sou); Richard Pite (d). 12/02.

The subject this time is the music of Bennie Moten. Good as it is, as a piece of repertory we enjoyed Nichols's earlier adventures in this idiom slightly more: the material is variable, and the more studiofied sound somehow loses an ounce of the liveliness of the earlier discs. No arguments about the calibre of the playing, though.

 A Tribute To Paul Whiteman Lake LACD245 Nichols; Jazz Artists (many as above); Northern Sinfonia. 06.

No name's more divisive in jazz, but Nichols gives this live re-creation of symphonic jazz an invigorating topping of hot solos and feature spots. 'Riverboat Shuffle', 'Changes' and 'Oodles Of Noodles' are among the things covered. Recorded live at the Sage in Gateshead; the sound's a bit cavernous.

Also, in brief:

 Syncopated Jamboree Stomp Off CD 1234. 9/91.

A stack of scholarly obscurities, expertly reworked by a big band.

 Rhythm Of The Day PEK Sound PKCD-166. 5/01.

A live Blue Four set from the Keswick Festival. Home-made sound and bargain-basement presentation, but very likeable.

 Collegiate Rhythm PEK Sound PKCD-170. 04.

The Collegians, live at Bude.

Red Nichols (1905–65)

CORNET, TRUMPET

Born in Utah, Ernest Loring Nichols played in his father's brass band as a boy. A tireless session-man, and his 'Five Pennies' dates resulted in scores of titles. After a spell out of music, he returned with a small group in 1945; a biopic revived his career and he carried on until a heart attack in Las Vegas cut him down.

 Red Nichols On Edison 1924–27 Jazz Oracle BDW 8007 Nichols; Frank Cush, Leo McConville (t); Bill Trone (mel); Miff Mole, Tommy Dorsey (tb); Dick Johnson, Jimmy Dorsey, Arnold Brilhart, Phil Gleason, Fred Morrow (cl, as); Paul Cartwright (cl, ss, ts); Alfie Evans (as); Freddy Cusick (cl, ts); Jack Pettis (Cmel); Irving Brodsky, Arthur Schutt (p); Dick McDonough (g, bj); Tommy Felline (bj); Joe Tarto, Jack Hansen (bbs); Adrian Rollini (bsx); Stan King, Vic Berton (d). 11/24–2/27.

(*) Red Nichols & Miff Mole 1925–1927 Retrieval RTR 79010 Nichols; Miff Mole (tb); Dick Johnson (cl, as); Jimmy Lytell, Alfie Evans, Jimmy Dorsey, Pee Wee Russell (cl); Rube Bloom, Frank Signorelli, Arthur Schutt (p); Tony Colucci (bj); Joe Tarto (tba); Vic Berton, Ray Bauduc (d); Irving Kaufman (v). 11/25–9/27.

 Red Nichols 1925–1927 Classics 1212 Similar to above. 2/25–2/27.

(*) The Red Heads Complete 1925–1927 Classics 1267 Nichols; Brad Gowans, Wingy Manone; Leo McConville (t); Miff Mole (tb); Bobby Davis, Fred Morrow, Jimmy Dorsey (cl, as); Arthur Schutt, Bill Haid (p); Eddie Lang, Dick McDonough (g); Vic Berton (d). 11/25–9/27.

 Red Nichols 1927–1928 Classics 1241 Nichols; Leo McConville, Manny Klein, Bob Ashford (t); Miff Mole, Bill Rank (tb); Dudley Fosdick (mel); Jimmy Dorsey (cl, as); Pee Wee Russell, Fud Livingston (cl, ts); Mx Farley (as); Frankie Trumbauer (Cmel); Adrian Rollini (bsx, gfs); Arthur Schutt, Lennie Hayton (p, cel); Joe Venuti (vn); Eddie Lang, Dick McDonough (g); Joe Tarto, Jack Hanson (tba); Vic Berton, Chauncey Morehouse (d); Jim Miller, Charlie Farrell, Irving Kaufman (v). 3/27-2/28.

 Red Nichols 1928–1929 Classics 1270 As above, except omit Ashford, Rank, Russell, Hayton, Venuti, McDonough, Tarto, Hanson, Miller, Farrell, Kaufman; add Benny Goodman (cl, as); Murray Kellner (vn); Carl Kress (g); Art Miller (b); Harold Lambert (v). 3/28–2/29.

 Red Nichols 1929 Classics 1332 Nichols; Manny Klein, Leo McConville, Tommy Thunen, John Egan (t); Jack Teagarden (tb, v); Miff Mole, Glenn Miller, Herb Taylor (tb); Dudley Fosdick (mel); Fud Livingston, Pee Wee Russell (cl); Alfie Evans, Pete Pumiglio, Jimmy Dorsey (cl, as); Jimmy Crossan (cl, ts, bsn, ob, f); Arnold Brilhart (cl, as, f, bsn, ob); Benny Goodman (cl, as, bs); Larry Binyon (ts, f, ob); Babe Russin (ts); Adrian Rollini (bsx, gfs); Arthur Schutt, Joe Sullivan, Irving Brodsky (p); Murray Kellner, Joe Raymond, Lou Raderman, Henry Whiteman, Maurice Goffin (vn); Lucien Schmidt (clo); Carl Kress (g); Tommy Felline (bj); Joe Tarto (tba); Art Miller, Jack Hansen (b); Vic Berton, George Beebe, Chick Condon (d). Harold Lambert, Red McKenzie, Dick Robertson (v). 2-9/29.

 Red Nichols 1929–1930 Classics 1369 Similar to above. 9/29–8/30.

Nichols's precise, lightly dancing work on either cornet or trumpet might seem to glance off the best of Beiderbecke's playing, and the scrupulous ensembles and pallid timbre of the Five Pennies or whatever he chose to call a group on its day in the studios now seem less appealing. But it is unique jazz and, in its truce between cool expression and hot dance music, surprisingly enjoyable when taken a few tracks at a time.

The Retrieval disc brings together 23 titles by The (Six) Hottentots, The Original Memphis Five and The Arkansas Travelers, all basically co-led by Nichols and Mole and certainly dominated by their playing. The OM5 session is a cracker and, while some of the other titles are more like hot dance music (and the Travelers sessions are acoustic recordings, and less imposing), the playing has something to take the ear on every track. Top-notch transfers as always from this label.

Classics have entered the fray with their own Nichols edition. Classics 1212 starts with three sessions for Sam Lanin at Columbia, then goes to Vocalion for dates by The Hottentots and to Edison for a couple of Red And Miff's Stompers sessions, and finishes with the first three 'official' dates from Brunswick by The Five Pennies. So there is some duplication with several of the CDs here, though if you're a Classics collector you'll more than likely be satisfied with this as a choice: it imposes reasonable order on the slightly chaotic profligacy of Nichols's output, at least.

The Red Heads will make a strong appeal to specialists. This collects all of Nichols's sessions under this name for Pathé, and on titles such as 'Get A Load Of This', 'Plenty Off Center' and 'Trumpet Sobs' the line-up is down to three or four players – chamber-jazz of an unusually sparse sort, giving the young leader clear space to lead and improvise in. Pathé's thin recording wasn't helpful, but the music – lean, dancing and strikingly different from what was going on under either Armstrong or Beiderbecke in a similar period – exerts its own pale fascination. It's also as well to remember that, when he made the earliest sides here, Nichols still hadn't even turned 21.

The Jazz Oracle disc collects some of the many sides Nichols cut for Edison: longer than the average 78, there are multiple takes of various sides from the Red And Miff's Stompers date of 1927, which forms the heart of the CD. Trim, elegant playing by Mole and Nichols, but Edison's comparatively thin sound isn't as good as the Brunswick sides, and there are more conventional hot dance numbers by Don Voorhees, the Golden Gate Orchestra and the Charleston Seven (on which Red's presence is anyway in doubt). A welcome set of some rare records, though.

Five further Classics discs take the story up to 1930. He was leaving the '20s with his best work already behind him, even though he wasn't yet 25 years old, and these sessions, studded with several future stars, are a little poignant because of that. The tracks on Classics 1241 and 1270 are still tilted towards jazz, especially the earliest sides: yet by the 1929 sessions the music has come to sound much more like dance music, with a string section coming in. Even so, Nichols still sounds good when he emerges from what were decent dance band arrangements for a group larger than the early Pennies, and there isn't a track which can't boast a few good bars from somebody.

 Red Nichols And His Orchestra 1936 Circle CCD-110 Nichols; rest unknown. 11/36.

 Wail Of The Winds Hep CD 1057 Nichols; Don Stevens, J. Douglas Wood, Hilton Brockman (t); Martin Croy, Robert Gebhart, Slim Wilbur, Al Mastren, Jack Knaus (tb); Harry Yolonsky, Ray Schultz, Conn Humphreys (as); Bobby Jones, Billy Shepherd, Heinie Beau (cl, ts); Billy Maxted (p); Tony Colucci, Mike Bryan, Merrit Lamb (g); Jack Fay, Frank Ray (b); Harry Jaeger (d, v); Victor Engle (d); Marion Redding, Bill Darnell (v). 3/39–6/40.

The Circle CD offers some WBS transcriptions which are shared with a nondescript dance session by Will Bradley's orchestra. Not that Nichols's titles are much better: the music is so anonymous that this was long thought to be a session by the Ray Noble band. Red has a meagre number of solo spots, and the rest of the group are capable but unexceptional on routine arrangements. Hep's set plugs a big gap by bringing some of Red's big-band records onto CD for the first time. With all his experience behind him, Nichols was still only 33 when the first of these sessions was made. The band received good notices and was taking up a prestige engagement at New York's Famous Door, only to see the club abruptly close, whereupon Nichols broke up the band after losing some of his best men. These Victor sessions reveal a strong if not especially characterful outfit: Nichols and Jones take most of the solos, but at least the band gets the chance to dig into plenty of instrumental charts (mostly by Maxted), along with the expected vocal features. Excellent sound.

 Red Nichols And His Five Pennies /  Red Nichols Volume 2: Saints, Ramble And Sensation! Jazzology JCD-90/JCD-290 Nichols; Kingsley Jackson (tb); Reuel Lynch (cl); Joe Rushton (bsx); Bobby Hammack (p); Rollie Culver (d). 3–10/49.

None of Nichols's many records of Dixieland for Capitol have made it to CD so far. Jazzology's two sets of Lang–Worth transcriptions find Red and his team in good spirits, playing the kind of thing he did for the rest of his life. Those who see him as incontrovertibly wooden will be surprised to hear the soft-toned elegance of some of his playing, and though much of each disc is straight Dixieland, it is played with enough flexibility to give it freshness, and there's a nice chance to hear Joe Rushton's bass sax.

Maggie Nicols (born 1948)

VOICES

Born in Edinburgh, she worked as a dancer before turning to jazz and to free music. She sings with power and humour, fuelled by a shrewd feminism.

 Nicols'N'Nu Leo CD LR 127 Nicols; Peter Nu (p). 6/85.

Out of circulation for some time, this pairs Nicols's extraordinary voice, which seems capable of everything from pure abstraction and Schrei to the most delicate folk melody, with the little-known Nu's rich pianism. 'Kids' is one of the rawest and most open 'free music' performances you'll ever hear, breathtaking in its directness. There's nothing polished about the session, which sounds as if it happened pretty much as we're hearing it.

(*) Transitions Emanem 4068 Nicols; Caroline Kraabel (as); Charlotte Hug (vla). 6/01.

This trio first performed together as part of the Freedom Of The City festival. This reunion reflects the high level of creative empathy tapped on that occasion. Nicols is certainly the most powerful voice here, but she wears her seniority lightly and with the exception of the ferociously polemical anti-rape 'No Now' (a deeply uncomfortable listen) she is in remarkably lyrical form. The three long pieces, 'Lullaby For Clement', 'Hymn Indoors' and 'Coming Out', are the best of the set. Hug's viola is sometimes reduced to an accompanist's role on the first and last of them, but she finds a stance on the middle piece and is instrumental in turning it into a thing of real beauty. Kraabel has her own approach to the instrument. All in all, a remarkable record.

Lennie Niehaus (born 1929)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Best known now for his soundtrack work for Clint Eastwood. He studied music in California and had two stints with Stan Kenton before becoming a fixture on the West Coast cool scene. A nice conversational touch as a soloist.

(*) Zounds Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1892 Niehaus; Stu Williamson (t); Frank Rosolino (tb); Bob Enevoldsen (vtb); Vincent DeRosa (frhn); James McAllister (tba); Jack Montrose, Bill Perkins (ts); Pepper Adams, Bobby Gordon (bs); Lou Levy (p); Monty Budwig, Red Mitchell (b); Mel Lewis, Shelly Manne (d). 8/54, 12/56.

 Volume 3: The Octet # 2 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1767 Niehaus; Bill Holman (t); Stu Williamson (t, vtb); Bob Enevoldsen (tb); Jimmy Giuffre (reeds); Pete Jolly (p); Monty Budwig (b); Shelly Manne (d). 1–2/55.

 The Quintets & Strings Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1858 Niehaus; Stu Williamson (t); Bill Perkins (ts); Bobby Gordon (bs); Hampton Hawes (p); Monty Budwig (b); Shelly Manne (d); stg. 3–4/55.

 Volume 5: The Sextet Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1944 Niehaus; Stu Williamson (t, vtb); Bill Perkins(ts, f); Jimmy Giuffre(bs); Buddy Clark (b); Shelly Manne (d). 1/56.

The smooth West Coast veneer belies a substantial portfolio of imaginative compositions and standards arrangements. He worked with Kenton before and after a period in the services, and though much of his recorded work is in the rather anonymous context of Stan's reed sections, his own most distinctive work has tended to be for mid-size bands. The two contrasting octets on Zounds are both meticulously balanced, horns and woodwinds in opposition. Of the two groups, the December 1956 octet with Rosolino, Perkins and Adams is by far the more accomplished; its readings of Hampton Hawes's 'The Sermon', the first track on the disc, is also the most arresting, though a later reworking of Miles Davis's 'Four' by the same personnel is almost as good. The Octet is excellent, full of inventive and sophisticated arrangements that make up for a hint of blandness and propriety in the performances. Sadly, these fine sessions coincided with the beginning of a second stint with the Stan Kenton band. Niehaus also appears on a wilderness of Kenton albums (though there's little point looking for him there), after which he turned his music into a day job, writing and arranging for television and the movies. A loss and a lack. Only one of four quintet records is currently available, and it's not the best, though it is presumably the best-selling. It's almost entirely a standards session, and Perkins is again the star turn, though the West Coast rhythm section are hard to fault on any count. 'All The Things You Are' is a superb version and the brisk, breezy 'Star Eyes' would charm down the constellations. The Sextet is the latest arrival: it's smooth, it swings (Manne's the man to make sure of that) and it rarely stirs any embers, though Giuffre (on baritone here) is always worth his few featured bars and Williamson (these days, almost forgotten) is a pleasure to hear.

 Patterns Fresh Sound FSRCD 100 Niehaus; Bill Perkins (ts, bs, ss, bcl); Frank Strazzeri (p); Tom Warrington (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 8/89.

 Seems Like Old Times Fresh Sound FSR CD 5016 As above, except add Jack Nimitz (bs). 89.

The Fresh Sound albums help to fill out a skimpy list, and they underline how thoroughly the saxophonist enjoyed playing in later years, having spent much of his career either behind the scenes or in the anonymity of big-band woodwind sections. As ever, Perkins does the work of ten men on these, but the revelation is Warrington, a huge-voiced bass-player with an inexhaustible stock of ideas. The second album is weightier and more obviously arranged, with the three saxophones often functioning as a unit. Niehaus's compositions are quietly challenging, and on a piece like 'Yesterday's Gardenias' (which might contain a tiny Billie Holiday reference) he shows how well he can combine advanced harmonic ideas with straightforwardly beautiful melody.

 Live At Cappozzoli's Woofy 96 Niehaus; Bill Perkins (ts, bs); Frank Strazzeri (p); Tom Warrington (b); Paul Kreibich (d). 02.
A fine, uncomplicated cool date with some nice solos from the front line and relaxedly competent support from the back row. Mulligan's 'Limelight' is a highlight.

Also, in brief:

(*) Complete Fifties Recordings: Volumes 1–4 Lone Hill Jazz LHJR 10238–10241. 54–56.
All the quintet, sextet and octet material, which obviously duplicates much of what's above.

Lucas Niggli (born 1968)

PERCUSSION

The Swiss drummer and percussionist has made an impact with his Zoom trio and Big Zoom quintet.

(*) Spawn Of Speed / * Rough Ride Intakt CD 067 / 082 Niggli; Nils Wogrom (tb); PhilippSchaufelberger (g). 12/00, 3–8/02.
 Big Ball Intakt CD 083 As above; except add Claudio Pontin (cl); Peter Herbert (b). 3–9/02.
(*) Sweat Intakt 093 As above, except add Claudio Puntin (cl), Phil Minton (v), Ensemble Neue Musik Zurich. 04.
The first of these now feels like a false start, though there are interesting aspects to it. The others are both taken from festival gigs and reflect the quiet excitement Niggli generates when he appears with these intriguingly configured groups. The trio version of Zoom is probably the clearest representation of the drummer's own work. He develops or picks up on what sound like melodic lines, spins them into a rhythmic figure and then makes them into the architecture of a piece that didn't exist before that stray phrase drifted across the stage, from either guitar, trombone or part of his own kit. It's harder to hear on the quintet recording, partly because the language of this group does seem closer to a horns-and-rhythm jazz combo. That's not to denigrate the music, which is intense and free-flowing. Spawn Of Speed may be interesting to revisit once one has absorbed the two later records; on its own, it still seems drab and unshaped. Sweat is clearly a more ambitious project than anything previously, but there's an anarchic quality to it. Minton is, of course, exceptional, especially on the 'anti-anthem' at the beginning which is intended as an unmarchable counterblast to nationalism. There are odd mismatches between the Ensemble and the improvising players but by and large they get along fine.

* Celebrate Diversity Intakt CD 118 As above, except omit Minton, Ensemble. 11/05.
(*) Crash Cruise Intakt CD 130 As for Spawn Of Speed/Rough Ride, except add Beat Hofstetter (ss, ts); Sascha Armbruster (ss, as, ts); Andrea Formenti (ss, ts); Beat Kappeler (ss, bs).

The first of these now feels like a false start, though there are interesting aspects to it. The others are both taken from festival gigs and reflect the quiet excitement Niggli generates when he appears with these intriguingly configured groups. The trio version of Zoom is probably the clearest representation of the drummer's own work. He develops or picks up on what sound like melodic lines, spins them into a rhythmic figure and then makes them into the architecture of a piece that didn't exist before that stray phrase drifted across the stage, from either guitar, trombone or part of his own kit. It's harder to hear on the quintet recording, partly because the language of this group does seem closer to a horns-and-rhythm jazz combo. That's not to denigrate the music, which is intense and free-flowing. Spawn Of Speed may be interesting to revisit once one has absorbed the two later records; on its own, it still seems drab and unshaped. Sweat is clearly a more ambitious project than anything previously, but there's an anarchic quality to it. Minton is, of course, exceptional, especially on the 'anti-anthem' at the beginning, which is intended as an unmarchable counterblast to nationalism. There are odd mismatches between the Ensemble and the improvising players, but by and large they get along fine.

Celebrate Diversity is a wild, unpredictable musical ride, full of unexpected rearings, great whinnies from the horns and sudden jumps. Even though studio-recorded, it has the immediacy and the edginess of a concert date. The members of the Arte Quartett add a great richness of sound to Crash Cruise and there is no mistaking the flexibility of sound they offer; but it does feel as if the guests overpower the original trio at moments, replacing the familiar zoom with a pointless revving that goes nowhere. That's a quibble. It's a fine record, if not up to the glories of Celebrate Diversity.

Paal Nilssen-Love (born 1974)

DRUMS

Norwegian drummer/percussionist whose powerful work has become a lynchpin for several leading groups in the contemporary European free scene

 Sticks And Stones SOFA 505 Nilssen-Love (d solo). 2/01.
* I Love It When You Snore Smalltown Supersound STS 063 Nilssen-Love; Mats Gustafsson (bs). 11/01.
The solo record gives a good representative picture of this formidable drummer's skills. Recorded in a church acoustic and working from three different set-ups, his breathtaking dexterity – not fully appreciated unless you can see him in live performance, where he seems to get around a kit with effortless velocity – is captured in isolation. Like all solo drum records, though, it hardly demands the attention of a wide audience, and even Nilssen-Love can't escape a sense of ennui some of the time.

The duet with Gustafsson is devastating. Crucially, the two are recorded in a dry, intense close-up which has an almost shocking impact. As a dialogue, they get a maximal effect out of the precise technique each man favours, and it really does feel like a welding of hands and minds. Seven pieces explode off the record and the whole thing is done and dusted inside 35 minutes, a virtually perfect piece of documentation which works superbly as a record.

 Townorchestralove Clean Feed CF041 Nilssen-Love; Evan Parker (ts); Sten Sandell (p); Ingebrigt Håker Flaten (b). 02.
This is the 'classic Coltrane quartet' instrumentation, and every one of these players knows it. Thirty-five years beyond Coltrane's death, they push the language on a further step. It's impressive, but also possibly futile, since transcendence is a once-and-for-all thing and this group seems fated to repeat discoveries that sound almost geological rather than historical. Parker's language is intact and Sandell has cornered a market in post-Tyner harmonics, which is potentially even more interesting. Taken all in all, it's impressive but in the narrowest way.

(*) Twenty-Seven Years Later Utech 024 Nilssen-Love (d solo). 7/02.
(*) AM/FM Utech 023 Nilssen-Love; Anders Hana (g). 8/04.
His second solo record (from the 2002 Molde Festival) is recorded with a much tighter, more immediate mix, and it brings out his awesome technique with pitiless clarity. This is one of those rare solo-drum records which asks for repeat listens: minute by minute it's enthralling, and even over a long haul the skill and inventiveness of Paal is thoroughly absorbing.

The duets with Hana set up another memorable blowout. The guitarist favours a thick and clotted sound that tends to pulverize the bottom frequencies into a muddy mess. But the drummer's tireless playing sustains the record: only Paul Lovens can match him when it comes to playing with such lightning variation, and with such power, at such length.

Vincent Nilsson

TROMBONE

Superb technician, especially adept with mutes, who also shows considerable imagination.

(*) Jazz Trombone Spirituals Storyville STCD 1014240 Nilsson; Jan Lundgren (p); Bo Stief, Mads Vinding (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 11/00.
 More Spirituals! Storyville STCD 4258 Nilsson; Horace Parlan (p); John Sund (g); Bo Stief (b); Eliel Lazo, Ayi Solomon (perc, v); Emmanuel Amadasun (v). 05.
Every track credit carries the simple word 'Traditional'. This set is exactly as described, except that the music is never predictable and far from traditional in approach. 'When The Saints Go Marching In' is taken at snail's pace, giving the most celebrated of all early jazz themes a thoroughly unexpected quality. 'Go Down, Moses', 'Were You There When My Lord Was Crucified?' and 'Sometimes I Feel Like A Motherless Child' are more conventional in pace and structure, but Nilsson exploits the trombone's closeness to human singing as thoroughly as anyone has done and at the same time exploits a range of techniques which include singing through the horn, multiphonics and almost toneless smears and rips that help give the set as a whole its curious flavour of both toughness and vulnerability. The piano-playing is the only weak link; otherwise, remarkable in every way. Parlan's on the next one, which offers some guarantee in that same department. Again, Nilsson's trombone-playing is extraordinary, but it's hard to feel that More belongs in the same bag as its predecessor. World music of a superior sort.

Jack Nimitz (Born 1928)

BARITONE SAXOPHONE

A stalwart of many big-band situations, including stints with Kenton and Herman. He started on alto and clarinet, but switched to the bigger horn to find work.

 Confirmation Fresh Sound FSRCD 5006 Nimitz; Lou Levy (p); Dave Carpenter (b); Joe LaBarbera (d). 5/95.
 Live At Capozzoli's Woofy WF54 Nimitz; Bill Berry (c); George Gaffney (p); Darek Oles (b); Jake Hanna (d). 9/97.
 Sunday Afternoons At The Lighthouse Café Woofy WF132 Nimitz; Dan Weinstein (p); Larry Koonse (g); Dave Carpenter (b); Jake Hanna (d); Spanky Wilson (v). 03.
There are late starts and late starts, but Nimitz was more than 60 when he made his recording debut as leader. By then, of course, his rich, exact tone had anchored scores of band sessions more or less anonymously. He isn't the most distinctive stylist even now. The tunes selected are all basic band-book material, though a couple of the boppier ones like Kenny Dorham's 'Blue Bossa' bring a whiff of freshness, and while the group is strong, there's nothing much on Confirmation to recommend it ahead of a hundred West Coast dates.

The first date on Woofy (a label founded by enthusiast Bill Lorenz, and still basically a labour of love) is stronger and more appealing in the main, but there is an air of aimless jamming about some of the material that leaves the set, and its somewhat later successor recorded at one of Lorenz's Lighthouse matinees, episodically exciting but lacking in sustained interest. Gaffney is impressive and Nimitz himself emerges as a player of some personality, and certainly more than a journeyman.

Phil Nimmons (born 1923)

CLARINET

Distinguished veteran of the Canadian scene.

 Vintage Nimmons'n'Nine; CBC Air Checks '59–'64 Sackville SK2CD5010 2CD Nimmons; Erich Traugott (t); Ross Culley, Ted Roderman, Butch Watanabe (tb); Bernie Pitch, Jerry Toth (as); Roy Smith, Rick Wilkins (ts); Happy Jack Taylor (bs); Ed Bickert (g); Vic Centro (acc); Murray Lauder (b); Archie Alleyne, Jack McQuade, Ron Rully (d). 59–64.
(*) Atlantic Suite / Suite P.E.I. / Tributes Sackville SK2CD 5003 2CD Nimmons; Guido Basso, Herbie Spanier, Mike Malone (t); Terry Lukiwski, Dave McMurdo, Rob McConnell, Rick Stepton (tb); John Capon (btb); Dave Caldwell, Keith Jollimore, Moe Koffman (as); Art Ellefson (ts); Gary Morgan (bs); Bruce Harvey (p); Ed Bickert, Andy Krehm (g); Dave Field, Don Thompson (b); Terry Clarke (d). 8/73–6/79.
 Sands Of Time Sackville SKCD 5008 Nimmons; Gary Williamson (p); Steve Wallace (b); Barry Elmes (d). 6/00.
Nimmons's cool approach can be deceptive. His nonet is obviously modelled on the Mulligan–Miles–Evans ensemble, but it has its own distinctive touches, not least the use of accordion in place of piano or guitar. The music's untroubled but elegantly constructed. Most of the cuts on the CBC compilation actually come from the end of the period in question, but the set – all unreleased material – gives a fair impression of Nimmons's early maturity. He's best known, though, for the Atlantic Suite, which earned him a certain reputation outside Canada. Again, it's a sophisticated rather than startling work, and his own clarinet-playing is thoughtful rather than exciting, but the piece and the two other suites compiled with it have a curiously addictive quality. The nonet material is generally more interesting than the big-band tracks, which have a broad-brush quality that paints over Nimmons's great strengths. There are a few distinguished soloists on these records; seasoned listeners will pick out names like Ellefson, Bickert, McConnell, Spanier, while readers might like to know that Farley Mowat contributes a liner-note.

The quartet record comes after yet another long gap – a Verve called Canadian Scene fell somewhere in between – and is as generously proportioned as the others, but it does also confirm that Nimmons isn't a clarinettist you'd look to for a head-turning solo. He builds his statements with authority, though, and even over a long record he commands attention. A thinly documented figure, but important in his community.

Sal Nistico (1948–91)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A featured soloist with the Woody Herman band, he's thought of as something of a hired gun.

* Heavyweights Milestone MCD 966 Nistico; Nat Adderley (c); Sal Amico (t); Barry Harris (p); Bob Cranshaw, Sam Jones (b); Walter Perkins, Vinnie Ruggiero (d). 61, 10/62.

 Empty Room Red RR 123222 Nistico; Rita Marcotulli (p); Roberto Gatto (b); Michele Fratini (d). 2/88.

Sal's incendiary style was well suited to big-band play and he freelanced throughout his career. There were opportunities to record on his own behalf, though. The live Italian set shows what happened when he was let loose with an unfamiliar rhythm section (albeit coevals of Italian extraction); he simply steamrollers them. The earlier record brings together Heavyweights with Adderley and the slightly later Comin' On Up with the little known Amico and Ruggiero. There's less fire and brimstone here and more subtlety, and it's the two brassmen who seem to stoke the flames.

Liam Noble

PIANO

Fine British pianist and composer.

 Close Your Eyes FMR CD 25 Noble (p solo). 00.

 In The Meantime Basho 108 Nobel; Stan Sulzman (ss, as); Chris Biscoe (ss, ts, acl); Mick Hutton (b); Paul Clarvis (d). 02.

 Romance Among The Fishes Basho SRCD 13-2 Noble; Phil Robson (g); Drew Gress (b); Tom Rainey (d). 8/04.

Noble's clear sense of line and direction has yet to yield the work he is capable of, but one senses it coming, even in these two slightly tentative efforts. The FMR disc is not much more than a taster, but it bubbles with promise and with indications that Noble will not be content to play just jazz in the years ahead but intends to diversify. By contrast, on In The Meantime Noble is rather overshadowed by his playing partners and doesn't assert himself all that clearly. These are problems that will pass with time and growing confidence.

The third record is certainly a step forward, recorded in the US with an American rhythm section and with Robson – a frequent collaborator in other settings, notably Christine Tobin's group – working almost in duo with the pianist, so closely intertwined is their playing. Listeners may feel like eavesdroppers: the music seems directed inwards, and its even-tempered demeanour is oddly difficult to find a way into.

Steve Noble

PERCUSSION, TURNTABLES

A familiar figure in London's free-music scene since the mid-'80s, Noble has worked frequently in partnership with pianist Alex Maguire, as well as in numerous other configurations.

(*) Ya Boo, Reel And Rumble Incus CD06 Noble; Alex Ward (cl, as). 3/89, 7/90.

 Flathead Reunion Ping Pong PPPCD001 Noble; Davey Williams (g); Oren Marshall (tba). 9/95.

* Obliquity Bo'Weavil 23CD Noble; Alan Wilkinson (as, bs, v); John Edwards (b). 10/06.

(*) The Early Years Ping Pong PPP003 Coxhill; John Edwards (b); Steve Noble (d). 1/04.

Though consistently underrated, Noble has been a key figure on the British improvisation scene for more than two decades. He studied with Nigerian master drummer Elkan Ogunde and his work all has an alertness of context that suggests he considers music a social rather than a merely individualistic activity. Typically, he's not well represented on record as a 'leader'. Ward was only in his mid-teens when the first of the performances of Ya Boo, Reel And Rumble were recorded. A virtuosic player with a strong background in modernist formal repertoire, he plays with considerable authority, matched move for move by Noble's quick-witted percussion. Noble has plenty of fun playing turntables on Flathead Reunion, but this takes him away from his kit and without that firm authority there's less of musical interest going on, even if Williams is equally underrated, and Marshall's electric tuba is quite hard to listen to in any bulk.

Noble's listed first on the superb Obliquity, though it obviously has to be considered the work of a collaborative trio. Wilkinson's fiery, often humorous tack on improvisation suits Noble's approach to perfection. The level of interplay between the two is extraordinary, often curiously reminiscent of Coltrane and Rashied Ali. In Edwards, there's a third contemporary master in the group, a stunning technician who seems to play with bottomless enjoyment.

Strictly speaking again, The Early Years doesn't belong to Noble, but it appears on his imprint and again it's he and Edwards who establish all the contexts for discourse. Consisting of smaller and more songlike forms – a preference of Coxhill's – it gives a very good sense of how committed Noble is to structure within freedom and to a kind of flexible swing which takes some of its energies from rock and from African drumming. Excellent stuff.

Jimmie Noone (1895–1944)

CLARINET

Born near New Orleans, he studied with his contemporary Sidney Bechet before joining King Oliver in 1918. He was a Chicago star during the '20s, but never made much impact in New York. A fondness for eating shortened his life and nowadays he's largely forgotten.

 Jimmie Noone, 1928–1929 Classics 611 Noone; George Mitchell (c); Fayette Williams (tb); Lawson Buford, Bill Newton (tba); Joe Poston (cl, as); Eddie Pollack (as, bs); Zinky Cohn, Alex Hill, Earl Hines (p); Junie Cobb, Wilbur Gorham, Bud Scott (bj, g); Johnny Wells (d). 28–29.

 Jimmie Noone, 1929–1930 Classics 632 Similar to above. 29–30.

 Jimmie Noone 1930–1934 Classics 641 Noone; Jimmy Cobb (t); Eddie Pollack (as, bs, v); Earl Hines, Zinky Cohn (p); Wilbur Gorham (g, bj); John Henley (g); Quinn Wilson, John Lindsay (b); Bill Newton (bb); Johnny Wells, Benny Washington (d); Georgia White, Elmo Tanner, Art Jarrett, Mildred Bailey (v). 30–34.

 Jimmie Noone 1934–1940 Classics 651 As above, except omit Hines, Newton, Bailey, White, Wells, Jarrett, Wilson; add Natty

Dominique (c); Guy Kelly, Charlie Shavers (t); Preston Jackson (tb); Pete Brown (as); Richard M. Jones, Gideon Honore (p); Teddy Bunn (g); Henry Fort, Israel Crosby, Wellman Braud (b); O'Neil Spencer, Tubby Hall (d); Ed Thompson, Teddy Simmons (v). 11/34–12/40.

Much of Noone's output was spoiled by weak material, unsuitable arrangements, poor sidemen or a sentimental streak which eventually came to dominate the playing. These are all familiar characteristics of the period, but Noone seemed oblivious to the excessive sweetness which overpowered so many of the records with his Apex Club band, named after his resident gig in Chicago. He had a mellifluous, rather sad-sounding tone and preferred his solos to be insinuating rather than fierce. Where Johnny Dodds, the other great New Orleans player of the day, was comparatively harsh, Noone sought to caress melodies. But the plunking rhythm sections, still dominated by banjos even in 1928–9, and the unsuitable front-line partners failed to give Noone the kind of sympathetic settings which would have made his romantic approach more feasible. Poston tarnishes many of the tunes, and his replacement, Pollack, is even worse; even Earl Hines, who plays on 18 tracks on the first disc, can provide only flashes of inspiration. Mitchell arrives for a single session, and even that is ruined by more awful vocals..

What's needed is a good sampler of Noone's earlier material. There are examples of the great musician he could be, but they're scattered. The ballad playing on 'Sweet Lorraine' and 'Blues My Naughty Sweetie Gives To Me' is of a very high order and investigates a rare, cool vein in the Chicago jazz of the period. 'Oh, Sister! Ain't That Hot?', 'El Rado Scuffle', 'It's Tight Like That' and 'Chicago Rhythm' are further isolated successes, but the rest is rather discouraging.

Noone's questionable judgement pervades much of his remaining legacy. Classics 641 has some dreary material and vocals, and Hines's brief reappearance has little impact. But Noone had two great sessions left in him – the small-group swing tracks recorded in 1936–7 and featured on Classics 651. 'Blues Jumped A Rabbit' is the most memorable track, but all four from this session are impressive, and so are the tracks made with Charlie Shavers in New York the following year.

Caecilie Norby (born 1964)

VOICE

After working with Danish rock groups, Norby moved into a jazz idiom with her debut album for Blue Note, although she still draws material from some rock composers.

* Caecilie Norby Blue Note 832222-2 Norby; Randy Brecker (t); Rick Margitza (ss); Scott Robinson (ts); Ben Besiakov (p, org); Lars Jansson, Niels Lan Doky (p); Jakob Foscher (g); Lennart Ginman (b); Billy Hart (d). 9/94.

(*) My Corner Of The Sky Blue Note 8968-2 Norby; Randy Brecker (flhn); Michael Brecker (ts); Scott Robinson (f); David Kikoski, Lars Jansson (p, org); Joey Calderazzo (p); Lennart Gunman, Lars Danielsson (b); Terri Lyne Carrington, Alex Riel (d). 96.

The Danish singer's international debut was distinguished by a brilliant production by Niels Lan Doky. He chose an ingenious setting for almost every tune, deploying a crack team of players with spontaneous assurance, and the rich detail of the studio sound is a further embellishment. Inside all this, Norby isn't intimidated once. She has a big, rather awkward voice which she can use with great dramatic force, and on ballads she finds a low-key but steely power, with nothing downcast entering the interpretation. The songs are a fascinating lot, with initially unpromising things like Rod McKuen's 'I've Been Town' and Jimmy Webb's 'By The Time I Get To Phoenix' surprising successes, and a couple of oblique originals adding a further dimension.

The follow-up, My Corner Of The Sky, is more of a mixed success. This time the material is a shade too eclectic for the record's own good. She makes a fist of David Bowie's 'Life On Mars', for instance, but all it tends to display is how meaningless the lyric is; and Sting's 'Set Them Free' is no more than high-class jazz-pop. Yet there are again some impressive successes, such as her setting of Wayne Shorter's 'African Fairytale', the stark 'Suppertime' and 'The Right To Love', a beautiful lyric impeccably handled. And 'Snow' transfers her roots into a plausible New York framework.

 Queen Of Bad Excuses Blue Note 522342-2 Norby; Anders Bergcrantz (t, flhn); Hans Ulrik (ss, f); Lars Moller (ts); Lars Danielsson (ky, g, clo, b, d); Ben Besiakov, Lars Jansson (p); Aske Jacoby, John Scofield (g); Anders Kjellberg, Per Lindvall, Billy Hart (d); Xavier Desandre-Navarre (perc). N.D.

A more personal record than its predecessors: Norby wrote all the material (partner and co-producer Danielsson assisting on three tracks) and adopts a more flexible, less interpretative approach. The result is nicely idiosyncratic and sometimes – as on the delightful 'Fly' – very appealing. But the material doesn't have enough outreach, and anyway the singer doesn't get it across so forcefully that you feel involved. In the end, it feels more like a quality singer-songwriter record, and the rock sections are full of those.

Bengt 'Frippe' Nordström (1938–2000)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, CLARINET

A legendary figure on the Swedish scene, whose bold modernism made an impact on the succeeding generation.

(*) The Environmental Control Office Ayler ayl 021/022 Nordström; Lars Svantesson (vn); Björn Alke (b); Peeter Uuskyla (d). 6/88.

If one can imagine a hybrid of Jimmy Giuffre and Albert Ayler, BFN comes close. Like Ayler, whom he encountered early on, Nordström used very sparse, folkish melodies, often directly based on folk material; it's argued that Ayler's 'Ghosts' is actually based on a Swedish country tune. His tone isn't as hard as the American's and his delivery is more spacious and relaxed, but the lineage is clear on this fine double set from the Fasching club in Stockholm. BFN's Giuffre side is evident on 'Fripping', with its pleasantly jogging melody, but for the most part this is a fiery, full-on set, and the presence of a violin in the ensemble clinches the resemblance to some of Albert's groups.

Fredrik Nordström

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Looking for a way out of post-bop by using surprising instrumentations and an incendiary but not quite free style of improvisation.

(*) Urgency!!! Dragon DRCD 341 Nordström; Patrik Skogh (t, flhn); Magnus Broo (t); Björn Samuelsson, Magnus Svedberg (tb); Matthias Ståhl (vib); Filip Augustson (b); Fredrik Rundqvist (d). 5/00.
 Live Dragon DRCD 375 Nordström; Palle Danielsson (b); Fredrik Rundqvist (d). 6/01.
(*) On Purpose Caprice CAP 21684 Nordström; Magnus Broo (t); Matthias Ståhl (vib); Filip Augustson (b); Fredrik Rundqvist (d). 1/02.
 Dog Out Moserobie MMPCD 013 Nordström; Alberto Pinton (Cmel, bs, cl, bcl); Mattias Welin (b); Jon Fält (d). 5/03.
(*) Blue Moserobie MMPCD 058 As above, except omit Pinton; add Bobo Stenson (p). 07.

The debut set on Dragon was a very ambitious start, involving octet and quartet performances which have some of the dark drama of a Charles Mingus session. Having four brass-players gives a metallic crackle to the ensemble sound, and with vibist Stahl injecting some glassy textures of his own there always seems to be interesting tonal contrasts to go with the leader's inventive writing and pugilistic tenor. The debt to Mingus seems obvious on a title such as 'Ming Dynasty', yet there is also a Nordic ballad in 'October'.

The trio set, live from the Glenn Miller Café, is a no-nonsense workout on eight standards before a small but vociferous audience. Nordström doesn't really do anything shockingly new, but he puts a fiercely commanding stamp on the music: 'Spring Is Here' is purged of sweetness, and Keith Jarrett's 'My Song' – which, it's worth recalling, featured Danielsson on the original studio version – is given a nicely grouchy treatment.

On Purpose puts him in a quintet setting with some of the players from Urgency!!!. Carefully crafted writing sets an appealing agenda: 'True Blue' is spare and melancholy, 'Get Out Of My Way' suits its title. Much of it trades in extended exchanges between trumpet, tenor and vibes, an unclichéd sound that merits much more exposure.

Dog Out is a shared enterprise with Pinton, and after the more cultivated music of the other discs this is more rough and ready. Pinton's tunes tend to encourage a scruffier approach, but most of the way it's rowdy, vocalized horns over scattershot rhythms.

On Blue Stenson not surprisingly restores an air of sophistication, but there doesn't seem to be so much adventure in the music, and – anathema though the view will seem – the pianist can be a very boring soloist indeed.

Fredrik Norén

DRUMS

The Swedish answer to Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers, the Fredrik Norén Band was formed in 1978 and carries the flame for the region's hard bop.

 City Sounds Mirrors MICD 901 Norén; Magnus Broo (t); Robert Nordermark (ts); Torbjörn Gulz (p); Dan Berglund (b). 12/91.
 One Day In May Mirrors MICD 004 As above, except omit Nordermark, Berglund; add Fredrik Ljungkvist (ts); Filip Augustson (b); Lina Nyberg (v). 5/95.
(*) T Mirrors MICD 008 Norén; Anders Garstedt (t); Jonas Kullhammar (ts); Daniel Karlsson (p); Torbjörn Zetterberg (b). 5/99.

Norén's band is something of an institution at this point and, with his ever-changing line-up and steady evolution – not to mention his own push and shove from the kit – he deserves the title of Sweden's Jazz Messenger. These three are in a long line of records, lately for the Mirrors label. City Sounds is live, and the most dependent on mere good blowing, but the band is hot and, though it smoulders rather than burns, the best of it – as on Gulz's 'I'm Ready' – is more than good enough. One Day In May benefits from the piquant contrast of Broo's rather careful trumpet with the bluster of Ljungkvist's tenor. Nyberg comes in for a rather strangely tempestuous 'Someone To Watch Over Me'.

The best of the three – and evidence that Norén is quite capable of revitalizing his old format – is surely the latest, T. The leader's own 'Trane Mode' calls up a fiercely individual sequence of solos and, as the record progresses, it's clear that Fredrik has found some fresh voices again – both Garstedt and Kullhammar refuse to conform to the obvious dialects on their horns. As just one instance, the trumpeter's snapping improvisation on his own 'No Choice' really grabs the lapels. Excellent variations on the grand old formula, and plangently recorded too.

Norrbotten Big Band

GROUP

Based in Luleå, this Swedish big band has a policy of appointing guest MDs.

 Animations Phono Suecia PSCD 75 Bo Strandberg, Dan Johansson, Magnus Ekholm, Magnus Plumppu (t, flhn); P.-O. Svanström, Magnus Puls, Tony Andersson, Anders Wiborg, Björn Hängsel (tb); Håkan Broström, Christer Johnsson (ss, as); Jan Thelin (as, cl); Mats Garberg (ts, f); Bengt Ek (ts); Per Moberg (bs); Hans Andersson (ky); Hans-Ola Ericsson (org); Johan Granström (b); Christer Sjöström, Lennart Gruvstedt (d); Kjell Westerberg (perc); Örjan Fahlström (cond, arr, ky). 9/92–2/93.
 Norrbotten Big Band Featuring Nils Landgren Caprice CAP 21494 As above, except add Tapio Maunuvaara (t, flhn), Nils Landgren (tb, v), Hans Delander (ky), Johan Norberg (g). 2/93–2/95.
 Future North Double-Time DTRCD-140 As above, except omit Plumppu, Tony Andersson, Wiborg, Johnsson, Hans Andersson, Ericsson, Sjöström, Gruvstedt, Westerberg, Fahlström, Norberg; add Tim Hagans (t); Peter Dahlgren (tb); Christian Spering (b); Jukkis Uotila (d). 6/97.

Demanding big-band charts played with panache and fastidious clarity by this typically impressive Swedish orchestra. Örjan Fahlström leads the first record and does most of the writing. Animations features two long works, a series of pieces to go with the silent film Witchcraft Through The Ages, and the title-work, a full-scale concerto for pipe organ and big band. It's a little hard to see how the filmscores really fit with Benjamin Christensen's startling old film, since they actually sound like an unlinked sequence of charts, but there's no denying the impact. 'Animations' is an impressive if finally improbable blending of the organ and the band: Klas Persson cleverly mixes the two factors, but the music is more a matter of competition than integration. The Caprice disc (which also includes a single left-over track from the previous sessions) is a sometimes unconvincing mixture, with a few rhythms straying towards rock. Landgren is the main soloist, but his singing on 'Stone Free' and 'Ticket To Ride' wasn't the smartest of ideas and the best music is on the more thoughtful scores: a big, punchy 'Impressions', a sonorous Philip Catherine tune, 'Twice A Week', and Landgren's mellifluous trip through 'The Midnight Sun Never Sets'.

Tim Hagans was an interesting choice as guest arranger/soloist. The resulting record is an impressionistic programme of charts, suggesting his reaction to both the orchestra and its native environment in northern Europe. Some of it, such as 'Twist And Out' and 'Waking Iris', is almost too clever even for this expert band, but when Hagans settles things down a little – as in the impressive three-part title-piece – he does better.

Kevin Norton (born 1956)

DRUMS, MARIMBA

The sometime Braxton sideman leads a prodigious ensemble of his own. A superb composer.

(*) Integrated Variables CIMP 121 Norton; George Cartwright (ss, as, ts); Mark Dresser (b). 7/96.
* Knots Music & Arts CD-1033 Norton; Bob DeBellis (cl, bcl, as); David Krakauer (cl); David Bindman (cl, ts); Tomas Ulrich (clo); Joe Fonda (b). 9–10/97.
 For Guy Debord Barking Hoop BKH-001 As above, except omit Krakauer; add Anthony Braxton (as, cbcl) 9/98.
Norton is that rarity, a free drummer who's also a precision merchant. On Integrated Variables he gets a fireball momentum going on many of the tracks, but it's always ready to stop on a dime, switch gears or change direction. His rolls are pristine in their exactness and when he moves over to the marimba, which is often, he plays with the same attention to detail. Norton is well matched with the imaginative Cartwright and the virtuosic Dresser, and their music is quick and funny as well as passionate. There's a lot of it, at over 70 minutes, but very few dead-ends.

Knots is by Norton's ensemble, and presents a more considered sound – detailed and balanced compositions, though the players have sufficient space to let fly when they're asked to improvise. 'Hammer Or Anvil?' has the meticulous feel of composed chamber music, carefully weighted around the colours of the horns and the changing dynamics of Norton's own rhythms (including an overdubbed vibes solo). There are quite brilliant treatments of two Monk tunes – 'Epistrophy', its melody camouflaged by alternative lines drawn from one of Monk's own solos, then blown open by Bindman's blitzkrieg tenor solo, and 'Brilliant Corners', a tough challenge to start with but here evolved into a scintillating essay on the composer's rhythm-plan. 'Three Movements For Solo And Ensemble' is a setting for guest clarinettist Krakauer, who suggests klezmer-like ebullience, and the swing beats of 'Walking The Dogma' frame horn solos that eventually send the music somewhere else entirely. Very rich, and this is only half of a fine and thought-provoking record.

For Guy Debord is a nine-part piece in dedication to the French provocateur of that name, and it's a concert recording with a rare sighting of Braxton as sideman. A continuous 37-minute piece, it has many of the ingenuities of the studio date but a rougher ambience, and somehow Braxton's presence unbalances the group: his trademark timbres seem to sideline Bindman and DeBellis, and the multifarious threads of Knots seem less abundant.

(*) In Context/Out Of Context Barking Hoop BKH-002 Norton; David Bindman, Bob DeBellis (ss, ts, f). 10/99.
The five-minute drum solo which opens In Context/Out Of Context is impressive enough by itself, but it's merely the prelude to a sequence of pieces which the composer cites as the result of musing on Charlie Parker and the earlier work of Cecil Taylor. Historicity aside, the music does have a boppish lineage (the twin-tenor solos in 'Variations In B♭–', for instance) while approximating some of the structural ideas suggested by Unit Structures (a notably unexplored tangent, it might be added). It's not a very long set, but it's packed with ideas; less good, alas, is the recording, which blunts some of the impact.

The trio of Iron Monkey is much more about freebop jamming. It's none the worse for that – Celusak has some good ideas, though his soprano tone isn't flattered one iota by the CIMP sound – but it's a good deal more lightweight.

(*) Change Dance Troubled Energy Barking Hoop BKH-005 Norton; Dave Ballou (t, c); Steve Lehman (sno, as); Rachel Telesmanick (as, bs); Mark Dresser (b). 6/01.
(*) Play Anthony Braxton Barking Hoop BKH-006 Norton; Haewon Min (p). 3/01.
The subtext of Change Dance, a dedication to the emotionally disturbed street-activist Kathleen Chang, is troubling enough; but even away from this the music sounds like the most anguished work Norton has put down on record. The playing is often coruscatingly fierce, with Lehmann and Telesmanick in particular despatching some unflinchingly harsh solos. Dresser and Norton have to impose order without stifling expression, and they do it by blending tempo work with more abstract material. Nothing stays settled for long. The eerie coda regresses to a nursery rhyme jingle that eventually merely fades away.

Norton's immersion in Anthony Braxton's music leaves him well qualified for the concert recital with Min. They tackle five Braxton works, from the signature 'Composition No. 60' to the finale of 'Composition No. 62'. Mostly, Norton is at the marimba and the vibraphone, and the unisons with Min have a glistening brilliance of sonority which makes one hear works that some may consider drear reclothed in dazzling new colours.

(*) Ocean Of Earth Barking Hoop BKH-007 Norton; Tomas Ulrich (clo); JoëlleLéandre (b, v). 10/02.
Dream-like strings and percussion, woven into a fabric that seems to transcend its materials. Léandre is superb in this kind of setting, but Ulrich shouldn't be overlooked: one of the few cello specialists to make a significant mark in jazz and improvised music over the last few years. Norton's playing is as intensely focused as ever, full of sharp angles and quiddities, but capable of genuine lyricism as well.

* Time-Space Modulator Barking Hoop BKH-008 Norton; Dave Ballou (t, c); Tony Malaby (ts); John Lindberg (b). 8/03, 4/04.
This is Norton's Bauhaus Quartet, which implies yet another political agenda but most fundamentally a commitment to old-fashioned – or rather new-fashioned – craft. The title is an adaptation of Moholy-Nagy's 'light-space modulator', a synaesthetic receiver for as yet undeveloped media. The analogy answers nicely here, because Norton and his men seem to be moving in umpteen dimensions at once: fiery Braxton-like grooves, long abstract episodes and deceptively simple material that harks back to the drummer's early work with bass master Milt Hinton. The opening 'Mother Tongue' is a blast, with the two horns playing in relatively unfamiliar guise, though Ballou is an avid shapeshifter. 'Seoul Soul' is collectively improvised and perhaps the least successful item on the set. The other long tracks, 'Didkovsky' and 'Moonstruck', are vintage Norton, subtle, thoughtful, packed with cheerful guile.

* Born In Brooklyn Barking Hoop 010 Norton; Frode Gjerstad (as, cl); Nick Stephens (b). 11/05.

Strictly, this is credited to Instinctual Eye, an intriguing trio collaboration that throws Norton into a subtly different kind of improvisational situation. Gjerstad is a prolific performer, with a particular genius for playing in context without losing his own individuality. Norton's much the same, modulating his pulse and to some extent his colouration of sound here to a drier, more abstract and one might say more European conception. Stephens is no makeweight, but he's not Johnny Dyani, either, and the occasion probably called for a more dramatic third wheel.

Also, in brief:

 Iron Monkey Trio CIMP 238. 1/01.
A free-bop jam with Bob Celusak (ss, ts) and Andy Eulau (b); it's ok in its way.

 Intuitive Structures Cadence CJR 1166. 11/02.
A Knitting Factory gig with the Living Language group. Two versions of the staple 'Walking The Dogma'.

 The Dream Catcher CIMP 280. 1/03.
A dedication to the late Wilber Norris, who was supposed to have played on the date. Enjoyable but relatively slight.

Red Norvo (1908–1999)

XYLOPHONE, VIBRAPHONE

Born Kenneth Norville in Illinois, he started out playing marimba and graduated to vibes- and xylophone-playing without vibrato and with a light and almost delicate sound. Attracted by bebop he managed to synthesize it with swing. He was married to singer Mildred Bailey.

(*) Dance Of The Octopus /  Red Norvo, 1933–1936 Hep CD 1044 / Classics 1085 Norvo; Stewart Pletcher (t); Eddie Sauter, Jack Jenney (tb); Jimmy Dorsey, Donald McCook, Artie Shaw (cl); Benny Goodman (bcl); Charlie Barnet (ts); Bobby Johnson, Dick McDonough, George Van Eps (g); Fulton McGrath, Teddy Wilson (p); Artie Bernstein, Hank Hayland, Pete Peterson (b); Billy Gussak, Gene Krupa, Bob White, Maurice Purtill (d); Mae Questal (v). 4/33–3/36.
 Jivin' The Jeep Hep CD 1019 Norvo; Bill Hyland, Stewart Pletcher, Louis Mucci, George Wendt (t); Leo Moran, Eddie Sauter (tb); Frank Simeone (as); Slats Long, Hank D'Amico (cl, as); Len Goldstein (as); Charles Lanphere (as, ts); Herbie Haymer (ts); Joe Liss, Bill Miller (p); Dave Barbour, Red McGarvey (g); Pete Robinson (b); Mo Purtill (d); Mildred Bailey, Lew Hurst (v). 36–37.
 Red Norvo, 1936–1937 Classics 1123 Norvo; Bill Hyland Eddie Meyers, Louis Mucci, Stew Pletcher (t); Eddie Sauter (t, as); Al Mastern, Leo Moran (tb); Hank d'Amico (cl); Slats Long(as, cl); Lou Goldstein, Charlie Lanphere, Frank Simeone (as); Herbie Haymer (ts); Howard Smith (p); Dave Barbour (g); Pete Robinson (b); Moe Purtill (d); Mildred Bailey (v). 36-37.
 Red Norvo, 1937–1938 /  Red Norvo, 1938–1939 / Rock It For Me /  Wigwammin' Classics 1157 / 1192 / Hep 1040 / 1050 Much as above, except add Al George, Charlie Shavers, Barney Zudecoff, George Wendt (t), Les Burness, Stuart Mckay (as), Maurice Kogan (ts), Buster Bailey (cl), Billy Kyle (p), Allen Hanlon, Red McGarvey (g), John Kirby (b), Buddy Christian, O'Neill Spencer, George Wettling (d). 37–38, 38–39, 9/37–4/38, 5–9/38.
 Nuances By Norvo /  Red Norvo, 1939–1943 Hep 1072 / Classics 1232 Norvo; Steve Lipkins, Jack Owens, Bob Kennedy, Jack Palmer, Jimmy Salko, Barney Zudecoff (t); Eddie Bert, Al George, Wes Hein, Andy Russo (tb); Hank d'Amico (cl); Len Goldstein, George Koenig, Frank Simeone (as); Freddy Artzberger (as, cl); George Berg, Maurice Kogan, Stuart McKay (ts); Mickey Folus (ts, ob); Jimmy Gemus (bs); Les Burness, Bob Kitsis, Billy Kyle, Bill Miller (p); Allen Hanlon (g); Pete Peterson (b); Buddy Christian, George Wettling (d). 9/38–3/42, 2/39–11/43.
 El Rojo: The Complete Keynote Recordings And More Definitive 11128 Norvo; Bobby Sherwood (c); Manny Klein, Ray Linn (t); Vic Dickenson (tb); John Cave (frhn); Aaron Sachs (cl); Benny Carter (as); Jimmy Giuffre (as, ts); Dave Cavanaugh, Dexter Gordon, Eddie Miller (ts); Jules Kinsler, Bob Lawson (bcl); Art Fleming (bsn); Dodo Marmarosa, Arnold Ross, Jimmy Rowles, Teddy Wilson (p); Dave Barbour, Barney Kessel, Jack Marshall (g); Red Callender, Billy Hadnott, Slam Stewart (b); Irving Cottler, Eddie Dell, Jackie Mills, Specs Powell, Jesse Price, Jack Turner (d); Kay Starr (v). 44–45.
 Too Marvellous For Words /  Red Norvo, 1943–1944 Sounds of Yesteryear 629 / Classics 1306 Similar to above. 10/43–8/44, 7/43–11/44.
(*) Red Norvo On Dial Spotlite SPJ 127 Norvo; Dizzy Gillespie (t); Charlie Parker (as); Flip Phillips (ts); Teddy Wilson (p); Slam Stewart (b); J. C. Heard, Specs Powell (d). 6/45.
 The Modern Red Norvo / Red Norvo, 1945–1947 Savoy 17113 2CD / Classics 1386 Norvo; Dizzy Gillespie (t); Charlie Parker (as); Flip Phillips (ts); Teddy Wilson (p); Tal Farlow (g); Charles Mingus, Slam Stewart (b); J. C. Heard, Specs Powell (d). 6/45–4/51, 10/44–12/47.
(*) The Red Norvo Trios Prestige PRCD 24108 Norvo; Jimmy Raney, Tal Farlow (g); Red Mitchell (b). 53–54.
(*) Red Norvo Trio Original Jazz Classics OJC 641 Norvo; Jimmy Raney (g); Red Mitchell (b). 9/53–3/54.
(*) Music To Listen To Red Norvo By Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1015 Norvo; Buddy Collette (f); Bill Smith (cl); Barney Kessel (g); Red Mitchell (b); Shelly Manne (d). 1–2/57.

Norvo's early recorded work, before he made the switch from xylophone to vibraharp, illustrates the problem of placing so self-effacing an instrument in a conventional jazz line-up: it's sometimes difficult to separate technical limitations and compromises from conscious dynamic strategies. The material on the xylophonic Heps is generally pretty good, though inevitably much of the interest stems from the fantastic line-ups Norvo commanded as a youngster.

The Keynote sessions on El Rojo ('Mr Red', or something close to it) underline what a modernist Norvo was, for all his commitment to swing and to the harmonic bases of pre-bop jazz. The sound transfers on the Definitive collection are very good indeed and there is a sufficient range of source material and idiom to keep the level of interest high. Much of the earlier output is now available in a number of formats. Again, we would advise that the sound quality on Classics isn't tip-top, but these are a very affordable and reasonably well-documented option and shouldn't be overlooked. The 1939–1943 instalment is perhaps weaker than the others, documenting as it does a band in its final stages. The next volume isn't a great deal better and it takes some time to get things back on course again, though Norvo remains superior throughout. The lack of overlap between the available compilations makes comparative assessment difficult and, while offering renewed warning of the sound quality on Classics, we leave it to readers to make their preference. The last year of the war was a good one for Norvo. The super-session with the young Gillespie and Parker from 1945 is a significant moment in the development of bebop and the music that came after it. Though as ragged as any jam session, it is full of life and energy.

The Savoy compilation brings together a huge number of tracks and extra takes – to be exact 41 cuts – offering the best available insight into how Red shaped and changed his solos. Lest anyone think that these become formulaic and ready-made, it's worth looking more closely at how Charlie Parker crafted his seemingly effortless choruses; they, too, were built up out of phrases, licks and tiny melodic cells that become more familiar as his career advanced.

In those early, 'hands-off' days, Norvo frequently encountered engineers who would unilaterally boost the sound on quieter numbers or adjust the balances to accord with conventional expectations. Most of those were overturned in the 1950–51 trio in which Charles Mingus was the replacement for Red Kelly. Just as Norvo made a pioneering contribution to the use of vibraphone in jazz, so too did the early trios contribute enormously to the development of a style of 'cool' or 'chamber' jazz that became dominant much later in the decade. One of the more significant aspects of the early trio is the unprecedentedly prominent role assigned to Mingus.

The later trios with Raney and Mitchell are much less obviously adventurous, though again it's the bassist's singing lines that carry much of the interest. Sooner or later when dealing with so-called 'chamber jazz', the question of its supposed pretentiousness is bound to come into play. Norvo's 1957 quintet with Buddy Collette on flute and Barney Kessel on guitar strongly recalls fellow member Chico Hamilton's sophisticated chamber-jazz, with its soft, 'classical' textures and non-blues material. Titles like 'Divertimento In Four Movements' on Music To Listen To Red Norvo By are apt to be seen as red rags by hard-nosed boppers. It's clear, though, from the album title if not immediately from the music itself, that there is a hefty dose of humour in Norvo's work. Structurally, the 'Divertimento' is unexceptionable, with a beautiful division of parts, and is as lightweight as the genre demands. Other tracks, like 'Red Sails' and the boppish thematic puns of 'Rubricity', suggest a different side to Norvo which is actually present throughout his work, even in his 60s.

 Vibes A La Red Progressive PCD-7112 Norvo; Hank Jones, Jimmy Rowles (p); Lloyd Ellis (g); Milt Hinton, Gene Cherico (b); Jo Jones, Donald Bailey (d). 74–75.

 The Second Time Around Progressive PCD-7121 Norvo; Kenny Davern (ss); Dave McKenna (p); Milt Hinton (b); Mousey Alexander (d). 6/75.

 Red In New York Progressive PCD-7132 Norvo; Scott Hamilton (ts); Dave McKenna (b); Richard Davis (b); Connie Kay (d). 77.

Reissues of some sessions for Famous Door. It's a pity that, of the two groups on the first disc, there are only four tracks by the group with Hank Jones, Milt Hinton and Jo Jones – the version of 'The One I Love Belongs To Somebody Else' is so swinging you want to shout out for more (and luckily, there's a decent alternative take too). The other band has Rowles, but it also includes the dull Lloyd Ellis and Donald Bailey's very noisy drumming. The Second Time Around has Davern on half the tracks and is padded out with four extra takes. Famous Door's cheesy production values tend to take some of the gilt off most of their records, but at least they were recording this kind of jazz at a moment when it had been largely sidelined by other companies: Red plays well here, and though Davern doesn't seem like his most suitable partner, there's some swinging stuff. The New York date is mostly interesting for an early glimpse of Scott Hamilton.

Also, in brief:

 The Forward Look Reference RR8. 12/57.

Norvo with Jerry Dodgion (f, as) and an otherwise obscure group at a Hogmanay gig in New York.

The Nu Band

GROUP

Quartet of contemporary American improvisers.

 Live At The Bop Shop Clean Feed CF002 Roy Campbell (t); Mark Whitecage (as); Joe Fonda (b); Lou Grassi (d). 1/01.

A seasoned band of players, though this was only their third gig. The names will at this point be familiar to those who've followed the CIMP/Cadence axis of labels, but the main point of this set is to hear Campbell, whose playing – at times a ripsaw amalgam of Don Cherry and the hard-bop school, but mostly markedly individual – has asserted its own space in recent times. Four good blowouts, and beautifully packaged, although the sound is rather remote.

The Number

GROUP

British quartet with roots in '60s free bop.

* The Making Of Quiet Things Slam CD 269 Gary Curson (as); Keith Tippett (p); John Edwards (b); Mark Sanders (d). 7/05.

The result of an interesting collaboration with classical producer Justin Paterson, who wanted to work with improvising musicians. This is the first stage of a process which will also eventually yield a companion electronic album derived from samples from the set and new software designed to facilitate the process. Curson and Tippett have worked together before in Dreamtime, of which the pianist was an adjunct member. His torrential sound is a key element here again, particularly on the opening 'Collective 2' and on a delightful closing solo track, but Curson's vinegary alto is equally attractive, both in its balsamic-rich register or in the sharper flavours he employs over Tippett's water-drop effects on 'Collective 3'. Paterson applies delay here and there, an unusual touch in this style of music, but highly effective. Edwards and Sanders are veterans now and the bassist in particular is nicely featured in two duets with piano and saxophone respectively.

Dick Oatts (born 1953)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Raised in Iowa. He's a latter-day bopper who saw service with Red Rodney and in the Jones–Lewis Orchestra; these days, he's a freelance leader, based in New England.

(*) All Of Three Steeplechase SCCD 31422 Oatts; Dave Santoro (b); James Oblon (d). 4/96–1/97.

 Standard Issue Steeplechase SCCD 31439 As above, except add David Berkman (p). 97.

(*) Simone's Dance Steeplechase SCCD 31458 As above, except omit David Berkman; add Bruce Barth (p). 5/98.

 Standard Issue Vol. 2 Steeplechase SCCD 31482 Oatts; Harold Danko (p); Dave Santoro (b); James Oblon (d). 97–99.

(*) South Paw Steeplechase SCCD 31511 As above, except add Joe Magnarelli (t). 3/01.

Oatts has a classic bebop tone on alto (he picks up the tenor only occasionally) and his big, unwrinkled sound was born to fly across changes; but he builds a lot of what came after bop into his thinking, so there are often moments – as on the nearly free 'Single Line', on the trio disc – when he can sound very like the young Ornette Coleman, edging towards a free play of tonality. The three men work hard to find variations in their group sound throughout All Of Three, from a zydeco feel on one track to the stark march figures of 'In Love And Memory'. There's a lot of weight on Santoro, who gets a deal of solo space, but he acquits himself well enough. 'Alone Together' is sustained for over 11 minutes, and they aren't struggling.

Standard Issue is a live blowing date with six expansive workouts, five standards and a blues. Oblon really gives the quartet a push on the uptempo tunes and it's hot and forthright music, if subject to the filler which seems unavoidable in such situations. Oatts plays the Keilworth straight alto on one track here, and he returns to it twice on the studio date, Simone's Dance. As he says in the sleeve-note, it gives him a funkier sound, the pitching reminiscent of a low soprano; on 'Reverse Locomotion', a mock tribute to the Coltrane tune, only constructed backwards, his playing is superbly fired-up and inventive.

The second helping of Standard Issue, with Danko in for Berkman, offers more intensely played music, on the expected batch of standards: another very warm occasion, though no more essential than the other one. Much meatier all round is South Paw. This time Oatts wrote seven of the eight themes (the exception is 'What's New'), Danko plays on only three tracks, and the open harmonic book suits Oatts's airy, punctilious approach which seems to be cooling off some of his old boppish fire. There are some very satisfying results from unpretentious situations: a minor blues with an oddly familiar melody ('King Henry'), a deceptively individual gathering of chords ('Reconcile').

Hod O'Brien (born 1936)

PIANO

A veteran bebop pianist, O'Brien has surfaced only intermittently on record but made a handful of leadership dates in the '90s.

 Opalessence Criss Cross Criss 1012 O'Brien; Tom Harrell (t, flhn); Pepper Adams (bs); Ray Drummond (b); Kenny Washington (d); Stephanie Nakasan (v). 9/84.

(*) Ridin' High Reservoir RSR CD 116 O'Brien; Ray Drummond (b); Kenny Washington (d). 8/90.

 So That's How It Is Reservoir RSR CD 155 As above. 9/97.

Forty years ago, Hod O'Brien made an impressive contribution to Belgian guitarist René Thomas's Guitar Groove, playing alongside mavericks like J. R. Monterose and Albert 'Tootie' Heath. Later years saw him associated with Chet Baker (on the Criss Cross Blues For A Reason) and with saxophonist Ted Brown, strong bop credentials with a label not exactly short of respectable pianists.

Unfortunately his work as leader hasn't matched up to his sterling reliability and propulsive strength as a sideman. His solos seem studied to the point of predictability and he suffers from an irritating odd-handedness that sees him switching almost on cue from 'rhythm' to 'lead' like an electric guitarist. With players of Harrell's elegance and with Adams beefing up the arrangements, Opalessence is the more interesting of the first two albums but, like the semi-precious sheen of the title, it seems all surface and no durability. The trio album reintroduces standards material. 'You And The Night And The Music' reflects O'Brien's innate romanticism, but at opposite extremes 'Willow Weep For Me' and 'Yardbird Suite' simply expose his limitations.

The return match on So That's How It Is gets by on the generous good humour of the playing and the players. O'Brien still touches no great depths and his phrases all seem to end up exactly where one expects, but it's a shapely act, and Drummond and Washington are the kind of gregarious professionals who are always good for a groove worth hearing.

 Have Piano ... Will Swing Fresh Sound FSR CD 187 O'Brien; Tom Warrington (b); Paul Kreibich (d). 99.

 Fine And Dandy Fresh sound FSR CD 190 As above. 00.

O'Brien's working trio is a taut, well-organized unit, held together by mutual understanding, a certain competitive edge and a lot of laughter, one suspects. These aren't the greatest recordings, and in a market saturated with piano trios it's hard to say that they stand out, but Hod is an inventive player and there isn't a moment on either set when it sounds as though he's marking time or simply playing for his cheque. So, to that degree, recommended.

 Blues Alley – First Set /  ... Second Set/  ... Third Set Reservoir RSR CD 180 / 182 / 184 O'Brien; Ray Drummond (b); Kenny Washington (d). 7/04.

A briskly inventive sojourn at the famous club, with some striking repertoire choices. Bob Dorough, Joe Zawinul and Freddie Redd all feature on the first set, while the second has a more familiar look as far as composers are concerned, with the emphasis on Strayhorn ('Snibor') and a long closing Ellington sequence. However, Randy Weston's 'Little Niles' is in there to keep things fresh. This is a highly democratic trio, with lots of feature space for both Drummond and Washington.

Giorgio Occhipinti (born 1969)

PIANO

Italian pianist–composer with an amibitious agenda.

* The Kaos Legend Leo LAB CD 012 Occhipinti; Alberto Mandarini (t, flhn); Lauro Rossi (tb); Gianni Gebbia (as, ss); Eugenio Colombo (as, ss, f); Carlo Actis Dato (bcl, bs); Renato Geremia (vn); Giovanni Macioci (clo); Giuseppe Guarella (b); Vincenzo Mazzone (d, perc). 10/93, 10/94.

Take our word for it, there is no need to be aware of or be distracted by the legend of primeval kaos to appreciate this remarkable record. It is, in any case, not a continuous performance, but two pieces from the studio and two from the Ibleo Festival. That two are live merely underlines what a thoroughly competent band this is and what excellent improvisers it includes. Of their number only Gebbia and Dato are otherwise discussed in these pages, and our enthusiasm for both speaks for itself. Occhipinti himself is not a dramatic soloist, though he does often generate considerable volume against the full ensemble. His style is difficult to pin down – which is probably a good thing. Do try The Kaos Legend. It is one of a kind.

 Global Music & Circular Thought Jazz'halo TS 012 Occhipinti; Luca Calabresi (t, flhn); Lauro Rossi (tb); Maurizio Maiorana (cl, v); Carlo Actis Dato (bcl); Tiziana Cavaleri, Vito Amatulli (clo); Paolo Botti (vla); Giuseppe Guarrella (b); Francesco Branciamore (d). 3/00.

A suite for cellos (who have some sequences to themselves) and nonet, this is an instance of composition which touches lightly and distantly on jazz principles, but which attempts to prove itself in a different discipline. Dato can be heard, rather remotely in the mix, trying to inculcate something a little wilder into what are otherwise strict and unwelcoming structures. Possibly very good, of its kind.

Larry Ochs (born 1949)

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Born in New York City, he was a founder member of ROVA and established the Metalanguage label for creative music.

 The Secret Magritte Black Saint 120177 Ochs; Steve Adams (sno, ss, as); Bruce Ackley (ss, ts); Jon Raskin (as, bs); Chris Brown, Marilyn Crispell (p); Lisle Ellis, Barry Guy (b); William Winant (mar, perc). 6/95.

Understandably, Ochs's solo project is still very much a ROVA family affair. All his colleagues are present, but divided into smaller groupings, as are the pianists and bassists. Each sub-group is given musical materials and a set of parameters as to when and where to play. Beyond that, the music is improvised. Ochs has been inspired by Magritte's surrealism, but it's difficult to hear that influence in these pieces and it's probably best to listen to the five parts (which aren't individually or poetically named) as if they were aspects of a process rather than expressive 'works'. That isn't to say this is unrealized or 'experimental' music, merely that its greatest impact is as an evolving form rather than a finished one.

() The Neon Truth Black Saint 120217 Ochs; Scott Amendola, Donald Robinson (d). 8/00.

Similar procedures at work here. These aren't freely improvised pieces but structured forms which allow the participants the maximum freedom within set parameters. The two percussionists, who work as Drumming Core, are superbly calibrated one to the other. Their patterns are seamless and often undifferentiable, which is impressive and troubling by turns. By the same token, Ochs manages to sound as if he is up to three players, not so much by switching horns – he carries just soprano and tenor – but by changing his attack, breathing, phrase length and tonal range so quickly it hardly sounds like the same player of the previous set of phrases. And the ideas keep on coming.

For a moment on the opening title-track of 'Up From Under' it sounds as if this is going to be less 'out' than most of the records in the series. Ochs plunges deep into the blues and Robinson, who sits in the left channel, gets in behind him, leaving it to the other percussionist to start the revolution. It's intoxicating stuff, not least for its insistence that these guys start in the tradition, however far away from it they seem to stray subsequently. Ochs's tenor-playing is terrific and one wishes he'd spent proportionately more time on the horn; he has a muscular, masculine tonality that hints at what might have happened if Rollins had gone down a different stylistic road. He has to work hard to stay involved in the dialogue between the two drummers, who know each other's moves intimately, but it all works and this is a marked step on for the trio [illegible]

Anita O'Day (1919–2006)

VOICE

The legend of Billie Holiday and the huge, vocal presences of Ella, Sarah and Carmen have tended to overshadow her reputation. A rough-cut diamond, she was the toughest, most dramatic and most fiercely swinging of all jazz singers.

() Anita O'Day: Volume 1 / () ... Volume 2, 1941–1942 Masters Of Jazz 122 / 157 O'Day; Al Beck, Don Fagerquist, Torg Halten, Vincent Hughes, Norman Murphy, Tony Russo, Shorty Sherock, Joe Triscari, Graham Young (t); Roy Eldridge (t, v); Leon Cox, Billy Cully, John Grassi, Jay Kelliher, Tommy Pedersen, Pat Virgadamo, Babe Wagner, Joe Conigliaro (tb); Ben Freeman, Rex Kittig, Sam Listengart, Clint Neagley, Mascagni Ruffo (as); Charlie Kennedy (as, ts); Adrian Tei (as, cl); Johnny Bothwell (as); Walter Bates, Don Brassfield, Jimmy Migliore, Charlie Ventura, Walter Bates (ts); Stewart Olson (sax); Sam Musiker (ts, cl); Bob Kitsis, Teddy Napoleon, Joe Springer (p); Ray Biondi, Edward Yance (g); Biddy Bastien, Irv Lang, Edward Mihelich (b); Joe Dale, Gene Krupa (d); Johnny Desmond, Howard Dulany (v). 3–6/41, 8, 10 & 11/41, 2 & 4/42.

(*) Anita O'Day: 1941–1945 L'Art Vocal 19 As above; others include Stan Getz (ts); Stan Kenton (p). 41–45.

 Let Me Off Uptown Columbia Legacy CK 65265 As above. 41–45.

 The Big Band Years President 547 As above. 41–45.

 And Her Tears Flowed Like Wine Past Perfect 4332 Similar to above. 41–45.

Anita O'Day lived the jazz life. She tells about it in High Times, Hard Times (1983). As a young woman she worked as a singing waitress and in punishing dance-marathons. And she shot horse until her heart began to give out in the '60s and she was forced to battle her demons cold. As is immediately obvious from her combative, sharply punctuated scatting and her line in stage patter, O'Day was a fighter. As a 'chirper' with the Gene Krupa band in 1941, she refused to turn out in ballgown and gloves, and appeared instead in band jacket and short skirt, an unheard-of practice that underlined her instinctive feminism. With Stan Kenton, she gave a humane edge to a sometimes pretentiously modernist repertoire. O'Day's demanding style had few successful imitators, but she is the most immediate source for June Christy and Chris Connor, who followed her into the Kenton band.

These early cuts with the Kenton and Krupa bands are definitive of her desire to be one of the guys, not so much socially and chemically as musically. She sings like a horn-player, not only when scatting but also when delivering a song-line straight. Her phrasing has a brassy snap and polish and, even through the acoustic fog that surrounds most of these transfers, her enunciation is exact and focused. The bands were among the most exciting of their day, or ever. Kenton's outfit called for more sheer strength, but the unvarnished vivacity and raw charm of the Krupa tracks are what recommends this material. 'Let Me Off Uptown' is the classic, of course, destined to become shopworn and hackneyed in later years, but right off the mint here and characterized by a warm and playful relationship with Roy Eldridge. 'Bolero At The Savoy' is a band original, presumably worked up during rehearsals. The Columbia set recaptures the sound with great fidelity and compresses the very best of the material from Anita's two stints with Krupa, though oddly this reissue breaks the chronology to no real purpose, starting with false logic on 'Opus One' from 1945. [illegible]

The Masters Of Jazz sets are pretty complete, not to say exhaustive, and if anyone wants a fuller documentation of Anita's early work in those two packed years before America entered the war, then these are the sets to go for, though we have found the sound rather flat and muffled. Containing more than two hours of music, they should be enough for the most devoted enthusiast.

Much of the material is duplicated on the French compilation, which fills in the years in between and is certainly fuller and more detailed than the Past Perfect set. The work with Kenton is typically more sophisticated in conception and abrasive in delivery. A pair of tunes in the middle of the set – 'I'm Going Mad For A Pad', 'And Her Tears Flowed Like Wine' – emphasize both the strengths and the drawbacks. A valuable and thoroughly enjoyable reissue.

The Big Band Years is a catch-up volume for newcomers or for those with only a limited appetite for swing of this sort. Recently remastered, the sound is very good indeed, with a lot of presence in the woodwinds and some of the tizz taken off the brass and drums. The duet with Eldridge on 'Let Me Off Uptown' has rarely sounded better.

 Anita O'Day, 1945–1950 Classics 1274 O'Day; John Carroll, Chris Griffin, Charlie Griffith, Ray Linn, Jimmy Maxwell, Larry Neal, Carl Poole, Red Solomon (t); Will Bradley, Phil Giardina, Billy Pritchard, Al Philburn, Ray Sims, Jimmy Skyles (tb); Heinie Beau, Benny Carter, Manny Gersmann, Toots Mondello, Paul Ricci, Alvy West (as); Benny Lagasse (as, cl); Art Drellinger, Bob Dukoff, Herbie Haymer, Boyd Roland, Hank Ross (ts); Hank Freeman, Harry Suchman (bs); Dave Barbour, George Barnes, Danny Perri, Tony Rizzi (g); Ralph Burns, Stan Greeman, Paul Jordan, Milt Raskin (p); Hymie Fiddleman (p, b); Bob Gudina (acc); Bob Haggart, Mel Schmidt, Art Shapiro, Phil Stephens (b); Abbie Brown, Morey Feld, Milt Holland, Don Lamond, Frank Rullo, Zutty Singleton (d); other personnel unknown. 1/45–1/50.

* The Complete Recordings, 1949–1950 Baldwin Street Music 302 Similar to above. 1/49–12/50.

 Anita O'Day 1950–1952 Classics 1336 O'Day; Art Depew, Roy Eldridge, James Hanson, Carl Poole, Andy Secrest, Doc Severinsen, Charlie Shavers (t); George Arus, Phil Giardina, Bill Harris (tb); Artie Baker, Will Bradley Jr, Cutty Cutshall (tb); Al Klink, Hymie Schertzer (as); Art Drelinger, Budd Johnson (ts); Cecil Payne, Sol Schlinger (bs); Ralph Burns, Jack Pleis, Teddy Wilson (p); Earl Backus, Billy Mure, Abdiel Valiente (g); Bob Carter, Johnny Frigo, Al McKibbon (b); Johnny Blowers, Buzzy Drootin, Don Lamond, Red Lionberg (d). 2/50–12/52.

The bulk of O'Day's work, and many of her best performances, was made for other leaders, but after the end of the war she turned her back on the big-band scene and struck out on her own. Her personal and professional lives were turbulent in this period, as she describes in High Times, Hard Times, and recording opportunities were sparse. It's some measure of the low esteem her work was held in that the first four tracks on the Classics compilation, made in January 1945 with Lowell Martin directing a fine band that included Zutty Singleton and Herbie Haymer doing his Pres-for-Billy thing, remained unissued. They're fine, swinging performances – 'Them There Eyes' and 'How Come?' particularly – that deserve wider circulation.

It's further testimony to the difficulties Anita was having that the next two sessions, just six cuts, were more than two years away, and there's an unfortunate significance to the moment on 'Your Eyes Are Bigger Than Your Heart', taped in Chicago in January 1950 and the end of this chapter of the O'Day story, when the microphone fails and the take proceeds as if nothing were wrong ...

The Baldwin Street set does a rigorously comprehensive job of covering the later part of the same period, including some rare tracks with a pick-up group on the West Coast.

The most recent of the Classics volumes takes the story into the beginnings of her association with Norman Granz. This wasn't a classic period and it was some way away from her later solo revival, but there's some good material, notably with Eldridge towards the end of the span, and collectors will find the sound pretty respectable.

 Complete 1952 Verve Sessions Jazz Factory JFCD22850 O'Day; Larry Russell Orchestra; Nat Cole Trio. 52.

The real bonus on this is the extra-rare one of Anita with the Cole trio, a transcription recorded for Capitol in Los Angeles but apparently unreleased until now. There's nothing else revelatory about these sides. If you're an admirer, you'll love them; if you've yet to be converted, these are unlikely to do the trick.

(*) Sings For Oscar Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD11237 O'Day; Oscar Peterson (p); Herb Ellis (g); Ray Brown, Joe Mondragon (b); Larry Bunker, John Poole, Alvin Stoller (d). 56, 57.

This brings together Sings The Most and the wonderful Pick Yourself Up, which for us is the iconic O'Day album. The sexy but stern cover says it all. Here's a gal who likes being a gal, but only in her own idiosyncratic way. Even the easy swing delivered by Oscar and his men sounds spikier than usual in these arrangements. A deceptive record, though unfortunately Lone Hill's transfers take off some of the sting and bite.

 Anita O'Day And Billy May Swing Rodgers & Hart Verve 000235302 O'Day; Billy May Orchestra. 6/60.

In the midst of another busy period, this starts on a wild high with a super-fast version of 'Johnny One-Note' and just goes on from there. Most of the songs are played very briefly indeed, sometimes as little as a minute and a half, which gives the set something of its headlong impression, but O'Day is a natch for Hart's clever lyrics and multiple rhymes and there isn't a poor track on it. 'To Keep My Love Alive' is an oddity, but works superbly here, real Grand Guignol stuff.

 Incomparable! Verve 314 589 516 2 O'Day; Conte Candoli, Al Porcino, Ray Triscari, Stu Williamson (t); Bob Edmondson, Lew McCreary, Frank Rosolino (tb); Kenny Shroyer (btb); Charlie Kennedy, Joe Maini (as); Richie Kamuca, Bill Perkins (ts); Jack Nimitz (bs); Lou Levy (p); Al Hendrickson (g); Joe Mondragon (b); Mel Lewis (d). 8/60.

O'Day's Verve output is now scattered across a bewildering array of compilations. This is one of the best of the single albums currently available, a smoothly swinging date under Bill Holman's expert direction. The highlight is an inventive scat on Richard Rodgers's 'Slaughter On 10th Avenue', one of her best recorded performances of this era. She also delivers an inch-perfect reading of 'Easy Living'.

(*) Swings Cole Porter With Billy May Verve 849266-2 O'Day; main tracks with Billy May Orchestra; other personnel as above and below. 1/52–4/59.

(*) Pick Yourself Up Verve 517329-2 O'Day; Conte Candoli, Pete Candoli, Harry 'Sweets' Edison, Conrad Gozzo, Ray Linn (t); Milt Bernhart, Lloyd Elliot, Frank Rosolino, George Roberts (tb); Herb Geller (as); Georgie Auld, Bob Cooper (ts); Jimmy Giuffre (bs); Larry Bunker (vib); Paul Smith (p); Barney Kessel, Al Hendrickson (g); Joe Mondragon (b); Alvin Stoller (d); Buddy Bregman (cond); other personnels unknown. 1–12/56.

(*) All The Sad Young Men Verve 517065-2 O'Day; Bernie Glow, Herb Pomeroy, Doc Severinsen (t); Bob Brookmeyer (vtb); Billy Byers, Willie Dennis (tb); Walt Levinsky, Phil Woods (as, cl); Jerome Richardson, Zoot Sims (ts); Hank Jones (p); Barry Galbraith (g); George Duvivier (b); Mel Lewis (d); Gary McFarland (arr, cond). 61.

 Time For 2 Verve 559808-2 O'Day; Cal Tjader (vib, d); Bob Corwin, Lonnie Hewitt (p); Freddy Schreiber (b); Johnny Rae (d, perc). 62.

The most familiar image of O'Day is at the Newport Festival in 1958, a set preserved in the movie Jazz On A Summer's Day. In a spectacular black dress and a hat that must have accounted for half the egrets in Louisiana, she resembles one of those subtly ball-breaking heroines in a Truman Capote story. The voice even then is unreliably pitched, but there's no mistaking the inventiveness of 'Tea For Two' and 'Sweet Georgia Brown'. The woman who sang 'The Boy From Ipanema' with a sarcastic elision of the 'aahhs' was every bit as capable as Betty Carter of turning Tin Pan Alley tat into a feminist statement.

O'Day never sounds quite as effective with a full band, and May's beefy arrangements tend to overpower her subtler rhythmic skills. Fortunately, the reissue of the Cole Porter set includes six bonus tracks, including band arrangements by Buddy Bregman and Bill Holman, together with a magnificent small-group 'From This Moment On', a second, rather smoothed-out version of 'Love For Sale' to compare with May's, and Jimmy Giuffre's superb, throbbing arrangement of 'My Heart Belongs To Daddy'. The May tracks are virtually all at accelerated tempos (in contrast to the Rodgers and Hart sequel) but varied with Latin ('I Get A Kick Out Of You') or 'Eastern' ('Night And Day') settings. Even so, one would much prefer to hear O'Day swing Porter to the basic accompaniment of bass and drums. She sounds unusually husky at extremes of pitch, as if from the effort of projecting over the band, but these are still more than worthwhile performances, and a great deal wittier and more stimulating than most of the 'songbook' sessions that were rife at the time.

The 1956 sessions with Bregman's orchestra amount to a survivor's testament, a hard-assed, driving gesture of defiance that is still completely musical. The version of 'Sweet Georgia Brown', which she was to include in the Newport programme, is buoyant and lightfooted like all the Bregman arrangements, but the best of the record surely has to be among the small-group tracks with Sweets Edison. An alternative take of 'Let's Face The Music And Dance' is much broader than the released version; O'Day was nothing if not subtle and rarely attempted to nudge her audience. The 1958 performances are well above average and perfect examples of O'Day's wittily daring rhythmic sense. From the mid-'50s, her closest musical associate was drummer John Poole; she sticks close by him, leaving the pitched instruments to do their own thing, and, but for the words, she might almost be involved in a percussion duet.

All The Sad Young Men is a delicious set, perhaps more distinguished for the instrumental arrangements than for Anita's singing, which is a bit flat. The material with Tjader on Time For 2 is every bit as imaginative, but more sparsely arranged and all the better for it. 'Mr Sandman', 'Peel Me A Grape' and 'Spring Will Be A Little Late This Year' are all classic performances, and the 1962 Hollywood session, coming at a difficult time in Anita's progress, is worth hearing and having.

(*) Rules Of The Road Pablo 2310 950 O'Day; Jack Sheldon, Wayne Bergeron, Ron King, Ron Stout, Stan Martin (t); Andy Martin, Bob McChesney, Bob Enevoldsen, Bob Sanders, Alex Iles (tb); Sal Lozano, Danny House (sax, f, cl); Pete Christlieb, Jerry Pinter, Brian Williams (sax, cl); Christian Jacob (p); Trey Henry (b); Ray Brinker (d). 3/93.

She was in great shape for this 1993 one-off, and there's none of Billie's morose self-pity in this nicely structured and immaculately played saga of life on the road. The great thing about O'Day is the fact that she survived without turning hard. She sings gamily and with wit on material like 'Here's That Rainy Day', 'Soon It's Gonna Rain' and the title-song, still pumping out that beat like she's always done. The band is absolutely Rolls-Royce, two generations of players who combine verve and expertise in almost equal proportions. The only quibble: a rather flat and unresponsive sound and a positioning that sets O'Day way out in front, not where she needed to be and always used to be – in among the guys.

Also, in brief:

 You Betcha! Sounds of Yesteryear 602. 41–59.

Some good quality airshots with the Stan Kenton, Gene Krupa and Benny Goodman bands.

* Young Anita Proper PROPERBOX 42–53. 41–50.

An excellent sampling that will satisfy all but absolute completists.

(*) Verve Jazz Masters 49 Verve 517954-2. 4/54–2/62.

With the Verves in and out of catalogue the way Anita used to be in and out of hotel rooms, this is a worthwhile representation.

 Live At The City, San Francisco 1979 Emily 7211. 79.

Apparently not released until 2001, but the tapes are good and the singing is top class.

 A Song For You Storyville STCD 8147. 84.

An attractive but hardly essential latter-day set. Formerly on Emily.

Arturo O'Farrill (born 1961)

PIANO, BANDLEADER

Son of Chico and guardian of the flame. Responsibility for the music chest and an admirable involvement in education have limited his time in the studio.

 Bloodlines Milestone MCD 9294 O'Farrill; Papa Vasquez (tb); Andy Gonzalez, George Mraz (b); Horacio Hernandez (d); Jerry Gonzalez (perc). 7/99.

We now associate Arturo so completely with his father's legacy that we tend to forget he was part of the Carla Bley group for a time. Here, he remembers that association with 'Walking Batterie Woman', one of Carla's most finger-breaking ideas but played with a more stately gait on this occasion. O'Farrill begins this small-group encounter with a fine 'Moment's Notice' and includes Panamanian bassist Santi Debriano's 'Brava' alongside other challenging fare like Randy Weston's 'Little Susan' and Rob Munsey's unusual 'Chinas Y Criollas'. His work with dad is best represented by the swinging 'Arturo's Closet'. Of the supporting players, George Mraz is magnificent and El Negro Hernandez is as vibrant as ever, a drummer whose reputation has still not made the jump from the Latin scene to the wider community of jazz; time it did. Arturo's dexterous style isn't idiosyncratic enough to be instantly identifiable. He occasionally sounds like McCoy Tyner but there's also a strong tinge of Armando 'Chick' Corea about him.

Chico O'Farrill (1921–2001)

COMPOSER, ARRANGER

Raised in Havana, he settled in New York around 1950 and became a seminal figure in the fusion of Cuban music and jazz.

(*) Cuban Blues: The Chico O'Farrill Sessions Verve 533256-2 2CD O'Farrill; Mario Bauza, Paquito Davilla, Harry 'Sweets' Edison, Roy Eldridge, Bernie Glow, Carlton McBeath, Doug Mettome, Jimmy Nottingham, Al Porcino, Dick Sherman, Al Stewart, Nick Travis, Bobby Woodlan (t); Eddie Bert, Carl Elmer, Vern Friley, Bill Harris, Bart Varsalona, Ollie Wilson, Fred Zito (tb); Vince De Rosa (frhn); Danny Bank, George Berg, Lenny Hambro, Ben Harrod, Leslie Johnakins, Gene Johnson, Charlie Kennedy, Jose Madera, Pete Mondello, Charlie Parker, Flip Phillips, Sol Rabinowitz, Wilbur Schwartz, Fred Skerritt, Howard Terry, Eddie Wasserman, Warren Webb, James Williamson (reeds); Ralph Burns, Gene DiNovi, Rene Hernandez, Fred Otis (p); Billy Bauer (g); Irma Clow (hp); Don Bagley, Ray Brown, Clyde Lombardi, Roberto Rodriguez (b); Jo Jones, Don Lamond, Buddy Rich (d); Candido Camero, Machito, Jose Mangual, Modesto Martinez, Luis Miranda, Ubaldo Nieto, Chano Pozo, Carlos Vidal (perc); Bobby Escoto (v). 12/50–4/54.

 The Complete Norman Granz Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJRCD 10172 2CD As above. 12/50–9/52.

The ideal background source for this attractive compilation is the atmospheric novel The Mambo Kings Sing Songs Of Love, whose author, Oscar Hijuelos, provides the liner-note. O'Farrill studied composition in Havana before going to the USA in his later 20s, where he had considerable success writing charts for Benny Goodman, Stan Kenton, Charlie Parker and Dizzy Gillespie. On the strength of a powerful vogue for Afro-Cuban music, he built an orchestra of his own round Machito's rhythm section and recorded a series of 10-inch LPs for Norman Granz's Verve and Norgran labels. Technically the material stands up better than it does artistically. The recordings are wonderfully present and alive, and the remastering offers extra breadth without distorting the syrupy warmth of the originals. At more than 150 minutes, these two discs are a treat for the Latin-jazz enthusiast. All but the very committed, though, might find the diet a tad unrelieved and the pace a little relentless. The two Afro-Cuban Jazz Suites, one recorded under Machito's leadership in December 1950, the other under O'Farrill's own name two years later, are relatively ambitious in scope and content, but O'Farrill was not a man to overlook a successful formula, and the harmonic spectrum is otherwise kept comfortably narrow, with a substantial emphasis on danceable rhythms. One can readily imagine the brothers in The Mambo Kings moping through charts like 'Flamingo' while keeping an eye on the girls at the bar. This is music that requires some other sensory attraction. The Lone Hill compilation covers virtually the same ground in a less elegant package.

 Pure Emotion Milestone 9239 O'Farrill; Dan Collette, Michael Mossman, Tim Quimette, Victor Paz, Jim Seeley (t); Robin Eubanks, Earl McIntyre, Angel 'Papo' Vasquez (tb); Sharon Moe (frhn); Bob Franceschini, Mario Rivera (ss, ts, cl, f); Rolando Napoleon Briceno (as, cl, f); Pablo Calogero (bs); Arturo O'Farrill (p); Andy Gonzalez (b); Elizabeth Monder (koro); Steve Berrios, Manny Oquendo (perc). 2/95.

O'Farrill resisted all sorts of blandishments to get back into the recording studio until the right project came along. This was his first recording for nearly 30 years. The wait did no harm. The charts are strong and punchy and the band palpably can't wait to work for a legend. The shorter pieces are fine: 'Igor's Dream', 'Chico And The Men' and 'El Loco Blues' all have the authentic O'Farrill stamp; but the real delight of this session is what you might call his 'Enigma Variations' – except that 'Variations On A Well-Known Theme' is an elaborate (12-minute) excursion on the melody of 'La Cucaracha'. It's a stunning piece of writing/arranging, and the band eat it up like crickets in a field of corn. Of the soloists, Eubanks and Rivera are the most impressive; both come from musical families – Mario is the son of Tito Puente. Chico's own lad is in the line-up, which must have helped remind him how much time had passed since he'd done this kind of thing last.

(*) Heart Of A Legend Milestone MCD 9299-2 O'Farrill; Arturo Sandoval, Alfredo 'Chocolate' Armenteros, Jim Seeley, Matt Hilgenberg, Robert Ingram, Kenny Rampton, Peter Olstad, David 'Piro' Rodriguez (t); Gary Valente, Sam Burtis, Papo Vasquez, Juan Pablo Torres, Jack Jeffers (tb); Maurizio Smith (f); Mario Rivera (ss); Paquito D'Rivera (cl, as); Jimmy Cozier, Marshall McDonald, Bobby Porcelli (as); Mike Migliore, Peter Brainin, Gato Barbieri (ts); Pablo Calogero (bs); Arturo O'Farrill (p); David Orquendo (g); Ilmar Gavilan (vn); Andy Gonzalez, Joe Santiago (b); Horacio Hernandez, Willie Martinez (d); Joe Gonzalez, Eddie Bobo, Candido Camero, Orlando 'Puntilla' Rios, Carlos 'Patato' Valdes (perc); Vivian Ara, Freddy Cole (v). 12/98–7/99.

A smashing homage to the grand old man of Afro-Cuban music. With son Arturo at the piano and an all-star assembly of the great names in the genre, from Candido to Sandoval, it's a tumultuous affair. O'Farrill's tunes and arrangements won't win prizes for subtlety or restraint, but he has a very sure hand with the kind of massed forces on show here, and for sheer excitement a chart such as 'Locos De La Habana' is hard to beat. This is a tradition of show music, and it's more about larger-than-life virtuosity and entertainment than musical profundity. Works best at full volume.

(*) Carambola Milestone MCD 9308-2 O'Farrill; Michael Mossman, Jon Owens, Kenny Rampton, Jim Seeley (t); Gary Valente, Jack Jeffers, Papo Vasquez, Sam Burtis (tb); Jimmy Cozier, Marshall McDonald (as); Peter Brainin, Mike Migliore (ts); Vincent Chancey, Christopher Korner (frhn); Max Schweiger (bs); Arturo O'Farrill (p); Lewis Khan (vn); John Benitez, Andy Gonzalez (b); Steve Berrios, Horacio Hernandez, Victor Jones (d); Roland Guerrero, Joe Gonzalez (perc); Graciela, Yolanda Maldonado, Sandra Rodriguez (v). 7/00.

Less overwhelming than the last one, but for some Carambola may be the better record: it brings back a couple of classics in 'The Aztec Suite' (written for Art Farmer) and the Machito–Parker showpiece, 'Afro-Cuban Jazz Suite'. While there's nobody to compare with Farmer or Parker here, both are mightily performed. 'Waller Exercise' is almost a novelty item and the only dud moment; the rest is hot and often lyrically sweet in the genre's most appealing manners.

Dave O'Higgins

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Originally influenced by Wilton Felder, later by Charlie Parker.

 Fast Foot Shuffle Candid CCD 79772 O'Higgins; Barnaby Dickinson (tb); Tom Cawley (p, org); Mike Outram (g); Sam Burgess (b); Simon Lea (d); Pete Eckford (perc). 99.

 Big Shake Up Candid/Big City BCCD 79208 O'Higgins; Martin Shaw (t, flhn); Mark Nightingale (tb); Oren Marshall (tba); Alex Garnett (bs, f); Mike Outram (g); Jim Watson (p, org, syn); Sam Burgess (b); Winston Clifford (d, v); Pete Eckford (perc). 12/00.

Fast Foot Shuffle was made in collaboration with the JazzCotech dancers, an inventive troupe based in London's Jazz Café. O'Higgins has never forgotten the dictum that jazz must always be directed to the body first. His easy, loping swing borrows a certain energy from rock without drifting even into view of fusion, and his inclusion of solid jazz charts here, notably a reading of Coltrane's 'Giant Steps' but also the opening 'Bebop', is a sign that he wants to inscribe himself clearly into a modern jazz tradition. The band is tight and funky, solidly anchored by Burgess's acoustic and electric bass and pumped up by Outram's energetic guitar. O'Higgins plays without too much of the insidious Trane influence of this generation. He phrases somewhat similarly to Rollins on Latin numbers, and like so many British players has a touch of George Coleman in his harmonic language. Bebop and jazz funk remain the key to his solo style, though.

Big Shake Up was a chance to write material that would reflect the history of jazz from New Orleans second lines to present-day funk and fusion and to do so without resorting to parody. How successful O'Higgins has been is to some degree contingent on his players here, who are gifted and sharp but lack a certain depth of understanding of the history they are surfing. The results are good but not outstanding, and one longs to hear how the Biggish Band fared in live gigs round this time. Marshall is as illuminating as ever, and Winston Clifford's scat vocals are a bonus. The long 'Are You Mad?' is probably the best cut; no complaints here or elsewhere about O'Higgins's writing.

(*) Push Fuse CD 002 O'Higgins; Martin Shaw (t, flhn); Mark Nightingale (tb); Alex Garnett (f, bs); Tom Cawley (ky); Mike Outram (g); Oren Marshall (tba); Sam Burgess (b); Simon Lea (d); Pete Eckford (perc); Rachel Calladine (v). 6–7/04.

Dumb fun, but the difference, as with a superior Sanborn or similar project, is that the playing is absolutely top-drawer. Tunes such as the opening 'Snowman' would be staples of any typical pub-funk set, except that the playing is as tight, loose and perfectly connected as it has to be, and the results grip and excite. O'Higgins has furnished his technique so comprehensively that it's hard to see another saxophonist equalling the clarity and precision of his playing on Eric Kloss's 'Samba Express', taken at an insane tempo, and in Nightingale, Cawley and Outram in particular he has a team who can match him blow for blow. The pace and the front line vary, and perhaps here and there there's the retro feel that brings such ancient pop-funk masters as Shakatak to mind. But your foot won't half tap.

 In The Zone Jazzizit JFCD 2004 O'Higgins; Martin Shaw(t, flhn) ; Tom Cawley (p); Sam Burgess (b); Sebastiaan de Krom (d). 06.

He's too poised and confident a man to worry about having to re-mainstream himself, but it's good to know that O'Higgins can still turn in a set like this, and still wants to. He's increasingly imperious in tone and Shaw's not too heated trumpet-playing is the ideal counterweight, with just enough urgency to give the set energy but not too much harum-scarum stuff.

Old And New Dreams

GROUP

Founded by a quartet of sometime Ornette collaborators, the group devoted itself almost entirely to his repertoire.

(*) Old And New Dreams /  Playing /  One For Blackwell ECM 829379-2 / 829123-2 / Black Saint 120113 Don Cherry (t, p); Dewey Redman (ts, musette); Charlie Haden (b); Ed Blackwell (d). 8/79; 6/80; 11/87.

Since Coleman started to concentrate largely on his electric Prime Time band and on large-scale projects, Old And New Dreams became the foremost interpreters of his acoustic small-group music. The dirges – 'Lonely Woman' on the first album and 'Broken Shadows' on Playing – are by no means as dark as the composer made them, and Redman adheres much more closely to a tonal centre on all the pieces. Cherry also seems to be using orthodox concert trumpet on at least the majority of the tracks, and its fuller tone sits more comfortably alongside Redman than the squeaky pocket-cornet. Redman's eldritch musette, a two-reed oboe with a sound not unlike a shawm, gives 'Song Of La-Ba' (O&ND) a mysterious timbre.

Blackwell was always prominently featured with the band; the tribute album, recorded live at a Blackwell festival in Atlanta, Georgia, is entirely appropriate, given his multifarious commitment to New Orleans music, modern free jazz and, of course, Ornette's music. The live versions of Ornette's 'Happy House' (from Playing) and the Ghanaian theme 'Togo' (from the first album) are slightly rawer and more extended but show no significant differences over the studio versions. Indeed, the main difference between the live album and the others is the extent to which the drummer solos. The music has faded a little over time, but it retains some freshness.

Mark O'Leary

GUITAR

Perhaps too readily defined as 'avant-garde' but showing influences as varied as Jim Hall and Bill Frisell.

(*) Awakenings Leo CD LR 460 O'Leary; Steve Swallow (b); Pierre Favre (d, perc). 9/00.

* Levitation Leo CD LR 445 O'Leary; Tomasz Stańko (t); Billy Hart (d). 12/00.

 Chamber Trio / (*) Self-Luminous Leo CD LR 425 / 426 O'Leary; Mat Maneri (vn); Matthew Shipp (p on Trio only); Ralph Peterson (d on Self-Luminous only). 1/02.

* Waiting Leo CD LR 475 O'Leary; Cuong Vu (t, elec); Tom Rainey (d, perc). 2/04.

(*) Closure Leo CD LR 448 O'Leary; Uri Caine (p); Ben Perowsky (d). 05.

O'Leary does not use much volume or distortion, which means that his distinctive sound is very physical and personal. It works brilliantly on the well- but ironically named Chamber Trio, where Shipp provides a flowing but never accommodating accompaniment. Maneri's style is so familiar and dominant that occasionally it sounds like his gig, but it's worth concentrating on the guitarist. The second album was recorded at the same sessions, but with another Maneri-circle member at the drum kit. Peterson brings a whole new sound and a new rhythmic awareness to the grouping, but again it's O'Leary's carefully wrought delivery which deserves greatest attention. He's spectacularly good on the title-track, which opens the record, duetting with the violinist over a remarkable percussion accompaniment, which sounds like Paul Motian put through some kind of diffraction grid.

The trios with Swallow and Favre, Stańko and Hart, were not released until 2006 and 2005 respectively, which suggests they may have been brought in to the label as a completed session. The first of the pair is packed with the guitarist's distinctive compositions, open, boppish ideas delivered without undue emphasis or forced rhetoric. Swallow keeps the pace up and Favre gives the metres an attractively off-kilter spin. O'Leary likes to keep his big effects to hand for where they're going to be most effective. The other set has some of the qualities of a spontaneous performance. Much of the material seems to be freely improvised, with the trumpeter's 'predatory lyricism' a perfect foil to O'Leary's guitar. Hart, of course, can do anything.

The piano trio is the most mainstream of the group, and thus least distinctive, but Caine is a fantastic technician and his touch on some of the ballad-like numbers is exquisite. O'Leary also reveals a new strain, a warmer and more dryly effusive personality which makes sense of the Beckett inspirations on Waiting. In no sense is this a concept album. The titles derive from the great playwright and so does some of the austerely humane atmosphere of the set. In his note on the final track, 'Country Roads', Steve Day muses: 'Perhaps even Sam Beckett was more beautiful than is commonly acknowledged.' Isn't that exactly the point? The beauty – there and here – doesn't derive from anything pictorial or thematic, or from any common-stock aesthetic. It is derived entirely from within. When an element of dialogue begins on the opening (title-)track, it is as compellingly non-consequential as in Waiting For Godot or Endgame, but where it leads is marvellous. The interplay on 'Endgame' is intricate, jazzy, pulse-driven, reminiscent of a classic Jimmy Giuffre (who, of course, once shaped a similar trio language with Swallow and Paul Bley), but driven along by Rainey's fine, unvarnished percussion and Vu's squally wheezes and exhalations. If you wanted to cast Krapp instrumentally, the trumpeter wouldn't be such a bad choice and 'Mr Krapps Neurosis' is a highlight, pitching brass and guitar together in a unique collision. Again, these seem to be spontaneously composed pieces.

Joe 'King' Oliver (1885–1939)

CORNET, TRUMPET

A key figure in the first period of jazz history. He was bandleading in New Orleans in the early years of the century, but went to Chicago in 1919 and created what became the Creole Jazz Band; Louis Armstrong joined in 1922. They were a sensation, and made the first important records by black jazzmen. The later Dixie Syncopators was less successful, and turning down an offer from New York's Cotton Club was a mistake; the gig went to Duke Ellington. Out of fashion by the turn of the new decade and suffering from dental problems, he eventually died in Savannah, working as a pool hall janitor.

* King Oliver 1923 Classics 650 Oliver; Louis Armstrong (c); Honoré Dutrey, Kid Ory (tb); Johnny Dodds (cl); Jimmie Noone (cl, as); Charlie Jackson (bsx); Lil Hardin, Bud Scott, Bill Johnson (bj, v); Baby Dodds, (d). 4–10/23.

(*) King Oliver 1923–1926 Classics 639 Similar to above, except add Buster Bailey (cl); Teddy Peters, Irene Scruggs (v). 10/23–7/26.

The third King of New Orleans, after Buddy Bolden and Freddie Keppard, remains among the most stately and distinguished of jazz musicians, although newer listeners may wonder whether Oliver's records aren't entirely eclipsed by those of his protégé Louis Armstrong. Joe Oliver was in at the inception of jazz and it's our misfortune that his group wasn't recorded until 1923, when its greatest years may have been behind it: accounts of the band in live performance paint spectacular images of creativity which the constricted records barely sustain. Yet they remain magnificent examples of black music at an early peak: the interplay between Oliver and Armstrong, the beautifully balanced ensembles, the development of polyphony. Oliver's tight-knit sound, fluid yet rigorously controlled, projects the feel of his New Orleans origins, vivified by the electricity of his Chicagoan success. There is the brightness of the young Armstrong, content to follow his master but already bursting with talent, and the magisterial work of both of the Dodds brothers (only the recording stops us from hearing Baby's work in its full intensity). Ragtime and brass-band music still guide much of what Oliver did, but the unsettled ambitions of jazz keep poking through too. If the music is caught somewhere between eras, its absolute assurance is riveting and presents a leader who knew exactly what he wanted. Oliver's subsequent band, the Dixie Syncopators, was far less successful, troubled by a feeble reed section and cluttered arrangements; but its best sides – such as the furiously paced 'Wa Wa Wa' – are as good as anything from their own period.

For those who want the 1923 sessions on a single disc, the Classics survey is good enough, though remastering seems only average next to the painstaking work of Davies (see below). Classics 639 takes off from the end of the Creole Jazz Band sessions and includes both of the Oliver–Morton duets, seven titles by the Dixie Syncopators and three tracks in which the King accompanies blues singers Teddy Peters and Irene Scruggs.

[illegible]

♛  King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band – The Complete Set

Retrieval RTR 79007 2CD Oliver; Louis Armstrong (c); Honoré Dutrey, Ed Atkins (tb); Johnny Dodds, Jimmie Noone (cl); Stump Evans (ss, as); Charlie Jackson (bsx); Lil Hardin, Clarence Williams (p); Johnny St Cyr (bj, v); Bud Scott, Bill Johnson (bj); Baby Dodds (d); Jodie Edwards, Susie Edwards (v). 4/23–12/24.

There are 37 surviving sides by the Oliver (Creole) Jazz Band, including a handful of alternative takes. This two-disc set is the first to include all of them in one place (one disc, the Gennett coupling of 'Zulu's Ball' and 'Working Man Blues', is so rare that only a single copy of the original 78 is known to exist) and, while Robert Parker's stunning remastering in his first Jazz Classics volume, now deleted, doubtless sounded better to some ears, we have happily transferred our number one choice to Retrieval, for whom John R. T. Davies has done his usual outstanding job. They also include a pair of 1924 titles by the vaudevillians Butterbeans And Susie, with accompaniment by Oliver and Clarence Williams, and the famous pair of duets by Oliver and Jelly Roll Morton. Modern ears are still going to find this primitive in audio terms, but surely the excitement, panache and inventiveness of this incredible band will speak to anyone with even the slightest sympathy.

(*) Sugar Foot Stomp Frog DGF34 Oliver; Bob Shoffner, Tick Gray (t); Kid Ory (tb); Johnny Dodds (cl); Omer Simeon, Albert Nicholas, Billy Page (cl, ss, as); Barney Bigard (cl, ss, ts); Stump Evans (ss); Darnell Howard (as); Luis Russell, Richard M. Jones (p); Bud Scott (bj); Bert Cobb (tba); Paul Barbarin (d); Teddy Peters, Irene Scruggs (v). 3/26–4/27.

 King Oliver 1926–1928 Classics 618 Similar to above. 3/26–6/28.

(*) Farewell Blues Frog DGF35 Oliver; Ed Anderson (c); Dave Nelson, Bill Dillard (t); Ward Pinkett (t, v); Jimmy Archey, Ed Cuffee, J. C. Higginbotham (tb); Buster Bailey (cl); Ernest Elliott (cl, as); Arville Harris, Omer Simeon, Barney Bigard (cl, as, ts); Henry L. Jones (as); Bingie Madison (ts, v); Fred Skerritt (bs, v); Clarence Williams (p, v); Leroy Tibbs, Gene Rodgers (p); Goldie Lucas (g, v); Leroy Harris, Will Johnson (bj); Cyrus St Clair, Richard Fulbright, Bass Moore (tba); Paul Barbarin, Bill Beason (d); Amy Pendleton, Willie Jackson (v). 6/28–4/31.

 King Oliver 1928–1930 Classics 607 Oliver; Dave Nelson, Henry 'Red' Allen (t); Jimmy Archey (tb); Bobby Holmes, Glyn Paque, Charles Frazier, Hilton Jefferson, Walter Wheeler (reeds); Don Frye, James P. Johnson, Hank Duncan, Eric Franker, Norman Lester (p); Roy Smeck (steel g, hca); Art Taylor (bj, g); Clinton Walker (bb); Fred Moore, Edmund Jones (d). 6/28–3/30.

 King Oliver And His Orchestra 1930–1931 Classics 594 As above, except omit Frye, Johnson, Smeck, Jones; add Ward Pinkett (t, v); Bill Dillard (t); Ferdinand Arbello (tb); Buster Bailey (cl); Henry L. Jones, Bingie Madison, Fred Skerritt (reeds); Gene Rodgers (p); Goldie Lucas (g, v); Richard Fulbright (bb); Bill Beason (d). 4/30–4/31.

Oliver's later recordings are a muddle in several ways. Illness and problems with his teeth steadily cut down his instrumental powers, and some celebrated career errors ruined his eminence. Oliver could still play very well: his phrasing is usually simple and unadorned, a very different tale from Armstrong's vaulting mastery, but the quality of his tone and the starkness of his ideas can be both affecting and exhilarating. The Classics series takes a chronological route from the first Dixie Syncopators sides to the final Vocalion session of 1931, while the Frog reissues cover all the Vocalion and Brunswick sessions (mostly by the Dixie Syncopators). Frog's pair of editions don't especially call for a re-evaluation of Oliver's work for these labels, but they're certainly in the best sound to date. The DS sessions are perhaps at least as disappointing – after Oliver's early work – as they are exciting, with some feeble music lining up against several outstanding pieces such as 'Snag It' and 'Wa Wa Wa'. Sugar Foot Stomp also offers the results of two dates where Oliver backed the blues singers Teddy Peters and Irene Scruggs. In excellent sound, with all known alternative takes to hand, these are important reissues which honour the King's music.

The Victor sessions were often plodding and routine orchestral jazz that ran aground on some inept material ('Everybody Does It In Hawaii' features a bizarre appearance by steel guitarist Roy Smeck), and Oliver's own contributions are in much doubt: it's very hard to know where and when he plays, for he may even have asked some of his trumpeters to play in his own style. Nevertheless there are still many records with interesting passages and a few genuinely progressive items, such as 'Freakish Light Blues' and 'Nelson Stomp'. On a piece such as 'New Orleans Shout', where the soloist does sound like Oliver, he shows he can still play with the kind of sombre authority which befits a King.

Eivind Opsvik

BASS

Norwegian bassist working in the US.

(*) Overseas Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 146 Opsvik; Jason Rigby (ss, bcl); Loren Stillman (as); Tony Malaby (ts); Wells Hanley, Jacob Sacks (p); Craig Taborn (org); Gerald Cleaver, Jeff Davis (d); Dan Weiss (perc). 7/02.

(*) Overseas II Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 219 As above, except omit Rigby, Hanley, Cleaver, Weiss; add Kenny Wolleson (d). 12/04.

A Norwegian in New York. The debut mixes and matches its formidable line-up of players with precocious ingenuity. The trio 'Ivandovich', with Hanley on Fender Rhodes, and two solo bass tracks are like interludes in a programme of clever, lightly whimsical compositions which often resemble art-rock as much as any jazz source, although there is some outstanding improvising from Taborn and Malaby in particular. The instrumentations are a ready source of surprise – 'Earthly' features piano, organ, bass, two drummers and tablas – and though there are one or two tiresome moments ('Hertzian Waves' is redundant), it's a very entertaining record. The follow-up slims down the personnel but follows a similar pattern. Keyboards again provide much of the textural variety and Malaby, as he does on so many recent records, plays an impressive soloist's role.

Orchestre National Du Jazz

GROUP

An institution in French jazz, nationally sponsored and with a guest director most years.

(*) Admirabelamour Label Bleu LBLC 6659 Geoffrey Tamisier (t, bugle); Médéric Collignon (c, bugle); Sébastien Llado, Jean-Louis Pommier (tb); Pascal Benech (btb); Vincent Mascart (ss, ts); Philippe Lemoine (as, ss, bs); Didier Ithursarry (acc); Vincent Limouzin (vib, marim); Claude Barthélemy (g, oud); Alexis Thérain (g); Nicolas Mahieux (b, derbouka); Olivier Lété (b); Jean-Luc Landseert (d). 12/02.

The ONJ has made many entertaining records over its various incarnations, and it would be enterprising for Label Bleu to collect them in some sort of set. This recent offering is well up to scratch, the Orchestra on this occasion under the direction of Claude Barthélemy. As usual, the original compositions, mostly by the nominal leader, offer a juicy mixture of styles that the ensemble attack with their exhilarating blend of precision and abandon. With string instruments outnumbering reeds, no piano and a sprinkling of exotic percussion, this edition of the Orchestra is less in the big-band tradition and more of a multikulti outfit – which doesn't prevent them from manhandling Fats Waller's 'Wild Cat Blues' along the way, or turning in the Djangoesque café tune 'Nouillages'.

Oregon

GROUP

An offshoot of the Paul Winter Consort, Oregon became a hugely successful project that makes most 'crossover' music seem bland and unthoughtful.

 Our First Record / * Music Of Another Present Era Universe 42 / Vanguard VSD 79326 Ralph Towner (g, 12-string g, p, syn, c, mel, frhn); Paul McCandless (ob, eng hn, ss, bcl, tin f, musette); Glen Moore (b, cl, vla, p, f); Collin Walcott (sitar, tabla, dulc, cl, v). 70 / 73.

* Distant Hills Vanguard VSD 79341 As above. 73.

Oregon was formed at a point of low commercial ebb for jazz and became a species of Modern Jazz Quartet for the '70s, drawing on 'world' and classical elements along the way. The group's longevity was unexpected.

The early records were largely, but not exclusively, devoted to Towner compositions and were characterized by delicate interplay between his 12-string guitar and Paul McCandless's equally 'classical' oboe. The debut is still rather tentative, but delicately lyrical. The music on Music Of Another Present Era and Distant Hills was widely perceived as ethereal and impressionistic, and there was a tendency (perhaps encouraged by intermittent sound-balance on the original vinyl releases) to underestimate the significance of Glen Moore's firm bass-lines (see 'Spring Is Really Coming' on Present Era) or the forcefulness of Collin Walcott's tablas. The music combined evocative thematic writing ('Aurora' on Present Era, re-recorded on North West Passage; the classic 'Silence Of A Candle' and McCandless's 'The Swan' on Distant Hills) with abstract, collectively improvised pieces (like the 'Mi Chirita Suite' on Distant Hills; a neglected aspect of the band's career) and forcefully rhythmic tunes like 'Sail' (Present Era) which should have confounded a lingering belief that the band were too professorial to rock.

(*) Winter Light Vanguard VSD 79350 As above. 74.

Winter Light was in some respects a transitional album. Simpler in outline and in its commitment to song forms, it is nevertheless curiously muted, lifted only by 'Deer Path' and by a version of Jim Pepper's 'Witchi-Tai-To', an item that has remained a staple of Oregon performances ever since.

 Oregon In Concert Universe 25 As above. 4/75.

The generous use of overdubbing and multitracking led some to doubt that Oregon were a viable live concern. This disc laid that to rest at once. The long version of 'Silence Of A Candle' is absolutely magisterial, and even more abstract pieces like 'Become, Seem, Appear' underline that what Oregon was best at was real-time improvisation, either over regular beats or to no beat at all. Walcott's influence on the group is even more obvious in a concert setting. There is rarely a moment when he is not shaping or reshaping the music.

 Together Universe 9 As above, except add Elvin Jones (d). 1/77.

At first glance, this seemed an improbable association, but Jones's polyrhythms held no fears for a group of such robust sensibilities and the great jazz man throws them nothing that Collin Walcott would not have thought of already. Perhaps because Jones is there, the group sound is tougher and indefinably jazzier this time round. McCandless doubles on soprano saxophone, which has a harder edge than his trademark oboe and cor anglais. There are even moments when Towner might be pronounced Tyner, so rich are the modalities he explores on piano and guitar..

 Violin Universe 40 As above, except add Zbigniew Seifert (vn). 77.

Possibly the least known of the group's records, and for many only sampled via one of the compilation albums. The recruitment of the ill-fated Polish violinist was just another of the ironies that surrounded Oregon at this time. To an extent, he reduplicates what Walcott does on the sitar (and Collin sticks to percussion, tabla and piano this time round) and he occasionally seems to get in the way of the horn–guitar front line. And yet Seifert was such a charismatic performer – reminiscent of Jaco Pastorius – that his sheer presence carries the day.

 Oregon / (*) Crossing ECM 811711-2 / 825323-2 As above. 2/83, 10/84.

Oregon represents a partial return to form in the new, upbeat manner. Clearly, too, the group-sound benefited enormously from ECM's state-of-the-art production. However, the writing seems remarkably tame and formulaic, a tendency reinforced on its successor. Crossing has acquired a slightly sentimental aura, since it is the last Oregon record on which Walcott appeared; between recording and release, he and the group's road manager were killed in a car accident while on tour in Europe.

(*) Ecotopia ECM 833120-2 As above, except omit Walcott; add Trilok Gurtu (tabla, perc). 87.

Gurtu was recruited only after much heart-searching and because he combined many of Walcott's strengths with an individuality of voice and technique. His group debut on Ecotopia is uncertain, though the album's flaws can hardly be laid to his account.

(*) Troika Intuition INT 2078 Ralph Towner (g, syn); Paul McCandless (ob, eng hn); Glen Moore (b). 1–11/93.

The experiment with Gurtu seemed to founder despite successful tours. Whether this was as a result of artistic incompatibility or as a result of his own burgeoning solo career is difficult to judge. Troika would seem to find Oregon in their natural state again. The absence of a percussionist is partially compensated for by Towner's increasingly inventive touch on the Korg synth, and Moore seems to have devised ways of playing in a much more accented and forceful style. There are a couple of free pieces which hark back to the early days, but most of the tracks are short songs that concentrate on particular harmonic and textural areas. Only the longer 'Mariella' and 'Celeste' and, to a degree, 'Gekko' and 'Tower' show much emphasis on structure as a guiding principle.

(*) North West Passage Intuition INT 3191 As above, except add Arto Tunçboyaciyan, Mark Walker (d, perc). 97.

In a revealing liner-note, Towner meditates on 27 years of the band's progress, the corners turned, the understated life-changes and shifts of direction; but, underlining them all, a basic faith and confidence in the kind of music Oregon makes, which is complex, eternally unfashionable and all too susceptible to charges of portentousness. One of the key factors he identifies is the constantly renewed desire to work with percussionists. Though Walcott's name is not mentioned, he is once again the unspoken presence behind this record. The recruitment of Tunçboyaciyan and the young, talented Walker (who has a specialist interest in hand-drums) was a bold and imaginative one. Arto is a more appropriate player for the group than Trilok Gurtu ever would have been, and his drumming on the opening 'Take Heart' helps demonstrate what a jazzy group Oregon could be at their peak.

McCandless once again varies his horns, introducing sopranino saxophone on 'Nightfall', but sticking pretty much to soprano saxophone and oboe. Towner more or less abandons guitar in the middle of the record to concentrate on piano and keyboards; a pity, though it makes sense of the shifting pace of compositions.

 Prime Cam Jazz 77732 As above. 9/05.

No one in 1970 would have bet serious money that Oregon would still be making records half a lifetime later. This is actually very good. McCandless sounds as soulful and songful as ever (with sopranino now firmly part of his armoury) and there is still a rumbling fire in Moore's bass lines. Towner is perhaps too well known now from his own projects to stand out much here, but he plays with grace and intelligence. Walker's synth percussion isn't always nicely melded with the rest, but he seems modestly aware that the hole left by Collin Walcott can't be filled, which is where Trilok Gurtu went wrong. The closing 'Monterey Suite' is lovely.

 1000 Kilometers CamJazz 78032 As above. 11/06.
The improvised 'Relentless Imp' is an indication of how much the group still draws from playing without predetermined structures. For the most part, though, this is formulaic Oregon, perhaps a little funkier than in the old days, particularly when McCandless leaves aside his double-reeded instruments in favour of saxophone. Walker sounds well bedded in, and there's no reason to think they might not go on for a decade or more yet.

Also, in brief:

() The Essential Oregon / () Jade Muse – The Best Of Oregon Vanguard VSD 109/110 / Universe 58. 71–79.
Two strong if obvious compilations.

 Out Of The Woods / Roots In The Sky Collector's Music Choice 715. 78–79.
Two relatively forgotten late-'70s dates, now brought together on a single CD. The earlier LP had another fine version of 'Witchi-Tai-To', but Walcott's strangely brooding 'Sierra Leone' is the key pick.

 Moon And Mind Vanguard VMD 79419 2. 79.
Not strictly an Oregon album but a set of duets apparently rescued from the vaults.

 In Performance Wounded Bird 304. 11/79.
Originally on Elektra this was only the group's second live record. 'Deer Path', the peerless 'Waterwheel' and 'Icarus' are very beautiful, but one senses opportunism with a new label just around the corner.

 Beyond Words Chesky 252. 9/95.
A group marking time and trading on old 'hits'. Nicely done but disappointingly samey.

 Oregon In Moscow Intuition INT 3303 2CD. 00.
With a symphony orchestra. Lush and overpowering.

* Live At Yoshi's Intuition INT 3299. 01.
Upmarket fusion for the college circuit. An umpteenth version of 'Witchi-Tai-To' will put off all but devotees.

Original Camellia Jazz Band Of New Orleans

GROUP

A mix of old-timers and younger spirits in this New Orleans group which was active in the early '80s.

 Original Camellia Jazz Band GHB BCD-304 Clive Wilson (t); Waldren 'Frog' Joseph (tb); Herb Hall, Norman Meyer (cl); Jeanette Kimball (p); Les Muscutt (bj, g); Emanuel Sayles (bj, v); Frank Fields (b); Freddie Kohlman, Trevor Richards (d). 2/80–5/82.
This reissues the two LPs which the band made for New Orleans Records. It's a blend of old spirits – Hall (who was a guest on the first record), Joseph, Kimball, Sayles – and younger admirers of the style, such as leader Wilson and drummer Richards. The band's quite light on its feet and though the recording is a bit flat, it's clear enough to let even Muscutt's strumming come through on the earlier session. Some of the vim seems to have gone out of the group in the later date, though, and Meyer has less to say than Hall.

Original Dixieland Jazz Band

GROUP

A group of young white players from New Orleans. Under Nick LaRocca's leadership they began working in Chicago in 1916, then went to New York and created a sensation at Resenweber's restaurant. Arrived in London in 1919 and played in Hammersmith for nine months. LaRocca's illness blocked further progress but there was a brief comeback a decade later in 1936. LaRocca then retired to become a builder. Their records are acknowledged as the first jazz sessions.

(*) Sensation! ASV AJA 5023R Nick LaRocca (c); Emil Christian, Eddie Edwards (tb); Larry Shields (cl); Bennie Krueger (as); J. Russel Robinson, Billy Jones, Henry Ragas (p); Tony Sbarbaro (d). 2/17–11/20.
(*) In London 1919–1920 Retrieval RTR 79023 As above, except omit Krueger, Ragas; add Artie Seaberg (cl); Don Parker (as); Henry Vanicelli (p). 4/19–4/23.
The ODJB, for all their anomalous position, remain the place to start in dealing with the history of jazz on record. Whatever effects time has had on this music, its historical importance is undeniable: the first jazz band to make records may have been less exciting than, say, the group that King Oliver was leading in the same year, but since no such records by Oliver or any comparable bandleader were made until much later, the ODJB assume a primal role. Harsh, full of tension, rattling with excitement, the best records by the band have weathered the years surprisingly well. Although the novelty effects of 'Barnyard Blues' may seem excessively quaint today, the ensemble patterns which the group created – traceable to any number of ragtime or march strains – have remained amazingly stable in determining the identity of 'traditional' jazz groups ever since. The blazing runs executed by Shields, the crashing, urgent rhythms of Sbarbaro and LaRocca's thin but commanding lead cornet cut through the ancient recordings. Although the band were at the mercy of their material, which subsequently declined into sentimental pap as their early excitement subsided, a high proportion of their legacy is of more than historical interest.

Fifty-four of their recordings between 1917 and 1923 have survived, but there is no comprehensive edition currently available. Their 1917 sessions for Aeolian Vocalion, very rare records, are now available on a Retrieval early-jazz compilation. The ASV CD includes 18 tracks and offers a good cross-section of their work, although a couple of undistinguished later pieces might have been dropped in favour of the absent and excellent 'Mournin' Blues' or 'Skeleton Jangle'. One can hear the band grow in stature as performers as time goes on, but the excitement of their earliest dates remains crucial to the spread of the music.

Retrieval have gathered in the 17 sides which the group made for Columbia in London. These are tough records to find in good shape, and even the usually immaculate Retrieval have had to use one or two less than pristine originals, but sound is mostly fine. One problem with these tracks is that Shields is overpoweringly forward in the acoustic mix, leaving LaRocca almost in the shadows. The earlier performances, though, are up to the ODJB's best, including 'Satanic Blues' (recorded but never-issued on Victor) and the first 'Tiger Rag' to be recorded in Britain. The 1920 sessions have poorer material, but there's a bonus in the four sides the group made for OKeh in 1922–3, with a different personnel.

CORE COLLECTION

 The Original Dixieland Jazz Band 1917–1921 Timeless CBC 1-009 As above. 2/17–12/21.

The Timeless CD sweeps the board, since it covers all of their Victor sessions up to the end of 1921, in lively and enjoyable sound, which gives the best idea of the sensation this remarkable group must have caused.

Original Indiana Five

GROUP

Nothing much to do with Indiana, recording in '20s New York under the leadership of Tom Morton.

 The Original Indiana Five Volume 1 Jazz Oracle BDW 8019 Johnny Sylvester (t); Vincent Grande, Charlie Panelli (tb); Nick Vitalo (cl, as); Johnny Costello (cl); Newman Fier, Harry Ford (p); Tony Colucci (bj); Tom Morton (d, v). 5/23–5/25.

 The Original Indiana Five Volume 2 Jazz Oracle BDW 8030 Mickey Bloom, James Christie (t); Pete Pellizi (tb); Nick Vitalo (cl, as); Louis Measto (cl); Nick Moleri, Harry Ford (p); Christian Maesto, Tom Morton (d); Maggie Jones (v). 4–12/25.

 The Original Indiana Five Volume 3 Jazz Oracle BDW 8031 James Christie, Tony Tortomas, Sammy Castin (t); Pete Pellizzi (tb); Nick Vitalo, Gus Fetterer (cl, as); Bill King (ts); Harry Ford (p); Tony Colucci (bj); Tom Morton (d); Johnny Ryan (v). 1–10/26.

 Everybody Stomp Frog DGF23 Tony Tortomas (t); James Christie (c); Pete Pellizzi (tb); Nick Vitalo (cl); Harry Ford (p); Tony Colucci (bj); Tom Morton (d); Tony Pace, Irving Kaufman (v). 10/25–5/29.

These are certainly pioneering reissues, as hardly anything by the OI5 has made it to either vinyl or CD in the past, despite their evident popularity (they made more than 100 titles during the '20s). The music is a closely argued example of the small-group jazz which several New York groups of the day pursued: perhaps not quite the equal of the Original Memphis Five, given that there were no soloists in the band the equal of Phil Napoleon and Miff Mole, but this is really ensemble music which picks up from the cues of the Original Dixieland Jazz Band. The Frog reissue is a decent sampler of some of their sessions, but it has been trumped by the comprehensive three-disc Jazz Oracle edition. Not only are the transfers excellent, but the documentation is superb, offering formidable research into the lives of all the leading players in the group, and there are a few ancillary sessions which are not strictly the work of the OI5 but which are closely related. Even though little of this has a pressing claim on the general listener, specialists will be impressed by the standard of these issues, and may be surprised at the heat which some sides generate.

Original Memphis Five

GROUP

A generic group-name for white small groups of the '20s, it was first used by Phil Napoleon in 1920, then in scores of sessions from 1922, although it was also used by Red Nichols and Miff Mole. Napoleon carried on using it, even into the '80s!

 Columbias 1923–1931 Retrieval RTR 79026 Phil Napoleon (t); Miff Mole, Charles Panelli, Tommy Dorsey (tb); Jimmy Lytell (cl); Jimmy Dorsey (cl, as); Frank Signorelli (p); Ray Kitchingman (bj); Jack Roth, Ted Napoleon (d); Billy Jones, Joseph A. Griffith (v). 5/23–11/31.

At the moment this is the only disc dedicated to the earliest work of the group that came to be, usually, the Original Memphis Five, although even this one goes as far forward as 1931. Improvisation was often done more in breaks than in solos, but this is primarily an ensemble music, still edging away from the ODJB. It would be admirable to see this huge group of titles (more than 400 78rpm masters) given a proper reissue: so far, although there are some other tracks on a Timeless various-artists disc, not much progress. Excellent transfers of these 78s, all but eight of which were recorded acoustically. Phil Napoleon and Lytell remain the key players: Napoleon's little arpeggiated rip, which he uses to start a phrase, was how he decided to swing, and next to a sophisticate like Mole he can seem stolid, but at least he was a steadfast presence. Lytell is agile, but he never really progressed as a stylist – Jimmy Dorsey, who is on the 1931 'reunion', shows him up.

Oriole

GROUP

Talented and original English-based outfit.

 Song For The Sleeping /  Migration F-Ire CD 03 / 13 Ingrid Laubrock (ts); Idris Rahman (cl, ts); Jonny Phillips (g); Ben Davis (clo); Anders Christensen, Ruth Goller, Fernando de Marco (b); Sebastian Rochford (d); Adriano Adewale Itauna (perc, vib, v); Julia Biel, Guillermo Rozenthuler, Okou (v); collective personnel. 04, 05.

Not to be confused with the pioneering black vocal group The Orioles, this multinational ensemble create a light, almost pastoral sound that sometimes lulls and occasionally surprises. Phillips is the main composer and has a nice, deft touch, though one often feels the group needs a greater element of freedom. Laubrock and Davis are the key elements instrumentally, her resonant sound combining beautifully with his distinctive low-register figures and drones.

Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen

(1946–2005)

DOUBLE BASS

The great Dane is probably best known for his work with Oscar Peterson; he also worked with a huge variety of visiting Americans when he was house bassist at the Jazzhus Montmartre in Copenhagen. A prodigy, who switched from piano to bass quite late, he seemed to acquire his mature voice almost instantly, even receiving an offer to join the Basie orchestra.

 Jaywalkin' Steeplechase SCCD 31041 Ørsted Pedersen; Philip Catherine (g); Ole Kock Hansen (p); Billy Higgins (d). 9 & 12/75.

 Double Bass Steeplechase SCCD 31055 Ørsted Pedersen; Sam Jones (b); Philip Catherine (g); Albert 'Tootie' Heath, Billy Higgins (d, perc). 2/76.

 Pictures Steeplechase SCCD 30168 Ørsted Pedersen; Kenneth Knudsen (p). 12/76.

* The Bassic Trio Steeplechase 37037/8 2CD Ørsted Pedersen; Philip Catherine (g); Billy Hart (d). 10/77.

(*) Dancing On The Tables Steeplechase SCCD 31125 Ørsted Pedersen; David Liebman (ts, ss, af); John Scofield (g); Billy Hart (d). 7 & 8/79.

Even though misspelt and mis-indexed, NHØP's credits as a sideman almost defy belief. He plays on well over 100 currently available CDs, backing the likes of Chet Baker, Kenny Drew, Lee Konitz, Ben Webster and (crucially) Dexter Gordon and Oscar Peterson. He has recorded with younger-generation players as far apart in style as Niels Lan Doky and Anthony Braxton. If his playing on the two Steeplechases from the Club Montmartre in Copenhagen sounds particularly confident, that is because he spent much of his later 20s as house-bassist there. His technique as a young man was staggering, combining forceful swing with great melodic and harmonic sense and a sure-fingeredness that gave his big, sonorous tone an almost horn-like quality.

Equally consistent as a leader, NHØP probably hasn't received his due of praise for his own records. They are all broadly of a piece, largely standards-based, with the group sessions placing greater emphasis on swing, and the duos on a more musing, intimate quality; the ratings above give a reasonable sense of their respective merits. A word, though, for the duo with Knudsen. This is a quality performance from both men, dominated by the pianist's compositions, but including two of NHØP's best pieces, 'Afternoon's Sentiment' and 'School Song'. Worth finding. The bassist has enjoyed a particularly fruitful relationship with guitarist Philip Catherine, who shares many of his virtues; the two in combination are responsible for some formidably beautiful music. The punning Double Bass is an interesting experiment that almost falters when a second drummer joins the group, doubling not just the bass-lines but the whole rhythm section; Catherine is left with an unenviable continuity job, but 'Au Privave' (Oscar Peterson's favourite Charlie Parker theme) and Coltrane's 'Giant Steps' fare remarkably well. The Bassic Trio brings together two live sets from Café Montmartre onto a double CD. As with many of these budget-price sets, we're not sure there's enough material to justify the duration, but certainly they're value for money. Dancing On The Tables explores less-familiar materials and tonalities. Liebman's saxophone-playing is sufficiently light and spacious not to swamp the foreground, and NHØP produces some intriguing rapid-fire counterpoints to the guitarist.

(*) Friends Forever Milestone MCD 9269 Ørsted Pedersen; Renee Rosnes (p); Jonas Johansen (d). 8/95.

Recorded as a tribute to the late Kenny Drew, with whom NHØP recorded over many years, Friends Forever is unmistakably in the spirit of the great pianist. Drew would have loved the straightforward and funky version of 'The Shadow Of Your Smile' and he could not have failed to be intrigued by the unison line of 'Kenny', the bassist's most explicit memorial. Rosnes was the perfect choice for the job; she obviously knows Drew's work pretty well, and she quotes more than once from Dark Beauty, his duo record with NHØP. Johansen is inevitably a quieter partner, but his brushwork on the closing 'Future Child – Friends Forever', a delicate bass feature with a glorious piano/arco middle section, is exemplary. The sound is very good indeed and Phil De Lancie's mastering is everything you would expect from this good friend of jazz music.

* Those Who Were Verve 533232-2 Ørsted Pedersen; Johnny Griffin (ts); Ulf Wakenius (g); Victor Lewis, Alex Riel (d); Lisa Nilsson (v). 5/96.

(*) This Is All I Ask Verve 539695-2 Ørsted Pedersen; Phil Woods (as); Oscar Peterson (p); Ulf Wakenius (g); Jonas Johansen (d); Monique, Monica Zetterlund (v). 7 & 9/97.

These two records are the work of a man entirely at peace with himself and his music. There is nothing to prove, no rival reputations to beat down. Niels Lan Doky's intuitive touch at the controls gives both a clarity and a warmth that make the music come alive. NHØP's opening on 'Our Love Is Here To Stay', first track on the faintly elegiac Those Who Were, demonstrates yet again what a master of harmony and time he is. As before, he programmes intelligently, including a Carl Nielsen theme, the title-song (a feature for the lovely Lisa Nilsson) and 'You And The Night And The Music', which is one of two guest spots for Griff, playing with his now familiar relaxed intensity. The other, 'The Puzzle', is marginally less successful. The second of the two albums is marked by a guest appearance from old boss Oscar Peterson, sounding fleet and unhampered on the traditional 'I Skovens Dybe Stille Ro', a tune that lends itself well to a jazz interpretation. As before, NHØP also includes a classical piece, this time a Bartók fantasia, played with completely idiomatic understanding as an unaccompanied solo. Elsewhere, Wakenius and Johansen are able companions and the guest saxophonist this time out is much more obviously in the bassist's bag. Woods sounds great on the title-piece, blowing with a warm, waxy quality. The vocals are attractive enough, but not particularly compelling. We remain Zetterlund sceptics, and her near-namesake Monique sounds ill at ease in a jazz context.

 Hommage – Once Upon A Time Emarcy 513 189 2 Ørsted Petersen; Palle Mikkelborg (t, flhn); Palle Bolvig, Jan Kohlin (t); Axel Windfeld (tb); Flemming Madsen, Jan zum Vohrde (sax); Mogens Durholm (v); Ars Nova Choir; other personnel. 97.

A lovely collaboration between NHØP and trumpeter Mikkelborg, who brings a characteristic richness of tone and density of texture to these delightful sessions. There is an almost autumnal maturity and poise to the bassist's recent solo work. While still very much rooted in bebop harmony and the need to drive the line forward, he is much more inclined than of yore to dwell on ideas for their sheer beauty, and the session is marked by some of his very best playing on record. The closing 'September Song (Epilogue)' is masterly.

* The Unforgettable NHØP Trio Live ACT 9464 Ørsted Pedersen; Ulf Wakenius (g); Jonas Johansen (d). 3/99, 3/05.

A souvenir of genius. To listen to NHØP's 'The Bach Piece', followed by an extraordinary performance of 'The Song Is You' that erupts into triple-time after a powerfully effective chiming interlude from Wakenius, is to be convinced for ever of the bassist's pre-eminence in his field. This was an utterly inventive group, caught live in Aalborg in 1999 and then again very close to the end in Hamburg. The latter date consists of bebop plus a couple of folk song arrangements by the Dane. Everything he touched turned to music and the sheer power of his attack and articulation jumps out of the speakers here. If you only have one NHØP record ...

Also, in brief:

 The Bass In The Background: A Great Selection, 1962–1992 Storyville 8400. 4/62–7/92.
Rush-released to mark his premature death, this is energized by lots of live material, much of it with the bass in the foreground, so a nice introduction as well as a worthy memorial.

() The Eternal Traveller Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 966. 6 & 11/84.
Apart from a wrist-breaking Paganini solo on 'Moto Perpetuo', this is fairly routine. Mixing him so far forward and downplaying piano and drums perversely underlines what a brilliant backroom group player he was.

 Catalonian Fire Steeplechase SCCD 31017. 9/94.
A fine trio with Catalonian pianist Tete Montoliu and drummer Albert Heat.

Anthony Ortega (born 1928)

ALTO, TENOR, BARITONE AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE, CLARINET, BASS CLARINET

A sideman with Lionel Hampton, then a leader around LA, he incorporated some Ornette-like thinking into his basic bop grammar.

 A Man And His Horns Blue Moon BMCD 1607 Ortega; Hank Jones, Einar Iversen (p); Addison Farmer, Ivar Børsum (b); Ed Thigpen, Karl Otto Hoff (d). 54–61.
This is an extraordinary collectors' piece, coupling up two exceptionally rare albums: a 10-inch LP for Vantage, made from a radio broadcast in Norway in 1954, and a 1961 set made for the Herald label with Jones, Farmer and Thigpen, in which Ortega overdubbed a section's worth of horns onto various tracks. The Norwegian set is in rough airshot sound but finds the young Ortega in urgent, Parkerish form: he embroiders 'Laura' with all sorts of detail. Unfortunately, the master seems to develop a seasick wobble towards the end. The American session is a typical curio of its time, but again the severe intensity of the saxophonist cuts through the procedural weight.

 Earth Dance Fresh Sound FSR CD 194 Ortega; Art Farmer (t); Ray Starling (t, mel); Jimmy Cleveland (tb); Dick Hafer (ts, bcl); Jay Cameron (bs); Bobby Timmons (p); Dick Wetmore (vn); Earl May (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 58, 59.
Originally released on Bethlehem with the title Jazz For Young Moderns (nobody ever noticed the subtitle And Old Buzzards, Too) this fine reissue still comes over strongly and with considerable invention. There are some unusual sonorities in the line-up: mellophone, bass clarinet, a fiddle; and there's a strong sense of restless invention in Ortega's solos on 'These Foolish Things' and the utterly original 'Cinderella's Curfew'.

 New Dance hatOLOGY 6065 Ortega; Chuck Domanico, Bob West (b); Bill Goodwin (d). 10/66, 1/67.
As well as reissuing key work from his own deleted back-catalogue, Werner Uehlinger has also been picking up neglected obscurities on small labels. These saxophone/bass duets and trio recordings were originally released on Revelation, to no apocalyptic fanfare whatsoever. Listening casually, one can see why they caused no great stir. Ortega comes across as a rather more rasping version of Lee Konitz. And yet one can also hear what intrigued Uehlinger. These are clever, dancing pieces. The originals, 'Sentimentalize' and 'Conversation Piece' in particular, inspire a lot of intense playing, and there is a wonderful extended version of the Sandpiper theme, 'The Shadow Of Your Smile'.

(*) Anthony Ortega On Evidence Evidence EVCD 213 Ortega; Sylvain Kassap (bcl); Manuel Rocheman (p); Didier Levallet (b); Jacques Mahieux (d). 4/92.

 Scattered Clouds hatOLOGY 555 Ortega; Mike Wofford (p); Joe LaBarbera (d). 7/00.
A huge gap, with some intriguing 'lost' sessions in between, which make the story frustratingly hard to follow. The 1992 session is a welcome return to the studios and finds him in ruminative rather than urgent mood: the tempos are often dreamily slow, the melodies (all originals by Ortega or his wife, bar Mal Waldron's 'Warm Canto') poignantly caressed, and his previously astringent tone has softened a little. But there are still improvisations of absorbing skill and cumulative power: he's again a trifle unconvincing on the 'out' moments of 'Gone Again', yet the spiralling trails of 'Avignon' or 'Norge' are bewitching in their quiet intensity, with a new interest in soprano offering a change of timbre. The rhythm section are fine, even if Rocheman is occasionally a shade too flowery in some of his solos, and Kassap appears only on the closing 'Warm Canto', a sparse, almost elemental treatment.

Scattered Clouds is akin, perhaps, to a latter-day date by a close contemporary of Ortega's, Lee Konitz. Standards such as 'Body And Soul' and 'Night And Day' are mined for jumping-off points where the saxophonist can spool out his improvisations. Wofford gives him plenty of feeds along the way. It's able, competitive improvising, but it does suggest Konitz on an average day: Ortega hasn't, in the end, established enough personal ground to make this music really grip or stand out.

 Afternoon In Paris hatOLOGY 643 Ortega; Chuck Domanico (b); Kash Killion (clo, b). 66, 02, 05.
Uehlinger's enthusiasm for Ortega has led him to reissue these 1966 duets with Domanico (recorded in California and originally on Revelation) with some superb recent sessions with Killion. The cello/flute duet on 'I'll Remember April' is so musical and well thought out one hardly thinks about the unusual instrumentation. Ortega also takes on 'Now's The Time' unaccompanied and makes an extraordinary job of its twists and turns. There's not a bad track on the date and it's testimony to the hatOLOGY operation that the remasterings from 1966 are almost up to present-day recording standards.

Kid Ory (1886–1973)

TROMBONE, VOICE

Composer of 'Muskrat Ramble' and an innovative player who made much use of mutes, slurs and other devices, he invented the 'tailgate' style. Part of the first jazz generation, he was still around to take part in the revival.

 Ory's Creole Trombone ASV CD AJA 5148 Ory; Thomas 'Mutt' Carey, George Mitchell, Joe 'King' Oliver, Bob Shoffner (c); Louis Armstrong (c, v); Johnny Dodds, Dink Johnson, Omer Simeon (cl); Stump Evans, Albert Nicholas, Billy Paige (cl, as, ss); Darnell Howard (cl, as); Barney Bigard (cl, ts, ss); Joe Clarke (as); Lil Hardin Armstrong, Jelly Roll Morton, Luis Russell, Fred Washington (p); Bud Scott, Johnny St Cyr (bj); Ed Garland, John Lindsey (b); Bert Cobb (bb); Paul Barbarin, Ben Borders, Andrew Hilaire (d). 6/22–4/44.

 Kid Ory, 1922–1945 Classics 1069 Ory; Thomas 'Mutt' Carey (c); Darnell Howard, Dink Johnson, Omer Simeon (cl); Joe Darensbourg (cl, v); Fred Washington, Buster Wilson (p); Bud Scott (g); Ed Garland (p); Ben Borders, Minor Ram Hall, Alton Redd (d); Cecile Ory (v). 22–45.

* Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band GHB BCD 10 Ory; Thomas 'Mutt' Carey (t); Darnell Howard, Omer Simeon (cl); Buster Wilson (p); Bud Scott (bj, v); Ed Garland (b); Minor Ram Hall, Alton Redd (d). 8/44–11/45.

(*) Kid Ory: '44–'46 American Music AMCD 19 Ory; Thomas 'Mutt' Carey (t); Barney Bigard, Albert Nicholas, Joe Darensbourg, Wade Whaley (cl); L. Z. Cooper, Buster Wilson (p); Huddie Leadbetter, Bud Scott (g, v); Edward Garland (b); Charlie Blackwell, Minor Ram Hall, Zutty Singleton (d). 1/44–5/46.

 Creole Classics Naxos 83421 As above, and some below. 44–47.

 At The Green Room: Volume 1 American Music AMCD 42 As above, except omit Bigard, Nicholas, Whaley, Leadbetter, Singleton, Blackwell. 2/47.

 At The Green Room: Volume 2 American Music AMCD 43 As above. 2/47.

 At Crystal Pier, 1947 American Music AMCD 90 Ory; Andrew Blakeney (t); Joe Darensbourg, Archie Rosati (cl); Buster Wilson (p); Bud Scott (g); Ed Garland (b); Minor Ram Hall (d). 8/47.

 King Of The Tailgate Trombone American Music AMCD 20 As above, except add Andrew Blakeney, Teddy Buckner (t). 48–49.

 Kid Ory, 1945-1950 Classics 1183 As various discs above. 45–50.

Kid Ory's '40s albums had Creole cooking tips printed on the sleeves. On his comeback, after nearly a decade out of music fattening up chickens, the trombonist's rhythmic tailgating style was still as salty as blackened kingfish and as spicy as good gumbo. Ironically, he spent much of his life away from Louisiana, going to California for his health just after the First World War, where he recorded the first-ever sides by an all-black group, 'Ory's Creole Trombone' and 'Society Blues', in 1922. For some purists, these – collected on the ASV compilation, Ory's Creole Trombone – and not the Original Dixieland Jazz Band's earlier discs, mark the real start of jazz recording.

The Classics compilation contains only sessions recorded under Ory's name. Leadership switched to Mutt Carey in 1925, and it wasn't until 1944 that the trombonist tried to put together a revived version of the original group. Hence a large gap in the documentation which renders the chronology pretty redundant and enhances the desirability of the ASV set.

Ory's comeback coincided with the big Dixieland revival, and he turned an instinct for self-marketing to lucrative effect. Notoriously difficult to work for, he was particularly demanding of his trumpet-players. When Mutt Carey died in 1948, Ory used the equally brilliant Teddy Buckner and later Alvin Alcorn in what was to be one of the best and most authentic of the revivalist bands. Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band lasted until the '60s, by which time his exemplary stamina was failing and the big glissandi and slurs were sounding slightly breathless. Ory was a fine technician who cultivated a sloppy, 'rough' effect and a loud, forthright delivery that led some listeners to dub him a primitive. Like all the great Delta players, though, he thought of the whole group as a single instrument into which his own voice slotted perfectly.

The ASV also includes some important sides from 1926 with King Oliver and Louis Armstrong, and a group called the New Orleans Wanderers, which was effectively the Hot Five without Pops. There is also material from later that year with Jelly Roll Morton and a jump forward in time to the revivalist band of 1944.

The first American Music disc is mostly airshot material from Standard Oil-sponsored broadcasts in the first half of 1946. There is a brief, fascinating encounter with Huddie Leadbetter, better known as Leadbelly, on 'Bye'n'Bye' and 'Swing Low, Sweet Chariot', but for the most part it's the group with Carey or Joe Darensbourg, with four studio tracks showing Albert Nicholas in particularly good lip. There is some excellent material from the Green Room in San Francisco; content-wise nothing out of the ordinary except for a rather moving version of the 'Rifle Rangers (1919 March)' which must have pleased any old soldiers in the room. King Of The Tailgate Trombone is less individual, Blakeney and Buckner (on this 1949 occasion) rather indistinct and waffly.

 Plays The Blues Storyville STCD 6035 Ory; Alvin Alcorn, Teddy Buckner, Rico Valesti (t); Phil Gomez, Bob McCracken, George Probert (cl); Harvey Brooks, Don Ewell (p); Ed Garland (b); Minor Ram Hall (d). 5/53–2/55.

(*) This Kid's The Greatest Good Time Jazz GTCD 12045 Ory; Teddy Buckner (c); Pud Brown, Phil Gomez, Bob McCracken, George Probert (cl); Don Ewell, Cedric Haywood, Lloyd Glenn (p); Julian Davidson, Barney Kessel (g); Wellman Braud, Morty Cobb, Ed Garland (b); Minor Ram Hall (d). 7/53–6/56.

(*) Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band, 1954 Good Time Jazz GTJ 12004 Ory; Alvin Alcorn (t); George Probert (cl); Don Ewell (p); Bill Newman (g, bj); Ed Garland (b); Minor Ram Hall (d). 8/54.

 Sounds Of New Orleans: Volume 9 Storyville STCD 6016 Ory; Alvin Alcorn (t); Albert Burbank, Phil Gomez, George Probert (cl); Don Ewell (p); Ed Garland (b); Minor Ram Hall (d). 5/54–2/55.

 Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band Good Time Jazz GTJ 12008 Ory; Alvin Alcorn (t); George Probert (cl); Don Ewell (p); Barney Kessel (g); Ed Garland (b); Minor Ram Hall (d). 12/55.

(*) The Legendary Kid Good Time Jazz 12016 Ory; Alvin Alcorn (t); Phil Gomez (cl); Lionel Reason (p); Julian Davidson (g); Wellman Braud (b); Minor Ram Hall (d). 11/55.

 Favorites! Good Time Jazz 60-009 Ory; Alvin Alcorn (t); Phil Gomez (cl); Cedric Haywood (p); Julian Davidson (g); Wellman Braud (b); Minor Ram Hall (d).

The Good Time Jazz catalogue is now pretty much up to date, and frankly there's very little to choose between individual items. The titles are confusingly unvaried and the Good Time Jazz discs have all the legendary Crescent recording sessions, excellent readings of 'Maple Leaf Rag', 'Ory's Creole Trombone', 'Careless Love Blues' and 'Oh, Didn't He Ramble', though not, unfortunately, Ory's own 'Muskrat Ramble', which was one of the revival hits of the mid-'50s. It's to be found on the good Storyville, with Alvin Alcorn's trumpet going sharp as a tack in and out of the melody, and also on 1954.

Plays The Blues has been augmented with five tracks not included on the LP release. Of these, 'Blues For Jimmie Noone' and 'Wolverine Blues' are the most substantial, genuine additions to the Ory catalogue. Nothing else is as compelling and only serious collectors will feel the need for 'Wang Wang Blues' or 'Sugar Blues'.

 In Denmark Storyville 6038 Ory; Henry 'Red' Allen (t, v); Cedric Haywood (p); Wellman Braud (b); Minor Ram Hall (d). 58.

This wasn't the easiest of associations, though very bankable at a time when New Orleans jazz was once again in vogue. Allen's was a restless and exploratory group, while by this stage Ory had pretty much decided that his style was set in stone. Red pushes the pace along and still sounds vital and alert, while the Ory group seems happy to dodge along at a consistent tempo. There are even moments when the trumpeter jumps a measure ahead. The programme of material is unsurprising, with 'St James Infirmary' a high-point and bright, breezy renditions of 'Clarient Marmalade', 'Muskrat Ramble' and 'Indiana/Sheik Of Araby'. Ory's rewritten lyrics to 'I Wish I Could Shimmy Like My Sister Kate' suggest that Katherine has gone to the bad entirely.

Also, in brief:

 Portrait Of The Greatest Slideman Ever Upbeat 129. 44, 71.
Early and late Ory on one disc, which defies logic, but may appeal to those who only want to sample his long career.

(*) Live At The Beverly Cavern – 1949 504 CD85 A/B 2CD. 49.
Transcription discs covering Ory's residency at the Hollywood club. This is a good way to audition the trombonist's music in this period, with clear sound.

Mike Osborne (born 1941)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Born in Hereford, he became a major figure in the British contemporary scene. Illness curtailed his activities after the early '80s.

* Outback Future Music FMR CD 07 Osborne; Harry Beckett (t, flhn); Chris McGregor (p); Harry Miller (b); Louis Moholo (d). 70.
* Shapes FMR CD 10 Osborne; John Surman (ss, bs); Alan Skidmore (ts); Earl Freeman, Harry Miller (b); Louis Moholo (d). 2/72.
* All Night Long Ogun OGCD 700 Osborne; Harry Miller (b); Louis Moholo (d). 7/74.
* Border Crossing / Marcel's Muse Ogun OGCD 74 As above, except add Marc Charig (c); Jeff Green (g); Peter Nykyruj (d). 9/74, 5/77.
A Mike Osborne gig, with whatever line-up, was a furious dance of disparate parts: simple hymnic tunes, wild staccato runs, sweet ballad formations and raw blues, all stitched together into a continuous fabric that left most listeners exhausted, and none unmoved. Osborne's early album, Outback, was rarely seen and highly collectable in its original LP issue on Turtle. Ossie's wailing, turbulent voice fills up the room. He was probably always heard to greater advantage in the pianoless trio with Moholo and the late Harry Miller, but before this session he invited friends Harry Beckett and Chris McGregor to join in. Beckett lightens the sound with blinks of pure sunshine, but he's capable of a darker, freer tonality as well. There are just two long tracks, the title-piece and the more sanguine 'So It Is'. Here, though, it's possible to hear them as two sides of a single musical personality, undoubtedly troubled, fiercely questing, but full of quiet humour as well.

Shapes is a somewhat different proposition, a much more turbulent and detailed record. The addition of two more saxophones and a second double bass creates possibilities that Osborne instantly knows how to exploit. The two-part title-track is an unusually abstract set of themes, certainly unusual by Osborne's expressive standards, but it is a formidably accomplished performance. The absence of piano throws a lot of weight on the two bass-players, and Miller and Freeman lay down a richly suggestive matrix of sound for the front line. Moholo never sounds as if he's merely keeping time: every line and figure has its place in the whole. 'Straight Jack' must be one of Osborne's best recorded solos.

Greg Osby (born 1960)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Born in St Louis, he studied in DC and at Berklee, then moved to New York. Worked with Ron Carter and Jack DeJohnette, then was closely involved in the M-Base movement of musicians with Steve Coleman. Has dabbled in rap and hip-hop fusions.

(*) Zero Blue Note 493760-2 Osby; Jason Moran (p, org); Kevin McNeal (g); Lonnie Plaxico, Dwayne Burno (b); Rodney Green (d). 1/98.
* New Directions Blue Note 522978-2 Osby; Mark Shim (ts); Jason Moran (p); Stefon Harris (vib); Taurus Mateen (b); Nasheet Waits (d). 5/99.
(*) The Invisible Hand Blue Note 520134-2 Osby; Gary Thomas (ts, f, af); Andrew Hill (p); Jim Hall (g); Scott Colley (b); Terri Lyne Carrington (d). 9/99.
Osby's M-Base period and the early records which came after it now seem like distractions from his mature work. It's somewhat surprising that, for an artist whom Blue Note clearly have a lot of faith in, even such recent records as Art Forum and Further Ado have been cut from the catalogue. Even so, Osby set a formidable pace with records of the calibre of those listed above. Zero establishes Moran and Green as key presences in his working group, musicians who can handle whatever tough tasks he can throw at them as ensemble players. Some of these themes still feel like holdovers from his earlier work, occasionally too hung up on effortful time-signatures or excessively knotted melody lines; but relentless work has softened the edges of his writing and opened up what was previously too cryptic a content. The brilliant Moran finds all sorts of nourishment in these pieces – check his 'Minstrale' solo, blooming with Monkian quirks but less angular, more melodious – and Osby's own playing seems fuller, more singing, but no less intense.

New Directions is, strictly speaking, a co-operative effort, but it was picked and planned by Osby. The sextet examines nine pieces from the Blue Note past, along with three originals by the principals. Osby took care to confound expectations of a simple repertory project by creating dramatic revisions of each piece. 'The Sidewinder' is just slightly reharmonized, strung over a tauter pulse than it usually gets, and the result is something refined but unsettling. 'Song For My Father', originally jovially bluesy, is darkened and sprung off Nasheet Waits's ominous patterns. Mark Shim makes a piquant contrast to Osby's terse, metropolitan sound: his thick, foggy but mobile delivery gets a showcase in his tremendous tenor solo on Wayne Shorter's 'Tom Thumb'. A brilliant effort all round.

The Invisible Hand is slightly disappointing, given the mouth-watering line-up. Osby again creates some extraordinary new twists on such familiar material as 'Nature Boy', using Thomas mainly on flute for tonal colour in the ensembles. Hall, inquisitive as ever, does his best to negotiate the music, but he never really seems entirely at one with what he's asked to do, and Hill is at times apparently somewhere else altogether. On the trio performance of 'Indiana', where he counterpoints himself with some discreet clarinet-lines, Osby remains magnificently creative. This is a musician at the peak of his endeavours, and he must be followed by anyone interested in where jazz is going.

[redacted]

 Banned In New York Blue Note 496860-2 As Zero, except Atsushi Ozada (b) replaces McNeal, Plaxico and Burno. 98.

Banned In New York* was sent out at mid-price and packaged like an official bootleg. It documents a single gig by the quartet, set down on a DAT player and rush-released as a report on work in progress. Osby's own '13th Floor' starts things off, but from there he brings in Rollins, Ellington, Parker and Monk tunes and uses the material to fashion an utterly compelling treatise on the tradition and how it can fuel the playing of contemporary spirits on the bandstand, here and now. Each of the musicians makes his individual mark, but it's the way the quartet develops and processes ideas, caught on the hoof, that makes the record so powerful and immediate. Osby has said that he wishes he could release several records a year, in the manner of the old Blue Note performers, and, if the results are like this, it's a sentiment we echo.

(*) Symbols Of Light (A Solution) Blue Note 31395-2 Osby; Jason Moran (p); Christian Howes (vn); Judith Insell-Stack (vla); Nioka Workman (clo); Scott Colley (b); Marlon Browden (d). 2/01.

Got up as he is in fancy old European duds in the sleeve photo, is this Osby's charge into the neoclassic old world? Of course not – just because he's written for four strings doesn't mean that this has any air of the academy in its lungs. Besides his own originals (and Moran's keen melodrama 'Repay In Kind') there is one of Masabumi Kikuchi's translucent lines, 'M', and a reading of Dmitri Tiomkin's 'Wild Is The Wind' inspired not by the movie score but by a Johnny Mathis hit. The strings are used in a variety of approaches, sometimes as counterpoint, sometimes as a single extra horn or rhythmic bank, sometimes almost as a kind of sound-effect. They have improvisational options without becoming soloists as such.

It's a fascinating encounter, but as a record it feels not quite there, possibly because – for all the care taken by engineer Joseph Marciano – when the quartet are in full flow, the sound of the strings is sometimes poorly integrated into the overall mix, confusing at just the point when we need clarity. In other passages – as in the beautiful soprano solo which the leader takes in 'M' – the music is both gripping and sonorously beautiful. Besides, even if you feel like tuning out the strings, there's always the ongoing dialogue between Osby and Moran, which is shaping up as one of the great creative conversations of this jazz period. Their final duet on 'Minstrale Again' (a revision of a track from Zero) makes one ache to hear an entire album, or three or four, of this pairing.

(*) Inner Circle Blue Note 99871 Osby; Jason Moran (p); Stefon Harris (vib); Taurus Mateen (b); Eric Harland (d). 4/99.

Actually recorded before Symbols Of Light, this adds Harris to the Osby group for a set of originals which make an explicit break with song form and blues form – based, instead, on 'several linear, intervallic and structurally based song constructs and forms, some of which have not been investigated to any great extent', a statement of intent which might as well apply to most of Osby's work in the past ten years or so. In pieces such as 'Stride Logic', where Osby eventually solos – or, at least, steps to the front – against a series of tolling chords which cycle around him, the strategy's merits are glowingly obvious. It's often a quiet and best-behaviour kind of record, pondering its options rather than exploding through them as the group did on Banned In New York, and it's among the warmest and most lyrical of Greg's records, astringent though that lyricism may be.

(*) St Louis Shoes Blue Note 81699-2 Osby; Nicholas Payton (t); Harold O'Neal (p); Robert Hurst (b); Rodney Green (d). 1/03.

'I wanted to prove that you can play effectively on these tunes without being patronizing or sounding like a repertory ensemble': Osby's justification, as if he needed one in this repertory-driven jazz world, for giving us Ellington, Gillespie–Parker, Monk, W. C. Handy, Gershwin, even 'Bernie's Tune'. Nothing, inevitably, is quite as it seems or might be expected, with the dizzy flight of 'Shaw Nuff' changed into a line obliged to run against a secondary melody spun off the same changes, and 'The Single Petal Of A Rose' sounding parched, its melody thinned to a bare-wires structure. Extra warmth is added by the deep swing of Hurst and Green and by the surprise presence of that hot-jazz specialist Nicholas Payton, who might be thought to be an emotional opposite to Osby but who eats up every opportunity given to him. O'Neal, at the time of the recording 21 years old, is exciting enough to diffuse disappointment that Moran has now gone his own way. And the leader is front and centre, leaping into his solos. The album's positioned as a homage to his hometown scene of some 25 years earlier, but it's tough, unsentimental, analytical too.

 Channel Three Blue Note 60672 Osby; Matt Brewer (b, v); Jeff 'Tain' Watts (d, v). 9/05.

Osby thought long and hard about a trio record and his notes make absorbing reading. He addressed the material with his two playing companions in mind and the results are absolutely compelling, book-ended by Ornette's 'Mob Job' and Dolphy's 'Miss Ann' and with a stack of original music and virtuoso playing in between. Each piece settles an aspect of the project with decisive assurance, as if, theme by theme, the players were working out a musical problem. That makes it seem cool and analytical, but Osby has never played with more heat and guile at the same moment, and Watts is simply magnificent, even as he refuses to resort to the grandstanding that he uses on other records. It hardly seems possible, but Osby keeps getting better and better.

Also, in brief:

() Greg Osby And Sound Theatre / () Mindgames / () Season Of Renewal Winter & Winter 919011-2 / 9219021-2 / 919034-2. 6/87; 5/88; 7/89.

None of Osby's late-'80s albums for JMT have worn particularly well. He sounds like he's fishing for a direction between modal blowing, funk, fusion, and song form.

 Public Blue Note 97864. 1/04.

Two nights of music from New York's Jazz Standard, boiled down to one CD, with Nicholas Payton (t) on four tunes and Joan Osborne (v), surprisingly effective, on the closing 'Lover Man'.

Roberto Ottaviano (born 1957)

SOPRANO AND ALTO SAXOPHONES, MANZANO

Italian soprano saxophonist specializing in soprano.

(*) Items From The Old Earth Splasc(h) H 332 Ottaviano; Roberto Rossi (tb); Mario Arcari (ss, ob, eng hn); Martin Mayes (frhn); Sandro Cerino (cl, bcl, f, bf); Fiorenzo Gualandris (tba). 12/90.

He has done significant work as a sideman with Ran Blake, Franz Koglmann and Tiziana Ghiglioni among others, but Ottaviano's albums as a leader offer some of the best indication of his powers. He gets an unusually pure and unaffected sound on soprano, rarely going for a squawk or anything remotely expressionist, and it lends his improvisations a clear if somewhat terse intensity. Items From The Old Earth is by Ottaviano's all-horns group, Six Mobiles. The sonorities are hard to predict, brassy at some points, woody at others, and the compositions are crowded (perhaps excessively so at times) both with ideas and with techniques, some of which beg comparison with European composition rather than jazz. But Ottaviano's own solos add a sudden brightness at moments when the ensemble threatens to turn stiff and dry.

 Above Us Splasc(h) H 330-2 Ottaviano; Stefano Battaglia (p); Piero Leveratto (b); Ettore Fioravanti (d). 11/90.
(*) Otto Splasc(h) H 340-2 Ottaviano (ss solo). 1/91.
Ottaviano returns to more conventional ground on the quartet record, which matches him with the gifted Battaglia: loose modal blowing seems to be the mainstay of the date, and it's done with aplomb, although some of the music lacks anchor and compass. Otto takes a stab at a solo album but seems a mite too cleverly conceived: reverb and overdubs distract from the point of Ottaviano's improvising and some of the solos seem like mere technical points-winners.

(*) Hybrid And Hot Splasc(h) H 453-2 Ottaviano; Gianluca Petrella (tb); Tom Varner (frhn); Michel Godard (tba); Marcello Magliocchi (d). 7/95.
This seems influenced by Ottaviano's work with Franz Koglmann, and the mordant humour of, say, 'The Lightwarrior' is something that the Austrian would surely appreciate. But Ottaviano has his own agenda here, with three Carla Bley themes and a solo treatment of Lacy's 'The Raps' alongside five of his own pieces; and his careful sifting of the four horns in front of Magliocchi's drums is fascinating and an absorbing study in light and shade. There are some wryly apposite solos from all four men, with the little-known Petrella at least as outstanding as his colleagues, yet it's the leader's meticulous playing which shines most particularly.

Also, in brief:

 Live In Israel Soul Note 121332-2. 11/01.
Recorded in the clattery acoustic of Tel Aviv's Museum Of Modern Art with a good trio. Poor sound, but the music survives.

(*) Pow Wow Splasc(h) H 853. 04.
Two different groups here, with trombonists Beppe Caruso and Gianluca Petrella offering a convincing foil to Ottaviano's beautifully modulated horn.

Harold Ousley (born 1929)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, FLUTE

A Chicagoan, he worked with Gene Ammons, Billie Holiday, Dinah Washington, and later Jack McDuff and George Benson. After a quiet spell, Harold returned to the studios in his 70s.

 Grit-Grittin' Feeling Delmark 520 Ousley; Arthur Hoyle (t); Jodie Christian (p); John Whitfield (b); Robert Shy (d). 1/00.
Harold's earlier dates for Bethlehem and Muse are no longer available and there might have been nothing at all under his name had Delmark not offered the 71-year-old this session. It's for the most part pretty standard hard bop, though there is a version of the Goffin–King song 'Go Away, Little Girl', famously covered by Donny Osmond. Ousley has a nice rounded tone and a vigorous attack, putting the stresses fairly squarely on the beat. None the less, he knows how to bend the metre to add pathos to a ballad and there are some affecting moments on an otherwise rather anonymous set.

Ovary Lodge

GROUP

Eastern-tinged improvising ensemble whose name and titles belied an often fierce approach to free music.

(*) Ovary Lodge Resurgent 4542 Keith Tippett (p, zither); Roy Babbington (b); Frank Perry (perc, hsiao, sheng, v). 73.
(*) Ovary Lodge Ogun OGCD 021 Keith Tippett (p, hrm, rec, perc, v); Harry Miller (b); Frank Perry (perc); Julie Tippetts (v, sno rec, er-hu). 8/75.
Following his work on Blueprint, Tippett turned for the first time in a sustained way to wholly improvised music. Ovary Lodge has a curiously casual reputation as a group that produced limpid, meditative music, aural haikus and delicately pictorial musings. The reality is very different. Titles like 'Gentle One Says Hello' and 'A Man Carrying A Drop Of Water Of A Leaf Through A Thunderstorm' (both on the second album) don't necessarily help, but 'thunder' is just as much a key word as 'gentle'.

The group's first incarnation was never an entirely satisfactory mix. Babbington doesn't sound easy and frequently resorts to random noise-making, whereas Miller's resonant lines on the second (which confusingly bears the same title) are the spine of the music. In the two-year gap between them, Tippett and the mysterious Perry have both expanded their instrumental resources, while the addition of Julie Tippetts's voice and high-pitched instruments bring a new tonal and textural element. By the time of the second record, Tippett seems to have moved away from orthodox pianism and the overall concept of the group is more sure-footed.

CD transfer and quiet backgrounds make an enormous difference to the quieter passages, of which some verge on silence. If one of these discs now seems uncomfortably transitional, the second is both unique in itself and important in suggesting new directions for British improvised music.

Vardan Ovsepian

PIANO

Talented Armenian with a rich vein of ideas.

 Abandoned Wheel Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 108 Ovsepian (p solo). 9/01.
 Sketch Book Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 142 Ovsepian; Mick Goodrick (g); Joshua Davis (b); Take Toriyama (d); Monica Yngvesson (v). 9/02.
 Akunc Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 202 Ovsepian; Agnieszka Dziubak (clo); Joshua Davis (b); Take Toriyama (d); Monica Yngvesson (v). 04.
(*) Aragast Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 305 Ovsepian; Tim Miller (g); Joshua Davis (b); Mark Ferber (d). 06.
The debut record mixes longer form pieces with miniatures and fragments that don't seem ready for public consumption. The combined effect is of work still in progress, interesting enough in the detail, but not yet fully formed. A Keith Jarrett influence weighs somewhat. The follow-up has some equally interesting things, but working in company even as uneffusive as this, Ovsepian still sounds reserved and inchoate. Yngvesson often doubles his lines in wordless singing, while Goodrick plays his usual quiet and intense game, seemingly apart from the rest.

The two more recent records show steady rather than dramatic progress. The unusual sonorities of Akunc are more so on paper than in practice, because the group sounds beautifully integrated and custom-made for Ovsepian's compositions. The Aragast line-up sounds more of a bread-and-butter working group and it's none the worse for that. Miller plays a similar role to Dziubak on the previous record and his nice linear touch propels themes that otherwise look set to meander.

Charles Owens

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Aspirant leader on the New York club scene.

 Eternal Balance Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT 067 Owens; Jason Lindner (p); Omer Avital (b); Daniel Freedman (d). 5/99.

The label makes much of the fact that these guys had been jamming and playing clubs (notably Small's) together for some five years before this was made. That much would have been obvious from a blind audition of the record. It's a virtue, but it's also part of the problem with Eternal Balance, which seems to coast along with very little tension or drama. A club's definitely the place to sample Owens's muscular style, but what you want to see is a bit of wrestling, not body-builder poses. (Not to be confused with an older saxophone-playing Charles Owens, born 1939.)

Jimmy Owens (born 1943)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

A solid section-player, but fame seemed to elude him.

 You Had Better Listen Collectables COL 6170 Owens; Bennie Maupin (ts, f); Kenny Barron (p); Chris White (b); Rudy Collins, Freddie Waits (d). 2/68.

Sometimes, Owens's phrasing and tone are reminiscent of Woody Shaw, but mostly he asserts his independence and the soloing is always pointed and logical. There are later records, but this co-led debut release with Barron is the only survivor, thanks to the doughty Collectables. The title-opener is a good original hard-bop line, but the best cuts are Barron's 'Gichi', a taut, almost bumptious theme, and 'The Night We Called It A Day'. The reissue's also likely to be valued for another glimpse of the currently renascent Maupin, whose flute on 'Carolina John' transforms Barron's original. Not a lost masterwork, but a thoroughly enjoyable souvenir of jazz survival in the rock era.

Tony Oxley (born 1938)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

His apprenticeship ranges from a stint in the Black Watch band to the house section at Ronnie Scott's. Latterly based in Germany, he is a pioneer of metal and amplified percussion.

♛ * The Baptised Traveller Columbia 494438 2 Oxley; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Evan Parker (ts); Derek Bailey (g); Jeff Cline (b). 1/69.

(*) Four Compositions For Sextet Columbia 494437 2 As above, except add Paul Rutherford (tb). 70.

Tony Oxley served an apprenticeship in pub bands and then learnt a more formal craft as a military conscript. He was a key player in the early days of the British free scene, notably the Joseph Holbrooke trio with Derek Bailey and Gavin Bryars. Later years saw another trio, SOH, with Alan Skidmore and Ali Haurand, and the Celebration Orchestra, which reveals him to be a composer of considerable sophistication. Most of his pieces move relatively slowly, even if there is a lot of surface detail. Large acoustic masses seem to operate in three dimensions, as if rotated round some non-tonal axis.

These albums have enjoyed legendary status for years, and now only Ichnos, an even more adventurous vehicle for Oxley's pin-sharp sound and ideas, remains un-reissued. The Baptised Traveller is the most representative and coherent expression of his gifts. Thirled to a quest for identity, its four themes are calmly questioning, the two horns restlessly ranging over Cline's and Oxley's unceasing shifts of direction. 'Crossing' and 'Arrival', which are segued into a single improvisation, wipe clean almost all formal expectations. Oxley's stately reading of Charlie Mariano's 'Stone Garden' is one of the masterworks of contemporary music, a slow chorale rooted in Bailey's chiming guitar chords. Their almost orchestral quality provides a starting point for Parker's solemn quiddities and for virtuosic percussion from Oxley. The closing 'Preparation' isn't so much an anti-climax as an afterthought.

Four Compositions was a title guaranteed to offend anyone who wanted to set aside any implication of predetermined structures. In the event, Oxley's ideas are all geared to solo improvisation. The opening of 'Saturnalia' is a mordant fanfare that announces the arrival of Evan Parker, Kenny Wheeler and Derek Bailey. The long 'Amass' is constructed from a graphic score and gives Rutherford, the sole newcomer from the previous album, his most effective moments. The disc ends with the scratchy 'Megaera', an exercise in sonic conflict that doesn't entirely convince.

Even 30 years on, one marvels at Columbia/CBS investing in music like this. That it was a brief experiment is no surprise. That it was so commandingly creative is a source of renewed delight.

(*) The Tony Oxley/Alan Davie Duo a/1/1 005 Oxley; Alan Davie (p, clo, sno, bcl, perc). 74, 75.

* Alan Davie Music Workshop ADMW 005 As above. 1, 6 & 9/74, 3/75.

Davie is a Scottish-born painter whose early work paralleled Jackson Pollock's much-mythologized discovery of archetypal shapes in otherwise abstract art. Davie is also a formidable musician and very much of a mind with Oxley. The first duo reissue includes two extra tracks, but the heart of the session consists of relatively short improvisations based on prearranged instrumental combinations. So 'Cavern Of The Snail' is for cello and ring-modulated cymbals; 'Bird Trap' for cello again, but this time with Oxley dabbling in strings himself with some very odd violin-playing. It's at least consistent with his interest in the sustained tones that can be had from electronics, and the two extra tracks, 'Fish Fascinator' and 'On The Seashore' (titles that sound very much like Davie canvases), are awash with crudely synthesized sounds. There's no outstanding track, just a record of a highly sympathetic musical encounter.

 The Advocate Tzadik TZ7618 Oxley; Derek Bailey (g). 75, 5/06.

The final track is a solo recorded after Bailey's death as a memorial. The association of course goes back to the days when they were two thirds of Joseph Holbrooke. Without the presence of Gavin Bryars the language of the duo is terser and in some places almost combative, as if two like-minded players were engaged in a (mostly) good-natured tussle. The opening 'Sheffield Phantoms' is terrific and Oxley's amplified percussion is as strikingly original as ever.

(*) The Tony Oxley Quartet Incus CD15 Oxley; Pat Thomas (ky, elec); Derek Bailey (g); Matt Wand (drum machine, tape switchboard). 4/92.

This quartet session (recorded by WDR, Cologne) is a memorable reunion with Bailey as well as a meeting with two talented younger members of British improv. There are three quartet pieces, one trio (minus Oxley) and a duet between each of the four players. The opening quartet is a mesmerizing feeling-the-way performance, the soundscape wide open, with every man vital, nobody overplaying, each sound of interest. Thomas varies between analogue-synth wheezes and crisp digital arpeggios, while Wand's bricolage of found sounds and drumbeats redefines notions of minimalism. Bailey remains imperturbably himself, and his duet with Oxley is a superb co-operative battle of wits. Tony continues to make free pulse out of crashings and bangings that in other hands would be unmusical.

(*) The Enchanted Messenger Soul Note 1231284 Oxley; Bill Dixon (t, flhn); Johannes Bauer (tb); Ernst-Ludwig Petrowsky (sax, cl); Frank Gratkowski (sax, bcl); Philipp Wachsmann (vn, elec); Alex Kolkowski (vn); Marcio Mattos, Alfred Zimmerlin (clo); Pat Thomas (p, elec); Stefan Hölker, Tony Levin, Joe Thönes (d, perc); Matt Wand (elec); Phil Minton (v). 11/94.

A superb large-scale composition for Oxley's Celebration Orchestra, performed at the 1994 JazzFest Berlin, The Enchanted Messenger consists of 19 interrelated parts or sections. The ensemble is very percussion-heavy, though Oxley doubles as drummer and conductor. The key soloists are trumpeter Bill Dixon, whose spirit suffuses the occasion almost as much as Oxley's, and violinist Philipp Wachsmann, who always seems entirely at home in large ensembles like this.

Some of the material is atonal or pantonal, but, as ever, Oxley gives a strong impression of pulse and swing. The balance of strings and winds isn't quite ideal and the sections fight in the mix, but it is possible to follow the course of this intriguing performance as it gradually dismantles its own initial premisses and pushes out into areas of freedom which only the London Jazz Composers' Orchestra and Globe Unity Orchestra have been able to explore with similar conviction. The use of electronics is what sets Oxley's ensemble apart from either of these. Wand, Thomas and Wachsmann create richly abstract textures, against which the acoustic instruments sound oddly alienated and strange. Not an easy record to absorb in just one or two sittings, but one that repays careful and prolonged attention.

Also, in brief:

() Floating Phantoms a/l/l 001 99.

The inaugural release on FMP's spin-off label is a disappointment, despite the presence of Philipp Wachsmann (vn, elec), Pat Thomas (ky) and Matt Wand (elec).

() Triangular Screen Sofa 501. 3 & 5/00.

Tony here plays his acoustic set with tape backgrounds, which diminishes the flexibility of his response. Ivar Grydeland (g) and Tonny Kluften (b) seem content to play a relatively supportive role.

Hot Lips Page (1908–54)

TRUMPET, MELLOPHONE

Oran Thaddeus Page grew up in Texas and was bound for a medical career when his mother started him on music lessons. He worked in the oilfield before being recruited to the Blue Devils, led by Walter Page (who, he sometimes claimed, was a kinsman); worked with Basie in his classic orchestra and was admired for a warm, full tone, hence the nickname.

(*) Pagin' Mr Page: His Greatest Recordings 1932–1946 ASV CD AJA 5437 Page; very large personnel; for detail, see Classics sets below. 12/32–46.

 Hot Lips Page 1938–1940 Classics 561 Page; Bobby Moore, Eddie Mullens(t); George Stevenson, Harry White(tb); Ben Smith, Buster Smith(cl, as); Jimmy Powell, Ulysses Scott, Don Stovall(as); Ben Williams(as, ts); Don Byas, Sam Davis, Ernie Powell, Sam Simmons, Benny Waters(ts); Pete Johnson, Jimmy Reynolds(p); John Collins, Connie Wainwright(g); Abe Bolar, Wellman Braud(b); A. G. Godley, Ed McConney, Alfred Taylor(d); Romayne Jackson, Bea Morton, Delores Payne, Ben Powers, The Harlem Highlanders (v). 3/38–12/40.

(*) Hot Lips Page 1940–1944 Classics 809 Page; Jesse Brown, Joe Keyes(t); Vic Dickenson, Benny Morton(tb); Earl Bostic, Benjamin Hammond, George Johnson, Floyd 'Horsecollar' Williams(as); Don Byas, Ike Quebec, Ben Webster, Lem Johnson, Lucky Thompson(ts); Ace Harris, Leonard Feather, Clyde Hart, Hank Jones(p); Sam Christopher Allen(g); Teddy Bunn(g, v); Al Lucas, John Simmons, Carl 'Flat Top' Wilson(b); Ernest 'Bass' Hill(b, bb); Big Sid Catlett, Jack Parker, Jesse Price(d). 12/40–11/44.

An Armstrong imitator who never quite made it out of that constricting sack, Page has always hovered just below the threshold of most fans' attention. Realistically, he is a much less accomplished player who wasted much of his considerable talent on pointless jamming and dismal but lucrative rhythm and blues. The material recorded for Bluebird in April 1938 features a band that might have gone places had Page not been forced to disband. At the beginning of 1940 he was recording with the remarkable Buster Smith, a Texan out of Ellis County, who became a mainstay of the Kansas City sound during the war years and after. These are fine sides, not altogether improved by some very odd remastering wobbles, but they're surpassed by the four cuts made for Decca towards the end of the year with Pete Johnson and Don Byas, which (leaving aside an indifferent vocal by Bea Morton) are among the best of the period and unjustly neglected.

The title of the second Classics volume is slightly misleading. There is, to be sure, material from 1940 and from 1944, but nothing in between. Some of the interim period is covered in various bootlegged jam sessions which may be available. The drummerless 1940 group with Feather, Bunn and Hill is very good indeed, with Hill a considerable surprise for a bass-player of his day. Page also shows off his touch on the now seldom used mellophone. The real treat on this volume, though, is the later material featuring Byas. As Anatol Schenker's informative liner-notes suggest, 'These Foolish Things' is one of the high-points of '40s saxophone jazz, worth playing to unsuspecting experts for a guess at the saxophonist involved. There are giveaway phrases here and there but, at these sessions for Commodore, Byas excelled himself. There is some Savoy material from June 1944, a bigger group in which Byas has to give ground to the great Ben Webster; but it is the two dates for Milt Gabler's label which stand out. Even the quasi-novelty items like 'The Blues Jumped A Rabbit' are excellent. It wouldn't be a Classics volume without an early appearance from a star of the future. On the last session, from November 1944, Hank Jones makes his recording debut backing Page, Dickenson and the very fine Thompson on 'The Lady In Bed' and 'Gee, Baby, Ain't I Good For You?'.

The ASV compilation is able to range more widely than Classics because it takes in material made for other leaders – Moten, Basie, Chu Berry, Artie Shaw, Albert Ammons and Eddie Condon – but does also sample the sessions of April 1938, January, November and December 1940, and June and September 1944. The sound is very good but, given how much of this material is available from other sources, it will be of limited value to anyone who isn't simply looking for a quick introduction to Page's work. For a quick comparison of sound, compare the Classics transfer of 'I Let A Song Go Out Of My Heart' with this. No comparison at all, really.

 After Hours In Harlem HighNote HCD 7031 Page; Joe Guy(t); Rudy Williams(as); Herbie Fields(ts); Donald Lambert, Thelonious Monk(p); Tiny Grimes(g); other personnel unidentified. 40, 41?
Originally released on Onyx in 1973, this fascinating set represents the work of jazz fan Jerry Newman who, like Dean Benedetti with Charlie Parker, staked out his favourite musicians and recorded them on a portable machine. Over the years, he accumulated an astonishing archive. Not the least remarkable of these recordings are the first documented performances of Thelonious Monk, heard with Page and Joe Guy on 'Sweet Georgia Brown' and 'Topsy'. The disc would be valuable for that alone but, coupled with its picture of Page at work away from the studio, it helps fill out some aspects of his playing style, not least how much more of an Armstrong imitator he seems on record than in front of a live audience, when more of his wry, reckless nature comes through. The tones are bright enough to come off a shaky source-tape and Page's solo development has a nicely asymmetrical logic which is very different from Pops and from almost anyone else on the scene at the time. There is also a nice example of his singing, on 'Yazoo'; again very different from the master, but not without its charms.

 Hot Lips Page 1944–1946 Classics 950 Page; Billy Butterfield, Buck Clayton(t); Bobby Hackett(co); Vic Dickenson, Lou McGarity, Benny Morton, Jack Teagarden, Sandy Williams(tb); Earl Bostic, Earle Warren(as); Ernie Caceres(cl); Don Byas, Nick Caiazza, John Hartzfield, Lucky Thompson, Ben Webster(ts); Johnny Guarnieri, Hank Jones, Lannie Scott, Rufus Webster(p); Sam Allen, Danny Barker, Herb Ellis(g); Al Hall, Slam Stewart, Carl 'Flat Top' Wilson(b); Big Sid Catlett, Buford Oliver, Specs Powell, Jesse Price(d). 12/44–9/46.
Between 1944 and 1946, Lips recorded for Savoy, Commodore, Onyx, Foxy and Columbia and made a couple of V-Disc sessions as well with the All-Stars. That's just about where this chapter of the story begins, with an original tune, 'Miss Martingale'. There's a bit of a break in the story after that until the vocal 'Bloodhound' for Onyx in September 1945, when things started to look a touch brighter for the business with the end of hostilities. Page's best playing was possibly behind him at this point, but there are still some striking good solos and singing spots, notably on 'Love You Funny Thing' and 'They Raided The Joint', a collaboration with Roy Eldridge. It's all bright and unaffected stuff and the Page horn still rings loud when he gets the space to solo over a supportive foundation.

Also, in brief:

(*) Hot Lips Page 1946–1950 Classics 1199. 10/46–2/50.
A stray final title for Apollo, then sessions for Harmony and, surprisingly, Columbia. Lips sings and mugs his way through some pretty average material.

(*) Dr. Jazz: Volume 6 – 1951–1952 Storyville STCD 6046. 12/51–3/52.
Late airshots broadcast from Stuyvesant Casino at 2nd and 9th in New York City, under the auspices of drummer George Wettling's group.

Pago Libre

GROUP

Named after the initial letters of original group members – who included Lars Lindvall and Steve Goodman – this long-standing unit works in a delicate and evocative avant-garde strain.

 Pago Libre / (*) Wake Up Call: Live In Italy /  Cinémagique /  Phoenix: Live In Salzburg & Zurich Leo CD LR 354 / 272 / TCB 01112 / Leo CD LR 377 Arkady Shilkloper(frhn, flhn, alphorn); Tscho Theissing(vn); John Wolf Brennan(p); Daniele Patumi(b). 95; 97; 01; 12/02, 2/03..
* Stepping Out Leo CD LR 444 As above, except omit Patumi; add Georg Breinschmid(db, v). 05.
Pago Libre's unusual instrumentation and romantic sensibility give its work an appealing accessibility. Brennan is a master of this idiom, and his companions are absolutely like-minded.

The group's first recording, Extempora, released on Splasc(h) in 1990, is currently unavailable. Pago Libre was originally released on Bellophon and has since been reissued by Leo. The same disc has also been available on L&R as Titles. All four members contribute material, but Theissing's opening 'Rochade' is a standout track, cleverly pitched in a difficult, off-centre metre. 'J.P.S. (& Carla)' is marked by some curious Hot Club effects, and there is an elegant four-part 'Stream Of Consciousness' suite by Patumi.

The other key track is the vibrant 'Wake-Up Call', which became the title of a subsequent Leo release. This was recorded to two-track at the Sol-Fest open-air festival in Sicily, which perhaps explains its bright and optimistic cast. Theissing's title-piece gets the set under way with a gentle urgency. Brennan is featured on his own 'Toccattacca', a brilliant sequence that includes Fibonacci series, palindromic inversions and a kind of sun-kissed serialism. Shilkloper switches to flugelhorn for both his own 'Folk Song' and Brennan's 'Kabak', the latter an unexpectedly funky theme that provides the record's main climax.

Cinémagique is, as it sounds, a collection of imaginary soundtracks, but unlike most such projects this is not an excuse for fragmentary writing and bland fade-outs. Brennan once studied under film music maestro Ennio Morricone, and some of those lessons may well be surfacing here in these moody interiors and poised mises-en-scène. Many of the pieces seem closer to modern classical music than to jazz, but the varied sonority is endlessly beguiling, and in 'Synopsis' and 'Suonatina' Pago Libre has added a couple more evergreens to its repertoire, to put alongside 'Wake-Up Call' and 'Rochade'.

The second live record (mostly recorded in Salzburg despite the subtitle) is both a comforting summation and a step forward. Shilkloper demonstrates on 'Alpine Trail' that his horn-playing is still evolving. Brennan's 'Karelian Kink' (a nod to Sibelius), 'Synopsis' and 'Suonatina' confirm the vividness of his writing, while the other members fare every bit as well as ever. 'Phoenix: Rising' is a group improvisation that sees them battle to be free of a familiar 'style', but it's the dullest piece not just on the record but in their entire recorded canon.

The most recent disc finds the group settled into its language, still playfully exploring, still able to delight and intrigue in equal measure.

Also, in brief:

(*) Shooting Stars And Traffic Lights Leo CD LR 477. 94.
Not strictly a PL album, with John Voirol (sax, synthophone) and Alex Cline (d) also involved, but it's back in circulation and a further welcome insight into Brennan's post-jazz.

Marty Paich (1925–95)

ARRANGER

Originally a piano-player, the Californian trained at UCLA and became a key post-war arranger.

 Jazz For Relaxation VSOP 27 Paich; Larry Bunker(vib); Howard Roberts(g); Joe Mondragon(b); Frank Capp(d). 8–9/56.
 The Marty Paich Quartet VSOP 10 Paich; Art Pepper(as); Buddy Clark(b); Frank Capp(d). 8/56.
Paich's not a performer to get excited by, even if Jazz For Relaxation is more upbeat than the title suggests; the cover's certainly quite exciting, so much so that Roberts and Capp aren't mentioned in the credits! Paich was recording a good deal in small-group situations at this time, though the bulk of his work was writing charts for others. The quartet date from the same month – originally released on Tampa – is useful for a glimpse of Pepper in notably laid-back form, but relishing the relaxedly solid accompaniment.

(*) The Picasso Of Big Band Jazz Candid CCD 79031 Paich; Buddy Childers, Jack Sheldon(t); Herbie Harper(tb); Bob Enevoldsen(tb, vtb); Vincent DeRosa(frhn); Herb Geller(as); Bob Cooper, Bill Perkins(ts); Joe Mondragon(b); Mel Lewis(d). 6/57.
It's a nice conceit, Paich as a mural painter in bright, summery colours, and it goes some way towards defining the music. There's perhaps just a touch of analytical cubism in the charts, a feeling that distortions to the familiar tonality are made because they can be, rather than for any obvious expressive reason. But there's no point flogging a useful metaphor or dissecting music that's every bit as much about relaxation as the VSOPs.

(*) A Jazz Band Ball VSOP 23 Paich; Don Fagerquist, Jack Sheldon(t); Bob Enevoldsen, Stu Williamson(vtb); Buddy Clark(b); Mel Lewis(d). 7/57.
Paich's skills as a combo arranger become clearer on this. 'Ida' and 'Dinah' are transformed into downbeat meditations, while 'Jumpin' At The Woodside' is turned into a driving, modernistic piece with bebop; 'Yardbird Suite' closes with the new music more directly but in a distinctly original way. A lovely integration of voices.

 Modern Touch Lone Hill LHJR 10186 Paich; Conte Candoli, Al Porcino, Jack Sheldon(t); Stu Williamson(t, vtb); Bob Enevoldsen(vtb); George Roberts(btb); Vincent DeRosa(frhn); Jimmy Giuffre(cl, bs); Art Pepper(as); Bill Perkins(ts); Bill Hood(bs) Russ Freeman(p); Victor Feldman(vib); Scott LaFaro, Joe Mondragon(b); Mel Lewis(d). 1 & 7/59.
This brings together two Paich albums, The Broadway Bit and I Get A Boot Out Of You. The mix of show tunes and originals gives a nicely balanced feel and the orchestras, somewhat different on the two sets, sound well-rehearsed and freshly scrubbed and shaved; there's a clarity to the playing which is hard not to admire.

Also, in brief:

 Marty Paich Trio VSOP 64. 6/57.
Red Mitchell (b) and Mel Lewis (d) carry off the honours.

 Take Me Along Cloud 9 58111. 59.
Four piano-players – Paich, Pete Jolly, Jimmy Rowles, John Williams – and a good studio band. A curious sound and curiously addictive.

Jeff Palmer (born 1951)

ORGAN

Born in New York. He's a specialist, not a doubler; actually began as a self-taught accordionist.

(*) Abracadabra Soul Note 121201 Palmer; Dave Liebman(ss); John Abercrombie(g syn); Adam Nussbaum(d). 87.
Well-named. This top-flight group seems to coax magical sounds out of the air. Palmer has explored areas of the Hammond that are seldom heard in a jazz context. Some of it veers towards Sun Ra-style space-organ effects, but mostly it's fast and funky, as on the opening 'Hip Slick'. Liebman's plaintive but strong-willed soprano and Abercrombie's use of the guitar-synth help create a sound-world that is now perhaps a little dated, though Abracadabra is more than a period piece.

 Ease On Audioquest 1014 Palmer; Arthur Blythe(as); John Abercrombie(g); Victor Lewis(d). 92.
 Island Universe Soul Note 121301 As above, except omit Lewis; add Rashied Ali(d). 3/94.
A carbon copy of the earlier band in some respects, except that Abercrombie seems to be playing more straight-ahead jazz lines and Blythe is a very different kind of saxophonist to Liebman, funkier and more obviously in a groove but still atmospheric enough to fit into Palmer's aesthetic. The tracks on Ease On are mostly long and, with the exception of McCoy Tyner's 'Blues On The Corner', Palmer originals. The only disappointment is 'Modal Scallopini', which sounds too similar to half a dozen other tunes you can't quite recall the name of. 'Ease On' is fine, and 'Gas Mask' is the sort of closing shot that guarantees you'll pay a return visit.

Island Universe confirms it's no fluke. Ali's recruitment in place of the excellent Lewis gives the session a different cachet and perhaps starts the listener wondering whether Alice Coltrane might be another place to start looking for influences; the Larry Young strain long since won out over Jimmy Smith. Blythe was returning to form in these years and he sounds stronger by the track, especially if the track is the off-kilter blues 'Amerigo'.

Also, in brief:

 Shades Of The Pine Reservoir RSR 137. 9/94.
A fresh contemporary take on the '60s sax/guitar/organ/drums situation.

 Burnin' The Blues Consolidated Artists 949. 4/99.
The Jimmy Smith influence rears again with this bluesy set, marking a return of the repressed rather than a fresh exploration of roots.

Andy Panayi (born 1964)

TENOR AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES, FLUTES

Rock-solid British player with excellent ideas.

 Blown Away /  Whooee! Ronnie Scott's Jazz JHCD057 / Mainstem MSTCD0023 Panayi; Mark Nightingale(tb); Simon Woolf(b); Mark Taylor(d). 96; 94.
 News From Blueport Woodville WVCD109 As above, except omit Taylor; add Steve Brown(d). 04.
 Time Displaced Mainstem MSTCD0028 Panayi; Pat White(t); Mark Nightingale(tb); Phil Robson(g); David Newton, Gareth Williams(p); Laurence Cottle, Mark Hodgson(b); Steve Brown, Ian Thomas(d). 01.
Andy wears his Mulligan influence on his sleeve, even working with a pianoless quartet in homage. It actually suits his own approach pretty well, and with Nightingale offering big portamento effects it hardly matters that there's no harmony instrument on hand. The salute to Gerry on News From Blueport is both respectful and ambitious, moving into harmonic and rhythmic territory that was by no means Mulligan's bag. Panayi has the same light, fleet delivery on the baritone and makes even complex lines sound briskly vocalized.

His flute-playing is highlighted on Time Displaced, which consists of groups of different sizes (including a fine quartet with David Newton) playing conventional fare with imagination. 'Jitterbug Waltz' is a small miracle, exquisitely done.

The other quartet dates, including one from Scott's, are testimony to a very settled and productive group which takes its influence as a starting-point rather than a destination. There's no pastiche, and with Nightingale as unlike either Chet or Bob Broookmeyer as can be imagined, no chance of confusion.

Papa Bue's Viking Jazz Band

GROUP

Led by trombonist Papa Bue Jensen, this is one of the most popular and durable trad-to-Dixie outfits in Europe.

 Greatest Hits Storyville STCD 836 Arne Bue Jensen(tb); Finn Otto Hansen(t); Jørgen Svare(cl); Jørn Jensen(p); Bjarne Liller(bj, v); Jens Sølund(b); Knud Ryskov Madsen(d). 58–70.
(*) Featuring George Lewis Storyville STCD 6018 As above, except add George Lewis(cl). 2/59.
 Featuring Edmond Hall /  Original Studio Recordings: Volumes 1 & 2 Storyville STCD 6022 / 5502 / 5503 As above, except omit Lewis; add Edmond Hall(cl). 66; 66–69.
(*) In The Sixties: Volumes 1 & 2 Music Mecca CD 1088 As above, except omit Hall. 67–69.
The Viking empire once stretched as far south as the Mediterranean, and considerable ingenuity has been expended in attempting to prove that a Norseman beat Christopher Columbus across the Atlantic. Arne Bue Jensen represents circumstantial evidence that the Vikings made it not just to a slippery rock off Newfoundland, but all the way down to New Orleans. Under the eponymous Jensen's leadership, the band became a tireless gigging unit, establishing a big reputation in Eastern Europe, as had Chris Barber. Nonsense about 'authenticity' apart, Papa Bue's long-running band is one of the finest revival outfits ever to emerge north of the Mason–Dixon line. The emphasis, inevitably, is on ensemble playing rather than soloing, and these recordings are as confidently relaxed as anyone might wish for, with none of the stiffness that creeps into more studied revivalism. The rhythm players have a particularly good feel, the giveaway with most such bands.

The band was founded in 1956 but was baptized and confirmed three years later when George Lewis paid a visit to Denmark. The encounter is preserved on the Storyville CD, which is well worth tracking down, not just to fill out the already generous Lewis discography. A similar encounter with Edmond Hall is more disappointing. Exactly a decade after entertaining (and startling) George, the Vikings played at the New Orleans Jazz And Heritage Festival and won the admiration of the unfoolable Ira Gitler, who pointed out that the band were more than revivalists with a cod gimmick, but serious players who could knock out Ellington charts as well as trad material. The material on the two '60s compilations comes from that period. Ellington staples 'Rent Party Blues' (a Johnny Hodges vehicle) and 'Misty Morning' are outstanding on Volume 1, but the long version of 'St Louis Blues' is outstanding and could stand up against anything created on the other side of the Atlantic. Volume 2 is less emphatic but, unless Music Mecca's claim that all these sides are 'previously unissued' is misleading, these are very important releases.

(*) The Hit Singles: 1958–1969 Storyville STCD 5533 Arne Bue Jensen(tb); Finn Otto Hansen(t); Jørgen Svare(cl); Jørn Jensen(p); Bjarne 'Liller' Pedersen(bj, v); Mogens Seidelin(b); Knud Ryskov Madsen(d). 58–69.
A cheeky title concept, but an excellent introduction to the work of one of the hardest-wearing trad bands on the European circuit. The 23 tracks draw very heavily on traditional material, including hymn and folk tunes, while the playing is as direct and unadorned as ever. Like Chris Barber, Jensen keeps things together rather than pushing himself too much to the front as a soloist. Trumpet and clarinet tend to be the lead horns, but much emphasis is placed on the thumping solid accompaniment. Ideal for anyone who's still to encounter Papa Bue and his merry men.

 On Stage / (*) In The Mood Timeless CD TTD 511 / 539 Arne Bue Jensen(tb); Ole Stolle(t, v); Jørgen Svare(cl); Jørn Jensen(p); Jens Sølund (b); Søren Houlind(d, v). 4–9/84; 86.
 Ice Cream /  Live In Slukefter Tivoli / () On Visit At Chlosterhof / () Everybody Loves Saturday Night / (*) Collection Music Mecca CD 1000 / 1028 / 1064 / Timeless CD TTD 580 / Music Mecca CD 2101 2CD Arne Bue Jensen(tb); Ole Stolle(t, v); John Defferary(cl); Jørn Jensen(p); Ole Olsen, Jens Sølund(b); Didier Geers(d, v); Søren Houlind(d). 10/86–8/89; 91; 91–93; 12/92; 86–93.
Personnel inevitably changed over the years. The key recruitment was of 'Englishman' (though we suspect Irish ancestry) John Defferary in 1985. He immediately became the key player, alongside the long-standing Jensen and Papa Bue himself, bringing a virile, Lewis-influenced sound to the group. Ice Cream is patchy because recorded over three years and several different sessions. The 1992 studio recording is a rather lacklustre introduction compared to what one knows the band can do at a regular gig. In The Mood is splendidly varied, our pick of the bunch, though some of the live recordings from the early '90s are almost as attractive. On Stage was recorded on the familiar turf of Copenhagen, and before a home crowd the Vikings play like they're all heading across the Rainbow Bridge, with a rousing 'Tiger Rag' and a genuinely affecting 'Just A Closer Walk With Thee'. Collection is a very fair summary of some of the high-points of recent albums.

 40 Years Jubilee Concert Music Mecca 2010 Arne Bue Jensen(tb); Joe Errington, Finn Otto Hansen, Ole Stolle(t); Erik Andersen, John Defferary, Jørgen Svare(cl); Jørn Jensen(p); Ole Olsen, Mogens Seidelin, Jens Sølund(b); Didier Geers, Søren Houlind, Ib Lindschouw, Knud Ryskov Madsen(d). 7/96.
The Viking Jazz Band celebrated with a gala performance in the Tivoli. Jensen got together some of the players who had passed through the group and they turned in a bright, buoyant evening of music that must have been a delight to the crowd. On disc, it's a little muted and sounds as if it has been recorded through the desk, without much in the way of rebalancing or sweetening. 'The Old Rugged Cross' and 'Big Butter And Egg Man' are splendid. Much of the rest has an old-pals feel.

Also, in brief:

 Live In Dresden Storyville STCD 5530. 71.
Like other trad outfits, Papa Bue went down big in the old Eastern bloc.

 In The Mood Timeless CD TTD 539. 10/86.
Some unlikely inclusions, most obviously 'Help Me Make It Through The Night' and Brahms's famous 'Cradle Song'. But OK.

 Canal Street Blues Music Mecca CD 1090. 95, 96.
Though a studio setting never gets the best out of the Vikings, it's good to hear them in a pristine acoustic and professionally balanced.

 German Concert Music Mecca CD 3040-2. 11/99.
The prosaic title hides what sounds like a happy occasion for the band and the audience.

Paramount Jazz Band Of Boston

GROUP

Bostonian revivalists who started working together in 1980.

(*) Ain't Cha Glad? / * ... And They Called It Dixieland /  March Of The Hoodlums Stomp Off CD1205 Jeff Hughes(c); Gary Rodberg(cl, ss, as); Steve Wright(cl, bcl, ss, as, ts, bs, c); Robin Verdier(p); Jimmy Mazzy(bj, v); Chuck Stewart(tba); Ray Smith(d). 5–6/89; 4/90–11/91; 1–2/98.
Skilful if not very involving playing from another group of American revivalists. They avoid carbon-copying original arrangements on the first disc, preferring to try some new twists on Ellington, Dodds, Doc Cook and others; but the playing lacks much individuality and the ensemble work is too polite to muster any of the heat of hot dance. When they try a faded rose such as 'Yearning And Blue', it just sounds old. The second disc, recorded at two live shows, is a lot more energetic, if still a bit short on a style of their own, and the sound is uneven – Mazzy's banjo is often the loudest instrument in the group.

The group returned after something of a hiatus with March Of The Hoodlums. Their go at 'Singin' The Blues' tells how much they love the music: this is the Bix and Tram version treated to an affectionate update, Trumbauer's solo played in unison by the reeds before stately cornet and piano improvisations and a return to the original last chorus. While the group still rarely rises above its collective (and entirely honourable) amateur status, this sounds like their best to date.

Tony Parenti (1900–1972)

CLARINET

A prodigy in his native New Orleans, he was offered a job by the Original Dixieland Jazz Band – he was too young to go, and he regretted it. He went to New York and played non-jazz sessions for CBS. From the mid-'40s onwards he worked in a sort of merger of Dixieland with more faithful New Orleans music, and he remained fascinated with the possibilities of ragtime.

* Tony Parenti & His New Orleanians Jazzology JCD-1 Parenti; Wild Bill Davison(c); Jimmy Archey(tb); Art Hodes(p); George 'Pops' Foster(b); Arthur Trappier(d). 8/49.
 Tony Parenti's New Orleans Shufflers Jazzology JCD-61 Parenti; Jack Hine(c); Bob Thomas(tb); Hank Ross(p); Danny Barker(bj); Arnie Hyman(b); Arthur Trappier(d). 54.
 Parenti–Davison All Stars Volumes 1 & 2 Jazzology JCD-91 / 92 Parenti; Wild Bill Davison(c); Lou McGarity(tb); Eustis Tompkins, Ernie Carson(p); Jerry Rousseau(b); Bob Dean(d). N.D.
(*) Ragtime Jubilee Jazzology JCD-21 Parenti; Wild Bill Davison(c); Larry Conger(t); Charlie Bornemann, Jimmy Archey(tb); Ralph Sutton, Kocky Parker(p); Edmond Souchon, Danny Barker(bj); Cyrus St Clair, Don Franz(tba); Baby Dodds, Pops Campbell(d). 11/47–?
A New Orleans man who left the city in 1927, Parenti made many records but has frequently been overlooked. Never an original, he could still play with a ferocious intensity; though he approached the gaspipe manner at times, there was no little sophistication in an approach that seldom strayed far from Dixieland ideology. Jazzology JCD-1 was the one that started the Jazzology operation in 1949, and it still sounds hard-nosed and terrific: Davison was at his most vituperative-sounding, Parenti weaves his way round the front line with much invention, Hodes stomps through everything, and Foster slaps his strings harder than ever. Rough old recording, though that doesn't matter, and rather unnecessarily padded out with extra takes.

The All Stars session is of indeterminate date but was cut at a club in Atlanta. The balance is all off, the drums louder than everyone else; the other players are relatively undistinguished and Parenti himself sometimes sounds like he's playing on another stage. But the spirit comes through, and Wild Bill stops at nothing.

New Orleans Shufflers is from a 1954 session made in New York. Some of the names are unfamiliar but the music is a deft mix of the more hard-nosed traditionalism of New York and the sweeter feel of New Orleans music. Solos are generously shared out (and this exposes Thomas a bit) and, since he's very prominent in the mix, you can hear how hard Parenti really blew. Atmospheric and honest, and Trappier's excellent drumming is also worth paying attention to.

Ragtime Jubilee is an unusual example of two bands of traditionalists playing a pure ragtime repertoire, everything from 'Smokey Mokes' and 'Swipesy Cake Walk' to 'Grace And Beauty Rag' and '(That) Erratic Rag'. It starts with six tracks cut for Circle in 1947 by a group including Davison, Archey and Sutton, and if they found the music unfamiliar (Parenti had taken the trouble to write out a set of arrangements), the group bluster through it with rowdy excitement. The remaining tracks are from a much later (though undated) session, and again Parenti makes a dedicated effort at playing original rags without surrendering a Dixieland looseness. Good sound on these later tracks, and a very enjoyable reissue. This is a fine group of undeservedly little-known albums.

(*) Tony Parenti And His Downtown Boys Jazzology JCD-11 Parenti; Dick Wellstood, Armand Hug(p); Chink Martin(b); Sam Ulano, Abbie Brunies(d). 55–65.

Although the circumstances are difficult to decipher from the sleeve-notes, JCD-11 is made up of three sessions. Two are with Wellstood and Hug, who cut seven titles in 1961 and added three more four (!) years later to complete the original LP. For the CD reissue, four titles from a 1955 Southland LP with Hug, Martin and Brunies have also been included. The trio sessions are boisterous and exciting music: all three musicians are right at the front of the mix, and when they dig in and start stomping it's hugely exciting music that comes out. Wellstood strong-arms the piano and Ulano seems to have a full percussion kit at his disposal: listen to the clatter he gets out of 'Chantez Las Bas'. Parenti sounds a bit off-key here and there, but clearly he's enjoying himself. The 1955 tracks are almost sedate by comparison but they swing along.

Parenti's final session, made the year before he died, is another chunk of no-frills Dixieland. Veterans like Tarto and Kaminsky are welcome companions, and Parenti himself still sounds in hearty form. Rather noisily recorded and not exactly immortal, but as honestly delivered as the rest of this fine jazzman's music.

Also, in brief:

(*) Strut Yo' Stuff Frog DGF 4. 1/25–6/29.

Rare early material, but a strangely disappointing glimpse of '20s jazz recording in the city of its birth.

 The Final Bar Jazzology JCD-71. 5/71.

His final session was a slice of no-frills Dixieland.

Tiny Parham (1900–1943)

PIANO

Born in Canada, the huge pianist (Tiny was actually Hartzell Strathdene) kept busy on the Chicago scene of the '20s, arranging for contemporaries such as King Oliver and leading his own groups. By the time of his death, though, he was working hotels and movie houses.

(*) Tiny Parham 1926–1929 Classics 661 Parham; B. T. Wingfield, Punch Miller, Roy Hobson(c); Charles Lawson(tb); Junie Cobb(ss, as, cl); Charles Johnson(cl, as); Leroy Pickett, Elliott Washington(vn); Charlie Jackson(bj, v); Mike McKendrick(bj); Quinn Wilson(bb); Jimmy Bertrand, Ernie Marrero(d). 12/26–7/29.

(*) Tiny Parham 1929–1940 Classics 691 As above, except omit Wingfield, Cobb, Pickett, Jackson; add Dalbert Bright(cl, ss, as, ts); Ike Covington(tb); Darnell Howard(cl, as); Jimmy Hutchens(cl, ts); John Henley(g); Milt Hinton(bb); Bob Slaughter(d); Sam Theard, Tommy Brookins(v). 10/29–6/40.

 The Alternative Takes Neatwork RP 2053 Similar to above, except add Freddy Keppard, James Tate, Tommy Ladnier(c); Sidney Desvignes, Amos White(t); Fayette Williams, Harvey Lankford(tb); Angelo Fernandez, Jimmy O'Bryant, Ernest Michall(cl); Buster Bailey, Norman Mason, Bert Bailey(cl, as); Norval Morton(ts); Walter Thomas(ts, bs); Adrian Robinson, Lovie Austin, Fate Marable(p); Narvin Kimball(bj, g); Erskine Tate, Ikey Robinson, Johnny St Cyr(bj); Henry Kimball(tba); Jimmy Bertrand, W. E. Burton, Zutty Singleton(d); Priscilla Stewart(v). 6/23–11/30.

* Tiny Parham 1928–1930 Timeless CBC 1-022 2CD Similar to above discs. 7/28–11/30.

Parham's jazz was an idiosyncratic, almost eccentric brand of Chicago music: his queer, off-centre arrangements tread a line between hot music, novelty strains and schmaltz. The latter is supplied by the violinists and the occasional (and mercifully infrequent) singing – but not by the tuba, which is used with surprising shrewdness by the leader. Some of his arrangements on these Classics discs are among the more striking things to come out of the city at that time – 'Cathedral Blues', 'Voodoo' and 'Pigs Feet And Slaw' don't sound like anybody else's group, except perhaps Morton's Red Hot Peppers, although Parham preferred a less flamboyant music to Jelly's. The 'exotic' elements, which led to titles such as 'The Head Hunter's Dream' or 'Jungle Crawl', always seem to be used for a purpose rather than merely for novelty effect and, with soloists like Miller, Hobson and the erratic Cobb, Parham had players who could play inside and out of his arrangements. The two-beat rhythms he leans on create a sort of continuous vamping effect that's oddly appropriate, and Tiny's own piano shows he was no slouch himself. There is a lot of surprising music on these discs, even when it doesn't work out for the best.

The Timeless two-CD edition sweeps past the Classics discs: consistently fine mastering, and with 12 alternative takes, this is an exemplary reissue. Diehards might want the obscure first coupling on Classics 661, which Timeless omit. The stray final tracks on Classics 691 date from 1940, by which time he was playing the electric organ; it was at a smart hotel engagement where he was the organist that this 300lb giant died of a heart attack in 1943.

Neatwork's round-up of alternates does have some claims on completists. Besides the 12 tracks on the Timeless set, there are a pair of 1930 alternates, as well as nine other tracks: the pair of 1923 sides by Erskine Tate which feature Freddy Keppard, the (frankly awful) 1924 session by Fate Marable, a single alternate by Lovie Austin from one of her Paramount dates, and four sides which do feature Parham, from exceedingly rare Paramount and Black Patti originals. 'Embarressement Blues' (sic!) and 'Lazybone Blues', by (King) Brady's Clarinet Band, are certainly interesting curios.

Charlie Parker (1920–55)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

For good or ill, the iconic jazz life. That he had genius is beyond doubt, but it was based on long, effortful study; similarly with drugs, which played a part, but are not the only story. Though he had periods of disturbance, his career, which began in local blues groups in Kansas City before he joined Jay McShann's orchestra, was one of steady and concentrated work. His role in the invention of bebop was critical, though he was certainly not the only begetter.

♛ * The Complete Savoy And Dial Studio Recordings /  Newly Discovered Sides Savoy 92911-2 8CD / 17188 Parker; Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie, Howard McGhee(t); J. J. Johnson(tb); Flip Phillips, Lucky Thompson, Wardell Gray, Jack McVea(ts); Tiny

Brown(bs); Slim Gaillard(p, g, v); Clyde Hart, Jimmy Bunn, Duke Jordan, Russ Freeman, Erroll Garner, George Handy, John Lewis, Sadik Hakim, Bud Powell, Michael 'Dodo' Marmarosa(p); Red Norvo(vib); Arvin Garrison, Barney Kessel, Tiny Grimes(g); Nelson Boyd, Ray Brown, Red Callender, Arnold Fishkind, Bob Kesterson, Vic McMillan, Jimmy Butts, Tommy Potter, Slam Stewart, Curley Russell(b); Max Roach, Harold 'Doc' West, Zutty Singleton, Don Lamond, Specs Powell, Jimmy Pratt, Stan Levey, Roy Porter(d); Earl Coleman(v). 9/44–12/48; 44–48.

Parker's innovation – improvising a new melody line off the top, rather than from the middle, of the informing chord – was a logical extension of everything that had been happening in jazz over the previous decade. However, even though the simultaneous inscription of bebop by different hands – Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Christian and Thelonious Monk all have their propagandists – suggests that it was an evolutionary inevitability, any artistic innovation requires quite specific and usually conscious interventions. With its emphasis on extreme harmonic virtuosity, bop has become the dominant idiom of modern jazz and Parker's genetic fingerprint is the clearest.

Even at his most dazzlingly virtuosic, Parker always sounds logical, making light of asymmetrical phrases, idiosyncratically translated bar-lines, surefooted alternation of whole-note passages and flurries of semiquavers, tampering with almost every other parameter of the music – dynamic, attack, timbre – with joyous arrogance. Dying at 35, he was spared the indignity of a middle age given over to formulaic repetition. The sides Parker cut on 26 November 1945 were billed by Savoy on the later microgroove release as 'The greatest recording session made in modern jazz'. There's some merit in that. The kitchen sink reproduction of fluffs, false starts and breakdowns gives a rather chaotic impression. Miles Davis, who never entirely came to terms with Parker's harmonic or rhythmic requirements, doesn't play particularly well (there is even a theory that some of the trumpet choruses – notably one on a third take of 'Billie's Bounce' – were played by Dizzy Gillespie in imitation of Miles's rather uncertain style), and some of the pianist's intros and solos are positively bizarre; pianist Argonne Thornton remembers being at the sessions. Despite all that, and Parker's continuing problems with a recalcitrant reed, the session includes 'Billie's Bounce', 'Now's The Time' and 'Ko-Ko'. The last of these is perhaps the high-water mark of Parker's improvisational genius.

Though this is undoubtedly the zenith of Parker's compositional skill as well, it is noticeable that virtually all of the material on these sessions draws either on a basic 12-bar blues or on the chord sequence of 'I Got Rhythm', the Ur-text of bebop. 'Ko-Ko' is based on the chords of 'Cherokee', as is the generic 'Warming Up A Riff', which was intended only as a run-through after Parker had carried out running repairs on his squeaking horn. The remainder of Parker's material was drawn from show tunes; 'Meandering', a one-off ballad performance on the November 1945 session, unaccountably elided after superb solos from Parker and Powell, bears some relationship to 'Embraceable You'. What is striking about Parker's playing, here and subsequently, is the emphasis on rhythmic invention, often at the expense of harmonic creativity (in that department, as he shows in miniature on 'Ko-Ko', Dizzy Gillespie was certainly his superior).

Availability on programmable CD means that listeners who find the staccato progression of incomplete takes disconcerting are able to ignore all but the final, released versions. Unfortunately, though these are usually the best band performances, they do not always reflect Bird's best solo playing. A good example comes on 'Now's The Time', which might have been an old KC blowing theme or a remembered solo by tenor saxophonist Rocky Boyd. There is no doubt that Parker's solo on the third take is superior in its slashing self-confidence to that on the fourth, which is slightly duller; Miles Davis plays without conviction on both.

None of the other constituent sessions match up to the erratic brilliance of 26 November 1945. There are nine other dates represented, notably intermittent in quality. The sessions with Slim Gaillard, creator of 'Vout', an irritating hipster argot, are pretty corny and timebound; a bare month after 'Ko-Ko', Parker seems to have come down to earth. An early session with guitarist Tiny Grimes and an unusual August 1947 date (under Miles Davis's control) on which Bird played tenor saxophone, excluded from previous Savoy CD reissues, have been restored. Of the remaining dates, that of 8 May 1947, a rather uneasy affair, nevertheless yielded 'Donna Lee' and 'Chasing The Bird'; by contrast, on 21 December 1947, Parker seems utterly confident and lays down the ferocious 'Bird Gets The Worm' and 'Klaunstance'; the sessions of 18 and 24 September 1948 yielded the classic 'Parker's Mood' (original take 3 is suffused with incomparable blues feeling) and 'Marmaduke' respectively.

The other key figures on these recordings are Max Roach, barely out of his teens but already playing in the kind of advanced rhythmic count that Parker required, and Dizzy Gillespie. Miles Davis was demonstrably unhappy with some of the faster themes and lacked Parker's ability to think afresh take after take; by the time of the 'Parker's Mood' date, though, he had matured significantly (he was, after all, only 19 when 'Ko-Ko' and 'Now's The Time' were recorded). A word, too, for Curley Russell and Tommy Potter, whose contribution to this music was until CD transfer often inaudible.

A point of frustration for many in the past has been the scattered nature of these sessions, spread across numerous LP and CD editions. But with Tony Williams's agreement, the Savoys and the Dials are finally brought within a single set for the first time in this ring-bound eight-disc collection. The master tracks for each date are programmed first, followed by the various alternative takes. There is full documentation in a handsome booklet, and the harsh sound of the Savoys and Dials has been made as hi-fi as the originals will probably ever allow.

The 'newly discovered sides' on the Savoy include an interesting enough 'Out Of Nowhere', 'Oop-Bop-Sh'bam', 'Jumpin' With Symphony Sid'/'Bebop' and a more unexpected 'East Of The Sun (And West Of The Moon)', which is not a number one associates with Parker. The rest of the tracks are familiar Savoys.

[illegible]

 Charlie Parker On Dial: The Complete Sessions

Spotlite/Dial SPJ CD 4 4101 4CD Parker; Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie, Howard McGhee(t); J. J. Johnson(tb); Flip Phillips, Lucky Thompson, Wardell Gray(ts); Jimmy Bunn, Duke Jordan, Russ Freeman, Erroll Garner, George Handy, Michael 'Dodo' Marmarosa(p); Red Norvo(vib); Arvin Garrison, Barney Kessel(g); Ray Brown, Red Callender, Arnold Fishkind, Bob Kesterson, Vic McMillan, Tommy Potter, Slam Stewart(b); Don Lamond, Specs Powell, Jimmy Pratt, Stan Levey, Roy Porter, Max Roach, Harold 'Doc' West(d); Teddy Wilson, Earl Coleman(v). 6/45, 2, 3 & 7/46, 2, 10, 11 & 12/47.

On 26 February 1946, Parker signed what was intended to be an exclusive recording contract with Dial Records, an outgrowth of the Tempo Music Shop on Hollywood Boulevard in Los Angeles. The co-signatory was Tempo owner Ross Russell, subsequently author of Bird Lives! and disseminator of some of the more lasting myths about Parker. A contemporary headline declared rather enigmatically: 'West Coast Jazz Center Enters Shellac Derby With Be-Bop Biscuits'. Russell's original intention to specialize in classic jazz (largely ignoring swing, in other words) had been confounded by an unanticipated demand for bop 78s. With typical perspicacity, he lined up Parker, Gillespie and others, gave them unprecedented free rein in the studio and backed his commitment with the best engineers available. The investment predictably took some time to recoup. Parker's Dial period straddles a near-catastrophic personal crisis and a subsequent period of almost Buddhist calm, when his playing takes on a serene logic and untroubled simplicity which in later years was to give way to a blander sophistication and chastened professionalism. On volume one of the Spotlite/Dial, a solitary February 1946 cut ('Diggin' Diz') under Gillespie's leadership predates the remarkable session seven weeks later which yielded 'Moose The Mooche', 'Yardbird Suite', 'Ornithology' and 'A Night In Tunisia', four of his classic performances. Parker's solo on the third take of 'Ornithology' is completely masterful, by turns climbing fiercely and soaring effortlessly, always on the point of stalling but never for a moment losing momentum; close study reveals the daring placement of accents and a compelling alternation of chromatic runs (first refuge of beginners or those suffering temporary harmonic amnesia, but never handled with such grace) and dazzling intervallic leaps. Multiple takes of virtually every item (the six Spotlite volumes take in 39 tunes but 88 separate performances) demonstrate the extent to which Parker was prepared to retake at constantly shifting tempi, never wrong-footing himself but often having to pull some of the rhythm players along in his wake. 'The Famous Alto Break', 46 seconds of pure invention on the saxophone, is all that remains of a first take of 'A Night In Tunisia'; before the Benedetti materials were made available, 'The Famous Alto Break' was Parker's best-known cameo solo.

In contrast to Curley Russell and Max Roach, Vic McMillan and Roy Porter can sound a little stiff, but Dodo Marmarosa (an undervalued player, who retired early from active playing) has a bright, sharp-edged angularity which suits Parker perfectly and which is picked up generously by good digital remastering. On 29 July 1946, Parker was in the C. P. MacGregor Studios, Hollywood, with Howard McGhee, a fellow addict, in for Miles Davis or Dizzy Gillespie. Bird was practically comatose during the recording of 'Lover Man' (but nevertheless managed a brutal, convoluted solo that is a rare converse to his usual formal clarity) and collapsed shortly after the session, setting off a train of disasters that landed him in the State Hospital at Camarillo. Heroin addiction permits surprisingly extended activity at a high level, but usually at a high rate of interest. There has been a tendency again to fetishize work born out of appalling physical and psychological anguish at the expense of less-troubled performances. In the summer of 1946 Parker was writing cheques that his body could no longer cash. 'Lover Man', like so many club and concert solos from the preceding years, was done on autopilot. Bird's headlong flight was briefly halted.

He emerged healthier than he had been for a decade. Rest (as in 'Relaxin' At Camarillo'), detoxification and the occasional salad had done him more good than any amount of largactil. A rehearsal session held at Chuck Kopely's house on 1 February 1947 is included, but the recording is very poor (Howard McGhee allegedly kept a hand-held mic pointing at Bird throughout). Parker's first post-release recording for Dial cast him in the unlikely company of Erroll Garner and the singer Earl Coleman. Garner's intriguing two-handedness, offering apparent independence in the bass and melody lines, was a valuable prop for Parker, and he sounds remarkably composed. Coleman's singing on 'This Is Always' and 'Dark Shadows' is uncomplicated and rather appealing. The meat of the sessions comes with 'Bird's Nest' and the marvellous 'Cool Blues', again attempted at very different tempi. The fourth – or 'D' – take of 'Cool Blues' is positively lugubrious. The soloing is limpid and logical, and not much circumstantial knowledge is required to hear the difference between these tracks and the tortured 'Lover Man' of six months before.

A week later, Parker returned to the studio with McGhee and Marmarosa. 'Relaxin' At Camarillo' was allegedly written in the back of a cab en route to the date; it was cast in familiar blues form but with an intriguing tonality that suggested Bird was beginning to exercise greater inventiveness along the other, relatively neglected, axis of his work. Unfortunately, the 26 February performances are rather cluttered (Wardell Gray's tenor adds nothing very much; Barney Kessel sounds rather blocky) and the sound isn't up to previous standards.

The selections from 28 October and 4 November are some of the most lyrical in Parker's entire output. 'Bird Of Paradise' is based on the sequence of 'All The Things You Are', with an introduction (Bird and Miles) that was to become one of the thumbprints of bebop. Parker reinvents his solo from take to take, never exhausting his own resources, never losing contact with the basic material. 'Embraceable You' and the gentle 'Dewey Square', 'Out Of Nowhere' and single takes of 'My Old Flame' and 'Don't Blame Me' don't reach quite the same heights, but the third (unissued) take of 'Out Of Nowhere' is further demonstration of how much magnificent music had to be picked off the editing-room floor. The November session also included two of Parker's finest originals, 'Scrapple From The Apple' and 'Klact-oveeseds-tene' (apparently a quasi-phonetic transcription of Klage, Auf Wiedersehen – some give it as 'Klact', meaning 'bad noise' – which could be taken to mean something like 'Farewell To The Blues'), which is a raw and slightly neurotic theme played entirely out of kilter.

Roach's grasp of Bird's requirements was by now completely intuitive. Only he seems to have been entirely in tune with the saxophonist's often weirdly dislocated entries, and there is a story that Roach had to shout to Duke Jordan not to elide or add beats or half-bars, knowing that Parker would navigate a course back to the basic metre before the end of his solo choruses. This intuitive brilliance is particularly easy to trace on the slower ballad numbers, where the saxophone's entry is often breathtakingly unexpected and dramatic, underlined by Miles Davis's increasingly confident ability to work across the beat, especially at lower tempi.

Bird's final recording session for Dial and with the great quintet was held in New York City on 17 December 1947, with the addition of trombonist J. J. Johnson. 'Crazeology' is fast and furious, and Parker's solos on both the 'C' and (released) 'D' takes are impeccable; he was allegedly playing with a new horn and his tone is more than usually full and precise. Johnson was certainly the first trombone-player to understand bop completely enough to make a meaningful contribution to it. His solos on 'Crazeology' and 'Bird Feathers' are excellent, rhythmically much more daring than anyone had previously dared to be on slide trombone.

The Parker Dials, though perhaps of less concentrated brilliance than the Savoys, are among the greatest small-group jazz of all time; masters were cut in October 1949 and the album released shortly thereafter. They are also of considerable significance in that Bird Blows The Blues, formerly available as a separate LP, was the first long-playing record devoted to jazz performance. It was distinctive in two regards. In the first place, Russell favoured the 12-inch format, which won out over the more usual 10-inch format, which was the record dealers' preference. Dial later bowed to market pressure, but subsequent 10-inch releases were pressed on a poor-quality vinyl mix that created a great deal of background noise. In the second place, Russell began to include alternative takes of many tracks, setting in motion a discographical mania that has haunted Parker fans ever since. The availability of master performances on good-quality CD and without the distraction of multiple takes is a godsend. The fully documented Spotlite/Dials are outstanding for those who would rather have them separate from the Savoy material. There are, in the Dial documentation, a large number of alternatives, of which the following seem to be the most important and merit the closest attention: 'Yardbird Suite', 'The Famous Alto Break', 'Cool Blues', 'Relaxin' At Camarillo', 'Bird Of Paradise', 'Scrapple From The Apple', 'Out Of Nowhere', 'Drifting On A Reed' (another of Parker's themeless improvisations) and 'Bongo Beep' (a December 1947 track that shouldn't be confused with the slightly earlier 'Bongo Bop'). If listeners went no further than this they could still be assured of having the very best work that Parker did.

(*) Charlie Parker, 1947 Classics 1000 Parker; Miles Davis(t); Duke Jordan(p); Tommy Potter(b); Max Roach(d). 10, 11, 12/47.

Appropriate that Classics 1000 should be devoted to Parker at the peak of his powers, recording his last three sessions for Dial in New York and, a mere five days after 'How Deep Is The Ocean', reconvening with Miles, Duke, Tommy and Max in Detroit to make his first four cuts for Savoy. The usual quibbles apply to these reissues: poor sound and a too-literal chronology. There is – arguably – some merit in not dividing the oeuvre into discontinuous label blocks, Dial, Savoy, Verve, but to treat it as a continuous whole. It's hard to imagine much dramatic stylistic development between 17 December and 21 December. To that extent, this compilation is salutary, but we can't recommend it on aesthetic grounds.

[illegible]

* Charlie Parker

Verve 539757-2 Parker; Kenny Dorham(t); Tommy Turk(tb); Coleman Hawkins(ts); Al Haig, Hank Jones(p); Ray Brown, Percy Heath, Teddy Kotick, Tommy Potter(b); Buddy Rich, Shelly Manne, Max Roach(d); Carlos Vidal(perc). 12/47–7/53.

The first single-disc release of the quartet recordings since the (now deleted) monumental ten-CD set and an excellent buy for anyone who is unwilling to go that far. From the opening of 'Now's The Time' to the end of 'Visa', this is vintage Bird. We'd question the need, on a compilation of this sort, for five alternatives and false starts on 'Chi-Chi'. However, if you haven't experienced this kind of documentation before, it may well be beguiling and fascinating. Repackaged with Verve's usual understated care and attention to detail, this is a hugely attractive issue and one that may well help pull in new listeners to this extraordinary music. Listening to these familiar tracks again, we were struck by how magnificent even the occasionally dispraised later Bird could be.

* A Studio Chronicle: 1940–1948 JSP 915 5CD As above; and others. 40–48.

A titanic project that brings together some of Parker's classic small-group recordings with early material recorded with Jay McShann and other sets under the (co-)leadership of Tiny Grimes, Slim Gaillard, Sir Charles Thompson and Machito. The material is as familiar as any in the jazz canon, the remasterings are professional and the packaging robust and informative. No one could ask for more.

* Confirmation Verve 527815-2 2CD As above. 2/49–7/53.

* Bird's Best Bop /  Jazz Masters 15: Charlie Parker Verve 527452-2 / 519827-2 Parker; Miles Davis, Kenny Dorham, Dizzy Gillespie, Red Rodney(t); Walter Bishop Jr, Al Haig, Hank Jones, John Lewis, Thelonious Monk(p); Ray Brown, Percy Heath, Teddy Kotick, Tommy Potter, Curley Russell(b); Kenny Clarke, Buddy Rich, Max Roach(d). 5/49–7/53; 47–53.

 Jazz Masters 28: Charlie Parker Plays Standards Verve 521854-2 Parker; Buck Clayton, Roy Eldridge, Benny Harris, Jimmy Maxwell, Carl Poole, Al Porcino, Bernie Privin(t); Bill Harris, Lou McGarity, Tommy Turk, Bart Varsalona(tb); Willie Smith, Harry Terrill, Murray Williams(as); Coleman Hawkins, Flip Phillips, Hank Ross, Lester Young(ts); Danny Bank(bs); Walter Bishop Jr, Stan Freeman, Al Haig, Hank Jones, Oscar Peterson(p); Billy Bauer, Freddie Green(g); Ray Brown, Percy Heath, Teddy Kotick, Charles Mingus(b); Roy Haynes, Don Lamond, Buddy Rich, Max Roach, Art Taylor(d); Luis Miranda(perc); Butch Birdsall, Ella Fitzgerald, Dave Lambert, Jerry Parker, Annie Ross(v); woodwinds; strings. 46–54.

* Swedish Schnapps / * Bird: The Original Recordings Of Charlie Parker Verve 849393-2 / 837176-2 Parker; Miles Davis, Kenny Dorham, Red Rodney(t); John Lewis, Walter Bishop Jr, Al Haig(p); Ray Brown, Teddy Kotick, Tommy Potter(b); Kenny Clarke, Max Roach(d). 49–51; 2/49–7/53.

* Now's The Time / (*) Gitanes Jazz – Round Midnight: Charlie Parker Verve 825671-2 / 847911-2 Parker; Hank Jones(p); Percy Heath, Teddy Kotick(b); Max Roach(d). 12/52, 8/53; VARIOUS DATES.

 Ultimate Charlie Parker Verve 559708-2 Parker; Mario Bauza(t); Coleman Hawkins, Flip Phillips, Lester Young(ts); Hank Jones(p); Ray Brown, Curley Russell(b); Shelly Manne, Buddy Rich(d); Machito(perc); strings. 46–52.

Wallet-friendly repackagings of the Verve Parkers. Most of the titles are self-explanatory. Confirmation attempts a distillation of the whole shebang which is quixotic but admirable and done with excellent taste and sense of balance. The Jazz Masters series is irreproachably accurate and well-documented, but the boxes are unattractive and the by-the-numbers approach to Verve's back-catalogue is a touch off-putting. More casual listeners might find it a helpful, if ultimately misleading way of building a library. Swedish Schnapps, which covers the original LP of that name, the wonderful January 'Au Privave' sesions and three alternatives from the May 1949 sessions with Kenny Dorham should perhaps be a priority purchase. For the car stereo, mobile disc-player or the pied-à-terre, Bird's Best Bop would be a sensible investment, covering the strongest of the Verve tracks ('Now's The Time', 'Confirmation', 'Swedish Schnapps', 'She Rote' and the glorious 'Au Privave'); romantics will find the Gitanes Jazz – Round Midnight compilation a little more amenable.

The Ultimate series, each of them curated by a musician influenced by the artist concerned, offers no new insight. Jackie McLean's recollections of Parker are interesting in themselves, but most of his anecdotes have been told many times over, and his debt to Bird is so obvious as to require no restatement.

(*) The Cole Porter Songbook Verve 823250-2 Parker; drawn from Bird: The Complete Charlie Parker On Verve. 7/50–12/54.
Parker was very drawn to Cole Porter's music and was contemplating another all-Porter session at the time of his death. The slightly dry, pure melodism gave him the perfect springboard for some of his most unfettered solos. A lovely record and an ideal purchase for Parker or Porter addicts.

 South Of The Border Verve 527779-2 Parker; Machito Afro Cuban Orchestra; Roy Haynes, Buddy Rich, Max Roach(d). 48–52.

(*) Verve Latin Sides Definitive 11187 As above; and others. VARIOUS DATES.

 Charlie Parker With Strings – The Master Takes /  Complete Verve Masters With Strings Verve 523984-2 / Definitive 11185 Parker; Tony Aless, Al Haig, Bernie Leighton(p); Art Ryerson(g); Ray Brown, Bob Haggart, Tommy Potter, Curley Russell(b); Roy Haynes, Don Lamond, Shelly Manne, Buddy Rich(d). 12/47–1/52.
There is still some pointless controversy as to the merits of Parker's With Strings projects. Pointless, because it is clear from a single chorus of 'Repetition' from 1947 (made for The Jazz Scene) or 'Stella By Starlight' in 1952 that here is a master at work. Bird's solo construction is poised and tasteful, and much of the talk about his 'impatience' with these smooth settings is a sort of wishful thinking. He basked in them, and if on occasion he anticipates the beat, that's no more than he did with Al Haig or Thelonious Monk.

We find more to question among the Machito sessions on South Of The Border, but this aspect of Parker is hugely popular, too, and there is no mistaking his own pleasure in these rhythms, which challenged him to widen his phrasing and open up his tone a touch. Time, surely, to put paid to snobbery about these lovely records.

The Definitive set takes advantage of lapsed copyright. No reason to favour these over the Verves, but they're out there and relatively cheap.

 Live Performances: Volume 1 ESP Disk ESP 3000 Parker; Kenny Dorham, Dizzy Gillespie(t); John LaPorta(cl); Billy Bauer(b); Al Haig, Lennie Tristano(p); Ray Brown, Tommy Potter(b); Max Roach(d). 9/47, 12/48.

 Broadcast Performances: Volume 2 /  Royal Roost Bop ESP Disk ESP 3001 / Arpeggio Parker; Miles Davis(t); Tadd Dameron, Al Haig(p); Tommy Potter, Curley Russell(b); Joe Harris, Max Roach(d). 6 & 8/49; 48–49.
Most of this material is already well-known, though it's startling to find it on ESP Disk, a label more commonly associated with the '60s avant-garde. Like Blue Note, though, ESP were anxious to cash in – artistically, if not commercially – on the greatest figure of the preceding generation. The 1947 material on Volume 1 is prized for an opportunity to hear Bird playing with the pianist who seemingly represented the opposite tendency in modern jazz, Lennie Tristano. It is immediately obvious on 'Tiger Rag', the solitary cut, that the differences between them were not entirely irreconcilable. The Christmas night 1948 material is also well-known from the LP era. 'White Christmas' is a piece of pure hokum but it shows how readily Bird could be triggered by the slightest piece of musical fluff. His solo is breathtaking. The Royal Roost recordings included on Volume 2 have had a rather chequered discographical history, but they are very well documented here, sounding clean and remarkably noise-free, particularly given that this is not a label normally much concerned with the niceties of hi-fi. Parker tackles his solo on 'Groovin' High' with ferocious application, trying out ideas that don't turn up elsewhere in the discography. He's more relaxed on 'East Of The Sun', which features a lovely statement from Dorham.

(*) Charlie Parker In Sweden, 1950 Storyville STCD 4031 Parker; Rolf Ericson, Rowland Greenberg(t); Lennart Nilsson, Gösta Theselius(ts, p); Thore Jederby(b); Jack Norén(d). 1/50.
Record of a hectic week during Parker's second visit to Europe. He had had great success at the Paris Jazz Festival the previous year and was revered in Scandinavia, where bebop took deep and lasting root. A measure of that is the quality of the local musicians, who more than hold their own (Rolf Ericson, of course, acquired a substantial American reputation later in his career). Though Parker also played in Stockholm and Gothenburg, the materials are taken from sets in the southern towns of Hälsingborg and Malmö, plus a remarkable restaurant jam session at an unknown location. This last yielded the most notable single track, a long version of 'Body And Soul', more usually a tenor saxophonist's shibboleth but given a reading of great composure. This item was previously known in an edited form (which dispensed with solos by Theselius, who plays piano on the other selections, and Greenberg); but the restored version is very much more impressive, again by virtue of relocating Parker's improvisation in the wider context of a group performance. The remaining material is pretty much a 'greatest hits' package, with two versions each of 'Anthropology' and 'Cool Blues'. Worthwhile, but not essential, and the sound, taken on a wire recorder by someone in the crowd, is pretty poor.

(*) Bird At St Nick's Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 041 Parker; Red Rodney(t); Al Haig(p); Tommy Potter(b); Roy Haynes(d). 2/50.
An attractively varied package of material (including 'Visa', 'What's New', 'Smoke Gets In Your Eyes' and other, more familiar themes) from a tight and very professional band who sound as if they've been together for some time. Haynes is no Max Roach, even at this period, but his count is increasingly subtle and deceptive, and he cues some of Rodney's better releases brilliantly. Worth watching out for.

* Bird And Fats – Live At Birdland Cool & Blue C&B CD 103 Parker; Fats Navarro(t); Walter Bishop Jr, Bud Powell(p); Tommy Potter, Curley Russell(b); Art Blakey, Roy Haynes(d); Chubby Newsome(v). 6/50.
There are moments on this when Parker is very nearly eclipsed by Fats Navarro, whose death was not far away when they recorded the astounding 'Street Beat'. Somebody calls out, 'Blow, Girl!' (Navarro's nickname was Fat Girl) as he burns through an absolutely astonishing solo that combines fire and attack with near-perfect balance. On his day, there was no one to touch him. Unfortunately, there were very few days left. Elsewhere, he is superb on 'Ornithology' and 'Cool Blues'. A marvellous moment, captured with lots of atmosphere and not too much extraneous noise.

 Complete Pershing Club Sets Definitive 11242 Parker; Von Freeman(ts); Chris Anderson(p); George Freeman(g); Leroy Jackson(b); Bruz Freeman(d); others unknown. 10/50.
Parker with some soon to be celebrated local talent. These are raw and bluesy performances, with a very different weight to some of the other live dates from the period. Freeman and the other unidentified tenor don't sound like natural boppers, so the music drifts in other directions on 'I Can't Get Started' and 'Indiana'. However, the material is pretty standard for Bird and the band have to fall into line. Sound-quality is not exceptional but this issue is better than most of its predecessors, most of them unofficial.

 Inglewood Jam Fresh Sound FSRCD 17 Parker; Chet Baker(t); Sonny Criss(as); Russ Freeman(p); Harry Babasin(b); Lawrence Marable(d). 6/52.

A historic encounter, Parker playing with two hornmen who in dramatically different ways (but with equally tragic repercussions) would take his legacy forward into the next generation. Baker sounds a modestly accomplished bebopper, much like the young and hesitant Miles Davis, in fact; but Criss is much more individual and distinctive than all the Bird-and-water copy might suggest. There are moments of marvellous tension in this, as when Baker throws Gillespie phrases at Bird during 'Donna Lee'. Parker appears to ignore them, but during his final chorus stuffs them all together into a single hectic phrase and heaves them back. 15-all.

 The Legendary Rockland Palace Concert: Volume 1 Jazz Classics JZCL 6010 Parker; Walter Bishop(p); Mundell Lowe(g); Teddy Kotick(b); Max Roach(d); strings. 9/52.

Not unknown, but previously available only on a home recording of execrable quality. This more professional taping restores a bit of definition, and some good interchanges between Bird and Mundell Lowe, and it makes available some tracks that didn't pass muster before. The occasion was a dance in honour of an American Communist Party official and Daily Worker staffer. Not too much should be read into Bird's involvement on such a gig, not because he was cynical enough to take anything on, but because even at this late date American attitudes to socialism were still (in advance of the McCarthyite freeze) fairly relaxed, and black musicians of less public stature than Paul Robeson were exempt from unwarranted attention. There are no classic tracks or performances, but the general standard is high and the string settings are not too egregious. Of the unissued material, a sequence of Cole Porter songs is perhaps the most compelling. What one wonders at, though, is Parker's ability to fire off solos of consummate grace on such an unpressured and, one would have thought, creatively stultifying occasion.

CORE COLLECTION

* The Quintet – Jazz At Massey Hall
Original Jazz Classics OJC 044 Parker; Dizzy Gillespie(t); Bud Powell(p); Charles Mingus(b); Max Roach(d). 5/53.

Perhaps the most hyped jazz concert ever, to an extent that the actuality is almost inevitably something of a disappointment. Originally released on Debut (a musician-run label started by Mingus and Roach), the sound, taken from Mingus's own tape-recording, is rather poor and the bassist subsequently had to overdub his part. However, Parker (playing a plastic saxophone and billed on the Debut release as 'Charlie Chan' to avoid contractual problems with Mercury, Norman Granz's parent company) and Gillespie are both at the peak of their powers. They may even have fed off the conflict that had developed between them, for their interchanges on the opening 'Perdido' crackle with controlled aggression, like two middleweights checking each other out in the first round. There is a story that they didn't want to go on stage, preferring to sulk in front of a televised big game in the dressing-room. Parker's solo on 'Hot House', three quarters of the way through the set, is a masterpiece of containment and release, like his work on 'A Night In Tunisia' (introduced by the saxophonist in rather weird French, in deference to the Canadian – but the wrong city, surely? – audience). Perhaps because the game was showing, or perhaps just because Toronto wasn't hip to bebop, the house was by no means full, but it's clear that those who were there sensed something exceptional was happening. Powell and Roach are the star turns on 'Wee'. The pianist builds a marvellous solo out of Dameron's chords and Roach holds the whole thing together with a performance that almost matches the melodic and rhythmic enterprise of the front-men. The Massey Hall concert is a remarkable experience, not to be missed.

* Charlie Parker At Storyville Blue Note 785108 Parker; Herb Pomeroy(t); Red Garland, Sir Charles Thompson(p); Bernie Griggs, Jimmy Woode(b); Kenny Clarke, Roy Haynes(d). 3/53, 9/53.

First released in 1985, the tapes of these Boston club dates, made on a Rube Goldberg home-made system by John Fitch (aka John McLellan, the compère), have been magically reprocessed by Jack Towers and are among the most faithful live recordings of Parker from the period. Of the performances it is necessary only to say that Parker is magisterial. Pomeroy strives manfully but seems to be caught more than once in awkward whole-note progressions which start well but then lapse back into cliché. Local bassist Griggs chugs along manfully on the March sessions, but Roy Haynes is a heavy-handed disappointment. The September quintets are generally less enterprising, and there are even signs that Parker may be repeating himself. In an interview recorded in June of the same year, McLellan pointed to an increasingly noticeable tendency for Parker to play old and established compositions. By the turn of the '50s, the flow of new variations on the basic blues or on standards had virtually dried up. Despite that, Parker's ability to find new things to say on tunes as well-worn as 'Moose The Mooche', 'Ornithology' and 'Out Of Nowhere' (March) or 'Now's The Time', 'Cool Blues' and 'Groovin' High' (September) is completely impressive. The addition of relatively unfamiliar pieces like 'I'll Walk Alone' and 'Dancing On The Ceiling' contributes to a highly attractive set. The McLellan interview concludes with one of Parker's most quoted articles of faith: 'You can never tell what you'll be thinking tomorrow. But I can definitely say that music won't stop. It will continue to go forward.'

 The Washington Concerts Blue Note 22626 Parker; Bob Carey, Ed Leddy, Irvin Markowitz, Red Rodney, Charlie Walp(t); Earl Swope, Kai Winding(tb); Jim Riley(as); Zoot Sims, Angelo Tompros(ts); Jack Nimitz(bs); Charlie Byrd(g); Franklin Skeete(b); Don Lamond, Max Roach(d); other personnel. 53.

Originally released on Elektra, the big-band sections of this are legendary for the way Bird turned up and joined in with a well-rehearsed big band without music and without any apparent preparation. He doesn't miss a cue all evening and indeed plays as if inspired in places, using the band voicings to trigger off some of his most inventive solos, though interestingly he almost always brings things back to familiar phrases and licks. These, plus the quartet sides from the same time in Washington, are well worth making room for in even a modest Parker collection, because they hint at where he might have been going next, building on the energies of JATP appearances and thinking in terms of ever-larger instrumental structures.

 The Street Beat Definitive 11107 Various line-ups. 45–49.
 Ornithology: Rare Recordings Definitive 11108 Parker; Miles Davis, Dizzy Gillespie(t); Trummy Young(tb, v); Don Byas, Jack McVea, Lucky Thompson(ts); Errol Garner, Clyde Hart, Dodo Marmarosa(p); Mike Bryan, Arv Garrison(g); Slim Gaillard, Tiny Grimes(g, v); Red Callender, Al Hall, Vic McMillan(b); Bam Brown, Jimmy Butts(b, v); Specs Powell, Zutty Singleton, Harold West(d); Earl Coleman, Rubberlegs Williams(v). VARIOUS DATES.
The first of these is a respectable selection of Parker classics, with a curiously misleading title. The second is a further exercise in barrel scraping. Seasoned collectors will be able to identify most of these 'rare' cuts from the personnels. More casual listeners can be reassured that this is a rag-bag of minor Parkeriana, of little interest to any but the specialist, and indeed the student of early Miles Davis, whose career was taking off problematically at around the same time. Some interesting moments, but too much emphasis on vocals and not a vital investment.

 Montreal Uptown 2736 Parker; Brew Moore(ts); Paul Bley, Valdo Williams(p); Dick Garcia(g); Hal Gaylor, Neil Michel, Bob Rudd(b); Bill Graham, Bobby Malloy, Ted Paster(d). 2/53.
Not least useful as a reminder that Canadian Paul Bley's contribution to jazz modernism didn't begin with his West Coast encounter with Ornette Coleman. These are intriguing sets, but as with much of the live discography reveal the huge gulf between Bird and those he met on the road. The Canucks are more than competent, though.

 At The Open Door, NY Ember 508 2CD Parker; Barry Harris(t); Al Haig(p); Charles Mingus(b); Art Taylor(d). 7/53.
Tapes of a jam session which covered an interesting and by no means over-familiar range of bop material, including Monk's '52nd Street Theme'. Many of the cuts are incomplete, but the set offers an excellent view of Bird to set alongside the slightly earlier and later material from Boston below.

 Bird In Boston: Live At The Hi Hat, 1953/54 Fresh Sound FSCD 1006 Parker; Herb Pomeroy, Herbert J. Williams(t); Dean Earle, Rollins Griffith(p); Bernie Griggs, Jimmy Woode(b); Marquis Foster, Billy Graham(d); Symphony Sid Torin(v). 6/53, 1/54.
 Bird At The High Hat Blue Note 799787 As above, except omit Pomeroy, Earle, Graham. 12/53, 1/54.
One gets so used to hearing Parker with Miles, Gillespie, Navarro or Dorham that the immediate reaction to this is to ask, 'Who the hell's that?' as Pomeroy starts to play on 'Cool Blues'. These were game professional bands who had spent hours listening to the classic Parker recordings. Griffith in particular cops riffs and runs from Bud Powell, and the two trumpeters have their own respective allegiances. The Blue Note corrals material from the same club on a different date, though there is doubt about precisely what dates are involved. Bird himself sounds tired but surprisingly focused, leaning into one or two choruses as if the clock had gone back half a dozen years. There is no mistaking the change in quality, though. There was a man called Billy Graham at the drumkit. Bird was already much nearer to God.

Also, in brief:

(*) Boss Bird Proper PROPERBOX76 4CD. 44–51.
A good studio survey for the newcomer.

 The Quintets, 1945–1951 / Collaborations: Bird Meets The Jazz Giants Jasmine 630 2CD. 45–53.
An introduction to Parker's small groups and high-profile JATP encounters.

 Complete Recordings With Lennie Tristano Definitive 11289. 47–51.
Often thought to represent opposite tendencies in modern jazz. This dispels that idea somewhat.

() Charlie Parker, 1947–1949 / () Charlie Parker, 1950 Classics 1103 / 1222. 47–49; 50.
Easily available elsewhere. Muzzy sound.

 Complete Onyx Recordings Definitive 11229. 7/48.
From the legendary Dean Benedetti club recordings.

 Liveology Universal 450663. 48–52.
By now utterly familiar live shots from the Roost and elsewhere.

* At Café Society Downtown & Birdland Ember 509. 50, 52.
Valuable live cuts.

(*) Bird At Birdland Charly SNAB907CDX 4CD. 50–54.
At the club named after him over a five-year period.

(*) Legendary Jam Sessions Definitive 11254. 52.
With the JATP crowd.

 Bird On The Side /  Mellow Bird /  Ornithology Naxos 8.120622 / 8.120700 / 8.120571. 41, 45–47, 49.
As the bandwagon rolls along, these are among the cheaper decent options.

Evan Parker (born 1944)

SOPRANO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

The Englishman came through free jazz to the kind of radical improvisation associated with the Spontaneous Music Ensemble and other free-music groups flourishing in the '60s. Increasingly, thereafter, he turned his attention to solo performance, very often on soprano saxophone. His ability to create complex overtone series by overblowing generates music of formidable intellectual challenge, but there is also a gruff immediacy to much of his work. Has more recently experimented in electro-acoustic situations.

 Three Other Stories (1971–1974) /  Two Octobers (1972–1975) Emanem 4002 / 4009 Parker; Paul Lytton(d, perc, hca, elec). 6/71–7/74; 10/72–10/75.
If genius is the sustained application of intelligence, then Evan Parker merits the epithet. Over 30 years he has laid down a body of work which is both virtuosic in terms of saxophone technique and profoundly resistant to 'instrumentalism'; it is both abstract and rooted, deeply tinged with the English philosophical and scientific tradition. Parker has made significant contributions to improvising collectives like the Spontaneous Music Ensemble and the London Jazz Composers' Orchestra; but he is perhaps best known as a solo improviser whose grasp of harmonics, derived initially from Coltrane, is entirely sui generis.

The material on Three Other Stories is a dense palimpsest of saxophone, percussion, other sound-sources and tapes of previous performances. The result is much denser and blockier than one normally expects from Parker, though recent electro-acoustic work suggests that there are elements here which he still considers valuable, perhaps as a dialectical response to unaccompanied saxophone. Two Octobers is sparser, autumnally stripped and surreal, taking its inspiration and titles ('Then Wept! Then Rose In Zeal And Awe', 'Two Horn'd Reasoning, Cloven Fiction', 'I Want! I Want!') from William Blake, the Blake of An Island In

The Moon rather than the Songs Of Innocence And Experience. Parker's deployment of circular breathing still sounds a touch mannered and self-conscious, not yet integrated. Lytton responds with flawless intuition, stretching out his line and dropping blocks of sound in mid-stream. His own use of live electronics is more refined than the actual technology might be thought to allow. The sound on both records is above average for material of this vintage, albeit grainy and one-dimensional..

(*) Collective Calls (Urban) (Two Microphones) / * At The Unity Theatre PSI 02.05 / 03.01 Parker; Paul Lytton(perc). 4/72; 1/75.

Or 'an improvised urban psychodrama in eight parts'. Collective Calls was recorded in the Standard Essence Co., a loft space near the Thames in London, which was loaned to Parker and Lytton to make this exciting disc. Parker admits that there was considerably more material taped during their two-day session, though its whereabouts is unknown. A pity, because these are riveting performances, intensely concentrated and very faithfully captured on tape. Two short tracks were edited to close the original LP sides, but the whole has admirable coherence and consistency. Lytton is a sound-artist of genius, as the reissued Unity Theatre date also bears out, but he has perversely never sounded as close to jazz drumming, albeit of a free sort, as here. On the Unity set, that's less in evidence. The old left-wing theatre had long since fallen into disuse as a performance space and, as Parker concedes, was full of ghosts when the Musicians' Cooperative began using it for performances. Parker's usual armoury is extended on this occasion by the Lyttonophone, while Paul deploys an augmented kit and auxiliary sources. A classic, marked out by 'Mild Steel Rivets For P.H.', a tribute to poet Paul Haines, for whom the reissue is now a memorial.

 Six Of One PSI 02.08 Parker (ss solo). 80.

But not exactly half a dozen of 'the other'. These performances, recorded in St Jude-on-the-Hill, London, continued Parker's heroic exploration of the saxophone. They are, as one might expect, intense, highly focused and extremely demanding, except that Parker has the ability to suspend normal time, musical or chronological, while he is playing, so that the impression is of densely packed musical singularities that unravel in what is no longer strictly 'real' time.

 From Saxophone And Trombone PSI 02.04 Parker; George E. Lewis(tb). 5/80.

'Too much has happened in the intervening decades to attempt a useful summary here': so Evan Parker in his brief liner-note to this reissue. Brief as it is, this '80s set from the Art Workers Guild in London is one of Parker's best recorded statements and one of the best documents of Lewis's radical deconstruction of the trombone. There is a hint of regular pulse to the opening improvisation, a long, slow, drone-based piece that has Lewis conjuring sounds of Aeolian simplicity from his tubes, while Parker moves around him more nervously and acutely. Later tracks are more antagonistic in effect, with sharper sounds from Lewis and more driven lines from the saxophonist, but much of the delight of the set lies in that exquisite opening track.

 The Ayes Have It Emanem 4055 Parker; Wolter Wierbos(tb); Paul Rogers(b); Jamie Muir(perc, toys). 83, 91.

The long track here documents an astonishingly good group, but one that hitherto seems to have fallen into a bit of a black hole in Parker's discography. Evan seemed to like working with trombone-players at this time and a couple of years after the first of these sessions he would convene a very similar group with Paul Rutherford, Hans Schneider and Paul Lytton (see below); however, we are increasingly persuaded that this is the line-up and these the recordings which clinched the format. The original trio sessions, made in 1983, yielded only just over half an hour of releasable material, quite acceptable in the LP era but not enough for a CD, which is why Martin Davidson waited until he had the 1991 recording with the powerful Wierbos. Even here, the problems didn't stop. Wierbos has to break off halfway through the long title-piece when he experiences problems with a contact lens; it was apparently very hot and there are some signs of tiredness from Parker as well.

 Waterloo 1985 Emanem 4030 Parker; Paul Rutherford(tb); Hans Schneider(b); Paul Lytton(perc, elec). 8/85.

An otherwise undocumented group. Schneider is the unfamiliar element, and though he is a bassist very much in the Barry Guy mould, his approach is different enough to give the music a different impetus. The disc contains a continuous, unedited, one-hour improvisation. Sound-quality is not pristine and the horns distort at maximum dynamics, but most of the tape seems faithful to the music as played.

CORE COLLECTION

♛  The Snake Decides
PSI 02.09 Parker (ss solo). 86.

This is a great record. Or you might say, a great recording. In his liner-note to the reissue, Parker pays tribute to the recording engineer, the late Michael Gerzon, possibly the only man in Britain whose ears were more finely tuned to the highest harmonic levels than Parker's own. His technical genius made the disc what it is, a hyper-subtle document of one of Parker's keynote performances, in which he takes the language experiments of the previous two decades and compresses them into one flowing and involving performance. The sonority is incredibly varied, and Parker's ability to sound 32nd harmonics and above demands a reciprocal talent on the technical side. The miracle of The Snake Decides is that everything is registered and everything is registered cleanly and faithfully. Listened to on headphones, it can create the impression that you are actually inside Parker's instrument, listening not just to produced sound but to all its accidentals as well. It remains an essential document of modern music, and anyone interested in its progress should hear The Snake Decides at least once.

 Atlanta Impetus IMP 18617 Parker; Barry Guy(b); Paul Lytton(d, perc). 12/86.

Parker has spoken of offering up his solo style in 'sacrifice' when working in the trio context, and certainly it lacks something of the multidimensional complexity of the solo records. Newk's pianoless group may hover in the background, for here Parker has refined and simplified his small-group playing to the point where one can almost reconstruct the possibility – and no more than the possibility – of melody. This is one of the most accessible documents he has ever issued, the one most likely to appeal to listeners devoted to jazz and suspicious of anything that departs from chords. Guy and Lytton fulfil every expectation of a conventional bass-and-drums configuration without once touching a fixed base.

 Hall Of Mirrors MM&T 01 Parker; Walter Prati(elec). 2/90.
 Process And Reality FMP CD 37 Parker (ts, ss solo, with multi-tracking). 91.

These might almost have swapped titles. It's the solo multitracked album that suggests the mise-en-abîme of a mirror gallery, while

Walter Prati's delicate acoustic environments constantly draw attention to their own processes, as against the hard-edged 'reality' of Parker's saxophone. Some of the backgrounds suggest that simple ring modulation would have sufficed. Others are as delicately imprecise as one of Morton Subotnick's subliminal 'ghost scores'. After Atlanta, 'Diary Of A Mnemonist' is among the most reachable things Parker has ever committed to record, by far the most interesting thing on Process And Reality and a fascinating anticipation of the electro-acoustic work he was to record for ECM some years later.

* Imaginary Values Maya MCD 9401 Parker; Barry Guy(b); Paul Lytton(d). 3/93.
Named after the nine theorems of primary arithmetic in G. Spencer Brown's Laws Of Form, this supremely orderly set of improvisations is no less communicative, no less susceptible than the earlier trio disc. 'Variance' might almost be a written-out idea, so logically does it shape and reshape itself out of the stately processional sounded by Guy and Lytton. 'Distinction' is closer to the whirling intensity of the solo soprano records, but the bassist (who, as ever, doubles on chamber or piccolo bass) is almost playing continuo, strumming chords which seem to reach out and anchor the reed sounds. Lytton's mastery of cymbal overtones has never been documented better. Hard to attribute music as collective and mutual as this to any individual but, since we are concentrating on Parker here, we can say this is one of his finest hours on record. His tenor-playing on 'Invariance' is like seeing and hearing the instrument reinvented before the senses, from primal breaths and metal sounds to music of the highest organization.

* Corner To Corner Ogun OGCD 005 Parker; John Stevens(d, t). 6/93.
In June 1977 Parker and John Stevens recorded an extraordinary two-LP set for the Ogun label called The Longest Night. It remains a benchmark performance in British free music, so much so that any attempt to reduplicate its fierce energies more than a decade later might be seen to be doomed to failure. Corner To Corner confounds any such expectation. Its titles – 'Angles', 'Incidence', 'Reflections', 'Acute' – gently mock the clichéd honorific of angularity, for there's also immense warmth and trust in these performances, two friends who can now comfortably elide at least some of the niceties, who can cross-talk and interrupt without offence, or simply hold the floor to the momentary exclusion of the other. Parker has rarely sounded as emotional as on the closing 'Each/Other'.

 Synergetics – Phonomanie III Leo CD LR 239/240 2CD Parker; George E. Lewis(tb, computer); Jin Hi Kim(komungo); Motoharu Yoshizawa(b, v); Carlo Mariani(launeddas); Thebe Lipere(imbumbu, perc); Walter Prati, Marco Vecchi(elec); Sainkho Namchylak(v). 9/93.
 Ghost-In-The-Machine w. Evan Parker / (*) New Excursions Leo Lab CD 018 / Ninth World 19 Parker; Christer Irgens-Møller(p, ky, v); Peter Friis Nielsen(b); Pere Oliver Jørgens(d, perc); Martin Klapper(amplified object etc.). 9/93; 98.
Like his early inspiration, Peter Kowald, Parker has become increasingly interested in the global dimensions of improvisation. At the same time he has developed a parallel involvement in electronics. The first work with what became the Electro-Acoustic Ensemble was done in 1992. The following year, the Phonomanie Festival in Ulrichsberg, Austria, provided an opportunity to put some of these aspects together. Parker's regular trio was not there, but Tuvan vocalist Sainkho Namchylak was, and so was another occasional collaborator, George Lewis, a pioneer of the interface between acoustic instrumentation and computers. Something of the same was involved in Parker's collaboration with the Danish improvising ensemble Ghost-In-The-Machine. The first record is a mixture of concert and studio material, the best of the former being the very intense and focused 'Intertuba/Extremii', the bulk of the remainder sounding rather abrupt and unachieved, and certainly no more than the sum of its parts. In a sense, the Danish project negatively illustrates what the other record was intended to represent. The follow-up performance, recorded at the Copenhagen International Experimental Festival, was much better, a more assured synthesis of ideas and practices and a more listenable artefact which is all that matters in this context.

The notion of synergy comes from Buckminster Fuller, another of the scientific thinkers who has made a substantial impression on Parker's creative processes. It is defined roughly as the residue or surplus of behaviour in systems which cannot be defined or predicted by the behaviours of the constituent elements, a notion which has an obvious application to improvising ensembles. The Ulrichsberg project made use of Lewis's Voyager software, a computer system which interacts with human agents, but, throughout the project, unpredictable and ad hoc groupings are required to interact with electronic resources. Different players are asked to define areas of interest and interaction, with Mariani, komungun player Jin Hi Kim, Parker, Lewis and Lipere defining the parameters on the first disc, Lipere, Yoshizawa, Namchylak, Lewis and Parker again establishing the defining relationships on the second. The music included represents two days of intensive activity and is, to be frank, very difficult to absorb in this form. For the vast majority of potential listeners who couldn't be at the Ulrichsberg event, it provides an opportunity to sample Parker in unfamiliar sonic contexts. One fears, though, that most will find it frustratingly enigmatic.

♛ * 50th Birthday Concert Leo CD LR 212/213 2CD Parker; Alexander von Schlippenbach(p); Barry Guy(b); Paul Lovens, Paul Lytton(d). 4/94.
'The echoing border zones ...' Robert Graves's poetry seems the ideal source for titles for these performances, which again combine Parker's gritty involvement in ideas and history, this time his own. The two trios represented two of his most important long-term associations. Despite the essential Englishness of much of his aesthetic (not the Englishness of the pastoralists or the Georgians, but of those who built an empire on empiricism and craft), Parker has always gravitated to the European scene. As he describes in an unwontedly personal liner-note, bassist Peter Kowald, promoter and label boss Jost Gebers and pianist Alex von Schlippenbach were largely responsible for widening his musical horizons, in terms of playing partnerships. The Schlippenbach trio with Lovens is the perfect counterbalance to the more familiarly documented work with Guy and Lytton. The textures are more open and more concerned with radical harmonics. Lovens and Lytton are occasionally confused – verbally – even by people who know the scene well. They couldn't be mixed up even on the briefest hearing. Lovens is immensely detailed, a microsurgeon of the pulse, while Lytton tends to favour broader and more extended areas of sound, opening and unfolding like an anatomist. The long opening piece with Schlippenbach, 'Hero Of Nine Fingers', is supremely well argued, with Parker and the the pianist trading ideas at a dazzling pace. This isn't energy playing, but it generates its own energies moment to moment. The only quibble is that disc one is only 45 minutes in length (and disc two only 40); however, we are not awarding the ultimate accolade on durations, but on sheer brilliance of conception and execution. The remaining pieces with Guy and Lytton are closer to the language of Atlanta and Imaginary Values, but no less valuable for that. Guy seems particularly focused on this celebratory occasion. Rising 50 himself, he has regularly rethought his musical parameters, and one can almost hear him refining his language as he plays. Lytton is flawless on the long 'In Exultation', though he's the one musician on the set who probably isn't well served by the sound. The occasion, recorded in Dingwalls Club in north London, was very special. These documents are no less so. It would be hard to imagine music less of its moment and less ephemeral.

* Breaths And Heartbeats Rastascan BRD 019 Parker; Barry Guy(b); Paul Lytton(d). 12/94.
(*) Obliquities Maya MCD 9501 Parker; Barry Guy(b). 12/94.
Breaths And Heartbeats is unusual, not so much in the way it was performed, but in the way that it involves post-sequence editing. The trio recorded material in three blocks, two sessions with saxophone, bass and drums and one on orchestral percussion. After the event, the percussion 'breaths' were attached to the 'heartbeat' tracks according to a certain formal symmetry. Parker points out that the album can be played in a different order so long as the final track is number 12 each time. Performances are shorter and more uniform in duration here than usual, though 'Breath And Heartbeat 3' is over ten minutes in length. The sound is wonderful, as it is on Obliquities. Asking what difference Lytton's absence makes to the music is the wrong question. This is not the trio-minus-percussion. This is a very differently configured relationship, a free give and take of ideas founded on years of shared experience. Essentially, tenor and contrabass, soprano and chamber bass are paired in order to ensure that the tessitura – the basic pitch-range – is aligned to greatest effect. The exchange of material is so fast and responsive that it is difficult to keep track of where it begins and where it is going, a perfect musical correlative of the uncertainty principle. Both are records that require time and a certain suspension of expectation. They pay huge aesthetic dividends.

* Chicago Solo Okkadisk OD12017 Parker (ts solo). 11/95.
Remarkably, after eight discs of solo soprano saxophone, this is the first time Parker has committed himself to a full programme of tenor-playing. The results are, as one would expect by this juncture, extraordinary, music of intense focus and a fearsome weight and intensity of tone. Four of the tracks are dedications to musicians Parker has worked with or been associated with over the years – Chris McGregor, Lee Konitz, trombonist George Lewis and 'Mr' Braxton. No evident thematic connection to any of them, though the tiny Braxton tribute includes elements that are reminiscent of the American. Probably redundant at this point in time to start taxonomizing the differences between Parker's soprano and tenor work. The range of overtones is perhaps more restricted, the line more direct, the pace and delivery of ideas more measured. No mistaking, though, the integrity of the performances or the identity of the performer.

* Towards The Margins ECM 453514-2 Parker; Philipp Wachsmann(vn, vla, elec); Barry Guy(b); Paul Lytton(d); Walter Prati, Marco Vecchi(elec). 5/96.
The triumphant representation of 'synergetics', stripped of the awkward eclecticism of the Ulrichsberg project. Here the system yields unexpected surpluses when the sound of Parker's long-established trio, now increasingly often augmented with other voices, is confronted by a responsive technology which behaves – within the limits of its capability – like a listening musician. Without Wachsmann's presence one suspects that the degree of actual interaction would seem secondary rather than central to this music, but his highly attuned sensibility helps move the electronic elements from the periphery to the centre, without in any way de-emphasizing Parker's instrumental role (soprano throughout), or that of Guy and, above all, Lytton, who seems ever more important in this context. Though there is no mistaking that the Electro-Acoustic Ensemble performs like a regular (rather than an ad hoc) agglomeration, these are still difficult performances to analyse. Relative to a jazz tradition, they seem to advance a long-standing exploration of the limits of time. Relative to contemporary composition, they seem to relate to the whole modernist rejection of linear progress in favour of simultaneity, the physical presence of music as masses. This was an exciting step in Parker's progress, magnificently recorded and mastered, and compelling from start to finish. None of the pieces are very long, but even in the tiny space of 'The Regenerative Landscape', a tribute to AMM who pioneered some aspects of the idiom, the amount of musical information is formidable. 'Field And Figure' and the closing 'Contra-Dance' are Parker–Guy collaborations and perhaps the strongest things on the set.

(*) Natives And Aliens Leo CD LR 243 Parker; Marilyn Crispell(p); Barry Guy(b); Paul Lytton(d). 5/96.
As on 1995's Tempranillo, no longer available, with Agustí Fernández, it's interesting to hear Parker, so long devoted to the microtonal devastation of Western harmony, working in the context of an instrument with fixed pitches. Not that it holds Crispell back. She creates huge, resonant chords which are difficult to analyse with any precision but into which the entire trio seems to be subsumed, as if the sound-box of the piano has become an environment rather than another instrument.

Lytton continues to develop with almost every release. His work on 'Sumach' (many of the titles are named after trees, invasive species in particular) is compellingly musical, the leaf-work to the roots, trunk and branches suggested by Crispell, Guy and Parker. If any is the alien, then one would have thought it was Crispell, except that she naturalizes so instinctively. There is a fierce melancholy to some of Parker's playing, which is new and slightly unsettling.

* At The Vortex (1996) Emanem 4022 Parker; Barry Guy(b); Paul Lytton(d, perc). 6/96.
Those who were there still talk about this midsummer encounter at north London's 'listening jazz club'. Those who weren't will probably have tired of hearing about it and will be relieved that they too can sample this extraordinary session. Because Guy and Lytton both live abroad, this isn't a group that gets together very often and every chance to hear them is rather special. Parker has often said that he regards the soprano saxophone as his first instrument, but on the first set he once again demonstrates what a formidable tenor-player he is as well. His gruff, low tones are ideally complemented by Guy's floating harmonics and Lytton's impeccably musical percussion. The second opens on a long soprano solo, an introduction that unleashes the saxophonist's signature sound, a long, continuous line using circular breathing and high-order harmonics, whose partials would defy all but the most mathematically minded of analysts. For some reason, this set seems less of a group effort than its predecessor. Guy is rather low in the mix and here and there seems to lose definition on an otherwise well-recorded disc. As so often in the past, the real dynamic is between Parker and Lytton, now two generations on from the Coltrane–Ali sessions that established the modalities of this extraordinary music.

(*) Monkey Puzzle Leo CD LR 247 Parker; Ned Rothenberg(as, bcl). 5/97.

Recorded at a mini-festival organized in memory of the late Sergei Kuryokhin, this was a frank and flat disappointment, in which two hugely talented players conspicuously failed to trade in their artistic differences. The release was distinguished only by a cryptic crossword for which the label offered as prize an unreleased CD-R of further material from the concert. 1 down, Abominable Snowman loses personal identity after going north. Russian declines! (4)

(*) London Air Lift FMP CD 89 Parker; John Russell(g); John Edwards(b); Mark Sanders(d). 12/96, 3/97.

This group only convened during the latter part of 1996, but it has become a reasonably regular ensemble since then. The title- and the quite brief second piece are ironic references to British improvisers' continuing dependence on Jost Gebers's excellent label to have their work heard. The two younger players in the line-up have had very different musical experiences from Parker and Russell, but they fit into this concept seamlessly. Edwards solos on the title-track and leads off 'The Drop', a tough, stringy sound that owes nothing to rock music and electronics except density and expanse. 'Half And Half' is a reference to Sanders's mixed parentage, but it's started by Russell, an acoustic guitar loyalist who always manages to combine a classical delicacy with the fire of rock. As ever, Parker shifts from soprano to tenor, playing with a lightness and speed that sometimes get buried in the sheer density of detail he generates in solo and in duo formats. Within a more conventional group configuration he is happier to allow the line to declare itself. His tone more than ever recalls the late Coltrane, iron-hard, harmonically free, rhythmically complex.

* Most Materiall Matchless MRCD 33A/B 2CD Parker; Eddie Prévost(perc). 2 & 4/97.

Given his immense respect for the pioneering example of AMM, and their long experience of the British scene, it is surprising that Parker and Prévost have not recorded in a duo setting before. The immediate and obvious source of comparison is Coltrane's late masterpiece with Rashied Ali, Interstellar Space, which was recorded exactly 30 years before. For all his attraction to the stillness of Korean court music, Prévost has remained grounded in modern jazz, and recent experience in rock groups has greatly strengthened and simplified the sense of pulse he derived from Roach and Blackwell. Similarly, Parker has always been Coltrane's man. In practice, this is much as one would expect: a tough, extended exploration of sonorities and structures. The titles are all derived from the work of Francis Bacon, which explains the curious spelling of 'materiall'. Prévost bows cymbals to create complex harmonic shapes. Parker exploits his circular breathing to create huge, spooling lines, which then break up multiphonically. There are tongue-slaps and toneless sounds from the saxophone, richly tuned, quasi-melodic figures from the kit, an unfailing procession of vividly exploratory ideas.

 At Les Instants Chavires PSI 02.06 Parker; Barry Guy(b); Paul Lytton(perc). 12/97.

(*) Live At 'Les Instants Chavires' Leo CD LR 255 Parker; Noël Akchoté(g); Joel Lawrence Casserley, Joel Ryan(elec). 12/97.

Recorded in Montreuil just a few days before Christmas 1997, this continues Parker's trio work and his recent exploration of electronic interfaces. The two discs were recorded on consecutive days. On 19 December, Parker, Guy and Lytton performed a superb trio set that must be one of the finest in their long association. There is a hiatus in the middle of track four, which actually continues as track five, after a real-time interruption in which the direct-to-hard-disc recording failed. Caveat. The music is seamless and logical enough not to suffer. Guy is titanic, playing like an orchestral continuo player one moment, a drummer possessed the next. Lytton is his extraordinary self and Parker pushes into areas on tenor and soprano that he has not previously explored.

The next day's music was almost as good, pitching him in with the rich jazz sound of Akchoté and with two sound processors who are kitted up to respond in real time to Parker's powerful, pungent saxophone improvisations. This is a record which either needs to be swallowed whole or else responded to with care and attention. It is both intensely physical and intellectually detailed.

(*) Drawn Inward ECM 547209 Parker; Philipp Wachsmann(vn, elec); Barry Guy(b); Paul Lytton(perc); Lawrence Casserley, Walter Prati, Mario Vecchi(elec). 99.

The reconvened Electro-Acoustic Ensemble sounds ever more like a lasting association for Parker, a fruitful line of enquiry that will take many years to work through. They start out, unexpectedly, with a tribute to crooner Johnny Hartman, who Parker may have first experienced through the singer's Impulse! album with John Coltrane. It's a beautiful opening and it strongly confirms what we have previously thought: that this is very much a collaborative project and not just an Evan Parker project. Wachsmann and Guy are absolutely central to the multi-dimensional harmonic language, while Lytton's percussion is ever more subtly dramatic. The three sound processors create a virtual environment in which the trio functions and with which it interacts with increasing complexity. By the time these 12 short tracks are over (only 'Collect Calls (Bugged)' is over ten minutes), the ensemble has acquired its own unique identity.

* After Appleby Leo 283/284 2CD Parker; Marilyn Crispell(p); Barry Guy(b); Paul Lytton(d, perc). 6/99.

A free-music supergroup, playing in a number of internal permutations but coming together forcefully on three long pieces, 'Blue Star Kachina', 'Where Heart Revive' and 'Capnomantic Vortex'. The set consists of a studio disc, together with a long live performance recorded the following day. Crispell has been quieter recently than half a decade before and it's tempting to suggest that this is really her album. Her duets with Guy and particularly with Lytton are masterpieces of delicate concentration. However, it's Evan who dominates the long pieces, locked in dialogue with the sounds around him, constantly listening and responding and wasting nothing on empty gesture.

(*) The Two Seasons Emanem 4202 2CD Parker; John Edwards(b); Mark Sanders(d). 2 & 7/99.

(*) Foxes Fox / * Naan Tso Emanem 4035 / psi 05.07 Parker; Steve Beresford(p); John Edwards(b); Louis Moholo(d). 7/99; 04.

Marking an unexpected return to a species of free bop, the Two Seasons trio has its stylistic lineage in '60s groupings like Amalgam and the more pulse-driven versions of SME. Parker plays tenor for most of the album, including just one soprano piece on the July set. The sound at London's Vortex club is quite busy and intense, and it suits this music particularly well. Edwards amplifies his double bass, which gives him a wide range of articulations, and Sanders has always been an extremely active player, setting off patterns in entirely unexpected directions. Edwards is back on Foxes Fox, but it is unclear whether his bass has any amplification on this studio recording. The line seems straighter and the dynamics less varied, except on his opening duet with Moholo. This is a collective album rather than a Parker. There are four quartet numbers, but there are also four on which Evan does not appear at all. Beresford is as cleverly inventive as ever and is sparkling with ideas on his two duets with Edwards and Moholo. Emanem have generally been associated with archive releases, often of mixed sound-quality. Here the standard of recording and mixing is very good indeed.

The second quartet record was made shortly before Moholo returned to his native South Africa. The music is full of exuberant energy, but with a sepia glaze that is redolent of sorrow and loss as well. Edwards has continued to evolve over the years and while the main axis of energy seems to come from saxophone and drums, and from the jazz element that has steadily returned to Parker's work, Edwards and Beresford play their full and subtle part in this.

 2 × 3 = 5 Leo CDLR 305 Parker; Alexander von Schlippenbach(p); Barry Guy(b); Paul Lovens, Paul Lytton(d). 8/99.

The odd arithmetic is easily explained. This was a one-off meeting of two groups, Parker's own and the Schlippenbach Trio, of which Parker is also a long-term member. The resulting quintet plays one long piece that explores much of their common musical ground and opens up new areas of improvising language. The key element is the interplay between the two drummers, both of them subtle masters of percussion craft, and the austerely brilliant Schlippenbach, who fires off starbursts of sound throughout. Parker and Guy stick to a relatively pedestrian course. Both are, of course, virtuosic in execution, but on this occasion the Englishmen are less compellingly brilliant than they have been in trio contexts. Parker for once seems to rely on set-piece figures and repetitive ideas; Guy can make his contrabass talk, but this time at least it seems discursive rather than poetic. A marvellous occasion and a rare, possibly unrepeatable, chance to hear these players together, but not the most commanding record in the Parker discography.

* Two Chapters & An Epilogue Matchless MRCD 039 Parker; John Tilbury(p). 99.

John Tilbury is arguably the most underrated senior musician in Britain, a player capable of tackling all the modern classics and now also the other half (with Matchless boss Eddie Prévost) of the long-standing AMM. He has a remarkable touch at the keyboard, delicate but strong at the same time, producing rows of tones that seem to sway and jangle like glass rods almost at the point of fracture. Parker clearly enjoys the setting and plays some wonderfully unfettered stuff.

 Chicago Tenor Duets Okka 12033 Parker; Joe McPhee(ts). 00.

Definitive, even iconic, as his soprano-playing has become, it is still intensely exciting to hear Parker on tenor. His roots in Coltrane, Rollins and Warne Marsh become instantly more evident. In company with multi-instrumentalist McPhee (restricted to another tenor on this occasion), he sounds much more jazz-based than usual, which is to say that there is a bluesy colouration to these improvisations, even if there are no preset structures or chord sequences. The sound isn't very good, but in more detailed passages it is difficult to prevent two such intense players seeming to fall over each other, or to include some of the quieter dynamics.

 The Needles Leo LRCD 348/349 2CD Parker; Philipp Wachsmann(vn); Teppo Hauto-aho(b). 6/00–4/01.

Taken from a live set at the Kerava Jazz Festival in Finland (the first outing for this interesting trio) and from a subsequent studio recording, The Needles is a fairly exhaustive examination of this group's potential. Parker had worked with strings before and there are moments when, unusually for Wachsmann, he and his fellow player seem to do little more than provide backgrounds for the saxophone. That may have something to do with the slightly tentative approach of the 2000 encounter. On the studio record, there is more interaction from the start. 'The Needles' and 'Devil's Punchbowl', named after geographical/geological forms, are immensely powerful performances, packed with criss-crossing lines and unexpected condensations, where all three players erupt into the same space simultaneously, as fiercely co-ordinated as a SWAT squad.

Some have suggested that the live performances are reminiscent of Albert Ayler's work with a violinist. We hear the connection, but suspect it's a false trail, since Parker seems little interested in Albert's radical simplification of melody and line; to the contrary, he splinters it into a thousand pieces and the violin's overtones are an ideal corollary.

These are wonderful performances. 'A Punky And A Song' is probably the best of the live date, initially minimal and almost hypnotic, later developing in intensity, much like the relationship itself.

(*) Lines Burnt In Light Psi 01.01 Parker (ss solo). 10/01.

This release launched Parker's own label, the first time he had been involved in such a venture since the early days of Incus with Derek Bailey. Two of the three tracks included are concert pieces, part of a recital in St Michael and All Angels Church in London, but the first is essentially a rehearsal piece, recorded before the audience arrived. As ever, Parker fires off incredible streams of notes, but here he is able to use the church acoustic almost like a studio reverb, building layers of harmonics to almost unbelievable levels.

Parker had for a time set aside his interest in solo performance and this is a welcome return to a format that represents one of the central strands of his creative output. The central piece, 'Line 2', has a fearsome intensity and directness; the third element is more discursive and somewhat less focused, but dynamically it is the climax of the record and no one – committed Parker fan or newcomer – will leave the experience unmoved and unimpressed.

(*) Dividuality Maya MCD 0101 Parker; Barry Guy(b); Lawrence Casserley(elec). 01.

Unexpectedly, Casserley dominates this electro-acoustic set. Both Parker and Guy seem very happy to set aside their usual hyperactivity and dwell in the mirrored halls that their new associate creates around them. 'Aulos' features just Parker and electronics (there are a couple of tracks where Guy similarly takes the foreground) and it is fascinating to hear a player who has made such inventive use of real-time harmonics ceding some responsibility to another performer. Casserley, though, is a genuinely creative and listening musician and his treatments are always thoroughly responsive and idiomatic.

The trio tracks are consistently good, especially the two long pieces, 'Shifting' and 'Transmute'. Here the logic and dynamics of the group are put to maximum effect. A powerful, haunting record, Dividuality lives on in the mind long after the final tones have faded.

(*) Alder Brook /  Short Stories Leo CD LR 379 / 428 Parker; Hans Anliker(tb); Peter A. Schmid(bcl, cbcl, cb-tubax, tarogato);

Jürg Solothurnmann(ss, as); Reto Senn(cl, bcl, tarogato). 9/02; 7/05.

Recorded in a large water tank in Switzerland, Alder Brook is a beautifully crafted and simply very beautiful record. The natural acoustic offers harmonic effects very similar to Parker's recent processings, but there is real charm in hearing him in company with other horns. It is very much a collaborative effort with Swiss ensemble September Winds, though Parker is the obvious star turn. He is absent from the opening trio by Anliker, Schmid and Senn, and elsewhere in the quintet passages keeps a somewhat lower than usual profile. There is a wonderful central passage where he joins Schmid on his double-bass 'tubax' for a duo and a trio section with Solothurnmann on soprano. The balancing of horns is done with virtuosic skill and Parker demonstrates what a brilliant ensemble player he can be.

The second record can't be recommended quite so readily. It's still a highly fruitful association and Parker plays some wonderful things in this amiable company, but there is a lack of tension in much of the music, which sounds unduly 'experimental' or workshopped.

* Memory/Vision ECM 1852 As for Electro-Acoustic Ensemble records above. 10/02.

(*) Eleventh Hour ECM 987085-4 Parker; Philipp Wachsmann(vn, elec); Agustí Fernández(p, prepared p); Adam Linson(b); Paul Lytton(perc); Lawrence Casserley(elec, perc, v); Joel Ryan, Walter Prati(elec, proc); Richard Barrett, Paul Obermayer(sampling ky, live elec). 11/04.

Before he began working with sound processors Walter Prati and Marco Vecchi, Parker had explored an interim stage in this evolution on 1991's Process And Reality, which used multitracking and overdubbing to create a music that went beyond the linear dimensions and vertical harmony of the solo performances. That record was inspired by Alfred North Whitehead. Memory/Vision is inspired by and dedicated to the late Charles Arthur Muses, who died in 2000. Muses was the founder of chronotopology and an influential thinker in the admittedly arcane field of hypernumber arithmetics and imaginary vector analysis in virtual dimensions. These ideas and processes obviously recommend him strongly to a musician of Parker's briskly scientistic approach. What one actually hears on Memory/Vision, which was commissioned for the Huddersfield Contemporary Music Festival, is a dramatic utopics, a real-time analysis of sound-orders that goes as far beyond Whitehead's 'process' as Whitehead goes beyond tune-a-day diatonics.

On this first live recording of the Ensemble, signal processor Lawrence Casserley and computer processor Joel Ryan have been added to the original line-up of Parker, Prati, Vecchi, violinist Philipp Wachsmann, pianist Agustí Fernández, bassist Barry Guy and percussionist Paul Lytton. The pace and dynamic of the music are strongly reminiscent of the kind of work Evan was doing in 2002 with September Winds. There the combination of other wind-players and a notably resonant acoustic contributed to ensemble music of a very high order. Memory/Vision was first performed and then recorded only weeks later, and it is clear how consistent Parker's ideas are at the moment and how searching his musical quiddities. In keeping with Muses' ideas, he seems to be 'shaping' time rather than measuring it. The single continuous performance has both a monumental quality and a strong sense of process and flux, like a sculpture made of plasma rather than stone or bronze.

In the past, on Towards The Margins and Process And Reality, Parker has paid tribute to forerunners like AMM and Conlon Nancarrow, both practitioners of a music that moves beyond human instrumentality and which dispenses with the ego-tainted problems of 'expression' and 'performance'. Memory/Vision seems unwilled, internally perfect even when its exterior shapes look perverse. It's the test of very great music that it comes to the ears with an aura compounded of surprise and inevitability. After 70 minutes of this amazing work, it's hard to think that there was a time before you started listening to it.

As its title suggests, Eleventh Hour is a dark and foreboding work, packed with black energy. The processes are broadly similar to previous Electro-Acoustic Ensemble records, but the shift of personnel does make a surprisingly large difference. Recorded live in Glasgow, Parker's saxophone sound now seems adrift in a sea of chaotic information which bodes no good, but which yet holds out some promise of reclamation. It's an astonishingly powerful record, and a perfect development to the language of this essential group.

* The Bishop's Move Victo 93 Parker; Peter Brötzmann(reeds); Alex von Schlippenbach(p); William Parker(b); Hamid Drake, Paul Lytton(d). 3/03.

* America 2003 psi 04.06/07 Parker; Alex von Schlippenbach(p); Paul Lytton(d). 3/03.

In the spring of 2003 Parker's trio made a tour of North America. Barry Guy was otherwise committed so Alexander von Schlippenbach stood in and changed the dynamic of the music substantially. These men, of course, have also played (with Paul Lovens) as the pianist's own trio, so there is a vast amount of shared musical experience. The live set is one of Parker's most accessible and straightforwardly enjoyable and an excellent place to start with his recent work.

The other disc marks a titanic encounter with another of the most significant trio formations in contemporary music. Parker's group and Brötzmann's seem to face off cross the Victoriaville stage and argue like dissenters at some ancient debate. Except the language is entirely of now and constantly evolving through a more than 70-minute continuous performance. If there has to be a winner, one might say that Brötzmann outpoints Parker for sheer force and energy, but that the level of sophisticated thought on the other side delivers a subtler and more lasting impact.

* Crossing The River psi 06.02 Parker; John Rangecroft(cl); Neil Metcalfe(f); Philipp Wachsmann(vn); Agustí Fernández(p); John Russell(g); Marcio Mattos(clo); John Edwards(b). 5/05.

Having established a new language with his electro-acoustic group, Parker continued to develop new group interactions with this intriguingly manned ensemble. The absence of a percussionist is the first obvious aural cue to something different but Parker and his two wind colleagues do seem to be interacting with the strings in a new way, though obviously derived from similar associations with string-players. The sound-world is very mobile but less massy and concentrated than with other personnel, and the wonderful lightness of Metcalfe's flute and Russell's guitar is an important element. Parker interestingly sticks to tenor throughout.

* Zafiro Maya MCD 0602 Parker; Barry Guy(b); Paul Lytton(d). 3/06.

Think what a sapphire is and does and you have some way into this gem-hard, scintillating music by the now familiar trio. The complete performance, recorded in Barcelona, comes in at somewhat under the hour. It has logic, direction, trajectory and you wouldn't change a note of it.

(*) Abbey Road Duos Treader trd009 Parker; Matthew Shipp(p). 7/06.

Shipp's approach to improvising situations is an intriguing one. It is as if he tries for periods of time to distance himself from his playing partner, to find some sonic space that is only occupied by himself. In the end, though, he is one of the most supportive and empathetic piano-players on the scene at the moment, and one of the few who can broker a convincing role in Parker's music. One can hardly imagine Marilyn Crispell, or anyone else other than Alex von Schlippenbach, relating to the harmonic complexity of Parker's high sustains and microscopically split notes.

* A Glancing Blow Clean Feed CF085 Parker; John Edwards(b); Chris Corsano(d). 8/06.
It's immediately obvious that this is a different group to the long-established one above. Parker moves differently through the musical landscape, arguably leading more than he does with Guy and Lytton, but still responsively. Edwards and Corsano generate an extraordinary energy and their interplay is often the most interesting element of the music.

(*) Live At Roulette Animul ANI 106 Parker; Ned Rothenberg(as, cl, bcl). 10/06.
Another chapter in a phenomenally busy year for Parker. If John Butcher has taken on his language and extended it, Rothenberg has developed his own approach to solo improvisation and to situations like this one, drawing new philosophies from Japanese culture (no shakuhachi here, unfortunately) and exploring aspects of Dolphy's music (a putative source here) rather than Coltrane's in his attempt to transcend the limitations of post-bop language. Compared to the earlier Monkey Puzzle it's a very happy pairing.

Also, in brief:

 Duets: Dithyrambisch FMP CD 19/20 2CD. 7/89.
Interesting, but only interesting, duos with Louis Clavis (bsl, ss), Wolfgang Fuchs (bcl, cbcl) and Hans Koch (ss, ts).

 The Redwood Sessions CIMP 101. 6/95.
A Parker–Guy–Lytton record with a guest appearance by Joe McPhee (t) on the final jam.

(*) Mars Song Victo 42. 96.
A duo with the problematic Sainkho Namtchylak (v), whose development of throat singing is virtuosic but curiously inflexible to any other musical vision.

(*) Unity Variations Okka 12028. 98.
With George Graewe (p) at the Unity Temple in Chicago; something rarefied and remote in these relatively short improvisations.

 Strings With Evan Parker Emanem 4032 3CD. 1/97–5/00.
Despite the Charlie Parker With Strings resonance of the title, this is unremittingly abstract and actually only features Evan sporadically.

 Rangirua Leo LRCD 314. 10/99.
A one-off relic of a tour to New Zealand and an encounter with local musician Richard Nunns and his taonga puoro instruments.

(*) Evan Parker/Patrick Scheyder Leo LRCD 326. 99.
A rare dead spot. These duos with Patrick Scheyder (p) are described as 'Coltrane meets Chopin' but sound like a dialogue of the deaf.

 Parker Haslam Edwards Slam 314. 9/00.
Not strictly a Parker record, nor a trio record, but instead it is a series of solos with a couple of duet/trio pieces with the baritonist and bassist tacked on.

 With Birds Treader trd 001. 05.
Working with soundscapes of birdsong constructed by Spring Heel Jack-men John Coxon and Ashley Wales.

Rick Parker (born 1978)

TROMBONE

Pointing a way ahead for modern-mainstream.

 New York Gravity Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 192 Parker; Thad Wilson(t, flhn); Chris Ioannou(ss, ts, bcl); Andrew Haskell(p); Matt Grason(b); Kyle Struve(d). 5/02.
We understand that Parker put this out on his own imprint before it was taken up by Fresh Sound. He sounds enterprising as a player as well, with a beefy, likeable tone that contrasts nicely with Wilson's more combustible approach and Ioannou's Shorterish mystique. For all his spacey sounds on 'Experiment in Mist-ery', the saxophonist is capable of driving hard bop on his own 'Going Out'. All the material comes from within the Parker Collective, and one suspects many of these ideas have been worked over for some time. An excellent debut.

William Parker

DOUBLE BASS

The most influential bassist/leader since Mingus. His brooding, sepia-tinted tone first emerged in the Improvisers Collective in New York, an experimental workshop which later transmuted into the Little Huey Creative Music Ensemble.

 Through Acceptance Of The Mystery Peace Eremite 12 Parker; Toshinori Kondo(t, ahn); Arthur Williams(t); Jemeel Moondoc(as); Will Connell Jr(as, f); Daniel Carter(as, ts, f, t); Charles Brackeen, John Hagen(ts); Rozanne Levine, Henry Warner(cl); Peter Kuhn(bcl); Ramsey Ameen, Billy Bang, Polly Bradfield, Jason Hwang(vn); Trinstan Honsinger(clo); Dennis Charles(d); Roger Baird(perc). 79.
An important early record by the bassist, originally on Centering and now reissued with one new track. In many respects, it looks forward to the larger bands of the '90s, but here Parker develops his ideas with a series of smaller ensembles and with more emphasis than later on free blowing. Kondo is an interesting figure who has made an intermittent impact. On trumpet here, he's reminiscent of Leo Smith in declamatory form – which is much of the time – but with a roundness of tone that almost suggests cornet. He's also featured on alto horn. The smaller groups favour strings and could almost be playing classical pieces. The bigger ensembles, though, are the surest indication of what was to come.

 In Order To Survive Black Saint 120159 Parker; Lewis 'Flip' Barnes(t); Grachan Moncur III(tb); Rob Brown(as); Cooper-Moore(p); Dennis Charles(d). 4 & 6/93.
Dominated by 'Testimony Of No Future', one of three tracks recorded at Club Roulette, and almost 40 minutes in length. Developed from the simplest ideas generated in a rhythm section dominated by Parker and Cooper-Moore, it is an immensely involving piece that opens up acres of improvisational territory for all the soloists. 'Anast In Crisis, Mouth Full Of Fresh Cut Flowers' is transparently and gloriously influenced by Cecil Taylor, an impression reinforced on 'Testimony Of The Stir Pot'.

The closing piece, 'Square Sun', was recorded on another occasion at the Knitting Factory and is very different emotionally and stylistically. Parker uses his bow to good – even comic – effect, and trumpeter Barnes (reminiscent of Hugh Ragin in style) covers the generations, drawing in everything from Cootie Williams to Leo Smith. Moncur is as wise and philosophical as usual.

 Sunrise In The Tone World Aum Fidelity 2 2CD Parker; Lewis 'Flip' Barnes, Richard Rodriguez(t); Roy Campbell(t, flhn); Masahiko Kono, Alex Lodico, Steve Swell(tb); Dave Hofstra(tba); Chris Jonas(ss); Marco Eneidi(as); Ben Koen, Assif Tsahar(ts); Richard Keene(ts, ob); Joe Ruddick, David Sewelson(bs); Vinny Golia(reeds); Gregg Bendian(vib); Jason Hwang(vn); Akira Ando(clo); Susie Ibarra(d); Lisa Sokolov(v). 97.
The bassist's work with the Improvisers Collective led directly to the foundation of the Little Huey Creative Music Orchestra, and these large-scale compositions and group improvisations are close to the heart of Parker's turbulent music. Their roots are in Trane's Ascension, in Mingus's sprawling big bands and in Sun Ra's Arkestra; but they also have strong affinities with Butch Morris's conducted improvisation and with Anthony Braxton's mythic-realist fantasy pieces. The two long tracks, 'Bluest J' and 'Huey Sees Light Through A Leaf', are guilty of moments of lassitude and self-indulgence but for the most part they fulfil Parker's creative imperatives, and some of the shorter tracks like 'Sunship For Dexter' and 'Voice Dancer Kidd' are as beautiful as they are challenging, pointing out beyond the bassist's influences to a new aesthetic for large-band performance.

 Long Hidden: The Olmec Series AUM Fidelity 36 Parker; David Sewelson(sax); Isaiah Parker(as); Luis Ramirez(acc); Todd Nicholson(b); Gabriel Nunez(perc); Omar Payano(perc, v). 93, 1/97.
Like Anthony Braxton and Sun Ra before him, Parker searches for the cultural-genetic codes that link the ancient civilizations of Africa and the Americas with the modern West. This record was only released in 2006, though the material is almost a decade old, and so it does nothing more than go back and recapitulate some of the rich musical thought that has emerged in the interim. 'There Is A Balm In Gilead' is a fiercely emotional reading, with a hint of anger under the consolatory theme. The Olmec Quartet is unusually configured but the addition of two saxophones brings it more into line with jazz norms. However, Parker himself plays the Malian hunter's lute and the variously spelt doson n'goni, as well as contributing an earlier solo bass piece, so the sound-world is very varied. An early version of 'Compassion Comes To Bed-Stuy' is a highlight.

(*) Posium Pendasem / * The Peach Orchard FMP CD 105 / Aum Fidelity 10 2CD Parker; Rob Brown(as, f); Assif Tsahar(ts, bcl); Cooper-Moore(p); Susie Ibarra(d). 4/98; 98.
This is the point at which Parker's massive investment in his instrumental technique, in thoughtful musicianship and in the collective aesthetic of In Order To Survive pays off, as one knew it would. Recorded during the Workshop Freie Musik in Berlin, the fascinating Posium Pendasem suggests how close Parker has always been to the very different and un-American freedoms of European improvisation. Peter Kowald's presence as author of the liner-notes is a further reinforcement. Divided into three pieces, at 51 minutes, 13 minutes and 30 seconds, and one and a half minutes respectively, the album gives a reasonable impression of how In Order To Survive function structurally over different durations. Inevitably, the longest track, 'Posium Pendasem #7', is the most intensely involving. There are acres of space for individual improvisation, but the real substance of the piece is evident when the group is improvising collectively, as in the middle section, when the horns seem to develop a strangely symmetrical counterpoint to what in a more conventional jazz line-up would have been the rhythm section. It's unfair at this stage in his career to heap more 'influences' on Parker, all the more so when he is showing not so much influence as a desire to continue the work of others; but these moments strongly recall Cecil Taylor's intense – and ironically bassless – trios of the '60s. Fabulous music, in every sense of the word, dense and thoughtful, brightly coloured and abstract by turns.

The Peach Orchard is better still and arrayed across two full CDs of complex, mediated performance. Ibarra's long introduction to 'Moholo' (a tribute to South African drummer Louis) is fine testimony to her growing skills and vision, while Cooper-Moore, who now plays only in Parker's company, creates a vivid and almost skittish accompaniment to the otherwise dark-toned 'Leaf Dance'. The first disc ends with a passionate elegy for a lost Eden. 'The Peach Orchard' is, along with a repeated version of 'In Order To Survive' at the end, the closest one comes to the essence of the group, highly individualistic but also profoundly collective in approach. Tsahar joins the group at the start of the second half with a mournful bass clarinet/piano duet on 'Posium Pendasem #3', another page from that astonishingly fertile workbook.

(*) Fractured Dimensions FMP CD 122 Parker; Roy Campbell(t); Daniel Carter (t, as, f, cl); Alan Silva(syn). 99.
Caught live at the Total Music Meeting, this was an unexpected line-up in the sense that Silva stood in for the absent Rashid Bakr. The absence of percussion, unusual sound of a digital synth and occasional presence of two trumpeters give the music an unusual sonority. Carter isn't a great virtuoso on any of his horns, but he has an ability to play for the group with total engagement and great sophistication, and his work on the very long 'Acrosses Rain' is key to the success of the event. Parker himself is well-recorded and sounding monumental.

 Painter's Spring Thirsty Ear 57088 Parker; Daniel Carter(as, ts, cl, f); Hamid Drake(d). 00.
 Piercing The Veil AUM Fidelity 17 As above, except omit Carter. 4/00.
 Black Cherry AUM Fidelity 37 As above, except add Takuja(t, g); Organic Grooves(v); DJ Sasha Crnobrnja(prod). 04.
Painter's Spring is a deeply satisfying record that sees Parker harnessing the dynamic of his larger groups to the idiom of the free-jazz trio. Apart from 'Balm In Gilead' and Duke's 'Come Sunday', all the tunes are by Parker himself. They combine harmonically rich accompaniments – reminiscent of Matthew Shipp, who acts as producer – with brisk, stabbing figures that often imply, rather than state, melodic directions. Carter (not to be confused with namesake James) is a very impressive performer, but it's the leader's thunderous dialogues with Hamid Drake which capture the attention. Their interaction on the three-part 'Foundation' suite – which is obviously drawn from something larger and more free form since the sections are numbered one, four and two, and presented in that order – is quite breathtaking.

Those same energies are harnessed on the duo record as well. Drake is a maximalist in such settings and here he peppers the sound environment with myriad tiny effects that are too well-structured and meaningful to be merely haphazard. Parker himself more than makes up for the absence of a conventional horn with long, singing lines and percussive, almost reed-like, effects. He is now such a master of his instrument that he seems able to create almost any sound he wants or needs on the contrabass. Another astonishing record from a modern master. Black Cherry is a collection of remixes, all of them beautifully done but none with any more impact than the original set.

* Mayor Of Punkville Aum Fidelity 15 2CD Parker; Roy Campbell(t, flhn); Lewis 'Flip' Barnes, Richard Rodriguez(t); Masahiko Kono, Alex Lodico, Steve Swell(tb); Chris Jonas(ss); Ori Kaplan(as); Charles Waters(as, cl); David Sewelson(bs); Cooper-Moore(p); Dave Hofstra(b, tba); Andrew Baker(d); Aleta Hayes(v). 7–11/99.

The Little Huey Creative Music Orchestra has become one of the most compelling large units on the scene and this remarkable performance clinches Parker as a composer of large-scale dramatic works. The title-piece and the equally long 'I Can't Believe I Am Here' are structured around deceptively simple ideas, melodic cells and simple ostinatos which open up improvising possibilities for the soloists. Parker includes two curious 'interludes' which sound like rehearsal material, but with 'Three Steps To Noh Mountain' he demonstrates a capacity for jewel-like perfection and a pristine logic, even in a small span. There is so much to admire here that it's virtually impossible to single out tracks, but, along with those already mentioned, 'Oglala Eclipse' and the closing 'Anthem' are outstanding.

* O'Neal's Porch / (*) Sound Unity AUM Fidelity 22 / 34 Parker; Lewis 'Flip' Barnes(t); Rob Brown(as); Hamid Drake(d). 5/00; 6 & 7/04.

After the majestic sweep of Mayor Of Punkville, this is an almost straight-ahead post-bop session. Parker and Drake establish a telepathic rapport on the opening 'Purple' and the album just drives on from there. 'Sun', 'Song For Jesus' and the title-track rely on harmonic ideas and rhythmic displacements that will inevitably conjure up the spirit of Eric Dolphy. Eric's feel for the blues suffuses 'Rise' and 'Moon', though Rob Brown has his own very distinctive voice and is most certainly not a copyist. Parker has been bolder and will write more ambitious music, but he will find it challenging to top this one for sheer listenability and intrigue.

This group has now lasted a considerable time and the later album still finds it in good heart, if without the impact of the first record. 'Hawaii' and the title-track are both exceptional lines, dealt with at length and 'Poem For June Jordan', dedicated to the black feminist writer, is an intense statement.

(*) Raining On The Moon Thirsty Ear THE 57119 2 Parker; Lewis Barnes(t); Rob Brown(as, f); Hamid Drake(d); Leena Conquest(v). 10/01.

When this was released, there was much talk of Parker's 'retro' taste taking him back to a sound that would not have been out of place on some AACM project of the late '60s. The lineage is very much that and, in a curious way, it's Leena Conquest's vocal which cements the comparison. There is something refreshingly sanguine and upbeat about all the music on the record. 'Hunk Pappa Blues' and the following 'Song Of Hope' provide as enjoyable an intro as you'll hear in many a year, while 'Raining On The Moon', 'James Baldwin To The Rescue' and 'Donso Ngoni' mix the light-hearted and sombre in perfect proportion.

 Spontaneous Splasc(h) 855 Parker; Lewis Barnes, Roy Campbell, Matt Lavelle(t); Masahiko Kono, Dick Griffin, Alex Lodico, Steve Swell(tb); Darryl Foster, Ori Kaplan, Sabir Mateen, David Sewelson, Charles Waters(reeds); Andrew Barker, Guillermo E. Brown(d). 02.

One of the most rawly exciting of all Parker's records. This has a directness and physicality he often hints at but doesn't quite deliver. It's an unexpected imprint and the sound isn't always all what one might hope for – some distortion here and there in the noisier passages, a bit of muffle in the rest – but the total impact is exhilarating.

(*) Scrapbook Eremite 57133 Parker; Billy Bang(vn); Hamid Drake(perc). 6/03.

This is Parker's Violin Trio, a song-based group that takes two elements of his career and fuses them brilliantly. There is plenty of open improvisation to be found, but it's the structure of these six songs that is intriguing. The best of them is also the longest, 'Sunday Morning Church', on which Bang plays a heart-achingly mournful solo against Parker's bass ostinati. 'Dust On A White Shirt' is more mysterious, an exploration of the quotidian so intense that it becomes almost surreal. The final 'Holiday For Flowers' is snappy enough to release as a single.

(*) Luc's Lantern Thirsty Ear THE 57158 Parker; Eri Yamamoto(p); Michael Thompson(d). 05.

An unexpected context for the bassman, but he seems pleased enough to work in a relatively secondary role for much of this, or at least to work as part of the group. His sound here is reminiscent of Wilbur Ware and there are occasional Monkish flourishes from Yamamoto, who has solid technique and considerable presence without being a particularly distinctive stylist.

(*) Sound Unity AUM Fidelity 34 Parker; Lewis Barnes(t); Rob Brown(sax); Hamid Drake(d). 7/04.

This is a line-up that always invites comparison with the classic Ornette Coleman quartet. The real antecedents here, though, seem to be Coltrane and Dolphy. There's no longer any distinction between 'front line' and 'rhythm section', a process those two masters began but didn't quite see through, and the flowing interaction on these live dates from Canada comes very much from the leader, who's whoopingly joyous on 'Hawaii' and more sombre on the long title-track. The two closing pieces, 'Harlem' and 'Groove', probably show the best integration of writing and improvisation in Parker's entire – and now capacious – canon.

* For Percy Heath Victo 102 Parker; Little Huey Creative Music Orchestra; similar personnel to Spontaneous. 5/05.

It's now a vast body of work, and new releases come at an alarming pace. Parker here pays tribute to one of the great modern bassists – and a man of quiet authority and dignity – in a four-part suite that seems to evolve out of tiny bass nodes and melodic cells pushed as far as they will go by a well-disciplined and often virtuosic ensemble. The analogy with Mingus is unavoidable here again, but Parker's authority is of a more mystical sort. He is anything but a martinet, and often absorbs himself so deeply in the texture of the band that one has to go in search of his throbbing sound.

* Corn Meal Dance AUM Fidelity 043 Parker; Lewis Barnes(t); Rob Brown(sax); Eri Yamamoto(p); Hamid Drake(d); Leena Conquest(v). 6/07.

The Raining On The Moon group with a set that neatly tessellates folk-like forms with free passages, vast ostinati, personal dedications (like the one to poet and scholar June Jordan) and rompingly subversive pieces that seem almost out of character for a man of Parker's sensibility and sensitivity. It's great, but in the end almost exhausting. The finest small group in contemporary jazz?

Also, in brief:

 Song Cycle Boxholder BXH 017. 91–93.
A vocal collaboration with Ellen Christi and Lisa Sokolov. Strange and powerful.

 Testimony Zero In. no number. 12/94.
Solo contrabass performance is a stern discipline. Parker pays full tribute to Barre Phillips, and much of this live recording from the Knitting Factory recalls Barre's rich, balletic solo works.

 Lifting The Sanctions No More 6. 97.
On another solo project, Parker again favours the bow and creates a dazzling soundscape that satisfies both emotionally and intellectually.

 Mass For The Healing Of The World Black Saint 120179. 98.
With the Little Huey Creative Music Orchestra. Decidedly a secular mass, but powerful in its way.

 Zen Mountains, Zen Streets: A Duet For Poet And Improvised Bass Boxholder BXH 1/2 2CD. 10/98.
A curious association with Whitmanesque poet David Budbill. Mostly it works, but it's too long for most tastes.

 Raincoat In The River Eremite MTE 036. 2/01.
An ambitious big-band project, but disappointing sound mars it.

 Bob's Pink Cadillac Eremite MTE 32 2CD. 01.
A curious trio with Perry Robinson (cl, oc) and Walter Perkins (d, perc) and a lot of music to absorb. We've found it difficult to return to this one too often.

 ... And William Danced Ayler AYL 44. 4/02.
Recorded live in Stockholm with Anders Gahnhold (as) and Hamid Drake (d).

() Eloping With The Sun Riti 7. 02.
With label boss Joe Morris and the idea that each trio member would leave their main instrument at home: hence zintir, banjo/lele and banjouki, and, for Hamid Drake, a frame drum.

(*) Volume 2: Summer Snow AUM Fidelity 041. 9/05.
Parker and Hamid Drake: the most influential bass/percussion partnership in modern music, heard here in a telepathic duo situation.

Horace Parlan (born 1931)

PIANO

Veteran Pittsburgh hard-bopper, active in the USA through the '60s but since 1973 an expatriate living in Denmark. His blues-based style is solidity incarnate. Bud Powell and Ahmad Jamal are influences. Horace overcame physical handicap – a polio-damaged right hand – to make a career.

 Arrival Steeplechase SCCD 31012 Parlan; Idrees Sulieman(flhn); Bent Jaedig(ts); Hugo Rasmussen(b); Ed Thigpen(d). 2/73.
 Frankly Speaking Steeplechase SCCD 31076 Parlan; Frank Strozier(as); Frank Foster(ts); Lisle Atkinson(b); Al Harewood(d). 77.
 Blue Parlan Steeplechase SCCD 31124 Parlan; Wilbur Little(b); Dannie Richmond(d). 11/78.
(*) Glad I Found You Steeplechase SCCD 31194 Parlan; Thad Jones(flhn); Eddie Harris(ts); Jesper Lundgaard(b); Aage Tanggaard(d). 84.

Like other American players of the time, facing a slackening demand for jazz recording, Parlan emigrated to Scandinavia, where he has pursued a workmanlike and unspectacular career, documented by Steeplechase from Arrival onwards with almost redundant thoroughness, although the sequence ends in the '80s. The only high-spots that call for separate treatment are the very fine 1978 trio with Wilbur Little and Dannie Richmond (also, of course, a Mingus man) and the much later Glad I Found You, where Parlan and the late Thad Jones shrug off a rather diffident setting to produce some sparkling performances. Frankly Speaking offers a rare glimpse of Frank Strozier, briefly visible as a Steeplechaser at the time. For the rest, cautious sampling is perhaps the best bet. Although he rarely resorts to cliché, Parlan is still somewhat repetitive in the structuring of his solos, and he's rarely as challenging as like-minded figures such as Roland Hanna and Jaki Byard.

 Voyage Of Rediscovery / (*) Horace Parlan By Horace Parlan: Original Soundtrack Storyville STCD 4233 / Cope 15 Parlan (p solo). 1/99; 99.
There were relatively few solo dates from Parlan, but these relatively recent ones are worth checking out. Voyage consists largely of repertory material, which makes sense of the title, but not many pianists of this generation would have programmed Archie Shepp's 'Déjà Vu' alongside the traditional 'Make Me A Pallet On The Floor', and added Strayhorn's 'Blood Count'. Parlan plays his favourite Monk tune, 'Pannonica', with dash and his solitary composition, 'Broken Promises', has a dry edge that adds to the attractively sombre thread running through the record. The other disc, by contrast, is almost all originals, played with dash and authority. 'Little Esther' is an established favourite and 'Broken Promises' also appears. Nice piano sound; resonant and rich.

 Relaxin' With Horace Stunt STUCD 4102 Parlan; Jesper Lundgaard(b); Ed Thigpen(d). 12/03.
Indian summer. Parlan's gifts were never of a kind that were going to tarnish with age and there is a quiet and unaffected beauty about this uncomplicated set that will draw you back time and again. Thigpen piles on the steam for a while on his own 'Blues For HP', but the defining track is a slow, pleading 'Don't Take Your Love From Me', on which Horace shows his gift for understated emotion. Lundgaard shouldn't be overlooked, either, a fine accompanist with a knack for unexpected harmonic figuration. Like an old pressed flower in a drawer, this has a dusty charm and unexpected staying power.

Also, in brief:

 No Blues Steeplechase SCCD 31056. 12/75.
With NHØP and the little-known Tony Inzalaco (d). Competent but routine.

 Musically Yours /  The Maestro /  Alone Steeplechase SCCD 31141 / 31167 / 32464 37041/42 2CD. 11/79.
There are few enough solo Parlan records around. These are OK but without a solid rhythm accompaniment he can sound slightly ethereal and unfocused. Check out the gentler tracks on the second disc. Still available separately but also as a two-CD set.

 Like Someone In Love Steeplechase SCCD 31178. 3/83.
Dannie Richmond (d) anchors another fine trio set.

() Little Esther Soul Note 121145. 3/87.
A few old friends on hand to give it substance, but no real excitements here.

 Ellington Ballads Timeless 288. 88.
Attractive collaboration with Joe Van Enkhuizen (ts).

J. D. Parran

SOPRANO SAXOPHONE, ALTO AND CONTRABASS CLARINET, BAMBOO FLUTE, OTHER REEDS

A member of New Winds and of various Anthony Braxton ensembles, he has also recorded with John Lennon and Stevie Wonder.

 Omegathorp: Living City Y'all YALL 008 Parran; Mark Deutsch(bazantar, sitar); David Darling(clo, elec, electro-v); Joseph Kubera(p); Kevin Norton(perc); Thomas Buckner(v). 9/02.
Somewhat like Bennie Maupin in a previous decade, he has often been the instrumentalist of choice for low-register reed parts, sometimes in conjunction with Marty Ehrlich. Unlike his fellow multi-instrumentalist, though, Parran has been too busy in the studios and as a concert performer to make a record on his own account until now. Strictly speaking, this live date is a co-led project with bassist Deutsch, whose favoured instrument is treated with sympathetic drone strings which give it the effect of a low-toned sitar. J.D. does play some highly effective soprano early on in the concert, which was taped at Merkin Hall in NYC, but with his alto and bass clarinets, Deutsch's bazantar or sitar and Darling's cello in the mix, the basic sound-world is indigo-tinged and exotic. The title-piece is derived from a poem by the late Glenn Spearman, intoned and sung by Buckner in registers that range from mannered enunciation to something like cantorial singing. Voice also plays an important role in the closing improvisation with Darling's electro-vocals creating an atmosphere of anxiety, even dread. It's the most stirring piece on the record, ironically. The title-suite and Deutsch's 'Kwama Okura' are perhaps too formally structured. When this remarkable ensemble, underpinned by Norton's endlessly imaginative percussion, is allowed to cut loose without structures, the results are riveting. More, please, in that mould.

Stefan Pasborg

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

The gifted young Dane is the godson of Alex Riel, who presented him with his first snare at the age of three. Also a member of Absinthe Electric and has worked with John Tchicai.

(*) Toxikum Ilk 004 Pasborg; Jakob Munck(tb, tba); Liudnas Mockunas(reeds); John Tchicai(ss, as); Nils Davidsen, Marc Ducret(g). 7–11/02.
(*) Triplepoint Ilk 07 3CD Pasborg; Ray Anderson(tb); Jakob Munck(sous); Jesper Zeuthen(as); Ellery Eskelin, John Tchicai(ts); Liudas Mockunas(sax); Carsten Dahl(p); Paul Brousseau(ky, samples); Marc Ducret(g); Daniel Franck, Peter Friis-Nielsen, Jeppe Skovbakke(b); Jakob Riis(laptop). 04–06.
Pasborg and Mockunas have previously recorded (Project on TCB) with the saxophonist's name first, but Toxikum sounds very much as if the percussionist is driving things. It's an unusual record, packed with quirky themes and unusual sonorities – or combinations of sonorities – which immediately grabs the attention and holds it fast till the end.

Triplepoint is perhaps too ambitious for its own good and a very big listen indeed. However, the elements are all good: solo percussion with laptop treatments on the first disc, excellent duos on the second with the guest players, and a series of trios on the third. The duos with Riel and Ducret are both particularly interesting and he clearly has a special understanding with Mockunas, but this element of the set has been very carefully chosen and everything is included for a reason. The trios (including one of just 45 seconds with Tchicai and Skovbakke) are in general less compelling, but this is clearly intended as a sampling of Pasborg's various associations and as such it offers a clear impression of an excellent drummer with a modernist sensibility who none the less has all the basics at his disposal.

Joe Pass (1929–94)

GUITAR

Already playing pro in high school, Joseph Passalaqua toured with Charlie Barnet before naval service, then grappled with a drug problem. Cleaning up in the early '60s, he worked with George Shearing and others and became internationally known after signing with Norman Granz's Pablo operation. Revered by other players for a consummate technique, he helped restore a 'traditional' modernism, after rock nullified the open-tone electric sound.

 Joy Spring Pacific Jazz 835222-2 Pass; Mike Wofford(p); Jim Hughart(b); Colin Bailey(d). 2/64.
Pass became the most significant 'classic' guitar stylist since Wes Montgomery. He first recorded as a member of a Synanon Rehabilitation Center house band, and the string of albums he made for Pacific Jazz during the '60s are all currently out of general circulation – except this one, which didn't even emerge until the '70s. It's a typical Los Angeles club date from 1964, handling some bop and standard set-pieces. Pass's style is fully formed: only the warmth and finesse of his later years are missing, and that may be as much due to the recording, which is no more than respectable. He builds long and quite fanciful lines out of 'Joy Spring' and 'Relaxin' At Camarillo' and comfortably overcomes some tuning problems on 'The Night Has A Thousand Eyes'. This is an inadequate look at this point in his career but, in the absence of Catch Me! and For Django, it's all there is.

 Portraits Of Duke Ellington Pablo 2310-716 Pass; Ray Brown(b); Bobby Durham(d). 6/74.
(*) Chops Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 686 Pass; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b). 11/78.
 Checkmate Pablo 2310-865 Pass; Jimmy Rowles(p). 1/81.
 Ira, George And Joe Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 828 Pass; John Pisano(g); Jim Hughart(b); Shelly Manne(d). 11/81.
 Eximious Pablo 2310-877 Pass; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Martin Drew(d). 5–7/82.
 We'll Be Together Again Original Jazz Classics OJC 909
 Summer Nights Pablo 2310-939 Pass; John Pisano(g); Jim Hughart(b); Colin Bailey(d). 12/89.
 Appassionato Pablo 2310-946 Pass; Jim Hughart(b); Colin Bailey(d). 8/90.
 Duets Pablo 2310-959 Pass; John Pisano(g). 2/91.
 Live At Yoshi's /  Nuages: ... Vol. 2 Pablo 2310-951 / 2310-961 Pass; John Pisano(g); Monty Budwig(b); Colin Bailey(d). 1/92; 1–2/92.
(*) Finally Emarcy 512603-2 Pass; Red Mitchell(b). 2/92.
 My Song Telarc CD-83326 Pass; John Pisano(g); Tom Ranier(p); Jim Hughart(b); Colin Bailey(d). 2/93.

His long series of albums for Pablo helped Pass become both a major concert attraction and a benchmark player for jazz guitar. Pass smooths away the nervousness of bop yet counters the plain talk of swing with a complexity that remains completely accessible. An improvisation on a standard may range far and wide, but there's no sense of him going into territory which he doesn't already know well. There's nothing hidden in his music, everything is absolutely on display, and he cherishes good tunes without sanctifying them. His tone isn't distinctive but it is reliably mellifluous, and he can make every note in a melody shine. Compared with Tal Farlow or Jimmy Raney, Pass took few risks and set himself fewer genuine challenges, but any guitarist will recognize a performer who has a total command over the instrument.

Pass effectively became the house guitarist for Pablo and, besides his own sessions, there are very many guest appearances with Oscar Peterson, Milt Jackson and the rest of the company stable. Although he recorded extensively as a soloist, there are also many group albums in the catalogue. Chops is plenty of fun for the sheer expertise on display, Pass and NHØP basically doing little more than showing off how well they can play, but with enough nous to make it sound good. The meeting with J. J. Johnson on We'll Be Together Again is a little sleepy, but these are two sly old dogs, and you can almost hear them kidding each other on the blues 'Naked As A Jaybird'. Johnson deadpans his way through it and for once Pass sounds like the assertive one; still, it's hard to think of a more sheerly mellifluous partnership. Shelly Manne is a useful presence on Ira, George And Joe, and this set of Gershwin tunes is nicely varied: Pass almost twangs his way through 'Bidin' My Time' and 'It Ain't Necessarily So', makes a waltz out of 'Love Is Here To Stay' and does a beautifully slow take on 'Lady Be Good'.

Of the trio sets, the Ellington album with Ray Brown and Bobby Durham is a shade disappointing. Summer Nights is something of a tribute to Django Reinhardt, and Pass sounds contented and thoughtful, while Appassionato, which benefits from a wider and more modern sound on CD, chooses terser material than usual – 'Grooveyard', 'Relaxin' At Camarillo', 'Nica's Dream' – and finds a cutting edge which some of Pass's records pass by. Eximious is a mixed set of standards and jazz themes, most of them adroitly handled, although Drew doesn't seem like the ideal drummer for the situation and the studio sound is a bit glaring. Live At Yoshi's is a solid club set, recorded in California, with a boppish tinge that gets a little extra juice out of 'Doxy' and 'Oleo'. The second helping on Nuages turns out much the same, with the closing 'Cherokee' a characteristic flourish from all hands.

There is some poignancy about Finally, given that it's among the last recordings by both Pass and Mitchell, but the sheer good humour and craftiness of the playing make it a special item in the Pass list. Mitchell's knack of elevating an ordinary playing situation brings out the best in both men, and there's an extra twist in such staples as 'Blue Moon' and 'Have You Met Miss Jones?'. 'I Thought About You', done at a tempo that approximates syrup dripping off a spoon, is very fine. The other duo albums are equally effective and suggest how much Pass responded to the format. Checkmate is a typical Rowles session, with forgotten sweeteners like 'So Rare' and 'Marquita' in the programme, and since both men share an approach that mixes the respectful with the inventive they get along just fine. Pass plays with the minimum of amplification and it helps to offset any chord-clashing problems. There was a long-standing and fruitful liaison with fellow guitarist Pisano, and Duets documents their sympathies very candidly. Whether playing acoustic or electric, there's a good deal of bite about this pairing, with little of the sonorous fluff that sometimes gets stuck to guitar duets.

His first for Telarc reunited him with Pisano, and the rhythm section generate some civilized heat. It's still a bit restrained, but a couple more records by this group might have seen them reaching beyond the norm. Instead, Pass's passing closed the chapter.

CORE COLLECTION

 Virtuoso

Pablo 2310-708 Pass (g solo). 11/73.

This original Virtuoso album remains definitive: Pass never sounded sharper or warmer on a set of standards, played with all the expertise the title suggests.

(*) Virtuoso In New York Pablo 2310979-2 Pass (g solo). 6/75.
(*) Virtuoso #2 Pablo 2310-788 Pass (g solo). 10/76.
 Virtuoso #3 Original Jazz Classics OJC 684 Pass (g solo). 5–6/77.
 Virtuoso #4 Pablo 2640-102 2CD Pass (g solo). 11/73.
 At the Montreux Jazz Festival 1975 Original Jazz Classics OJC 934 Pass (g solo). 7/75.
 Montreux '77 Original Jazz Classics OJC 382 Pass (g solo). 7/77.
 I Remember Charlie Parker Original Jazz Classics OJC 602 Pass (g solo). 2/79.
 Blues Dues (Live At Long Beach City College) Original Jazz Classics OJC 964 Pass (g solo). 1/84.
 University Of Akron Concert Pablo 2308-249 Pass (g solo). 85.
 Blues For Fred Pablo 2310-931 Pass (g solo). 2/88.
 Virtuoso Live! Pablo 2310-948 Pass (g solo). 9/91.
 What Is There To Say Pablo 2310-971-2 Pass (g solo). 9/90.
 Songs For Ellen Pablo 2310-955 Pass (g solo). 8/92.
 Unforgettable Pablo 2310964-2 Pass (g solo). 8/92.

Pass's solo records are almost a category by themselves, and their importance in re-establishing the eminence of straight-ahead jazz guitar now seems clear. At a time when traditional jazz guitar-playing was being sidelined by the gradual onset of fusion, Joe's solo work reaffirmed the virtues of the unadorned electric guitar, and the subtleties and harmonic shrewdness of his playing are like a long drink of water after much of the overheated guitar-playing of the '70s and '80s.

Following on from the original, the three subsequent Virtuoso volumes are replays with lightly diminishing returns; Virtuoso #4 has now made it to a double CD, with some extra tracks, although with the emphasis here on the acoustic guitar some may see this as a makeweight to the others.

Concert situations don't seem to affect Pass's concentration: he played with the same careful diligence as in the studio, so the live solo albums sound much alike. Both Montreux albums are good, but Montreux '77 is interesting for its emphasis on blues – four of the seven tracks – and how much Pass can get out of the form. Blues Dues includes a 'Round Midnight' which makes one wish that Pass had looked at this repertoire more often. University Of Akron Concert includes one of his extended Ellington medleys, a favourite device. Virtuoso Live! is in most respects just another solo album, but the pieces chosen reflect Pass's concern to try and wriggle free of his own routines. 'Mack The Knife' appears as a ballad, delivered with a superb touch, and the chopped rhythms of 'Stompin' At The Savoy' show how he could find a new tone, even in such a warhorse as that. What Is There To Say offers previously unheard material, live at Hollywood's Vine Street Bar & Grill. Joe sounds in strong form, not dwelling too long on the ballads and making even the likes of 'Old Folks' and 'Come Rain Or Come Shine' muster a little urgency as they go.

Of the other studio dates, I Remember Charlie Parker is a slight disappointment, Pass a little quiescent; Blues For Fred has some charming material, associated with Fred Astaire; and Songs For Ellen is Pass at his gentlest. From those same final sessions is Unforgettable. Played on a nylon-strung acoustic, it is Joe at his most winsome, even if rhythmically it's a little deliberate. A new arrival is Virtuoso In New York, nine previously unissued titles from a couple of studio sessions. There is some superb Pass here: 'I Never Knew' must rank as one of his most explosive solos on record, and 'Moritat', complete with rapid-fire key changes, isn't far behind.

Also, in brief:

() Tudo Bem! /  Whitestone Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 685 / Pablo 2310-912. 5/78; 2–3/85.
Two rare dead spots for Joe.

 One For My Baby Pablo 2310-936. 4/88.
This sets Joe with a kind of down-home roadhouse band. A mixed success, though Plas Johnson (ts) has some nice touches.

 Joe Pass In Hamburg ACT 9100-2. 4/90–2/92.
Big band, strings, indifferent charts. He's fine, but the setting's wrong.

 The Best Of Joe Pass / * Guitar Virtuoso Pablo 2405-419 / 4423 4CD. VARIOUS DATES.
The Best Of offers a respectable cross-section, but it has been superseded by the handsome, smartly chosen and very pleasurable four-disc set.

Jaco Pastorius (1951–87)

BASS GUITAR, STEEL DRUMS

Tried several instruments and played rock, soul and reggae before jazz. A member of Weather Report from 1976 until 1982, his virtuosic style on fretless electric bass was hugely influential, but his personal life went downhill in the mid-'80s and he died following a beating outside a night club.

(*) Jaco Pastorius Sony Jazz EK 64977 Pastorius; Randy Brecker, Ron Tooley(t); Peter Graves(btb); Peter Gordon(frhn); Hubert Laws(picc); Wayne Shorter(ss); David Sanborn(as); Michael Brecker(ts); Howard Johnson(bs); Alex Darqui, Herbie Hancock(p, ky); Richard Davis, Homer Mensch(b); Bobby Oeconomy, Narada Michael Walden, Lenny White(d); Don Alias(perc); Othello Molineaux, Leroy Williams(steel d); Sam and Dave(v); strings. 75.
He was groomed for stardom, and this puts him into an appropriately epic setting and demonstrates with tiny gestures just how completely in command he was when focused and straight, not just of his own instrument but of an entire musical conception. But for oddities like the vocal contribution of soulmen Sam and Dave, which doesn't really work, and an understandable desire to show off as many different facets of his musical personality as possible, this might stand as Pastorius's best memorial. In the end, it doesn't quite add up to a great album. The solo 'Portrait Of Tracy' is exquisite and there is an early and very wonderful performance of the Miles Davis tune 'Donna Lee'.

(*) Word Of Mouth Warner Bros 3535 Pastorius; Bill Reichenbach(tb); Tom Scott(bcl); Toots Thielemans(hca); Jack DeJohnette(d, perc). 80.
A brilliant example of Jaco's gift for sound, with a rich blend of horn sounds within the small group. DeJohnette's drumming is the key additional element, intensely musical and endlessly responsive to the long, winding bass-line. Jaco seems at ease and plays more quietly and with less percussive an attack. Some of his mid-range tones might almost be made by a cello.

 Invitation Warner Brothers 16662 Pastorius; Randy Brecker, Elmer Brown, Forrest Buchtel, Jon Faddis, Ron Tooley(t); Wayne Andre(tb); Dave Bargeron(tb, tba); Peter Gordon, Brad Warnaar(frhn); Peter Graves, Bill Reichenbach(btb); Alex Foster(ss, as, ts, picc, f); Mario Cruz(ss, as, ts, cl, f); Bob Mintzer(ss, ts); Randy Emerick(as, bs, f); Paul McCandless(ts, ob, eng hn); Toots Thielemans(hca); Peter Erskine(d, perc); Don Alias, Othello(perc). 82.
Another live concert and another hand-picked big band. Jaco steps out front for a Hendrix-influenced version of 'Amerika' (sic) and is prominently featured as soloist, with the massed horns roaring and murmuring behind him. It's a slightly unsettling sound, but such is the level of his inventiveness that it never palls. As if to show off his jazz chops, Jaco medleys a couple of his own compositions with John Coltrane's 'Giant Steps', the modern test-piece in the jazz musician's harmony and counterpoint class. He comes off just fine. Gil Evans's 'Eleven' is another of the repertory pieces, but for the most part Pastorius sticks to an eclectic mix of originals ('Liberty City', 'Continuum', and things like Pee Wee Ellis's 'The Chicken', a riff he'd been playing for most of his career). It's a great record and a feast for electric-bass fans.

(*) Punk Jazz Big World BW 1001 Pastorius; Jerry Gonzalez(t, perc); Alex Foster, Butch Thomas(sax); Michael Gerber(p); Delmar Brown(ky); Hiram Bullock(g); Kenwood Dennard(d). 3/86.
Pastorius's wish to be considered a jazz man (albeit a punk jazz man) surfaced regularly through the final few years, when as often as not personal circumstances dictated a less sophisticated approach. 'Donna Lee' reappears here, but without the boppish authenticity of the Epic session (reissued on Sony). The remainder of the set is good, hot-sauce electric jazz, surprisingly conventional when set alongside the 'punk' aesthetic of Zorn, Lindsay, Marclay and company.

() Honestly Jazzpoint JP 1032 Pastorius (b solo). 3/86.
(*) Live In Italy Jazzpoint JP 1037 Pastorius; Biréli Lagrène (g); Thomas Böröcz(d). 3/86.
 Heavy'N Jazz Jazzpoint JP 1036 Pastorius; Biréli Lagrène(g); Serge Bringolf(d). 12/86.
The untitled improvisations on Honestly frequently seem no more than a Sears catalogue of exotic harmonies and effects, put together with diminishing logic and questionable taste. Needless to say, the Italian crowd cheer it to the echo, although they don't respond at all to a quote from 'My Favorite Things', and they don't rise to 'America The Beautiful' or the riff from 'Purple Haze' either, so what does that suggest about their musical expectations? The trio was recorded at the same time, a very different line-up and sound from the group with Bullock and Dennard, but it has its own distinctive strengths. Lagrène's romanticism is closest in spirit, and the two guitarists trade lines with fire and discipline. In contrast to Metheny's Wes Montgomery fixation, Lagrène is in thrall to his countryman, Django. His opening improvisation more or less focuses the mind on what he's doing thereafter, to the virtual exclusion of a slightly subdued and acoustically recessed Pastorius. They do creditable versions of 'Satin Doll', Joe Zawinul's Weather Report theme 'Black Market', and Bob Marley's reggae classic 'I Shot The Sheriff', which underlines Pastorius's childhood closeness to Caribbean music of all sorts.

* Punk Jazz: The Jaco Pastorius Anthology Warner Bros/Rhino 8122 73779 2 2CD Pastorius solo and with various groups: Wayne Cochran's C C Riders; Little Beaver; Pat Metheny/ Paul Bley/ Bruce Ditmas; Trilogue; Weather Report; Airto Moreira/ Flora Purim; Michel Colombier; Joni Mitchell; Mike Stern; Brian Melvin. 68–86.

As Jaco Pastorius Inc, run by the late bassist's children, starts to mop up the bootlegs and unauthorized releases, the contours of their father's remarkable story becomes clearer. This sumptuous and beautifully mastered set touches all the obvious bases: the stint with Weather Report ('Birdland' inevitably), working with Joni Mitchell ('Goodbye Pork Pie Hat', 'Dry Cleaner From Des Moines'), Pat Metheny, Paul Bley, and a generous sampling of Jaco's small groups and big bands with Warners. The real plus, though, is the early material, and for collectors the previously unreleased cuts. We first hear the teenage Jaco in his bedroom, playing all the parts – guitar, drums, saxophone, bass – on Pee Wee Ellis's 'The Chicken', a tune that turned up again later in his career. We also hear him with Wayne Cochran's C C Riders and with Little Beaver. Then there's the free-form jazz stuff with Paul Bley and Pat Metheny from the Improvising Artists' Jaco. There are later tracks with pianist Michel Colombier which may not be known to some listeners. More familiar are 'Amerika' (the ultimate electric-bass feature) and the glorious moment on Word Of Mouth when Toots Thielemans plays harmonica on Bach's 'Chromatic Fantasy'. Poignantly the track listing goes right up to the autumn of 1986, less than a year before Jaco's death, when he played with the Brian Melvin Trio for what was to be the 1990 release Standards Zone, a cover of Joe Henderson's 'Out Of The Night' that once again cements Jaco's jazz credentials.

For anyone who has only just heard of Jaco Pastorius, this will be a revelation. For serious collectors, the issue of 'Okonkole Y Trompa' from the 1982 tour is a very definite plus, as is that amazing bedroom track. Portrait of the genius as a young man fated not to grow old.

Also, in brief:

 The Birthday Concert Warner Bros 954290. 12/81.
Jaco's 30th celebrated in a club in his native Fort Lauderdale, with a mix of visiting guests like Michael Brecker (ts) and local stalwarts.

 Jazz Street Timeless SJP 258. 10 & 11/86.
Collaboration with Brian Melvin (d) on a lite-ish programme of pop-jazz.

(*) Another Side Of Jazzpoint 1064. VARIOUS DATES.
This is so smooth as hardly to qualify as a JFP record at all.

 Word Of Mouth Revisited Heads Up 9078. 3 & 4/03.
Posthumous tribute organized by old boss Peter Graves and featuring some latter-day bass stars. Intercut with spooky bits of Jaco's voice.

Big John Patton (1935–2002)

ORGAN

Born in Kansas, he played piano for Lloyd Price in the '50s, then switched to organ. Less visible in later years, he made a minor comeback in the '80s.

(*) Along Came John Blue Note 31915 Patton; Fred Jackson, Harold Vick(ts); Grant Green(g); Ben Dixon(d). 4/63.
 Let 'Em Roll Blue Note 89795-2 Patton; Bobby Hutcherson(vib); Grant Green(g); Otis Finch(d). 12/65.
 Got A Good Thing Goin' Blue Note 80731-2 Patton; Grant Green(g); Hugh Walker(d); Richard Landrum(perc). 4/66.
(*) Accent On The Blues Blue Note 84340 Patton; Marvin Cabell, George Coleman(ts); James 'Blood' Ulmer(g); Leroy Williams(d). 6 & 8/69.

Patton was one of the most entertaining of the players who followed in Jimmy Smith's footsteps, and a pile of Blue Note albums became his principal legacy. Most of them are out of print again, although there are plenty of tracks anthologized on sundry Blue Note compilations. Along Came John is probably his great moment, and even that can be boiled down to 'The Silver Meter', an irresistible loping groove.

Let 'Em Roll is a somewhat atypical date from 1965. Hutcherson is a surprise presence, but Grant is on hand to make sure nothing too unusual happens. They all get particularly busy on 'The Turnaround' to good effect. On Got A Good Thing Goin' pop tunes are starting to encroach, but the group burn through 'Ain't That Peculiar' as if it were a hard-bop staple.

Accent's a bit different. If it isn't exactly avant-garde, it's quite some distance from dancing soul-jazz and the presence of both Coleman and Ulmer will enhance its appeal for modernists. Untypical, though, and for some in this field, that might mean unwelcome.

Mario Pavone (born 1940)

DOUBLE BASS

A frequently encountered presence on New York's downtown scene.

 Sharpeville Playscape 090885 Pavone; Pete McEachern(tb); Mark Whitechage(as); Thomas Chapin(as, f, af); Marty Ehrlich(ss, as, cl, f, af); Michael Musillami(g); John Betsch, Pheeroan akLaff(d). 1–9/89.
 Toulon Days New World 80420 Pavone; Steve Davis(tb); Thomas Chapin(as, f); Marty Ehrlich(cl, f); Joshua Redman(ts); Hotep Idris Galeta(p); Steve Johns(d). 11/91.
(*) Song For (Septet) New World 80452 As above, except omit Davis, Galeta; add Peter McEachern(tb); Peter Madsen(p); Bill Ware(vib). 3/93.

Pavone has a big, ringing sound and a seemingly bottomless supply of ideas. A regular in Thomas Chapin's trio, he has also worked with Bill Dixon, Anthony Braxton and Paul Bley. The distinctive feature of the albums he has released under his own name is the prominence given to trombone, either Steve Davis or Peter McEachern. Until the reissue of Sharpeville, where he makes an early showing on 'Bass Ballad', Pavone didn't really seem to emerge as a soloist until Song For (Septet), but there his fleet, Mingus-influenced approach begins to pay dividends; 'George On Avenue A' might well be something from the great man's notebook.

Sharpeville was originally issued on his own label. Again with McEachern and Chapin, it's a work of real emotional power, particularly the title-piece, which is dedicated to the victims of one of the most infamous episodes of the apartheid years in South Africa. The mournful under-theme is almost a passacaglia and provides the horns with great scope for passionate improvisation, especially from Chapin.

(*) Remembering Thomas Knitting Factory 257 Pavone; Peter Madsen(p); Matt Wilson(d). 99.

Thomas Chapin's death left a hole in the New York scene and left his regular playing partners bereft. It's hardly surprising that Pavone should have returned to the studio to record this lovely tribute as part of what became known as the Nu Trio. They play four Chapin tunes, of which the closing 'Insomnia' and 'Aeolus' are the most effective, but there is also a mix of other material, including Monk's 'Raise Four' and Gary Peacock's 'Miracles'. Nothing by Madsen, which seems surprising, given his palpable gift for sophisticated structures. The group play very much as a trio, with a measure of freedom in the ensembles and lots of fine support during the solo passages.

* Totem Blues Knitting Factory 292 Pavone; Art Baron, Peter McEachern(tb); Mike DiRubbo(ss, ts, cl); Jimmy Greene(ts); George Sovak(ts, cl); Peter Madsen(p); Matt Wilson(d). 8/00.

This is a stunning record, full-voiced, thoughtful and rippling with musical muscle. Most of the credit falls to the 'rhythm section', effectively a group within a group since Madsen and Wilson have worked with Pavone as the Nu Trio. Their ability to lay out the structure of a song and leave the horn soloists to build skyscrapers on it is consistently impressive. 'Bass Song' is another of Pavone's self-reflexive ideas, ever more sophisticated, and 'Poet O Central Park' is a Chapin composition, a by now customary though never less than sincere tribute to a fallen comrade. 'Totem' is the best cut, a hauntingly atavistic theme built round the bass's spiralling harmonies. The range of textures offered by the brass- and woodwind-players is extraordinary and subtler than most 'multi-instrumental' configurations allow. Intelligent music for deep listeners.

 Motion Poetry /  Op.Ed Playscape 052880 / 20981 Pavone; Michael Musillami(g); Peter Madsen(p); Michael Sarin(d). 5/00; 2/01.

Chapin's 'Poet O Central Park' again has a prominent place in this elegant collaboration between four of the late saxophonist's closest associates. Motion Poetry is also the name of the group and there is no doubt that this is intended to be a meeting of equals, though Pavone and the guitarist share all the writing responsibilities. Musillami shows his quality with 'Archives', a theme that fits very closely the group's elegant dissonance and rhythmic tension. The only off-putting element is the opening improvisation, 'Foody', which just sounds like a warm-up and at only two minutes' duration might easily have been dropped.

Op.Ed is more of the same, though that might seem to imply a comfortable resting on laurels when it's if anything an edgier and more effortful set than its predecessor. 'Bass Song' puts in a reappearance and Musillami's 'Today The Angels' calls for regular airings in future. Another fine album, perhaps lacking some of the finish of Motion Poetry but making up for that in sheer musicality.

* Mythos Playscape 111401 Pavone; Steven Bernstein(t); Tony Malaby(ts); Peter Madsen(p); Michael Sarin, Matt Wilson(d). 2–11/02.

(*) Orange Playscape 061083 As above, except omit Sarin, Wilson; add Gerald Cleaver(d). 03.

The Nu Trio plus two. The addition of a trumpeter gives a new spiky edge to the music and seems to drive Madsen, who grows with every session to ever greater heights of invention. Wilson and Sarin have also both grown with this music and they bring quite distinct characters to the music: Sarin's edgy and combative, Wilson's more flamboyant but also unexpectedly dry and uninflected in places. Pavone sounds in solid voice, and there is a new forthrightness to his playing, as if the mourning period that followed Tom Chapin's death has passed and given way to new resolution. Even so, 'Sky Piece' is probably the best track, closely followed by 'Isobars'. 'Crutch For The Crab' is a Richard Twardzik obscurity, and meat and drink to Madsen. Not perhaps the most representative Pavone album of the current bunch, but its quality speaks for itself.

On Orange, Cleaver's more direct delivery evens out the tempos and in some respects simplifies the music. Some will prefer the linear quality of this album to some of its predecessors, but it lacks the depth and character of Mythos. 'Sky Tango' is a long, slowly developing piece, largely improvised in the later stages. 'Goorootoo' is the other large-scale essay, almost African in some aspects, very New York in others.

* Boom Playscape 091003 Pavone; Tony Malaby(ts); Peter Madsen(p); Matt Wilson(d). 9/03.

With the multi-horn ensembles of earlier records out of the picture, it might look as if Pavone has settled for a more straightforward blowing situation. In fact, his writing only gains in subtlety and sophistication with passing time and this is a really terrific composer's record, with eight pungent themes and a rerun of a couple of collaborations with Chapin, including the delightful 'Bad Birdie'. Malaby is becoming almost as sanctified a figure in this community as the late TC was. He's in superb form here, notably on the terse 'Julian' and 'Short Yellow'. Madsen and Wilson are proven stars, too.

CORE COLLECTION

* Deez To Blues

Playscape 050505 Pavone; Steven Bernstein(t, slide t); Howard Johnson(tba, bcl, bs); Peter Madsen(p); Charles Burnham(vn); Michael Sarin(d). 5/05.

He still wouldn't be in many non-New Yorkers' list of most important contemporary composer-leaders, but it's hard to think who else has delivered so much consistently high-quality new jazz since the turn of the decade. This is his masterpiece to date, not so much a return to the 'old' sound of the earliest albums but an affirmation of its continuing potential. The richness of the voicings on 'Xapo' and 'Zines' is immediately intoxicating, though it takes a couple of hearings to pick up on Pavone's compositional subtleties. Through it all, Pavone throbs, sings, keeps time, marches and dances. An essential contemporary record.

Cecil Payne (born 1922)

BARITONE AND ALTO SAXOPHONES, FLUTE

The New Yorker switched from alto to baritone in 1946 while working with J. J. Johnson, but developed a light, limber approach with a Pres-like tone.

 And Duke Jordan: 1956–1962 Sessions Fresh Sound FSRCD 481 Payne; Johnny Coles, Kenny Dorham(t); Duke Jordan(p); Wendell Marshall, Tommy Potter(b); Walter Bolden, Art Taylor(d). 56, 62.
 Stop And Listen To ... Fresh Sound FSR CD 193 Payne; Clark Terry(t); Bennie Green(tb); Duke Jordan(p); Ron Carter(b); Charli Persip(d). 3/61–3/62.
 Performing Charlie Parker Music Collectables COL-5794 As above, except omit Green. 3/61.

Along with Leo Parker, Payne did much to adapt the hefty baritone to the rapid transitions and tonal extremities of bebop. Mostly it works. The first Fresh Sound covers three of the early albums, including the fine Patterns Of Jazz, made with the consistently underrated Jordan. The other brings together some good overlapping dates with the irrepressible Terry. The Kenny Drew material on the 1962 date is more Cecil's speed, but of course it lacks that whirling intensity one gets from Bird. The Collectables edition offers only the earlier set of Parker material.

 Cerupa Delmark DE 478 Payne; Freddie Hubbard(t); Eric Alexander(ts); Harold Mabern(p); John Ore(b); Joe Farnsworth(d). 93.
(*) Scotch And Milk Delmark DE 494 As above, except omit Hubbard; add Marcus Belgrave(t); Lin Halliday(ts). 96.
(*) Payne's Window Delmark DE 509 As above, except omit Halliday, Ore; add Steve Davis(tb); John Webber(b). 8/98.
 Chic Boom Live At The Jazz Showcase Delmark DE-529 As above, except add Jim Rotondi(t). 00.

Payne's work for Delmark was something of an Indian summer. The formula is pretty much the same on all three records: a weighty, two-saxophone front line (Halliday is pacemaker on Scotch And Milk), and guest brass from Freddie Hubbard, Marcus Belgrave and Steve Davis. The rhythm section is anchored by Mabern, who is one of the great post-bop pianists. Eric Alexander is a Mabern pupil and has absorbed much of the pianist's vast knowledge of the idiom, creating solos that bespeak historical awareness as well as formidable technique.

Cecil himself continues to plough his own thoughtful furrow. The skirling bebop reel that begins 'Scotch And Milk' is an indication of how receptive he is to ideas from outside the bebop mainstream, but his strength remains the driving swing of 'Et Vous Too, Cecil?' on the same album. Payne's Window (title-track courtesy of the impressive Davis) is probably the best of the bunch by a nose. Cecil reprises his King tribute from Zodiac, adds Miles's 'Tune Up' and Gershwin's 'Delilah' and restates his commitment to the Minton generation in 'Spiritus Parkus'. Chic Boom, though, shows the old warrior starting to sound fallible.

 Brooklyn Bebop Progressive PCD 7109 Payne; Ed Stoute(p); Leonard Gaskin(b); Wade Barnes(d); Tulivu-Donna Cumberbatch(v). 99.

Payne recalls that it was young Brooklyn players who provided the infantry of bebop. He's still putting out the message but the old lion isn't so manoeuvrable any more and he plays an unforgiving horn for an older man. Gaskin is the keystone of this group, a player so solid he seems almost implacable. The set is lifted by the addition of Tulivu-Donna, the daughter of Cecil's fellow baritonist Harold Cumberbatch.

Nicholas Payton (born 1973)

TRUMPET

The first 'post-Wynton' trumpeter of note, he has a ripe, full sound very different to Marsalis's though the writing – traditional harmony with a modern edge – is more similar.

(*) Payton's Place Verve 557327-2 Payton; Wynton Marsalis, Roy Hargrove(t); Joshua Redman, Tim Warfield(ts); Anthony Wonsey(p); Reuben Rogers(b); Adonis Rose(d). 9/97, 1/98.

Some earlier Verves now seem to be out of circulation, promising examples of Payton's storytelling voice: Gumbo Nouveau is the one of the first pair to find. Here he is, though, working with a tough young band. Marsalis stops long enough for two tunes, 'Brownie A La Mode' and the self-explanatory 'The Three Trumpeteers' (on which Hargrove also guests). Roy is the unexpected choice of partner on 'With A Song In My Heart' and shows a side of his playing which rarely surfaces in his own work, bright, fleet and softly lyrical. The basic group is in no way overshadowed by the visiting stars. Warfield and Wonsey are both developing by the session, and newcomer Adonis Rose (since embarked on a recording career of his own) is a great find. The interaction on Wayne Shorter's 'Paraphernalia' (a favourite of Payton's) suggests directions he might want to explore with a working band, some shift of emphasis that might allow him to broker a synthesis of classic jazz and the challenging harmonics of '60s Blue Note and beyond.

 Dear Louis Uptown/Universal 549419 Payton; Paul Stephens, Roy Vega(t, flhn); Vincent Gardner(tb); Bob Stewart(tba); Tim Warfield(ss, ts, f); Bill Easley(as, cl, f); Scott Robinson(bs, cbsax, bcl, f); Anthony Wonsey(p); Peter Bernstein(g); Walter Payton, Reuben Rogers(b); Adonis Rose(d); Dr John, Dianne Reeves(v). 00.

Payton's centenary tribute to Pops includes enough identifiable transcriptions of the Ur-texts – 'Potato Head Blues', 'West End Blues' – to draw in those who might otherwise be suspicious. Unlike Wynton, Nicholas hasn't got the kind of dominant musical personality that might overpower these tunes; instead he pays them respectful deference and allows memories of the great originals to settle in the mind. Vocals from Dianne Reeves and Dr John are reminders of what an important vocalist Armstrong also was, but only because they are so resolutely off the money.

The ensembles are the best aspect of this commissioned suite, beautifully arranged and vividly voiced. Scott Robinson adds weight to the bottom end of the horn arrangements and Payton's bright ringing tone cuts through. A more than worthy tribute to the great man.

 Sonic Trance Warners 48447 Payton; Tim Warfield(ss, ts): Kevin Hays(p, ky, rec, v); Karriem Riggins(syn, samples); Vicente Archer(b); Adonis Rose(d); Daniel Sadownick(perc). 03.

The move to Warners sparked an astonishing change in Payton's approach, from the boppish swing of his earlier records to something like Miles Davis's electric fusion. In a curious way, it seems a more dated record than the more traditional sessions of the Verve years, but there is a growing market for such stuff and so it presumably makes sense. Payton's trumpet is often half-drowned in washes of electronic processing and there are times when he finds it hard to make himself heard through an insistently funky beat, but he is too good a player to lose his way and tracks like 'Fela 1', the opening track proper after a strange 'Praalude', is packed with ideas. It also seems to be one of a number of tributes to an eclectic range of other musicians. 'Shabba Unranked' is another. Best track is 'Two Mexicans On A Wall: Too Much Tequila', but by the time you get there, there have already been too many pauses for salt and lime, tiny trackettes which don't so much refresh as irritate. Best of the rest of the group is saxophonist Warfield, who follows Payton's lead in blurring and blending his lines into long abstract washes of colour, almost without harmonic significance. Rose is an increasingly confident drummer, and Kevin Hays, handed the toughest job on the gig, handles himself very well indeed.

(*) Mysterious Shorter Chesky 321 Payton; Bob Belden(ss, ts); Sam Yahel(org); John Hart(g); Billy Drummond(d). 4/06.
The misterioso quality comes from different sources: Yahel's delightfully toned-down organ-playing, Belden's charts, and of course Shorter's classic compositions, which have always appealed to Payton. 'Masqualero' and 'Footprints' are the two most familiar themes, the latter entirely stripped of the winsome quality some interpreters believe it requires. It's a great reading and with the flexible Belden sounding not unlike the dedicatee in places this is an intriguing project. A new Payton record was expected imminently as we went to press. Signs are that he's coming into a new phase and in fine form.

Gary Peacock (born 1935)

DOUBLE BASS

Played bass in army bands before becaming immersed in the new free scene with Albert Ayler and Paul Bley. Studied macrobiotics and other sciences during a sabbatical from music. Most recently associated with Keith Jarrett's Standards Trio.

(*) Tales Of Another ECM 827418-2 Peacock; Keith Jarrett(p); Jack DeJohnette(d). 2/77.
 December Poems ECM 531029-2 Peacock; Jan Garbarek(sax). 78.
(*) Shift In The Wind ECM 829159-2 Peacock; Art Lande(p); Eliot Zigmund(d). 2/80.
Peacock's style combines elements of Jimmy Blanton's and Wilbur Ware's sonorities with something of Oscar Pettiford's rapid disposition of wide intervals. Peacock's own records have been rather mixed and can't be taken as representative of his abilities. The earliest, Tales Of Another, is performed by the band that was to become known as Keith Jarrett's Standards Trio six years later. In the late '60s, Peacock had turned his back on the music scene and gone to Japan to study macrobiotics. However uncertain he may have been about a return to bass-playing, there is a wonderful coherence to his solo work on 'Vignette' (with piano rippling underneath) and on 'Trilogy I/II/III'; this was Jarrett's last appearance but one as a sideman. He's clearly at home with Peacock's music and there is a level of intuition at work which became the basis of their later standards performances.

December Poems is almost claimed by the saxophonist. It's interesting to hear him in this duo in a rather drier and less responsive acoustic and with a good deal more definition on the lower frequencies. Peacock sets the agenda throughout, though in performance terms he does find himself consistently overshadowed. Shift In The Wind is merely enigmatic, and there seems to be little positive understanding among the trio.

 Voice From The Past – Paradigm ECM 517768-2 Peacock; Tomasz Stańko(t); Jan Garbarek(ts, ss); Jack DeJohnette(d). 8/81.
 Guamba ECM 833039-2 Peacock; Palle Mikkelborg(t, flhn); Jan Garbarek(ts, ss); Peter Erskine(d, d-syn). 3/87.
The later quartets sometimes obscure Peacock's playing, and though Voice From The Past is good, it is chiefly memorable for the atmospheric interplay of Garbarek and Stańko. Mikkelborg's hyperactive style dissipates much of the concentration of Peacock's writing on Guamba, and Erskine seems a poor substitute for DeJohnette's brilliant out-of-tempo colourations. However, the 1987 record stands up pretty decently after a decade, and renewed acquaintance prompts a reassessment of Erskine's contribution in particular. Cruder, yes, but perhaps deliberately so, an attempt to roughen up the texture of music that had become a little hidebound in his pursuit of esoteric harmonies. Peacock himself also comes through very strongly.

 Oracle ECM 521350-2 Peacock; Ralph Towner(g). 5/93.
The comparison with Glen Moore rises with Oracle, which some listeners may find reminiscent of Towner's Trios/Solos project with his fellow Oregonian. And the contrast holds good. Peacock is driven and propulsive where Moore is happy to dwell on particular areas of sound. This isn't a criticism but a description. Where one might criticize Oracle is in its haphazard alternation of moods and indistinct programme. Floaty Age moods are self-consciously disrupted by almost violent passages, as if to give contrast.

Curtis Peagler (1929–92)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

He studied music at the Cincinnati Conservatory after working in territory bands and backing singers. Toured with Ray Charles and with Count Basie.

 Disciples Blues Prestige PRCD-24263-2 Peagler; William Kelly(normaphone, euph); Billy Brown(p); Lee Tucker(b); Wilbur Jackson, Roy McCurdy(d). 59, 60.
The Modern Jazz Disciples were sponsored by Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, who helped to get them these dates for Prestige. What makes the line-up distinctive isn't so much Peagler's boppish alto but his colleague William 'Hickey' Kelly's use of the normaphone, which is basically a valved trombone curved like a member of the saxophone family. It's prominent from the off with a brisk version of 'After You've Gone', though Peagler also does some nifty business on the same theme. 'Right Down Front' was the title-track of their second and last LP, but 'Disciples Blues' itself is the best thing on this not quite complete compilation of the band's work; 'Autumn Serenade' is missing and seems an odd omission when something as formulaic as 'My Funny Valentine' might have been dropped to solve the duration problem.

Duke Pearson (1932–80)

PIANO

Named after Ellington and sharing some of the great man's piano chops and big-band sound, the Atlantan had a stint as MD and producer at Blue Note, but never entirely fulfilled his potential, and succumbed to progressive multiple sclerosis.

 Dedication Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1939 Pearson; Freddie Hubbard(t); Willie Wilson(tb); Pepper Adams(bs); Thomas Howard(b); Lex Humphries(d). 8/61.
Pearson's stint at Blue Note has meant that his name is scattered through our book, and while there's surprisingly little under his own name the situation is somewhat better than in previous editions. Pearson's natural life was uncomfortably fated. As a young man he was thwarted in his ambitions to become a trumpeter by dental problems, and his health failed while he was still in his 40s.

Pearson had already recorded Profile and Tender Feelin's for Blue Note and made several dates with Donald Byrd's band when this session was taped. According to the discographies, the date was actually under Wilson's nominal leadership. The trombonist, who's well featured and on the basis of 'The Nearness Of You' a fine player, died a couple of years later after a period of ill-health. Perhaps because of that, perhaps because of its sombre tonality, the record wasn't released at the time and only came out almost a decade later. Some cuts were also released on a Black Lion disc under Freddie Hubbard's name. Trio tracks with Howard and Humphries came out under Duke's name as Bags' Groove, also on Black Lion. Pearson isn't unduly prominent in the sextet, and relies heavily on other composers, notably Tommy Flanagan, whose 'Minor Mishap' gets things going. Duke's solos are short, slightly tentative and sometimes abruptly terminated, and one senses that he has ambitions that aren't fulfilled in this setting. He didn't record much at all the following year, though he wrote, arranged and played live steadily.

 Honeybuns Koch 8519 Pearson; Johnny Coles(t); Garnett Brown(tb); James Spaulding(as); George Coleman(ts); Les Spann(f); Bob Cranshaw(b); Mickey Roker(d). 5/65.

(*) Sweet Honey Bee Blue Note 95974-2 Pearson; Freddie Hubbard(t); James Spaulding(as, f); Joe Henderson(ts); Ron Carter(b); Mickey Roker(d). 12/66.

* Prairie Dog Collectables 6755 Pearson; Johnny Coles(t); James Spaulding(as, f); George Coleman(ts); Harold Vick(ss, ts); Gene Bertoncini(g); Bob Cranshaw(b); Mickey Roker(d). 66.

The May 1965 Atlantic session reissued by Koch isn't absolutely compelling, but it does suggest some of the ways in which the pianist makes a smallish band sound like a much bigger unit. Some of it comes from the arranging, which is richly textured in the middle register, but the recording is also very impressive, the horns arranged in a V-formation that gives the soloist a lot of presence but with plenty of backweight from the ensemble. Duke's originals, 'Heavy Legs' and 'Is That So', are wonderfully imagined, as is the title-track, which features a strong contribution from trumpeter Coles. Big George Coleman is in great shape, blowing his trademark choruses with freedom and great harmonic control. Spaulding is a little more anonymous. The RVG edition of Sweet Honey Bee restores another Pearson session which has been off the racks for decades. As Bob Blumenthal's note suggests, the highlights are the lushly voiced melodies of 'Sudel' and 'Gaslight', the former a tune which Pearson had recorded some years earlier with a different group. Hubbard and Henderson eat up their solo opportunities without sundering the essentially easy-going feel which was Pearson trademark.

Prairie Dog is a neglected masterpiece; even the exact recording date remains obscure. Koch had a go at reissuing it in 1999, but it still isn't easy to find. It is one of those records worth having for one track alone. The closing 'Angel Eyes' is as graceful an arrangement and performance as any of the period, infinitely sophisticated and lovely. Touches of celeste from the leader and Bertoncini's guitar give the date an unusual tonality. The earlier cuts don't lag much behind. Joe Henderson's 'Soulin'' is a fine blues and the title-piece is a naggingly familiar idea that seems to have gone through several transformations; some say it's a version of 'I'm An Old Cowhand' (an old favourite, covered on Bags' Groove), but we think there's something else in there. Even the opening to the set is unusual, with Spaulding's flute weaving in the intro to 'The Fakir'. Rich and multidimensional, this is worth the search.

(*) The Right Touch Blue Note 742202 Pearson; Freddie Hubbard(t); Garnett Brown(tb); James Spaulding(as); Jerry Dodgion(as, f); Stanley Turrentine(ts); Gene Taylor(b); Grady Tate(d). 9/67.

Now available as a Rudy Van Gelder remaster, this has been in and out of circulation since original release. One can see why. It's too good to languish on the shelves, but it's also quite a demanding listen. Pearson's themes were gloriously varied (albeit with a strong Latin tinge throughout this) and his voicings and arrangements were always very subtle: listen to how Spaulding and Dodgion are used to create counter-melodies. On the face of it, it's surprising that none of these tunes – 'Chili Peppers', 'Make It Good', 'Los Malos Hombres' (which appears in two different takes), and the vivid 'Scrap Iron' and 'Rotary' – have made it into the wider repertoire. A terrific record that repays the investment of time.

 Introducing Duke Pearson's Big Band Blue Note 94508 Pearson; Randy Brecker, Burt Collins, Joe Shepley, Marvin Stamm(t); Jimmy Cleveland, Julian Priester, Kenny Rupp(tb); Benny Powell(tb, btb); Garnett Brown(btb); Jerry Dodgion(as, f, picc); Al Gibbons(as, f, bcl); Pepper Adams(bs, cl); Bob Cranshaw(b); Mickey Roker(d). 12/67.

Pearson was always most interesting on a larger scale. He has an idiosyncratic touch as an arranger, imposing a personal touch on material as varied as Chick Corea's 'Tones For Joan's Bones', tunes by Joe Sample, and standards as varied as 'Days Of Wine And Roses' and 'Here's That Rainy Day'. Nicely voiced and crisply recorded with a strong live presence, this is an album that repays the closest attention.

 The Phantom Water 133 Pearson; Jerry Dodgion(f); Bobby Hutcherson(vib); Sam Brown, Al Gafa(g); Bob Cranshaw(b); Mickey Roker(d); Victor Partajo, Patato Valdes(perc). 6 & 9/68.

A glance at the line-up suggests something of this unusual record's attempt to find a line between Latin jazz and the new harmonics being explored by the avant-garde. The long title-piece which kicks off the set is its high-point, the impetus not quite sustained thereafter.

Pierrick Pedron

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Played in dance bands in his native Brittany – a background that colours his work – before discovering jazz at the age of 16. Worked in New York for a time but returned to France to make his recorded debut as leader.

 Classical Faces Nocturne NTCD345 Pedron; Pierre de Bethmann(p); Vincent Artaud(b); Franck Agulhon(d). 04.

(*) Deep In A Dream Nocturne NTCD 399 Pedron; Mulgrew Miller(p); Thomas Bramerie(b); Lewis Nash(d). 11/05.

Pedron's debut album, Cherokee, is now out of print. It was a bright, breezy date, with an infectiously original take on bebop. Classical Faces is more measured and as a result less immediately arresting, but the leader's folk-tinged approach is still distinctive and highly effective. Deep In A Dream was in the tape library for almost two years before release. Good as it is, one can sense the hesitation. Apart from Pedron's idiosyncratic but unselfconscious voice on saxophone, there isn't much to distinguish this basically standards set from a hundred other saxophone quartets out there. That said, there is a lot of musical intelligence on display. A long 'Nightingale Sang In Berkeley Square' opens up some interesting variations on the more-familiar interpretations (Rollins, Art Pepper), while 'After You've Gone', 'It Never Entered My Mind' and the title-track have very strong elements. Miller and Nash add a touch of authority but, gallingly, what one leaves the album wishing for is more of the saxophonist's own writing. 'Waltz For A King' and 'Tune Z' are interesting enough – prompting parallels with Jean Langlais as much as Charlie Parker – to support a whole set.

Dave Pell (born 1925)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A versatile West Coaster, he formed an octet out of members of the Les Brown band and recorded extensively.

 Plays Irving Berlin /  Plays Burke & Van Heusen /  Plays Rodgers & Hart Fresh Sound FSRCD 503 / 504 / 505 Pell; Don Fagerquist(t); Ray Sims(tb); Ronnie Lang(bs, as, f); Jeff Clarkson(p on IB); Claude Williamson(p on BVH); Donn Trenner(p on R&H); Tony Rizzi(g); Rolly Bundock(b); Jack Sperling(d on IB, BVH); Bill Richmond(d on R&H); Lucy Ann Polk(v on BVH). 53; 54; 54.

Music of this kind and quality was produced by the yard on the West Coast during the mid-'50s. It's agreeable, unfrightening jazz, played with absolute competence, some energy, and no dark ambiguity whatsoever. The sun is always shining in Shorty Rogers's charts and Pell banishes anything other than the vaguest melancholy. They're still worth listening to as period pieces and for anyone who really enjoys the genre; if you do, there's a vast discography to explore, but for a general collector these are hardly essentials.

 Plays Again Fresh Sound FSRCD 5009 Pell; Bill Berry(t); Bill Watrous(tb); Med Flory(sax); Bob Florence(p); Tony Tizzi (g); Buddy Clark(b); Frank Capp(d). 8/84.

Thirty years after his first octet dates, Pell is back in the studios with a latter-day band. His own solo voice sounds as calmly authoritative as before and on material like Marty Paich's 'Crescendo Date' actually manages to inject a note of modernity into his playing. It's surprisingly fresh, though if you didn't warm to the Pell sound before, there are no new revelations here.

Also, in brief:

 Jazz For Dancing And Listening Fresh Sound Jazz City FSRCD 2242 2CD. 55–56.

And they got the order right. A nicely presented compilation of octet performances, lightly swinging instant sunshine.

 Sunday Afternoons At Lighthouse Woofy 10412. 05.

The octet in yet another time-defying incarnation.

Jeremy Pelt (born 1976)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

The New Yorker Pelt plays with unashamed nostalgia for the great days of Blue Note.

 Profile Fresh Sound New Talent 127 Pelt; Jaleel Shaw(as); Jimmy Greene(ts); Robert Glasper(p); Mike Moreno(g); Gerald Cannon(b); Ralph Peterson(d). 02.

 Insight Criss Cross 1228 Pelt; Jimmy Greene(ss, ts); Myron Alden(as); Rick Germanson(ky); Vincente Archer(b); Ralph Peterson(d). 5/02.

Pelt may favour a retro sound, but he doesn't lack the confidence to inscribe the idiom in his own terms. Most of the material on these first forays as leader is original, and promisingly individual. The debut album is full of strong, committed writing and some more than competent playing from all concerned. Peterson is the oldest member of the group and holds things together from the drum chair, cementing an occasional impression that one is listening to a forgotten incarnation of the Messengers. The long 'Jigsaw' is an excellent band workout, but Jeremy also sounds as if he might fit right in at a south of the border wedding with his bright phrasing on the Latinish 'We Share A Moon'. The two saxophonists are more anonymous but Greene has listened to the same basic repertoire and he clearly knows his stuff.

The follow-up CD benefits from better sound and from a more confident and less pushy approach. The Blakey influence is there in tunes like 'Ides Of March' and 'The Glass House', but there is a new depth of emotion in the ballad 'In My Grandfather's House', which suggests that Pelt's forte may well be a more sombre-toned and thoughtful approach.

* Close To My Heart Max Jazz 403 Pelt; Mulgrew Miller(p); David O'Rourke(g); Peter Washington(b); Lewis Nash(d). 6/03.

(*) Identity Max Jazz 404 Pelt; Myron Walden(ss, bcl); Frank LoCrasto(p, ky); Warren Wolf(vib); Mike Moreno(g); Vicente Archer(b); Eric McPherson(d). 3/05.

There aren't many young trumpeters around who can move from Charles Mingus to Jimmy Rowles with aplomb. Pelt kicks off his new contract with a version of 'Weird Nightmare' and only then returns to the hard-bop idiom which made his name. His flugelhorn solo on '52 Blues (Drinkin' And Drivin')' is a career high. As exposed as this, he can't afford to coast and there isn't a lazy or poorly thought-out track on the album. Identity has a new, funkier sound. Walden provides some of the misterioso stuff Pelt seems to enjoy, but LoCrasto's keys give it a firm underpinning too, and again there's not a moment on this that doesn't satisfy.

(*) Shock Value: Live At Smoke Max Jazz 140406 Pelt; Frank LoCrasto(ky); Al Street(g); Gavin Fallow(b); Dana Hawkins (d); Becca Stevens (v). 3/07.

And as if reliving exactly the transformations that overtook jazz in the late '60s and '70s, Pelt turns up with his new Wired group (LoCrasto is a survivor from the transitional Identity), puts a bug on his horn and starts to explore the switched-on, plugged-in sound of Miles's electric period. It's done with brio and class, and there's an undoubted excitement in the music from the opening cut. Becca Stevens's vocal adds a nice touch to a very attractive set.

Matt Penman

DOUBLE BASS

A New Zealander, he made the move to New York in 1995.

 The Unquiet Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 133 Penman; Chris Cheek(ss, ts); Aaron Goldberg(p); Kurt Rosenwinkel(g); Jeff Ballard(d). 12/01.

Penman only solos once on this debut disc. His statement on 'Treehugger' is enough to confirm that he is most effectively deployed as a harmonic and rhythmic foundation, leaving the foreground to others. That is not in any way to diminish his importance, though. These are fine, memorable ideas, and on the burner 'Up And Over' and the long title-piece Penman directs an admirably organized group. Cheek and Rosenwinkel often play in close ensemble, stating themes with authority. The saxophonist has a nicely unvarnished sound, but his front-line partner uses amplification to give a richness and depth of focus to the line. A highly auspicous start.

 Catch Of The Day Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 303 Penman; Seamus Blake(ss, ts); Aaron Parks(p); Eric Harland(d). 4/07.

You take a certain risk putting a fish on the cover of your album. This one retains its freshness right through eight notably original and well-crafted compositions. Blake still has to convince as a soloist, but this is his best context: challenging tunes, not much in the way of interior monologue.

Clarence Penn (born 1968)

DRUMS

In-demand sideman with a strong musical personality.

(*) Penn's Landing Criss Cross 1134 Penn; John Swana(t, flhn); Ron Blake(ts); Rodney Whitaker(d). 97.

 Play-Penn Criss Cross 1201 As above, except add Jesse van Ruller(g). 5/01.

Interesting that Penn's debut album should have been a pianoless quartet. The opening 'C.P. Time' is a fairly routine barn-burner, with not much sophistication, but it does illustrate how Penn's awareness of his drums' tuning can take the place of a harmony instrument. Add to that Rodney Whitaker's singing tone and brilliantly placed accents, and the absence of a keyboard-player isn't noticed at all. The title-track is another Penn original and a more sophisticated idea. Blake's 'Re: Evaluation' and the bassist's tribute to Tony Williams are probably the best themes on a record that bids fair for an extended run of good solo projects from Mr C.P.

The sequel is impressive enough, and the arrival of labelmate Van Ruller doesn't detract from our point about Clarence's harmonic openness. Mostly the guitarist lays single lines and fills rather than strict comping. His intro to 'You Must Believe In Spring' is superb. Penn's 'Blues For Paris' seems to be a variation on a Charlie Parker (same initials, so he's allowed) tune, presumably 'Blues For Alice'. There's not so much sheer excitement about this record, perhaps because they've got used to playing with each other, but it's a fine set none the less.

Ken Peplowski (born 1958)

CLARINET, ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES

Strongly influenced by Benny Goodman, he plays clarinet with the same acidity and precision. A fine tenor-player, too.

* Grenadilla Concord CCD 4809-2 Peplowski; Kenny Davern(cl); Marty Ehrlich(cl, bcl); J. D. Parran(cbcl); Scott Robinson(acl); Ben Aronov(p); Howard Alden(g); Greg Cohen(b); Chuck Redd(d). 12/97.

Peplowski is by now a veteran of the swing-repertory school which has kept that side of American jazz robust during otherwise lean times, from the '80s onwards. He has a very big discography on Concord but, like much of that catalogue, it's mainly deleted. Grenadilla is the wood from which the majority of quality clarinets are made. Like any other rainforest tree, it is endangered, and Peplowski dedicates this remarkable album to its preservation. Perhaps even more importantly, though, he makes the record an expression of his own desire to preserve jazz tradition even as he pushes it forward into a new generation. Here, the guests represent wildly different aspects of contemporary clarinet-playing.

Working together for the first time, Peplowski and the veteran Kenny Davern combine on the New Orleans Rhythm Kings' 'Farewell Blues', a tune first recorded in 1922. Davern's calm delivery complements Peplowski's own characteristically fervid statement; ironically, he has seldom sounded more like Benny Goodman's descendant. At the opposite end of the spectrum are Marty Ehrlich's 'The Reconsidered Blues' and 'The Soul In The Wood' and Greg Cohen's brief, powerful 'Variations', on which Parran, Robinson and Ehrlich again guest. At first blush, Ehrlich might seem the arch-modernist, but his moody clarinet and bass clarinet are hooked back into a long and remarkably conservative line. In Peplowski's company his roots show through strongly.

The rest of the original writing is credited to Ben Aronov, who continues to surprise. He is composer of the two quartet tracks and the opening 'Benny's Pennies' (no real relation to the Tristano number) on which Alden makes the first of several strong contributions. At the end of the album, 'Farewell Blues' is sandwiched between two classics which show the guitarist and the leader at their intuitive best: Victor Herbert's 'Indian Summer' and, done as a drummerless, pianoless trio, 'Cry Me A River'. An exquisite end to a remarkable album.

(*) Last Swing Of The Century Concord CCD 4864-2 Peplowski; Conte Candoli, Bob Millikan, Randy Sandke(t); Eddie Bert, Bobby Pring(tb); Joe Romano, Jack Stuckey(as); Scott Robinson, Rickey Woodard(ts); Ben Aronov(p); Frank Vignola(g); Richard Simon(b); Frank Capp(d). 11/98.

Recorded in Japan as part of the 14th Fujitsu/Concord Jazz Festival, this is a tribute to the music of Benny Goodman, the artist who most thoroughly shaped Peplowski's increasingly protean style. Encouraging to note that, even on an occasion like this, he is much more than a respectful copyist. Listening to him shape a solo on 'Stealin' Apples', 'King Porter Stomp' and even 'Moon Glow', it becomes obvious that Ken is ever on the lookout for ways to recast classic idiom. He subtly reworks those now slightly shopworn phrases, sometimes subverts them entirely and then, just to prove that he's no wrecker, restates them with absolute fidelity to the originals.

The band sounds a touch under-rehearsed and perhaps not entirely at ease with the material. The redoubtable Candoli is the obvious exception; he delivers crisp, shining solos on 'Between The Devil And The Deep Blue Sea', 'Moon Glow' and 'Don't Be That Way'. Aronov is the anchor, as ever, and he lifts the ensembles more than once, though he isn't best placed in the mix.

 Tribute To Benny Goodman Chandos 9927 Peplowski; BBC Big Band. 1/01.

 Ellingtonian Tales Mainstem MCD 0021 Peplowski; John Horler(p); Phil Lee(g). 2/01.

 Remembering Billy Strayhorn Mainstem MCD0047 As above, except add Alec Dankworth(b). 01.

Peplowski is a regular visitor to Britain and he cut these on one of his trips. The Goodman tribute is a well-rehearsed selection from a fine stock-company ensemble. Peplowski raises the stakes with his solos – notably on 'Sing Sing Sing' – and there is an exciting exchange with Anthony Kerr on 'Stompin' At The Savoy', but most fans will know the originals and find these wanting in one way or another. On the other disc, the compositions come from both Ellingtons (Duke and Mercer), Hodges and Strayhorn, and there are a few arcane choices along with the obvious ones. They start with a trio, but mostly it's clarinet or tenor with either guitar or piano, and while there's a lot of good tale-spinning along the way, the record feels overly respectful, and (though many of the tempos are slow) a bit hurried – as if they had just put down the lead sheets and started playing. The Strayhorn date is nice and benefits from Dankworth's clear accurate bass-playing.

 Lost In The Stars Nagel Heyer 2020 Peplowski; Ben Aronov(p); Greg Cohen(b); Lewis Nash(d). 11/01.

Peplowski is too imaginative a player to record a set of mouldy chestnuts, which is why you get Billy Strayhorn's rarely covered 'Ballad For Very Tired And Very Sad Lotus Eaters' alongside the more obvious things like 'People Will Say We're In Love', 'Why Do I Love You?' and the title-track. Ken also gives some writing space to Cohen and Aronov and the latter proves to be an interesting composer with 'Marchons' and 'Lament'. Ken's tone is a little breathier than usual, though that is presumably down to the mic-ing on this attractively intimate set.

 Easy To Remember Nagel Heyer 2043 Peplowski; Ted Rosenthal(p); Joe Cohn(g); Joe Fitzgerald(b); Jeff Brillinger(d); Kim Liggett, Bobby Short(v). 11/03.

Again, no wild stylistic transports, and no concession to fashion: just another strong, old-fashioned set with a first-rate small group. Paul McCartney's 'Junk' is the wild card and incidentally a reminder of what a fine melodist the former Beatle is. For the rest, it's mostly familiar fare, but with a few unexpected treatments thrown in, and the high-point is Ellington's 'Single Petal Of A Rose'. A bouquet for Peplowski fans.

Art Pepper (1925–82)

ALTO AND TENOR SAXOPHONES, CLARINET

His first notable jobs were with the Benny Carter and Stan Kenton big bands. After army service, he rejoined Kenton and stayed until 1951. He was a premier name among Californian saxophonists in the '50s, but his career was interrupted by addiction and several spells in prison. Finally rehabilitated at Synano, he made a comeback record in 1975 and gradually forged a new career as a surviving master of West Coast bebop alto. His book Straight Life is a definitive jazz autobiography.

 Those Kenton Days Definitive DRCD 11228 Pepper; Stan Kenton Orchestra. 11/43–9/51.

 Complete 1947–1951 Small Group Recordings Definitive DRCD 11217 Pepper; Ray Wetzel, Shorty Rogers, Conte Candoli(t); Eddie Bert, J. J. Johnson, Bill Russo(tb); John Graas(frhn); Jimmy Giuffre, Herbie Stewart, Bob Cooper(ts); Pete Rugolo, Wynton Kelly, Hampton Hawes, Gene Esposito(p); Pee Wee Tinney(g, v); Eddie Safranski, Bruce Lawrence, Don Bagley(b); Shelly Manne(d, v); Jackie Mills(d); Babs Gonzales, Shelby Davis(v). 12/47–11/51.

 Complete Lighthouse Sessions Jazz Factory JFCD 22836 Pepper; Shorty Rogers(t); Frank Patchen(p); Howard Rumsey(b); Shelly Manne(d). 12/51.

(*) Complete Surf Club Sessions Jazz Factory JFCD 22835 2CD Pepper; Hampton Hawes(p); Joe Mondragon(b); Larry Bunker(d, vib). 2/52.

(*) Complete Straight Ahead Sessions Jazz Factory JFCD 22847 2CD Pepper; Sonny Clark(p); Harry Babasin(b); Bobby White(d). 3–5/53.

Pepper's remains one of the most immediately identifiable alto sax styles in post-war jazz. If he was a Parker disciple, like every other modern saxophonist in the '40s and '50s, he tempered Bird's slashing attack with a pointed elegance that recalled something of Benny Carter and Willie Smith. He was a passionate musician, having little of the studious intensity of a Lee Konitz, and his tone – which could come out as pinched and jittery as well as softly melodious – suggested something of the duplicitous, cursed romanticism which seems to lie at the heart of his music..

Pepper has always enjoyed a huge following among collectors and it was a smart idea to gather together all (supposedly) of the sides he made with Stan Kenton where he takes a solo. Those Kenton Days makes an enjoyable collection in its own right and includes some fine scores by Shorty Rogers (including, inevitably, the one he called 'Art Pepper') and Pete Rugolo. Complete 1947–1951 is also prehistoric Pepper, four dates where he worked as a sideman with Eddie Safranski's Poll Cats, Babs Gonzales, Shorty Rogers and Shelly Manne (who sings on 'All Of Me'!). Small-band West Coast bop turning cool, although the Rogers session, something of a prototype for his classic RCA dates, is rather more substantial.

We are listing the various Jazz Factory releases a little reluctantly, in the absence of any other current edition of this music. Each catches Pepper on various Californian gigs (two at the Lighthouse, one at the Surf Club). The sound on each is between poor and diabolical, the playback speed is open to question, and there's the inevitable crowd noise; yet each in its way has some memorable Pepper, working over standards and bebop themes with power-packed intensity, even in the climate of Californian cool. The Lighthouse set with Rogers, where Pepper is merely one of the band, is probably the weakest, the Surf Club dates are the scruffiest, but if you can listen through the detritus you'll hear some classic Pepper.

* Complete Discovery–Savoy Master Takes Definitive DRCD 11218 Pepper; Jack Montrose(ts); Hampton Hawes, Russ Freeman, Claude Williamson(p); Joe Mondragon, Bob Whitlock, Monte Budwig(b); Larry Bunker, Bobby White, Paul Vallerina(d). 3/52–8/54.

 The Art Pepper Quartet Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 816 Pepper; Russ Freeman(p); Ben Tucker(b); Gary Frommer(d). 8/56.

The three Discovery sessions are little-known next to the later Contemporary material, but there is some marvellous playing here. The March 1952 date with Hawes was Pepper's first official date as a leader, and 'Surf Ride' and 'Holiday Flight' have him skimming the changes beautifully, with 'These Foolish Things' a lustrous ballad. Four titles from later the same year aren't perhaps quite as strong, but the quintet date from 1954 with Montrose, the two saxophonists going toe to toe, isn't far behind the later session with Warne Marsh.

The OJC release is drawn from a session for the Tampa label, with five alternative takes beefing up the playing time. This is Pepper entering his greatest period, and the quality of his thinking and playing is already nearing that of the remarkable Contemporary sessions, though the rather brief tracks clip the wings of some of the solos.

 The Return Of Art Pepper Blue Note 46863-2 Pepper; Jack Sheldon(t); Red Norvo(vib); Gerald Wiggins, Russ Freeman(p); Leroy Vinnegar, Ben Tucker(b); Shelly Manne, Joe Morello(d). 8/56–1/57.

* Modern Art Blue Note 46848-2 Pepper; Russ Freeman, Carl Perkins(p); Ben Tucker(b); Chuck Flores(d). 12/56–4/57.

* The Art Of Pepper Blue Note 46853-2 / Fresh Sound FSR-CD 378 As above, except omit Freeman. 4/57.

Pepper's sessions for Aladdin, collected on the three Blue Note albums, have been overshadowed by his records for Contemporary (see below). The Return Of Art Pepper (the altoist had been in prison for narcotics offences, a problem that would plague his career) puts together a fair if patchy quintet session with Jack Sheldon – the two ballad features without Sheldon, 'You Go To My Head' and 'Patricia', are easily the best things – with a set originally led by Joe Morello, with Red Norvo in the front line. The really valuable records, though, are the two quartet discs. Modern Art is a deceptively quiet and tempered session: the opening 'Blues In' is a seemingly hesitant, improvised blues which typifies the staunchless flow of Pepper's ideas, and the following 'Bewitched' and a quite exceptional reworking of 'Stompin' At The Savoy' are so full of ideas that Pepper seems transformed. Freeman responds with superbly insightful support. Yet the succeeding Art Of Pepper is even better, with bigger and more up-front sound and with Carl Perkins spinning along in accompaniment. 'Begin The Beguine' is both beguiling and forceful, the dizzying lines of 'Webb City' are an entirely convincing tribute to Bud Powell, and the melodies unravelled from 'Too Close For Comfort' and 'Long Ago And Far Away' – which Pepper returns to on the Contemporary sessions – show a lyrical invention few players of the day could have matched. The Fresh Sound package covers the same material and comes in a pleasing digipak format with a strong booklet.

(*) The Way It Was! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 389 Pepper; Warne Marsh(ts); Ronnie Ball, Red Garland, Dolo Coker, Wynton Kelly(p); Ben Tucker, Paul Chambers, Jimmy Bond(b); Philly Joe Jones, Gary Frommer, Frank Butler, Jimmy Cobb(d). 11/56–11/60.

* Modern Jazz Classics Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 341 Pepper; Pete Candoli, Jack Sheldon, Al Porcino(t); Dick Nash(tb); Bob Enevoldsen(vtb, ts); Vince DeRosa(frhn); Herb Geller, Bud Shank(as); Charlie Kennedy(ts, as); Bill Perkins, Richie Kamuca(ts); Med Flory(bs); Russ Freeman(p); Joe Mondragon(b); Mel Lewis(d). 3–5/59.

(*) Gettin' Together Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 169 Pepper; Conte Candoli(t); Wynton Kelly(p); Paul Chambers(b); Jimmy Cobb(d). 2/60.

* Smack Up Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 176 Pepper; Jack Sheldon(t); Pete Jolly(p); Jimmy Bond(b); Frank Butler(d). 10/60.

* Intensity Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 387 Pepper; Dolo Coker(p); Jimmy Bond(b); Frank Butler(d). 11/60.

Pepper's records for Contemporary make up a superlative sequence. The Way It Was! remained unissued until the '70s, but the first half of it – a session with Warne Marsh, which secures a brilliant interplay on 'Tickle Toe' and exposes all Pepper's lyricism on 'What's New' – is as good as anything in the series (the other tracks are out-takes from the succeeding sessions). Modern Jazz Classics is in some ways more prosaic, with Marty Paich's arrangements of Monk, Gillespie, Giuffre, Mulligan and more working from the by now over-familiar West Coast glibness, yet the sound of the ensemble is beautifully rich; Paich conjures new things out of 'Bernie's Tune' and 'Anthropology', and Pepper – who also brings out his clarinet and tenor – alternately glides through the charts and dances his way out of them. There isn't a great deal to choose between the three remaining sessions: Smack Up finds Pepper playing Ornette on 'Tears Inside' as well as a memorable version of Duane Tatro's haunting 'Maybe Next Year', and the appropriately titled Intensity is a wistful series of ballads and standards in which Pepper, a peculiarly astringent romantic, seems to brood on the words of the songs as well as their melodies and changes: 'Long Ago And Far Away', for instance, seems a perfect transliteration of the song's message. Throughout these records, the saxophonist's phrasing, with its carefully delivered hesitations and sudden flurries, and his tone, which sometimes resembles a long, crying ache, communicate matters of enormous emotional impact. They demand to be heard.

CORE COLLECTION

* Meets The Rhythm Section

Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 338 Pepper; Red Garland(p); Paul Chambers(b); Philly Joe Jones(d). 1/57.

The playing of the quartet on this CD beggars belief when the circumstances are considered: Pepper wasn't even aware of the session till the morning of the date, hadn't played in two weeks, was going through difficult times with his narcotics problem and didn't know any of the material they played. Yet it emerges as a poetic, burning date, with all four men playing above themselves.

(*) Art Pepper Quartet '64 In San Francisco Fresh Sound FSRCD-1005 Pepper; Frank Strazzeri(p); Hersh Hamel(b); Bill Goodwin(d). 5–6/64.

 Complete TV Studio Recordings Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10204 As above, except add Carl Perkins, Larry Bunker, Victor Feldman(p); Ben Tucker, Don Payne(b); Chuck Flores(d); Pam Russell(v). 1/57–9/64.

Devastated by his personal problems, Pepper didn't make another studio record (aside from a Buddy Rich session) until 1973. These tracks come from a 1964 TV appearance and another at a San Francisco club. He was not long released from prison and his style had changed dramatically: hung up on Coltrane and a fear that his older style would be out of touch, he sounds to be in a bizarre transition from the former, lyrically confident Pepper to a new, darker, often incoherent style based round tonal investigations and timbral distortions as much as anything. It's a trait he would rationalize with his 'normal' self in the '70s, but here he's finding his way. He's still musician enough to make it an intriguing document, though, with the first version of 'The Trip' and a long 'Sonnymoon For Two'. The sound is rough, not much better than an average bootleg, but Pepperphiles will want to hear it. There is also an interview track with presenter Ralph Gleason.

The Lone Hill set includes the same material and adds tracks from two 1957 TV shows, which find the altoist in much more like his best, original form. There is also a typical Lone Hill 'bonus' in the shape of three alternates from the Omega sessions of that year.

 I'll Remember April Storyville STCD 4130 Pepper; Tommy Gumina(polychord); Fred Atwood(b); Jimmie Smith(d). 2/75.

(*) Living Legend Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 408 Pepper; Hampton Hawes(p); Charlie Haden(b); Shelly Manne(d). 8/75.

 The Trip Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 410 Pepper; George Cables(p); David Williams(b); Elvin Jones(d). 9/76.

(*) A Night In Tunisia Storyville STCD 4146 Pepper; Smith Dobson(p); Jim Nichols(b); Brad Bilhorn(d). 1/77.

(*) No Limit Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 411 Pepper; George Cables(p); Tony Dumas(b); Carl Burnett(d). 3/77.

 Tokyo Debut Galaxy GCD-4201-2 Pepper; Clare Fischer(p); Cal Tjader(vib); Bob Redfield(g); Rob Fisher(b); Peter Riso(d); Poncho Sanchez(perc). 5/77.

Pepper's re-emergence blossomed into the most remarkable comeback of its kind. He became a symbol of jazz triumph over adversity, and though in the end it didn't last very long, there was a stubborn, furious eloquence about his later playing that makes all his records worth hearing, even when he struggles to articulate a ballad or has to fight to get his uptempo lines in shape. The earlier sessions, following the Living Legend set, continue his struggle to digest Coltrane and reconcile that influence with his honourable past achievements: on both The Trip and No Limit he gets there some of the time, and the former at least includes his haunting blues line 'Red Car'. But Living Legend itself is the one to hear first. 'Lost Life' is one of his gentle-harrowing ballads, a self-portrait rigorously chewed out, and the whole session seems imbued with a mixture of nerves, relief and pent-up inspiration which the other players – an inspiring team – channel as best they can. The two Storyville discs chronicle a couple of live dates with local players in the rhythm sections. I'll Remember April is marred by a gymnasium sound and Gumina's odd-sounding polychord, but Pepper blows very hard throughout. A Night In Tunisia is better – Dobson is a useful player, and there is another strong version of 'Lost Life' – but the studio albums merit prior attention.

Tokyo Debut documents Pepper's first tour of Japan, which started with the utmost trepidation and ended in triumph. The Cal Tjader group is the unlikely support, with Fischer playing an ugly-sounding electric piano; but Pepper, who was honoured by every audience throughout the trip, pours himself into the music. 'Cherokee' is chorus after chorus of ideas, and when Tjader joins in for three numbers, the altoist fits comfortably with the lite-bossa grooves.

() Thursday Night At The Village Vanguard /  Friday Night … /  Saturday Night … /  More For Les: … Vol. 4 / () The Complete Village Vanguard Sessions Original Jazz Classics OJC 694–7 / Contemporary CCD-4417-2 9CD Pepper; George Cables(p); George Mraz(b); Elvin Jones(d). 7/77.

Pepper's four nights at New York's Village Vanguard were filleted down to four single LPs (and, subsequently, CDs) in the past, but Contemporary have gone for broke and brought together every note of the engagement in a single nine-disc set. This provides more than five hours of extra music. The new material includes alternative versions of tunes played in other sets plus three entirely fresh pieces: a jangling 'Stella By Starlight', a notably impressive blues called 'Vanguard Max' and 'Live At The Vanguard'. Pepper specialists can compare the different versions of 'Goodbye', 'Blues For Heard' and 'For Freddie' at their leisure, but the main point of the set is the way it documents one of the major performers of the era with unflagging candour. Pepper was always a fascinating man to see and hear in concert – his sometimes obsessive talking with audiences is given full rein with the announcements here – and playing through these discs will remind all who saw him of his enduring struggle with his own demons, as well as the sometimes cruel beauty of his music-making. Besides him, there is the blue-chip rhythm section to listen to. The less committed will settle for the remaining single discs, of which the first is probably the single best. Excellent location recording.

 Live In Japan Volumes 1 & 2 Storyville STCD 4128 / 4129 Pepper; Milcho Leviev(p); Bob Magnusson(b); Carl Burnett(d). 3/78.

 Art Pepper Today Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 474 Pepper; Stanley Cowell, Cecil McBee(b); Roy Haynes(d); Kenneth Nash(perc). 12/78.

 Landscape Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 676 Pepper; George Cables(p); Tony Dumas(b); Billy Higgins(d). 7/79.

(*) Straight Life Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 475 Pepper; Tommy Flanagan(p); Red Mitchell(b); Billy Higgins(d); Kenneth Nash(perc). 9/79.

 Winter Moon Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 677 Pepper; Stanley Cowell(p); Howard Roberts(g); Cecil McBee(b); Carl Burnett(d); strings. 9/80.

 One September Afternoon Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 678 As above, except omit strings. 9/80.

 Art 'n' Zoot Pablo 2310-957-2 Pepper; Zoot Sims(ts); Victor Feldman(p); Barney Kessel(g); Ray Brown, Charlie Haden(b); Billy Higgins(d). 9/81.

 Arthur's Blues Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 680 Pepper; George Cables(p); David Williams(b); Carl Burnett(d). 8/81.

 Goin' Home /  Tête-À-Tête Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 679 / 843 Pepper; George Cables(p). 5/82; 4–5/82.

The later records for Galaxy are in some ways all of a piece, and it's rather appropriate that the Fantasy group have chosen to issue a colossal boxed set of the whole output (see below). Pepper remained in fragile health, however robustly he played and carried himself, and the sense of time running out for him imparted an urgency to almost everything he played: ballads become racked with intensity, uptempo tunes spill over with notes and cries. Studio and live dates are the same in that respect. Of these many late albums, the best should be in all general collections: Straight Life, with another fine quartet; Landscape, a sharp set by the band Pepper worked with most frequently in his last years; and above all the profoundly beautiful Winter Moon, a strings album which far surpasses the norm for this kind of record, Pepper uncorking one of his greatest solos against the rhapsodic sweep of Bill Holman's arrangement on 'Our Song'. The two Japanese live albums are also well worth seeking out.

The meeting with Zoot Sims is an oddity, a UCLA concert in which Zoot had three features, Art one, and they jammed together on a pair of tunes. Pepper's 'Over The Rainbow' is one of his typical slowburns on a ballad, while Zoot breezes affably through 'In The Middle Of A Kiss' and digs in surprisingly hard on 'The Girl From Ipanema'; but the main point of interest is hearing them together on the old bebop jam 'Wee'. It's good. The sound is much better than it was on an unauthorized European release.

Arthur's Blues is a distillation of nearly an hour of previously unreleased music, taken from the complete Galaxy set listed below. Like so much later Pepper, it's full of interesting music while falling short of essential, although the gripping title-track is a prototypical blues workout by a man desperate to play his soul out in the time he had left. The two duo sessions with Cables, his favourite accompanist, are neither more nor less 'naked' than the quartet music, since Pepper never spared himself or his listeners from his versions of the truth. 'Over The Rainbow' (Tête-À-Tête) and 'Don't Let The Sun Catch You Cryin'' (Goin' Home) are among his final ballads and set down the closing thoughts of an unbowed spirit.

() The Hollywood All-Star Sessions / () Art Standards Galaxy 4431 5CD / 4203-2 Pepper; Jack Sheldon(t); Bill Watrous(tb); Sonny Stitt, Lee Konitz(as); Bob Cooper(ts); Russ Freeman, Milcho Leviev, Pete Jolly, Lou Levy, Mike Lang(p); Bob Magnusson, Tony Dumas, Chuck Domanico, John Heard, Monty

Budwig(b); Carl Burnett, Roy McCurdy, Shelly Manne, John Dentz(d). 3/79–1/82.

This, at least, is close to prime Pepper, after a lot of very average reissues of late in the quest for little-known revivals. The saxophonist cut these various dates with other leaders as part of a series meant to rekindle West Coast memories of a couple of decades earlier; so he's next to the likes of Stitt, Konitz, Jolly, Levy and Sheldon, who take it in turns to helm the session. They were released on vinyl only in Japan and have been very collectable ever since.

Cut over a period of nearly three years, they actually find Pepper in a number of different moods, situations and capabilities; the final dates, with Konitz, were set down only months before Art's death. Laurie Pepper's detailed and candid reminiscences in the booklet are an interesting sidelight on the music, but in the end it stands by itself. Numerous tracks stand out as something special – a quartet reading of 'Out Of Nowhere', for instance, sounds as fine as anything in the later Pepper discography – but, in its entirety, the set stands as one of Pepper's most revealing legacies. The sessions with Stitt are sometimes tiresomely combative, those with Konitz often just plain strange (two completely individual altoists, remote from each other), but in the end there's the peculiar heat and intensity which Pepper always seemed to create – especially when paired with figures from his own past. The Art Standards release fillets the set for a sensible one-disc compilation.

(*) San Francisco Samba Contemporary 14086-2 Pepper; George Cables(p); Michael Formanek(b); Eddie Marshall(d). 8/77.
 In Copenhagen 1981 Galaxy 2GCD-8201-2 2CD Pepper; Duke Jordan(p); David Williams(b); Carl Burnett(d). 7/81.

Fantasy continue to turn up previously unreleased live tapes of Pepper, and both of these will please his admirers. The outstanding one is the Keystone Korner date from 1977. Following his Village Vanguard recordings, Pepper had flown to San Francisco with Cables, but Formanek (then not yet out of his teens) and Marshall were hired guns for the date. There are just four tunes on the disc, but it earns the stars for the stunning treatment of 'Blue Bossa' which opens proceedings, 16 minutes of staunchless invention. Marshall was an inspired choice for the drumstool. After Elvin at the Vanguard he's relatively straight-ahead, but he drives the group with such energy that the leader is obliged to think hard and play up to his best. There is a fast, hard blues and an intense 'Here's That Rainy Day', while the closing 'Samba Mom-Mom' is another powerhouse, if a slightly less convincing one. Dusty recording, but the feel comes through.

The Copenhagen session is also good, with Jordan guesting on piano, and a set-list that includes more bebop staples than Pepper would have liked. As a result, he is rather more focused and less wilful than on some of his regular dates of the period. But two discs and two and a half hours of music is too much, and there are unavoidable dead patches. Best shot is probably a marathon 'Besame Mucho' in which the playing has unanswerable vim.

* The Complete Galaxy Recordings Galaxy 1016 16CD As above OJC/Galaxy albums. 77–82.

A vast and surprisingly playable archive – most such monuments seldom come off the shelf, but Pepper's resilience, febrile invention and consistency of commitment make this music endure far beyond expectations. There are dead spots, inevitably, and it's a costly undertaking, but there is also a lot of music still unavailable elsewhere, including many alternative takes, out-takes and Japanese-only issues.

Also, in brief:

 Hersh Hamel's Songbook Fresh Sound FSR-CD 150. 75.
More like a series of soul demos written by Hamel, with singers – but some soulful Art too.

 The 1975 Garden State Jam Sessions Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10205 2CD. 3 & 11/75.
Two curious line-ups with Blue Mitchell (t), Harold Land and Buddy Collette (ts) on the better of the pair, Joe Albany and Sahib Shihab (p) on the other.

(*) Renascence Galaxy 4202. 9/75.
Pepper plus house rhythm section on a pick-up date. So-so.

* The Art Of The Ballad Prestige 11010. 77–81.
A master of balladry, sensitively compiled.

 Laurie's Choice Fresh Sound FSR-CD 192. 78–81.
Odds and ends from Laurie Pepper's tape collection, but a superb ballad in 'Patricia'.

Ivo Perelman (born 1961)

TENOR SAXOPHONE, TROMBIVO, CELLO, PIANO

Brazilian saxophonist marching towards the freest free jazz he can find, without letting go of some elements of both hard bop and his native song.

 Bendito Of Santa Cruz Cadence CJR 1076 Perelman; Matthew Shipp(p). 1/96.
(*) Blue Monk Variations Cadence CJR 1066 Perelman (ts solo). 2/96.
 Cama De Terra Homestead HMS237-2 Perelman; Matthew Shipp(p); William Parker(b). 6–7/96.
(*) Geometry Leo LR 248 Perelman; Borah Bergman(p). 6/96.
* Sad Life Leo Lab 027 Perelman; William Parker(b); Rashied Ali(d). 6/96.
 Slaves Of Job CIMP 126 Perelman; Dominic Duval(b); Jay Rosen(d). 10/96.
 Revelation CIMP 134 As above, except add Rory Stuart(g). 10/96.

Perelman's methodology is to grab hold of a theme and shake it asunder via his hugely powerful tone: whatever the surroundings in terms of group or material, Perelman takes himself off into the red at a moment's notice. It's frequently exciting and at times enthralling, though one questions whether he needs to be documented at this length and in these sometimes indulgent circumstances.

There were an astonishing nine albums recorded in 1996 alone. Bendito Of Santa Cruz is mostly made up of Brazilian folk tunes, and it's hard not to recall the Barbieri–Dollar Brand session of many years earlier – though Perelman is strong enough to outface memories of the older saxophonist. Shipp is very much second fiddle here, as he is on the subsequent Cama De Terra, and Borah Bergman is a more creative partner (opponent?) on the subsequent Geometry; but all three records show how much Perelman enjoys having a pianist behind him. He clearly likes to be the single voice out front, but the harmonic anchors offered by a piano are a useful succour, and Bergman in particular is wily enough to find ways of both supporting and undercutting the mighty sound of the tenor. Slaves Of Job and the 'bonus' Revelation, cut on a whim as a jam session with Stuart sitting in, are strong entries which don't quite enter the front rank: Duval and Rosen are too busy and tend to overplay their hands, and Stuart is a distraction. Perelman plays lustily enough to earn the stars, but these are basically inadequate showcases for him.

Blue Monk Variations is a vivid footnote to the other records. Warming up by himself in a studio, Perelman came up with some 36 minutes of solo tenor based around 'Blue Monk' – three full interpretations and three variations. Unencumbered by the need to 'perform' as such, Perelman presents some of his least self-conscious and most surprising playing. He turns the tune inside out three times, in quite distinct ways on each occasion, and while this is as plangent as the rest of his work there's a vein of introspection which is absent in the rest of what he's done so far.

The essential disc, though, is surely Sad Life. With Ali and Parker he is playing with musicians on the highest level, and they secure a propulsion and intensity which has its independent life without either overpowering or standing subservient to the leader. In the title-tune (which he starts by playing through a mouthpiece), 'Caiapo' and the ambivalent 'Hoedown', Perelman is giving us his most emotive and convincing playing.

(*) The Hammer Leo CDLR 286 Perelman; Jay Rosen(d). 3/98.

The Hammer is blissful uproar of the sort which Perelman the saxophonist was born to make. Coltrane and Ali never got anywhere near this much violence on Interstellar Space, and the duo compounds it by having most of these pieces run to only a few minutes each in duration, purist punk onslaught. The sleeve-notes are going a country mile too far when they say that at the end, 'there is exactly nothing left anywhere in the world'; but it is a splendid battle royal.

(*) Sieiro Leo CDLR 271 Perelman; Tomas Ulrich(clo); Dominic Duval(b); Jay Rosen(d). 3/98.

(*) The Seven Energies Of The Universe Leo CDLR 309 Perelman; Joseph Scianni(p); Jay Rosen(d). 4/98.

Perelman overcomes the often gloomy Ulrich–Duval axis by steamrollering over them. But the strings have a part to play – joining in the high-end screeching of 'Rush Hour' and as conservatory counterpoint in the mordantly beautiful 'Santana'. 'Assimptotica' debuts Perelman's use of the trombivo, apparently a trombone played with a saxophone mouthpiece, which at least puts him in the Eddie Harris lineage. A great set all round.

The Seven Energies Of The Universe might almost be Perelman's Love Supreme, named for the Hebrew alphabet as preserved in the Torah. It certainly puts up the same kind of religious intensity, though this is less about a search for ecstasy. As turbulent as Perelman's music is, there's rarely any sense of merely surrendering to chaos, and Scianni in particular provides an almost analytical weight and substance to the trio's directions. His brief solo episode in the longest piece, 'Fruition', is fascinating in itself. Another demanding Perelman essay, but it's compelling stuff.

* The Ventriloquist Leo CDLR 345 Perelman; Louis Sclavis(bcl, ss); Christine Wodrascka(p); Paul Rogers(b); Ramón López(d). 6/01.

A tough call for Perelman: his first encounter with another horn-player, and in a band of considerable talents too. It's surely an atypical set for him, since this is very much a group record where he either cannot, or chooses not to, dominate. Sclavis has numerous ways of playing, but for the most part here he chooses to take on Perelman at his own game, and there are some flagrantly exciting results (though uncredited, Sclavis plays some soprano as well). Rogers, who is too little heard from these days, and López make a superbly powerful team. And then there's Wodrascka: she plays on three tracks (on which Sclavis sits out), and when Perelman says that he 'can hear the urgency of her music screaming to get out', he's not wrong. This is probably the best record the saxophonist has put his name on so far.

(*) Suite For Helen F Boxholder 038/039 2CD Perelman; Mark Dresser, Dominic Duval(b); Gerry Hemingway, Jay Rosen(d). 3/02.

Dedicated to painter Helen Frankenthaler, this seven-part work is spread across two CDs, credited to Perelman's Double Trio. He's playing with two teams of huge experience here, and perhaps it frees him to take whatever course he wishes, secure in the knowledge that any path taken will be unstintingly followed. In moments such as the overwhelming climax to 'Part 1', that impression certainly hits home. But the set has much diversity along the way, textured in fine detail as well as blusteringly apocalyptic, and it helps that the studio mix is notably clear.

 Black On White Clean Feed CF024 Perelman; Dominic Duval(b); Jackson Krall(d). 3/01.

The output has slowed, but the intensity abides. Still, this feels like an on-the-hoof blow, one day in Brooklyn. Krall is a fast and responsive drummer but we still hear Duval as stolid and gloomy.

(*) Introspection Leo CD LR 455 Perelman; Rosie Hertlein(vn); Dominic Duval(b); Newman Baker(d). 05.

(*) Soul Calling Cadence CJR 1198 As above, except omit Hertlein, Baker. 06.

It's always a slightly off-putting title, unnecessarily so in this case, since the music seems perfectly willing to communicate at a very straightforward level. Perelman's interest in folk and vernacular form is still evident, though he claims a minimum level of freedom in all of these tracks. Hertlein has a lovely sound that's hard to place relative to any of the other string-players in improvised music; more should be heard of her. Duval and Baker could do these sessions in their sleep, so all the more credit for sounding so wideawake and alert. The bassist revels in the duo situation. There's nothing slack or self-indulgent here; indeed, it sounds like two guys knuckling down to a shift rather than a performance.

Also, in brief:

 Strings Leo CDLR 249. 12/96–4/97.

Ivo goes back to his apprentice instrument, the cello, but it's an uneasy experiment. Joe Morris (g) does his best to bail him out.

 Brazilian Watercolour Leo CDLR 266. N.D.

Easy listening by Perelman standards.

 The Alexander Suite Leo CDLR 258. 5/98.

An eight-part work that pitches saxophone against a string group. For once, Ivo's force of personality doesn't legitimize the results.

Danilo Perez (born 1966)

PIANO

Born in Panama, Perez studied at the National Conservatory and then went to Berklee. Played with the Dizzy Gillespie group, 1989–92, and with his own groups from 1993.

 Panamonk Impulse! 11902/051190-2 Perez; Avishai Cohen(b); Terri Lyne Carrington, Jeff 'Tain' Watts(d); Olga Roman(v). 1/96.

 Central Avenue Impulse! 12812/051281-2 Perez; Aquiles Baez(cuatro, perc); John Patitucci, John Benitez(b); Jeff Ballard, Jeff 'Tain' Watts(d); Ray Spiegel, Pernell Saturnino, Miguel Anga Diaz(perc); Raul Vital, Lyciana Souza(v). 98.

Perez is the most convincing of the several pianists to emerge from South America to stake a place in contemporary American jazz. However, his technical expertise still sometimes gets the better of him, as it does with such contemporaries as Chucho Valdes. On Panamonk, which synthesizes Monk's music with Perez's own composing, he plays 'Evidence' and 'Four In One' side by side in what amounts to a circus performance. Perez's Monk isn't terribly convincing, since he hits the piano so hard that all the abruptness in Monk's music is intensified to the point of absurdity, but he does much better by some of his own themes: 'Hot Bean Strut' and the pretty 'September In Rio', with a wordless vocal by Roman, are worth returning to.

Central Avenue self-consciously strives for a pan-global-jazz effect: setting 'Impressions', for instance, to three different rhythms, or recording the Panamanian folk singer Raul Vital by himself and then constructing a jazz background in the studio. When he settles himself away from such persiflage and focuses on the piano, with the excellent Patitucci and either Ballard or Watts in support, the best music breaks out: the three-part 'Rhythm In Blue' suite, the opening 'Blues For The Saints', and the solo farewell of 'Smoke Gets In Your Eyes'. Perez looks to be having a hard job separating his music from its marketing.

 Live At The Jazz Showcase ArtistShare 0003 Perez; Ben Street(b); Adam Cruz(d). 12/03.

With the (disappointing) recent Verves languishing for the moment, this is a nice way to catch up with Danilo. It's an alert and very responsive trio and the programme – Monk, Stevie Wonder, one trio improv – is chosen to showcase as many aspects of his playing as possible. It all adds up to not much more than the sum of the parts, but the parts are quite impressive. This is his ideal medium: the bigger formats seem to blunt any instinct to improvise.

Bill Perkins (1924–2003)

TENOR AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES, FLUTE, BASS CLARINET

Born in San Francisco. He studied music and engineering after military service. Much touring with Kenton and Herman, and then much studio work in the late '50s, '60s and '70s. A West Coast eminence and Pres descendant.

 Just Friends / Tenors Head On Lone Hill Jazz LHJ 10237 Perkins; Art Pepper(as); Richie Kamuca(ts); Hampton Hawes, Pete Jolly, Jimmy Rowles(p); Red Mitchell(b); Stan Levey, Mel Lewis(d). 7 & 10/56.

Two (actually three) of Bill's best dates for Pacific. Head On pitches him into a not very confrontational situation with the like-minded Kamuca and a couple of different rhythm sections, while Just Friends has the additional fillip of an Art Pepper appearance. So mellow is the music that even Perkins's occasional sortie on bass clarinet doesn't rough up the texture.

 Quietly There Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1776 Perkins; Victor Feldman(p, org, vib); John Pisano(g); Red Mitchell(b); Larry Bunker(d). 11/66.

This was one of only two sessions that the veteran West Coast reedman made under his own name in the '60s. Gentle, pretty, but closely thought out, this is easy-listening jazz as it could be at its best. The nine tracks are all Johnny Mandel compositions, and Perkins devises a different setting for each one, some decidedly odd: baritone sax and organ for 'Groover Wailin'', for instance, which mainly proves that Feldman was no good as an organist. But Perkins's grey, marshy tone makes a charming matter of 'The Shining Sea', the flute-and-vibes treatment of 'A Time For Love' is ideal, and tempos and textures are subtly varied throughout.

(*) Warm Moods Fresh Sound FSRCD 191 Perkins; Frank Strazzeri(p). 11/91.

In the '90s, Perkins was offered a brief flurry of recording opportunities. Rob Pronk's arrangements for I Wished On The Moon (see below, 'in brief') gave Bill his chance at a big band/strings album but the Warm Moods session is altogether tougher. Perkins chooses to use baritone for most of the record (with two forays into bass clarinet and a single clarinet reading of 'Sweet Lorraine') and his faintly peevish sound on the horn sits nicely with Strazzeri's energetic bop lines. When they get to a ballad like 'You Know I Care' the leathery sound unravels into tenderness. Warmly recommended.

 Perk Plays Prez Fresh Sound FSRCD 5010 Perkins; Jan Lundgren(p); Dave Carpenter(b); Paul Kreibich(d); Jack Sheldon(v). 6/95.

Clearly a labour of love for Perkins and realized with great finesse, this tribute to his original inspiration has been very carefully handled. He is paying homage to the Lester Young specifically of the late '30s, and he re-creates entire Young solos – such as those of 'Shoe Shine Boy', 'Taxi War Dance' and 'Let Me See' – before adding improvisations of his own. As gracefully as it's done, there's a vague sense of redundancy about the exercise, given that Perkins's own solos seem strong enough to stand alone – and to have their own context. A bigger problem is the studio sound, which puts the saxophonist too far back: delicate as his tone is, he doesn't need to be overpowered by the rhythm section, even when it's playing as complicitly as here.

Also, in brief:

 I Wished On The Moon Candid CCD79524. 1/89–4/90.

A breeze through some untroubling charts with the Metropole Orchestra.

 Live At Capozzoli's Woofy 63. 11/97.

Late night in Vegas in a co-led situation with trumpeter Steve Huffsteter.

Carl Perkins (1928–58)

PIANO

Despite a left hand crippled by polio, he developed an individual style. Drug problems pursued him throughout his short life.

 Introducing Boplicity 8 Perkins; Leroy Vinnegar(b); Lawrence Marable(d). 55.

 Carl Perkins Memorial Fresh Sound FSRCD Perkins; Jack Sheldon(t); Richie Kamuca, Harold Land(ts); Herbie Mann(f); Curtis Counce, Leroy Vinnegar(b); Tony Bazley, Frank Butler, Bill Douglas(d). 56–57.

The Introducing sides are mostly brief and punchy, driven along by Perkins's indefinably odd left-hand chords (which make sense once you've seen a photograph of him at the keyboard). The originals 'Carl's Blues' and 'West Side' (aka 'Mia') – there is an alternate take of the latter on the CD – are pretty generic, but there's energy in the playing and Perkins was an interesting original. Issued on Dootone, this material is also usually available on Fresh Sound, whose Memorial finds Perkins working in the section of groups led by Mann, Vinnegar and Counce. He gets the odd spot, but there's scarcely enough to confirm his odd but solid reputation with West Coast observers.

Rich Perry

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Born in Cleveland. He toured with the Glenn Miller Orchestra in 1975 and then moved to New York, where he has since performed in a wide range of small groups and big bands, including Maria Schneider's.

 To Start Again Steeplechase SCCD 31331 Perry; Harold Danko(p); Scott Colley(b); Jeff Hirshfield(d). 4/93.
* Beautiful Love Steeplechase SCCD 31360 Perry; Jay Anderson(b); Victor Lewis(d). 10/94.
(*) What Is This? Steeplechase SCCD 31374 Perry; Fred Hersch(p); Jay Anderson(b); Tom Rainey(d). 4/95.
Previously hidden in big-band sections and sideman roles for some 20 years, the tenorman's absolute command goes with a soft-edged tone and an undemonstrative delivery that creates a paradox at the centre of his style. Other commentators have cited Getz, Marsh and Rollins among his models, yet Perry doesn't sound much like anyone else, while at the same time not quite standing out as an individual. The main characteristic of such a player is consistency, and there is little to choose between his work on each of these records. Instead, more depends on the context. Beautiful Love is easily the pick of the three, since without a piano the skill and judicious intensity of the sax-playing come through more clearly. There are truly marvellous improvisations on 'Prisoner Of Love', 'All The Things You Are' and 'I Fall In Love Too Easily' at the heart of the record, and for once eight quite lengthy tracks don't seem a moment too long. Anderson and the superb Lewis are also in good order. The debut To Start Again still sounds a little ordinary, despite some exemplary work from Danko; we prefer What Is This?, which drafts in Hersch, whose playing is at its liveliest. They take Thad Jones's 'What Is This?' at a terrific clip, and there is some exceptionally genuine interplay between piano and tenor on the ballads.

(*) So In Love Steeplechase SCCD 31447 Perry; Renee Rosnes(p); Peter Washington(b); Billy Drummond(d). 9/97.
(*) Doxy Steeplechase SCCD 31473 Perry; George Mraz(b); Billy Hart(d). 11/98.
Perry's albums continue to work thoughtful variations on the blowing date, the discs focused around the players and their abilities, rather than any overriding concepts. So In Love benefits hugely from Rosnes, Washington and Drummond as the supporting team. The pianist was going through a purple patch with recording, and she sounds as lucid and imaginative as she does on her own records. Perry picks excellent tunes – Steve Swallow's 'Eiderdown', Ron Carter's 'Little Waltz', Alec Wilder's 'Moon And Sand' – and noses round them, looking for counter-melodies and improvisations that seem to run in a sort of parallel with the theme.

The return to a trio format produces another fine session for Perry. He is not a great communicator on the saxophone, in the same way as a master of the trio situation like Rollins, but that is more a matter of his preference for a sound and a manner that never buttonholes the listener. It is intriguing to hear him improvising on 'Blue In Green', Bill Evans's oblique classic, where he finds an almost chilly peacefulness. Much of this music has a take-it-or-leave-it quality, but it's not a bad change from the in-your-face tactics of many modern saxophonists.

(*) O Grande Amor Steeplechase SCCD 31492 Perry; George Colligan(p); Doug Weiss(b); Darren Beckett(d). 12/99.
(*) Hearsay Steeplechase SCCD 31515 Perry; Steve Lampert(t); Dennis Irwin(b); Jeff Hirshfield(d). 3/01.
This is becoming an exceptionally rewarding sequence, and there's good evidence that O Grande Amor is another upturn. One reason is Colligan, who seems incapable of being boring and is prepared to push Perry a fraction harder than some of his predecessors on the piano stool; looking at the illustrious list this is quite something. The tunes are a jazz musician's choicest – 'Nardis', 'The Peacocks', 'On Green Dolphin Street' and the like – one or two of them possibly too familiar, but you'd hardly think so from the freshness of playing in both ensemble and solo. Just a few dead spots hold back a top rating.

Hearsay rings a few useful changes. Perry brought two tunes, but most of them are by Lampert, an old playing partner. The feel is of seamless, endless improvising over harmonic points spare enough to let the improviser go where his instincts take him. The rhythm playing recalls the Tristano-ite brushes-on-a-phonebook approach, the better to focus on the melodic stream. It's doubtless too dry for some tastes, but not for ours.

(*) At Eastman Steeplechase SCCD 31533 Perry; Clay Jenkins(t); Harold Danko(p); Jeff Campbell(b); Rich Thompson(d). 3/01.
Typical that this should be a recital by what is effectively a faculty group at the Eastman School Of Music: it's a vintage masterclass, with Perry, his old compadre Danko and the others investigating the likes of 'Bemsha Swing', 'Doxy' and 'Stella By Starlight' – cool, nimble, melodious, but in its riskless way quite chancey. 'Bemsha Swing' in particular is made into an almost classical dissertation on Monk, without falling into the juiceless inertia that that description suggests. As with all Perry's records, you either get with the style, or not.

() East Of The Sun And West Of 2nd Avenue / () You're My Everything Steeplechase SCCD 31558 / 31576 Perry; Harold Danko(p); John Hebert(b); Jeff Hirshfield(d). 4/03; 3/04.
This creative axis is so settled and comfortable that you can't blame them for wanting to stay as tight as they are. There's a new recruit in bassist Hebert, but the other three know each other's moves so well that it would need someone like Bill Laswell coming in to really rock the boat. If you think jazz is the sound of surprise then these will hardly meet your demands, but the playing is as refined and fully matured as, say, a vintage Bill Evans record, and offers a similar sort of satisfying glow. The earlier date is rather more ballad-orientated; the second, opening on a fast 'Slow Boat To China' where they hardly trouble to mention the original melody, has a little more juice in it. But either one is all class, all good.

 At the Kitano 1 Steeplechase SCCD 31600 Perry; Harold Danko(p); Jay Anderson(b); Jeff Hirshfield(d). 06.
This is pretty much a Steeplechase repertory band; none the worse for that, but one wonders how often a disc like this would find its way onto the player if you hadn't been to the original gig and wanted a reminder. Danko's in magisterial form and Perry blows with authority, but it lacks some 'plus' factor.

Also, in brief:

 Left Alone Steeplechase SCCD 31421. 4/97.
Pianist Frank Kimbrough isn't a match for Danko and Hersch, yet. So slightly disappointing.

 Canções Do Brasil Steeplechase SCCD 31463. 4/98.
Reminiscent of a Getz–Barron duo in similar vein, but actually more interesting.

Eric Person (born 1964)

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

Hailing from St Louis, Person got his start in the business in Chico Hamilton's band. There he learned to experiment, but with the basics solidly in place.

 Prophecy /  Arrival Soul Note 121287 / 121237 Person; Michael Cain(p, ky on Arrival only); Cary DeNigris(g); Kenny Davis(b); Ronnie Burrage(d on Arrival only). 3/92, 2/93; 8/92.
Eric inherited a strong blues inflexion from his musician father. A child prodigy, the young man sampled all kinds of music before settling on modern jazz. These records make a highly confident start. Burrage and fellow Hamilton alumnus DeNigris are spot-on for Person's smart but funky music. The guitarist actually only guests on two tracks on the first release (actually the second to be recorded) but 'Every Time I Smile', a duo with Person, is a gem. Eric has a seemingly limitless bag of ideas and varies his attack nicely according to the material.

The drummerless Prophecy was taped 25 years after John Coltrane's death, which perhaps explains the long interpretation of 'Interstellar Space'. Interesting to attempt it without a percussionist, but Person finds a way of working that seems to make that concern redundant. There is also a reading of 'Up Against The Wall', despite which he doesn't come across as a Coltrane disciple; closer perhaps to Wayne Shorter, whose 'Delores' is a highlight.

 Extra Pressure Distinction DR 4007 Person; John Esposito(p); Carlos Henderson(b); E. J. Strickland(d). 8/99.
(*) Live At Big Sur Distinction 5002 Person; John Esposito(p); Kenny Davis(b); Pete O'Brien(d). 5/02.
As time passed, Person seemed to delve more and more often into Coltrane's harmonic approach. 'Personal Blues' on Extra Pressure is a perfect example, though the lighter tonality of his alto and soprano horns somewhat dissipates the impression. This is the group he calls Meta-Four and, while Eric writes most of the material, it is clear that he regards it as a coalition of equals. Esposito and Davis have both been signally loyal to his vision and project and the bassist is missed from the studio album, on which Henderson sounds a bit lumpy for the kind of music being played. The live set is a delight.

(*) Rhythm Edge Distinction 39731 Person; Ingrid Jensen(t); Robin Eubanks(tb); Cary DeNigris(g); Adam Armstrong(b); Peter O'Brien(d); Bob Cooke(tabla); Daniel Sadownick(perc). 2/07.
Person hasn't rushed into print and this fine CD was worth the wait. DeNigris is now a long-established collaborator, but it's the breezy guest appearances by Jensen and Eubanks that make this one special, that and Person's own confident-sounding solos on 'It's Time Again' and 'Supersonic'. A gimmicky 'Word From Our Sponsor' doesn't really work, but there's nothing much to fault on this and the percussion is wonderfully integrated rather than just spooned on top.

Also, in brief:

(*) Reflections Distinction DR 4001. 93–03.
Eric inaugurates his own label with a valuable sampling of the Soul Note and later records, plus three great live tracks with Dave Douglas (t).

(*) More Tales To Tell Soul Note 121307. 6/96.
An important transitional record, also sampled on Reflections.

Houston Person (born 1934)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Born in South Carolina, he was a relatively late starter. A fine ballad player with a low, urgent tone in the Hawkins mould, he also produces at High Note and Savant.

 Trust In Me Prestige PRCD 24264 Person; Cedar Walton(p); Alan Dawson(vib); Bob Cranshaw, Paul Chambers(b); Frankie Jones, Lenny McBrowne(d); Ralph Dorsey(perc). 6–10/67.
 Blue Odyssey Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1045 Person; Curtis Fuller(tb); Pepper Adams(bs); Cedar Walton(p); Bob Cranshaw(b); Frankie Jones(d). 3/68.
 Goodness! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 332 Person; Sonny Phillips(org); Billy Butler(g); Bob Bushnell(b); Frankie Jones(d). 8/69.
Though Person's Muse catalogue has not yet come back on line, his stock remains high as a forefather of the acid-jazz movement, a lineage explicitly celebrated on the Prestige compilation. It's pretty straight-ahead stuff: blaring brass, chugging organ, square-four rhythm and the beefy sound of Houston's tenor over the top, inexhaustible, reliable, seldom anything other than squarely on the beat and on the case. The gospelly side of his playing personality is surprisingly much in evidence on these two dance-orientated sets. Trust In Me brings back the LP of that title together with the slightly earlier Chocomotive. The latter set has Alan Dawson for once on vibes, and hits a pretty extraordinary groove on the title-track: blues in the jazz locomotive tradition. But much of the rest is mere Prestige piece-work, with Houston receiving an unfortunate echoey sound in the mix. He sounds better on the later session, and eats up Parker's 'My Little Suede Shoes'.

Blue Odyssey isn't particularly bigger in ambition, but it does use a larger group. The use of lower horns gives the front line a bit of useful gravitas and Cedar Walton sits down and thinks about the charts, so it's a notch higher than the expected blow.

 Person-ified / (*) My Romance High Note HCD 7004 / 7033 Person; Richard Wyands(p); Ray Drummond(b); Kenny Washington(d). 11/96; 6/98.
Having taken his A&R and production nous from Muse to High Note, Person turned in some of the best recorded work of his career, a pungent mix of jazz, gospel and blues with a first-rate rhythm section. Person the balladeer has often tended to the gruff and heavy-handed, but here he is convincingly romantic on 'Stranger On The Shore' and 'Gentle Rain', and when he says 'I'll Never Stop Loving You', one is inclined to believe him. Wyands is excellent in support and the Van Gelder sound flatters the pianist more than the rest of the group. Richard sounds uneasy only on the Ammons-inspired 'Blue Jug', which isn't his speed or style. Elsewhere he's immaculate, and it's hard to fault the other two either: Washington always gives of his best and Drummond could probably carry a whole orchestra on those broad shoulders.

The same group reconvened 18 months later to record a slightly quieter but even better album. Right from the opening 'But Beautiful' it is obvious that Person is completely in command of his idiom. The pace is very gentle and determinedly romantic, and 'Laura' and 'Stairway To The Stars' are both superlative performances. Wyands occasionally chafes at the pace, but he too is a natural balladeer and it is hard to fault his exquisitely tailored solos or his rhythm work with Drummond and Washington.

 Dialogue High Note HCD 7072 Person; Ron Carter(b). 8/00.
* Blue Velvet High Note HCD 7090 Person; Richard Wyands(p); Ray Drummond(b); Grady Tate(d). 7/01.
 Sentimental Journey High Note HCD 7101 As above, except omit Drummond; add Peter Washington(b). 5/02.

Houston and Ron have done the duo session before, and even if this doesn't really seem like Person's kind of thing, they make a good go of it. The quartet dates are much the same, with ballads to the fore. Blue Velvet is exquisite, one of his very best. Approaching 70, Person has nothing to prove, no new words to say, but it's what he does: a jazz journeyman's notes on a long and busy working life.

 Social Call / * To Etta With Love High Note HCD 7115 / 7127 Person; Stan Hope(p); Paul Bollenback(g); Per-Ola Gadd(b); Chip White(d). 5/03; 1/04.
(*) All Soul High Note HCD 7146 As above, except omit Bollenback; add Eddie Allen(t); Randy Johnston(g). 6/05.

Etta Jones died in 2001 on the day her last album with Person was released, a Billie Holiday tribute. His response to her passing is the exquisite To Etta With Love, a heartwarming, sometimes almost unbearably emotional set that represents another of Person's recent peaks of form. 'Don't Go To Strangers' and 'What A Wonderful World' (the former particularly) can be listened to over and over. These two albums represent a strong new working partnership that has helped Person find fresh energy after Jones's passing. Bollenback is a highly sensitive accompanist and the band knits together beautifully. The group evolves again on All Soul. Person shows no signs of tiring, but Allen's presence does take some of the burden away and the old guy comes back each time refreshed and full of ideas.

 You Taught My Heart To Sing High Note HCD 7134 Person; Bill Charlap(p). 8/04.

This is familiar enough songbook territory for both these men and the set never gets above a good-natured amble through the material. Charlap tries to invest 'Where Is The Love' with something out of the ordinary, but it never quite breaks the conversational mood. Person sounds in good voice, clearly still enjoying his time on the 'other' side of the studio glass.

(*) Thinking Of You High Note HCD 7177 Person; Eddie Allen(t); John Di Martino(p); James Chirillo(g); Ray Drummond(b); Willie Jones III(d). 5/07.

There's a sombre edge to material like 'Avant De Mourir', which isn't quite dissipated by Houston's leonine growl on tenor. For the most part, it's a reasonably upbeat set, but that simply serves to heighten the more poignant moments. Etta Jones's death still looms large in Person's heart and this is unquestionably tinged with that very particular sorrow. Even Allen sounds not so much subdued as respectful.

Also, in brief:

 Legends Of Acid Jazz Prestige PRCD 24179. 10/70–4/71.
'Lift Every Voice And Sing' will bring a lump to the throat, but there's subtlety too.

 Island Episode Prestige PRCD 11007. 4/71, 1/73.
A funky Latin date with Hank Jones on electric piano, teamed up with some other unreleased tracks from two years earlier.

 Broken Windows, Empty Hallways Prestige PRCD 10044. 72.
Pleasant, pop-tinged set, not compiled with Sweet Buns & Barbecue.

 The Opening Round Savant SCD 2005. 2/97.
Some little while since Houston went back to the saxophone/organ/guitar format but it still fits him like a glove.

 Soft Lights High Note HCD 7049. 4/99. Ten ballads in a programme that almost recalls the old mood-music sax and strings dates of the '50s and '60s; only no orchestra.

 Together At Christmas High Note HCD 7058. 3/00.
As Yuletide albums go, this is a winner. With Etta Jones (v).

Åke Persson (1932–75)

TROMBONE

Born in Hässleholm. He was something of a prodigy and soon acquired a reputation for excellence in big-band work. He played with German radio bands, the Quincy Jones orchestra, the Clarke–Boland band and even with Duke Ellington on one of his European tours.

 'The Great' Åke Persson Four Leaf Clover FLC CD 127 Persson; Frank Rosolino, Bob Burgess(tb); Carl-Erik Lindgren, Hacke Björksten(ts); Arne Domnérus(as); Lars Gullin(bs); Ingemar Westberg, Gösta Theselius, Bengt Hallberg, Rob Pronk, Reinhold Svensson, Claes-Göran Fagerstadt(p); Bengt Carlsson, Gunnar Johnson, Simon Brehm, Don Bagley, Georg Riedel(b); Nils-Bertil Dahlander, Egil Johansen, Sven Bollhem, Jack Norén, Kenneth Fagerlund, Stan Levey(d). 8/51–1/57.

A welcome homage to one of the greatest of European trombonists. Persson was still a teenager when he made the earliest tracks here, and his mellifluous sound and effortless phrasing were already in place. The CD gathers together small-group dates with Domnérus and Hallberg, a three-trombone front line with Rosolino and Burgess, two very fine tracks by The Modern Swedes – Persson quite outstanding on 'Penta' – and the better part of a 1957 quintet date with Gullin in which Persson is overdubbed into a trombone section. Most of this is vintage Swedish cool and much of it seems relatively slight in stature, the tracks coming off EPs and the like, with many of the tunes coming in at under three minutes apiece. But it pays tribute to the earlier work of an impeccable musician who virtually disappeared into big bands and orchestras for much of the remainder of his career. Hans Fridlund's note offers a poignant appreciation of the man who died by his own hand in 1975.

Bent Persson (born 1947)

TRUMPET

Born in Karlskrona. He is a profound scholar of long-gone trumpet styles.

 Louis Armstrong's 50 Hot Choruses Volume 1–2 / ... Volume 3–4 Kenneth CKS 3411 / 3413 Persson; Karin Kristensson, Björn Larsson(t); Jens Lindgren, Hans Brandgård (tb); Claes Brodda, Jan Boström (cl, ts); Lars-Göran Olsson, Håkan Kristensson (cl, as); Jan Åkerman(cl, ss, ts); Göran Eriksson(cl, as, bj); Anders Lindén, Keith Nichols, Morten Gunnar Larsen, Ulf Lindberg, Ray Smith(p); Johan Lepistö(g); Tommy Gertoft, Klas Lagerberg(bj); Carl Jakobsson, Mats Jungner, Bo Juhlin(tba); Christer Ekhé(d, v); Bertil Ekman(d). 1/89–11/92.

 Swinging Straight Sittel SITCD 9218 Persson; Dicken Hedrenius(tb); John Högman(ts); Ulf Johansson(p); Göran Lind(b); Ronnie Gardiner(d). 12/94.

 Jazz, Blues And Stomps Kenneth CKS 3417 Persson; Frans Sjöström(bsx); Jacob Ullberger(g, bj). 9–11/01.

Persson can sound like any bygone trumpeter he cares to – and he's been asked to play in just that way, on a number of revivalist dates. The most extraordinary was the project to record the fabled solos and breaks which Louis Armstrong recorded onto wax cylinders for the Melrose Publishing company in 1927. The cylinders were lost long ago, but many of the solos and breaks were transcribed at the time, and Persson re-created them on new recordings of the tunes. The Kenneth company undertook this project as far back as the '70s and the final recordings were all due to be issued on CD. The numbering looks a bit confused, but these are all different tracks, and if you decide to go for one, you really ought to get the lot. Backed with various groups of players sympathetic with the idiom, Persson does his copycat stuff and plays other parts 'in the style'. More-detailed notes would have been an asset to the listener, since it's not clear what's written and what's being improvised, and, as freely as the players often work, there's a pervasive sense of something unreal about the whole project. Armstrong scholars, though, will find it intriguing at least.

Persson's chameleonic abilities perhaps tell against his other records having a character of their own. Instead, Swinging Straight is purely pleasurable mainstream, buoyed up by a sense of enjoyment that is often hard to find on equivalent American dates. Persson here comes on like one of the great Basie trumpeters, and Hedrenius's rascally trombone and Högman's burly tenor merely add to the fun. The Hot Jazz Trio are rather more classic in style, with Sjöström's cavernous bass sax filling all the bottom end, and the music's performed with affectionate warmth.

Ed Petersen

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Trane-influenced Chicagoan who went to teach with Ellis Marsalis in New Orleans.

 Upward Spiral Delmark DE 445 Petersen; Brad Williams(p); Fareed Haque(g); Rob Amster(b); Jeff Stitely(d). 6/89.

A part-studio, part-live account of a band that worked regularly on the Chicago scene, notably at the Green Mill. Petersen is the dominant voice, walking a line between bop and something freer with unfussy confidence; his solos contrast with the cloudier effects of Haque. It's a group that clearly hasn't yet found its feet in a studio.

 The Haint Delmark DE 474 Petersen; Dr Odies Williams III, Billy Brimfield(t); Willie Pickens(p); Brian Sandstrom(b); Robert Shy(d). 7/94.

This was a send-off date to mark Petersen's departure for the South and an academic post in New Orleans. He's a terrific writer: 'Larry Smith' is an irrepressible line and 'Walking In The Sky' has a mysterious quality that deepens across its 11-minute duration. Brimfield delivers the title-piece, but it's in the repertory ideas – 'Jitterbug Waltz', 'Green Chimneys', 'When I Fall In Love' – that the ensemble starts to gel, with impressive results.

Oscar Peterson (1925–2007)

PIANO, ORGAN, ELECTRIC PIANO, CLAVICHORD

The big Canadian has been a stalwart for more than half a century. Spotted by Norman Granz, he became a regular at Jazz At The Philharmonic events and has always been a big festival draw. His occasionally showy multi-note approach owes much to Art Tatum, but it was Nat Cole who was the most powerful and lasting influence. A stroke hampered activities in the '90s.

(*) The First Recordings Indigo IGOCD 2070 Peterson; Armand Samson(g); Bert Brown(b); Russ Dufort, Franck Gariepy, Roland Verdon(d). 4/45–7/46.

 Oscar Peterson, 1945–1947 Classics 1084 As above, except add Albert King, Auston Roberts(b); Clarence Jones, Mark Wilkinson(d). 4/45–12/47.

According to Lalo Schifrin, Oscar Peterson is the Liszt of modern jazz, Bill Evans its Chopin; this refers back to the much-quoted assertion that the Hungarian conquered the piano, while the Pole seduced it. All through his career Peterson has seemed to have all the technical bases covered, working in styles from Tatum-derived swing to bebop, stride to near-classical ideas. What is extraordinary is how quickly and completely he matured as a stylist, barely changing thereafter. When Peterson left Canada in 1949 at Norman Granz's behest, he already had behind him a successful recording career with RCA Victor in Montreal. Peterson was known round the city as the Brown Bomber of Boogie Woogie, and it is that style which dominates these early sides. There are clinkers aplenty on the faster tracks, though buried so deep in the precocious rush of notes that they scarcely register. 'Blue Moon', recorded in April 1946, is hugely accomplished, as are 'China Boy' and the somewhat later 'East Of The Sun'. A bass-playing Brown would play a huge role in his later career, but on these early sides Peterson relies heavily on Bert Brown. The Tatum influence is less evident than one might have expected, but it is undeniably and unmissably present, and on tracks like 'I Got Rhythm' and 'The Sheik Of Araby' it is the dominant voice. Peterson had not yet quite attained an expressive personality of his own, but it is waiting in the wings.

The Classics compilation pushes the story on into 1947 and some further recordings for Victor in Canada. There is a fine 'Ghost Of A Chance' from April and a wonderful version of 'Stairway To The Stars', taped just before Christmas, which will mainly be of interest to serious collectors.

 This Is Oscar Peterson At The Piano /  The Complete RCA Recordings RCA 63990 2CD / Jazz Factory 22830 2CD Peterson; Ben Johnson(g); Bert Brown(b); Albert King, Auston Roberts(b, v); Frank Gariepy, Roland Verdon, Mark Wilkinson(d). 45–49.

The RCA set cleared up a long-standing discographical blunder and completed the picture of the young Peterson's work for the Canadian division of RCA. It transpires that 1994's so-called Complete Young Oscar Peterson omitted cuts and consisted largely of alternate takes. The mistake has been rectified on this beautifully packaged and documented set and the results are quietly revelatory. Peterson was still a developing player at this time and the exigencies of 78rpm recording mean that most of the songs are short, showy and lacking in development. There are 49 cuts on the set, of which 17 are alternates. The preferred versions seem to be slightly faster and crisper, though not necessarily always more musical. There are few obvious clinkers, though once or twice Oscar's supporting players slip up and only deft footwork from the pianist keeps the track on line. The Jazz Factory release is a good budget option, but cheaply remastered.

* The Historic Early Duo Studio Sessions Ocium 40 Peterson; Ray Brown(b). 49–1/51.

 Oscar Peterson, 1949–1950 Classics 1198 Peterson; Ben Johnson(g); Ray Brown, Major Holley, Auston Roberts(b); Clarence Jones(d). 49–50.

 Oscar Peterson, 1950 Classics 1250 Peterson; Ray Brown, Major Holley(b). 50.

 Oscar Peterson, 1950–1952 / (*) Get Happy Classics 1323 / Dreyfus FDM 36738 2 Peterson; Irving Ashby, Barney Kessel(g); Ray Brown(b). 50–52; 49–52.

Under Norman Granz's wing, Peterson began to record steadily from 1949 onwards, working mainly just with a bass-player, which put him under some pressure rhythmically. These are still the work of a young man, not so much technically callow as expressively inexperienced. When he 'does' one of his predecessors and idols on 'Salute To Garner' (August 1950), the effect is sarcastic and superior rather than affectionate, but then the 24-year-old had been propelled into stardom very suddenly and it was difficult for him to keep his equilibrium. There are some lovely things here, mostly on the 1950 volume, but Ocium's recent set (with the usual CD-Rom batch of photos and texts) does the job rather better and reveals some overlooked material. When Ray Brown took over, the harmonic vocabulary seemed to double in size and the left-hand lines become ever more subtle and evocative. The Carnegie Hall set from 16 September 1950 explains exactly why Granz signed him: excitement, sophistication and a likeable humour.

The Dreyfus trawls through some of this early material, out of chronological sequence and with a dispiriting absence of clear discographical information, which might lead some potential purchasers to think this was a free-standing issue of later vintage.

 1951 Just A Memory 9501 Peterson; Auston Roberts(b). 3–7/51.

Twenty beautifully executed miniatures, presumably kept down in length on the instructions of the Canadian Broadcasting Commission, who taped these performances for relay on a famously tight schedule. Roberts certainly isn't a playing partner of the quality of Major Holley or Ray Brown, but he has an inherent musicality and a genuine instinct for swing, and these are lovely cuts, albeit frustratingly brief.

 The President Plays With The Oscar Peterson Trio Verve 521451-2 Peterson; Lester Young(ts); Barney Kessel(g); Ray Brown(b); J. C. Heard(d). 52.

Flawlessly lyrical piano-playing, but nothing much from Pres save the shards and fragments of a musical mind that had very little left to say. Some of the tunes are stunning. 'Tea For Two' is a revelation and 'On The Sunny Side Of The Street' is as fresh and uncomplicated as a spring morning. Much of the rest, though, is disturbingly empty.

 Jazz Masters 37: Oscar Peterson Plays Broadway Verve 516893-2 Peterson; Clark Terry(t); Irving Ashby, Herb Ellis, Barney Kessel(g); Ray Brown(b); Gene Gammage, Alvin Stoller, Ed Thigpen(d). 3/50–8/64.

(*) Jazz Masters 16: Oscar Peterson Verve 516320-2 As for other Verve sets. 52–61.

 The Duke Ellington Songbook Verve 559785-2 Peterson; Barney Kessel(g); Ray Brown(b); Ed Thigpen(d). 52, 59.

 The George Gershwin Songbook Verve 529698-2 As above, except omit Thigpen. 11 & 12/52.

 Jazz At The Philharmonic, Hartford 1953 Pablo 2308240 Peterson; Roy Eldridge, Charlie Shavers(t); Bill Harris(tb); Benny Carter, Willie Smith(as); Flip Phillips, Ben Webster, Lester Young(ts); Herb Ellis(g); Ray Brown(b); J. C. Heard, Gene Krupa(d). 5/53.

(*) At Zardi's Pablo Live 2620118 2CD Peterson; Herb Ellis(g); Ray Brown(b). 55.

Peterson has been almost as prolific as he is effusive at the piano. He appears on literally dozens of albums in solo and trio settings, but also with horn-led groups and orchestras. He is one of the finest accompanists in swing-orientated jazz, despite which he served no real apprenticeship as a sideman and had ridden on the extraordinary momentum of his debut. The earliest material available here suggests how complete he was as an artist, even at the very beginning. He quickly became a favourite at JATP events and the Hartford 1953 sessions anticipate the walk-on/walk-off sensation he was to become in the '70s.

Peterson is perhaps best as a trio performer. During the '50s the trios tended to be drummerless, and with a guitarist. Barney Kessel sounds rather colourless and Herb Ellis is much more responsive to Peterson's technique, as was his much later replacement, Joe Pass. After 1960, the stalwart Ray Brown was joined by a drummer, first Ed Thigpen, then Louis Hayes. This coincided with Peterson's consolidation as a major concert and recording star; his early work, influenced primarily by Nat Cole, is now rather less well-known. Of the mid-'50s sets, At Zardi's and the excellent Jazz Masters compilation (which covers the early years of the later trio as well) are certainly the best.

There has long been a critical knee-jerk about Peterson's Tatum influence. Nat Cole was self-evidently more important. Oscar's debt to Duke Ellington is less obvious, but something of Duke's urbane phrasing crept into Oscar's playing in the '50s and one can hear him both surrender to it and resist it strongly on the Ducal songbook, one of the best of the sequence but also one of the most exposed. Oscar's solo on 'Prelude To A Kiss' is about as raw-nerved as he gets.

() At The Stratford Shakespearean Festival / () At The Concertgebouw Verve 513752-2 / 521649-2 Peterson; Herb Ellis(g); Ray Brown(b). 8/56; 9 & 10/57.

Unlike the Ahmad Jamal and Nat Cole trios, which also dispensed with drummers in favour of piano, guitar and bass, the Peterson group never sounded spacious or open-textured – the pianist's hyperactive fingers saw to that. Here, though, for once Peterson seemed able to lie back a little and let the music flow under its own weight, rather than constantly pushing it along. Peterson has described how during the daytime Brown and Ellis sat and practised all the harmonic variables that might come up during a performance. A sensible precaution, one might have thought, given a player with Peterson's hand-speed. The irony is that his vertical mobility, in and out of key, was never as rapid as all that, and there are occasions here, as on 'How High The Moon' and the closing 'Daisy's Dream' (both from Stratford), where it appears that Ellis and Brown manage to anticipate his moves and push him into configurations he hadn't apparently thought of.

The other concert is augmented with material from Los Angeles a fortnight later, suggesting a quick return to the United States. However, the 'Concertgebouw' material was actually recorded in Chicago. The Dutch concert given by the trio earlier in 1957 was never actually taped, but presumably it sounded classier on the sleeve to pretend that it had. One other mistake has been corrected from the CD. The track originally labelled 'Bags' Groove' clearly wasn't and has now been retitled 'Bluesology'.

 Tenderly /  Vancouver 1958 Just A Memory 9146 / 9148 Peterson; Herb Ellis(g); Ray Brown(b). 58.
These resurfaced in 2002 and 2003 and add to the image of a trio of almost telepathic understanding, at this stage about one year from its eventual dissolution. Brown is magisterial throughout both sets, and on the opening 'How High The Moon' (Vancouver 1958) he reminds us that he once played with Charlie Parker. 'The Music Box Suite' is the other long track, but it's a bit of a filler and it's 'The Golden Striker' that stands out from the rest of the set. 'The Music Box Suite' is also on Tenderly and no more compelling in this version. The sound, from two performances at the Orpheum Theatre, isn't perfect, but as a slice of archive these are hard to beat.

(*) On The Town Verve 543834 Peterson; Herb Ellis(g); Ray Brown(b). 7/58.
This live Toronto recording was reissued by Verve in 2001. The trio opens with a sparkling 'Sweet Georgia Brown' which must count as one of the most grabbing intros Oscar ever played to a concert. From there, the pace never drops for a second; even the ballad performances seem fired up and packed with musical information. Not that this is a coldly technical set. The bonus cuts too are as warm as summer.

(*) Plays My Fair Lady & The Music From Fiorello Verve 521677-2 Peterson; Ray Brown(b); Gene Gammage(d). 11/58, 1/60.
() A Jazz Portrait Of Frank Sinatra /  Plays The Cole Porter Songbook / () The Jazz Soul Of Oscar Peterson / * Plays Porgy & Bess Verve 825769-2 / 821987-2 / 533100-2 / 519807-2 Peterson; Ray Brown(b); Ed Thigpen(d). 5/59; 7 & 8/59; 7 & 8/59, 9/62; 10/59.
Not to be confused with the later duo interpretation featuring Joe Pass, the Gershwin set is brilliantly spontaneous jazz, apparently recorded after the sketchiest of run-throughs. Peterson has played 'I Wants To Stay Here' (or 'I Loves You, Porgy', as it is more commonly known) many times in his career, but nowhere with the pure feeling and simplicity he gives it on this disc. The two apostrophes to Bess at the end are heartfelt and utterly compelling, with liquid left-hand figures and an unstoppable flow of melody ideas. As pianist Benny Green indicates in a special introductory note to the reissue, Ray Brown gets less solo space here than on many of the trio's records, probably because Peterson makes the session so forcibly his own. Brown's contribution to the fiery 'There's A Boat Dat's Leavin' Soon For New York' is beyond reproach, however, and his intro to 'I Got Plenty O' Nuttin'' is masterful.

With Peterson, nothing fundamental rests on the quality of the material he has to work with. His almost alchemical transformation of the songs from Fiorello beggars belief. My Fair Lady offers more-familiar melodies and the element of surprise is proportionately less. However, these are some of his most lyrical and melody-centred interpretations, often sticking quite close to the line. The Porter and Sinatra records are slightly odd in that Peterson does very little more than run through the songs, chorus by chorus, adding not much in the way of improvisational embellishment. The shortest track on the Sinatra is under two minutes, the longest on either just three and a half, the average about two minutes forty-five. This gives the performances a slightly abrupt air. Though Peterson's admiration for Sinatra comes through strongly, the Porter tribute isn't a great record, and there are signs that it was made to order as part of a burgeoning catalogue of 'songbook' projects; but its value lies precisely in its terseness, Peterson's brilliant feel for song form.

The Jazz Soul completes CD coverage of this classic period, pairing the disc of that name with a later session called Affinity. The latter is fairly adventurous for the time, including 'Waltz For Debby' and a complex, freighted version of 'Tangerine'. The pace drops thereafter, but these are special tracks.

(*) Plays The Harold Arlen Songbook Verve 589 103 2 Peterson; Herb Ellis(g); Ray Brown(b); Ed Thigpen(d). 11/54, 7 & 8/59.
Actually two albums, brought together as part of Verve's Master Edition series. The earlier set, released in 1954 as Plays Harold Arlen, was a lightly skipping progress through themes as diverse as 'I've Got The World On A String', 'As Long As I Live' and 'Between The Devil And The Deep Blue Sea'. The first and last of these also feature on the 1959 set, where Thigpen had come in to replace the guitarist, leaving Oscar freer from rhythmic duties to indulge his amazing harmonic understanding and probe both songs that bit more deeply. Almost all the cuts are under three minutes, and frequently Oscar's over-packed solo is over before you've quite caught up with his opening idea.

 Live At CBC Studios, 1960 Just A Memory 9507 Peterson; Ray Brown(b); Ed Thigpen(d). 60.
For some reason, this session wasn't released on disc for almost 40 years, doubly odd in that it comes amid an otherwise quiet moment in Oscar's output. The performances are disciplined and swinging. 'Dancing On The Ceiling' and 'Blues For Big Scotia' stand out, but the real importance of this late release is historical rather than strictly aesthetic, filling in another stage in OP's development.

(*) The London House Sessions Verve 531766-2 5CD As above. 61.
Five CDs of quality live performance, beautifully registered, remastered and packaged and effortlessly musical from start to finish – but, given the price, for the hardcore Peterson fan only. It would be pointless to unpick a set as densely filled with extraordinary music, but 'Whisper Not' on disc one, 'On Green Dolphin Street' on two and four, 'I Remember Clifford' on three, and the closing 'Confirmation' on the final disc would be our desert island pick. The Trio, listed below, is one disc of highlights.

 The Trio – Live From Chicago /  The Sound Of The Trio Verve 539063-2 / 543321 As above, except omit orchestra. 9 & 10/61; 61.
Ideal for anyone who doesn't want to fork out for the complete London House sessions, which, though desirable, are expensive. The latter of these is from the Master Edition, beautifully packaged.

[illegible]

 Night Train
Verve 521440-2 Peterson; Ray Brown(b); Ed Thigpen(d). 12/62.
After 30 years, Night Train is well established as a hardy perennial and is certainly Peterson's best-known record. Dedicated to his father, who was a sleeping-car attendant on Canadian Pacific Railways, it isn't the dark and moody suite of nocturnal blues many listeners expect but a lively and varied programme of material covering 'C-Jam Blues', 'Georgia On My Mind', 'Bags' Groove', 'Honey Dripper', 'Things Ain't What They Used To Be', 'Band Call', 'Hymn To Freedom' and a couple of others. Though by no means a 'concept album', it's one of the best-constructed long-players of the period and its durability is testimony to that as much as to the quality of Peterson's playing, which is tight and uncharacteristically emotional. The beautifully remastered reissue has six extra tracks, including a fascinating rehearsal take of 'Moten Swing' and an alternative of 'Night Train', which is called 'Happy Go Lucky Local'.

 The Silver Collection Verve 823447-2 Peterson; Ray Brown(b); Ed Thigpen(d); Nelson Riddle Orchestra. 8/59 & 63.
(*) Very Tall Verve 827821-2 As above, except add Milt Jackson(vib). 9/61.
 West Side Story Verve 821575-2 As above, except omit Jackson. 1/62.
 Plus One Verve 558075 As above, except add Clark Terry(t, flhn). 8/64.
 We Get Requests Verve 521442-2 As above, except omit Terry. 10 & 11/64.

We Get Requests reverses the polarity established by Night Train totally. Cool but technically effusive, Peterson gets all over two sets of (mostly) romantic ballads, played with a portrait of Nat Cole perched on the soundboard in front of him. The 'requests' are pretty much of their time, mostly songs that either started out as soft pop or, like 'The Girl From Ipanema', made their way there via the charts. The Silver Collection has four excellent trio tracks fighting for their lives among nine syrupy orchestrations that might have worked for another pianist but which are emphatically not in Peterson's line of sight. The West Side Story covers are interesting because they put the weight of emphasis on all the unlikeliest tunes. The 'Jet Song' receives the most developed interpretation, but while 'Maria' and 'Somewhere' are both consummately polished performances, they lack the commitment and graceful intelligence Peterson normally brings to romantic ballads.

So different is Peterson from John Lewis's unemphatic keyboard approach that there's not the remotest chance that Very Tall might be mistaken for an MJQ record. One of the great improvisers in modern jazz, Jackson is the undoubted star of the session, finessing 'On Green Dolphin Street' with a subtle counterpoint and adding a tripping bounce to 'A Wonderful Guy'. Excellent stuff. Watch out for Reunion Blues, not currently around, which saw Peterson and the vibist get together again.

Plus One is aptly named. Terry never gets more involved than his guest star role would imply, and there are occasions when (to be frank) he sounds more like a revelling gatecrasher. He slides into a sombre, almost remorseful mood on 'They Didn't Believe Me', giving his flugelhorn that celebrated bone-china fragility, before bouncing back with a second wind on a Peterson original called 'Squakay's Blues', dedicated to redoubtable manager Joanie Spears.

 Olympia, Mai 1957, Avril 1960, Février 1961, Mars 1963 Trema 710597 Peterson; Roy Eldridge(t); Herb Ellis(g); Stuff Smith(vn); Ray Brown(b); Jo Jones, Ed Thigpen(d). 5/57, 4/60, 2/61, 3/63.
(*) Olympia 1963/Th. Champs Élysées 1964 Trema 71908 As above, except omit Ellis, Jones. 63, 64.
 Th. Champs Élysées 20 Mars 1965 – Pleyel 29 Mars 1965 Trema 710599 As above, except add Sam Jones(b); Louis Hayes(d). 3/65.

A fine haul of live dates from France, and a chance to hear Oscar in some interesting guest company. The earliest set features some fine playing from Eldridge and the effervescent Stuff Smith, and there is an emotional reunion in 1960 with Herb Ellis, who'd moved on from the Peterson trio a couple of years before. Eldridge is in absolutely phenomenal form on the Olympia 1963 date, playing fierce, edgy stuff on 'Mainstem' and a superb 'But Not For Me'. The remainder of the date is just Oscar with the trio, but he obviously likes the Parisian air and plays with a relaxed bravura that culminates on a superb extended reading of 'Yours Is My Heart Alone' and 'Blues For Big Scotia'. The third volume sees an unusual variation in the core trio with Jones and Hayes, who worked with Oscar for a time, significantly reshaping some of his most familiar strategies.

CORE COLLECTION

 Girl Talk /  Action /  The Way I Really Play /  Mellow Mood /  Travelin' On / * My Favorite Instrument
MPS 981129-4 / 981129-3 / 981129-5 / 981130-3 / 981130-5 / 981129-6 Peterson; Ray Brown, Sam Jones(b); Bobby Durham, Louis Hayes(d). 63–68.

Between 1963 and 1968 Peterson recorded a series of six LPs for the MPS label in the Villingen home of German producer Hans Georg Brunner-Schwer. These were made in the presence of a small group of the producer's friends and the sessions are notably relaxed as a result. These sessions were available for a time as Exclusively For My Friends, a comprehensive four-CD set augmented with a further disc of 'lost tapes'. To mark the 40th anniversary of these recordings, MPS have reissued the original discs, which are now listed separately above. Frankly, and against our usual custom, we preferred the music in boxed-set form. Though the recordings spanned some five years and some changes of personnel, there was a consistency of spirit to the whole sequence that was somehow lost when divided up into separate records. Because of that, it is difficult to make clear qualitative comparisons between them, except to say that My Favorite Instrument, incredibly Oscar's first solo record, is far and away the best place to start with this period of his career, even if it means back-tracking. He obviously loves this piano, and it responds warmly to him. 'Perdido', 'Who Can I Turn To?' and 'Little Girl Blue' are fantastic performances by any standard. Elsewhere, there is a lovely balance of relaxation and risk in the playing.

 The Final Concerts Gambit 69208 Peterson; Ray Brown(b); Ed Thigpen(d). 10/64–5/65.

The end of a great association, traced over the course of an emotional tour. Nothing very obviously stands out, but the standard is uniformly high and there's no sign that this grouping didn't have years of music-making still in it.

 Tracks MPS 982701-1 Peterson (p solo). 11/70.

The solo performances on Tracks have the musing, inward quality that was the other side of Peterson's prodigious keyboard showmanship. Things like 'A Little Jazz Exercise' and the reworkings of 'Basin Street Blues' and 'Honeysuckle Rose' are so chock-full of ideas that any aspirant jazz pianist will want to study them.

 Reunion Blues MPS 982701-2 Peterson; Milt Jackson(vib); Ray Brown, Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Louis Hayes(d). 7 & 10/71.

Having repackaged Peterson's MPS records in two and threes, Universal is now putting them out singly again, presumably in the hope of catching out unwary buyers. The first astonishment here is that the first track of Reunion Blues, the first of two MPS discs compiled on this reissue, should be the Jagger–Richards rocker 'Satisfaction'. The second is the way in which Oscar dispatches it. Everything else is pretty much by the book. Milt Jackson's 'Reunion Blues', written for the occasion, is unfamiliar, but scarcely a surprise. Ironically, the better material was from the other record.

 Solo Live Pablo 972 Peterson (p solo). 8 & 11/72.

Oscar Peterson solo albums are surprisingly thin on the ground and so this 2002 issue of unreleased material is particularly welcome. Apparently recorded live in Israel or Lebanon, probably from broadcast material, and in Amsterdam, it features Oscar working through some 14 themes in not much over an hour. Though known mainly for his treatment of standard material, Peterson is an overlooked composer and 'Blues Of The Prairies' and 'Hogtown Blues' (both from his largely forgotten Canadiana Suite) are excellent performances. 'Body And Soul' and 'Here's That Rainy Day' are the best of the rest, not least because on both Oscar has to negotiate a slightly temperamental piano that sounds slightly out of tune. A valuable issue, though, and certain to be of interest to OP collectors.

 The Trio /  The Good Life Original Jazz Classics OJC 992 / OJC 627 Peterson; Joe Pass(g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b). 73.

For some fans this is Peterson's best vintage and most effective partnership. The Trio concentrates largely on blues material, with a withers-wringing 'Secret Love' as a curtain-piece. On the other album, 'Wheatland' needs the rhythmic drive that Ed Thigpen brought to the tune on Compact Jazz; but by and large the drummerless trio is a setting that suits Peterson's Tatumesque delivery. Only five tracks, and little sense of significant development on any of them as Peterson's technique becomes increasingly pleased with itself.

 Jazz In Paris: Oscar Peterson And Stéphane Grappelli, Volumes 1 & 2 Verve 013028 / 013030 Peterson; Stéphane Grappelli(vn); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Kenny Clarke(d). 9/73.

A brilliant partnership and a lovely set of standards that see Oscar and Stéphane gently spar their way through. There's nothing too demanding about these sides, but, unless you're averse to the wheedling tone of Grappelli's violin, they're hugely entertaining, and a long 'My One And Only Love' and the less-known 'Flamingo' on the first volume and the unexpected 'Blues For Musidisc' on the second are must-have items for any serious Peterson collector.

 Oscar Peterson In Russia Pablo 2625711 2CD Peterson; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Jake Hanna(d). 11/74.

The real meat of this journey was the duos with NHØP. Their trip down Green Dolphin Street is a revelation, one of the partnership's genuinely shining moments. Hanna is a rather pushy, forceful drummer for this context, but he has his strengths and, with temperatures outside doubtless plummeting, his push through 'Take The "A" Train' and 'Do You Know What It Means To Miss New Orleans' must surely have been welcome. Oscar redresses the balance with lovely readings of 'Someone To Watch Over Me' (solo) and 'Georgia On My Mind' (trio).

 Oscar Peterson & Dizzy Gillespie Pablo 2310740 Peterson; Dizzy Gillespie(t). 11/74.

(*) Oscar Peterson & Roy Eldridge Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 727 Peterson; Roy Eldridge(t). 12/74.

(*) Oscar Peterson & Harry Edison Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 738 Peterson; Harry 'Sweets' Edison(t). 12/74.

 Oscar Peterson & Clark Terry Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 806 Peterson; Clark Terry(t). 5/75.

 Jousts Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 857 As the four discs above, except add Jon Faddis(t). 11/74–6/75.

This instrumentation goes all the way back to 1928, when Louis Armstrong and Earl Hines recorded 'Weather Bird'. There are, inevitably, hints of a later Bird in Gillespie's blues style, but there is also a slackness of conception similar to what overtook Armstrong in later years, and Peterson's overblown accompaniments don't help. The ballads are better, but only because they're prettier.

Eldridge pushes a little harder (and, incidentally, sounds prettier than Diz), and the slightly later session is on balance the more compelling. There is still a feeling of Buggins's turn and mix-and-match about a lot of these sessions, but the two players' artistry does show through. Peterson's switch to organ was a happy stroke and might have been usefully extended to the album as a whole, rather than to selected tracks. The closing 'Blues For Chu' is a small masterstroke.

Of the first three, Sweets is closest in conception to Armstrong, and the opening 'Easy Living' reverberates back and forth across almost half a century of the music. There are some lovely things later on in the set as well: 'Willow Weep For Me', where Sweets squeezes low, throaty tones out of his trumpet, and 'The Man I Love', a straight, unabashed performance.

The Clark Terry sequence as a whole seems the drabbest of the bunch. There's surprisingly little feeling of communication between two men who must have worked together literally dozens of times – or perhaps that's the problem. Oscar breezes away delightedly at 'Makin' Whoopee', 'Satin Doll' and 'Slow Boat To China', but there's not much in the way of bonhomie from Clark, who's had better days in the studio and seems intent on shouting his partner down.

Jousts brings together additional material from all four sessions, and from a date with Dizzy's spiritual son, Jon Faddis. A good budget purchase.

 The Giants Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 898 Peterson; Joe Pass(g); Ray Brown(b). 12/74.

At the end of a fantastically busy spell, he squeezed in this thoughtful trio set. Oscar's on organ for just two of the numbers, but the best of the playing comes on a stretched-out version of 'I'm Getting Sentimental Over You', where his touch and ability to select a telling phrase are almost uncanny. There's also an interesting version right at the end of the album of Quincy Jones's 'Eyes Of Love', which should have appeared more often in Oscar's bag.

* À La Salle Pleyel Pablo 2625705 2CD Peterson; Joe Pass(g). 5/75.

Two brilliant solo sets, with both players on cracking form, followed by duo performances that must count as among the best these giants ever recorded. Peterson's playing on 'Tenderly' is exquisite and his shaping of an Ellington medley headed up by 'Take The "A" Train' is almost uncannily good. Pass responds in kind, but it's when they get together that the sparks really begin to fly. 'If' is astonishing, both players picking up on passing notes and constructing new ideas almost at quantum speed. 'Honeysuckle Rose' should be studied by anyone interested in jazz improvisation.

 The Oscar Peterson Big 6 At The Montreux Jazz Festival 1975 Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 931 Peterson; Milt Jackson(vib); Toots Thielemans(hca); Joe Pass(g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Louie Bellson(d). 7/75.

Notable for the inclusion of Parker's 'Au Privave', a bebop classic that has been a favourite of the pianist's but which still sits rather awkwardly alongside Peterson's usual diet of blues and swing. In the event, it's an effective enough performance, though the logic of his solo is rather lost in the showers of notes he plays. Thielemans underlines how good an improviser he can be, but Pass is very muted.

 Porgy And Bess Original Jazz Classics OJC 829 Peterson; Joe Pass(g). 1/76.

Peterson's choice of clavichord for the Porgy And Bess session looked initially promising but ultimately suggests nothing more than a way of freshening up rather stale performances. It's perhaps the least known of the keyboard family, covering between three and five octaves (Peterson seems to be using the larger model) and distinguished from the piano and harpsichord by the fact that the strings are struck (rather than plucked, as with the harpsichord) by metal tangents which can be left in contact with the string rather than being allowed to rebound, altering its distinctive vibrato. Peterson certainly hasn't mastered that aspect of the instrument and plays it with a pianist's 'clean' touch that loses him the delicious, bluesy wavers and bends it could have brought to these rather stolid Gershwin interpretations.

 Montreux '77 Original Jazz Classics OJC 383 Peterson; Ray Brown, Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b). 7/77.

 Montreux '77 Original Jazz Classics OJC 378 Peterson; Dizzy Gillespie, Clark Terry(t); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis(ts); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Bobby Durham(d). 7/77.

The first of these is an intriguing two-bass experiment from the much-documented 1977 festival, where Peterson had become a recognized draw. Brown tends to take on some of the responsibilities of a guitarist, alternating his familiar 'walk' with clipped strums reminiscent of Herb Ellis's guitar and leaving the darker sonorities to the great Dane. The material, with the exception of 'There Is No Greater Love', is perhaps not ideally suited to the two string-players and they're often left with a rather subsidiary role. Peterson was just about blown out of sight by Tommy Flanagan's excellent performance earlier in the weekend, but he's generally in good if undemanding form. He can also be heard on other OJC sets from the same event.

(*) The London Concert Pablo 2620111 2CD Peterson; John Heard(b); Louie Bellson(d). N.D.

A delight to hear Peterson and the ebullient Bellson in this context and away from the crowded stages they occupied at festivals. Above all, and despite his occasional flash grandstanding, Bellson is a great accompanist, and for much of the time here he happily restricts himself to that role, just laying off the odd deadly fill and take that! riposte as the mood hits him. Heard is a quieter partner but, as always in a Peterson group, absolutely central to the sound. A great evening, marked by more fireworks than usual for this vintage.

 The Paris Concert Pablo 2620112 2CD Peterson; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Joe Pass(g). 10/78.

Again, much of the interest focuses on two Parker tracks, 'Donna Lee' and 'Ornithology', both of which receive the kind of scalping treatment meted out by the army barber at boot camp. There's a 'who's next?' feel to the succession of tracks that makes you wish someone had shouted out 'Excursion On A Wobbly Rail' or 'Three Blind Mice' … anything to wrong-foot the man. Playing without drums, as he did a lot around this time, Peterson seems rhythmically yet more commanding, but he also opens up his phrasing quite noticeably, highlighting the stresses and accents.

(*) Skol Original Jazz Classics OJC 496 Peterson; Stéphane Grappelli(vn); Joe Pass(g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Mickey Roker(d). 7/79.

Here Oscar defers more than usual to his colleagues – 'Nuages' and 'Making Whoopee' have Grappelli's thumbprint on them, after all – and contributes to a surprisingly rounded performance. The music is still on the soft side, but Peterson is as unfailingly sensitive as an accompanist as he is as a leader, and his solo spots are all the more striking for being tightly marshalled. A good choice for anyone who prefers the pianist in smaller doses, or who enjoys Grappelli. The fiddler suffers broadly similar critical problems. A player of consummate skill and considerable improvisational gifts, he has been somewhat hijacked by television and has come (quite wrongly) to seem a middle-of-the-road entertainer rather than a 'legitimate' jazzman.

(*) Digital At Montreux Pablo 2308224 Peterson; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b). 7/79.

Very much a middle-market package for the hi-fi enthusiast who wants to watch the dials glow and twitch. This is a rather dead spell in Peterson's career, and listening to him negotiate 'Caravan' or 'Satin Doll' for the umpteenth time is a little like watching a snooker professional clear the table according to the book. One longs for a few near-misses.

(*) The Personal Touch Pablo 2312135 Peterson; Clark Terry(t, flhn); Ed Bickert, Peter Leitch(g); Dave Young(b); Jerry Fuller(d); orchestra conducted by Rick Wilkins. 1 & 2/80.

Rick Wilkins's orchestrations aren't as drowningly fulsome as one might have feared, and both Peterson and Clark Terry are forceful enough players to rise above them. All the same, it's hard to see how a fairly unenterprising set would have been much different for quintet alone. Peterson's brief switch to electric piano (listen to 'The World Is Waiting For The Sunrise' for a quick sample) underlines the instrument's limitations rather than the player's.

 Live At The Northsea Jazz Festival Pablo 2620115 Peterson; Toots Thielemans(hca); Joe Pass(g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b). 7/80.

The sprawling Northsea Festival has some of the chaotic glamour of the old JATP packages. Though not a pianist who generally sounds good around horns, Peterson gives Thielemans a lot of space and respect, weaving counterlines round his plangent figures on 'Like Someone In Love' and 'Caravan' (a gorgeously exotic performance). It's a quieter, less dynamic set than many of the festival albums from the period (which suits Thielemans) but isn't particularly reflective. The Nat Cole references are well to the forefront if you care to look for them.

(*) Nigerian Marketplace Pablo 2308231 Peterson; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Terry Clark(d). 7/81.

The title-track has a vivid 'live from Lagos' bustle about it that carries on into 'Au Privave', by now established as Peterson's favourite Charlie Parker item. The middle of the programme is on much more familiar turf with 'Nancy', 'Misty' and, perhaps more surprisingly, Bill Evans's lovely 'Waltz For Debby'. Peterson hasn't shown a great deal of interest in Evans's book (and it's difficult to judge whether his occasional Hawes and Evans touches show a direct influence), but he handles this theme with characteristic amplitude and not too much depth. Newcomer Clark performs well if rather busily.

 Freedom Song Pablo 26401001 Peterson; Joe Pass(g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Martin Drew(d). 2/82.

There are few places in the world where Peterson has not recorded, but there are no fans more vociferous in their support than the Japanese. These dates were recorded in Tokyo and they find him in cracking good form. 'Now's The Time' reinforces his attachment to bebop, and the medley 'Hymn To Freedom'/'The Fallen Warrior'/'Nigerian Marketplace' is one of his grandest conceptions. Reservations? Two. The sound is not all it might be, a little muffled and indistinct; and the band is not playing anything like as well as the leader's performance requires. Two cheers.

 Two Of The Few Original Jazz Classics OJC 689 Peterson; Milt Jackson(vib). 1/83.

This is a winner from start to finish. Perhaps because the session was run down and recorded at short notice, there's not much originality in the material, which consists entirely of well-worn standards. The closing 'Here's Two Of The Few' is great, though, and worth the price on its own.

() A Tribute To My Friends /  If You Could See Me Now Pablo 2310902 / 2310918 Peterson; Joe Pass(g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Martin Drew(d). 11/83.

The tribute album nods in the direction of Fats Domino, Dizzy Gillespie, Ella and others who've crossed the big man's path over the years. There's a slight air of the end-of-contract A&R meeting about it: how do we find a new wrinkle? If You Could See Me Now includes 'Limehouse Blues' and the bassist's feature, 'On Danish Shore'. These are about the best things on offer, but it's a thin set altogether.

() Oscar Peterson Live! / (*) Time After Time Pablo 2310940 / 2310947 Peterson; Joe Pass(g); Dave Young(b); Martin Drew(d). 11/86.

 Oscar Peterson + Harry Edison + Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson Pablo 2310927 As above, except add Harry 'Sweets' Edison(t); Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson(as). 11/86.

The first of these related sessions consists largely of the deutero-classical 'Bach Suite', a more gainly and authentic pastiche than anything of Jacques Loussier's, but with an awful predictability about it as well. 'City Lights', 'Perdido' and 'Caravan' are tacked on at the end to keep the strict-constructionists happy. Better on harpsichord? Time After Time restores the balance considerably. An original 'Love Ballade' revives Peterson's reputation as a melodist, and the closing 'On The Trail' allays any doubts about failing stamina. The material with Edison and Vinson fails to live up to past encounters with the trumpeter, and there are odd occasions when Vinson seems to get in the way. It is, though, a hard session to fault on any more serious grounds, and the 'Stuffy' and 'Satin Doll' workouts are top class.

 Oscar Peterson Plays Duke Ellington Pablo 2310966 As above. 67–86.

Apart from the inclusion of 'The Lady Of The Lavender Mist', a real Ellington obscurity, the material here is quite predictable. Oscar's interest in Duke's music for piano was scarcely a surprise, and Pablo had plenty to trawl for this elegant compilation. The tracks also include items written by Strayhorn and Mercer but, given the quality of the playing and the authority with which Oscar approaches the Ellington songbook, no one is going to quibble about copyrights.

 Piano Moods: The Very Best Of Oscar Peterson Verve 557462 2CD Peterson; Milt Jackson(vib); Ray Brown, Sam Jones, Jiri [George] Mraz(b); Bobby Durham, Gene Gammage, Louis Hayes, Ray Price, Ed Thigpen(d). VARIOUS DATES.

An impeccable 33-track compilation, questionable only for the absence of anything with guitarists Ellis or Kessel, but good enough on its own terms to overcome any quibbles or cavils. Piano jazz of the very highest order. Strongly recommended, even if you have most of the constituent records.

(*) Live At The Blue Note /  Saturday Night At The Blue Note /  At The Blue Note: Last Call /  Encore At The Blue Note / * The Legendary Live At The Blue Note Telarc CD 83304 / CD 83306 / CD 83314 / CD 83356 / CD 8617 4CD Peterson; Herb Ellis(g); Ray Brown(b); Bobby Durham(d). 3/90.

Whatever stiffness has crept into Peterson's fingers over the last few years has served only to increase the feeling he injects into his playing. It's hard to relate 'Peace For South Africa' on the first volume to the torrents of sound he conjured up in his big-hall Pablo days. This is quieter, more intimate and more thoughtful, and the ballad medley at its centre shows genuine melodic inventiveness. A must for Peterson fans, and 'Honeysuckle Rose' offers a good – albeit second-gear – impression of the Tatum-derived technique which overlaid his earlier commitment to Nat Cole..

The second volume was recorded the following night. It's a more varied, less familiar programme, but the playing is pretty much by the numbers. The 'final' visit and the almost inevitable Encore are even more subdued and formal. The elegance of Peterson's segues begins to pall long before the end. Fans will value 'It Never Entered My Mind' on the last but one, but more casual purchasers might want to plump for the first volume and leave it at that, even if it means missing the Encore performance of 'I Wished On The Moon' which, though brief, is exquisite.

(*) The More I See You Telarc CD 83370 Peterson; Clark Terry(t, flhn); Benny Carter(as); Lorne Lofsky(g); Ray Brown(b); Lewis Nash(d). 1/95.

Leaving aside the guitarist and the drummer, who are mere boys, the collective age here is 295. That's a lot of jazz experience to squeeze onto one disc. Peterson was still battling his way back to health and playing at this time, and the presence of even-older men must have been some sort of stimulus to fold up his bed and play. There are some extraordinary moments, as when Terry duets with himself, trumpet and flugelhorn in opposite hands, in an episode from Ferde Grofé's Grand Canyon Suite, and the interplay between Peterson and Brown on 'In A Mellow Tone', but it's hard to make invidious comparisons. Lofsky is a young Canadian guitarist who has been generously sponsored by Oscar over the last few years. This was a summit conference, and while there is a certain amount of polite jockeying (these are not small egos on display), most of it is generously good-natured and no one can question the veracity of the music played. That it should have followed so swiftly on the heels of serious illness just makes it more special.

 An Oscar Peterson Christmas Telarc 33372 Peterson; Jack Schantz(flhn); Dave Samuels(vib); Lorne Lofsky(b); Dave Young(b); Jerry Fuller(d). 1–7/95.

Tommy Smith's too thin, Wynton Marsalis too prickly. White beard notwithstanding, no jazz musician is closer to the physical form and smiling character of St Nicholas than Oscar Peterson. Christmas discs are always a bit of an enigma and something of an embarrassment. Do you only play them once a year, or do you stick them on ironically during a heatwave? Oscar's is predictably genial and, equally predictable, brilliantly done. He was still in convalescence after suffering that alarming stroke and the pace and articulation aren't as demanding as they once were, but that is not to say that these 14 holiday tunes aren't completely musical and entertaining. The orchestral accompaniment isn't too intrusive and the band is absolutely up to the mark, with some nice horn features and a guest spot by vibist Samuels. Our favourite? The relatively little-known 'What Child Is This?'

(*) Oscar Peterson Meets Roy Hargrove And Ralph Moore Telarc 83399 Peterson; Roy Hargrove(t); Ralph Moore(ts); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Lewis Nash(d). 96.

Moore has previously guested as 'fourth leg' to the Ray Brown trio, and though Telarc artist Brown isn't present on this occasion (we gather he was touring), it's a further chance to hear Peterson once again in the company of the big Viking who anchored his band for so many years. The two hornmen occupy a good deal of the foreground, perhaps still compensating a little for Oscar's post-stroke change of pace. Hargrove isn't articulating at his best and a couple of times on 'My Foolish Heart' drifts perilously close to playing flat. 'Here's That Rainy Day' conjures up an extraordinary range of ghosts, from Miles to Bill Evans, and Oscar seems to quote someone's idea, some half-remembered phrase, in the middle of his statement. A lovely album.

(*) Oscar & Benny Telarc 83406 Peterson; Benny Green(p); Ray Brown(b); Greg Hutchinson(d). 97.

Old cats teach young cats how it's done. This was, in effect, Oscar guesting with the current Ray Brown trio, and the two seniors steal the show in almost every department. There's never been any doubt that Benny Green learned a good deal from Peterson (and more directly from Peterson than from his sources, as is often suggested) and here there are moments when you might almost be listening to overdubs of the old man. Brown's huge, emphatic tone and crisp high-note runs are a perfect complement and the rhythmic profile is so full that there isn't much for Hutchinson, one of the best young mainstreamers on the scene at the moment, to do with his time, other than keep it. 'Scrapple From The Apple' is the standout track, confirming that Oscar is back from his brush with the Reaper and playing as well as ever. That doesn't necessarily mean as fast or as fluently, but with bags of feeling, which was the only question mark over him in the past.

 Oscar In Paris Telarc 83414 2CD Peterson; Lorne Lofsky(g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Martin Drew(d). 97.

Back to business. Recorded live at the Salle Pleyel, on a piano that classical players purr over. Good to hear the effortlessly swinging Martin Drew bring his very distinctive touch to the group. He and NHØP have always performed well together and with the addition of an in-form Lofsky, whose career seems to be taking off, they create a well-balanced group performance. The emphasis is still on ensembles and there are a couple of points when Oscar sounds tired and lacklustre. Generally, though, he is playing with precision and formidable hand-speed.

(*) A Summer Night In Munich Telarc 83450 Peterson; Ulf Wakenius(g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Martin Drew(d). 7/98.

Oscar rather tastelessly described this as his 'NATO Quartet'. The actual performances are a good deal more harmonious than that antagonistic title suggests and the latter-day versions of things like 'Nigerian Marketplace', 'Hymn To Freedom' and 'When Summer Comes' are very good. Wakenius fills the shoes of Ellis and Kessel very well indeed, and it would have been interesting to hear piano and guitar duet more spaciously. Drummer Martin Drew takes a well-earned solo on the closing 'Sushi'.

() The Very Tall Band Live At The Blue Note / () What's Up! Telarc 83443 Peterson; Milt Jackson(vib); Ray Brown(b); Karriem Riggins(d). 11 & 12/98.

Almost four decades after he recorded Very Tall, Oscar, Milt and Ray (who was short) met up again for an old pals night at the Blue Note, which was becoming Oscar's second home. Peterson's technique is still far from being as florid and fiery-paced as it used to be, but he retains his ability to communicate a melody and to invest tunes as various as 'I Remember Clifford' and 'Nature Boy' with his unmistakable character. As if making up for his shorter stature, Brown is the hero of the session, claiming a wonderful bass solo medley which doesn't pall at seven and a half minutes and playing a wonderful introduction to 'Blues For Jr'. Milt Jackson's health was causing serious concern at the time and he sounds unusually inward and clenched, rarely cutting loose with those long, rippling, piano-like lines. Drummer Karriem Riggins comes on for the closing 'Caravan' and brings a thoroughly satisfying record to an appropriate climax. The second disc doesn't repeat any of the material and might even be the better record, with 'Squatty Roo' and Pres's 'Ad Lib Blues' both highlights.

(*) A Night In Vienna Verve 000300309 DVD Peterson; Ulf Wakenius(g); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen(b); Martin Drew(d). 11/03.

Inevitably perhaps, Peterson's post-stroke frailty is more obvious when one can watch him play. Even though he had made a good enough recovery to tackle a demanding session like this live concert at the Musikverein, his left side looks stilled and inactive in comparison to former years, and Wakenius and NHØP (who died prematurely not long after) have to work harder than usual to fill in the harmonies. It's a happy enough occasion, though, and the mostly original material is briskly done. There are additional elements, including a life-and-times session and an interesting insight into Bösendorfer pianos, a puff, naturally, but worth watching once at least.

Also, in brief:

(*) Piano Power Proper PROPERBOX94 4CD. 4/45–11/54.

A great introduction to the early years.

 A Jazz Odyssey Verve 589 780 2. 50–70.

In 2002, Oscar published his autobiography, A Jazz Odyssey. This is the aural equivalent, a fairly predictable but none the less entertaining trawl through the Verve catalogue.

 The Song Is You: Best Of The Verve Songbooks Verve 531558-2 2CD. 52, 53, 54, 59.

An absolute joy and delight, either as an introduction to the work or as a spare copy.

 1953 Live Jazz Band 2111. 53.

Not strictly a Peterson album since the trio was opening for the Buddy DeFranco group at the Blue Note in Chicago and are only featured on two short sets.

(*) The Will To Swing Verve 847203-2. 54–71.

Another compilation drawn from Verve's vast holding of Oscar material. This is a good one.

(*) The Ultimate Oscar Peterson Verve 539786-2. 8/56–8/64.

A selection by old colleague Ray Brown. Nicely unpredictable.

 Paris Jazz Concert Malaco Jazz 1208. 61–69.

The title is misleading because this isn't a tape of a single concert but of a sequence of Paris appearances in the '60s.

() Immortal Concerts, Parts 1 & 2 Giants Of Jazz 32032 / 32042. 64.

Poor recordings, but fine performances from the Ray Brown (b)/Ed Thigpen (d) trio.

 With Respect To Nat Verve 557486-2. 65.
Nat Cole was a profound influence. This is also a declaration of independence. Nice arrangements by Manny Albam.

(*) History Of An Artist /  ... Volume 2 Pablo 2625702 2CD / 286529 2CD. 12/72–79.
The original double-LP of History Of An Artist served notice of what would amount to a fine comeback on record during the '70s. Some great music here.

 A Royal Wedding Suite Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 971. 81.
Cynics have been known to ask if a 'Royal Divorce Suite' was ever written. A great anglophile, Oscar obviously wrote this from the heart, but it's not one of his happier moments.

() The Composer Pablo CD 2130 970 2. VARIOUS DATES.
Self-explanatory, but slightly beside the point. Selections from Royal Wedding and Bach Suite, including 'Lady Di's Waltz'. Better things from In Russia.

 Live At The Barbican BBC 7001. 84.
NHØP almost steals the show on this excellent London live trio. Includes a useful interview with Oscar.

 Oscar's Ballads Telarc 83504. 90–00.
A decade's worth of Peterson at his most expressive.

 Side By Side Telarc 83341. 94.
Jazz-meets-classical encounters rarely work, but Itzhak Perlman (vn) has a mischievous streak.

 Marian McPartland's Piano Jazz The Jazz Alliance 12033. 96.
A wonderful souvenir of Oscar's appearance on fellow pianist McPartland's insightful NPR series, where she spoke to other practitioners about the piano's role in jazz.

 A Tribute To Oscar Peterson: Live At Town Hall Telarc 83401 2CD. 97.
Few people in the business are regarded with such genuine affection as Oscar Peterson. Everyone showed up, from Clark Terry (t) to Shirley Horn and Manhattan Transfer (v).

 Trail Of Dreams – A Canadian Suite Telarc 83500. 4/00.
Grandiose and left largely to Michael Legrand's string orchestra. A personal statement but an uninvolving listen.

Ralph Peterson (born 1962)

DRUMS, TRUMPET

He emerged as one of the busiest and most inventive drummers on the New York scene of the '80s. His regular group is known as The Fo'tet.

 The Reclamation Project / (*) The Fo'tet Plays Monk
Evidence 22113-2 / 22174-2 Peterson; Steve Wilson(ss); Bryan Carrott(vib); Belden Bullock(b). 11/94; 11–12/95.
A fireball of energy on any recording, Peterson isn't so much noisy as determined to make something happen from the kit at every moment in the music. There are several earlier Blue Note albums in the deletions file, but Peterson then began recording for Evidence. Reclamation Project takes the sombre theme of recovery from substance abuse and turns it into a thematic thread. Peterson is back in his more demanding groove here, delivering tunes in 9/8 and 14/8, setting Carrott and Wilson hugely difficult rhythmic tasks as improvisers –, and somehow making it click. His innate sense of swing sees him through even the most potentially awkward situations. That said, this is a dark and sometimes introverted record, and some may find it hard to find a way inside.

The Fo'tet Plays Monk is a more prosaic project, but Peterson was clearly keen to take this out of the normal tribute furrow. Of the 11 tunes, only 'Epistrophy' and 'Well You Needn't' are obvious. Songo and second-line rhythms add some multicultural spice, and the sheer sizzle of the playing is exciting: Wilson's serpentine playing is worth a close listen, but the star improviser is Carrott, who seems as imaginatively at home in these settings as Milt Jackson was with Monk himself. 'Played Twice', 'Light Blue' and 'Brilliant Corners' are peerless. Only the two originals, one apiece by the leader and Carrott, seem less than absorbing.

(*) Back To Stay Sirocco SJJ 1006 Peterson; Ralph Bowen(ss); Michael Brecker(ts); Bryan Carrott(vib, mar); Belden Bullock(b). 5–6/99.
A new edition of the band (Brecker plays only a cameo role), but the leader's energy remains unstinting, the tunes are full of detail, and Carrott, by now almost as important to this group as Peterson, blends solo and ensemble roles with unassuming panache. The instrumentation continues to offer a strikingly different sonic palette, and the approach to repertory pieces such as 'Soul Eyes' and 'Miles' Mode' is similarly unclichéd.

 Triangular 2 Sirocco SJL 1009 Peterson; David Kikoski(p); Gerald Cannon(b). 12/99.

(*) The Art Of War Criss Cross 1206 Peterson; Jeremy Pelt(t, flhn); Jimmy Greene(ss, ts); Orrin Evans(p); Eric Revis(b). 1/01.
If you're not prepared to play your socks off when Peterson's on the stand, you'll be simply blown away. That point comes across as strongly as ever on these three releases. Kikoski's not a player to be intimidated and he's a pianist who manages to impose a kind of calm even in the midst of heated music: on the slightly reharmonized 'Night And Day' he manages to keep the song sounding songful, even while the drums are pushing, shoving and goading all the way. Cannon is an unobtrusive presence whose lines look for simplicity. There are times when you want to hear Peterson cool off and just swing a little less ingeniously. Not the greatest set these men have been involved with, but plenty to enjoy.

The Art Of War offers a more straightforward group than The Fo'tet and the programme alternates fast, hard-hitting swingers and more temperate pieces, though as ever the drummer stokes things up throughout. It helps that he has soloists as exciting as Pelt and Greene out front. Not everything they play comes off, but they don't mind being impolite and both men get off some daredevil moves. Evans, as he is on his own records, is a creative and dynamic fulcrum. Hot and imposing music.

(*) The Fo'tet Augmented Criss Cross 1255 Peterson; Don Byron(cl, bcl); Bryan Carrott(vib); Belden Bullock(b); Eguie Castrillo(perc). 12/03.
His 17th album as leader – which shows how many await reclamation – is as chipper and outgoing as ever. Original Fo'tet man Don Byron returns to the fold and plays his most straightforward and agile music, Strayhorn's 'Johnny Come Lately' suiting him particularly well. The paradox of the group continues to be the way its almost folksy timbres are supercharged by Peterson's drumming, and he's brought in an Afro-Cuban feel for the first time, with Petrillo sitting in on two tracks. But this is American jazz through and through.

Also, in brief:

(*) Subliminal Seduction Criss Cross 1225. 12/01.
Another fine outing for the Art Of War quintet.

 Tests Of Time Criss Cross 1240. 12/02. A typical Peterson date, torrential but not unsubtle. His own 'Ballad For Queen Tiye' and Hubbard's 'Neo Terra' are outstanding.

Michel Petrucciani (1962–99)

PIANO

Born in Montpellier, he played in his father's band and began recording after moving to Paris, aged 17. Moved to the USA in 1982. A diminutive man handicapped by an obscure bone disease, he triumphed over disability and became immensely popular in a romantic post-bop style.

(*) Days Of Wine And Roses Owl 548288-2 2CD Petrucciani; Lee Konitz(as); Robin McClure(b); Jean-François Jenny-Clark(b); Aldo Romano(d). 4/81–1/85.
 100 Hearts Blue Note 538329-2 Petrucciani (p solo). 83.
(*) Live At The Village Vanguard Blue Note 540382-2 Petrucciani; Palle Danielsson(b); Eliot Zigmund(d). 3/84.
There's a freshness and quicksilver virtuosity about Michel Petrucciani's early records which is entirely captivating. He made six albums for the independent Owl Label (since then acquired by the Universal Group) and Days Of Wine And Roses compiles a double CD from this material. Some of the others have reappeared and are listed below (see 'in brief'). These sessions feel like his most European music; originals such as 'Eugenia' and 'Mike Pee' combine his brightness of touch with a more reflective feel in which the overall choice of tracks trades heavily. A contrast to the sometimes forced ebullience of his later music.

Two of his best discs, originally on Concord, have been reissued by Blue Note. 100 Hearts, with its almost delirious title-tune, established Petrucciani as one of the great romantic virtuosos in the jazz of his time, and more than two decades later it still sounds wonderfully fresh and alive. The live set from the Vanguard sparkles too, whether on the Bill Evans favourite 'Nardis' or Michel's own 'Three Forgotten Magic Words'.

 Pianism Blue Note 746295-2 Petrucciani; Palle Danielsson(b); Eliot Zigmund(d). 12/85.
(*) Power Of Three Blue Note 846427-2 Petrucciani; Wayne Shorter(ss, ts); Jim Hall(g). 7/86.
 Michel Plays Petrucciani Blue Note 848679-2 Petrucciani; John Abercrombie(g); Gary Peacock, Eddie Gomez(b); Roy Haynes, Al Foster(d); Steve Thornton(perc). 9–12/87.
Petrucciani's first three albums for Blue Note provided a variety of challenges. Pianism is another excellent batch of six workouts by the trio who made the earlier live album, and if Zigmund and Danielsson sometimes sound a little underwhelming, that's partly due to the leader's brimming improvisations. Power Of Three is a slightly fragmented but absorbing concert meeting of three masters, skittish on 'Bimini' and solemnly appealing on 'In A Sentimental Mood'.

Plays Petrucciani is an all-original set which lines the pianist up against two magisterial rhythm sections, with Abercrombie adding some spruce counterpoint to two pieces. The smart hooks of 'She Did It Again' suggest that the pianist would have had a good living as a pop writer if he had decided to quit the piano, but the more considered pieces show no drop in imagination, even if some of the themes seem to be curtailed before the improvisations really start moving.

 Live Blue Note 780589-2 Petrucciani; Adam Holzman(ky); Steve Logan(b); Victor Jones(d); Abdou M'Boup(perc). 11/91.
 Promenade With Duke Blue Note 780590-2 Petrucciani (p solo). N.D.
 Marvellous Dreyfus FDM 36564-2 Petrucciani; Dave Holland(b); Tony Williams(d); Graffiti String Quartet. N.D.
The 1991 live album documents Petrucciani's 'fusion' band – not really any kind of jazz-rock, more a sitting of his famous virtuosity inside stiffer beats, with the dubious gratification of Holzman's synthesizer colourings. 'Miles Davis Licks' opens with boogie figures, then turns into a clever steal of some of the later Davis clichés. The sound of the band feels more dated than the rest of Michel's music, and the best moments come when the others stay as far in the background as possible, as in the elegant reading of 'Estate'.

Michel's promenade is more with Strayhorn and Petrucciani than with Ellington. Beautifully played and recorded, but it's rather sombre after the elated feel of his earlier sessions. Although some of his other Blue Note albums have disappeared, there is a French edition which boxes all seven of them together, but availability is somewhat limited.

Marvellous matches him with the formidable team of Holland and Williams, who play up the music's dramatic qualities to the hilt: a graceful tune like the 3/4 'Even Mice Dance' gets thumped open by Williams's awesome drumming. The pianist revels in the situation, though, and produces some of his most joyful playing. Yet it hardly squares with the string quartet parts, arranged by Petrucciani but more of a distraction than an integral part of such fierce playing.

(*) Au Théâtre Des Champs-Élysées Dreyfus FDM 36570-2 2CD Petrucciani (p solo). 11/94.
The opening 'Medley Of My Favorite Songs' might be a quintessential Petrucciani performance, 40 unbroken minutes of a piano master in full flow, lightning flashes of humour illuminating an otherwise seamless sequence. Maybe he never quite recaptured the effortless excitement of the early discs, and to that extent the energy of his playing is mitigated somewhat by his sense of proportion; but there's a great deal to enjoy across these two discs: a lovely, thoughtful 'Night Sun In Blois', a finger-busting Monk medley, and a beautifully distilled 'Besame Mucho' to close on.

 Both Worlds Dreyfus FDM 36590-2 Petrucciani; Flavio Boltro(t); Bob Brookmeyer(vtb); Stefano Di Battista(ts, ss); Anthony Jackson(b); Steve Gadd(d). 96.
Almost a complete departure from his other work, this rather mysteriously seemed to set out to tame Petrucciani by placing him squarely in a band format, where he flourishes only intermittently as a soloist, and even then without his usual brio. He wrote all nine tunes but the arrangements are all Brookmeyer's, who brings his trademark quirks to a nevertheless very interesting line-up. The soloists are all strong enough, and there's a particularly appealing piano/soprano duet on 'Petite Louise', yet this could all use a shot of Michel letting go.

(*) Concerts Inédits Dreyfus FDM 36607-2 3CD Petrucciani; Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen, Louis Petrucciani(b); Lenny White(d). 7/93–8/94.
Petrucciani's passing robbed jazz of one of its most charismatic spirits, especially in performance, and these sets are reminders of how much an audience would respond to him. The three-disc set offers him in solo, duo and trio settings: it's somewhat patchy, since the solo disc has a rather hard and unattractive piano sound, and the trio set (with Louis Petrucciani and White, cut at a Japanese concert) doesn't entirely benefit from the drummer's energies. But the duo record with NHØP is a delight, two virtuosos at the top of their game without overpowering the listeners with how much they can play.

CORE COLLECTION

 Solo Live / * The Complete Concert In Germany
Dreyfus FDM 36597-2 / 36906 2CD Petrucciani (p solo). 2/97.
Solo Live* is a marvellous Frankfurt concert recording. Michel warms up with a sequence of shorter pieces before stretching out on 'Trilogy In Blois' and 'Caravan'. He was always rethinking material: the 'Besame Mucho' here is entirely different from the treatment on Concerts Inédits. This is one occasion where more very definitely is more. The two-CD set is a glorious bonus. The final 'She Did It Again'/'Take The "A" Train' medley is showstopping, but each note seems to matter as part of the flow. This great communicator is sorely missed.

 Trio In Tokyo Dreyfus FDM 36605 Petrucciani; Anthony Jackson(b); Steve Gadd(d). 11/97.
And a sufficiently good communicator surely not to need the pumped-up fusion beats of this curious trio. Gadd's great in his place, but his place certainly isn't alongside someone of Petrucciani's romantic disposition. It's an odd, awkward set, undoubtedly exciting, but rarely satisfying.

Also, in brief:

 Trio /  Oracle's Destiny / () Notes'n'Notes / () Cold Blues Owl 79228 / 982458 / 984755 / 9824953. 1/85.
The early discs for Owl move steadily from precocious virtuosity at 18 to the kind of romantic expressionism that attracted him to Blue Note and won him an international audience. These have all recently reappeared.

Oscar Pettiford (1922–60)

BASS, CELLO

His playing career began in a family orchestra, under the tutelage of his father. His wonderfully propulsive bass-playing marks a middle point between Blanton and Mingus, whose visionary genius and volcanic temperament he shared. He spent his last years in European exile.

 The New Oscar Pettiford Sextet Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1926 2 Pettiford; Red Rodney(t); Earl Swope(tb); Julius Watkins(frhn); Al Cohn, Phil Urso(ts); Serge Chaloff(bs); Walter Bishop, Barbara Carroll, Jan Johansson(p); Terry Gibbs, Louis Hjulmand(vib); Charles Mingus(b); Denzil Best, Percy Brice(d). 3/49–12/53.
 Oscar Pettiford 1951–1954 Classics 1409 Pettiford; Howard McGhee(t); Kai Winding(tb); Julius Watkins(frhn); Phil Urso(ts); Joe Roland(vib); Kenny Drew, Billy Taylor, Henri Renaud, Walter Bishop(p); Tal Farlow(g); Harry Babasin(clo); Tommy Potter, Joe Comfort(b); Art Taylor, Charlie Smith, Alvin Stoller, Percy Brice, Max Roach(d). 4/51–3/54.
 In A Cello Mood Fresh Sound FSRCD 452 As above, except omit McGhee, Winding, Roland, Potter, Roach; add Charlie Rouse(ts); Arnold Ross, Duke Jordan(p); Charles Mingus(b); Ron Jefferson(d). 52–54.
Pettiford's facility on the cello is unparalleled in jazz, even by such gifted doublers as Ron Carter, and the freedom and fluency of his solo line on 'Pendulum At Falcon's Lair' is genuinely exhilarating. Oscar's placing of notes, his unfailing harmonic awareness and sheer musicality will win over all but the hardest-hearted sceptics. Oscar switches to bass for the lovely 'Tamalpais Love Song', a stately and rather mysterious composition on which what would have been the cello part is taken by french horn. 'Low And Behold' and the boppish 'Jack The Fieldstalker' are both virtuosic displays, but the album is leavened by a bright and pungent version of Quincy Jones's 'Stockholm Sweet'nin''. Two of the tracks feature Louis Hjulmand on vibes and Jan Johansson on piano; Hjulmand's originals, 'Fru Buel' and 'I Succumb To Temptation', are not the strongest things on the record and were excluded from the original Debut Records 10-inch release. The CD also includes four tracks recorded in 1949 under the leadership of Serge Chaloff and arranged by Shorty Rogers.

The Classics issue duplicates only five of the 1953 tracks with the OJC. The rest of it is an intriguing bunch of bits and pieces. There are a pair of titles made for Mercer in 1951, with Howard McGhee out front; four titles by a quartet, with Billy Taylor, Mingus and Charlie Smith, cut for Royal Roost; and four from an Imperial EP where Pettiford duets with Harry Babasin. On all of these tracks Pettiford is the lead voice and makes light of his unlikely role. A final set of four tracks, made for the French Swing label, finds him in a more conventional bop group with Winding, Cohn and Henri Renaud. The earlier tracks have a lot of surface noise, but the music endures.

The Fresh Sound of the cello material is now presented in an elegant digipack. There is no straight overlap with the chronological Classics, and no particular advantage in sound, so the final choice may be down to individual preferences and the presence of Mingus on one of the sessions may sway the decision. 'Tricotism' is a classic composition and performance, though in terms of Pettiford the composer the other Fresh Sound and the Lone Hill compilation below are perhaps a more accurate reflection.

CORE COLLECTION

 Nonet & Octet 1954–55
Fresh Sound FSRCD 453 Pettiford; Donald Byrd, Ernie Royal, Clark Terry, Joe Wilder(t); Jimmy Cleveland, Bob Brookmeyer(tb); Gigi Gryce, Dave Schildkraut (as); Jimmy Hamilton(cl, ts); Jerome Richardson(ts, f); Danny Bank(bs); Don Abney, Joe Earl Knight(p); Osie Johnson(d). 54–55.
 Complete Big Band Studio Recordings
Lone Hill LHJ 10168 Pettiford; Ray Copeland, Art Farmer, Ernie Royal(t); Jimmy Cleveland, Al Grey(tb); Julius Watkins, David Amram(frhn); Gigi Gryce(as); Benny Golson, Jerome Richardson, Lucky Thompson(ts); Danny Bank, David Kurtzer, Sahib Shihab(bs); Tommy Flanagan, Dick Katz(p); Osie Johnson(d). 56–57.
The octet and nonet performances and the big-band ABC recordings offer the best evidence for the suggestion that Pettiford's experiments might even have eclipsed Mingus's, had he lived long enough to see them through. The smaller groups are elegance itself, coolly turbulent, if such a thing is possible, and packed with subtle musical ideas. Pettiford helms with a brooding authority, his personal sound always evident, his compositional ideas ever more logical when heard in bulk.

'Bohemia After Dark' and the little-known 'Kamman's A-Comin" are classic modern performances, while among the big-band sides 'The Pendulum At Falcon's Lair' and 'The Gentle Art Of Love' easily deserve to be discussed in the same breath as some of Mingus's greatest performances. Gryce's 'Nica's Tempo' and Golson's 'I Remember Clifford' (the latter a bonus CD track) are classic versions. The sound on these isn't perfect but that's rendered largely meaningless by the superb music. These belong in every modern collection.

Barre Phillips (born 1934)

DOUBLE BASS, ELECTRONICS

Inspired by Ornette Coleman, the San Fransciscan moved east in 1962, thence to Europe. His Journal Violone was the first-ever solo bass record.

* Mountainscapes ECM 843167-2 Phillips; John Surman(bs, ss, bcl, syn); John Abercrombie(g); Dieter Feichtner(syn); Stu Martin(d). 3/76.
* Three Day Moon ECM 847326-2 Phillips; Terje Rypdal(g, g syn, org); Dieter Feichtner(syn); Trilok Gurtu(perc). 3/78.
 Journal Violone II ECM 847328-2 Phillips; John Surman(ss, bs, bcl, syn); Aina Kemanis(v). 6/79.
(*) Camouflage Victo 08 Phillips (solo). 5/89.
 Aquarian Rain ECM 511513-2 Phillips; Alain Joule(perc). 5/91.
Phillips's first album of solo bass improvisations was originally intended as material for an electronic score, but composer Max Schubel thought the bass parts stood more than adequately on their own. Nearly 25 years later, Phillips produced an album which does make significant use of electronic processing of instrumental performance. The effect suggests that Schubel's instincts were sound, for Aquarian Rain is the most diffuse and least focused album the bassist has released. Phillips's own description of the process of 'collective composition', by which tapes were sent back and forth between his French home in Puget-Ville and the Studio Grame in Lyon where Jean-François Estager and James Giroudon worked the filters and gates, may have yielded exemplary music for live performance (a suite called 'Brick On Brick' was created, incorporating pieces like 'Inbetween I And E' and 'Promenade De Mémoire'), but it sounds rather stilted and contrived when digitalized and fixed. Enthusiasts for the bassist's work will find much of value but, compared to the duos with Guy, these interchanges with percussionist Joule lack even that tiny spark of electricity which rescues processed improvisation of this sort from becoming acoustic set-dressing.

It's galling to note that Phillips's very best record is still out of the ECM catalogue. The solo Call Me When You Get There from 1983, with its lyrical journeyings and unfussy philosophical musings, covers similar musical territory to the much earlier but almost equally fine Mountainscapes, a suite of subliminally interrelated pieces which demonstrate the astonishing transformations visited on basic musical perspectives by very slight changes in the angle of vision. Almost all of Phillips's output operates in that way. Whatever is being hidden on the solo Camouflage, it can scarcely be the artist himself. Recorded in intimate close-up, one can almost hear the bassist thinking as he investigates the sometimes fugitive tonalities of his instrument. Something of the same relationship between Call Me and Mountainscapes applies between Camouflage and Journal Violone II. The 1979 trio again makes use of Surman's melancholy soliloquizing, but in a rather more colouristic way that is reminiscent of Three Day Moon. This is Phillips's most accessible work on record but is by no means unrepresentative. Rypdal is an intelligent partner and Feichtner adds (as he had on Mountainscapes) some highly individual flourishes. One questions Gurtu's role, though: too effusive, surely, for this selfless idiom.

Looking at Phillips's career only in the context of his recent solo work or of his improvisational activities with Derek Bailey's Company collective tends to cast it as something rarefied and dauntingly inward of gaze but it's as well to remember that Phillips was Archie Shepp's bass-player at the 1965 Newport Festival and that, with Surman and the late Stu Martin, also on Mountainscapes, he was a member of The Trio, one of the most dynamic free-jazz units of the late '60s. There is a dancer's grace and concentration in Phillips's playing, an internal balance and rhythm that, as on Camouflage's 'You And Me', make it virtually impossible to separate man and instrument.

 Trignition Nine Winds 1086 Phillips; Vinny Golia(reeds); Bertram Turetzky(b). 98.
A delightful mésalliance. Golia is a remarkable player, who seems at ease with just about every member of the reed family. However, one wonders whether he's quite up to the task of playing with two such thoughtful and idiosyncratic bassists. Golia overlays some stunning bass work with some rather mundane, often chordally inspired improvisation. Phillips and Turetzky are quite easy to separate, both in stereo terms and in sound and basic technique, and their interplay is consistently fascinating.

* Journal Violone 9 Emouvance emv 1015 Phillips (b solo). 3/00.
This has now become one of the most important solo instrumental recording projects of recent years. It will be difficult for anyone to reconstruct the progress of Phillips's engagement with his bass, but each record is self-sufficient, and this one is a quiet masterpiece. One does not listen to it for 'technique' but purely for the musical logic and occasional delightful illogic that Phillips applies. He begins, without the bow, on 'Time, Our Time', a 17-minute tour de force that should whet appetites for the rest of the record. 'Windwalk' is the other long piece, though it's the shorter studies that thereafter command attention, particularly 'Dear Doctor' and the two shortest pieces, 'J. B. 's Present' and 'Nellie's Fire'.

* After You've Gone Victo 91 Phillips; Joëlle Léandre, William Parker, Tetsu Saitoh(b). 7/03.
A formidable agglomeration of contemporary bass-players, convened in honour of the late Peter Kowald. The playing is exceptionally intense, featuring all four players most of the time, which means that some of the detail is inseparable, unless you're already very familiar with the individual idioms. Most of the tracks are longer than ten minutes. 'Whoop Yer Tal' is incredibly detailed and virtuosic; by contrast, 'P. S. – Te Queremos' is a mournful threnody to the departed bass master. A stunning performance by any standard and a feast for bass aficionados.

Also, in brief:

(*) Uzu PSF CD 75. 96.
With Yoshizawa Motoharu on 'homemade electric vertical five string bass'; vivid and arresting.

 Jazzd'aia Bleu Regard 1956. 98.
A delightful curiosity, with guitar and percussion.

 Play 'Em As They Fall Eyewill SKCY1002. 99.
A duet with guitarist Kazuo Imai of the Taj Mahal Travellers.

Flip Phillips (1915–2001)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Born in Brooklyn, Joseph Phillips had a rather uneventful time in big bands, before joining Woody Herman in 1944. He then became closely identified with Jazz At The Philharmonic, jousting in an old-fashioned style far removed from the Lester Young consensus. From 1960 he was living and working outside music in Florida, although he still played gigs.

 Crazy 'Bout Flip Ocium OCM 0014 Phillips; Howard McGhee, Billy Butterfield(t); John D'Agostino, Buddy Morrow, Tommy Turk, Kai Winding, Bennie Green(tb); Sonny Criss, Pete Mondello(as); Hank Jones, Mickey Crane(p); Ray Brown, Sam Bruno(b); J. C. Heard, Shelly Manne, Max Roach, Jo Jones(d). 9/47–12/49.

(*) Flippin' The Blues Ocium 0011 Phillips; Harry Edison(t); Bill Harris(tb); Hank Jones, Dick Hyman, Lou Levy(p); Billy Bauer(g); Ray Brown, Gene Ramey, Jimmy Woode(b); Buddy Rich, Jo Jones, Joe McDonald(d). 12/49–8/51.

 Keep On Flippin' Ocium OCM 0003 Phillips; Allen Smith, Al Porcino, Charlie Shavers(t); Charlie Etter, Bill Harris, Bennie Green(tb); Jerome Richardson, Cecil Payne(bs); Richard Wyands, Mickey Crane, Oscar Peterson, Hank Jones(p); Freddie Green, Nick Esposito, Barney Kessel(g); Vernon Alley, Clyde Lombardi, Ray Brown(b); Earl Watkins, Max Roach, J. C. Heard, Alvin Stoller, Buddy Rich(d). 2–12/52.

Ocium's three discs wrap up most of Phillips's sessions for Clef/Verve during the period 1948–52. While he was best known for his Jazz At The Phil blowouts, Flip displays a much more amenable and classic manner on most of these tracks. He was perfectly at ease in hardcore bebop company – the very first date on Crazy 'Bout Flip pairs him with Howard McGhee, Sonny Criss pops up to blow a blazing solo on the slightly later 'Swingin' For Julie And Brownie' and his own 'Put That Back', aka 'Flip's Idea', is a typical bebop line – but he also cruises along in the company of such players as Billy Butterfield, Harry Edison and Charlie Shavers and plays ballads in the lustiest Hawkins manner. Everything is kept tight, punchy and short, although there is a jam on 'Perdido' from a JATP performance on the first disc. Of the three, we slightly prefer Flippin' The Blues since it pairs Flip with Bill Harris on ten titles.

 Spanish Eyes Candid CCD 71013 Phillips; Mickey Crane(p); Milt Hinton(b); Mousey Alexander(d). 8/75.

Flip made 'Spanish Eyes' his own, and lifted it away from mere kitsch. He does the same thing with 'Nancy' and even 'Jeanie', which gets a nice, bouncing read. The real hit of the record is the to-and-fro with The Judge on 'Nature Boy'. Worth having for that alone. The new edition has three alternatives, which are fun, particularly 'Fat Tessie's Ass'. A few nice touches on bass clarinet, as well, though it scarcely sounds different to his usual voice.

 Live At Beowulf: Arbors Historical Series, Volume 5 Arbors ARCD 19308 Phillips; Tom Howard(p); John Mason(b); Don MacLean(d). 12/77.

Phillips in semi-retirement in Florida, but still playing at local clubs like the Beowulf. The tone is laid-back and mellow, perhaps to protect tender chops but the slower, more sombre style suits a mood that's reinforced when Flip switches to bass clarinet for 'Chloe'. The material is nicely mixed, with 'Sweet And Lovely' and 'Body And Soul' matched at the other end of the spectrum by 'Christian Scientist' and 'Just A Closer Walk With Thee'. The group's OK, but for Howard's electric keyboard, which sounds cheap.

() The Claw Chiaroscuro CR(D) 314 Phillips; Clark Terry(t); Buddy Tate, Al Cohn, Scott Hamilton(ts); John Bunch(p); Chris Flory(g); Major Holley(b); Chuck Riggs(d). 10/86.

 Try A Little Tenderness Chiaroscuro CR(D) 321 Phillips; Dick Hyman(p); Howard Alden, Bucky Pizzarelli(g); Bob Haggart(b); Ronnie Traxler(d); strings. 6–7/92.

 At The Helm: Live At The 1993 Floating Jazz Festival Chiaroscuro 327 Phillips; Derek Smith(p); Bucky Pizzarelli(g); Milt Hinton(b); Ray Mosca(d). 11/93.

 Spanish Eyes; Live At The 1995 Floating Jazz Festival Chiaroscuro 344 Phillips; Derek Smith(p); Howard Alden(g); Milt Hinton(b); Joe Ascione(d). 11/95.

Flip is in good spirits for all these sessions for Chiaroscuro. The Claw is a tenors-all-out jam session on board the SS Norway during the 1986 Floating Jazz Festival: they didn't look too far afield for the material ('Topsy', 'Flying Home', and so forth) and in the end it sounds too much like a parade of tenor solos to make for a satisfying record. But Flip and Al Cohn especially come up with a few remarks that evade the rules of the tenor extravaganza. Phillips gets to make his strings album on Try A Little Tenderness and, with canny arrangements by Dick Hyman and the saxophonist in his ripest form, the music is sly enough to sidestep most of the clichés of the situation, or at least to make them enjoyable.

The 1993 record finds him back on the bill at Floating Jazz, gliding through his set the way he glides through his choruses. 'Poor Butterfly' and 'It's The Talk Of The Town' are majestic performances from the veteran. Easy to dismiss this and its 1995 successor as mere entertainment music. It's a good deal subtler than that, and while much of the showmanship comes from Hinton, Phillips has acquired an almost philosophical calm in later life which yields some quite profound statements. Try 'Flip's Dido' for that.

 Celebrates His 80th Birthday At The March Of Jazz 1995 Arbors ARCD 19281 Phillips; Randy Sandke(t); Carl Fontana(tb); Bob Wilber(ss); Phil Woods(as); Scott Hamilton(ts); Buddy DeFranco(cl); Dick Hyman, Derek Smith(p); Howard Alden, Billy Bauer, Herb Ellis(g); Bob Haggart, Milt Hinton, Sean Smith(b); Jake Hanna(d). 3/95.

A latter-day JATP situation for Flip, and the collective experience on the date is breathtaking. We reckon that these guys have made something like 5,000 recording dates between them. Flip doesn't quite have the shouting abandon of his pomp, and there are one or two mild articulation problems, but he romps through the material, including his own staples 'The Claw' and 'If I Had A Penny', with obvious gusto and enjoyment. Plenty of good spots from the birthday guests, but it's the old man's night out and they properly defer.

Also, in brief:

(*) Complete 1947–1951 Master Takes Definitive DRCD 11211 2CD. 47–51.

All the early stuff you might want, but the transfers are such it's like listening through a head cold.

 Swing Is The Thing! Verve 543477-2. 10/99.

Back at Verve with some young moderns – James Carter and Joe Lovano (ts), Benny Green (p), Christian McBride (b) – and enjoying himself.

Enrico Pieranunzi (born 1949)

PIANO

The Italian is an elegant performer and an often unexpected composer, a storyteller who very seldom lapses into abstraction. His piano style is a hybrid of Bill Evans and Herbie Hancock.

(*) Jazz Roads CAM 504162-2 Pieranunzi; Birch Johnson(tb); Riccardo del Fra, Marc Johnson(b); Giampaolo Ascolese, Roberto Gatto, Joey Baron(d). 80–01.
(*) Isis Soul Note 121021 Pieranunzi; Art Farmer(flhn); Massimo Urbani(as); Furio Di Castri(b); Roberto Gatto(d). 81.
 Deep Down Soul Note 121121 Pieranunzi; Marc Johnson(b); Joey Baron(d). 2/86.
(*) No Man's Land Soul Note 121221 Pieranunzi; Marc Johnson(b); Steve Houghton(d). 5/89.
 Seaward Soul Note 121272 Pieranunzi; Hein Van de Geyn(b); André Ceccarelli(d). 3/94.
 Flux And Change Soul Note 121242 Pieranunzi; Paul Motian(d). 95.

Pieranunzi is not an extravagant virtuoso: his self-effacing manner recalls something of Hancock, but he uses all the ground-breaking modern discoveries in modality, rhythm and the broadening of pianistic devices to his own ends. As with the Space Jazz trio, which he apparently leads with the bassist Enzo Pietropaoli, he is an exponent of post-modern jazz, sounding perfectly self-aware yet concerned to introduce elements of abstraction and emotional flow alike.

Jazz Roads reissues an early record, with an unexpected choice of Birch Johnson's trombone as lead voice and occasional synthesizer touches. It feels rather dated, and Johnson, while agile enough, doesn't have much to say. There's a bonus in the form of a new version of one of the compositions, 'From E To C', by the current trio with Johnson and Baron.

Seaward is perhaps the straightest blowing album of Pieranunzi's current catalogue and thus the most welcoming for listeners who don't know his work. There are a few originals on the set, but it is dominated by standards and jazz tunes: 'Stardust', 'I Hear A Rhapsody', Wayne Shorter's joyous 'Footprints'. Van de Geyn and Ceccarelli are a dream rhythm section, loose, disciplined and responsive.

Isis is transformed by the presence of Farmer and by a couple of gorgeous solos from the ill-fated Urbani, who provided Pieranunzi with a solo voice that chimes perfectly with his own. The duo album with Motian contains no fewer than 23 standard and original songs arranged into two long suites. It's a persuasive combination and is handled with imagination and skill.

() Un'Alba Dipinta Sui Muri / () Con Infinite Voci / (*) Canto Nascosto EGEA SCA 070 / 071 / 080 Pieranunzi (p solo). 7/98; 9/00.

These solo sets tend to follow the same pace and measured delivery; if one appeals, they all will. The task facing a pianist with such a nuanced touch is to introduce enough robustness to stop the music drifting into background pleasantries. That doesn't mean playing a stomp every now and again, which may be a relief to him; Enrico's unlikely to do a Jelly Roll Morton album any time soon and, indeed, there is scarcely anything here which hasn't come out of his own head. But 'Blu Laggiù', from Un'Alba Dipinta Sui Muri, is a fine example of how even a ruminative solo can generate its own kind of interior heat.

The first two discs were recorded at Umbria Jazz on the same day and clearly found Pieranunzi in his finest form. Canto Nascosto is a studio set which perhaps leans more heavily than usual on the pianist's classical manners; he played the solos on five different pianos (for annotators: two Steinways, a Borgato, a Fazioli and a Kawai) and the music room serenity is delightfully becalmed.

* Don't Forget The Poet Challenge 70065 Pieranunzi; Bert Joris(t, flhn); Stefano D'Anna(ss, ts); Hein Van de Geyn(b); Hans Van Oosterhout(d). 3/99.

This was the programme which confirmed the then 50-year-old Pieranunzi's international class. Had this record been released on ECM (the sound sometimes points in that direction) or Blue Note, its composer would immediately have been feted..

The title-piece is a delicate patchwork of thematic centres, almost as if it were based on fragmentary texts. 'Coralie' is a delightful waltz, a metre Pieranunzi greatly favours. He's fortunate in his sidemen here. Joris sometimes overstates a very simple case, but when he switches to flugelhorn, on 'Coralie' and against D'Anna's tenor, and on 'With My Heart In A Song', he has a warm authority that brings out the best in Pieranunzi's beautifully written themes.

 Infant Eyes: Plays The Music Of Wayne Shorter /  Improvised Forms For Trio Challenge CHR 70083 / 75032 Pieranunzi; Hein Van de Geyn(b); Hans Van Oosterhout(d). 2/00.
 Racconti Mediterranei EGEA SCA 078 Pieranunzi; Gabriele Mirabassi(cl); Marc Johnson(b). 2/00.

The Shorter record is hit and miss. Pieranunzi, surprisingly, does best by the more forceful pieces, such as 'E.S.P.' and 'Deluge', which the trio open out with a lusty enjoyment. 'Nefertiti' is mined for its sombre lyricism, but a couple of the slower pieces feel merely droopy. The other record with the same trio is rather better, but sounds, as it's maybe intended to, more like an abstract exercise. Ironically a blend of the two albums would be just about right.

With Mirabassi and Johnson, Pieranunzi revisits some of the material from the solo records as well as some new pieces. There are times, again, when this sounds more like a chamber recital than any kind of jazz record, but Johnson's roving lines are as ear-catching as always and the sound of the trio is so beguiling that only the stone-hearted would disapprove.

 Alone Together Challenge CHR 70070 Pieranunzi; Eric Vloeimans(t); Philip Catherine(g); Hein Van de Geyn(b); Joe LaBarbera(d). 3/00.
* Play Morricone / (*) Play Morricone 2 CamJazz 504425-2 / 7763-2 Pieranunzi; Marc Johnson(b); Joey Baron(d). 01; 6/02.

Philip Catherine prefers swinging to stately European philosophizing and Alone Together is Pieranunzi's most conventionally swinging set for a long time. Vloeimans sits in on three tunes in a programme of rather obvious standards. It's all well done, but it does enter a crowded category and never transcends it.

The Morricone set is a dream date for Pieranunzi. He doesn't need to elaborate too much on such melodies, and Italians-by-proxy Johnson and Baron add delicate muscle to the pianist's impeccable authenticity. We still wish he'd done the theme from Moscow Farewell.

* Live In Paris Challenge 70126 2CD Pieranunzi; Hein Van de Geyn(b); André Ceccarelli(d). 4/01.

An almost flawless performance, packed with imagination and spiced with surprise. 'Body And Soul' is given a vivid intro that opens up all sorts of possibilities for what follows. The original 'Hindsight' is an epic. Shorter's 'Footprints' runs new variations on those familiar modes and 'Some Day My Prince Will Come' is rendered almost unrecognizable. Van de Geyn is masterly, adding areas of harmonic detail and filling out the bottom with complete authority. Ceccarelli is one of the best around in this field, too. But it's the pianist who really catches the attention with this minor classic.

* Doorways CamJazz 7022 Pieranunzi; Chris Potter(ss, ts); Paul Motian(d). 12/02.
The personnel is slightly misleading, for Potter only appears on three tracks, including the lugubrious title-cut. For the most part, it's a duo: the most musical percussionist on the planet paired with a pianist who goes from strength to strength with each passing record. The three 'Double Excursions' seem to be improvised, or at least worked up in the studio. Everything else is by the Italian, a spectrum of ideas that runs from post-bop to acid-etched impressionism to quite abstract things. Another hugely impressive record.

(*) Special Encounter CamJazz 5006 Pieranunzi; Charlie Haden(b); Paul Motian(d). 3/03.
No other bass-and-drums partnership sounds quite like Haden and Motian and it's easy enough at the beginning of this to be caught up in what they are doing and miss the extraordinary subtlety and sophistication of Pieranunzi's performance. It was a mistake to start with 'My Old Flame' rather than one of the pianist's fine originals, but the set soon gains momentum and intrigue and Enrico's 'Loveward' is a classic conception and performance.

 Trasnoche EGEA SCA 284 Pieranunzi; Marc Johnson(b). 03.
Pieranunzi seemed almost obsessed with exploring the internal working of the basic trio in these years. Working with Johnson, formerly a Bill Evans sideman, made perfect sense and this first encounter yields some vibrant and highly responsive music from both. The bassist does seem to back off when Pieranunzi puts on the pressure, as he does on some of the more angular pieces, but is instantly back in harness when there's a ballad idea.

* Live In Japan / * Ballads CamJazz 7797-2 2CD / 5018-2 Pieranunzi; Marc Johnson(b); Joey Baron(d). 3/04; 6/04.
Two stunningly good records, which lead one to wonder whether comparison with the Bill Evans trio has long gone past the point of 'influence' and whether Pieranunzi now has some claim to sit in that same company. The most striking element of the live record is the three long trio improvisations which punctuate a long set, one of them a partial contrefact on 'Autumn Leaves'. The level of understanding between the musicians is extraordinary and – jumping to another obvious comparison – the quality is every bit as high as on Keith Jarrett's free-form explorations with Gary Peacock and Jack DeJohnette. That said, the language here is very different. Pieranunzi likes to create landscapes, then home in on details, then fill in narrative, then play entirely free of any obvious harmonic or rhythmic constraint, all within a couple of minutes. He includes a handful of Morricone tunes, but for the most part this is music confected by the group, and it's wonderful.

On the ballads record, Pieranunzi bravely goes with a programme of originals, and even when he tackles 'These Foolish Things' and Strayhorn's 'A Flower Is A Lovesome Thing', he deconstructs them to a certain extent. Also included are two themes by Italian composers: Tenco's 'Mi Sono Inamorata Di Te' and Tallini's 'When All Was Chet'. So, a very bold set-list, played with absolute grace by this well-attested trio. Baron has fitted in superbly and this is one of his most graceful and melodic performances. Pieranunzi has discovered a new range of sound colours for these songs, not so much indigo as a dangerous deep-sea blue that carries with it just a note of sombre threat.

Also, in brief:

 Untold Story EGEA 128. 2/93.
With Marc Johnson (b) and Paul Motian (d), and with more overt reference to the Bill Evans trio, despite the (nearly) all original set-list; John Lewis's 'Django' provides a splendid coda.

 Ma L'Amore No Soul Note 121321. 2/97.
Essentially a collaboration with the singer Ada Montellanico, but it is also graced by two fine guest instrumentalists in Enrico Rava (flhn) and Lee Konitz (as), both of them playing beautifully.

 Daedalus' Wings Challenge CHR 70069. 3/99.
Piano duos with Bert van den Brink and about as remote from Ralph Sutton and Dick Hyman as you could imagine.

* Current Conditions CAM 7756-2. 11/01.
A live set with Marc Johnson (b) and Joey Baron (d). It benefits from the frisson of a performance with no less of sensitivity and nuance.

 Fellini Jazz Camjazz 7761-2. 3/03.
Mostly Nino Rota music and with a group featuring Kenny Wheeler (flhn) and Charlie Haden (b), but something of a disappointment none the less.

 Les Amants EGEA SCA 294. 04.
Teamed with Marc Johnson (b) again and Rosario Giuliani (d) but this time backed by a string quartet. Fascinating, but not entirely successful.

Billie Pierce (1907–74)
De De Pierce (1904–73)

PIANO, VOICE / CORNET

Billie was a touring pianist in the '20s, but she settled in New Orleans with her husband, De De, and they worked frequently as a duo, securing a measure of fame in revivalist circles.

 Billie Pierce (With Raymond Burke) American Music AMCD-76 Billie Pierce; Jack Delany(tb); Raymond Burke(cl); Roy Zimmerman(p); Chink Martin(b); Paul Barbarin(d). 7/50–3/54.
 Gulf Coast Blues Arhoolie 488 Pierce; Pierce; Brother Randolph(wbd); Lucious Bridges(perc, v). 10/59.
 With Kid Thomas Valentine 1960 504 CD 36 Pierce; Pierce; Kid Thomas Valentine(t). 60.
(*) In Binghamton, N.Y. Volumes 1–3 American Music AMCD-80/82/83 Pierce; Pierce; with Albert Warner(tb); Willie Humphrey(cl); Cie Frazier(d) on 2 & 3. 10/62.
 New Orleans: The Living Legends Original Blues Classics OBC 534 Pierce; Pierce; Albert Jiles(d). 1/61.
The Pierces were a familiar husband-and-wife team in New Orleans dance halls for many years. Though De De also worked in the Preservation Hall Jazz Band, it's his recordings with Billie that remain his best legacy; so far, these have made it to CD. Arhoolie's Gulf Coast Blues finds them near their best. It's very spare, and Billie's playing dominates the more diffident De De, but it's less wayward than some of their later records. The session with Kid Thomas sitting in as guest is very ramshackle-sounding, but the spirit abides, and it's a curiously moving document even with all the fluffs and effortful playing. The Binghamton discs were cut at a college concert. The music is often all over the place, and De De is so unpredictable that Willie Humphrey, who arrives in time for the second volume, seems to be trying to watch him all the time; but, for all the rackety playing, it becomes oddly exhilarating after a while.

On the OBC, the programme is nearly all simple, slow blues, taken at a stately tempo by Billie's piano, with cornet elaborations by De De that are modestly ambitious: he plays a much more improvised line than the standard New Orleans lead horns and, though he cracks a lot of notes and sometimes loses his way, he works hard at his playing. Billie's high vocals are sometimes hard to take, since she hardly varies her delivery (she once accompanied Bessie Smith, but sounds more like Clara Smith). This is deep New Orleans music.

On her own – or, at least, without De De – Billie's earlier recordings are something of a surprise. She sounds stronger and more individual, a blend of classic-blues singer and the more songful voice that she used for the likes of 'When The Saints'. The 1950 session, a private recording, features her in the sole company of Raymond Burke, who's in playful form, and the 1954 band date has her fronting a capable group with everyone in high spirits. None of these tracks was issued before and the sound in this first mastering is more than good enough.

Nat Pierce (1925–1992)

PIANIST, BANDLEADER

A one-man rearguard for big-band swing, he depped for Count Basie and co-led Juggernaut with Frank Capp. Wrote 'Open All Night' as TV theme to The Sound of Jazz.

 The Boston Bust Out Hep 13 Pierce; Bill Adams, Dud Harvey, Don Stratton, Perry Wilson(t); Bob Carr, Ace Lane, Sonny Truitt(tb); Charlie Mariano, David Chapman(as); George Hamilton Green(ts); Serge Chaloff, George Meyers(bs); Ralph Burns(p); Frank Gallagher(b); Joe McDonald, Pete De Rosa(d); Teddi King(v). 47–51.

 Kansas City Memories Fresh Sound FSRCD 2332 2CD Pierce; Dick Collins, Don Fagerquist, John Howell, Doug Mettome, Charlie Walp(t); Cy Touff(b-t); Urbie Green, Frank Rehak(tb); Med Flory(as); Dick Hafer(cl, as, ts); Jerry Coker, Richie Kamuca(ts); Jack Nimitz(bs); Freddie Green(g); John Beal, Red Kelly, Walter Page(b); Gus Gustafson, Osie Johnson, Jo Jones(d). 2–8/55.

(*) Ballad Of Jazz Street Hep 2009 Pierce; orchestra includes Clark Terry(t); Eddie Bert, Jimmy Cleveland(tb); Paul Gonsalves, Paul Quinichette(ts). 3/61.

 5400 North Hep 2004 Pierce; Dick Collins(t); Bill Perkins(reeds); Bob Saravia(b); Frank Capp(d); Mary Ann McCall(v). 5/78.

Most of Nat's earlier records on Fantasy, Vanguard and Coral are out of print now, but there's a smattering of stuff in the catalogues to represent this low-key but utterly professional musician. Laurels to Hep's Alistair Robertson for keeping him in sight. The early record is fascinating for glimpses of Charlie Mariano, still very much in swing mode, and of Serge Chaloff. The 1961 big-band date comes from a relatively fallow period in the Pierce discography, but it's a highly accomplished set with two strong Horace Silver arrangments – 'Soulville' and 'Sister Sadie' – and the attractive three-part title-piece.

The most recent disc offers a rare chance to hear Pierce in a smaller group. Recorded at an outdoor concert, it's marked by a cracking reading of the Roy Eldridge title-tune, followed by Pierce's own lugubrious 'Pee Wee's Blues'. Some nice singing as well from McCall, who was getting towards the end of her career at this point.

The Fresh Sound fills out the picture a little, though the transfers are inferior. This brings together the title-LP with And His Herdsmen, Jazz Romp and Bandstand on two discs. The language is orthodox and machine-tooled; the playing mostly very good indeed. Not the most dramatic of discographies, but enough to make the acquaintance of one of jazz's quiet gentlemen.

Dave Pike (born 1938)

VIBRAPHONE, MARIMBA

Born in Detroit, he began on drums and later switched. West Coast work in the '50s preceded a move to New York in 1960 and three years with Herbie Mann. The Dave Pike Set became popular in Germany, where he lived for several years.

 It's Time For Dave Pike Original Jazz Classics OJC 1951 Pike; Barry Harris(p); Reggie Workman(b); Billy Higgins(d). 1–2/61.

Pike's approach was both backward-looking, to the styles of Milt Jackson and Hamp, and also irretrievably time-locked, and though he returned to the States and to favour after an increasingly barren sojourn in Europe, he's never quite recovered from the feeling that he's merely a bebop copyist on a lumpy and stiff-jointed instrument. While this has its notable moments – the terse ballad 'It's Time', the vintage bop bluster of 'Hot House' – the record feels as if it's going nowhere, which is what Pike did, until his unexpected resurgence in the '90s.

(*) Carnavals Prestige 24248 Pike; Clark Terry(flhn); Leo Wright(as, f); Tommy Flanagan(p); Kenny Burrell, Jimmy Raney(g); Ahmed Abdul-Malik, George Duvivier, Chris C. White(b); Rudy Collins, William Correa(d); Ray Barreto, Jose Paulo(perc). 9–12/62.

This is the Pike set to go for, a compilation of two 1962 albums, Bossa Nova Carnival and Limbo Carnival. Both records are dance-oriented, but none the worse for that, and they underline Pike's (or his producers') genius for simpatico line-ups. The first album was all Donato material, quality writing delivered with a measure of authenticity. The second record was more original in focus, with a touch of bebop ('My Little Suede Shoes'), some pop ('La Bamba'), a couple of songs associated with Harry Belafonte, and a knock-off of Sonny Rollins's 'St Thomas'.

 Jazz For The Jet Set Atlantic 8122 73527-2 Pike; Clark Terry, Melvin Lastie, Martin Shellar(t); Herbie Hancock(org); Billy Butler(g); Bob Cranshaw, Jimmy Lewis(b); Bruno Carr, Grady Tate(d). 66.

The Atlantic date is programmed as a desperate jazz-meets-pop enterprise, yet there's far more to enjoy than a glance at the cover (a stewardess – sometimes these images sell records, you know) might suggest. Terry may have been hired to lead the trumpet section, but he also gets in some typically puckish solos, and Pike himself sounds hungry just to be out front and to play on a record with his name on it.

(*) Bophead Ubiquity 11033 Pike; Teddy Edwards(ts); Jane Getz, Milcho Leviev(p); Anthony Wilson(g); Richard Simon(b); Albert Heath, Lorca Hart(d). 10/97.

A real surprise. Taut, often challenging neo-bop from a pretty extraordinary line-up. The pianists add a nice ripple, but the real dynamic to this set is what is going on between Pike (in great form), the underrated Richard Simon (who sounds like Leroy Vinnegar) and Tootie Heath, who has brought on protégé Lorca Hart beautifully. The material is great: Pike's 'Bophead' teeing up Jackie McLean's 'Little Melonae' and 'Dr Jackle', John Carisi's 'Israel' and Sonny Rollins's 'Grand Street'. The outstanding cut, though, is 'Ghost Of A Chance', with Pike playing out of his skin.

Also, in brief:

 Manhattan Latin Verve 06024 98624463. 2–4/64.
Lightweight to the point of blowing away on the breeze.

(*) Pike's Groove Criss Cross 1021. 2/86.
Back in the States and mainstreamed to a degree.

 Peligroso Cubop 32. 00.
A bright, breezy latter-day set.

Roberta Piket (born 1965)

PIANO

The daughter of a composer who studied in Vienna, Piket is a composer-pianist in a familiar post-bop style.

 Unbroken Line Criss Cross CRISS 1140 Piket; Scott Wendholt(t); Donny McCaslin(ts, ss); Javon Jackson(ts); Michael Formanek(b); Jeff Williams(d). 4/96.
 Speak, Memory Fresh Sound FSNT 088 Piket; Masa Kamaguchi(b); Jeff Williams(d). 2/00.
Piket's father took part in the Spanish Civil War and then emigrated to America after the great War Against Fascism. Roberta imbibed a solid classical training from him and she retains a capacious understanding of all sorts of modern music. Her compositional gifts are evident from the very start of Unbroken Line. 'Brookland' sounds derivative of too many things for it to be indebted to any of them. 'The Long, Long Wait' was seemingly inspired by a session Piket heard involving her premier jazz influence, Richie Beirach: it's a meditation on ars longa, vita brevis, heartfelt and touched by a proper humility. 'Daily Affirmation' is based on Charlie Parker's 'Confirmation', though it develops in directions Bird hadn't dreamt of. The closing 'Unbroken Line' is a fierce blowing tune, and belated evidence that the composer isn't overly hung-up on her classical training. Only two standard treatments, but Irving Berlin's 'Always' and the pairing of 'You'll Never Walk Alone' and 'Some Enchanted Evening' are sensitively reworked. The supporting cast are excellent, almost all of them veterans of Criss Cross's superb catalogue. Jackson brings the most, in terms of ideas, but this is a showcase for the leader.

Piket's entry in the demanding, hugely oversubscribed trio category is decorously played, and the balance between originals and covers works well. 'Up, Up And Away' (a choice which, she says, engenders 'scepticism and dismay' among would-be listeners) evolves into a rousing set-piece by its end, and the two originals, 'Hands' and 'Speak, Memory', benefit from her forceful delivery. On slower pieces such as 'Lost In The Stars' she tends to weigh the notes too ponderously, and the music can sometimes recede into a trudge.

Jean-Michel Pilc

PIANO

A consistently inventive but underrated player.

* Together: Live At Sweet Basil, Volumes 1 & 2 Challenge 73195 / 73196 Pilc; François Moutin(b); Ari Hoenig(d). 00.
A certain sentimental devotion to the late Michel Petrucciani blocks any conclusion that Pilc is the finest French pianist since Martial Solal. The flow of invention on these mostly standards-driven sets is remarkable. 'Tea For Two' and the title-piece are on both sets and offer an insight into how Pilc approaches the reharmonization of a familiar tune. We'd strongly recommend investing in both volumes, if only for the two-minute delight of 'My Köln Concert', a solo excursion that pokes gentle fun at the pretentious giantism of Keith Jarrett's most famous improvisation.

Pilc's approach is evident from the very start of 'Softly, As In A Morning Sunrise', a dawn which promises storms or hot sun. 'C Jam Blues' is a tour de force worthy of Liszt, while 'Tea For Two' and 'Bye Bye Blackbird' nod in the direction of both Tatum and Bartók. 'My One And Only Love' is a rare mood-piece. Volume 2 – the Köln joke aside – is more of the same high-quality stuff. 'On Green Dolphin Street' and 'My Funny Valentine' are substantially deconstructed, but Pilc saves his best stroke for last, with a headlong reading of Miles Davis's 'All Blues'. Moutin and Hoenig both play their part to the hilt. The bassist's solo spots are delicately nuanced and Hoenig's sense of time is imaginatively elastic.

* Welcome Home Dreyfus FDM 36630 Pilc; François Moutin(b); Ari Hoenig(d). 9/01.
Again, one wonders at the hype around latter-day piano trios, when Pilc's superb trio still languishes in relative obscurity outside his native country. They get off to a rollicking start with another remake of a Miles Davis classic. This time, 'So What' is rendered almost unrecognizable. The repertoire is more modern this time out, with Coltrane's 'Giant Steps' and 'Cousin Mary', and Monk's 'Rhythm-A-Ning' stretching the harmonic language and the dynamics further still. The Monk tune is almost apocalyptic, an impression heightened by having it follow 'Scarborough Fair'. And just to show that they haven't gone over entirely to the new school, there's a loving deconstruction of 'I Got It Bad (And That Ain't Good)'.

The interplay between piano and bass is as dramatic as ever; Moutin's phrasing becomes more inventive with every appearance. We can only repeat our recommendation.

* Follow Me Dreyfus FDM 36665 Pilc (p solo). 12/03.
He's not that easy to follow, but packs this debut solo set with enough intrigue to guarantee you'll try. From Bill Evans's 'B Minor Waltz' to a notably off-kilter reading of 'Autumn Leaves', from 'St Louis Blues' and 'St James Infirmary' to his own, apparently spontaneous 'Raccoon', Pilc entrances with every bar. His touch seems to have got lighter, though playing without bass and percussion and recorded up close probably enhances that impression. A real winner.

(*) Live At Iridium, New York Dreyfus FDM 36677 Pilc; Thomas Bramerie(b); Mark Mondesir(d). 10/04.
(*) New Dreams Dreyfus FDM 36905 As above, except add Ari Hoenig(d). 10/06.
Pilc is composer of most of the material on this fine live trio set. After his opening 'No Print', there is a short Monk sequence, three tracks put together as if on the spur of the moment. After that, an extended version of Coltrane's 'Spiritual', and then the Pilc themes start to flow, each as terse and enigmatic as its one-word title. There are fewer minor tonalities now, and a more expansive approach to the keyboard, but the atmosphere is still enigmatic and slightly teasing. Bramerie and Mondesir combine well and keep the pulse relaxed but positive. The English drummer alternates with Hoenig on New Dreams, another delightful blend of enigmatic originals, Monk, 'But Not For Me' and even a little bit of Schumann. Why is this pianist not more highly regarded?

Also, in brief:

 The Long Journey Challenge 73216. 01.
A piano/bass duet with the magnificent Hein Van de Geyn.

 Cardinal Points Dreyfus FDM 36649. 02.
A couple of new voices added to the group, not yet settled in.

Courtney Pine (born 1964)

TENOR, ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, BASS CLARINET, FLUTE, ALTO FLUTE, KEYBOARDS

Born in London, he played funk and reggae as a teenager, then became interested in John Coltrane. He became a focal point for young London musicians in the '80s, helped form the Jazz Warriors big band and had a hit with his debut release. He has since investigated various jazz and popular black-music forms.

 Underground Talkin' Loud 537745-2 Pine; Nicholas Payton(t); Cyrus Chestnut(ky); Mark Whitfield(g); Reginald Veal(b); Jeff 'Tain' Watts(d); DJ Pogo(turntables); Jhelisa(v). 3/97.
Pine's vision is so populous and rich in its ambition that the plain truth is that Pine doesn't make enough records. Eight albums in nearly 15 years was simply an inadequate showing for a man who should be as prolific as David Murray in his pomp. That way we could rack one like this in his enjoyable second division, instead of having to settle for it as his premier set in a five-year period. 'All the tracks started off as breaks or loops from classic records from the period 1964–97' – but to get the consent would have been cripplingly difficult and expensive, so Pine reharmonized them and re-created them in real time. It was taking the long way round, but the results are often exciting, even thrilling – listen to 'Oneness Of Mind'. Unfortunately the track fades just as it's getting going, and that sense of the cup being dashed from the lips recurs throughout Underground. There are sublime pop melodies like 'Invisible (Higher Vibe)', fragments of impressive solos. DJ Pogo putters around in the background, creating his own underfelt of scratched voices and sounds. Every so often, Pine pulls off a head-turning solo. But the album never establishes its own world. Jazz, hip-hop, soundtrack music, hip easy-listening – it's all part of Courtney's multi-kulti aesthetic, and you can hear him straining to make it all synthesize.

(*) Back In The Day Blue Thumb 543580-2 Pine; Alex Pushkin(t); Lewis Latimer(tb); Mary Secole(as); Robert Mitchell(p); Cameron Pierre(g); Sheema Muhkerjee(sitar); Robert Fordjour(d); DJ Pogo(turntables); Eska Mtungwezi, Kele Le Roc, MC Mello, Blak Twang, London Community Gospel Choir(v). N.D.
Bits and pieces. In terms of impact, this is weedier and less intrusive than the last one. Most of it seems tailored for radio. A fine improvisation such as the soprano solo on 'Brotherman' sits sweetly inside an untroubling groove, and the same thing happens with the tenor outing on the subsequent 'Keep It Real'. With the record pieced together second by second by Pine at home, there's no pretence at real-time intensity, and some of the improvising seems weirdly frozen in its setting.

(*) Devotion Destin-E 777 001 Pine; Byron Wallin(t); Dennis Rollins(tb); Chris Jerome(ky); Robert Mitchell(p); Sheema Mukherjee(sitar); Cameron Pierre(g); Peter Martin(b); Robert Fordjour(d); Yousuf Ali Khan(tabla); Thomas Dyani(perc); David McAlmont, Carlene Anderson, Jacqui Dankworth(v). N.D.
It still seems extraordinary that, nearly 20 years into his recording career, Pine had thus far essayed only nine studio albums proper. If his last couple of records have been a jumble, then so is this one; the difference is, it's more joyous, more focused, less bitty. 'Osibisa', for instance, is a cheering homage to those heroes of '70s funk, and the title-track nods to Courtney's reggae roots, perhaps even more significant to him than his jazz sources. It's less of a one-man studio show, and organized more around his working band. As always, there are guest vocals, broadly from the soul idiom, with David McAlmont doing a neat job on John Martyn's lovely 'Bless The Weather', but the most encouraging thing is how the music works to frame the leader's own playing to its best advantage – he's never sounded more exciting than he does on the likes of 'U.K.'. As his American audience falls away, he's concentrating more and more on a British perspective and, spared any overweening ambitions, this one sounds fine.

(*) Resistance V2 777002 Pine; Dennis Rollins(tb); Chris Jerome(ky); Cameron Pierre, Chris Lamptey(g); Jenny Adejayan(clo); Darren Taylor(b); Robert Fordjour, Frank Tontoh(d); Juliet Kelly(v). 05.
As usual, Courtney's been listening to everything, and he likes to jam everything in – there's reggae, drum'n'bass and Motown funk here, and the title-track is even an old-fashioned soul-jazz shuffle. But it's a disciplined and, again, more group-orientated effort, and at last he's given up on the vocal crossover tracks. Fans have welcomed this as more like the Pine band on stage, and it's a hot one.

Armand Piron (1888–1943)

VIOLIN, VOICE, BANDLEADER

Born in New Orleans, he began leading bands there in the first decade of the new century. He joined forces with Clarence Williams in music publishing and only rarely left his native city.

 Piron's New Orleans Orchestra Retrieval RTR 79041 Piron; Peter Bocage(t); John Lindsay(tb); Lorenzo Tio Jr(cl, ts); Louis Warnecke(as); Steve Lewis(p); Charles Bocage(bj, v); Bob Ysaguirre(tba); Louis Cottrell(d); Esther Bigeou, Ida G. Brown, Lela Bolden, Willie Lewis(v). 12/23–3/25.
For the most part they were recorded in New York, but Piron's band was a New Orleans outfit and as such was one of the few to be documented in the '20s. This splendid reissue is a model of its kind: the sleeve-notes sum up years of research into the performers' activities, and this latest remastering of a set of terrifically rare originals is excellent. That said, the disc isn't a revelation. Piron's group was a more genteel, proper orchestra than some New Orleans bands of the time, pitching itself somewhere between ragtime, society music and the glimmers of early jazz: though 1923 is early in jazz recording history, they still sound a much less modern band next to Oliver or Fletcher Henderson from the same year (one should compare their treatment of 'Doo Doodle Oom' with Henderson's 1923 Vocalion version). A few tracks, including the very first, 'Bouncing Around', brew up a potent mix of syncopation, with Tio's wriggling clarinet breaks and Bocage's urbane lead making their mark over an ensemble rhythm that is almost swinging. But there is surprisingly little development between the earliest and the latest tracks by the orchestra.

Bucky Pizzarelli (born 1926)

GUITAR

He was hidden away in NBC studio orchestras for many years but began an association with Benny Goodman in 1966 and since then has become a regular contributor to mainstream-modern small groups on record and on the road. His son John is a chip off the old block.

 April Kisses /  One Morning In May /  Flashes: A Lifetime In Words And Music Arbors ARCD 19227 / 19254 / 19306 Pizarelli (g solo). 3/99; 10–11/00; 2/04..

Pizzarelli's more vigorous ensemble playing can be found on many other records in this book, but these three charming solo discs show off his more gentle and sweet-toned style on the 7-string acoustic guitar. The first disc is mostly music from the books of his first influences: Eddie Lang, Carl Kress, George Van Eps. The second features favourite standards and some jazz tunes from Ellington and Bix Beiderbecke. The third is more of the same. He embellishes them only modestly, lets the melodies do most of the talking, and as soon as he's done with one, it's done. One of them will do for anybody, but any one of them works fine, and Bucky's amiable craftsmanship is a pleasure to hear.

 Manhattan Swing: A Visit With The Duke Arbors ARCD 19226 Pizzarelli; John Bunch(p); Jay Leonhart(b). 3/99.

A friendly amble through the Ellington workbook in simpatico company. Bunch is the unexpected star of this, but Bucky's line on 'Isfahan' is delicious and original. The swingers generally aren't quite so compelling.

 5 For Freddie Arbors ARCD 19344 Pizzarelli; Warren Vaché(c); John Bunch(p); Jay Leonhart(b); Mickey Roker(d). 5/06.

One master salutes another. With a latter-day version of a Basie small group, Bucky re-examines the heritage of the great Freddie Green, with his colleagues explicitly cast as Basie, Sweets, Walter Page and Jo Jones. Any such project always prompts the question of why one would listen to a re-creation rather than the real thing. One obvious answer is the terrific modern sound, but there's enough fresh individuality in the playing to distinguish this from a routine nostalgia project. Vaché's muted cornet is particularly appealing and Leonhart comes through stronger than Page was ever able to.

 Generations Arbors ARCD 19345 Pizzarelli; John Pizzarelli(g). 5/06.

One thinks of what Jimmy and Doug Raney did together when listening to this. Bucky and John have the same spikily affectionate approach, but the inclusion of classical themes by Ponce and Torroba gives them an opportunity to play in a more formal context, their contrasting voices (mellow and more emphatic respectively) adding a fresh element to relatively familiar fare.

Also, in brief:

 Live At The Vineyard Theatre Challenge CHR 70025. 1/87.

An attractive father/son encounter.

 Swing Live Chesky 218 CD/DVD. 2/01.

A fine quintet date in superb surround sound.

John Pizzarelli (born 1960)

GUITAR, VOICE

Performed with his father as a guitar duo, then began working as a solo and with his own trio from 1990.

 My Blue Heaven Chesky JD38 Pizzarelli; Clark Terry(t, v); Dave McKenna(p); Bucky Pizzarelli(g); Milt Hinton(b); Connie Kay(d). 2/90.

 Dear Mr Cole Jive 63182-2 Pizzarelli; Benny Green, Ray Kennedy(p); Christian McBride, Martin Pizzarelli(b); John Guerin(d). 94.

 After Hours Jive 63191-2 Pizzarelli; Randy Sandke(t); Harry Allen(ts); Ray Kennedy(p); Bucky Pizzarelli(g); Martin Pizzarelli(b); Joe Cocuzzo(d). 95.

John Pizzarelli follows in father's footsteps by using a guitar style that owes an obvious debt to paternal influence: quick, clean picking, a Django-like tone and a penchant for the humorous aside in the middle of otherwise terse improvisations. While this makes for solid, gratifying mainstream, Pizzarelli was never really a young fogey: there's a coolness about his manner which detaches him a little from the material and, while some of his song choices are as neo-classic as one can get, he sounds a little dreamier than the Concord crew of mainstreamers. Besides, he sings – and this is what has determined his career. Pizzarelli was doing this sort of thing long before the likes of Harry Connick, and his singing and playing are accomplished in their own right; but the tenor of the later records is unmistakably tuned to seeking an audience that likes singers rather than players.

My Blue Heaven is beautifully recorded and shrewdly programmed, with Clark Terry tossing in some characteristic obbligatos and the instrumental pieces – including a very sharp-witted 'Don't Get Around Much Any More' – finding a real, spontaneous zest. Dear Mr Cole looks promising: with the nucleus of Green, McBride and Pizzarelli himself as a dream trio, Nat Cole tunes as the repertoire and a perfectly intimate studio-mix, this was set up to be a classic. But the opening 'Style Is Coming Back In Style' with the other rhythm section is so blissful that the rest is almost a disappointment and, as cleverly as the trio plays, it's just a shade too neo-classic to wholly convince, despite some lovely moments.

After Hours moves the concept to a full-fledged ballad album. Sandke and Allen blow sweetly apposite obbligatos and John's working trio play with intuitive rightness: on a couple of less obvious choices, such as 'Coquette' and 'Mam'selle', the pitch is flawlessly right. Because he's singing so quietly and without undue emphasis, it's easy to miss how effective Pizzarelli has become at this music, too. Yet the album still seems to slip uneventfully by – through its very nature, perhaps.

(*) Let There Be Love Telarc CD-83518 Pizzarelli; Harry Allen(ts); Ken Peplowski(cl); Dominic Cortese(acc); Ray Kennedy(p); Bucky Pizzarelli(g); Jesse Levy(clo); Martin Pizzarelli(b); Tony Tedesco(d). 7/00.

(*) The Rare Delight Of You Telarc CD-83546 Pizzarelli; George Shearing(p); Reg Schwager(g); Neil Swainson(b); Dennis Mackrel(d). 10/01.

Love them or not, Pizzarelli's albums are copper-bottomed class, and we're not tired of them yet. Let There Be Love has another basketful of picked tunes, the voice is in fine shape, Allen and Peps put in some of their stuff, Bucky takes a solo or two ... hey, you know what's going to happen, and it does, and it sounds great.

Hard to know whether to file the next one under Pizzarelli or Shearing. John guests with the quintet, and while the climate is tempered a little to accommodate George, it doesn't hurt: 'Lost April' has a hushed, old-world elegance of a sort which rarely turns up on the regular Pizzarelli sessions. But the uptempo tunes are just as satisfying.

 Live At Birdland Telarc CD-83577 2CD Pizzarelli; Ray Kennedy(p); Martin Pizzarelli(b); Grover Kimble(v). N.D.
(*) Bossa Nova Telarc CD-83591 Pizzarelli; Harry Allen(ts); Ray Kennedy, César Camargo Mariano(p); Martin Pizzarelli(b); Paulinho Braga(d); Jim Saporito(perc); Daniel Jobim, Chiara Civello(v); strings. 5/03.
 Knowing You Telarc CD-83615 As above, except omit Braga, Saporito, Jobim, Civello; add Ken Peplowski(cl), Tony Monte(p), Larry Goldings(p, org), Bucky Pizzarelli(g), Tony Tedesco(d), Jessica Molaskey(v). 9/04.
The inevitable live album has been a long time in coming, but it's a fine souvenir of John's live set, two discs of good songs performed with a suave blend of showbiz and jazz feeling. The between-song schtick and bits of live business may deter you from returning this to the player too often, though that's hardly the fault of the performers. As a record of one of America's most accomplished club acts, it works fine.

The Bossa Nova set is beautifully produced by Russ Titelman, and might turn out to be Pizzarelli's biggest success if some of these very poppy tracks become airplay hits. There's less guitar than ever (?) before, but he has a real feel for the right groove, and the slushy romanticism of this kind of music comes easily to him. Here and there – especially on a surprising 'Fascinatin' Rhythm' – the band hit a real groove.

Polished to perfection, Knowing You is just a tad too immaculate – even for an artist who's made a virtue out of no rough edges. The 15 tunes are despatched without a murmur of trouble, but Pizzarelli could usefully give himself a musical problem to solve.

Also, in brief:

 All Of Me Jive 63129. 91.
Cleverly pitched between big-band charts and a nucleus of singer and rhythm section; artfully realized but legitimized by his trust in the material.

* Kisses In The Rain Telarc 83491. 6/99.
A new label, but nothing new in the music; dusted-off standards and few new tunes.

 Dear Mr Sinatra Telarc 83638. 6/05.
The Clayton–Hamilton Orchestra delivers the charts accurately and with finesse, but why listen to this rather than the original?

Lonnie Plaxico (born 1960)

DOUBLE BASS

Widely travelled, with experience in mainstream and modern. His most high-profile gig was with the Messengers.

(*) Emergence Savant 2019 Plaxico; Ralph Alessi, Larry Lunetta(t); Don Braden(ss, ts); Tim Hegarty(ts); Jason Moran(p); Eric Lewis(p, org); Lionel Cordew(d, perc); Jeff Haynes(perc). 2/00.
There's a sophomoric cleverness to Plaxico's debut as leader, an insistence on showing off every aspect of his playing personality that becomes increasingly off-putting as Emergence progresses. The resonant titles – 'Emancipation', 'Delusion', 'Libertarian' – don't seem to have a substantial correlative in the music, and one finds oneself admiring the sophistication of the charts without enjoying the noise they make. Braden is in fine form, but Plaxico's own switching from acoustic to electric instruments is just a further symptom of his desire to pitch camp in both hard-bop and fusion camps. Neither is secured and ultimately the record falls rather than succeeds on its own eclecticism.

 Live At The 5:01 Jazz Bar Orchard 802211 Plaxico; Alexander Pope Norris(t); Marcus Strickland(ts); George Colligan(org, ky); Nathaniel Townsley(d). N.D.
Caught live, Plaxico's real strengths come through strongly. His command of line and harmonic variation are nowhere more clearly heard than on 'Too Young To Go Steady', not because it's the strongest track, but because the tune is familiar enough for his creative rethink to be obvious; similarly on Tower Of Power's brilliant 'Squib Cakes', first covered on his (deleted) Blue Note album, which hasn't been picked up by anyone else except, we think, Rob McConnell. 'Emergence' is given a fresh outing and the other originals are tough, focused and thoroughly entertaining. Colligan has a lot to do with the success of the record, as convincing on organ as he always has been on piano.

 Rhythm & Soul Sirocco 1023 Plaxico; Alex Sipiagin(t); George Colligan(p, org); Arene Lomax(p); Billy Kilson(d); Jeff Haynes(perc); Amelia Lomax(v). 02.
Here, the band is schooled and adept in the leader's ideas. The bassist is hard-edged and funky one moment ('Weather Report'), softer and more expansive the next (Mal Waldron's 'Soul Eyes'). He's never out of the groove and never wastes a note. And yet, the overall impression is still of something rather too polished and contrived, music that doesn't come from the heart but from the head.

 West Side Stories Plaxmusic 0001 Plaxico; Jeff Hermason, Alex Norris(t); Ravi Coltrane, Steve Coleman, David Lee Jones(as); Gary Pikard, Gary Thomas(ts); George Colligan(p, org); Kenny Grohowski(d); Khalil Kwame Bell, Jeff Haynes(perc); Carla Cook, Cassandra Wilson(v). 06.
A latter day M-Base convention, with lots of material that recalls growing up in Chicago and listening to the popular music of the time. Which doesn't just mean black R&B. Burt Bacharach's 'One Less Bell To Answer' is a surprise inclusion, while Foreigner's 'I Want To Know What Love Is' is perhaps a less welcome one; Carla Cook's vocal is preferable to the original. It's worth pondering, whenever anyone complains about label A&R men 'pushing' artists into covering popular material, that here's an artist putting a record out on his own imprint and doing so of his own free will. A better live record appeared on a Japanese label shortly before, but this is a strong sign of musical health from the busy bassist.

King Pleasure (1922–81)

VOICE

Born Clarence Beeks, he won an amateur night at the Apollo in 1951 and then scooped enormous success with his vocalese 'Moody's Mood For Love'.

(*) King Pleasure Sings Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 217 Pleasure; Ed Lewis(t); J. J. Johnson, Kai Winding(tb); Charles Ferguson, Lucky Thompson(ts); Danny Bank(bs); Jimmy Jones, John Lewis, Ed Swanston(p); Paul Chambers, Percy Heath, Peck Morrison(b); Kenny Clarke, Joe Harris, Herbie Lovelle(d); Betty Carter, Jon Hendricks, Eddie Jefferson, The Dave Lambert Singers, The Three Riffs(v). 12/52–12/54.

 Golden Days Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1772 Pleasure; Matthew Gee(tb); Teddy Edwards, Harold Land(ts); Gerald Wiggins(p); Wilfred Middlebrooks(b); Earl Palmer(d). 4/60.

Eddie Jefferson claimed to have invented the practice of fitting lyrics to bop solos, but it was Pleasure who garnered the praise and what cash was going. (Just to confirm Jefferson's luck, he was blown away outside a Detroit club in 1979, just as his career was reviving; Jefferson, Jon Hendricks and The Three Riffs all feature on two 1954 tracks from Sings.) The earlier of the two OJCs is shared with Annie Ross, who sings the classic vocalization of Wardell Gray's 'Twisted', along with 'Moody's Mood For Love' and Pleasure's 'Parker's Mood' the best-known vocalese performance. Pleasure has something of Ross's honeyed smoothness of tone but combines it with a more biting articulation that can sound remarkably like Charlie Parker's alto saxophone (or, more frequently, the smooth tenor sound of Teddy Edwards and Lucky Thompson). Using less-sophisticated arrangements and generally less-witty lyrics than Jon Hendricks's for Lambert, Hendricks and Ross, Pleasure more often relies on the quality of the voice alone. The accompaniments are generally good, but the Quincy Jones backings to 'Don't Get Scared' and 'I'm Gone' are exceptional.

The later Golden Days is a decent record, marked out by some adventurous improvisation from the singer and rugged solos from both Land and Edwards, although the steam had gone out of Pleasure's career at this point (it was made for the small Hi Fi label). Vocalese has always been something of an acquired taste, though interest in it had grown in the years before this reissue. These two records were key texts in the revival.

Paul Plimley (born 1953)

PIANO, MARIMBA

The Canadian studied classical music in his youth, but since the late '70s has been immersed in Canada's free-music scene.

(*) Everything In Stages Songlines SGL 1503-2 Plimley (p solo). 4/95.

Plimley has created a formidable body of work. Everything In Stages is another contrast: 17 pieces, many very brief episodes, many examining one, often minute, aspect of the piano – technique, vocabulary, structure. Plimley makes one think about the whole nature of the instrument here, its physicality and resonances, and though it can be tough going it's many times more absorbing than the typical piano record.

(*) Sensology Maya MCD9701 Plimley; Barry Guy(b). 1/95.
* Ivory Ganesh Meets Doctor Drums Songlines SGL 1523-2 Plimley; Trichy Sankaran(perc). 4/86–4/98.
(*) Safecrackers Victor 066 Plimley; Lisle Ellis(b); Scott Amendola(d). 1/99.

The meeting with Guy (at a Vancouver concert) is a joyful occasion, for all the high-velocity counterpoint. Both players can touch on the academy when they want to, and that introduces such elegant episodes as the beginning of 'Short Steps Until It Finally Dawned', but the impression of brief, snatched-up tracks such as 'Hand Held Hot Coals' is of sheer high spirits. There is an excellent gag at the end of the record, too, luckily explained in the sleeve-notes.

Ivory Ganesh Meets Doctor Drums is world jazz of a high order. Sankaran brings the almost courtly grace of his tabla rhythms to a platform which Plimley builds and demolishes and rebuilds with his usual ebullience, and the miracle is that this is one (ahem) fusion which doesn't seem forced, overcooked or blighted by mutual incomprehension. It helps that Plimley thinks hard about the piano's status as a percussion instrument, but he's helped enormously by Ganesh's superb responsiveness to each situation. Each man also gets some intriguing solos and, aside from the enormous 'Jhampalaya II', most of the tracks are actually quite short and resolved in very specific ways.

His latest trio debuts on Safecrackers. New drummer Amendola fits right in, and this is probably also the best sound Plimley's had in a studio. A surprising bit of audio-vérité at the end of 'An Exhilaration Of Larks, And Their Discovery Of Fire' and an unexpected sign-off with Claude Thornhill's 'Snowfall'. Plimley likes to surprise, and he's still doing it.

Pony Poindexter (1926–88)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Born in New Orleans. He toured with Billy Eckstine and worked with Annie Ross. Lived in Europe for a time.

 Pony's Express Koch International 8591 Poindexter; Eric Dolphy, Gene Quill, Sonny Red, Phil Woods(as); Dexter Gordon, Jimmy Heath, Clifford Jordan, Sal Nistico(ts); Pepper Adams(bs); Tommy Flanagan, Gildo Mahones(p); Ron Carter, Bill Yancey(b); Elvin Jones, Charli Persip(d). 5/62.
 In Barcelona Fresh Sound FSRCD 374 Poindexter; Josep M. Farrás(t); Ricardo Solís(tb); Pere Ferré(p); Eric Peter(b); Adrià Font(d); Pedrito Díaz(perc); Dina Poindexter(v). 72.

Slim pickings from such a substantial career, but the first of these is a very useful representation of an artist who is otherwise almost unavailable on CD. The set features the saxophonist – dedicatee of Neal Hefti's 'Little Pony' – in a series of line-ups and much of the interest lies in the other personnel. There is, for instance, a fine Eric Dolphy solo on 'Lanyop', which adds to his sadly truncated discography, and a remarkable chase with Dexter Gordon on an unexpected version of 'Struttin' With Some Barbecue'. The material could hardly be more varied: 'Mickey Mouse March', 'Basin Street Blues', the bebop classic 'Salt Peanuts' and Kenton's 'Artistry In Rhythm'. Poindexter's surprisingly lyrical alto is heard to best effect on 'Skylark', which is probably the outstanding cut of the set.

The Spanish set was around for years on a hard-to-find LP. It's another very good set, with further examples of Pony on soprano, which he was among the first to choose as a 'double'. The Catalan band (Díaz is actually Cuban) are well above average and the ensembles sound well-rehearsed. The only slight question mark is the vocal contribution of Poindexter's eight-year-old daughter, who also appears on the cover; cute as a bug's ear she may be, but the singing on 'Lucky Duck' and 'Pretty Lady' must be an acquired taste. Her dad's playing is fine though, and demonstrates that whatever his limitations Poindexter was more than a one-trick pony.

Polar Bear

GROUP

Much-praised young British outfit.

 Dim Lit / Babel BDV 2446 Mark Lockheart, Pete Wareham(ts); Tom Herbert(b); Sebastian Rochford(d); Julia Biel(v). 04.
 Held On The Tips Of The Fingers Babel BDV 2552 As above, except add Joe Bentley(tb); Ingrid Laubrock(ss); Jonny Phillips(g); Emma Smith(vn); Hanna Marshall (clo). 05.
Few British groups of recent times have been so extravagantly hyped and yet Polar Bear do, on closer inspection, really match up to the publicity and press raves. Rochford is a formidable musician and in Lockheart and Wareham he has seasoned players who know their way around a range of idioms. They weave in and out of Rochford's deceptively quiet playing; this, perhaps, is the point of the name – polar bears are attractive, cuddly creatures but among the fiercest beasts on the planet – and there is a dark energy to these tracks reminiscent of Radiohead at their most extended. Rochford's rock and avant-rock tastes are evident here and there on both records, but there is no hint that his ambitions run to either prog-rock or Nu Jazz. A formidable improviser, he keeps jazz playing in focus at all times. The guests don't add much to either album; an unaugmented live set should be the next priority.

Kerry Politzer

PIANO, VOICE

An alumna of the New England Conservatory and a prizewinning songwriter.

(*) Yearning Cap 952 Politzer; Eric Rasmussen(ss, as); Pete Smith(g); Howard Britz(b); Andrea Valentini(d). 00.
 Watercolour Polisonic 01 Politzer; Dan Fabricatore(b); Scott McLemore(d). 1/01.
 Labyrinth Polisonic 02 Politzer; Andrew Rathbun(ss, ts); Chris Higgins(b); George Colligan(d). 10/04.
 You Took Me In Polisonic 03 Politzer; George Colligan(ky, d); Tom Guarna(g); Zach Brock(vn); Chris Higgins, Lonnie Plaxico(b). 07.
Politzer's rapid-fire Brazilian debut had reviewers reaching for comparisons with Eliane Elias. In practice, Kerry is a less virtuosic player, despatching tunes with brisk efficiency and rarely dwelling on an improvisation. The opening 'Twist Of Samba' establishes her credentials but it is the piano/guitar duet with Smith ('Tug Of War') which unveils the extent of her chops. 'Yearning' is a longer ballad and a rather drabber performance. The closing 'Piece For Charlie' is unaccompanied piano and a defiant promise of better things to come.

Watercolour is an awful name for a jazz album and invites snippy comments about pastel piano and wishy-washy playing. In point of fact, the sequel is a much better effort. Stripped to a trio, Politzer's group delivers 11 originals (including another very brief tune for the mysterious Charlie, this time a romantic waltz) and a notably brooding version of 'A Foggy Day'. The playing is more expansive and less obviously Latinized. Nice sound, too.

For the third album she's assembled another new line-up, with Colligan, familiar from his many piano records, a surprise presence at the kit. The programme is all-original, and with the capable Rathbun as a lead voice the music has a lot of interesting turns as it unfolds. 'Paloma' is a particularly appealing piece, with a piano solo that shows a notably distinctive style: unusual voicings and off-kilter rhythms. Higgins and Colligan need to be alert, and they are. The record works best at this kind of brisker pace: her ballad numbers tend towards the merely lugubrious.

You Took Me In is a pop record, which means a parting of the ways, good though it is. She'll be back, though.

Herb Pomeroy (born 1930)

TRUMPET

Studied at Berklee (before it was Berklee), worked with Hampton, Kenton and others, and became a bandleader at MIT. Widely respected as a teacher and arranger.

 Life Is A Many-Splendored Gig Fresh Sound FSRCD 84 Pomeroy; Augie Ferretti, Joe Gordon, Lennie Johnson, Everett Longstreth(t); Joe Ciavardone, Gene DiStachio, Bill Legan(tb); David Chapman, Boots Mussulli(as); Varty Hartounian, Zoot Sims(ts); Deane Haskins(bs); Jaki Byard, Ray Santisi(p); John Neves(b); Jimmy Zitano(d). 6/57.
 Walking On Air Arbors ARCD 19176 Pomeroy; Dave McKenna(p); Grey Sergeant(g); Marshall Wood(b); Jim Gwin(d); Donna Byrne(v). 11/96.
Though widely admired by his peers, Pomeroy is little known to fans as a player or bandleader. The Fresh Sound CD revives an early session for Roulette that includes some nice charts, including Byard's 'Aluminum Baby' and Mussulli's 'Jack Sprat', which seems to be based on the 'Sweet Georgia Brown' sequence. There's nothing dark or profound about this music, which means it's been consistently overlooked, but for admirers of sophisticated big-band music it's an unexpected delight.

There's then a gap of nearly 40 years in the available discography. A few things in between might be turned up in out-of-the-way places. Walking On Air is essentially a showcase for Donna Byrne, who's an unspectacular singer, but it's often the co-leader's subtle muted countermelodies and accompaniments that take the ear, and of course any record with Dave McKenna in the credit box is likely to be of interest. That said, Herb's not to be overlooked as a brassman. He's kept his chops in decent shape and there's no sign of waver in his middle-register playing.

Jimmy Ponder (born 1946)

GUITAR

Pittsburgh-born, and still based there, he began in soul bands but preferred straight-ahead.

 Ain't Misbehavin' High Note HCD 7041 Ponder; Don Braden(ts); John Hicks(p); Dwayne Dolphin(b); Cecil Brooks III(d). 6/98.
 Thumbs Up High Note HCD 7080 Ponder; Dave Pellow(b); Cecil Brooks III(d). 7/00.
 Alone High Note HCD 7069 Ponder (g, v solo). 9/00.
 What's New High Note HCD 7100 Ponder; Gene Ludwig(prg); Cecil Brooks III(d). 8/02.
(*) Somebody's Child High Note HCD 7165 Ponder; Sonny Barbato(p); Douglas Malone, Jeff Grubbs, Tony De Paolis, Mike Taylor(b); Greg Bandy, George Heid(d). 6/03–1/06.
Ponder doesn't seem completely comfortable as a leader and there's the feeling that he sometimes has to be coaxed through these sessions, but even in the distinguished company of the first date he still sounds like the most interesting performer. Although he'll sometimes turn in a boppish performance in the classic manner – 'Three Little Words' is one such – much of his playing is a sometimes stiff but notably personal twisting of R&B licks into jazz shapes. The opening 'On Broadway' is almost as unlike the Benson version as you could expect to hear. Hicks and the rhythm section centre the music, but Braden sounds exhausted and even in the duet of 'Who Can I Turn To' he can barely get started.

The first trio session hits a good groove. Blues lines and a few standards, and the closing 'Funk Wit Dis' gives Brooks a chance to see how his kit works. Probably the one to get to hear Ponder in close-up. The solo date, recorded very quickly thereafter, is pretty good. A solitary vocal on 'Our Day Will Come' leavens a record that threatens to drift into moody indistinctness, though he does some nice things on 'Lullaby Of Birdland', 'Windows Of The World' and the Previn–Previn theme from Valley Of The Dolls. Surprisingly, given its renewed popularity, Ponder hasn't done much in an organ trio format for some time, so What's New is rather welcome. It's a flowing, unfussy date, and Brooks's elegant time-keeping is a key element in its success. Ponder's light sound, with little interest in bass-lines, is heard to best advantage in this setting. The most recent record is really rather good, with Ponder's straight-ahead instincts working intriguingly against the soul-jazz and outright pop instincts of some of the band, who're all presumably Pittsburgh stalwarts.

Valery Ponomarev (born 1943)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

A Muscovite under Clifford Brown's spell, he defected in 1973 and joined Art Blakey in 1977, before leading his own Universal Language.

(*) Means Of Identification /  Trip To Moscow Reservoir RSR 101 / 107 Ponomarev; Ralph Moore(ts); Hideki Takao(p); Dennis Irwin(b); Kenny Washington(d). 4/85.

* A Star For You Reservoir RSR CD 150 Ponomarev; Bob Berg(ts); Sid Simmons(p); Ken Walker(b); Billy Hart(d). 4/97.

 The Messenger Reservoir RSR 166 Ponomarev; Michael Karn(ts); Sid Simmons(p); Martin Zenker(b); Jimmy Cobb(d). 8/00.

 Beyond The Obvious Reservoir RSR 186 Ponomarev; Don Braden(ts); Martin Zenker(b); Jerome Jennings(d). 9/05.

Universal Language is a rather wonderful band name for a man who left Russia during the deep freeze of the Brezhnev years in order to play jazz in the West. The trumpeter nevertheless takes palpable delight in his music. Means Of Identification is certainly the place to begin with him. As will be seen from the names, Universal Language is a multiracial outfit – black, white, Japanese, Slavic – united by the Esperanto of hard bop. When Ponomarev was with the Messengers, Art let him loose on 'I Remember Clifford' night after night. It's the outstanding performance here, a flowing, feeling solo on what the trumpeter considers to be one of the greatest jazz compositions ever. His admiration is evident, as it is for Art Blakey himself in 'Envoy', a fresh and soulful original. The opening 'Dialogue' pits him against Moore, an exciting duel which recalls the great Blue Note recordings.

Almost inevitably, the follow-up isn't quite so forceful. 'For You Only' combines sinew and tenderness, and much of the second album seems devoted to underlining the point that Ponomarev isn't just a fast-valve showman but a player of real expressive range. The point is well made, but one could have done with a little variation in the pace and content.

A Star For You remains the vintage Universal Language to date. Ponomarev makes it clear that this is a set very much dedicated to the spirit and memory of Art Blakey, perhaps because the 25th anniversary of his arrival in America wasn't so far away. The opening 'Commandments From A Higher Authority' is absolutely in the spirit of the Messengers' great days, a wheeling, driving theme which never quite comes to rest but exudes authority in every measure. Bob Berg is the key addition to this group, superb on 'Dance Intoxicant' and the long standard 'We'll Be Together Again', adding a warm-toned confidence to every track. Simmons and Walker get to show why they got the call, playing with intelligence and taste, never over-fussy, but subtle when the tune calls for another dimension.

The Messenger is another fine, polished album from Valery, who as he approaches 60 sounds more and more relaxed in his delivery without losing the bite and fire he brings to his trumpet work. On flugelhorn, he tends now to be noticeably mellower, and his ballad playing has a wistful quality that is genuinely moving. 'Stardust', these days a signature piece for Wynton Marsalis, receives an archetypal reading, full of warmth, but with a gently ambiguous quality that suggests the singer is enchanted and slightly nonplussed. Of the originals, 'Escape From Gorki Park' and 'Messenger From Russia' are the best, both of them well-structured hard-bop themes with individual touches in the harmony.

'Sale On Love' is perhaps an indication of how much Ponomarev is now thrown back on his background in the music (it's just the Cole Porter song, reworked) but also of how imaginatively he is still able to pull it off. It's an interesting band, with Braden in good shape and some excellent work from the young drummer, who has enough of Blakey's fire to make him exciting. Valery sounds in good lip, though some of the burnish has gone.

Odean Pope (born 1938)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

Pope was born in the intriguingly named Ninety Six, North Carolina, but moved to Philadelphia as a child. He worked with Max Roach and in an inventive band called Catalyst before forming his own Saxophone Choir.

(*) The Saxophone Choir Soul Note 121129 Pope; Robert Landham(f); Julian Pressley, Sam Reed(as); Bootsie Barnes, Arthur Daniel, Bob Howell(ts); Joe Sudler(bs); Eddie Green(p); Gerald Veasley(b); Dave Gibson(d). 10/85.

* The Ponderer Soul Note 121229 Pope; Byard Lancaster, Julian Pressley, Sam Reed(as); Glenn Guidone, Bob Howell, Middy Middleton, John Simon(ts); Joe Sudler(bs); Eddie Green(p); Tyrone Brown, Gerald Veasley(b); Cornell Rochester(d). 3/90.

 Epitome Soul Note 121279 As above, except omit Lancaster, Veasley, Rochester; add Robert Landham(as); Dave Burrell(p); Craig McIver(d). 10/93.

'I tried to imagine what it would sound like if I played at the bottom range of my instrument like Coltrane played at the top.' This is pretty much what Odean Pope has done. If he sounds less like his fellow Philadelphian (and native North Carolinian) and more like Sam Rivers or even Jimmy Heath, Pope is nevertheless profoundly influenced by some less exposed aspects of Coltrane's approach: its concern with ensembles rather than its torrential outpouring of personal feelings, its rootedness rather than its

God-bothering excursions. Pope is a profoundly modest individual who aligns himself with the pianist Ibn Hassan Ali's belief that Coltrane's music is a not quite conscious expression of some higher state. Behind Pope's Saxophone Choir is the fiery, inchoate music of Ascension, but also something of the voicing of the later Ellington orchestras, as they negotiated with 'world music'.

Pope has not been prolific. He rehearses the Choir meticulously and then records live in the studio with no overdubs. The charts are intricate and demanding, a broad orchestral sound punctuated with episodes from a roster of players who, like the leader himself, are not well-known outside this context. Byard Lancaster, also a Philadelphian, has an earthy wail redolent of Jackie McLean and Ornette Coleman, and he blends perfectly with Pope's multiphonics on 'The Ponderer', title-piece on the best of the Choir albums. Like the others, it has a strong internal consistency and is almost written like a continuous symphonic work, from 'Overture' to the Spanish-tinged 'Phrygian Love Theme'. Eddie Brown's 'One For Bubba' serves as an encore piece and a chance for the rhythm section to do its stuff.

Pope has tremendous gifts as a composer, layering rhythmic figures and harmonies in a way that parallels some of Ornette's 'harmolodic' experiments, but still making sense; Ellington again doesn't seem far away on 'The Saxophone Shop', the slightly ragged opener on the 1985 album. Epitome is the most ambitious but also the weakest of the bunch. The addition of Dave Burrell was inspired, opening up a rich, almost gospelly vein, and the recruitment of Craig McIver, in place of Rochester, was to be a particularly fruitful one for Pope. 'Zanzibar Blue' is the outstanding track.

(*) Collective Voices CIMP 124 Pope; Tyrone Brown(b); Craig McIver(d). 8/96.

Unexpected to hear Pope in this context after years with the Choir. Brown and McIver are alumni, but Pope's association with the bassist goes all the way back to a criminally undervalued band called Catalyst, which they founded in 1972. Brown was the inspiration for the Eddie Brown original, 'One For Bubba', which ends The Ponderer, and his funky, loose-shouldered bass-lines are the foundation of this small group. He contributes three strong originals to this session: one of them a tribute to classical bassist Gary Karr, and another, 'El Monte', arranged as a duo for bass and saxophone.

Pope has worked in various Max Roach groups over the years, but he is not immediately thought of as a small-group player. The Coltrane influence is ever more deeply and inextricably enmeshed in a very personal idiom. On 'Collective Voices' and the two takes of 'You And Me' one can chart the extremes, the one dry and quite abstract, the other keeningly immediate and expressive. The overall impression, as ever, is of music that has been very carefully thought out. There are no throwaway gestures, and if one occasionally longs for a more unfettered and spontaneous expression, it's worth being reminded that there are bins full of cut-price free-for-all jazz in every store, but very little that reflects as much care and perspicacity as this.

 Nothing Is Wrong CIMP 294 Pope; Khan Jamal(vib); Arthur Harper(b); Allen Nelson(d). 8/03.

Some piquancy of contrast between these players although, as with the previous date, Pope's almost lumbering delivery can ground the music at points where it needs to take flight. Jamal tends to riff and play scales behind him rather than offer notable counterpoint. But somehow the music makes an impression: the title-track is an energizing free piece which really hits home, and some of the best playing comes from drummer Nelson, a veteran performer.

(*) Two Dreams CIMP 303 Pope; Carl Grubbs(as); Tyrone Brown(b); Craig McIver(d). 1/04.

Our instinct that Pope needs other horns around him is confirmed by this. Grubbs isn't the most distinctive voice around, but he adds a somewhat lighter, fleeter-limbed element to this brisk, boppish set. 'Quick' is probably the most backward-looking cut, but also the best, while the opening 'Turn Me Loose' establishes a mood that the album as a whole manages to sustain confidently. Brown and McIver are seasoned hands at this now and play with great confidence.

 Locked & Loaded: Live At The Blue Note Half Note 924526 Pope; Robert Landham, Julian Pressley, Louis Taylor(as); Michael Brecker, Terrence Brown, James Carter, Terry Lawson, Elliott Levin, Joe Lovano(ts); Joe Sudler(bs); George Burton(p); Tyrone Brown(b); Craig McIver(d). 12/04.

The Saxophone Choir, caught in residence at the New York club and in cracking form, even without the spirited contribution of the guest players. The opening 'Epitome' gives a sense of what the basic band can do, working at first without rhythmic accompaniment and providing the leader/arranger with a first, sombre solo. Michael Brecker takes a spot on the fiery 'Prince Lasha', a tribute to one of the most intriguing figures of modern jazz, then Joe Lovano takes a more reflective stroll through 'Cis'. At the heart of the set, a two-part mini-suite consisting of Pope's arrangement of Coltrane's 'Central Park West' and 'Coltrane Time'. The composer didn't himself solo on the former of these, which has been covered elsewhere by Lovano, but it's Pressley and Taylor who take the main feature on this, playing with a freshness and energy that subtly repositions the song. 'Coltrane Time' puts Pope back in the spotlight, alongside Brecker. The finale takes the music out into free territory on 'Terrestrial', easily the most challenging thing here, and then in again on 'Muntu Chant', where Carter plays with joyous abandon. A wonderful set by a consistently fascinating musician whose devotion to saxophone ensembles has delivered a unique body of music.

 The Mystery Of Prince Lasha CIMP 330 Pope; Prince Lasha(as); Tyrone Brown(b); Craig McIver(d). 5/05.

Forth Worth-born Prince Lasha made a couple of records of his own, but is best known for his early association with Ornette Coleman and for working with Eric Dolphy. His 'mystery' is largely where he has been for the last 40 years. Pope gets the veteran out of 'retirement' for this oddly breezy and uncluttered set. It doesn't add much to our understanding of Lasha and it's a reasonably routine outing for Pope as well, who seems keen to cede the limelight to his quasi-legendary partner.

(*) To The Roach CIMP LTD 353 Pope; Matt Davis(g); Michael Taylor (b); Craig McIver(d, perc). 5/06.

Dedicated to Max Roach, with whom Pope worked for many years, and featuring a guitar in the line-up for the first time, this seems to retread old ground and cut new furrows at one and the same time. The guitarist is immediately in evidence on the opening title-cut and establishes a strong presence throughout the set, reminiscent of his own work as leader. 'Blues It' and 'Harpology' follow a similar trajectory: mazy lines delivered with a lot of weight and substance. 'Let's Meet Again' is based on a naggingly familiar standard, but 'To The Roach, Part 2' and 'The Last Stop', which round out the set, are pure, triple-distilled Pope, tough, engaging themes that require some repetition to get under the fingers and into the head. There's no particular difficulty reconciling these freer projects with the Saxophone Choir work, but increasingly Pope's discography seems split into two distinct streams.

Also, in brief:

 Ninety-Six Enja 9091. 10/85.
Ninety-Six (South Carolina) is Pope's birthplace. A thoughtful but weighty trio session, mostly originals, but with a fine reading of 'Coltrane Time'.

 Ebioto Knitting Factory KFR 245. 8/99.
Coltrane and some earlier spirits are again deep inside the heavy, almost battle-weary playing, but the cloudy sound doesn't help him and the music unfolds in an effortful manner.

 Changes & Chances CIMP 191. 1/99.
Pope and Dave Burrell (p) find surprising common ground. If the history of jazz really is 'Three Four vs Four Four', then the result here is an amicable and thoroughly stimulating draw. Unusually, recorded away from CIMP's home base at Rossie, NY.

Michel Portal (born 1935)

SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, BASS CLARINET, BANDONEON

Pope and Dave Burrell (p) find surprising common ground. If the history of jazz really is 'Three Four vs Four Four', then the result here is an amicable and thoroughly stimulating draw. Unusually, recorded away from CIMP's home base at Rossie, NY.

* Alors! Future GER 13 Portal; John Surman(as, bs, bcl); Barre Phillips(b); Stu Martin(d); Jean-Pierre Drouet(perc). 1/70.
(*) ¡Dejarme Solo! Dreyfus Jazz Line 849231 Portal (sax, clarinets, perc, acc solo). 79.
In 1970 Portal was working with John Surman, and a decade later he too was exploring solo performance. The solo record will certainly recall some of Surman's work, not least in its confident incorporation of folk themes, but there is a jaggedness and angularity to Portal's attack that are very different from the Englishman's softer and more accommodating accents. The record and the individual tracks are quite brief and enigmatically poetic. There are no wasted gestures. Portal has a remarkable ability to make even extremes of sonority, as from sopranino to contrabass clarinet, sound perfectly natural and idiomatic.

Alors! reappeared only recently. This is basically Portal as a guest with The Trio and most of the writing is by the English-based group. Portal only writes one track, but his dry, rasping voice is heard all the way through, a refreshing counterbalance to Surman's more familiar tones.

 Arrivederci Le Chouartse hatOLOGY 572 Portal; Léon Francioli(b); Pierre Favre(d, perc). 10/80.
This live date was the first time that Favre and Portal had played together in some considerable time and there is a real air of expectation as bass and percussion set up a long, enigmatic introduction before Portal enters and whirls the trio away on a half-hour-long improvisation that must count as one of the best in his recorded career, full of classical and jazz references, but driven by his own impeccable logic. The rest of the set consists of two improvisations linked somewhat tenuously and designed to showcase Portal's clarinet-playing. Though the association with Favre is probably deeper as well as longer, he works off the bassist's cues more often than not, weaving together unrelated phrases and 16th-note figures into long lines of melody that spin out and round the hall before being picked up by one of the others and reinterpreted. Francioli is masterful, capable of everything from classical abstraction to rolling, funky ostinati that would do a Detroit or Philly session-man proud. It's beautifully recorded and packed with atmosphere. Out of circulation for a while, it's a welcome reappearance in the hatHUT catalogue.

 Fast Mood RCA 344102 Portal; Martial Solal(p). 82.
The Solal discography contains many duo sessions of this sort, but few with this degree of quiet sophistication. Portal is his ideal partner and the music speaks for itself. Something is slightly odd about the balance and positioning of the two voices, with the piano often sounding behind the reeds in the stereo picture, with a resultant loss of detail.

 Cinémas Label Bleu LBLC 6576 Portal; Paolo Fresu(t); Laurent Dehors, Guillaume Orti(sax); Rita Marcotulli(p, syn); Andy Emler(syn); Ralph Towner(g); Nguyên Lê(g, syn); Richard Galliano(acc); Michel Benita, Linley Marthe, François Moutin(b); Tony Rabeson, Aldo Romano(d, perc); Mino Cinelu, Doudou N'Diaye Rose(perc); Juan José Mosalini Et Son Grand Orchestre De Tango. 95.
Portal describes this project as 'various kinds of music for the cinema outplayed with jazz musician friends'. *Out*playing may distort a little in the translation, but it is clear that Portal has given his chums free rein to reinterpret these seven movie themes and one television score, the music for Michel Polac's much-admired Droit de réponse. This is played with just Mino Cinelu in accompaniment. Other tracks, like 'Champ D'Honneur', find Portal in a horn-led sextet, or backed by Doudou N'Diaye Rose's tambours, or indeed, on 'Docteur Petio', with a whole tango orchestra. The results are beguiling and thoroughly unexpected, though the sheer range of styles may be bewildering.

* Dockings Label Bleu LBLC 6604 Portal; Markus Stockhausen(t); Bojan Zulfikarpašić(p); Bruno Chevillon, Steve Swallow(b); Joey Baron(d). 6/97.
A quiet masterpiece from an all-star band. Portal's daring in using such strong musical personalities so delicately and sparingly more than pays dividends, and it would be hard to imagine a record of such poise and grace. Baron and Swallow happily move between insistent ostinato figures and more or less free time, leaving Chevillon to anchor the basic metre. Bojan Z is as usual tasteful and responsive, and the two horns are deployed with great subtlety. Though there isn't a vibraphone, the most obvious model for the sound is the Dolphy group of Out To Lunch! (Eric is the dedicatee of the second track), but rendered ever more abstractly lyrical. Stockhausen has the penetrating intensity of a Freddie Hubbard, but with a softer and more plangent quality. The mourning dove timbre of Portal's clarinet on 'Dolphy', building in intensity over Baron's pattering accompaniment, is matched only by their interaction on 'Ida Lupino', this time with Portal on bandoneon.

(*) Concerts Dreyfus FDM 36661 Portal; Richard Galliano(acc). 10/98–5/03.
Galliano has been a frequent collaborator, and as a bandoneon player himself Portal understands the language of the accordion better than most. Some of this borders on easy listening, but there is grit and muscle, too, and tracks like 'Little Tango' and the apparently improvised 'Face To Face' repay careful attention.

* Minneapolis /  Minneapolis We Insist! /  Dipping In Minneapolis Universal 1351129 / 017796 / 066115 3CD Portal; Tony Hymas(ky); Vernon Reid, Jef Lee Johnson(g); Sonny Thompson(b); Michael Bland(d). 2/01, 2/02.

Portal has never been constrained by any one style or market niche, so it's hardly surprising to find him working in this kind of vein. After the subtle eloquence of Dockings, though, this is an embarrassing mistake, pseudo-hip fusion that never convinces. The second disc is unaccountably much better. The personnel offers a fairly decipherable sense of what the music is like. Some of the tracks are improvs or collective compositions, but the opening 'Goodbye Pork Pie Hat' suggests a crowd-pleasing instinct that's kept in view pretty much all the way through. 'Donimonk' is the longest and best cut, but Michel's solo intros to some of the tracks are more than functional miniatures. Dipping brings together the two previous albums together with some promotional EPs and some other unreleased material. It may be that the original albums are still available singly.

Also, in brief:

 Châteauvallon, 23 Août 1972 Emarcy 038 352. 8/72.

The Portal Unit caught live. Some doubts about the dating and provenance of this disc.

Chris Potter (born 1970)

TENOR, ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES, BASS CLARINET, ALTO AND CHINESE WOOD FLUTES

Born in South Carolina. He studied at the Manhattan School and was gigging with Red Rodney when barely into his 20s.

(*) Presenting Chris Potter Criss Cross Jazz 1067 Potter; John Swana(t, flhn); Kevin Hays(p); Christian McBride(b); Lewis Nash(d). 12/92.

(*) Sundiata Criss Cross Jazz 1107 Potter; Kevin Hays(p); Doug Weiss(b); Al Foster(d). 12/93.

Potter has grown into one of the major saxophonists of today. The astonishingly confident and full-blooded debut shows his prowess with any one of his chosen horns, and there's amazingly little to choose between his alto- (which he's subsequently all but given up) and tenor-playing. Both of them are muscular in the post-bop manner but full of surprising stylistic twists that make one think of both Parker's generation and the elegant elaborations of Benny Carter and Hodges. The breakneck opener, 'Juggernaut', is a typical young man's manifesto, but just as impressive are the various approaches to Monk's 'Reflections', Davis's 'Solar' and the five originals by the leader. One could single out Potter's consistently powerful tone, his reluctance to go too far out for effect or the thematic weight applied to all his improvisations; it's the way all this is combined that is impressive. He also gets the best out of the sometimes erratic Swana as a front-line partner, and Hays, McBride and Nash are a superb team. Sundiata is a shade behind: a little of Potter's playing exuberance seems to have been held back, and on a set-piece like 'Body And Soul' his lines of thinking are a mite too calculated to convince. That said, there's still plenty of terrific music.

(*) Unspoken Concord CCD 4775 Potter; John Scofield(g); Dave Holland(b); Jack DeJohnette(d). 5/97.

Potter does his inevitable all-star date and makes it sound easy. 'Seven Eleven' and 'Et Tu Brute?' are brainy blowing vehicles which sum up an aspect of the saxophonist's approach: he likes form but always finds ways to get round it. One could argue that his band-mates are close to the record-too-far zone and sometimes there's the feeling that we've heard Sco, Dave and Jack do this groove so often that it's a comfortable stroll where it should be an urgent sprint. As quartet music, though, this is cut and delivered at a very high level, and the two tunes which the guitarist sits out give Potter the chance to seal his stature.

(*) Vertigo Concord CCD 4843-2 Potter; Joe Lovano(ts); Kurt Rosenwinkel(g); Scott Colley(b); Billy Drummond(d). 4/98.

Vertigo is another step in 'helping me get to the next level'. As fine as many of the records under his own name are, nothing feels like a flat-out masterpiece so far, and his numerous sideman appearances betoken a player who loves to take gigs but is in some ways shy of asserting himself as the major personality on a record. Rosenwinkel (who worked with Potter in the Paul Motian Electric Bebop Band) is one of the most challenging players he's recorded with, and he makes more sense in this context than the ubiquitous Lovano, whose appearance on three tracks is more of a distraction than a help to the leader. Potter's solo intro to 'Act III, Scene I' sets out his stall, but the subsequent piece itself is an undeveloped episode. Better – outstanding, in fact – are the knotty improvisations he conjures out of the likes of 'Fishy'.

 This Will Be Storyville STCD 101 4245 Potter; Kasper Tranberg(c); Peter Fuglsang(f, bcl); Kevin Hays(p); Jacob Fisher(g); Scott Colley(b); Billy Drummond(d). 3/00.

Potter was the most youthful winner of the Jazzpar prize when he collected it in 2000, and the celebratory concerts certainly have a forward-looking and optimistic feel. The leader's quartet play two pieces and an encore, and in the middle is 'Jazzpar Suite', which features the extra musicians in a six-part work. It's a pity that Potter's small group didn't get to play the entire programme, since their pieces are far and away the most creative music on show; in comparison, the septet music seems laboured. The record's uncomplicated sound captures something of Potter's in-person presence, though.

(*) Gratitude Verve 549433-2 Potter; Kevin Hays(p); Scott Colley(b); Brian Blade(d). 9/00.

If Potter's major-label move held any fears for him, you wouldn't know from this confident sprint through the history of jazz saxophone, conceived as a salute to a string of masters old and new. Some of the jumping around from horn to horn – he gets through six of them here, including a debut on Chinese wood flute – underlines that this would be a record pitched as a coming-out, even after all those listed above. It's still rather coolly conceived, too. The opening dedication to Coltrane, 'The Source', avoids the master's grandest gestures and scales him down to a kind of pocket-size, and 'Sun King' is Rollins refracted through 'an odd-meter context' that needs all four men to keep their eye unswervingly on the pulse. Here, and in the best of the session, one gets the exultant feel of players at the top of their game, even if they're not necessarily saying anything strikingly original as they go. Hays, who's been somewhat in shadow since his Blue Note albums, performs well, and Colley and Blade are top-notch. But at a few key points Potter's concept gets away from him; he brings little of interest to the Parker piece, 'Star Eyes', and the flute tune 'Vox Humana' sits oddly with the rest.

 Underground Verve/Sunnyside 983515-2 Potter; Craig Taborn(p); Wayne Krantz, Adam Rogers(g); Nate Smith(d). 05.

Though this album is on Verve in some territories, Potter has basically gone indie again by signing to Sunnyside. His first for them is a crunching mix of funk and jazz that enlists Taborn, Krantz and Smith (Rogers arrives for a single track) in a supersmart display of chopsmanship. 'Lotus Blossom' and the Beatles' 'Yesterday' take a more considered line, but those yearning for the classicism of Potter's early records are likely to be disappointed. In its snapping, almost brutal way, well done.

 Songs For Anyone Sunnyside SSCD 3074 Potter; Greg Tardy(sax); Steve Cardenas(g); Mark Feldman(vn); Scott Colley(b); Adam Cruz(d, perc); string quartet. 8/07.
Working as an independent again, Potter seems to have got back some of his old creative spark, though this hardly matches up to the creative energy of the early Criss Crosses. It's an intelligent CD, and some of the writing and individual contributions are fascinating, but it doesn't have the whip-smart spontaneity of previous projects and the string tracks slow it down even further. A pity: just when he seemed to be delivering …

(*) Follow The Red Line: Live At The Village Vanguard Sunnyside 3075 Potter; Craig Taborn(p); Adam Rogers(g); Nate Smith(d).
This wasn't the moment for a live record, but for a well-crafted set of jazz tunes, without the appurtenances that have afflicted recent work. It's better than some of the later albums, but Potter seems to play fast and play a lot of notes for the sake of it and one ends up listening to the subtler work of Taborn and Rogers instead. Still, with his last two records, he does seem to be working back towards a genuinely creative direction.

Also, in brief:

* Chris Potter/Kenny Werner: Concord Duo Series: Vol. 10 Concord CCD 4695. 10/94.
'Istanbul (Not Constantinople)' is very fast and funny and the two guys go at the set like a pair of boy racers, with Potter mostly in the lead.

(*) Moving In Concord CCD 4723. 2/96.
Although Brad Mehldau (p) was a hired gun for this quartet date, it's an intriguing meeting between two of the sharpest players of their generation.

(*) Traveling Mercies Verve 018243-2. 1/02.
'Potter-the-composer' wins out over the improvising musician, with extraneous noise and effects thrown in to no purpose.

Tommy Potter (1918–88)

DOUBLE BASS

A key sideman in the early days of bebop, he was Charlie Parker's bassist for some years. Virtually retired by the '60s.

 Hard Funk In Sweden Jazz Connections JC 1008 Potter; Rolf Ericson(t); Åke Persson(tb); Gunnar 'Hacke' Björksten, Erik Norström(ts); Stig Gabrielsson, Larg Gullin(bs); Freddie Redd(p); Joe Harris(d). 7 & 9/56.
Ironically, given how poorly audible he was on contemporary recordings, it was Potter's clear articulation and precise tonality that attracted him to Bird and other leaders. Until the CD era, he was fated to be seen as something of a bystander in the bebop revolution. Fans of the style may well be surprised to find Potter as a leader. Most of these sides were issued as EPs by Swedish Metronome and then gathered onto an LP by American East–West. They're typical bop fare of the time, enlivened by some fiery trumpet-playing by Ericson and some in-the-spirit alto by Björksten, who was credited as 'Woody Birch' rather charmingly on the original releases. The real plus of the CD is a bonus group of tracks recorded in Värnamo before the studio recordings, with Ericson and Gullin at a summer gig. They actually make more than half the disc, and an epic read of 'A Night In Tunisia', which like all the tracks features a fine Potter solo, is the highlight.

Bud Powell (1924–66)

PIANO

He grew up in New York City and from the age of 16, sponsored by Thelonious Monk, was jamming at Minton's Playhouse. Though he adopted certain devices of older piano-players Art Tatum and Teddy Wilson, Monk was his main influence, using unfamiliar intervals and adapting saxophone-lines. Suffered mental disturbance, possibly innate, but exacerbated by a racially motivated beating in 1945, from which he never recovered.

 Bud Powell, 1945–1947 Classics 1003 Powell; Kenny Dorham, Fats Navarro, Freddie Webster(t); Sonny Stitt(as); Frank Socolow, Morris Lane(ts); Eddie de Verteuil(bs); Al Hall, Curley Russell(b); Kenny Clarke, Irv Kluger, Max Roach(d). 45–47.

* The Complete Bud Powell On Verve Verve 521669-2 5CD Powell; Ray Brown, George Duvivier, Percy Heath, Curley Russell, Lloyd Trotman(b); Art Blakey, Kenny Clarke, Osie Johnson, Max Roach, Art Taylor(d). 5/49–2/51, 54–56.

 Bud Powell, 1949–1950 Classics 1170 Powell; Fats Navarro(t); Sonny Rollins(ts); Ray Brown, Tommy Potter(b); Curley Russell, Buddy Rich, Max Roach(d). 49–50.

* Tempus Fugue-It Properbox 1022 4CD Powell; Miles Davis, Kenny Dorham, Leonard Hawkins, Fats Navarro, Tommy Stevenson, George Treadwell, Freddy Webster, Cootie Williams, Lammar Wright Sr(t); Edward Burk, Ed Glover, Bob Horton, J. J. Johnson(tb); Charlie Parker, Cecil Payne, Frank Powell, Sonny Stitt, Eddie 'Cleanhead' Vinson(as); Eddie 'Lockjaw' Davis, Dexter Gordon, Morris Lane, Lee Pope, Sonny Rollins, Frank Socolow, Sam 'The Man' Taylor(ts); Leo Parker, Eddie de Verteuil(bs); Leroy Kirkland(g); Ray Brown, Leonard Gaskin, Norman Keenan, Tommy Potter, Carl Pruitt, Curley Russell, Ted Sturgis(b); Wallace Bishop, Art Blakey, Kenny Clarke, Al Hall, Roy Haynes, Irv Kluger, Sylvester Payne, Buddy Rich, Max Roach(d); Sarah Vaughan(v). 44–50.

 Mad Bebop /  The Complete 1946–1949 Roost/Blue Note/Verve Swing Masters / * The Ultimate Bud Powell / (*) The Best Of Bud Powell On Verve Savoy 17183 / Definitive 11145 3CD / Verve 539788-2 / 523392-2 Similar to above. 44–47; 46–49; 49–56; 49–55.
The chronology of Bud Powell's issued records is slightly complex. It was an intermittent career and Bud had bad performing nerves. The first Classics volume brings together some remarkable 1946 sessions with Kenny Dorham, Fats Navarro and Sonny Stitt that immediately point to how remarkable the 22-year-old already was, albeit in a raw-toned and unfinished way. The earliest things are with a group fronted by tenor man Frank Socolow, but then follow those fine Be Bop Boys sides, followed by the trio dates with Curley Russell and Max Roach which mark the emergence of Bud as a significant solo voice.

Mad Bebop is a piece of shrewd repackaging, with tracks cut for other leaders repackaged (and beautifully remastered from original acetates and source tapes) as if they were Bud's. The same period is also well covered on the beautifully packaged Tempus Fugue-It, which picks up Bud's story at around the same point and takes it on to a recording with the Charlie Parker quintet in 1950 and the band he co-led with Sonny Stitt at around the same time. In between, some astonishingly good music that works well when heard in chronological order like this. 'Dance Of The Infidels' from the Blue Note dates is a classic and seems enlarged by this broader context. As do the others.

By the end of this remarkable progress, Bud has created a new language for jazz piano, rooted on harmonic centres but moving ever wider beyond them, rhythmically subtle and virtuosic (he frequently has to move ahead of his section players) and driven by a passionate modernism, which comes out strongly on the peerless Blue Notes. There is a hint of manic intensity as well. Listening to these discs one after the other is a wearying experience, not because there are dull spots (very few) but because Powell seems keyed to an unbearable pitch every time he touches the keyboard.

The sheer erratic brilliance of the Blue Note recordings has tended to cloud the remarkable work that Powell did for Norman Granz. The Verve set documents his solo playing just before that catastrophic breakdown of 1951, and takes him through to rather calmer waters. There is no indication that neglect was ever part of Powell's problem. He was well looked after by Verve and they have done him proud with this magnificent five-CD package. Powell's virtuosity shines through the bustling 'Parisian Thoroughfare' (a piece which, like 'Un Poco Loco', always precisely reflects his mood at the moment of playing) and 'A Nightingale Sang In Berkeley Square', which draws heavily on a Tatum influence. No single session on this set really outweighs the Blue Notes below, but cumulatively and collectively this sits beside them, one of the pillars of this most complex man's life-work.

The Classics option is always there and the 1949–50 volume includes mostly good trio sets from this fertile period. There are a couple of horn-led dates as well, with Navarro and Sonny Rollins, but most serious purchasers should consider a more measured (and inevitably expensive) approach to this period via the Definitive complete masters or the Properbox.

Selected by fellow pianist Chick Corea, the Ultimate compilation is an excellent introduction to Bud's Verve output and an ideal purchase for anyone who doesn't want to shell out for the full set. The best-of set contains a lot of overlap – 'Dance Of The Infidels', 'Parisian Thoroughfare', 'Tempus Fugue-It' – but perhaps inevitably gives more emphasis to standards than to Bud originals.

[illegible]

 The Amazing Bud Powell: Volume 1
Blue Note 781503 Powell; Fats Navarro(t); Sonny Rollins(ts); Tommy Potter(b); Roy Haynes(d). 8/49, 5/51.

 The Amazing Bud Powell: Volume 2
Blue Note 781504 Powell (p solo), and with George Duvivier, Curley Russell(b); Max Roach, Art Taylor(d). 5/51 & 8/53.

Despite the linking name and numbered format and the existence of a magnificent boxed set (see below, 'in brief'), the Blue Note CD transfers can quite comfortably be bought separately; indeed Volume 1 – with its multiple takes of 'Bouncing With Bud' (one of which was previously on The Fabulous Fats Navarro: Volume 1), the bebop classic 'Ornithology' and Powell's own barometric 'Un Poco Loco' – was out of print for some time, and the fourth volume was issued only in 1987, after which the whole series was made available again at a very acceptable mid-price. Three and Four have only just reappeared, even though they have to some extent been superseded by the magnificent Complete which is a must for every Powell enthusiast and is denied a crown only because it does have its dark and troublous moments and isn't perhaps the kind of thing you'd want to spend extended periods of time with. The multiple takes of 'Un Poco Loco' are perhaps the best place for more detailed study of Powell's restless pursuit of an increasingly fugitive musical epiphany. 'Parisian Thoroughfare' contrasts sharply with the unaccompanied version, above, and is much tighter; Powell had a more-than-adequate left hand; however, since he conceived of his music in a complex, multilinear way, bass and drums were usually required – not for support, but to help proliferate lines of attack. The quintet tracks are harshly tempered, but with hints of both joy and melancholy from all three front-men; Navarro's almost hysterical edge is at its most effective, and Powell plays as if possessed. Volume 2 contains one of the most famous Powell performances: the bizarre, self-penned 'Glass Enclosure', a brief but almost schizophrenically changeable piece. There are also alternative takes of 'A Night In Tunisia', 'It Could Happen To You', 'Reets And I' and 'Collard Greens And Black Eyed Peas' (better known as 'Blues In The Closet', see below).

(*) Jazz At Massey Hall Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 111 Powell; Charles Mingus(b); Max Roach(d). 5/53.
Jazz At Massey Hall is the rhythm section's spot from the classic Parker/Gillespie concert in Toronto, which has become a trig point for bop fans. If for no other reason, these tracks redirect attention to the enormous influence all three players had on bebop. Powell's schizophrenic opposition of delicate, high-register lines and thudding chords is most obvious on 'Cherokee'. He displaces 'Embraceable You' entirely, losing his two colleagues in the middle choruses as he works out his own romantic agony.

 Birdland 1953 – The Complete Trio Recordings Fresh Sound FSRCD 1017 Powell; George Duvivier, Charles Mingus, Oscar Pettiford, Curley Russell; Franklin Skeete(b); Roy Haynes, Sonny Payne, Max Roach, Art Taylor(d). 2–9/53.
This was Bud's year at the club named after his famous boss. In all there were 13 separate recorded occasions, many of them airshots from WJZ radio. This, of course, was also the year of the Massey Hall concert and known to be a difficult time in Bud's life. Mingus, who features on dates from March, May and July (and possibly one other), was brutally frank about his colleague's condition at this time. In practice, Bud plays well most of the time, packing his solos with new and sometimes unnerving dissonances. Most of this material has been available before, on ESP Disk as Winter/Spring/Summer/Autumn Broadcasts, and elsewhere, but there's much to recommend this two CD package, which has decent sound and accurate documentation.

 From Birdland (New York City 1956) [sic] Musidisc 550202 Powell; Oscar Pettiford(b); Roy Haynes(d). 2/53.
These live tracks, confidently attributed to Birdland and three years later, are identical to the dates of 7 and 14 February, which were taped at the Royal Roost. Even the personnel is wrong and it shouldn't take a seasoned bebop listener too long to work out that they're not listening to Paul Chambers and to a much lighter and busier drummer than Art Taylor. Not the best recording of the period. Some of those below are better; but an interesting set, and the two longish standards performances – 'Tea For Two' and 'Lover Come Back To Me' – throw light on Bud's debt to Tatum and Teddy Wilson.

* Bud Plays Bird Roulette 8 37137 As above. 10 & 12/57, 1/58.
Uncovered by the tireless Michael Cuscuna, these rediscovered masters are the most significant addition to the Powell discography since the release of Francis Paudras's extensive memorial album of Powelliana. Appropriately enough, given the provenance, all the tracks (except for 'Salt Peanuts') are Parker compositions. This is one of the most allusive and far-reaching of all Powell's recordings. He has rarely demonstrated his sheer musical intelligence so clearly, freely associating between harmonically or melodically similar material, at times almost eliding passages which are too familiar and replacing them with new ideas, as on 'Relaxing At Camarillo' and the finger-breaking 'Shaw 'Nuff'. His introduction to 'Yardbird Suite' is actually the opening of Tadd Dameron's 'Our Delight'; 'Big Foot' (aka 'Drifting On A Reed') invokes Dizzy's 'Oop-Pop-A-Da' and (as Ira Gitler very perceptively notes) Allen Eager's 'Meeskite' as well. 'Ornithology' and 'Scrapple From The Apple' are both magnificent, coming from the later and better December and January sessions, by which time the trio seems to have got its balance back. Powell plays inspired piano throughout, but it seems to have taken time to get Duvivier and Taylor, and particularly the bassist's characteristic low-end lines, accurately recorded.

 The Amazing Bud Powell, Volume 4: Time Waits Blue Note 21227 Powell; Sam Jones(b); Philly Joe Jones(d). 5/58.
 The Amazing Bud Powell, Volume 3: Bud! Blue Note 35585 Powell; Curtis Fuller(tb); Paul Chambers(b); Art Taylor(d). 8/58.
Time Waits is perhaps the least interesting of the Blue Notes, which may be why it appears out of chronological sequence. Compared to Chambers and Taylor, the two Joneses offer fairly crude accompaniment and Philly's rush through things, audible on alternate takes of 'John's Abbey' and 'Sub City', blunts one or two of these tracks. Bud himself is playing with fire and considerable intelligence and his solos on 'Time Waits' and the mournfully titled 'Dry Soul' are the old mix of extraordinary harmonic gravity with vigorous counterpoint. Flashes of genius, still. Bud! is back in circulation with an extra track. Otherwise known as the third volume of The Amazing Bud Powell, it consists of five Powell compositions played by the trio and three standards with the addition of Curtis Fuller, who makes an interesting lead voice. The real drama lies in the former tracks, though, and while there is nothing of quite the scarifying intensity of 'Glass Enclosure', the charge that he brings to 'Frantic Francies', 'Bud On Bach' and 'Keepin' In The Groove' is astonishing.

* The Amazing Bud Powell, Volume 5: The Scene Changes Blue Note 46529 Powell; Paul Chambers(b); Art Taylor(d). 12/58.
The cover photograph is heartbreakingly symbolic: a lowering Bud looks down at sheet music on the piano in front of him, rapt, private, shut away with his thoughts, while round his left shoulder a little boy peers guardedly, like his own lost younger self. These 1958 performances for Blue Note were an attempt to rekindle the fires. All the material is original and, though most of it harks back to the bop idiom rather than forward to anything new, it contains some of his most significant statements of any period. 'Comin' Up', of which there is also an alternative take, is in the released version his longest studio performance, and one of his most exuberant and playful, almost Latinate in feel. 'Down With It' is generic bebop and not a particularly effective idea, a long melody line over orthodox changes, and only really distinguished for Chambers's fine arco solo. There was an earlier tune called 'Crossin' The Channel'; this, though, is Bud's alone and is the most formally constructed piece in the set, the one item that marks him down as a significant composer. 'The Scene Changes' is the final track on the original LP. It's a curious piece in that it looks back more than forward, almost as if the next scene were fated to be like the last.

(*) Round About Midnight At The Blue Note Dreyfus Jazz Line 849227 Powell; Pierre Michelot(b); Kenny Clarke(d). 4/61.
Michelot and fellow-exile Clarke are as attentive as courtiers, and Bud himself sounds unusually focused and responsive to what they in turn are doing, frequently making space for Michelot's miniature counter-melodies. Very much a straight bebop gig, it also points strongly to Bud's debt to Thelonious Monk, which is evident on 'Monk's Mood', 'Round Midnight' and 'Thelonious'.

 A Tribute To Cannonball Adderley Columbia CK 65186 Powell; Idrees Sulieman(t); Julian 'Cannonball' Adderley(as); Don Byas(ts); Pierre Michelot(b); Kenny Clarke(d). 12/61.
(*) A Portrait Of Thelonious Columbia CK 65187 Powell; Pierre Michelot(b); Kenny Clarke(d). 12/61.
Two sessions produced in Paris by Cannonball. His role was more complicated than the average producer's for, in addition, the first record is a tribute to him, and he also plays on one previously unheard track. The collaboration with Byas was a happy one for Bud, who was in better shape at this time than he had been in a couple of years, and certainly he is playing with confidence and passion. The trumpeter plays on only a few of the tracks and the quartets are frankly better. Byas's pre-bop stylings and instinct for the blues don't always sit entirely easily with Bud's approach, but they manage to broker some common ground and Bud puts more blues feel into his playing than usual. 'Jackie, My Little Cat' appears in an alternative take which is actually better than the release version, and there is a previously unissued retake of 'Cherokee' which has a lot going for it as well, not least that cameo by Cannonball. Sulieman makes his most significant intervention on the Dameron tune 'Good Bait', tackling it with aplomb. 'All The Things You Are' is awash with memories of days with Bird and Dizzy, as saxophonist and piano-player swap quotes, and doubtless reminiscences as well.

Recorded two days later, the Monk record is no less accomplished. Powell had been in on this particular story almost from the beginning; at 19, as a member of the Cootie Williams Orchestra, he performed on the first recorded version of 'Round Midnight' and had subsequently gone on to become the other major piano innovator in the bebop revolution. The eight tunes recorded (there is also an unreleased take of 'Squatty') come from pretty much across the spectrum of Monk's output. 'Monk's Mood' is the longest track and one of the very best, with feeling support from Michelot, who it is known practised and rehearsed on his own for some time before these sessions and who certainly sounds absolutely on song for them. Clarke is his usual relaxed but hard-driving self and on 'Ruby, My Dear' he excels himself, playing with taste and imagination. These were rather special moments in Powell's life. In the city which had become his other home, with sensitive playing companions and a producer who knew the material inside out as well, he could hardly fail.

(*) At The Golden Circle: Volumes 1–5 /  Swedish Pastry /  Budism Steeplechase SCCD 36001 / 36002 / 36009 / 36014 / 36017 / 37045 2CD / 30007/9 3CD Powell; Torbjørn Hultcranz(b); Sune Spångberg(d). 4/62.

There are a great many live European recordings of Bud. Some are good, others awful, but the majority don't really stand up on their own terms. Steeplechase have long been guilty of excessive documentation. One sharply edited disc from the 19 April 1962 gig would have been more than adequate, but now at least the label has put out the first two volumes in a budget edition as Swedish Pastry; a single rating for all these records might look a bit broad-brush, but there are limitations throughout. The Stockholm session finds Powell wavering between the hesitant and the near-brilliant, without ever quite capturing the quality of the previous decade. The rhythm section play about as much part in the music as Rosencrantz and Guildenstern do in Hamlet – though, like most Scandinavian players, they seem well enough versed in the idiom. Volume 3 has a second version of 'I Remember Clifford' from later in the residency; the last three all come from 23 April and are of more than passing interest, but by this stage the whole exercise seems rather redundant. Four volumes of Powell at his best would still call for stamina. Volume 5 is probably a disc too far, especially when it makes room for a ludicrous off-mic vocal on 'This Is No Laughing Matter'. There is, however, a fine 20-minute version of 'Straight, No Chaser', which makes up for it somewhat.

Budism is uncertainly dated, with the exception of ten tracks which are known to come from the autumn residency. Listening to the tracks one by one, instinct suggests that they may well all come from the later period. There are a few small rhythmic devices which don't seem to be audible on the earlier sessions, most notably a sharp trill near the start of 'Dance Of The Infidels' on disc three (one of the definite September tracks), which crops up again on 'Epistrophy' and 'Off Minor' on the uncertainly provenanced disc one. Amorphous as the changes are, one might fudge it by saying that Budism is a more 'Monkish' selection, stylistically speaking, than the earlier Steeplechases.

 Paris Sessions Pablo 2310972 Powell; Dizzy Gillespie(t); Zoot Sims, Barney Wilen(ts); Guy Hayat, Pierre Michelot, Gilbert Rovere(b); Kenny Clarke, Kansas Fields, Jacques Gervais(d). 57–64.
 Parisian Thoroughfares Pablo 0976 Powell; Clark Terry(t, flhn); Peanuts Holland(t); Eric Peter, Zoot Sims, Barney Wilen(ts); Rene Thomas(g); Pierre Michelot(b); Kenny Clarke, Daniel Humair(d). 57–64.
In our first edition, we reviewed the complete vinyl edition of Paris recordings made of Bud by his friend and protector (and character in Round Midnight) Francis Paudras. The first of these is a very good one-volume sampling of tracks which found Bud mostly happy and, if not playing with the fiery intensity of previous years, certainly still playing well. The choicest cuts here are a live 'Taking A Chance On Love' with Zoot Sims on tenor and a poorly recorded but exciting version of 'How High The Moon' with Dizzy Gillespie. There are lots of short, atmospheric tracks to enjoy and, despite the headlong pace of 'Be Bop', there is a feeing of calm as Bud approached the end of his short life.

Parisian Thoroughfares offers a taste of how Powell played live over the same period. It's a sketchy album, mostly poorly recorded and with an awful lot of Bud singing to himself thanks to unhappy mic placements. It's also probably better value for the guest stars – the irrepressible Terry on 'Miguel's Party', Wilen, Zoot, guitarist Thomas – than for the pianist himself. On the other hand, any vestiges of this short life's achievements are welcome and the opening 'Yesterdays' (austere in its beauty) and 'Omicron' (recorded for French television) are worth having even if the rest palls.

Also, in brief:

* The Complete Blue Note And Roost Recordings Blue Note 830083 4CD. 47–63.
The box set draws a line under Powell's genuinely amazing Blue Note career. All now available separately.

 Bud Powell, 1951–1953 Classics 1373. 2/51–8/53.
An overlap of material for Clef and Blue Note. Some classic (!) tracks in here, but no reason other than cost to recommend this option.

 Live In Lausanne 1962 Stretch 9038. 1/62.
An already heavily documented year. No originals, presumably because his Swiss sidemen were unfamiliar with them.

 Bouncing With Bud Delmark DD 406. 4/62.
Three days after the last Golden Circle date, this has discipline but not much passion.

Roy Powell

PIANO, KEYBOARDS

English-born and subsequently trained, but raised in Canada; he now lives in Oslo.

 North By Northwest Nagel Heyer 2013 Powell; Mike Walker(g); Arild Andersen(b); John Marshall(d). 98.
 Solace Nagel Heyer 2036 Powell; Terje Gewelt(b); Jarle Vespestad(d). 6/03.
(*) Rendezvous: Live In London Nagel Heyer 2075 Powell; Terje Gewelt(b); Andreas Bye(d). 2/04.
Powell's style might be described as decisively delicate. He prefers a slow-medium tempo, likes circling melodies that dwell in wistful climes and takes his own sweet time over an improvisation. At least, that's the impression gleaned from the moody patterns of Solace, which is impeccably delivered if finally too one-dimensional to really sustain interest for its full duration. The earlier North By Northwest will appeal to slightly more visceral tastes, since it features guitarist Walker at an altogether higher temperature and the Andersen–Marshall team playing in a more red-blooded, almost fusion-directed style than they have done for some time. Even here, though, a textured piece such as 'Vemod' suggests that Powell's preference is for a more temperate situation.

The live date's terrific. Gewelt's virtues are well-known, Bye's less so, but they seem ideally suited to this programme, which contains a couple of repertory things but consists mostly of nicely textured originals that have sufficient funk and bounce to keep them from drying out. Powell has a nice piano to work on; it doesn't sound too refined to take an occasional drubbing. A good night.

Seldon Powell (1928–97)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

A footsoldier, he was a session-player and staffer at ABC, but worked under an impressive array of jazz leaders.

 Go First Class: The Complete Roost Sessions Fresh Sound FRSCD 422 Powell; Jimmy Nottingham(t); Bob Alexander, Jimmy Cleveland(tb); Pete Mondello(cl, ts); Heywood Henry(cl, bs);

Roland Hanna(p); Billy Bauer, Freddie Green(g); Aaron Bel, Arnold Fishkin(b); Gus Johnson, Osie Johnson, Don Lamond(d). 10 & 11/55, 56.

Constantly busy, but usually below the horizon of visibility, Powell recorded little under his own name. This reissue supersedes an earlier Fresh Sound (FSRCD 93) of just the 1956 sextet tracks. They constitute a brisk, understated set: Hanna, Green, Bell and the Johnson brothers provide unobtrusively swinging backgrounds for some lovely tenor work. Powell has a silky tone that blends beautifully with Cleveland's and, while he never startles, he never stumbles or lapses into cliché. 'A Flower Is A Lovesome Thing' must be the standout track and the one to sample, but 'Woody'n'You' and an unexpected reading of 'Sleepy Time Down South' are almost equally good. The nonet material is obviously more ambitious, but it lacks the suppleness of the smaller group and there's even less chance to sample Seldon out front.

Gerard Presencer (born 1972)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Brilliant young British hornman, now a professor at the Guildhall.

 Platypus Linn AKD 079/139 (SACD) Presencer; Jason Rebello(p); John Parricelli(g); Andrew Cleyndert(b); Jeremy Stacey(d); Chris Fletcher(perc). 00.

 The Optimist Linn AKD 069/ 166 (SACD) Presencer; Graham Harvey, Jim Watson(p); John Parricelli(g); Jeremy Brown, Laurence Cottle, Orlando Le Fleming(b); Jeremy Stacey(d, perc, prog); Miles Bould(perc); Jacqui Dankworth(v); Heavy Horns(brass). 00.

 Chasing Reality Act 10897 Presencer; Joe Locke(vib); Geoff Keezer(p); Tommy Wadlow(ky); Adam Goldsmith, John Parricelli(g); Jeremy Brown(b); Chris Dagley(d). 01.

Presencer plays flugelhorn throughout the debut album, with a warm, fat tone that sits nicely with Rebello's Fender Rhodes and Parricelli's tastefully old-fashioned jazz guitar. Much of the material is by the trumpeter, but 'Still Moanin'' is a wonderful variation on the Bobby Timmons classic: part respectful, part satirical. The rhythm section plays with unfussy authority and the SACD sound is magnificent. It's also available on a regular edition. The Optimist was widely reviled for its apparent sell-out to jazz fusion, but listen closely to Presencer's inventive phrasing and to his sharp writing and such dismissive comments seem irrelevant and prejudicial. He is every bit as impressive on these albums as he seemed as a youngster, making his way as guest hornman on other people's discs. The opening sequence of 'Blah De Blah' and 'Dr Jekyll' puts him in the Donald Byrd camp, a trumpeter whose subtlety is disguised by his affection for a groove.

Chasing Reality was also intended for Linn, but a tape was sent to Siegfried Loch at ACT and was taken up. The music came out of a commission from Birmingham Jazz and was broadcast by the BBC. It's a typical British jazz project: complex, thoughtful and unexpectedly swinging and funky. The other solo voices are hard to keep down and Presencer's own personality comes through strongly, even if the material is forbiddingly impersonal.

André Previn (born 1929)

PIANO

A transplanted Berliner, Previn is still better known as a conductor than as a performer. Jazz remains his first love, though.

 Double Play! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 157 Previn; Russ Freeman(p); Shelly Manne(d). 4 & 5/57.

 Pal Joey /  Gigi Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 637 / 407 Previn; Red Mitchell(b); Shelly Manne(d). 10/57; 4/58.

 Like Previn! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 170 Previn; Red Mitchell(b); Frank Capp(d). 58.

 André Previn And His Pals Fresh Sound FSRCD 106 As above, except add Leroy Vinnegar(b); Shelly Manne(d). 6 & 8/58.

 Plays Songs By Vernon Duke Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1769 Previn (p solo). 8/58.

A concentrated period of activity for Contemporary, and what a gift he must have been for the label, turning up immaculately rehearsed, straight, clean, unimpeachably professional, and then laying down first-take performances one after the other. One suspects there never will be a box of André Previn out-takes and alternatives, and yet there's nothing unswinging or unspontaneous about any of these performances. 'No Words For Dory', on Like Previn!, touches an expressiveness one would not expect from him in this context.

The label quickly cottoned on to the show-based and songbook approaches as quick and effective ways of selecting and theming material. Gigi is predictably skittish and playful, though not without its moments of tenderness. Pal Joey offers more of real musical substance, including the deathless 'I Could Write A Book' and the less well-known 'What Is A Man?'. The Duke portfolio is the only one on which the pianist's classical training becomes evident, turning 'Cabin In The Sky' and 'Autumn In New York' into tiny symphonic statements and 'April In Paris' into an elegant, impressionistic tone-poem.

Double Play! had cast him in a more straight-ahead formula and repertoire, and in retrospect it almost seems the best of the bunch, because the most uncomplicatedly jazz-driven. Ever after, a Previn And His Pals album always seemed to need an angle or a spin; though, as the Fresh Sound compilation suggests, he could deliver the goods in a live context without strain or self-consciousness.

 King Size! Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 691 Previn; Red Mitchell(b); Frank Capp(d). 11/58.

 Plays Songs By Jerome Kern Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1787 Previn (p solo). 2 & 3/59.

 West Side Story Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 422 As for Pal Joey. 8/59.

(*) Plays Songs By Harold Arlen Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1840 Previn (p solo). 5/60.

The pace didn't slacken into 1959 and 1960, though increasingly the approach seems deliberate and even over-programmed. Previn dropped the 'And Pals' tag, and went out for a time as Trio Jazz, though he was also increasingly committed to the idea of solo performance. His minimal opening statements on 'Something's Coming' on West Side Story give way to a brash and tightly belted solo which exactly suits the emotional temper. Typically, though, it degenerates into rather technical figuring, octave jumps and altered chords which are impressive without being very involving. King Size! suffers in much the same way, almost too clever, and the fact that Red Mitchell also had a formidable musical brain only reinforces the impression, as the two attempt to outdo one another.

The songbook albums are again most impressive, though interestingly there is now more unvarnished jazz than in the trios. The Kerns are magnificent. 'All The Things You Are' is little less than a summation of everything Previn had learned about jazz piano, though it's the harmonic shifts on 'Why Do I Love You?' and on Arlen's 'For Every Man There's A Woman' that tug at the heart-strings.

 Give My Regards to Broadway Collectables COL 6695 Previn; Red Mitchell(b); Frank Capp(d). 60.
 Camelot / Thinking Of You /  4 To Go! / The Light Fantastic //  4 To Go! Collectables COL 6086 / 5892 / Columbia 47739 As above, except add Herb Ellis(g); Ray Brown(b); Shelly Manne(d). 60; 12/63.

Two pairs of André's Columbia LPs, teamed on useful compilation sets, plus the more eclectic Give My Regards, which ranges over a number of shows and composers. Camelot has never been one of our favourite Broadway shows and songs like 'The Simple Joys Of Maidenhood' haven't quite forced their way into the jazz mainstream. However, Previn as ever makes a very decent case for them in jazz terms, and while this is certainly not a classic set, it's worth having if you like his thing.

Of the second pairing, the second album was a tribute to Fred Astaire and includes such obvious picks as 'Nice Work If You Can Get It', 'A Foggy Day' and 'Puttin' On The Ritz'. Previn sounds easy and charming, and it's left to Red Mitchell to sound some of the more robust tones. The earlier 4 To Go! is a delight and it's astonishing that Columbia have not seen fit to reissue it, even if only for Previn's deft work on 'Oh, What A Beautiful Morning'.

 After Hours Telarc 83002 Previn; Joe Pass(g); Ray Brown(b). 3/89.
(*) Uptown Telarc 83303 As above, except omit Pass; add Mundell Lowe(g). 3/90.
(*) Old Friends Telarc 83309 As above, except omit Lowe. 8/91.

Previn's renaissance as a jazz pianist was hailed as a return to an old love, but it was also, of course, the resort of a man who had been bruised by orchestral politics. These don't quite have the bounce and the freshness of old and very quickly sound formulaic. Listening back after a gap of some years doesn't change the impression, though Lowe's long-neglected gifts are a source of delight and interest on Uptown. Best to stick with the Contemporarys.

(*) Jazz At The Musikverein Verve 537704 Previn; Mundell Lowe(g); Ray Brown(b). 6/95.
(*) Show Boat Deutsche Grammophon 453 860 As above, except add Grady Tate(d). 96.
(*) We Got Rhythm: A Gershwin Songbook Deutsche Grammophon 453 493 Previn; David Finck(b). N.D.

A long way from the club in The Subterraneans where a very young Previn played himself soundtracking Kerouac's troglodyte hipsters to the Musikverein in Vienna. Listening to him tackle 'What Is This Thing Called Love?' revives the complaint that he was never called on or never willing to do a Cole Porter songbook for Contemporary. It's an exquisite, feeling performance, like everything on this record. 'Hi Blondie' is an original, but a tune that might have sprung unbidden out of some forgotten '30s show. 'Satin Doll' is equally lovely and the medley that begins with 'Prelude To A Kiss' is a fitting end to the set, just to be followed by a roistering 'Sweet Georgia Brown'. Where Red Mitchell might have tinkered with the harmonics, and Mundell Lowe has had his own bout of experimentalism, Brown plays it straight and true, pushing along the beat with that huge, authoritative tone. We can vouch for the impact of this group live; engineer Andrew Wedman and producers Elizabeth Onstrow and Alison Ames (how often are we able to credit two women in the role, even in the late '90s?) deliver a rich, authentic sound, full of atmosphere and not missing a single detail.

We're not aware of ever having listed any Deutsche Grammophon releases, either, and it's nice to welcome the blue-chip classical label. Show Boat contains some wonderful music, and this group (especially with the addition of the utterly musical Tate) does it every justice. This is Lowe's big moment; recorded strong and very full, he leaves no doubt what we all missed when he was out of the picture.

The Gershwin date is interesting in that it followed an all-Mozart programme Previn was conducting at Tanglewood. The next day he and that fine bassist David Finck simply wandered down to the Florence Gould Auditorium in Seiji Ozawa Hall, Lenox, Massachusetts, got up a pot of coffee and started running through some tunes. Here and there Previn doesn't sound note-perfect, but he has the musical nous to profit from occasional slips, and the best of these tracks are quite exceptional. Edward Jablonski's liner-notes on the individual songs are an added plus (little details like the three-times failure of 'The Man I Love', the best track here, but a flop initially and canned from Lady Be Good! and Strike Up The Band), but the real delight is the simple lyricism and creative sophistication Previn brings to a composer whose work he seems to understand with his very nerve-ends.

 We Got It Good And That Ain't Bad: An Ellington Songbook /  Live At The Jazz Standard Deutsche Grammophon 3456 / Decca 013220 Previn; David Finck(b). 4/99; 10/00.

You'd be forgiven for thinking these were latter-day Oscar Peterson sets. The speed of invention (notably on 'Take The "A" Train' and 'I Didn't Know About You') is reminiscent of the big Canadian, but André is more identifiably himself on the slower tracks. He gives 'Isfahan' a delightful reading, and 'Chelsea Bridge' is almost a classical étude, without lapsing into a 'classical' style of playing. His swing is easy and always on the edge and Finck is an ideal accompanist for a session of this kind, often hovering in the background when he realizes there's no need to push things along.

The second set begins confidently with a cover of Gerry Mulligan's 'Westwood Walk'. Son Lukas Previn is credited as composer of 'Bye Bye Sky', which is a lovely theme. Much of the rest is standard fare, 'What Is This Thing Called Love?', 'My Funny Valentine' and so on, but Previn executes even these tired warhorses with wit, verve and undimmed enthusiasm. His obvious delight in the closing take of 'I Got Rhythm' is so infectious most listeners will rescue the track and hear it through again. Splendid stuff from a born-again jazzman.

(*) Alone: Ballads For Solo Piano Universal 09092 Previn (p solo). 6/07.

No surprises. These are terse, mostly unembellished songbook performances that have more individuality that jazz snobs might like, but not enough to save it all from showbiz hell. 'Angel Eyes' is an elegant travesty and it all slides downhill from there. Sad, but we've heard him play better backstage or in a rehearsal room when he thought no one was listening.

Also, in brief:

(*) Like Love Collectables COL 834762. 60.
Background music.

() The 4 Horsemen Of The Apocalypse Rhino 77764. 62.
Previn's soundtrack for Vincente Minnelli's Second World War epic was drastically cut along with the release version of the film and was then further diluted on the soundtrack album.

 A Classic American Songbook DRG 5222. 1/92.
A delightful set of readings from a fairly predictable roster of songs with classical trumpeter Thomas Stevens.

Bobby Previte (born 1957)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

A delightful set of readings from a fairly predictable roster of songs with classical trumpeter Thomas Stevens.

(*) Just Add Water Palmetto PM 2081 Previte; Ray Anderson, Joseph Bowie(tb); Marty Ehrlich(ts); Wayne Horvitz(p); Steve Swallow(b). 6/01.
The discography is extensive, though the early Enjas are now hard to find. Like many another veteran of a once avant-garde kind of scene, he has accrued his own dynasty of associations and integrities by now, which means that a new set from him is, if not quite predictable, at least in a familiar bag. Ehrlich and Horvitz, for instance, both go way back with him. Downtown irony is more or less a thing of the past now, so Ehrlich's ballad solo on 'Nice Try' sounds unaffected and genuine, while the various kinds of funk beat served up in ''63' and ''53 Macerate' are signature Previte frolics. He likes to have fun with his music, but don't be surprised if this sounds better than many a more serious contemporary set 20 years hence.

* The 23 Constellations Of Joan Miró Tzadik TZ 7072 Previte; Ralph Alessi, Lew Soloff(t); Jane Ira Bloom(ss); Ned Rothenberg(bcl); Michel Gentile(f); Wayne Horvitz, Jamie Saft(ky); John Bacon(vib, mar, chimes); Elizabeth Panzer(hp). 6/01.
The Constellations in question are a series of small paintings by the Catalan artist which Previte saw at MOMA and responded to viscerally. These almost two dozen pieces are his musical response. The group is brightly coloured and responsive, but there's little attempt to impose any kind of pictorial programme. Mostly, these compositions follow simple logics of their own, but the superficial simplicity that leads some to dismiss Miró as an overpraised child also conceals – as in this music – chasms of mythological meaning. Though they are among the shortest items in the Previte canon, they yield up more, and some will find this record requires several visits to assimilate.

 Counterclockwise Palmetto PM 2091 Previte; Curtis Fowlkes(tb); Marty Ehrlich(ts); Wayne Horvitz(p); Timothy Young(g); Steve Swallow(b). 10/02.
This time, though, some of the fun seems to have ebbed away. Previte's still edging closer to a kind of stasis: his players do his bidding, and they can play anything from the complicated funk of '877-Soul' to the sweeter strains of 'Patricia'. Yet while it works as all-of-a-piece, one waits for something to stand up or stand out.

(*) The Coalition Of The Willing Ropeadope 70 Previte; Steven Bernstein (t, slide t); Skerik(ts, bs); Jamie Saft(ky); Stew Cutler(hca, g); Charlie Hunter(g, b); Stanton Moore(d). 7–9/05.
Another Soviet-era image on the outside and whacked-out rock music within; Previte doesn't seem to mind causing upset to the purists, and we're all for that. Charlie Hunter's Ropeadope imprint is certainly exploring some fairly 'out' material, perhaps a little too self-consciously so in some cases. Previte's a master of épatisme, though, and his blend of heavy rhythms, surreal horns and whizzing guitar-lines works an indefinable and irreducible treat. Skerik's blarting saxophone and Bernstein's wayward, post-Lester Bowie horn are the main protagonists, but Cutler and Saft work their magic, too, and Previte has devised an intriguing language with the label boss. We prefer their smaller-scale work, but this is pretty hot, too.

Eddie Prévost (born 1942)

DRUMS, PERCUSSION

Conventional start in British trad and bebop, then co-founded AMM in 1965. Influential as player, writer and head of Matchless label.

 Silver Pyramid Matchless MRCD40 Prévost; large ensemble. 5/69.
Eddie Prévost was once nicknamed 'the Art Blakey of Brixton', and though he has long since outstretched his early jazz influences – Roach rather than Blakey, and above all Ed Blackwell – he still has deeper roots in jazz drumming than almost any of his free-music peers. The only arguable exception is his exact contemporary, Han Bennink, but Prévost has also explored traditions like Korean court music and, in recent years, the further reaches of noise-rock with groups like God.

The Silver Pyramid disc is the record of a remarkable Music Now event at the Roundhouse in London, featuring work by some of the leading avant-garde composers of the day and centring on Prévost's title-piece and totem object, a prismatic reflector that somehow channels a whole improvisational language. Work by Cage, Christian Woolf, Christopher Hobbs, Cornelius Cardew, LaMonte Young and others, played by a floating ensemble of improvisers, among whom Keith Rowe (Prevost's bellwether for four decades) is enticingly prominent. As an aural experience, it's less compelling than AMM recordings of the time. It is none the less an important document of a critical moment in creative music in Britain.

* Live: Volumes 1 & 2 Matchless MRCD 01/02 Prévost; Gerry Gold(t); Geoff Hawkins(ts); Marcio Mattos(b). 77.
(*) Continuum + 1983/84 Matchless MRCD 07 Prévost; Larry Stabbins(ts, ss); Veryan Weston(p); Marcio Mattos(b).
* Supersession Matchless MRCD 17 Prévost; Evan Parker(ss, ts); Keith Rowe(g, elec); Barry Guy(b, elec). 9/84.
Prévost's jazz origins are still quite clearly audible on Live, the album which inaugurated his own Matchless label, and one on which he delivers, as an obstetrician might, one of the best recordings of this period of British free jazz. Gold and Hawkins make a marvellous partnership, ranging from austere fury to jovial rave-ups which occasionally recall the more experimental of Mingus's workshop bands. Gold in particular has a clear, emphatic signature, idiosyncratic enough to make one wonder why he hasn't been recorded more often.

Prévost is one of the most articulate exponents of the music. He is the author of a book called No Sound Is Innocent, where he argues the existence of an aesthetic in which music is inseparable from the realm of ideas and social exchanges. The quartet might seem conventionally distant from what he has done with AMM and with other groups, but it does illustrate how generously he opens himself to situations in which hierarchies collapse. There is no 'front line' here, no 'rhythm section'. It is the musical equivalent of total football, everyone contributing at every level.

That is presumably also the aim of Supersession, a punning name which combines the idea of the supergroup – the core of AMM plus two of the leading British improvisers of recent years – with a Hegelian concept in which thought constantly 'supersedes' the last level of organization. Some will say this is meta-jazz, too rarefied to bother with. Unfortunately (for them) it is as viscerally exciting as anything Art Blakey ever did.

The quartet with Stabbins and Mattos is not unrepresentative, but it certainly touches on different interests and loyalties. Stabbins is undeservedly neglected. He is a fascinating player who has learned much from Coltrane and earlier tenor-players, but who has a sound and an approach to phrasing which is entirely his own. Mattos is a giant, a player of great spirituality. Prévost himself is in great form, crisp, disciplined, but wild as well.

() Touch – The Weight, Measure And Feel Of Things / () The Virtue In If Matchless MRCD 34 / 43 Prévost; Tom Chant(ss); John Edwards(b). 3/97; 99.

This is Prévost's most interesting project outside AMM, a mostly quiet and very centred trio which harks back to the free jazz of the '60s (groups like Trevor Watts's Amalgam) but which also touches on the expanded language and dissolved categories of the '90s. Chant's curious birdcall effects and Steve Lacy-influenced chirrups and yelps are never foregrounded to the detriment of the other two instruments. Edwards is a hugely underrated player, perhaps damned to the shadow of the showier and more histrionic Paul Rogers, but absolutely critical to the disciplines of this music. Prévost himself is better than ever, hinting at a pulse, refusing to allow it to be taken. Ten years ago, there was some reason to fear that music of this kind had outlived its natural span. This makes it relevant again.

The second trio record shows a step forward in terms of concentration of sound. Prévost is unbelievably responsive to his two colleagues, making room for them and playing with a delicacy and grace that is breathtaking. Again, the almost ritual quality of his work comes to the fore, as if we are present at some mysterious event which unfolds according to arcane and hermetic principles.

* Material Consequences Matchless MRCD 48 Prévost (perc solo). 01.

(*) Seventh Of May 2001 – The Matchless Day Matchless MRCD 47 2CD Prévost (perc solo); Tom Chant(sax); John Edwards(b). 5/01.

There have been few enough opportunities to hear Prévost perform outside a group context. This is riveting stuff, rhythmic, intensely lyrical and focused. It is perhaps best to listen to the album as a single, undifferentiated performance. There is a quality of ritual about some passages, a sense of time suspended as enigmatic mysteries are unfolded or some arcane mathematics unfolds. It is one of the most moving performances Prévost has chosen to release and demands constant and attentive listening.

The other record is not strictly Prévost's, though disc one includes another, briefer solo recital and disc two has material with his most recent trio. The Freedom Of The City event as a whole has yielded other material on Emanem Records, but this was the best of it and the set will be welcomed by anyone who has admired and appreciated Prévost's work, not just as a performer but also as dramaturge of Matchless.

(*) The Blackbird's Whistle Matchless MRCD 56 Prévost; Tom Chant(ts, bcl); John Edwards(b). 10/03.

Conceived as a meditation on a musical and philosophical encounter in Italo Calvino's Mr Palomar, this delightful set extends the language of Prévost's now well-established trio. Chant's tenor-playing on the opening 'Twirls Of Modulation' is robustly jazz-centred, but still free of constraint and absolutely idiomatic in this context. Prévost's drumming is, as ever, poised between freedom and a recognizable pulse, which takes this music closer to a free-jazz idiom than his still better-known work with AMM. His solo on that same opening track is a model, virtuosic as it moves between 9/8 and other equally difficult counts, and endlessly musical. Edwards is a still unacknowledged star, a bassist of real resource and power, whose limber woody tone commands attention in any context. The final eponymous section is as good a trio performance as you'll hear this or any year.

 A Bright Nowhere Matchless MRCD 55 Prévost; Jamie Coleman(t); Nathaniel Catchpole(ts); Alex James(p); John Edwards(b). 03.

The line-up might look like a hard-bop quintet. Inevitably, the music is somewhat remote from that, except Prévost always imparts such vigorous pulse to situations like these that A Bright Nowhere is as exciting as many a Blue Note date. Coleman and Catchpole are bright new finds, definitely going somewhere, and while James and Edwards don't exactly function as a conventional rhythm unit, they have the drive and immediacy to imply that as well as filling out a richly creative background.

(*) Imponderable Evidence Matchless MRCD 57 Prévost; Evan Parker(ts). 11/03.

Perhaps because his partner does always imply elements of pulse, Parker always plays subtly differently in the drummer's presence and here, restricted to tenor, that's very evident again. Subtitled 'the subtleties of glance, of gesture, of tone', it's very much in line with the duo's deceptively well-mannered philosophical explorations. The five tracks are entitled 'exhibits' as if these pieces were raw evidential material in some overridingly pressing case or quiddity. The urgency of enquiry is compelling from start to finish.

Also, in brief:

(*) Loci Of Change – Sound And Sensibility Matchless MRCD 32. 9/96.

Evan Parker describes this solo performance as 'social music', while simultaneously suggesting that it is both 'lonely' and 'intimate'.

 Concert, v. Matchless MRCD 37. 6/98.

An appealing intimacy to this duo recital with the brilliant Veryan Weston.

(*) Entelechy Matchless MRCD67. 9 & 12/05.

Solo tam-tam music, 'Beaten', 'Scraped', 'Bowed', agitated with metal brushes. It's very strange and beautiful.

Ruth Price (born 1938)

VOICE

Originally a dancer, and a characterful singer.

 With Shelly Manne & His Men At The Manne Hole Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1770 Price; Conte Candoli(t); Richie Kamuca(ts); Russ Freeman(p); Chuck Berghofer(b); Shelly Manne(d). 3/61.
Price's debut as leader sounds as if it were caught on the fly in down-time at the Manne Hole; with the exception of Freeman, who works hard to keep a solid accompaniment going, there isn't much required of the group; Candoli and Kamuca only feature once or twice. It's a pleasant, if predictable set, but Price has real personality and gets each song across strongly.

Sam Price (1908–92)

PIANO, VOICE

Played in his native Texas before going to Kansas, Chicago and New York. House pianist for Decca from 1938. Often visited Europe in later years and also ran his own clubs and commercial companies.

 Sam Price 1929–1941 Classics 696 Price; Douglas Finnell, Joe Brown, Eddie 'Moon' Mullens, Shad Collins, Bill Johnston, Chester Boone, Emmett Berry(t); Bert Johnson, Floyd Brady, Ray Hogan(tb); Fess Williams(cl, as); Lem Fowler(cl, v); Don Stovall(as); Ray Hill, Lester Young, Skippy Williams(ts); Percy Darensbourg(bj); Duke Jones, Ernest 'Bass' Hill, Billy Taylor(b); Wilbert Kirk, Harold 'Doc' West, Herb Cowens, J. C. Heard(d); Yank Taylor, Ruby Smith, Jack Meredith(v). 9/29–12/41.
Aside from two 1929 tracks, all this material dates from 1940–41, when Price was recording regularly for Decca with his 'Texas Bluesicians'. It might have been recorded in New York, but the music is authentic southern swing. Many of the 24 tracks are features for his simple, blues-to-boogie playing and amiable vocals, which tend to predominate as the sessions go by, but there's also some fine playing from the horns. 'Sweepin' The Blues Away' includes excellent work by Brown and Stovall, and a 1941 session actually features the Lester Young band, though Young himself has only a few bars here and there in the limelight.

Julian Priester (born 1935)

TROMBONE

A Chicagoan, Priester worked in R&B and big bands before moving to New York in 1958, joining the Max Roach group until the early '60s and subsequently freelancing. Moved to California in the '70s and is sighted occasionally; a couple of scarce ECM albums await reissue.

(*) Keep Swingin' Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1863 Priester; Jimmy Heath(ts); Tommy Flanagan(p); Sam Jones(b); Elvin Jones(d). 1/60.
 Out Of This World Milestone MCD 47087 Priester; Walter Benton(ts); Charles Davis(bs); McCoy Tyner(p); Sam Jones(b); Art Taylor(d). 7/60.
Priester has always been scarce as a leader. Apart from his 1977 ECM record, Polarization (and its predecessor Love, Love), which has acquired almost cult status with vinyl collectors, he remains virtually unknown in that capacity. To some extent, the eclipse must be due to the instrument he plays, which has almost always been B-list. Priester's apprenticeship was with Muddy Waters and Bo Diddley, playing blues and R&B, but in 1954 he was recruited by Sun Ra, which must have helped to reinforce his distinctive combination of swing with a dark, sometimes almost fey abstraction. Though the debut album is edged with shadows, it's basically a straight-ahead blowing set, short, well-crafted tunes with nicely defined shapes. The three on which Heath sits out give the leader a little more space. The closing 'Julian's Tune' is perhaps the clearest indication, though here more recent associations with Lionel Hampton and Max Roach are evident as well. They open with Heath's '24-Hour Leave', which establishes the atmosphere. 'The End' is a Priester original, strongly vocalized and with the blues running through it. Charles Davis is the composer of '1239A', which, though brief, is as strong on atmosphere as the rest of the set. Priester's own other originals are 'Bob T's Blues', which sounds like a studio run-down, and 'Under The Surface', another that plumbs his darker side. An excellent debut.

Out Of This World pairs Priester's Spiritsville with an album of Walter Benton material named after the Arlen–Mercer song. Priester remains firmly rooted in orthodox hard bop and, while there is some interest in hearing the young McCoy Tyner working his apprenticeship, there isn't much of any great moment to report. The remastering is nice and the set is useful as an introduction to the under-recorded Benton, but as a Priester set it's a bit thin.

* Love, Love ECM 1044 Priester; Hadley Caliman(sax, f, cl); David Johnson(sax, f); Bayete Umbra Zindiko(p, clav); Pat Gleeson(syn); Bill Connors(g); Henry Franklin, Ron McClure(b); Leon Chancler, Eric Gravatt(d). 6 & 9/73.
A record which enjoyed almost legendary status as long as it remained unreleased on CD. Having it available again dents its glamour only temporarily, because it is one of the best albums of its period, subtly conceived and richly executed by a fascinating ensemble. Consisting of two long improvisations, somewhat in the manner of a Miles Davis record of the period, it foregrounds Priester in the kind of acoustic that shows off his rich tone and thoughtful ideas, though he's also prominently featured on synths and percussion. Much of the personnel will be relatively unfamiliar, but Connors, McClure and the soon to disappear Eric Gravatt (known from the first Weather Report albums) are all highly collectable presences. Musically, it's in a now somewhat dated jazz-rock mode (think Mwandishi-period Hancock or a looser version of Bitches Brew) and owes its cachet and collectability to its dance associations. We were quite prepared to be disappointed, but it lives up to billing surprisingly well.

 Hints On Light And Shadow Postcards 1117 Priester; Sam Rivers(ss, ts, p); Tucker Martine(elec). 11/96.
This has an obvious fascination, given that both principals deserve wider exposure and attention, but it's a disappointing set. Martine's electronic backgrounds sometimes add an attractive dimension but often disguise an emptiness at the centre. If they were recorded in real time, perhaps they distracted Rivers and Priester from their duets; if they were added later, they fail to cover the hiatuses. Ironically, the most interesting cut is 'The New System', where Sam plays piano with a rich and resonant sweep, but inevitably not sounding much like himself. Priester is graceful and authoritative on the same track, but rarely hits the same heights elsewhere.

 In Deep End Dance Conduit 1301 Priester; Dawn Clement(p); Geoff Harper(b); Byron Vannoy(d). 4/02.
All praise to Conduit for getting behind one of the neglected figures of the last 25 years. A successful organ transplant in 2000 saved the trombonist's life and there is a spiritual cast to the music here that bespeaks a new start. It's a highly expressive set, veering between the open, improvisational forms that he helped pioneer in the '70s and a more obviously expressive style. Clement is an able accompanist and her colleagues keep the set moving along at a relaxed pace. The opening 'In Deep' is deceptively lightweight, until the leader's mournful brass sound kicks in musingly. Harper's composition 'The Seam Of Dark Blue Light' is a high-point opening on a snail's pace trombone-line that conceals a real sophistication of purpose.

Brian Priestley (born 1946)

PIANO

A fine player but also a great scholar of the music and Charles Mingus's biographer.

 Who Knows?: The Uncovered Ellington 33 Records 33JAZZ104 Priestley; Bruce Adams(t, flhn); Frank Griffith(ts, cl); Simon Woolf(b); Steve Brown(d). 03.

Priestley combines a deep knowledge of the music, and particularly the piano literature, with a keyboard touch that is more distinctive than first appears. There have been occasional records down the years, and while our favourite remains Love You Gladly from way back, this elegant Ducal set will also give enjoyment. Nice front line and solid support and contributions from the section.

Marcus Printup (born 1967)

TRUMPET

Studied at Georgia State, then played with Marcus Roberts and the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra.

(*) The New Boogaloo Nagel Heyer 2019 Printup; Wycliffe Gordon(tb); Walter Blanding(ts); George Colligan, Eric Lewis(p); Vicente Archer(b); Donald Edwards(d). 11/01.

Printup emerged with two Blue Note albums in the '90s, but they disappeared and this date for Nagel Heyer was a fresh start for the trumpeter. One problem with the earlier discs was a shortage of strong material, and Printup's seven themes here remedy that at once. From the beginning, 'The Bullet Train' is a ferocious blues with a requirement for the bassist to play the same figure throughout; and the tendency for the players to play to a strut rhythm edges over into most of the pieces. What comes out is often akin to a brainy kind of soul-jazz, softened by Printup's own rather romantic tone, then buoyed up again by the feelgood time which Archer and Edwards bring to even lyrical themes such as 'Sardinian Princess'. It helps that the leader can call on the services of several colleagues from the Lincoln Center gang: Gordon proves again that he's the boss trombonist of the moment, with stunning plunger-mute work on 'The Weeping Prince', and Blanding's tenor is a beautifully dark, finely felt voice. Plus the bonus of George Colligan, a pocket genius at the piano, who shares keyboard duties with Eric Lewis across the session. A strong comeback for a figure who once looked to have lost his way.

(*) Peace In The Abstract Steeplechase SCCD 31597 Printup; Gregory Tardy(ts); Marc Cary(p); Kengo Nakamura(b); Shinnosuke Takahashi(d). 1/06.
(*) Bird Of Paradise Steeplechase SCCD 31626 As above, except omit Tardy; add Ted Nash(as, ts); Riza Hequibal(hp). 06.

The stop-start pattern to Marcus's recording career continues, but he seems to have found a happy berth – like so many before him – at Steeplechase. Winther gives him a big, plain sound and trumpet and saxophone come across in a relatively unadorned and unfussy way. The inclusion of 'Amazing Grace' on the earlier record is slightly strange. It simply distracts from a run of nice, thoughtful originals, almost all of them referencing the blues in some remote way. Dameron's 'Hot House' and 'Ev'ry Time We Say Goodbye', the latter with very much the feel of a set-closer, though they come back for one more, are better repertory choices.

As to Bird Of Paradise, the world's probably overstocked with Parker tributes, but this one at least makes a certain case for itself, given that it isn't slavish pastiche or an attempt to detour or subvert the legacy. 'Stupendous' is a nice, non-obvious start and the two versions of 'Lover Man' bespeak a wry knowledge of the Bird story. 'Now's The Time' receives one of its freshest latter-day readings. A terrific record; don't be put off by 'not another Parker project!' thoughts.

Don Pullen (1944–95)

PIANO, ORGAN

A long spell in R&B eventually led Pullen to the Charles Mingus band of the mid-'70s, and thereafter a long association with George Adams. Far from leading to a cult reputation, his early death seems to have drawn a veil over his challenging work.

(*) Solo Piano Album /  Healing Force Sackville SKCD2-3008 / Black Saint 120010 Pullen (p solo). 2/75; 76.
 Capricorn Rising Black Saint 120004 Pullen; Sam Rivers(ts, ss, f); Alex Blake(b); Bobby Battle(d). 10/75.
(*) Warriors Black Saint 120019 Pullen; Chico Freeman(ts); Fred Hopkins(b); Bobby Battle(d). 4/78.
 Milano Strut Black Saint 120028 Pullen; Famoudou Don Moye(d, perc). 12/78.
 The Magic Triangle Black Saint 120038 Pullen; Joseph Jarman(ss, ts, f, af, picc); Famoudou Don Moye(d, perc). 79.
* Evidence Of Things Unseen Black Saint 120080 Pullen (p solo). 9/83.
(*) The Sixth Sense Black Saint 120088 Pullen; Olu Dara(t); Donald Harrison(as); Fred Hopkins(b); Bobby Battle(d). 6/85.

Don Pullen's solo records demand comparison with Cecil Taylor's. Pullen's traditionalism is more obvious, but the apparent structural conservatism is more appearance than fact, a function of his interest in boogie rather than Bartók. The classic Sackville session, recently reissued on CD, makes the point, although it sometimes reinforces an impression of Pullen as a performer interested in large masses of sound, sometimes to the detriment of forward progress. That in turn led him back to the organ, on which he created huge, sustained chords and swirling textures, as on the duo record with Moye. Evidence Of Things Unseen is by far the best of the solo discs, though the recently reissued Solo Piano Album will have its supporters as well. Evidence bespeaks the same dark-and-light opposition as Andrew Hill or Ran Blake, though Pullen was more of a free player than either, and certainly less of an ironist than Blake..

Of the groups with horns, the best are those fronted by Freeman and Dara, where Pullen develops spiky, almost spasmodic graph-lines of improvisational material in the midst of inventive and often rather Ivesian structures; the technique is reminiscent of Mingus, with whom Pullen played in the mid-'70s. Rivers is too floaty and ethereal to be entirely effective in this context, though he noticeably tailors his approach to Pullen's cues. The trio with Jarman and Moye is almost too free and various in approach. Episodically, the music is fascinating, but there is little consistency to the record. Now that all of his latter-day work for Blue Note has been remaindered (only a Mosaic Select remains in catalogue), Pullen is suddenly in the wilderness again, a situation we hope to see remedied before too long.

Joe Puma (1927–2000)

GUITAR

Came from a musical family and worked with Artie Shaw, Herbie Mann and others, never conspicuous but always a foundation stone.

 The Jazz Guitar of Joe Puma Fresh Sound FSRCD 435 Puma; Bill Evans, Eddie Costa(p); Barry Galbraith, Dick Garcia(g); Don Elliott(vib); Vinnie Burke, Dante Martucci, Oscar Pettiford(b); Jimmy Campbell, Al Levitt, Paul Motian, Ted Sommer(d). 11/54–57.

 Wild Kitten Dawn DP 1118 Puma; Mat Mathews(acc); Oscar Pettiford, Whitey Mitchell(b); Shadow Wilson(d). 6/56, 2/57.

(*) Shining Hour Reservoir RSR 102 Puma; Hod O'Brien(p); Red Mitchell(b). 6/84.

 It's A Blue World Sundazed 175 Puma; Murray Wall(b); Eddie Locke(d). 10/97.

Puma made few recordings under his own name but turns up in interesting places and company. The trio date with O'Brien and Mitchell is typical. It's an even-handed session, with little showy stuff from the guitarist, whose smooth, subtle chording feeds a constant flow of harmonic ideas. If anything, Mitchell is the dominant voice. Red's less well-known brother Whitey appears on the early date, which is slightly more hard-edged, but again largely because Pettiford makes a strong showing on his tracks. The Puma originals, 'Sportin' With Morton', 'Rosalie Ann' and the bonus 'Indian Blanket' (unaccountably left off the LP release), are effective without sounding particularly individual. The tracks with Dutch-born Mathews are fascinating.

Probably the best way to sample Puma is on the Fresh Sound compilation, which brings together eight tracks from November 1954 with Galbraith, Elliott, Burke and Sommer and was originally released on Bethlehem as East Coast Jazz Series Volume 3, with trio and quintet material released later on Jubilee. The presence of Bill Evans and Paul Motian on a group of three tracks recorded in 1957 adds an obvious interest. They aren't classics, but anything from Evans at this vintage is of value and 'Indian Summer' is a nicely extended performance.

The last Puma record came close to the end and sounds routine and tired, though the single-note lines and chunky chords are immediately identifiable.

Mike Pyne (born 1940)

PIANO, CORNET

Younger brother of Chris Pyne and a key figure in British jazz of his time.

 Alone Together Spotlite SPJ406 Pyne (c, p solo/duo). 77.

(*) Live At Ronnie Scott's Spotlite SPJ561 Pyne; Ron Mathewson(b); Spike Wells(d). 1/90.

The earlier record's an unusual experiment in duetting with oneself, and though the solo piano tracks are generally speaking more imaginative, it makes for an agreeable and often quite beautiful listen. Pyne isn't a virtuoso, but he has a way of making simple declarations matter, and with his later trio he gets down to business in an arresting way. His line on 'Everything Happens To Me' and 'Blues In The Closet', to take two at near-random, is unhackneyed, individual and harmonically tense.

Ike Quebec (1918–63)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

He began his career as a dancer. He developed a tenor style influenced by Basie's Herschel Evans. Before he succumbed to lung cancer at just 45 he put his creative thumbprint on many of Blue Note's most distinctive bop recordings.

(*) Ike Quebec, 1944–1946 Classics 957 Quebec; Buck Clayton, Jonah Jones (t); Tyree Glenn, Keg Johnson (tb); Johnny Guarnieri, Roger 'Ram' Ramirez, Dave Rivera (p); Napoleon Allen, Bill De Arango, Tiny Grimes (g); Milt Hinton, Grachan Moncur, Oscar Pettiford (b); J. C. Heard (d). 7/44–8/45.

 The Strong Tenor Of Mister Quebec, 1943–1946 EPM Musique 159602 Similar to above. 43–46.

Blue Note's last recording date in Hackensack and first in its new headquarters at Englewood Cliffs were both by Ike Quebec. The saxophonist was a figure of considerable influence at the label, acting as musical director, A&R man and talent scout (Dexter Gordon was one of his 'finds'). He was also an important Blue Note recording artist, making some marvellous sessions just after the war and steering the label in the direction of a more contemporary repertoire. The Complete Blue Note 45 Sessions brought together 27 popular sides Quebec made for the thriving jukebox market. By no means wholly organ-dominated, as such 45s tended to be, the sessions strongly featured Quebec's still-underrated tenor style, which sounds like a cross between Evans, Wardell Gray and Dexter Gordon. 'Blue Harlem', recorded for Blue Note in July 1944 in the company of Roger 'Ram' Ramirez, creator of 'Lover Man', was a jukebox hit and pretty much sums up the Quebec sound. The early cuts were made in collaboration with guitarist Tiny Grimes, who was also much involved in Charlie Parker's early career. The compilation includes a couple of rejected takes, of 'Blue Turnin' Grey Over You' and 'The Day You Came Along', alongside the released singles, of which 'Topsy'/'Cup Mute Clayton' (featuring Buck), 'Mad About You' and 'Facin' The Face' (which features Oscar Pettiford in an early appearance) are by far the best. Much of the same material is covered on the EPM compilation.

(*) It Might As Well Be Spring Blue Note 21736 Quebec; Freddie Roach (org); Milt Hinton (b); Al Harewood (d). 12/61.

 Blue And Sentimental Blue Note 784098 Quebec; Sonny Clark (p); Grant Green (g); Paul Chambers (b); Philly Joe Jones (d). 12/61.

 Ballads Blue Note 56690 Quebec; Sonny Clark (p); Earl Van Dyke, Freddie Roach, Sir Charles Thompson (org); Grant Green, Willie Jones (g); Milt Hinton, Sam Jones (b); Art Blakey, Al Harewood, Louis Hayes, J. C. Heard, Wilbert G. T. Hogan (d). 9/60–3/62.

It Might As Well Be Spring is pretty squarely in the tenor/organ tradition, except that Quebec has opted to record some gently expressive standards, not just the title-track but also 'Lover Man', 'Ol' Man River' and 'Willow Weep For Me', as well as his own compositions 'A Light Reprieve' and 'Easy – Don't Hurt'. Digital remastering has restored a bit of detail to the sound, and Roach is the one who benefits most, a surprisingly subtle player who always has plenty to say and doesn't sound as if he's merely stoking up a fairground calliope.

Quebec has several times teetered on the brink of major rediscovery. He is, admittedly, a limited performer when set beside Gordon or any of the other younger tenor-players emerging at the time, but he has a beautiful, sinuous tone and an innate melodic sense, negotiating standards with a simplicity and lack of arrogance that are refreshing and even therapeutic. Blue And Sentimental, with fine performances on 'Minor Impulse', 'Don't Take Your Love From Me' and 'Count Every Star', is an excellent place to make his acquaintance, and once again sophisticated remastering has made a world of difference.

Ballads is a fairly predictable compilation of laid-back themes drawn from four of Quebec's later albums for Blue Note, padded out with a single track, 'Born To Be Blue', which was recorded under Grant Green's leadership. An attractive package, and very welcome when these sessions are still only patchily available.

 Bossa Nova Soul Samba Blue Note 52443 Quebec; Kenny Burrell (g); Wendell Marshall (b); Willie Bobo (d); Garvin Masseaux (shekere). 10/62.

Recorded a matter of months before Ike's death from lung cancer and when he was already showing signs of waning powers, this was made at a time when 'Latin' albums – and particularly bossa nova sessions – were more or less de rigueur. Almost uniquely for the time, there is nothing by Jobim in the programme, and the range of material is quite broad and imaginative. 'Me'n'You' and 'Blue Samba' are both strong originals, suggesting that Ike might well have moved fruitfully in this direction, had he been granted a little more time.

Also, in brief:

 Blue Harlem /  Swing Hi, Swing Lo Proper 24 / Definitive 11135. 7/44–9/46.

Head-to-head competition; 22 tracks from each of the repackaging masters and all of them worth having.

(*) Heavy Soul Blue Note 32090. 11/61.

A lumpy soul-jazz situation, with Roach unusually heavy-handed.

Alvin Queen (born 1950)

DRUMS

Busy New Yorker, who's found time for his own projects.

 I Ain't Looking At You Enja ENJ9501 Queen; Terell Stafford (t, flhn); Jesse Davis (as); Mike LeDonne (org); Peter Bernstein (g). 05.

There are a few Queen discs around, but mostly on the relatively inaccessible Nilva, and probably now out of circulation. This was an agreeable sign he was back in business. Bracketed by Shirley Horn's 'There's Blues Everywhere' and Don Patterson's 'Mellow Soul', it's a classic organ-fuelled soul-jazz date, with a crackling personnel. Davis's bluesy lines and Bernstein's surefire accompaniment are key elements, but Stafford plays as well as he has for years in a small-group context and Queen's own tattoos and rolls are watertight. Not for every taste, but a hard record not to be lifted by.

Quest

GROUP

David Liebman was the de facto leader of this superb collective, which recently convened once again.

 Natural Selection Evidence ECD 22082 Caris Visentin (ob); David Liebman (ss); Richie Beirach (p); Mitchel Forman (syn); Ron McClure (b); Billy Hart (d); Tom Beyer (perc). 7/88.

Though Liebman was the driving force in organizational terms, Quest was a group of equals and all four members are represented by compositions on Natural Selection. The music ranges from the limpid to the furious, with an occasional resemblance to some of the music Liebman was exposed to in the Miles Davis band. Beirach's title-track and 'Nocturnal' are arguably the highlights, but Hart's 'Amethyst Suite' is gorgeous and the effervescent McClure rings the session out with 'Nighty-Nite'. Nice touches from the guest musicians, but their role is secondary to a great group recording. Magnificent recorded sound, courtesy of Dave Baker.

* Redemption – Quest Live In Europe hatOLOGY 642 As above, except omit Visentin, Forman, Beyer. 11/05.

Playing together again after 15 years was clearly a very happy experience for all involved. Liebman's work, like Beirach's, has gone through some considerable changes in these fine performances. That said, surprisingly, for a group invested with so many fine composers, much of the material played is from the modern repertory, opening with 'Round Midnight', a perfect vehicle for the pianist, and continuing with Coltrane's all too rarely covered 'Ogunde', a telling sign of Liebman's searching interrogation of that particular legacy. There is also a fine short version of Ornette's 'Lonely Woman'. Liebman's tribute to the destroyed World Trade Center, medleyed with Beirach's similarly inspired and equally powerful 'Steel Prayers', touches on some notably raw emotion, an instant standard that one hopes to hear approached by other musicians. So, too, with Hart's title-track, which rounds out a superb disc. Again, the recording quality is easily equal to a group of such subtlety, with every inflection of all the instruments precisely registered. Strongly recommended, and if you missed them first time round, there's no sense here that this is simply a nostalgic or, worse, a money-making reunion. Quest hasn't lost its exploratory edge.

Gene Quill (1927–89)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Valued for a loud and cutting saxophone tone, Quill lent his talents to Gene Krupa, Phil Woods and many others.

 Three Bones And A Quill Fresh Sound FSRCD 105 Quill; Jimmy Cleveland, Jim Dahl, Frank Rehak (tb); Hank Jones, Nat Pierce (p); Whitey Mitchell (b); Charly Persip (d). 58.

Originally on Roost, this unusual format might seem to put the solo saxophonist at a disadvantage. In practice, Quill could have taken on a whole brass section and come out on top. Not a classic, but good for blowing out the cobwebs once in a while.

Paul Quinichette (1916–83)

TENOR SAXOPHONE

The Vice Pres, but more than a slavish Lester Young copyist, who managed to convey something of the great man's tone and spirit.

 Complete Dawn Sessions Blue Moon/Dawn DCD 106 Quinichette; John Carisi, Renauld Jones, Thad Jones, Joe Newman, Gene Roland (t); Henry Cooker, Bob Swope (tb); Dick Meldonian (as); Bill Graham (as, bs); Nat Pierce (p); Freddie Green, Doyle Salathiel (g); Eddie Jones, Wendell Marshall, Oscar Pettiford, Dudley Watson (b); Osie Johnson, Walter Nolan, Sonny Payne (d); Sylvia Pierce (v). 7/56–8/57.

 On The Sunny Side Original Jazz Classics OJC 076-2 Quinichette; Curtis Fuller (tb); John Jenkins, Sonny Red Kyner (as); Mal Waldron (p); Doug Watkins (b); Ed Thigpen (d). 57.

 For Basie Original Jazz Classics OJC 978-2 Quinichette; Shad Collins (t); Nat Pierce (p); Freddie Green (g); Walter Page (b); Jo Jones (d). 10/57.

Very much a middle-order batsman, Quinichette was best in the loose, jam session format that Prestige favoured in the later '50s, and in the easy, open-ended cuts for Dawn. More often than is entirely comfortable, the man from Denver sounds overpowered by his colleagues. Trumpeter Gene Roland, hardly the most dominant of presences, is in great form on the August 1957 sets on the Dawn compilation. The larger formats consign Paul entirely to the shadows. He is more convincing on the Prestige dates. The eponymous 'On The Sunny Side Of The Street' and the Basie material on the other OJC are quite strong, but on both occasions the band is more impressive than the leader. On the former, he is paired with just Jenkins and rhythm, and he shapes some elegant and persuasive solos, but there isn't much to chew on here.

Michele Rabbia

PERCUSSION

Gifted Italian, whose influences fall mostly outside jazz.

 Shifting Grace Cam Jazz 77912 Rabbia; Marilyn Crispell (p); Vincent Courtois (clo). 06.

Crispell's presence guarantees a 'jazz' interest, though the language here is far from orthodoxy. Gabbia draws considerably from classical music, and we hear elements of Morton Feldman and Giacinto Scelsi in his approach. However, these are powerful improvisations and don't require undue labelling. His touch is delicate but sure; his sound-world a troublingly beautiful one.

John Rae

DRUMS

Edinburgh-based drummer with a blend of post-bop and Scottish music.

 Celtic Feet Caber 010 Rae; Phil Bancroft (sax); Brian Kellock (p); Eilidh Shaw (vn); Simon Thoumire (concertina); Mario Caribé (b). 6/99.

 Beware The Feet Caber 018 As above, except add Kevin MacKenzie (g); Guy Nicholson (perc). 11/00.

Edinburghers – and Irvine Welsh readers – will understand a title like 'Power Of The Radge', a celebration of in-your-face, up-front thrawn-ness. No one will mistake the sheer rhythmic power of Rae's small band. Anchored by pianist Kellock and light-toned bassist Caribé, it weaves a complex rhythmic and textural spell, from the unexpected stride opening to the astonishing rhythmic coup of the closing 'Slumber Jack' – 17/16, indeed! Thoumire's mournful concertina and the now patented saxophone sound of Phil Bancroft provide the spot colour, but it's Rae's ideas and sheer punch that make this such an engaging record. Hard to categorize (as is probably the intention) but, as the election celebration of 'May 7th' underlines, full of the confidence of a country and a music reinventing itself.

The sequel is an equal delight. There is a greater emphasis on traditional music, but Kellock's joyous imitation of Fats Waller on the opening 'Boogie Celt' establishes a jazz feel right from the beginning; laughter of pure delight in the studio at the end. 'Sing For Your Supper' is a good example of how Rae intends to use folky themes as the basis for adventurous improvisation; Bancroft's solo on it is topped only by MacKenzie's brilliant guest spot on the next track, played in a weavy Latin rhythm. The rest unfolds more or less familiarly, sometimes reminiscent of older crossover Celtic experiments by the likes of John Surman or Ken Hyder, but with considerable originality and unflagging imagination.

Ronnie Rae Sr

DOUBLE BASS

Patriarch of a talented clan and guru to others.

* From The Cradle To The Groove Ten To Ten TTT CDS 752 Rae; Warren Vaché (c); Dimitri Shapko (sax); Ronnie Rae Jr (p); John Rae (d). 05.

Having watched his children releasing records, Rae obviously thought it was time to make a belated debut as leader. Predictably, he shows the youngsters how it's done. Released on Clark Tracey's label, this is one of the top British releases of 2006. The 11 commissioned pieces touch on Scottish roots music, hard bop and funk, but blended together into a seamless and coherent whole. Check out the descending bass-line on the opening 'Haw Maw' for proof of why Rae's been such a sought-after figure for so long.

Boyd Raeburn (1913–66)

BASS, TENOR AND BARITONE SAXOPHONES

A leader at 20, and by 30 in charge of a challenging modernist group. The records weren't hits and he reverted to sweeter fare, retiring in 1957.

 & His Orchestra 1944 /  More 1944–1945 Circle CCD 22 /113 Louis Cles, Ewell Payne, Pincus Stavitt, Benny Harris, Stan Fishelson, T. D. Allison, Dizzy Gillespie (t); Earl Swope, Pullman Pederson, Bob Swift, Trummy Young, J. K. Corman, O. C. Wilson, W. C. Robertson (tb); John Bothwell, Hal McKusick (as); Angelo Tompros, Joe Megro, Al Cohn (ts); Serge Chaloff (bs); George Handy, George Hendelman, Ike Carpenter (p); Dennis Sandole, John Payuo, Steve P. Jordan (g); Andy Delmar, Mort Oliver, Oscar Pettiford (b); Don Lamond, Shelly Manne (d); Don Darcy, Marjorie Wood Hoffman (v). 6/44–1/45.

 March Of The Boyds Hep 22 Raeburn; Gordon Boswell, Pete Candoli, Norman Faye, Conrad Gozzo, Wes Hensel (t); Eddie—

Bert, Dick Noel, Hal Smith, Britt Woodman, Ollie Wilson, Freddie Zito (tb); Lloyd Oto, Al Richman, Evan Vail (frhn); Harvey Estrin, Allen Fields (as); Harvey Klee (as, f); Wilbur Schwartz (as, cl); Frank Socolow (as, ts); Ralph Lee, Lucky Thompson, Shirley Thompson (ts); Hy Mandel (bs); Harry Babasin, Clyde Lombardi (bsx); Gus McReynolds (sax); Jules Jacob (eng hn, ob, ts); Michael 'Dodo' Marmarosa, Dale Pierce (p); Sam Herman, Tony Rizzi (g); Gail Laughton (hp); Tiny Kahn, Irv Kluger, Jackie Mills (d); Doug Jones (perc); David Allyn (v). 45–46.

 Jubilee Performances 1946 /  Jubilee /  Transcription Performances 1945–1946 /  & His Orchestra Hep CD 1 / 42 / Storyville 8313 Similar to above. 12/45–4/46; 45–46; 45–46..

In 1944 an unexplained fire at the Palisades Pleasure Park in New Jersey destroyed the instruments and music of one of the most challenging big bands of the period. Typically of Boyd Raeburn, his re-formed band and new book were even more adventurous than what had gone before. Musically, the Circle material from the apocalyptic year is typical of the leader's adventurous spirit and of the willingness of his players to push the boat out a little and take risks. Often exhilarating stuff; albeit of an obviously transitional nature. Raeburn's was a musicians' band, held in the highest esteem by his peers, regarded with some suspicion by those who believed that bands were for dancing. Raeburn had an intelligent awareness of classical and 20th-century forms and was as comfortable with Bartók and Debussy as he was with Ellington and Basie. The bands were clangorous, neither 'sweet' nor 'hot', but a curious admixture of the two, and arrangements were full of awkward time-signatures and tonalities. Tunes such as 'Tonsillectomy', 'Rip Van Winkle' and 'Yerxa', from earlier and (as yet) not reissued sessions, are among the most remarkable of modern-band pieces. Hal McKusick was a featured soloist and the Raeburn bands of the time (like Kirk's or McShann's) are well worth scouring for the early work of prominent modernists. It may be that simple market forces pushed Raeburn back in the direction of the swing mainstream.

Hep's set of transcriptions comes in decent sound and is something of a mixed bag: vocal features for David Allyn blend in with some of the maverick arranger George Handy's outlandish work. 'Cartaphilius' is a typically extraordinary Handy piece, the sort of thing Stan Kenton must have enjoyed. The Jubilee airshots include some scarifying arrangements of things like 'Body And Soul', but also include Finckel's 'Boyd Meets Stravinsky'. Hard to know how these were received at the time, so acute an angle on bop harmony they take. In sum, this is an inconsistent body of work, but Raeburn deserves a better shake than jazz history has so far given him.

Hugh Ragin (born 1951)

TRUMPET

He was born in Houston, studied in Colorado and formed associations with some of the leading avant-gardists of the '70s. He has served as director of jazz studies at Oberlin College.

 Back To Saturn Black Saint 120160 Ragin; Greg Carroll (vib); Marc Sabatella (p); Erik Turkman (b); Scott Gordan (d). 8/93.

Ragin's devotion to the music of Sun Ra (it emerged again on An Afternoon In Harlem, below) is more implicit than explicit on this enjoyable set. The closing 'Back To Saturn' (written by Turkman) comes the closest. Surprisingly, much of the material is written by the bassist and pianist: Sabatella's 'Bud-Like', 'Goblin Market' and 'Blue Honda A La Truck' have a nice boppish feel. Ragin's own 'Fanfare To Fiesta' lent its name to a later album, which featured the irrepressible Clark Terry; it has an infectious groove, given an attractively spiky edge here. They also do Don Pullen's 'Song For The Old Country'. Nice record.

(*) An Afternoon In Harlem Justin Time 127 Ragin; David Murray (bcl); Craig Taborn (p); Jaribu Shahid (b); Bruce Cox, Andrew Cyrille (d); Amiri Baraka (v). 3/99.

Ragin demonstrates his considerable range on this. The title-track has an easy, uncomplicated swing that allows the leader's full, almost vocalized tone full rein. The nod to a former employer on 'Braxton's Blues' is in inevitably freer spirit, but offers an object lesson in how more-unpredictable structures can be given a firm logic. The same goes for 'The Moors Of Spain', a tremendous piece. The cuts featuring guests Murray and Baraka are the only disappointments. The bass clarinettist (as he is on this) is in fine voice on 'The Light At The End Of The Underground Railroad', and Cyrille (also a guest) anchors it solidly, but the basic idea doesn't seem strong enough for the weight placed on it. 'When Sun Ra Gets Blue' is memorable mainly for the title; Baraka's lucubrations are simply boring. Elsewhere, Taborn, Shahid and Cox deliver a solid performance and provide fertile ground for Ragin, who has grown steadily in stature since his first appearances as leader.

(*) Sound Pictures For Solo Trumpet Hospscotch HOP 13 Ragin (t solo). 02.

As we've remarked elsewhere, solo trumpet is a tough discipline for a record, and it's to Hugh's credit that he makes this set as engaging to a listener as it is. 'For The Joy Of Sound Space & Music' makes a dazzling start, the trumpet treated with delay to evoke a whirling kaleidoscope. But the largest part of the disc is given over to the nine 'Rhythm Units', which are based around some of Leo Smith's pioneering themes for the solo trumpeter, an intriguing piece of repertory – although, given that they involved a very patient and even ordering of sounds, taken as a sequence they're stiff work for the uncommitted listener. The 'Ballad For Miles' is a poignant muted display; some variations on Paganini include the most virtuosic work on the disc; and a Braxton dedication starts slow and gets mercurial. Interesting as the 'Rhythm Units' are, it's Ragin's own themes which offer the most rewarding music here.

(*) Revelation Justin Time JTR 8502 Ragin; Assif Tsahar (ts, bcl); William Parker (b); Hamid Drake (d). 04.

In our last edition, we suggested that Ragin, if not quite missing in action, wasn't heard as much recently. He's put that right – and royally – over the last couple of years. Revelation is, aside from the admittedly more specialist solo trumpet album, Ragin's most successful recording to date. Tsahar sounds highly focused and plays with growing authority on most cuts. The parallels between this line-up and the classical Ornette Coleman quartet are probably too obvious to require stating. The differences are actually more important. Ragin's grounding in orthodox harmony is obvious and strong, but he has the confidence to move outside it on cuts like 'Restoration Intensive' and the long title-piece, implying a tonality rather than nailing his colours to it, letting the rhythm (thanks to the brilliant Parker and Drake) do a lot of the work. So far, so Ornette-like, but nowadays Ragin speaks in a voice all his own.

Also, in brief:

 Metaphysical Question Cecma 1021. 84.
A challenging trio date with John Lindberg (b) and Thurman Barker (d); the trumpet's very exposed.

 Gallery CIMP 177. 6/98.
Duets with regular pianist Marc Sabatella, who contributes the title-composition. Rugged stuff, bluntly recorded.

 Fanfare & Fiesta Justin Time 152. 6/00.
Clark Terry guests with Ragin's Trumpet Ensemble. Title-track and 'Harmonic Architecture' are welcome retreads, 'Prayer For Lester Bowie' the standout track.

 Feel The Sunshine Justin Time 182. 02.
An incoherent set with Assif Tsahar (ts, bcl) and Craig Taborn (p) in the group.

Zoe Rahman

PIANO

She was born in Chichester, studied at Oxford University and Berklee, and took lessons with JoAnne Brackeen.

 The Cynic Manushi 001 Rahman; Jeremy Brown (b); Winston Clifford (d). 01.
 Melting Pot Manushi 002 Rahman; Idris Rahman (cl); Jeremy Brown, Oli Hayhurst (b); Gene Calderazzo, Patrick Illingworth (d); Adriano Adewale Itauna (udu). 06.
Rahman was immediately hailed on her debut. She's the kind of figure (has the kind of figure) marketing departments love, but she's too tough and determined an artist, too intelligent a musician, to get sucked into that. The debut was fine, but the second record, which again features a trio (Brown and Illingworth are on just one track, Idris Rahman and Itauna on another, the only non-original), progresses rapidly into a piano trio language that has few obvious antecedents. Some might point to the elegant swing of JoAnne Brackeen, and find her influence on a tune like 'J'Berg', 'The Calling' or 'One Note' (all on Melting Pot) but this is probably wishful thinking. She's evolving a very distinctive style, flowing but still percussive, concentrating ideas round loosely understood tonal centres that don't always dictate a song's direction. 'Promising' is probably understating it.

Roland Ramanan

TRUMPET, WOOD FLUTES

A sometimes overlooked figure on the London free scene.

(*) Shaken /  Caesura Emanem 4081 / 4213 Ramanan, Marcio Mattos (clo, elec); Simon H. Fell (b); Mark Sanders (d). 9/01–1/02; 9/03.
A descendant of the great Shake Keane, Ramanan plays with a delightful mixture of open-toned joy and a sharper, more clenched delivery that bespeaks anger, frustration, pain, protest. The first record is more song-like in approach and Ramanan seems easier in this idiom than with the freer language of the second disc, which devotes two tracks to a bass solo and a string duo respectively.

Ram Ramirez (1913–94)

ORGAN

He was born in Puerto Rico, worked as a pianist on the New York scene from the early '30s, and switched to organ – following the example of Wild Bill Davis – in the early '50s.

(*) Live In Harlem Black & Blue BB 927.2 Ramirez; Ronnie Coles (d). 60.
Recorded at Frank's Steak House in New York, this is a priceless example of the kind of music which was still being played nightly at dozens of American clubs and eateries in simpler times. The opening 'Robbins' Nest' is luxuriantly spread across 25 minutes, and Ramirez simply plays chorus after chorus of sparse, almost parsimonious licks that develop their own irresistible momentum and logic, beautifully sustained. He sounds unlike any of the prevailing models on the instrument of the day, and is all the better for it. All Coles has to do is keep steady, steady time. Somebody in the audience – allegedly Bill Davis! – shouts out encouragement, but it sounds as if Ramirez is engrossed in his own world.

Mark Ramsden

SAXOPHONES

Underrated British reedman with fingers in several musical pies.

 Tribute To Paul Desmond 33Jazz 041 Ramsden; Dave Cliff (g); Andy Hamill (b); Gary Hammond (perc). 98.
 Above The Clouds: Saxophone And Organ Naxos 86041 Ramsden; Steve Lodder (org). 00.
Effectively co-led by Ramsden and Cliff, this is pretty much what it says, a more or less literal homage to Desmond and by extension his employer Dave Brubeck. 'Desmond Blue' and 'Take Five' are vivid enough, though the latter palls when set alongside drummer Simon Goubert's epic re-reading on his Haiti. Ramsden's more adventurous work features on the Naxos set with Lodder. His soprano sound is bright and penetrating, but there is too little musical substance to these meditations, which sit at least partly outwith a jazz idiom.

Freddy Randall (1921–99)

TRUMPET

A Londoner, he started out with a comedy group but formed his own traditional band in the late '40s and recorded extensively for Parlophone. Faded from the scene after a spell of illness, but returned to active duty in the '70s, while running an old people's home.

(*) Vintage Freddy Randall 1949–1951 Lake LACD170 Randall; Geoff Love, Eddie Harvey, Norman Cave (tb); Cliff Townsend, Bruce Turner (cl); Laurie Gold (ts); Pat Rose (bs, cl); Freddy Gardner (bs); Dill Jones, Al Mead, Stan Butcher (p); Don Cooper, Vic Lewis (g); Hank Hobson, Danny Heggarty, Ron Stone, Ted Palmer (b); Max Abrams, Harry Miller, Lennie Hastings (d). 2/49–10/51.
* Freddy Randall And His Band Lake LACD123 Randall; Roy Crimmins, Norman Cave, Dave Keir (tb); Archie Semple, Dave Shepherd, Al Gay (cl); Betty Smith (ts); Dave Fraser, Harry Smith (p); Ron Stone, Ken Ingerfield, Jack Peberdy (b); Lennie Hastings, Stan Bourne (d). 3/53–7/55.

A pair of records to convert unbelievers to the energy and vitality of the best British trad. Randall's groups weren't rough-and-ready outfits. He led by example, his trumpet-playing crackling with conviction and imagination alike, and his groups were hard-bitten but swinging in their doughty way. Randall liked the sound of the Chicagoan brassmen rather than the New Orleans strain beloved by Ken Colyer, and his jazz has an incendiary quality to it which eluded many of his contemporaries. Not that there isn't a sense of fun in the tracks on the second CD, chosen by Paul Lake from the 70-odd sides he made for Parlophone between 1953 and 1955. 'Professor Jazz' still raises a smile, and anyone who calls one of his originals 'My Tiny Band Is Chosen' has a reserve of wit as well as commitment. A model reissue, in excellent sound, and it is a pity that Randall himself did not live to see it happen. The earlier set is not quite as strong, perhaps. The 1949 session for Tempo suffers a bit from the band going off at too frantic a pace, though it's certainly exciting. The first sessions for Parlophone fill up the rest of the disc, and the Randall horn burns out of the speakers.

Doug Raney (born 1957)

GUITAR

He worked with his dad, Jimmy Raney, and Al Haig in his teens. A couple of years further on, Doug and Jimmy formed what was to be a long-standing duo.

 Introducing Doug Raney Steeplechase SCCD 1082 Raney; Duke Jordan (p); Hugo Rasmussen (b); Billy Hart (d). 9/77.

 Cuttin' Loose Steeplechase SCCD 31105 Raney; Bernt Rosengren (ts); Horace Parlan (p); Niels-Henning Ørsted Pedersen (b); Billy Hart (d). 8/78.

 Listen Steeplechase SCCD 31144 As above, except omit Parlan, NHØP; add Jesper Lundgaard (b). 12/80.

Raised to the family craft, Doug Raney quickly established his own identity and a more contemporary idiom that also seemed to draw on swing guitar (missing out, that is, much of the bebop influence his father has sustained). Less robust rhythmically than his father, Raney slots more conventionally into a horn-and-rhythm set-up. CD doesn't always flatter his technique, which sounds slightly scratchy and lacks Jimmy Raney's smooth, Jim Hall-like legato. However, now that the Steeplechase catalogue is back in better shape, fine early records like Introducing are back in circulation, broadening the picture considerably; with Raney Junior, bulk is what it's about, fewer moments of sheer glory than the old man, but in their stead a dogged brilliance that begins to impinge only over many records. He's an artist who needs to be listened to steadily and whole.

The closing 'Moment's Notice' on Listen is one of Raney's best performances on record. There is a steady modal shift on his theme statements, and the soloing is robust without losing the tune's innate romanticism. Rosengren's Coltrane-isms are reasonably well assimilated, and he modulates well, as on Cuttin' Loose, between a smooth swing and a more aggressive modernism.

 I'll Close My Eyes Steeplechase SCCD 1166 Raney; Bernt Rosengren (ts, af); Horace Parlan (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Ole Jacob Hansen (d). 7/82.

 Meeting The Tenors Criss Cross Criss 1006 Raney; Bernt Rosengren (ts, f); Ferdinand Povel (ts); Horace Parlan (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Ole Jacob Hansen (d). 4/83.

 Lazy Bird Steeplechase SCCD 31200 Raney; Bernt Rosengren (ts); Ben Besiakov (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Ole Jacob Hansen (d). 4/84.

(*) Blue And White Steeplechase SCD 31191 Raney; Ben Besiakov (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Aage Tanggaard (d). 4/84.

The first few years of the '80s saw Raney trying to consolidate and managing only to mark time. These are not very compelling albums if one comes to them first and without an awareness of the robust thinking that lies beneath their rather bland surfaces. Blue And White is probably the best of them, dominated by titanic performances of Jimmy Heath's 'Gingerbread Boy' and John Coltrane's 'Straight Street'. The three previous records are only exceptional for the contributions of Bernt Rosengren, one of the great unsung heroes of European jazz and at this period a somewhat dark and brooding performer, even on relatively lightweight material. Raney understandably defers.

(*) Something's Up Steeplechase SCCD 31235 As above, except omit Tanggaard; add Billy Hart (d). 2/88.

 Guitar Guitar Guitar Steeplechase SCCD 31212 Raney; Mads Vinding (b); Billy Hart (d). 7/85.

(*) The Doug Raney Quintet Steeplechase SCCD 31249 Raney; Tomas Franck (as); Bernt Rosengren (ts); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Jukkis Uotila (d). 8/88.

Things pick up sharply again with the neutrally titled 1988 album, which is intended to give the signal that here is a working band, under the command of its leader, playing full-on and undistractable. It's certainly a major lift on the rather shambolic essays of the early part of the decade. Besiakov is nowhere near as commanding a player as Parlan, but he has sharpened considerably over the four years since his last recording with Raney and lends a genuine presence to 'Good Morning Heartache' and 'Upper Manhattan Medical Group'.

The '88 quintet album is excellent in every department. There is another fine version of 'Speedy Recovery' (also on Something's Up). The extra horn and the absence of piano restores certain harmonic responsibilities to the guitar, but it also generates a very different texture through which he has to play with just a little more force than usual.

 Back In New York Steeplechase SCCD 31409 Raney; Kenny Barron (p); Peter Washington (b); Kenny Washington (d). 95.

(*) Raney '96 Steeplechase SCCD 31397 Raney; Ben Besiakov (p); Lennart Ginman (b); Herlin Riley (d). 7/96.

Rising 40, Raney was perhaps anxious to show that he hadn't got ring-rusty working in exile over in Europe, so the Manhattan session was something of a confidence-boosting exercise. It's certainly not as good a record as the four-oh celebration that is Raney '96, one of his strongest group albums yet, opening uncompromisingly with 'Giant Steps' and closing on 'Afro Blue', with material by Pat Martino, Wes Montgomery, Charlie Parker (an unexpected 'Moose The Mooche') and Bill Evans (a graceful 'Re: Person I Knew'). We've no technical reason for it, but Raney has become fuller-voiced and more resonant in recent years, and most noticeably on this album. The guitar seems to be the same favoured Gibson, but there are perhaps more upstroke notes and harmonics, filling in the background sound and creating harmonic shadows, where before all was sunlight and space.

(*) The Backbeat Steeplechase SCCD 31456 Raney; Joey DeFrancesco (org); Billy Hart (d). 98.

Raney hasn't previously experimented with the traditional guitar/organ funk format, but this delicious set, named after the Horace Silver tune, suggests he can do the Wes Montgomery/Grant Green stuff with the best of them. Compared with Raney '96, the recording is flatter and less detailed, but with lots of extra bass, which suits the material perfectly. Duke's 'Prelude To A Kiss' is exquisite, a trio performance of near-perfect balance.

Also, in brief:

 Blues On A Par Steeplechase SCCD 31341. N.D.
Raney and George Cables (p) almost sound like two aspects of a single musical personality.

 You Go To My Head Steeplechase SCCD 31474. 99.
Straight off the Steeplechase production line: nothing to distinguish it in a crowd.

Jimmy Raney (1927–95)

GUITAR

The Kentucky-born Raney synthesized Charlie Christian with Lester Young to create long, cool, improvisational lines which have been hugely influential on guitarists of a later generation.

* A Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1706 Raney; John Wilson (t); Hall Overton (p); Teddy Kotick (b); Art Mardigan, Nick Stabulas (d). 5/54–3/55.
(*) Complete Recordings 1954–1956 Fresh Sound FSRCD 423 As above, except add Bill Crow (b); Joe Morello (d). 8/54–5/56.
Of the bop-inspired guitarists Raney perhaps best combined lyricism with great underlying strength. Essentially a group player, he sounds good at almost any tempo but is most immediately appealing on ballads. A, which contains some of his loveliest performances, remains an overlooked classic. Overton anticipates some of the harmonic devices employed by Hank Jones (see below), and bebop bassist Kotick plays with a firm authority that synchronizes nicely with Raney's rather spacious and elided lower-string work. Wilson adds a dimension to the lovely 'One More For The Mode' and to four more romantic numbers, including 'A Foggy Day' and 'Someone To Watch Over Me'. The Fresh Sound restores some later material, but it's probably only of much interest to guitar specialists.

 Live At Bradley's Gambit 69266 2CD Raney; Eric Diehl (g); Bill Takas (b). 12/74.
Previously unissued club material with Jimmy in a guitar/bass situation, with Diehl coming in for just five of the 16 tracks. It's familiar enough boppish fare, and the recording is decent enough to do the music justice, but it's unlikely that anyone other than a JR fan will get excited over this.

(*) Raney '81 Criss Cross 1001 Raney; Doug Raney (g); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Eric Ineke (d). 2/81.
(*) The Master Criss Cross 1009 Raney; Kirk Lightsey (p); Jesper Lundgaard (b); Eddie Gladden (d). 2/83.
* Wisteria Criss Cross 1019 Raney; Tommy Flanagan (p); George Mraz (b). 12/85.
The early '80s saw some vintage Raney on record. '81 includes some rejected takes, of 'Sweet And Lovely', 'If I Should Lose You' and 'My Shining Hour' most obviously, which offer convincing demonstration of his speed of thought and suggest once again what an underrated player he was by all except jazz guitar groupies, who presumably know their way 'round this stuff already.

The Master offers second takes of 'The Song Is You' and 'Tangerine' (but not, unfortunately, the vibrant 'Billie's Bounce'), revealing how thoughtful an accompanist Lightsey is. The rhythm players are slightly too stiff for him, but he compensates by breaking up their less elastic figures with single-note stabs and scurrying runs at the next bar-line.

Flanagan's right hand is lost in a rather woolly mix, but the material on the marvellous Wisteria more than makes up for any purely technical shortcomings. From the opening 'Hassan's Dream', with its big, dramatic gestures, to 'I Could Write A Book', the drummerless group plays at the highest level and 'Out Of The Past' is very special indeed.

(*) But Beautiful Criss Cross 1065 Raney; George Mraz (b); Lewis Nash (d). 12/90.
This is the master at work, to be sure. Raney plays with consummate ease and elegance, as perfectly balanced and utterly tasteful as ever. It's a great pity that he hasn't recorded more in this format. Mraz and Nash are both excellent, as always, and contribute considerably to the direction of Raney's solos, which do still have a tendency to drift and turn hazy at the edges. Mraz is formidably disciplined without losing expressiveness. The recording is very close and soft, picking up all the overtones in both sets of strings. By contrast, Nash is a little recessed.

Also, in brief:

 Jimmy Raney Visits Paris Fresh Sound FSRCD 89. 2/54.
Lined up with some of the city's premier boppers. Jimmy plays with concentration and elegance, but it's Bobby Jaspar's mentholated tenor which grabs the attention.

 Guitar Moments / (*) Nardis Steeplechase SCCD 37031/32 / 31184. 4/79; 79.
If you can't hire 'em, breed 'em. Raney's partnership with his son, Doug, has been consistently productive and sympathetic. The duos on the Bill Evans tribute Nardis are masterpieces of guitar interplay. The other is a budget reissue of two earlier discs, with Michael Moore (b) and Billy Hart (d).

John Rangecroft

CLARINET

Veteran British free improviser, rarely heard from on record of late.

(*) Blythe Hill Slam 228 Rangecroft; Marcio Mattos (b); Stu Butterfield (d). 10/96.
Cultivated free playing by three old hands who know each other well – Butterfield and Rangecroft played together in Cirrus in the late '60s, and Mattos joined them in the '70s. This is a rare sighting of the trio on record. It's chamberish, British free – Rangecroft is well known as a saxophonist, but he sticks to clarinet here, getting a rather cultured sound and seldom looking for extremes. The title-piece is a soberly beautiful exploration, and perhaps only on the long 'Altair' does the music show signs of sagging.

Andrew Rathbun

TENOR, SOPRANO AND ALTO SAXOPHONES, CLARINET, KEYBOARDS

A rising star, out of Canada.

 Jade Fresh Sound New Talent FSNT076 Rathbun; Taylor Haskins (t); Chris Komer (frhn); Helen Richman (f); John Stetch (p); Ben Street (b); George Schuller (d); Luciana Souza (v). 6/98.
 True Stories Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD 099 Rathbun; Taylor Haskins (t); George Colligan (p); John Herbert (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d); Luciana Souza (v). 8/00.
(*) Sculptures Fresh Sound New Talent FSNTCD135 Rathbun; Kenny Wheeler (t, flhn); Frank Carlberg (p); John Herbert (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 9/01.

Rathbun has been impressing everyone with his appearances as a sideman in recent years. His own projects have tended to be quite ambitious in form, drawing on an interest in the relation between music and verse. The whole of the first record came out of seeing something written in the subway; the second takes the work of Margaret Atwood as its starting-point. The third, recorded in that fateful NY month, also implies an extra-musical programme, but has no vocal part. Truth is, the Toronto man has no need of outside support. He's a deft composer and already a sophisticated soloist who may only be tripped from time to time by his own ambition. He has a nicely rasping touch when it's called for, though for the most part these early records look for a lyrical/expressive vein. The set with compatriot Wheeler is the only one to get seriously excited about.

 Shadow Forms Steeplechase SCCD 31598 Rathbun; George Garzone (ts); Scott Lee (b); Jeff Hirshfield (d). 1/06.

The move to Steeplechase sees Rathbun settling into more of a straight-blowing context, but even here he's not content to fall back on generic ideas. 'Scatter Scott' is a great boppish line. 'This Year 9/11' sees him switch very effectively to soprano, while Garzone takes the tenor part, one of five appearances by him. Lee is given a lot of writing space, and delivers a nice idea on 'Herbie At 60'. They bring in Joe Lovano's 'Street Talk', which ought to be in more band-books. All in all, it's an effective and affecting performance.

 Affairs Of State Steeplechase SCCD 31630 Rathbun; Taylor Haskins (t); Gary Versace (p); John Herbert (b); Mike Sarin (d). 1/07.

It was pretty obvious that Rathbun's reaction to 9/11 was neither pro forma nor sentimental. He is a very fine musician, but more unusually he is also an engaged musician, and on Affairs Of State, with a fine band at his back, he delivers a heated verdict on post-9/11 America. No poetry, no soapboxing, just tersely written modern jazz which lets form and harmony tell its own story. 'Break The Chains' and 'Folly (Of The Future Fallen)' are both devastating statements and Rathbun's own voice rises to meet the challenge. This is state-of-the-art modern jazz, having its say on the state of the nation. It's a powerful combination.

François Raulin

PIANO

Elegant chamber-jazz from a rising star.

 Trois Plans Sur La Comète hatOLOGY 582 Raulin; François Corneloup (ss, bs); Bruno Chevillon (b, v). 00.

Raulin can be drily abstract one moment and meltingly romantic the next. This fine trio set, which sounds like a Europeanized version of Jimmy Giuffre's '50s trio, is an excellent introduction to two very fine players. Chevillon will be known to most from his work with Louis Sclavis. The highlight is 'Calligraphies', which starts with a Satie-esque stillness and then whirls off into a wildly erotic dance, executed by Corneloup's soprano. The saxophonist is on baritone for 'Soho', which also features an unexpected touch of prepared piano. Raulin always seems keen to explore new sonorities. His touch is very varied and his occasional Bill Evans-isms are no more than way-stones on a very idiosyncratic path. Immediately accessible and enjoyable music if you don't mind music that marches to no drummer whatsoever.

Enrico Rava (born 1943)

TRUMPET, FLUGELHORN

Born in Trieste, he grew up in Turin, where he met American musicians. Influenced by Miles Davis, he gravitated towards the avant-garde with Gato Barbieri, and later with Steve Lacy, and the Globe Unity Orchestra. His interest in free jazz is tempered by an awareness of other genres and styles.

 The Pilgrim And The Stars / (*) The Plot ECM 847322-2 / 523282-2 Rava; John Abercrombie (g); Palle Danielsson (b); Jon Christensen (d). 6/75; 8/76.
 Enrico Rava Quartet ECM 523283-2 Rava; Roswell Rudd (tb); Jean-François Jenny-Clark (b); Aldo Romano (d). 3/78.

For a time, these seemed the definitive Rava albums, unlikely to be bettered, so perfectly balanced are they. The trumpeter's distinctive manner is a combination of sustained, curving notes, unmistakably coloured, with sudden rhythmic tangents. In combination with Abercrombie's guitar and the top-flight Scandinavian rhythm section, he creates a sound-world all his own. Reconvening the same band two years later yielded a more subtle album, structurally and compositionally, but The Plot's narrative sophistication ('Amici', 'The Plot' itself) consistently yields to the sheer pictorial poetry evident on 'Foto Di Famiglia', a Rava–Abercrombie collaboration that might have come from the same sessions as the earlier record.

The eponymous Quartet album paired him – often literally – with the waywardly brilliant Rudd. Their unison lines on the upbeat 'The Fearless Five' are formidable. Both men are in cracking form, but they save their most expressive and lyrical statements for the long 'Lavori Casalinghi', co-written with Graciela Rava, which opens the set. There are strong things on 'Tramps' as well, but here it's the remarkable rhythm section of Jenny-Clark and Romano which catches the ear; the bassist in particular is given a lot to do, covering for the absence of a harmony instrument. 'Round About Midnight' is a hokey party-piece for the two horns on their own.

 Rava String Band Soul Note 121114 Rava; Augusto Mancinelli (g); Giovanni Tommaso (b); Tony Oxley (d); Nana Vasconcelos (perc); string quartet. 4/84.
(*) Secrets Soul Note 121164 Rava; Augusto Mancinelli (g, g-syn); John Taylor (p); Furio Di Castri (b); Bruce Ditmas (d). 7/86.

In the early '80s, Rava worked with (mainly) Italian bands, relying heavily on Mancinelli's Abercrombie-derived guitar. Tony Oxley's recorded contribution is restricted to the less than wholly successful String Band project, which reflects Rava's growing interest in formal composition for orchestral groups. Secrets gains immeasurably from the presence of another Englishman, John Taylor, whose cultured accompaniments and understated soloing are probably more widely recognized outside the British Isles.

 Electric Five Soul Note 121214 Rava; Gianluigi Trovesi (as, cl, bcl); Domenico Caliri, Roberto Cecchetto (g); Giovanni Maier (b); U. T. Gandhi (d). 9/94.

It is, of course, a sextet; Rava follows the practice of excluding himself from his line-ups, almost as if the group was a separate entity. That's how the Electric Five comes across here. Their ensembles are very much a background against which Rava sings, prays, prowls and occasionally mourns bitterly. We've always found this a very moving record but one which lacks some essential element of expressive circuitry to make it a great one. The non-Rava tracks are, interestingly, 'Milestones' and 'Boplicity', rather than anything from the electric period.

 Noir Label Bleu LBLC 6595 Rava; Stefano Di Battista (sax); Roberto Cecchetto, Domenico Caliri (g); Giovanni Girolamo Maier (b); Umberto Trombetta (d). 6/96.

The electric group on Noir is vibrant, if a little overcooked. The better tracks are when Di Battista plays and the pace is a little less frenetic. Rava's model is obviously the Miles Davis of the early '70s, and to that extent he does a good job, but it is an old-fashioned sound. The CD comes with a comic book – or 'graphic novel' – which may delight some purchasers.

* Duo En Noir Between The Lines btl 004 Rava; Ran Blake (p). 9/99.

A tribute to the late Art Farmer, recorded live in Frankfurt and issued on Franz Koglmann's new label, Duo En Noir represents one of the most creative pairings of Rava's career. The material is surprisingly varied, in the first ten minutes ranging from 'Nature Boy' to Bernard Hermann film music, and taking in modern themes like Al Green's gospelly love song 'Let's Stay Together', as well as 'There's A Small Hotel'. Needless to say, given the instincts of both musicians, none of the material is played entirely straight. Blake can occasionally sound brittle and abstract, but there is real warmth to his playing here, while Rava sounds as if he uses best extra-virgin instead of valve oil, a lovely, compelling tone that recalls the great swing trumpeters and, of course, Art Farmer himself.

 La Dolce Vita CamJazz 10432 Rava; Stefano Bollani (p); Giovanni Tommaso (b); Roberto Gatto (d). 99.

An attractive movie-music project, co-led by bassist Tommaso. 'Il Sogno Di Hitchcock' is a moody highlight, but there's much to enjoy, even if it isn't Rava's most dynamic record. Bollani is a constant presence, with a passionate immersion in Nino Rota's music and other similar bodies of work. It would be hard to imagine anyone else carrying this set quite as convincingly.

 Montreal Diary / B – Live At Montreal Jazz Festival Label Bleu LBLC 6645 Rava; Stefano Bollani (p). 7/01.

 Plays Miles Davis Label Bleu LBLC 6639 As above, except add Paolo Fresu (t); Enzo Pietropaoli (b); Roberto Gatto (d). 7/01.

A fruitful visit to Canada. The duos with Bollani are delightful, and the stripped-down version of 'Certi Angoli Segreti' is one of the best he's given of this beautiful composition. Bollani is very much an accompanist but he knows how to create shapes behind the trumpeter that draw attention to themselves as well as enhancing the horn-lines. He's on hand again on the Miles set, coming on somewhere closer to Bill Evans than to Wynton Kelly or Al Haig. That comes out on 'Blue In Green' and perhaps explains why he sounds a bit sticky on 'Bye Bye Blackbird'. Rava has been identified as a Miles-and-Chet clone, but, while there is a strong influence, he's a much more individual, more classically inspired player than either. His Miles stylings are less slavish than, say, Freddie Hubbard's on the VSOP tours, and Hubbard is no mean stylist himself.

 Happiness Is To Win A Big Prize Stunt STUCD 03062 Rava; Gianluca Petrella (tb); John Abercrombie (g); Stefano Bollani (p); Jesper Bodilsen (b); Morten Lund (d). 02.

Rava won the prestigious Jazzpar Prize in 2002 (the first Italian laureate), hence the title of this and one of the songs. Again, though, the trumpeter is keen to mix his own compositions ('Certi Angoli Segreti') with standards like 'Nature Boy' and 'Dear Old Stockholm', which seems remarkably self-denying in the circumstances, since he's clearly not short of new ideas. Abercrombie brings in his distinctive swing, which helps a slightly foursquare rhythm section. Petrella, though, is a revelation.

* Full Of Life CamJazz 5007 Rava; Javier Girotto (ss, bs); Ares Tavolazzi (b); Fabrizio Sferra (d). 11/02.

The beginning of a purple patch that saw the trumpeter greet the new decade with a fresh resource and some brilliant playing. There's an unusual cast to this group. Girotto's two saxophones – a combination more associated with John Surman – sit beautifully with the trumpet, either doubling higher lines or laying down a rich foundation, and Tavolazzi is an incredible technician with complex ideas of his own. There are standards – 'Moonlight In Vermont', 'Surrey With The Fringe On Top' and 'Nature Boy' – mixed in with the originals, and Rava shows himself to be every bit as impressive on the repertory stuff.

* Easy Living ECM 1760 Rava; Gianluca Petrella (tb); Stefano Bollani (p); Rosario Bonaccorso (b); Robert Gatto (d). 6/03.

Never a maximalist, Rava seems content to play less and less on his own records, much like fellow trumpeter and stablemate Tomasz Stańko who has also adopted a similar reserve, keeping his counsel in order to deliver maximum impact. This is Rava's first album for ECM in 17 years, a long absence from the imprint that delivered his first classic LP, The Pilgrim And The Stars. This is potentially another, a beautiful, quiet and mostly quite reserved album of songs. He is on record as thinking it's his best work, and at 60 he uses the occasion to revisit a lot of his music past. There are high trills reminiscent of the Dixieland he used to play, bebop figures which are irresistibly reminiscent of young Miles Davis, and freer and more abstract shapes as well. Apart from the title standard, everything is original. 'Hornette And The Drum Thing' is especially fascinating, full of teasing quotes and allusions, but absolutely on its own terms as well.

(*) Tati ECM 005061 Rava; Stefano Bollani (p); Paul Motian (d). 11/04.

The revived ECM association continues to bear fruit. In keeping with his current interest in standards jazz, Rava opens with 'The Man I Love', though with the exception of another fine interpretation of Puccini's 'E lucevan e stelle' the writing is his own and Motian's. There's a lot of fine material, but one would like to hear ideas like 'Cornettology' played out at greater length. With a dozen tracks packed into an averagely proportioned CD, everything seems a touch perfunctory. Bollani and Motian are sympathetic partners and the pianist's left-hand fills mean you never notice the absence of a bass.

(*) The Words And The Days ECM 1982 Rava; Gianluca Petrella (tb); Andrea Pozza (p); Rosario Bonaccorso (b); Roberto Gatto (d). 12/05.

Rava seems to regard himself as a split creative personality – 'Dr Ra And Mr Va' hints at it here, in a kind of personal epilogue – with a foot in other musical camps and a basic background in jazz. Which is Jekyll and which Hyde isn't difficult to determine when you listen to the actual music. Much of this comes direct from Miles Davis, of course, and with Rava's return to ECM he has had a chance again to explore the more limpid and harmonically astute style to his heart's content. This is a delightful record, marked by a wonderful reading of Russ Freeman's not often covered 'The Wind' and Don Cherry's 'Art Deco', which he actually plays in more of an art nouveau style, and the long atmospheric originals 'Secrets' and 'Serpent'. Pozza is a more spacious player than Bollani, and less likely to hog the spotlight. Petrella is essentially a colour-and-wash player rather than a linear improviser. The blend is exquisite and no one has ever made Rava's trumpeting sound more beautiful than Manfred Eicher.

(*) The Third Man ECM 2020 Rava; Stefano Bollani (p). 11/06.
Interesting title. Rava has, of course, referenced film noir in the past (and recorded with noir-obsessive Ran Blake), but here it's more likely that he's paying tribute to producer Eicher, who set up this recording in ECM's latest favourite venue, the Auditorio Radio Svizzera in Lugano, where live-in-the-studio sessions are particularly rewarding. Opening with Bruno Martino's 'Estate' was an interesting decision, since most of the remainder are Rava originals. A couple of Jobim tunes and one piece by Bollani make up the rest. The approach seems to be relaxed and relatively spontaneous and there are places where one suspects a technically flawed performance has gone through over a putatively more perfect take because the musicality is greater. Reunited with Bollani, Rava has less need to pursue a melodic line with quite such literalism, as was arguably the case with Pozza, and he opens up his tone and explores not just the macro-space of the 'studio' but also the inner space created by Bollani's rich chordal argument. It's a relatively unusual record for the trumpeter in its spareness, but it stands with his very finest works.

Also, in brief:

 Il Giro Del Giorno In 80 Mondi Black Saint 120011. 2/72.
Around The Day In 80 Worlds: funky, but marked by free episodes and misterioso ideas.

(*) Shades Of Chet Label Bleu LBLC 6629. 5/99.
Rava and fellow trumpeter Paolo Fresu (t, flhn) are probably superior players, but Chet is revered in Italy, so the tribute makes sense in context.

(*) Nausicaa EGEA SCA 037. 3/93.
A stunning duo with Enrico Pieranunzi: arguably the two greatest Italian masters on one disc. Irresistible.

 Rava, L'Opera Va /  Carmen Label Bleu LBLC 6413 / 6579. 93; 5/95.
Operatic arias are composed 'improvisation' derived from the preceding narrative and discursive material, so there's nothing illogical about this project, which lets Rava loose on what to him are standards. The second is a curiosity with the famous melodies transposed by Bruno Tommaso and falling somewhere between honourable revision and pastiche.

(*) D.N.A. Giants Of Jazz CD 53302. 12/96.
A mostly standards set which though relatively obscure marks the real start of Rava's return to more orthodox jazz recording.

 Live At Birdland Neuberg Challenge 71011. 7/00.
A favourite location for live recordings and one can see why in this fine quintet situation with local players.

Sonny Red (1932–81)

ALTO SAXOPHONE

Born Sylvester Kyner, he lived and died in Detroit, a journeyman bop player who worked with Barry Harris and others.

 Red, Blue & Green Milestone MCD47086 Red; Blue Mitchell (t); Barry Harris, Cedar Walton (p); Grant Green (g); Lex Humphries, George Tucker (b); Jimmy Cobb (d).
Sonny sounded more like Jackie McLean than anyone, though Charlie Parker was the first influence. There is an early Blue Note, still available in Japan, but not much else in the current catalogue. These sessions were released as The Mode and Images on Jazzland. The title obviously refers to the leader's name and those of Blue Mitchell and Grant Green, both of whom shine whenever featured. The December 1961 quintet with Harris, Green and no second horn is delightful, with a fine version of 'Moon River'. It isn't clear why the two dates are mixed in the tracking on this useful compilation. It doesn't make much difference to the impact and has the slightly odd effect of leaving most of the 'original' compositions – mostly reworkings of familiar changes – to the second half.

Chuck Redd (born 1969)

VIBRAPHONE, DRUMS

Emerged as a drummer first, with Charlie Byrd, but has diversified since then and amassed a small but impressive body of records.

 All This And Heaven Too Arbors ARCD 19257 Redd; Gene Bertoncini (g); George Mraz (b). 4/01.
 Remembers Barney Kessel: Happy All The Time Arbors ARCD 19314 Redd; Monty Alexander, Robert Redd (p); Howard Alden, Gene Bertoncini (g); Hassan Shakur (b); Jeff Hamilton (d). 5/05.
 When Redd Is Blue Noteworthy 4093 Redd; Harry Allen (ts); Steve Abshire (g); Tommy Cecil (b); Howard Curtis (d). 07.
All This wasn't Chuck's first record as leader – the earlier Stomp, Look & Listen seems to be deleted – but it has a freshness and eagerness that suggests it might have been. He tackles a bold array of material, including Charlie Parker's 'Barbados' as well as more obvious swing standards, and the drummerless group rides confidently on his vibes-line. The opening 'How About You?' spanks along but, as throughout the record, Chuck varies the pace with the following 'More Than You Know'. Bertoncini and Mraz have to do a lot of work where he concentrates on a single line, using what sounds like just two mallets, but they have opportunities to cut loose as well.

The Kessel tribute obviously depends to a degree on the guitarists, but it's the vibes which carry most of the weight. Chuck has a light, quick touch and he breezes through 'On A Slow Boat To China' and 'Li'l Darlin'' very much in the Kessel way, with boppish accents but also an older approach to swing. Nice touches from Alexander, though he doesn't seem quite right for the date.

It's very much Harry Allen's kind of repertory, though, and he fits in very nicely on the recent one, which again leans heavily on the vibes/guitar blend. Good sound, too, courtesy of Abshire, who keeps himself in a modestly supportive position.

Freddie Redd (born 1928)

PIANO

Still best remembered for his Blue Note set of music from The Connection, he is a journeyman hard-bopper of honest service.

 San Francisco Suite Original Jazz Classics OJCCD 1748 Redd; George Tucker (b); Al Dreares (d). 10/57.

(*) Music From The Connection Blue Note 63836 Redd; Jackie McLean (as); Michael Mattos (b); Larry Ritchie (d). 2/60.
(*) Redd's Blues Blue Note 40537 Redd; Jackie McLean (as); Paul Chambers (b); Sir John Godfrey (d). 1/61.
 Lonely City Uptown 2730 Redd; Don Sickler (t); C. Sharpe (as); Clifford Jordan (ts); George Duvivier (b); Ben Riley (d). 1/85.
Redd's amiable West Coast bop soundtracks an unscripted (but you've seen it) Bay Area movie: bustling streetcars, pretty girls flashing their legs, sudden fogs and alarms, an apology for a narrative. The San Francisco Suite is cliché from start to finish, but the hackneyed moods are done unpretentiously and engagingly. He was a lot more coherent when there was a real narrative to deal with. Redd persuaded playwright Jack Gelber that what his play about addicted jazzmen needed was a live original score. Redd's music for The Connection had been out of circulation for some time, but this 2005 reissue reaffirms its quality. It's by no means episodic underscoring, but a fine stand-alone record that loosely follows the trajectory of the play and in the closing 'O.D. ' delivers a punch of tragic inevitability. McLean was the obvious choice for this material; his bebop credentials were sound, but he also knew his way round a newer, even more dissonant idiom and was on top form for these sessions. The material is available on other labels as well, but this Rudy Van Gelder Edition is the one to have.

By contrast, Redd's Blues is very dull indeed, which might explain why it didn't appear at all until the later '90s and has only recently been transferred to CD. Freddie's compositions are pastiche bebop, and if you were told these had been written to soundtrack a 'jazz play' you'd readily believe it. We're not sure how John Godfrey acquired his knighthood, but it wasn't for services to jazz drumming.

The last of these was an unexpected return to the studio. The identity of 'C. Sharpe' probably isn't too difficult to decipher. He sits nicely with the other horns, but again the problem is the writing, which is still more retro-bop, ineffectively camouflaged by the larger arrangement.

Rob Reddy

ALTO AND SOPRANO SAXOPHONES

New York saxman with his boisterous little big band.

 Post-War Euphoria Songlines SGL 1512-2 Reddy; Eddie E. J. Allen (t); Josh Roseman (tb); Jef Lee Johnson (g); Dom Richards (b); Pheeroan akLaff (d). 1/96.
Reddy calls his group the Honor System; their album, recorded in New Jersey, is a rumbustious event, almost a party record if you think recent downtown New York jazz should be played at parties. Tracks like 'The Pipe Smoker' and 'Same Old' rattle and roll along, the ensemble making a lot of noise and driven by akLaff's falling-downstairs drum parts which are as exuberant as they should be. Rather than handing out solos, Reddy breaks his group down into twos and threes and fours, so there's a broad range of duets and ensembles scattered through a lot of music (over 70 minutes) and they're all playing to the max. The drawback is that nothing peaks or stands out, which makes the disc, for all its spirited blowing (and Reddy himself, while not the most renowned name here, is probably the most vivid voice), fade into the background when it should collar the attention.

(*) Songs That You Can Trust Koch 7876 As above. 2/99.
